beades to truck, and went to ſpeake with them. In the meane while he commanded the Indian interpreter our Chichimeco, to be called out of the Admirall that he ſhould parley with them. And the Captaine came vnto the boy, and laid certaine things vpon it for exchange, & made ſignes vnto the Sauages to come and take them; and an Indian made ſignes vnto our men with his hands, his armes, and head, that they vnderſtood them not, but ſignified that they ſhould go aſide. Whereupon the Captaine departed a ſmal diſtance from that place with his boat. And they made ſignes againe that he ſhould get him further; whereupon we departing a great way off, the ſaide Indians leapt into the water, came vnto the boy, and tooke thoſe beades, and returned backe againe to land, and then came vnto the other three, and all of them viewing our things, they gaue a bowe and certaine arrowes to an Indian, and ſent him away, running with all haſte on the ſhore, and made ſignes vnto vs that they had ſent word vnto their lord what things we had giuen them, and that he wauld come thither. Within a while after the ſaid Indian returned, running as he did before, and beganne to make ſignes vnto vs, that his Lord was comming. And while we ſtayed here, we ſaw on the ſhore ten or twelue Indians aſſemble themſelues, which came vnto the other Indians, and by and by we ſaw another company of 12 or 15 more appeare, who aſſembled themſelues all together. And againe they began to make ſignes vnto vs, to come foorthwith to our boates, and ſhewed vs many Oyſters of pearles on the top of certaine canes, making ſignes that they would giue them vs. When we beheld this, the Captaine commanded vs to make readie our boate, and went aboord it with the ſaid mariners, and rowed to a certaine ſtone in forme of a rocke, which lay in the ſea neere vnto the ſhore. And hither came firſt 2 or 3 Indians, and layd downe one of thoſe Oyſters, and a garland made of Parats feathers, or ſparrowes feathers painted red; they layd downe alſo certaine plumes of white feathers, and others of blew colour. In the meane while we ſawe continually Indians aſſemble to the ſhore by tenne and tenne, and ſo by little and little they came in ſquadrons; and one of them aſſoone as hee ſawe the boat beganne to leape forward and backward with ſo great nimbleneſſe, that doubtleſſe he ſeemed to all of vs a man of great agilitie, and we tooke no ſmall pleaſure while we beheld him fetching thoſe gambols: but the reſt of the Indians which ſtood at the mouth of the freſh water ranne toward him, and cryed vnto him, forbidding him to vſe thoſe geſtures, becauſe we were come thither in peaceable ſort, and by this meanes he came with the reſt to the watering place, where by little and little in this manner there aſſembled aboue a hundred of them all in order, with certaine ſtaues with cordes to fling them, and with their bowes and arrowes, and they were all painted. In the meane while our Chichimeco-interpreter borne in the Iſle of California, was come vnto vs, and the Captaine againe commanded a mariner to ſtrippe himſelfe, and to ſwimme and laye vpon the ſaid rocke certaine belles, and more beades, and when he had layd them there, the Indians made ſignes that he ſhould goe away; and ſo they came thither and tooke them, and our men drew neere with their boat. The Captaine commanded the Indian our Chichimeco to ſpeake vnto them, but they could not vnderſtand him, ſo that we aſſuredly beleeue, that they vnderſtand not the language of the Iſle of California. This day being Tueſday vntill night the Indians ſtayed at this watering place, taking ſome of our beades, and giuing vnto vs their feathers and other things, and when it was very late they departed. The morrow following being Wedneſday very early the Captaine commanded that our buttes ſhould be made ready, that before breake of day, and before the Indians ſhould take the hill, which ſtood ouer the watering place, we might be landed in good order: which was put in execution: for we went on ſhore with as many as could goe, ſauing thoſe that had charge to take in the water, and ſuch as were to ſtay on ſhip-boord, which in all were about fourteene or fifteene perſons, in as good order as we could deuiſe: for we were foure croſſebowes, two harquebuziers, and eight or nine targets, and the moſt part of vs carryed very good ſlings, and euery one eighteene riuer-ſtones, which weapon the Captaine inuented, becauſe the Indians at the firſt had handled vs very ſhrewdly with the multitude of ſtones which they flang at vs: we had nothing to defende vs ſauing our targets, and to ſeeke to winne the fortes from whence they indamaged vs; he therefore thought with theſe ſlings, that we might offend them, and we likewiſe thought well of his opinion, for making tryall of them, we threw very well with them, and much farther then we thought we could haue done: for the ſlings being made of hempe, we flung very farre with them. Nowe being come to the watering place the ſayd Wedneſday by breake of day we tooke the fort of the fountaine, which were certaine cragges or rockes hanging ouer the ſame, betweene which there was an opening or deepe valley through which the water runneth, which is no great quantitie, but a little brooke not paſt a fadome broad. So ſtanding all in order, other foure or fiue Indians came thither, who as ſoone as they ſawe vs to be come on ſhore, and to haue gotten the toppe of the watering place, they retired vnto a ſmall hill on the other ſide, for the valley was betweene them and vs: neither ſtayed they long before they beganne to aſſemble themſelues as they had done the day before by 10 and 10, and 15 and 15, ranging themſelues on this high hill, where they made ſignes vnto vs. And Francis Preciado craued licenſe of the Generall to parley with theſe Indians, and to giue them ſome trifles; wherewith he was contented, charging him not to come too neere them, nor to goe into any place where they might hurt him. Whereupon Francis went vnto a plaine place, vnder the hill where the Indians ſtood, and to put them out of feare he layd downe his ſword and target, hauing onely a dagger hanging downe at his girdle, and in a ſkarfe which he carried at his necke, certaine beades to exchange with them, combs, fiſhinghooks and comfits. And he began to goe vp the hill, and to ſhew them diuerſe of his marchandiſe. The Indians as ſoone as he had layd thoſe things on the ground, and gone ſomewhat aſide, came downe from the hill and tooke them, and carried them vp, for it ſeemed that their Lord was among them, to whom they carried thoſe trifles. Then they came downe againe, and layd to giue vnto him in the ſaid place, an oyſter of pearles, and two feathers like haukes feathers, making ſignes to Preciado that he ſhould come and take them; which he did, and againe layde there a ſtring of belles, and a great fiſhhooke, and certaine beades; and they taking the ſame, layd there againe another oyſter of pearle, and certaine feathers: and he layd downe other beads, two fiſhhookes, and more comfits, and the Indians came to take them vp, and approched much neerer vnto him, then at other times, and ſo neere that a man might haue touched them with a pike, and then they began to talke together: and 7 or 8 more came downe, vnto whom Francis Preciado made ſignes, that they ſhould come downe no lower, and they incontinently layd their bowes and arrowes on the ground, and hauing layd them downe came ſomewhat lower, and there with ſignes, together with them which came firſt, they began to parle with him, and required mariners breeches & apparell of him, and aboue all things a red hat pleaſed them highly, which the ſaid Francis ware on his head, and they prayed him to reach it vnto them, or to lay it in the place; and after this certaine of them made ſignes vnto him to knowe whether he would haue a harlot, ſignifying with their fingers thoſe villanies and diſhoneſt actions, and among the reſt they ſet before him an Indian of great ſtature dyed wholly with black, with certaine ſhels of the mother of pearle at his necke, and on his head, and ſpeaking by ſignes to Francis Preciado touching the foreſaid act of fornication, thruſting their finger through a hole, they ſaid vnto him, that if hee would haue a woman, they would bring him one; and he anſwered, that he liked well of it, and that therfore they ſhould bring him one. In the meane ſpace on the other ſide where the Generall ſtood with his company, another ſquadron of Indians ſhewed themſelues, whereupon the Generall and his company made a ſtirre, and put themſelues in battell array: whereupon Francis Preciado was inforced to come downe from them, to ioyne with the Generall & his company: and here the Indians which came laſt began to make ſignes that we ſhould lay downe ſomething to truck, and that they would giue vs ſome of their ſhels of mother of pearle, which they brought vpon certaine ſmall ſtickes, and herewithall they came very neere vnto vs, wherewith we were not well content. And Francis Preciado ſaid vnto the Captaine, that if it pleaſed him, hee would cauſe all the Indians to come together and to ſtay vpon that high hill; and he anſwered, that it was beſt to draw them all together, for by this time our men had taken in all their water, and ſtayed for the boat: whereupon Francis taking a crowne of beades went toward the valley, through which the water ran toward the Indians, and made ſignes vnto them to call the reſt, and to come all together, becauſe hee would goe to the olde place, to lay things on the ground for exchange, as at the firſt; and they anſwered that he ſhould doe ſo, and that they had called the others, and that they would doe, as he would haue them, and ſo they did, for they cauſed them to come vnto them, which they did, and Francis likewiſe went alone towards them, in which meane ſpace the Generall commanded his people to get into the boat. Francis comming vnto the place beganne to lay downe his marchandiſe of traffique, and afterwards made ſignes vnto them to ſtay there, becauſe hee would goe to the ſhips to bring them other things, and ſo he returned to the place where the Captaine was, and found them all got into the boates, ſauing the Generall and three or foure others, and the Generall made as though he had giuen other trifles to Preciado to carry vnto the Indians, and when he was gone a little from him, he called him backe againe, and all this while the Indians ſtood ſtill, and being come vnto him, wee went faire and ſoftly to our boates, and got into them at our eaſe, without any thronging, and thence we came aboord our ſhip.

Truck & traffique with the Indians for mother of pearle, and other things.

The Indians ſeing vs thus gone aboord came downe to the ſtrand where the brooke of water was, and called vnto vs to come forth with our boates, and to come on ſhore, and to bring our beades, and that they would giue vs of their mother of pearles: but we being now ſet at dinner made no account of them: whereupon they beganne to ſhoot arrowes at the ſhip, and although they fell neere vs, yet they did not reach vs. In the meane ſeaſon certaine mariners went out in the boat, to wey the anker, whereupon the Indians ſeeing them comming towards them, & bringing them nothing, they beganne in ſcorne to ſhew them their buttockes, making ſignes that they ſhould kiſſe their bums: and theſe ſeemed to be thoſe that came laſt. The Generall ſeeing this, commanded a muſket to be once or twiſe ſhot off, and that they ſhould take their iuſt ayme. They ſeeing theſe ſhot to be made readie, ſome of them roſe and went to ſhoot their arrowes at our mariners, which were gone to weigh the ankers, then the Generall commanded the great ordinance ſpeedily to be ſhot off, whereupon three or foure bullets were diſcharged, and we perceiued that we had ſlaine one of them, for we aſſuredly ſaw him lye dead vpon the ſhore; and I thinke ſome of the reſt were wounded. They hearing this noyſe, and ſeeing him dead ranne away as faſt as euer they could, ſome along the ſhore, and ſome through the vallies, dragging the dead Indian with them, after which time none of them appeared, ſaue ten or twelue, which peeped vp with their heads among thoſe rocks; whereupon another piece of ordinance was diſcharged aloft againſt the place where they were, after which time we neuer ſaw any more of them.

Chap. 11.

At the point of the Trinitie they ſpend three dayes in fiſhing, and in other paſtime: after which ſetting ſayle they diſcouer pleaſant countries, and mountaines voide of graſſe, and an Iland afterward called Iſla de los Cedros, or the Ile of Cedars, neere which they ſuffer ſharpe colde and raine, and to ſaue themſelues they returne thither.

IMmediatly we ſet ſaile to ioyne with the ſhip Santa Agueda, which was aboue halfe a league in the high ſea from vs, and this was on the Wedneſday the ſeuenteenth of December. Being come together becauſe the windes were contrary, we drew neere to a headland, which wee called Punta de la Trinidad, and here wee ſtayed fiſhing, and ſolacing our ſelues two or three dayes, although we had alwayes great ſtore of raine. Afterward we beganne to ſayle very ſlowly, and at night we rode ouer againſt thoſe mountaines where we had left our ankers, and vpon knowledge of the place we receiued great contentment ſeeing we had ſailed ſome fiue and thirtie leagues from the place where we had taken in water: neither was it any maruell that wee ſo reioyced, becauſe that the feare which we had of contrary windes cauſed vs to be ſo well apayd of the way which we had made. The day of the holy Natiuitie of our Lord, which was on the Thurſday the fiue and twentieth of the ſaid moneth, God of his mercy beganne to ſhewe vs fauour in giuing vs a freſh winde almoſt in the poope, which carried vs beyond thoſe mountaines, for the ſpace of tenne or twelue leagues, finding the coaſt alwayes plaine: and two leagues within the land, which we coaſted along, and betweene theſe mountaines, there was a great ſpace of plaine ground, which we might eaſily diſcerne with our eyes, although others were of another opinion. We beganne from Chriſtmas day to ſaile ſlowly with certaine ſmall land-windes, and ſayled from morning to night about ſeuen or eight leagues, which wee eſteemed no ſmall matter, alwayes praying to God to continue this his fauour toward vs, and thanking him for his holy Natiuitie, and all the dayes of this feaſt the Frier ſayd maſſe in the Admirall, and the father Frier Raimund preached vnto vs, which gaue vs no ſmall comfort, by incouraging vs in the ſeruice of God.

On Saturday at night being the 27 of the ſaid moneth we ankored neere vnto a point which ſeemed to be plaine land all along the ſhore, and within the countrey were high mountaines with certaine woods, which woods and mountaines ranne ouerthwart the countrey, and continued along with certaine ſmall hilles ſharpe on the toppe, and certaine little vallies are betweene thoſe mountaines. And in truth to me which with diligent eyes beheld the ſame both in length and in the breadth thereof, it could not chuſe but be a good countrey, and to haue great matters in it, as well touching the inhabiting thereof by the Indians, as in golde and ſiluer; for there was great likelihood that there is ſtore thereof. This night we ſaw a fire farre within the lande towards thoſe mountaines, which made vs thinke that the countrey was throughly inhabited. The next day being Sunday and Innocents day, the 28 of the ſaid moneth, at breake of day we ſet ſayle, and by nine or ten of the clocke had ſayled three or foure leagues, where we met with a point which ſtretched towarde the Weſt, the pleaſant ſituation whereof delighted vs much. From the eight and twentieth of December we ranne our courſe vntill Thurſday being Newyeares day of the yeere 1540, and we ran ſome 40 leagues, paſſing by certaine inlets and bayes, and certaine high mountains couered with graſſe in colour like roſemary: but toward the ſea-ſide very very bare and burned, and toward the top were certaine cragges ſomewhat of a red colour, and beyond theſe appeared certaine white mountaines, and ſo all the countrey ſhewed vnto a point which appeared beyond thoſe burnt white and red mountaines which haue neither any graſſe nor tree vpon them, whereat we maruelled not a little. This Newyeares day we ſawe neere the maine two ſmall Ilands, and reioyced greatly to ſee them; for we ſtood in great feare, that contrary windes would driue vs as farre backe in one day, as we had ſayled in tenne, which if they had taken vs, we could not haue withſtood them. Wee ranne from the firſt of Ianuary vntill Munday which were fiue dayes, and the land alwayes ſtretched Northweſt from the mountaines aforeſaid.

Two ſmall Iſlets neere the maine.

And on the Sunday we ſaw a farre off a-head of vs a high land ſomewhat ſeuered from the maine ſhore, and all of vs beganne to diſpute whether it were the land which trended toward the Northweſt, for that way the Pilots hoped to diſcouer a better countrey: and the ſaid Munday the fift of Ianuarie we came to this high land beforeſaid, and it was two Ilands the one a ſmall one and the other a great one: we coaſted theſe two Ilands ſome ſixe leagues, which were greene, and had on the toppe of them many high ſlender trees; and the great Iland was twentie leagues in compaſſe. We coaſted it 6 leagues in length without ſeeing or diſcouering any other things, but we ſaw before vs high land which ſtretched eight or tenne leagues Northward, where we rode on Munday at night. From Thurſday being Newyeares day vntill the next Munday we ſayled about 35 leagues. And in this courſe we felt great cold, which grieued vs much, eſpecially being aſſailed by two or three windie ſhowers, which pinched vs much with colde. We rode ouer againſt this land two or three nights, hauing it neere vnto vs, alwayes keeping watch by equall houres, one while mariners, and another ſouldiers, all the night long with great vigilancie. On Tueſday being Twelfe day we came within two or three leagues of this land, which we had deſcryed the day before, ſeeming to vs very pleaſant for it ſhewed greene with greene trees of an ordinary bigneſſe, and we ſaw many vallies, out of which certaine ſmall miſts aroſe, which continued in them for a long time, whereupon we gathered, that they roſe out of certaine riuers. The ſame morning, to our great comfort we ſaw great ſmokes, though we were aboue foure leagues diſtant from them, and the Captaine made no great reckoning to approch neere vnto them, nor to ſeeke nor ſerch what the matter was, and perchance becauſe he was not then in the Santa Agueda, but was aboord the Trinitie, as his maner was to come and ſtay there two or three dayes, as well to paſſe the time, as to giue order for things that were needefull. In this countrey the winter and raine ſeemed to be like that of Caſtile. We rode al night two or three leagues diſtance from ſhore, and toward euening we ſaw fiue or ſixe fires, whereat we all reioyced, but did not maruell thereat, becauſe the ſituation of that countrey ſhewed to be habitable, being faire, pleaſant, and all greene, and likewiſe becauſe the Iland which we had left behind vs being (as I haue ſaid) twenty leagues in circuit, made ſhewe that it was well peopled. On the Wedneſday we were 3 or 4 leagues at ſea from the land, and began to ſee two fires more, & therfore we aſſured our ſelues that the countrey was very well inhabited; and the farther we ſayled, we alwayes found it more ciuill. And for the ſpace of fifty leagues before we came hither we alwayes found ſwimming on the ſea certaine flotes of weedes of a ſhips length, and of the breadth of two ſhips, being round and full of gourds, and vnder theſe weedes were many fiſhes, and on ſome of them were ſtore of fowles like vnto white ſea-meawes. We ſuppoſed that theſe floting weeds did grow vpon ſome rocke vnder the water. We were now in 30 degrees of Northerly latitude. We ſailed from the 7 of Ianuary vntill the 9 ſtill with contrary windes; and on Fryday about noone there roſe a North and Northeaſtern winde, which forced vs to returne vnder the ſhelter of that Iland which we left behind vs, from whence we had ſayled aboue twentie leagues. And that Friday at night ſomewhat late wee had ſayled backe aboue twelue leagues of the ſame, and becauſe it was night wee ſtayed in the ſea, where we and our ſhippes were not a little troubled, ſo that all that night none of vs ſlept a winke, but watched euery one. The next morning betimes being Saturday we proceeded on our voyage, and gate vnder the ſhelter of the ſaid Iland, riding in thirtie fadome water: and on that ſide where we ankored, we found high and cloſed mountaines, with heapes of a certaine earth which was all aſhes and burned, and in other places ſkorched and as blacke as coales, and like the ruſt of yron, and in other places whitiſh, and here and there ſmall blacke hilles, whereat we maruelled exceedingly, conſidering that when we paſſed by, it ſeemed vnto vs an habitable countrey full of trees, and now we ſaw not a ſticke growing on this ſide.

Iſla de los Cedros mentioned in the 13 chap.

The land trendeth here Northweſt 35 leagues.

Floting weeds for 50 leagues.

Thirtie degrees of Northerly latitude.

Twentie leagues beyond the Il of Cedars.

All of vs ſuppoſed that on the other ſide toward the firme lande the trees grewe which we ſawe, although (as I haue ſayde) wee ſayled foure or fiue leagues diſtant from the ſame.

We ſtayed here vnder the ſhelter of theſe mountaines Saturday, Sunday, and Munday, alwayes hauing the Northren winde ſo ſtrong, that we thinke if it had caught vs in the ſea, wee ſhould haue bene caſt away.

Chap. 12.

They enuiron and land vpon the Iland of Cedars, to diſcouer the ſame, and to ſeeke water and wood. They are aſſailed of the Indians, and many of them wounded with ſtones: but at length getting the vpper hand, they goe to their cottages, and ranging farther vp into the Iland they find diuerſe things which the Indians in their flight had left behind them.

ON Friday the 13 of Ianuary the Captaine commanded vs to hoiſe out our boates, and to goe on ſhore, which was done accordingly, and we did row along the ſhore for the ſpace of a good halfe league and entered into a valley: for (as I ſaid) all this country was full of high and bare hils, of ſuch qualitie as I mentioned before: and in this and other ſmall valleys we found ſome water which was brackiſh, and not farre from thence certaine cottages made of ſhrubs like vnto broome; likewiſe we found the footings of Indians both ſmall and great, whereat we much maruelled that in ſo rough and wilde a countrey (as farre as we could diſcerne) there ſhould be people. Here we ſtayed all day, making foure or fiue pits to take in water which we wanted, which though it were bad, and in ſmall quantitie we refuſed not; and ſo the euening being come, we returned to our boates, and ſo came vnto our ſhips which rode a good league from the ſhore. The next day being Wedneſday the fourteenth of the ſaid moneth our Generall commanded vs to ſet ſaile, and we ſailed about the ſaid Iland on the ſame ſide which we coaſted when we came from Nueua Eſpanna: for when we arriued on the coaſt we ſaw fiue or ſixe fires; wherefore he deſired to ſee and learne whether it were inhabited; and at the fartheſt ende of this inlet or bay where we rode there came out before vs a Canoa, wherein were foure Indians which came rowing with certaine ſmall oares, and came very neere vs to ſee what we were: whereupon we tolde our Generall, that it were beſt to ſend ſome of vs out with our boates to take theſe Indians or ſome one of them to giue them ſomething that they might thinke vs to be good people: but hee would not conſent thereto, becauſe he minded not to ſtay, hauing then a prety gale of winde, whereby he might ſaile about this Iland, hoping that afterward we might finde and take ſome others to ſpeake with them, and giue them what we would to carry on ſhore; and as we ſayled neere the land, we ſaw a great hill full of goodly trees of the bigneſſe of the trees and Cypreſſes of Caſtile. We found in this Iland the footing of wilde beaſts and conies, and ſaw a peece of pinetree-wood, whereof we gathered, that there was ſtore of them in that countrey. Thus ſayling neere vnto the ſhore, we ſawe another Canoa comming toward vs with other foure Indians, but it came not very neere vs, and as we looked forward, we ſawe toward a point which was very neere before vs, three other Canoas, one at the head of the point among certaine flattes, and the other two more into the ſea, that they might deſcry vs without comming ouer neere vs. Likewiſe betweene certaine hilles which were neere the point, there appeared here three and there foure of them, and afterward we ſaw a ſmall troope of ſome twentie of them together, ſo that all of vs reioyced greatly to behold them. On this ſide the land ſhewed greene with pieces of plaine ground which was neere the ſea, and likewiſe all thoſe coaſts of hils ſhewed greene, and were couered with many trees, although they grew not very thicke together. Here at euening we rode neere the ſhore hard vpon the ſaid point, to ſee if we could ſpeake with thoſe Indians, and likewiſe to ſee if we could get freſh water, which now we wanted, and ſtill as ſoone as we were come to an anker, we ſaw the Indians ſhew themſelues on land neere vnto their lodgings, comming likewiſe to deſcry vs in a Canoa, by ſixe and ſeuen at a time, whereat we maruelled, becauſe we neuer thought that one of thoſe Canoas would hold ſo many men. In this wiſe we ſtayed looking ſtill what would be the ſucceſſe, and in the place where we rode we were two ſmall leagues diſtant from the ſhore, where we found theſe Indians in their Canoas: whereupon wee maruelled not a little to ſee ſo great an alteration in ſo ſmall a diſtance of countrey, as well becauſe we ſtill diſcouered pleaſant land with trees (whereas on the other ſide of the iſle there were none) as alſo becauſe it was ſo well peopled with Indians, which had ſo many Canoas made of wood, as we might diſcerne, and not raftes or Balſas, for ſo they call thoſe floats which are made all flat with canes.

A Balſa is a flat raft made of canes.

The next day being Thurſday the fifteenth of the ſaid moneth about breake of day foure or fiue Indians ſhewed themſelues at the head of that point, who as ſoone as they had ſpyed vs retired behind the point, and hid themſelues among the buſhes vpon certaine ſmall hilles that were there, from whence they iſſued forth, and couered all the greene hils and mountaines, which were along that coaſt; whereupon we gathered that they had their dwellings there, in regard of the cõmoditie of the water and the defence againſt ill weather, and the benefite of fiſhing. At ſun-riſing we ſaw the Indians appeare in greater companies, going vp vnto the hilles in ſmall troopes, and from thence they ſtood and beheld vs. Immediatly we ſaw fiue or ſixe Canoas come out into the ſea a good diſtance from vs, and thoſe which were in them ſtood often on their tip-toes, to view and deſcry vs the better. On the other ſide we ſtirred not at all for all theſe their geſtures, but ſtood ſtill riding at anker; and the Generall ſeemed not to be very willing to take any of them, but this day in the morning very early commanded the Maſters mate to conueigh him to our other ſhippe called The Trinitie. Things paſſed in this ſort, when about ten of the clocke we ſaw three Canoas lanch farre into the ſea to fiſh very neere vnto vs, whereat we tooke great pleaſure. At 12 of the clocke the Generall returned from the Trinitie and commanded the boat & men to be made readie, as well ſouldiers as mariners, and that we ſhould goe on ſhore to ſee if we could get any wood and water, and catch one of thoſe Indians to vnderſtand their language if it were poſſible: and ſo all the men that were readie went into the Admirals boate, and went toward the Trinitie which by this time with the other ſhip had a ſmall gale of winde, wherewith they entered farther within the point, and we diſcouered the lodgings and houſes of the Indians, & ſaw neere the waters ſide thoſe fiue or ſixe Canoas which at the firſt came out to view vs, drawen on ſhore, and ouer againſt this place the ſhips caſt anker in 30 and 35 fadome water, and we were very neere the land; whereat we maruelled much to find ſo great depth of water ſo neere the ſhore. Being gone abord our botes, we made toward the ſhore ouer againſt a village of the Indians, who as ſoone as they ſaw vs about to come on land, left an hill whereon they ſtood to behold what we did, & came downe to the ſhore, where we were prepared to come on land: but before they came againſt vs they cauſed their women and children to fly into the mountaines with their goods, & then came directly towards vs, threatning vs with certaine great ſtaues which they carried in their handes ſome 3 yardes long and thicker then a mans wreſt: but perceiuing that for all this we ceaſed not to come neere the ſea ſhore to come on land, they began to charge vs with ſtones and to fling cruelly at vs, and they hit 4 or 5 men, among whom they ſmote the Generall with two ſtones. In the meane while the other bote landed a little beneath, whereupon when they ſaw that they were forced to diuide themſelues to keepe the reſt of our company from comming on land, they began to be diſcouraged, and did not aſſaile the Generals boate ſo fiercely, who began to cauſe his people to goe on ſhore with no ſmall trouble; for albeit he was neere the land, yet as ſoone as they leapt out of the boat they ſunke downe, becauſe they could finde no faſt footing; and thus ſwimming or otherwiſe as they could, firſt a ſouldier called Spinoſa got on land, and next to him the General, and then ſome of the reſt, and began to make head againſt the Indians, and they came haſtily with thoſe ſtaues in their hands, for other kinds of weapons we ſaw none, ſauing bowes and arrowes of pine-tree. After a ſhort combate they brake in pieces the targets of the Generall, and of Spinoſa. In the meane while thoſe of the other boat were gotten on land, but not without much difficultie, by reaſon of the multitude of ſtones which continually rained downe vpon them, and they ſtroke Terazzo on the head a very ſhrowd blow, and had it not bene for our targets, many of vs had beene wounded, and in great diſtreſſe, although our enemies were but few in number. In this maner all our company came on ſhore with ſwimming and with great difficultie, and if they had not holpen one another, ſome of them had bene drowned. Thus we landed, and within a while after thoſe of the other bote were come on land, the Indians betooke themſelues to flight, taking their way toward the mountaines, whether they had ſent their women, children and goods: on the other ſide we purſued them, & one of thoſe Indians which came to aſſaile the Generals boat, was ſlaine vpon the ſtrand, & two or three others were wounded, and ſome ſaid more. While we purſued them in this maner our maſtiue dogge Berecillo ouertooke one of them not farre from vs (who becauſe we were ſo wet could not run very faſt) and pulled him downe, hauing bitten him cruelly, and doubtleſſe he had held him till we had come, vnleſſe it had happened that another of his companions had not followed that Indian which the dogge had pulled downe, who with a ſtaffe which he had in his hands gaue the dogge a cruell blow on the backe, and without any ſtaying drew his fellow along like a Deere, and Berecillo was faine to leaue him for paine, neither had he ſcarſe taken the dogge off on him, but the Indian got vp, and fled ſo haſtily towarde the mountaine, that within a ſhort while hee ouertooke his fellowe which had ſaued him from the pawes of the dogge, who (as it appeared) betooke him luſtily to his heeles, and thus they came vnto their fellowes which deſcended not downe to the ſhore being about ſome twentie, and they were in all about fiftie or ſixtie.

After we had breathed our ſelues a while, we viewed their houſes where they ſtood, which were certaine cottages couered with ſhrubs like broome and roſemary, with certaine ſtakes pight in the ground; and the Generall willed vs to march all together without diſperſing of our ſelues, a little way vp thoſe mountaines, to ſee if there were any water and wood, becauſe we ſtood in great neede of them both. And while we marched forward, we ſaw in certaine little vallies the goods which the women had left there behind them in their flight: for the Indians as ſoone as they ſaw vs purſue them ouertooke the women, and for feare charged them to flie away with their children leauing their ſtuffe in this place. We went vnto this booty, and found good ſtore of freſh-fiſh, and dried fiſh, and certaine bags containing aboue 28 pound weight full of dried fiſh ground to powder, and many ſeal-ſkins, the moſt part dreſſed with a faire white graine vpon them, and others very badly dreſſed. There were alſo their inſtruments to fiſh withall, as hookes made of the prickes of certaine ſhrubs and trees. Here we tooke the ſaid ſkins without leauing any one in the place, and then we returned to the ſea, becauſe it was now night, or at leaſt very late, and found our botes waiting for vs.

Chap. 13.

A deſcription of the Canoas of the Indians of the Ile of Cedars, and how coaſting the ſame to find freſh water they found ſome, and deſiring to take thereof they went on ſhore, and were diuerſly moleſted with the weapons of the Indians. They chriſten an old Indian, and returne vnto their ſhips.

The Canoas which they had were certaine thicke trunkes of Cedars, ſome of them of the thickneſſe of two men, and three fadome long, being not made hollow at all, but being laid along, and faſtened together, they ſhoue them into the ſea, neither were they plained to any purpoſe, for we found no kind of edge-toole, ſauing that there were certaine ſharp ſtones, which we found vpon certaine rockes that were very keene, wherewith we ſuppoſed that they did cut & flea thoſe ſeales. And neere the ſhore we found certaine water, wherewith we filled certaine bottles made of the ſkins of thoſe ſeales, contayning ech of them aboue a great paile of water. The next day our Generall commanded vs ſo ſet ſaile, whereupon ſailing with a freſh gale about 2 leagues from the ſhore of this Iland, trending about the ſame to ſee the end thereof, and alſo to approch neere the firme land, to informe our ſelues of the ſtate thereof, becauſe we had ſeene 5 or 6 fires, we compaſſed the ſame about: for by this meanes we performed 2 or 3 good actions, namely, we returned to our right courſe, and ſearched whether any riuer fell out of the coaſt of the firme land, or whether there were any trees there, or whether any ſtore of Indians did ſhew themſelues or no.

In this maner proceeding on our way all the Friday being the 16 of Ianuary at euening, and ſeeking to double the point of the Iland, ſo fierce and contrary a Northren winde encountered vs, that it draue vs backe that night ouer againſt the lodgings and habitations of the Indians, and here we ſtayed all Saturday, what time we loſt the Trinitie againe, but on Sunday-night being the 18 we ſaw her againe, and beganne to proceede on our way to compaſſe that Iland, if it pleaſed God to ſend vs good weather.

On Sunday, Munday, and Tueſday (which was the twentieth of the ſaid moneth of Ianuarie) wee ſailed with ſcarſe and contrary windes, and at length came to the cape of the point of the Iland, which we called Iſla de los Cedros or the Ile of Cedars, becauſe that on the tops of the mountaines therein, there growes a wood of theſe Cedars being very tall, as the nature of them is to be. This day the Trinitie deſcryed a village or towne of the Indians, and found water; for on Sunday night we had newly loſt her, and had no ſight of her vntill Tueſday, whenas we found her riding neere the ſhore, not farre from thoſe cottages of the Indians. And as ſoone as we had deſcryed her, we made toward her, and before we could reach her, we eſpied three Canoas of Indians which came hard aboord the ſaid ſhip called The Trinitie, ſo that they touched almoſt the ſide of the ſhip, and gaue them of their fiſh, and our people on the other ſide gaue them certaine trifles in exchange, and after they had ſpoken with them, the Indians went backe to the ſhore, and at the ſame inſtant we came vp vnto the Admirall and rode by them, and they all ſaluted vs, ſaying that the Indians were neere them, and telling what had paſſed betweene them, whereat the Generall and we receiued great contentment. They told vs moreouer, that they had found freſh water, whereby they increaſed our great ioy, becauſe we ſtood in much neede thereof, for at the other place of the Indians we could get but a little.

Iſla de los Cedros, or The Ile of Cedars in 28 deg. and a quarter.

While we thus rode at ankor, we ſaw a Canoa with 3 Indians put out into the ſea from their cottages, and they went vnto a fiſhing place, among certaine great and high weedes, which grow in this ſea among certaine rockes, the greateſt part of which weedes groweth in 15 or 20 fa-done depth; and with great celeritie they caught ſeuen or eight fiſhes, and returned with them vnto the Trinity, and gaue them vnto them, and they in recompenſe gaue the Indians certaine trifles. After this the Indians ſtayed at the ſterne of the ſhip, viewing the ſame aboue three houres ſpace, and taking the oares of our boat they tryed how they could rowe with them, whereat they tooke great pleaſure; and we which were in the Admirall ſtirred not a whit all this while, to giue them the more aſſurance, that they ſhould not flie away, but ſhould ſee, that we ment to doe them no harme, & that we were good people. As ſoone as we were come to anker, & beheld all that had paſſed betweene the Indians and thoſe of the Trinity, after the Indians were gone to the ſhore in their Canoas made of the bodies of trees, the General commanded the boat which was without to be brought vnto him: and when it was come, he, and Francis Preciado, and two others went into it, and ſo we went aboord the Trinity. The Indians ſeeing people comming out of the other ſhip into the Trinitie, ſent two Canoas vnto the ſterne of the ſhip, and brought vs a bottle of water, and we gaue vnto them certain beads, and continued talking with them a little while; but euening approching the aire grew ſomewhat cold. The Indians returned on ſhore to their lodgings, and the General and we to our ſhip. The next day being Wedneſday in the morning, the General commanded certaine of vs to take the bote and goe aſhore, to ſee if we could find any brooke or well of freſh water in the houſes of the Indians, becauſe he thought it vnpoſſible for them to dwell there without any water to drinke. The father frier Raimund likewiſe went out in our company, becauſe the day before ſeeing the Indians came to the ſterne of the ſhippe and parlying with vs, he thought he might haue ſpoken a little with them, with the like familiarity. In like ſort many mariners and ſouldiers went out in the boat of the Trinity, and going altogether with their weapons toward the ſhore, ſomewhat aboue the lodgings of the Indians, very early in the morning they watched the boats, and perceiued that wee would come on land, whereupon they ſent away their women & children with certaine of them, who caried their goods vp into certaine exceeding ſteepe mountaines and hilles, and 5 or 6 of them came toward vs, which were excellently well made, and of a good ſtature. Two of them had bowes and arrowes, and other two 2 baſtonadoes much thicker then the wriſt of a mans hand, and other two with 2 long ſtaues like iauelins with very ſharpe points, and approched very neere vs being nowe come on ſhore. And beginning by ſignes very fiercely to braue vs, they came ſo neere vs, that almoſt they ſtrooke with one of thoſe ſtaues one of our ſouldiers called Garcia a man of good parentage, but the General commanded him to withdraw himſelfe, and not to hurt any of them. In the meane ſeaſon the General and frier Raimund ſtept foorth, the frier lapping a garment about his arme, becauſe they had taken vp ſtones in their hands, fearing that they would do them ſome miſchiefe. Then began both of them to ſpeake vnto them by ſignes & words, to be quiet, ſignifying, that they ment them no harme, but only were come to take water; and the frier ſhewed them a drinking-cup; but nothing would ſerue to make them leaue that bragging, and flinging of ſtones: and the General continuing ſtill in a mind not to hurt them, commanded his men gently to come neere vnto them, and that by ſignes they ſhould all ſhew them, that they meant in no wiſe to hurt them, but that we were come on land onely to take water. On the other ſide refuſing vtterly to take knowledge of theſe things they ſtill inſulted more and more: whereupon Francis Preciado counſelled the General to giue him leaue to kill one of them, becauſe all the reſt would flee away, wherby at our eaſe we might take water: but he replied that he would not haue it ſo, but willed them to looze the two maſtiues Berecillo and Achillo: wherefore the dogs were let looſe, and as ſoone as they ſaw them, they vaniſhed immediately, betaking them to their heeles, and running vp thoſe cliffes like goates. Alſo others which came from the mountains to ſuccour them, betooke themſelues to flight. The dogs ouertooke two of them, and bit them a little, and we running after, laid hold on them, and they ſeemed as fierce as wild & vntamed beaſts, for 3 or 4 of vs held either of them, to cheriſh & pacifie them, and to ſeeke to giue them ſome thing: but we auailed not, for they bit vs by the hands, and ſtooped downe to take vp ſtones for to ſtrike vs with them. We led them a while in this maner, & came vnto their lodgings, where the Generall gaue a charge, that no man ſhould touch any thing of theirs, commanding Francis Preciado to ſee that this order were obſerued, in not taking any thing frō them, although in very deed there was little or nothing there, becauſe the women and Indians which were fled had caried al away. Here we found an old man in a caue ſo extreamly aged as it was wonderful, which could neither ſee nor go, becauſe he was ſo lame and crooked. The father frier Raimund ſayd, it were good (ſeeing he was ſo aged) to make him a Chriſtian; whereupon we chriſtened him. The captaine gaue the Indians which we had taken two paire of eare-rings, and certaine counterfeit diamonds, and making much of them, ſuffred them to depart at their pleaſure, and in this ſort faire and ſoftly they returned to the reſt of their fellowes in the mountaine. We tooke the matter of that village which was but a ſmall quantity, and then the Generall commanded vs to returne to our ſhip, becauſe we had eaten nothing as yet, and after our repaſt we ſayled towards a bay which lay beyond that village, where we ſaw a very great valley, and thoſe of the Trinitie ſayd, that they had ſeene there good ſtore of water, and ſufficient for vs; wherefore wee ankered neere vnto that valley. And the Generall went on ſhore with both the boates, and the men that went on land in the morning with the two fathers frier Raimund, and frier Antony: and paſſing vp that valley a croſſebow-ſhot, we found a very ſmall brooke of water, which neuertheles ſupplied our neceſſity for we filled two buts thereof that euening, leauing our veſſels to take it with on ſhore vntill the next morning; and we reioyced not a little that we had found this water, for it was freſh, and the water which we had taken vp before was ſomewhat brackiſh, and did vs great hurt both in our bodies and in our taſte.

They take poſſeſſion of the Iſle of Cedars for the Emperours Maieſtie, and departing from thence they are greatly toſſed with a tempeſt of the ſea, and returne to the Iſland, as to a ſafe harbour.

The next day being the two and twentieth of Ianuary very early the General commanded vs to go on ſhore, and that we ſhould haue our dinner brought vs, and ſhould take in the reſt of our water, which we did, and filled 17 buts without ſeeing any Indian at al. The next day going out to fill 8 or 9 veſſels which were not yet filled, a great winde at Northweſt tooke vs, whereupon they made ſignes to vs from the ſhips, that with all haſte wee ſhould come on boord againe, for the wind grew ſtill higher, and higher, and the Maſters were affraid that our cables would break, thus we were in the open ſea. Therefore being come aboord againe not without great trouble, we returned backe ouer againſt the village of the Indians,* where we had ſlaine the Indian, and becauſe the wind grew more calme about midnight, the Pilots did not caſt anker, but hulled vnder the ſhelter of this Iſland, which (as I haue ſaid) is called The Iſle of Cedars, and is one of the 3 Iſles of S. Stephan, the greateſt & chiefeſt of them, where the General tooke poſſeſſion. While we hulled here, about midnight, the next Friday being the 23 of the moneth, without our expectation we had a freſh gale of wind from the Southeaſt, which was very fauourable for our voyage, & the longer it continued, the more it increaſed: ſo that betweene that night and the next day being Saturday the 24 of the ſaid moneth we ſailed 18 great leagues. While wee were thus on our way, the wind grew ſo contrary and ſo tempeſtuous, that to our great griefe we were conſtrained to coaſt about with our ſhips, and returned twenty leagues backe againe, taking for our ſuccour the ſecond time, the point of the lodgings of the Indians, where the foreſayd Indian was ſlaine, and here we ſtayed Munday, Tewſday, and Wedneſday, during which time the Northweſt and the North wind blew continually, whereupon we determined not to ſtirre from thence vntill we ſaw good weather, and well ſetled for our voyage: for in this climate theſe winds doe raigne ſo greatly, that we feared they would ſtay vs longer there then we would; and we were ſo weary of ſtaying, that euery day ſeemed a moneth vnto vs. Vnder this ſhelter we rode Thurſday, Friday, and Saturday vntill noone, which was the laſt of Ianuary in the yeere 1540. About noone the wind began to blow ſoftly at Southweſt, whereupon the General told the Pilots, that we ſhould doe well to put ouer to the maine land, where with ſome wind off the ſhore we might by the grace of God ſaile ſomewhat farther. Thus we hoiſed our ſailes, and ſailed vntil euening three or foure leagues, for the wind ſcanted, and wee remained becalmed. The night being come there aroſe a contrary winde, and we were inforced of neceſſitie to retire the third time to the ſame ſhelter of the Iſle of Cedars, where we ſtayed from the firſt of February vntil Shroueſunday, in the which meane time we tooke in two buts of water which we had ſpent. During the ſpace of theſe eight dayes we ſought to make ſayle two or three times, but as we went out a little beyond the point of this Iſle, we found the wind ſo boyſtrous and contrary, and the ſea ſo growen, that of force we were conſtrained to returne vnder the ſuccour of the Iſland, and often times wee were in great feare that we ſhould not be able to get in thither againe. During this time that we could not proceed on our iourney, we imployed our ſelues in catching a few fiſhes for the Lent. From Shroueſunday being the 8 of February, on which day we ſet ſayle, we ſayled with a very ſcant wind, or rather a calme, vntill Shrouetewſday, on which we came within kenne of the firme land, from whence we were put backe theſe twenty leagues (for in theſe two dayes and a halfe wee ſayled ſome 20 ſmall leagues) and we lay in ſight of the ſeyd poynt of the firme land. And on the Tewſday we were becalmed, waiting till God of his mercy would helpe vs with a proſperous wind to proceed on our voyage.

February.

On Shroueſunday at night, to make good cheere withall wee had ſo great winde and raine, that there was nothing in our ſhips which was not wet, and a very colde ayre. On Aſhwedneſday at ſun-riſing we ſtrooke ſaile neere a point which we fel ſomewhat ſhort withall in a great bay running into this firme land: and this is the place where we ſaw fiue or ſixe fires, and at the riſing of the ſunne being ſo neere the ſhore that we might well deſcrie and viewe it at our pleaſure we ſawe it to bee very pleaſant, for wee deſcried as farre as wee could diſcerne with our eyes faire valleys, and ſmall hilles, with greene ſhrubs very pleaſant to behold, although there grew no trees there. The ſituation ſhewed their length and breadth. This day was little winde, it being in a manner calme, to our no ſmall griefe: and the father frier Raimund ſayd vs a drie maſſe, and gaue vs aſhes, preaching vnto vs according to the time and ſtate wherein we were: with which ſermon we were greatly comforted. After noonetide we had contrary wind, which ſtill was our enemie in all our iourney, at the leaſt from the point of the port of Santa Cruz. Here we were conſtrained to anker in fiue fadome water, and after wee rode at anker wee began to viewe the countrey, and tooke delight in beholding how goodly and pleaſant it was, and neere vnto the ſea wee iudged that wee ſaw a valley of white ground. At euening ſo great a tempeſt came vpon vs of winde and raine, that it was ſo fearefull and dangerous a thing that a greater cannot bee expreſſed; for it had like to haue driuen vs vpon the ſhore, and the chiefe Pilot caſt out another great anker into the ſea, yet all would not ſerue, for both theſe ankers could not ſtay the ſhip. Whereupon all of vs cryed to God for mercy, attending to ſee how he would diſpoſe of vs; who of his great goodneſſe, while we were in this danger, vouchſafed a little to ſlake the tempeſt, and with great ſpeede the chiefe Pilot commanded the mariners to turne the capſten, and the Generall commanded and prayed all the ſouldiers to helpe to turne the capſten, which they were nothing ſlow to performe: and thus we beganne to weigh our ankers, and in weighing of one which was farre greater then the other, the ſea was ſo boiſterous, that it forced the capſten in ſuch ſorte, that the men which were at it could not rule the ſame, and it ſtrooke a Negro of the Generals ſuch a blowe, that it caſt him downe along vpon the decke, and did the like vnto another mariner and one of the barres ſtrooke our fire-furnace ſo violently, that it caſt it ouer-boord into the ſea. Yet for all theſe troubles wee weighed our ankers, and ſet ſayle, and albeit we had great tempeſts at ſea, yet made wee no account thereof in reſpect of the ioy which we conceiued to ſee our ſelues freed of the perill of being caſt on that ſhore with our ſhips, eſpecially ſeeing it fell out at midnight, at which time no man could haue eſcaped, but by a meere myracle from God.

A great bay in the firme land.

Wee ſayled vp and downe the ſea all Thurſday, and vntill Friday in the morning being the fourteenth day of February, and the waues of the ſea continually came raking ouer our deckes. At length, on Saturday morning at breake of day we could finde no remedy againſt the contrary windes, notwithſtanding the Generall was very obſtinate to haue vs keepe out at ſea, although it were very tempeſtuous, leaſt we ſhould be driuen to put backe againe, but no diligence nor remedie preuailed: for the windes were ſo boyſterous and ſo contrary, that they could not be worſe, and the ſea went ſtill higher, and ſwelled more and more, and that in ſuch ſorte, that we greatly feared wee ſhould all periſh. Whereupon the Pilot thought it our beſt courſe to returne to the Iſle of Cedars, whither wee had repaired three or foure times before by reaſon of the ſelfe ſame contrary windes, for wee tooke this Iſland for our father and mother, although we receiued no other benefite thereby ſaue this onely, namely, to repaire thither in theſe neceſſities, and to furniſh our ſelues with water, and with ſome ſmall quantitie of fiſh.

Being therefore arriued at this Iſland, and riding vnder the ſhelter thereof, the contrary windes did alwayes blow very ſtrongly, and here we tooke water which we drunke, and wood for our fewel, and greatly deſired, that the windes would bee more fauourable for proceeding on our iourney. And though we rode vnder the ſhelter of the Iſle, yet felt wee the great fury of thoſe windes, and the rage of the ſea, and our ſhips neuer ceaſed rolling.

At breake of day the twentieth of February wee found the cable of our Admirall cracked, whereupon, to our great griefe, we were conſtrained to ſet ſayle, to fall downe lower the ſpace of a league, and the Trinitie came and rode in our company.

Chap.

Chap. 15.

They goe on land in the iſle of Cedars, and take diuers wilde beaſts, and refreſh and ſolace themſelues. They are ſtrangely toſſed with the Northweſt winde, and ſeeking often to depart they are forced, for the auoiding of many miſchiefes, to repaire thither againe for harbour.

The two and twentieth of February being the ſecond Sonday in Lent, the General went on ſhore with the greateſt part of his people and the friers, neere vnto a valley which they ſawe before them. And hearing maſſe on land, certaine ſouldiers and mariners, with certaine dogges which we had in our company went into the ſaid valley, and we met with certaine deere, whereof we tooke a female, which was little, but fat, whoſe haire was liker the haire of a wild goat then of a deere, and we found her not to be a perfect deere, for ſhe had foure dugs like vnto a cowe full of milke, which made vs much to maruelle. And after we had flayed off her ſkinne, the fleſh ſeemed more like the fleſh of a goate, then of a deere. We killed likewiſe a gray conie, in ſhape like vnto thoſe of Nueua Eſpanna, and another as blacke as heben-wood. In the cottages at the ſhelter aboue, where we brake our cable, we found many pine-nuts opened, which (in mine opinion) the Indians had gathered together to eate the kernels of them. On Munday the 23 of the ſaid moneth, we rode at anker, taking our pleaſure and paſtime with fiſhing. And the Northweſt winde began to blow, which waxed ſo great a little before midnight, as it was wonderfull: ſo that although we were vnder the ſhelter of the Iſland, and greatly defended from that wind, yet for all that it was ſo furious, and the ſea became ſo raging and boiſterous, that it greatly ſhook our ſhips, and we were in great feare of breaking our cables, whereof (to ſay the trueth) we had very much neede: for hauing ſpent longer time in this voyage then we looked for, wee had broken two, and loſt two of our beſt ankers. This furious winde continued vntill the next day being Tewſday the 24 when as we went on ſhore with the friers, who ſayd vs maſſe, recommending our ſelues to God, beſeeching him to vouchſafe to ſuccour and help vs with ſome good weather that we might proceede on our voyage, to the aduancement of his ſeruice. And ſtill the winds were ſo high and outragious, that the deuill ſeemed to be looſed in the aire. Whereupon the Pilots cauſed all the maſts to be let downe, leaſt they ſhould be ſhaken with the wind, and tooke off all the ſhrowds, and likewiſe cauſed the cabbens in the ſterne to be taken away, that the winds might haue more free paſſage, for the ſafetie of the ſhips; yet for al this they ceaſed not to be in great trouble. On Tewſday the ſecond of March, about midnight or ſomewhat after, riding vnder the Iſland in this diſtreſſe, there came a guſt of Northweſt winde, which made the cable of the Admirall to ſlip, and the Trinitie brake her cable, and had bene caſt away, if God of his mercy had not prouided for vs, together with the diligence which the Pilots vſed, in hoiſing the ſailes of the trinkets and mizzen, wherewith they put to ſea, and rode by another anker vntill day, when the men of both the ſhips went with their boats to ſeeke the anker vntill noone, which at length they found and recouered, not without great paines & diligence which they vſed in dragging for it, for they were till noone in ſeeking the ſame, and had much adoe to recouer it. After this we ſet vp our ſhrowdes, and all things neceſſary to ſaile, for to proceede on our voyage, if it pleaſed God, and not to ſtay alwayes in that place, as loſt and forlorne. Thus on the Wedneſday two or three houres after dinner wee ſet ſaile, with a ſcarce winde at Southeaſt, which was fauourable for our courſe and very ſcant; and our Pilots & all the reſt of vs were in no ſmal feare, that it would not continue long. We began therfore to ſet forward, although we ſeemed to ſee before our eies, that at the end of the Iſland we ſhould meete with contrary winde at North and Northweſt. This day about euening when our ſhips had diſcouered the point of this Iſle of Cedars, wee began to perceiue thoſe contrary windes, and the ſea to goe ſo loftily, that it was terrible to behold. And the farther we went, the more the winds increaſed, ſo that they put vs to great diſtreſſe, ſayling alwayes with the ſheates of our maineſaile and trinket warily in our hands, and with great diligence we looſed the ties of all the ſailes, to ſaue them the better, that the wind might not charge them too vehemently. For all this the mariners thought it beſt to returne backe, and that by no means we ſhould runne farre into the ſea, becauſe we were in extreame danger. Whereupon wee followed their counſel, turning backe almoſt to the place from whence we departed, whereat we were al not a little grieued, becauſe we could not proſecute our voyage, and began to want many things for the furniture of our ſhips. The 8 of March being Munday about noone the Generall commanded vs to ſet ſaile, for a ſmall gale of winde blew from the Weſt, which was the wind whereof we had moſt need, to follow our voyage, whereat wee were all glad for the great deſire which we had to depart out of that place. Therefore we began to ſet ſaile, & to paſſe toward the point of the Iſland, and to ſhape our courſe toward the coaſt of the firme land, to view the ſituation thereof. And as we paſſed the Iſland, and were betwixt it and the maine, the Northweſt being a contrary wind began to blow, which increaſed ſo by degrees, that we were conſtrained to let fall the bonets of our ſailes, to ſaue them, ſtriking them very low. And the Trinitie ſeeing this bad weather returned forthwith vnto the place from whence we departed, and the Admiral caſt about all night in the ſea, vntill the morning; and the chiefe Pilot conſidering that by no means we could proceed farther without danger, if we ſhould continue at ſea any longer, reſolued that wee ſhould retire our ſelues againe to that ſhelter, where we rode at anker vntill Thurſday. And on Friday about noone we ſet ſaile againe with a ſcarce winde, & in comming forth vnto the point of the Iſland, we met againe with contrary winde at Northweſt: whereupon running all night with the firme land, on Saturday in the morning being S. Lazarus day and the 13 of march, we came in ſight thereof, in viewing of the which we all reioyced, and we ſouldiers would very willingly haue gone on ſhore. This night fel great ſtore of raine like the raine in Caſtilia, and we were all well wet in the morning, & we tooke great pleaſure in beholding the ſituation of that firme land, becauſe it was greene, and becauſe we had diſcouered a pleaſant valley and plaines of good largenes, which ſeemed to bee enuironed with a garland of mountains. At length for feare of miſfortunes, ſeeing the ſea ſo high, we durſt not ſtay here or approch neere the land, & becauſe we had great want of cables and ankers, we were again conſtrained to put to ſea; and being in the ſame, and finding the ſaid contrary windes, the Pilots iudged that we had none other remedie, but againe to retire our ſelues to our wonted ſhelter. And thus we returned, but ſomewhat aboue the old place. On Sunday we rode here to the great grief of all the cõpany, conſidering what troubles we indured, & could not get forward; ſo that this was ſuch a corraſiue, as none could be more intollerable. This day being come to an anker wee had a mighty gale of wind at Northweſt, which was our aduerſary and capital enemie, and when day was ſhut in, it ſtill grew greater and greater, ſo that the ſhips rouled much. And after midnight, toward break of day, the Trinitie brake her two cables, which held the two ankers which ſhe had, and ſeeing her ſelfe thus forlorne, ſhe turned vp and downe in the ſea vntill day, and came & rode neere vs, by one anker which ſhee had left. This day all of vs went to ſeeke theſe loſt ankers, and for all the diligence which wee vſed, wee could find but one of them. We rode at anker all day vntil night, when the Trinitie againe brake a cable, which certaine rocks had cut aſunder: wherupon the General commanded that ſhe ſhould ride no longer at anker, but that ſhee ſhould turne vp and downe, as ſhe had done before in ſight of vs, which ſhe did al day long, and at night ſhe came to an anker ouer againſt a freſh water ſomewhat lower, and wee went and rode hard by her. On Palme-ſunday we went on ſhore with the fathers, which read the paſſion vnto vs and ſaid maſſe, and we went in proceſſion with branches in our hands. And ſo being comforted, becauſe we had receiued that holy Sacrament, we returned to our ſhips.

The firme land very green and pleaſant with goodly valleys and plaines.

Chap. 16.

Returning to the Iſle of Cedars weather-beaten, and with their ſhips in euil caſe, they conclude, that the ſhip called Santa Agueda or Santa Agatha ſhould returne vnto Nueua Eſpanna. Of the multitude of whales which they found about the point of California: with the deſcription of a weede, which groweth among the Iſlands of thoſe ſeas.

HEre we continued vntill the Wedneſday before Eaſter being the foure and twentieth of March, on which day wee conſulted together, that becauſe the ſhips were ill conditioned, and wanted neceſſary furniture to proceede any further, it were beſt for vs to returne backe to New Spaine, as alſo becauſe our clothes were conſumed: but the Generall ſeemed not willing to returne, but to proceed on his voyage: and in fine it was reſolued, that ſeeing both the ſhips could not proceede forward, as well becauſe they had loſt their neceſſary furnitures, as alſo that the Santa Agatha had neede of calking, becauſe ſhe receiued much water, and was the worſt furniſhed of the twaine, that ſhee ſhould returne backe to aduertize the Marques of our ſucceſſe in this voyage, and what hindred our proceeding, and in what caſe wee ſtoode, and howe wee were bereft of our neceſſary furniture. And becauſe the Trinitie was the ſwifter ſhip, and better appointed then the other, it was concluded, that it ſhould be prouided in the beſt maner that might be, & that the General ſhould proceed on his iourney in her with ſuch cõpanie as he ſhould make choiſe of, and that the reſt ſhould returne at their good leiſure. Wherefore vpon this determination we went vnder a point of this Iſland, becauſe it was a fit place to carene the ſhip: & in recouering the ſame we ſpent Wedneſday, Thurſday, and Friday till noone, and yet for all that wee could not wel double it, vntil Eaſter day about noone. Here we ankered very neere the ſhore, and in a valley we found very excellent freſh water, wherof we made no ſmal account, & here ſtayed all the Eaſter-holidayes, to ſet our ſelues about the furniſhing vp of the Trinity: and after the worke was taken in hand by the two Maſters which were very ſufficient calkers (one of which was Iuan Caſtiliano chiefe Pilot, and the other Peruccio de Bermes) they finiſhed the ſame ſo well in fiue dayes, as it was wonderfull; for no man could perceiue how any droppe of water could enter into any of the ſeames. Afterward they mended the other ſhip from Saturday till Munday, during which time all thoſe were ſhriuen that had not confeſſed, and receiued the communion, and it was reſolued by charge of the confeſſors, that all thoſe ſeale-ſkins which they had taken from the Indians ſhould bee reſtored againe; and the Generall gaue charge to Francis Preciado to reſtore them all, charging him on his conſcience ſo to doe. Thus they gathered them together, and deliuered them into the hands of the fathers, to bee kept vntill they returned to the place, where they were to reſtore them. After this maner on Munday before noone we tooke our leaues of the Generall Francis Vlloa, and of the people that ſtayed with him, who at our departure ſhed no ſmall number of teares, and we choſe for our captaine in the Santa Agueda maſter Iuan Caſtiliano the chiefe pilot, as well of the ſhip, as of vs all, and ſet ſaile the ſame day being the fift of April, hauing our boat tied at our ſterne, till we came ouer againſt the cottages, whence wee had taken the ſeale-ſkins. From the countrey of the Chriſtians and the port of Colima we were now diſtant ſome three hundreth leagues, which is the firſt port where wee determined to touch at. And hauing ſailed a league from the Trinitie the captaine Iuan Caſtiliano commanded vs to ſalute them with three pieces of great Ordinance, and ſhe anſwered vs with other three, and afterward we anſwered one another with two ſhot apiece.

The ſixt of April.

We ſailed on Munday & * Tewſday til noon with contrary wind in ſight of the Iſland, and at noone we had a freſh gale in the poupe, which brought vs ouer againſt the cottages of the Indians where we tooke away thoſe ſeal-ſkins; & there certain ſouldiers & mariners with the father frier Antony de Melo leapt on ſhore with the boat, carying the ſkins with them, & flung them into the ſayd cottages out of which they were taken, and ſo returned to their ſhip. This day the weather calmed, wereupon we were driuen to caſt anker, fearing that we ſhould forthwith be diſtreſſes for want of victuals, if we ſhould ſtay there any long time: but God which is the true helper prouided better for vs then we deſerued or imagined; for as we rode here, after midnight the Wedneſday following before ten of the clocke wee had a fauourable gale of winde from the Southeaſt, which put vs into the ſea; whither being driuen, wee had the wind at Northweſt ſo good and conſtant, that in ſixe dayes it brought vs to the cape of the point of the port of Santa Cruz: for which ſo great bleſſing of God we gaue vnto him infinite thankes. And here we began to allow our ſelues a greater proportion of victuals then wee had done before, for wee had eaten very ſparingly for feare leſt our victuals would faile vs. Before we came to this point of the hauen of Santa Cruz by ſixe or ſeuen leagues we ſaw on ſhore between certaine valleys diuers great ſmokes. And hauing paſſed the point of this port, our captaine thought it good to lanch foorth into the maine Ocean: yet although we ran a ſwift courſe, aboue 500 whales came athwart of vs in 2 or 3 ſkulles within one houres ſpace, which were ſo huge, as it was wonderfull, and ſome of them came ſo neere vnto the ſhip, that they ſwam vnder the ſame from one ſide to another, whereupon we were in great feare, leſt they ſhould doe vs ſome hurt, but they could not becauſe the ſhip had a proſperous and good winde, and made much way, whereby it could receiue no harme, although they touched and ſtrooke the ſame.

Among theſe Iſlands are ſuch abundance of thoſe weedes, that if at any time wee were inforced to ſayle ouer them they hindred the courſe of our ſhips. They growe fourteene or fifteene fadome deepe vnder the water, their tops reaching foure or fiue fadome aboue the water. They are of the colour of yellow ware, & their ſtalke groweth great proportionably. This weede is much more beautifull then it is ſet foorth, and no maruell, for the naturall painter and creator thereof is moſt excellent.

This relation was taken out of that which Francis Preciado brought with him.

After this ſhip the Santa Agueda departed from the Generall Vlloa, and returned backe the 5 of April, ſhe arriued in the port of Sant Iago de buena eſperança the 18 of the ſaid moneth, and after ſhe had ſtayed there foure or fiue dayes, ſhe departed for Acapulco: howbeit vntil this preſent ſeuenteenth of May in the yeere 1540, I haue heard no tidings nor newes of her.

Chap. 1.

Fernando Alarchon after he had ſuffered a ſtorme, arriued with his Fleete at the hauen of Saint Iago, and from thence at the hauen of Aguaiaual: he was in great perill in ſeeking to diſcouer a Bay, and getting out of the ſame he diſcouered a riuer on the coaſt with a great current, entring into the ſame, and coaſting along he diſcried a great many of Indians with their weapons: with ſignes hee hath traffique with them, and fearing ſome great danger returneth to his ſhips.

On Sunday the ninth of May in the yeere 1540. I ſet ſaile with two ſhips, the one called Saint Peter being Admirall, and the other Saint Catherine, and wee ſet forward meaning to goe to the hauen of Saint Iago of good hope: but before we arriued there wee had a terrible ſtorme, wherewith they which were in the ſhip called Saint Catherine, being more afraid then was neede, caſt ouer boord nine pieces of Ordinance, two ankers and one cable, and many other things as needfull for the enterpriſe wherein we went, as the ſhippe it ſelfe. Aſſoone as we were arriued at the hauen of Saint Iago I repaired my loſſe which I had receiued, prouided my ſelfe of things neceſſary, and tooke aboord my people which looked for my comming, and directed my courſe toward the hauen of Aguaiauall. And being there arriued I underſtood that the Generall Francis Vazquez de Coronado was departed with all his people: whereupon taking the ſhip called Saint Gabriel which carried victuals for the armie I led her with mee to put in execution your Lordſhips order. Afterward I followed my courſe along the coaſt without departing from the ſame, to ſee if I could find any token, or any Indian which could giue me knowledge of him: and in ſailing ſo neere the ſhore I diſcouered other very good hauens, for the ſhips whereof Captaine Francis de Vllua was Generall for the Marqueſſe de Valle neither ſawe nor found them. And when we were come to the flats and ſhoalds from whence the foreſaid fleete returned, it ſeemed aſwell to me as to the reſt, that we had the firme land before vs, and that thoſe ſhoalds were ſo perilous and fearefull, that it was a thing to be conſidered whither with our ſkiffes we could enter in among them: and the Pilotes and the reſt of the company would haue had vs done as Captaine Vllua did, and haue returned backe againe. But becauſe your Lordſhip commanded mee, that I ſhould bring you the ſecret of that gulfe, I reſolued, that although I had knowen I ſhould haue loſt the ſhippes, I would not haue ceaſed for any thing to haue ſeene the head thereof: and therefore I commanded Nicolas Zamorano Pilote maior, and Dominico del Caſtello that eche of them ſhould take a boate, and their lead in their hands, and runne in among thoſe ſhoalds, to ſee if they could find out the chanell whereby the ſhippes might enter in: to whom it ſeemed that the ſhips might ſaile vp higher (although with great trauell and danger) and in this ſort I and he began to follow our way which they had taken, and within a ſhort while after wee found our ſelues faſt on the ſands with all our three ſhips, in ſuch ſort that one could not helpe another, neither could the boates ſuccour vs, becauſe the current was ſo great that it was impoſſible for one of vs to come vnto another: whereupon we were in ſuch great ieopardie that the decke of the Admirall was oftentimes vnder water, and if a great ſurge of the ſea had not come & driuen our ſhip right vp, and gaue her leaue as it were to breath a while, we had there bin drowned: and likewiſe the other two ſhippes found themſelues in very great hazard, yet becauſe they were leſſer and drewe leſſe water, their danger was not ſo great as ours. Nowe it pleaſed God vpon the returne of the flood that the ſhippes came on flote, and ſo wee went forward. And although the company would haue returned backe, yet for all this I determined to goe forwarde, and to purſue our attempted voyage: and we paſſed forward with much adoe, turning our ſtemmes now this way, now that way, to ſeeke to find the chanel. And it pleaſed God that after this ſort we came to the very bottome of the Bay: where wee found a very mightie riuer, which ranne with ſo great fury of a ſtreame, that we could hardly ſaile againſt it. In this ſort I determined as wel as I could to go vp this riuer, and with two boates, leauing the third with the ſhips, and twenty men, my ſelfe being in one of them with Roderigo Maldonado treaſurer of this fleet, and Gaſpar de Caſtilleia comptroller, and with certaine ſmall pieces of artillerie I began to ſaile vp the riuer, and charged all my company,that none of them ſhould ſtirre nor vſe any ſigne, but he whom I appoynted, although wee found Indians. The ſame day, which was Thurſday the ſixe and twentieth of Auguſt,following our voyage with drawing the boats with halſers we went about ſome 6 leagues: and the next day which was Friday by the breake of day thus following our way vpwart, I ſaw certaine Indians which went toward certaine cottages neere vnto the water, who aſſoone as they ſaw vs, ten or twelue of them roſe vp furiouſly, and crying with a loud voyce, other of their companions came running together to the number of 50 which with all haſte carried out of their cottages ſuch things as they had, and layd them vnder certaine ſhrubs and many of them came running toward that part whether wee approched, making great ſignes vnto vs that we ſhould goe backe againe,vſing great threatnings againſt vs, one while running on this ſide and an other while on that ſide. I ſeeing them in ſuch a rage, cauſed our boates to lanch from the ſhore into the middes of the riuer, that the Indians might be out of feare, and I rode at anker, and ſet my people in as good order as I could,charging them that no man ſhould ſpeake,nor make any ſigne nor motion, nor ſtirre out of his place, nor ſhould not be offended for any thing that the Indians did, nor ſhould ſhewe no token of warre: And by this meanes the Indians came euery foote neere the riuers ſide to ſee vs: and I gate by little and little toward them where the riuer ſeemed to be deepeſt. In this meane ſpace there were aboue two hundred and fiftie Indians aſſembled together with bowes and arrowes, and with certaine banners in warrelike ſort in ſuch maner as thoſe of New Spayne doe vſe: and perceiuing that I drewe toward the ſhore, they came with great cryes toward vs with bowes and arrowes put into them, and with their banners diſplayed. And I went vnto the ſtemme of my boate with the interpreter which I carried with me, whom I commanded to ſpeake vnto them, and when he ſpake, they neither vnderſtood him, nor he them, although becauſe they ſawe him to be after their faſhion, they ſtayed themſelues: and ſeeing this I drewe neerer the ſhore, and they with great cryes came to keepe mee from the ſhore of the riuer, making ſignes that I ſhould not come any farther, putting ſtakes in my way betweene the water and the land: and the more I lingered, the more people ſtill flocked together. Which when I had conſidered I beganne to make them ſignes of peace, and taking my ſword and target, I caſt them downe in the boate and ſet my feete vpon them, giuing them to vnderſtand with this and other tokens that I deſired not to haue warre with them, and that they ſhould doe the like. Alſo I tooke a banner and caſt it downe, and I cauſed my company that were with mee to ſit downe likewiſe, and taking the wares of exchange which I carried with mee, I called them to giue them ſome of them: yet for all this none of them ſtirred to take any of them, but rather flocked together, and beganne to make a great murmuring among themſelues: and ſuddenly one came out from among them with a ſtaffe wherein certayne ſhelles were ſet, and entred into the water to giue them vnto mee, and I tooke them, and made ſignes vnto him that hee ſhould come neere me, which when he had done, I imbraced him, and gaue him in recompence certaine beades and other things, and he returning with them vnto his fellowes, began to looke vpon them, and to parley together, and within a while after many of them came toward me,to whom I made ſignes to lay downe their banners,and to leaue their weapons: which they did incontinently,then I made ſignes that they ſhould lay them altogether, and ſhould goe aſide from them, which likewiſe they did: and they cauſed thoſe Indians which newly came thither to leaue them, and to lay them together with the reſt. After this I called them vnto me, and to all them which came I gaue ſome ſmal trifle, vſing them gently, and by this time they were ſo many that came thronging about mee, that I thought I could not ſtay any longer in ſafety among them, and I made ſignes vnto them that they ſhould withdraw themſelues, and that they ſhould ſtand al vpon the ſide of an hill which was there betweene a plaine & the riuer, and that they ſhould not preſſe to me aboue ten at a time. And immediatly the moſt ancient among them called vnto them with a loud voyce, willing them to do ſo: and ſome ten or twelue of them came where I was: whereupon ſeeing my ſelfe in ſome ſecuritie, I determined to goe on land the more to put them out of feare: and for my more ſecuritie, I made ſignes vnto them, to ſit downe on the ground which they did: but when they ſaw that ten or twelue of my companions came a ſhore after me, they begam to be angry, and I made ſignes vnto them that we would be friends, and that they ſhould not feare, & herewithal they were pacified, and ſate down as they did before, and I went vnto them, & imbraced them, giuing them certain trifles, commanding mine interpreter to ſpeake vnto them, for I greatly deſired to vnderſtand their maner of ſpeech, and the cry which they made at mee. And that I might knowe what maner of foode they had, I made a ſigne vnto them, that wee would gladly eate, and they brought mee certaine cakes of Maiz, and a loafe of Mizquiqui, and they made ſignes vnto mee that they deſired to ſee an harquebuſe ſhotte off, which I cauſed to be diſcharged, and they were all wonderfully afraid, except two or three olde men among them which were not mooued at all, but rather cried out vpon the reſt, becauſe they were afrayd: and through the ſpeach of one of theſe olde men, they began to riſe vp from the ground, and to lay hold on their weapons: whom when I ſought to appeaſe, I would haue giuen him a ſilken girdle of diuers colours, and hee in a great rage bitte his nether lippe cruelly, and gaue mee a thumpe with his elbowe on the the breſt, and turned in a great furie to ſpeake vnto his company. After that I ſaw them aduance their banners, I determined to returne my ſelfe gently to my boates, and with a ſmall gale of wind I ſet ſayle, whereby wee might breake the current which was very great, although my company were not well pleaſed to goe any farther. In the meane ſpace the Indians came following vs along the ſhore of the riuer, making ſignes that I ſhould come on land, and that they would giue mee food to eate; ſome of them ſucking their fingers, and others entred into the water with certaine cakes of Maiz to giue me them in my boate.

Chap. 2.

Of the habite, armour and ſtature of the Indians, A relation of many others with whom he had by ſignes traffique, victuals and many courteſies.

IN this ſort we went vp two leagues, and I arriued neere a cliffe of an hill, whereupon was an arbour made newly, where they made ſignes vnto me, crying that I ſhould go thither, ſhewing me the ſame with their handes, and telling mee that there was meate to eate. But I would not goe thither, ſeeing the place was apt for ſome ambuſh, but followed on my voyage, within a while after iſſued out from thence aboue a thouſand armed men with their bowes and arrowes, and after that many women and children ſhewed themſelues, toward whom I would not goe, but becauſe the Sunne was almoſt ſet, I rode in the middeſt of the riuer. Theſe Indians came decked after ſundry faſhions; ſome came with a painting that couered their face all ouer, ſome had their faces halfe couered, but all beſmouched with cole, and euery one as it liked him beſt. Others carried viſards before them of the ſame colour which had the ſhape of faces. They weare on their heads a piece of a Deeres ſkinne two ſpannes broad ſet after the maner of a helmet, and vpon it certaine ſmall ſticks with ſome ſortes of fethers. Their weapons were bowes and arrowes of hard wood, and two or three ſorts of maces of wood hardened in the fire. This is a mightie people, well feitured, and without any groſſeneſſe. They haue holes bored in their noſtrels whereat certaine pendents hang: and others weare ſhelles, and their eares are full of holes, whereon they hang bones and ſhelles. All of them both great and ſmall weare a girdle about their waſte made of diuerſe colours, and in the middle is faſtened a round bunch of feathers, which hangeth downe behind like a tayle. Likewiſe on the brawne of their armes they weare a ſtreit ſtring, which they wind ſo often about that it becommeth as broad as ones hand. They weare certaine pieces of Deeres bones faſtened to their armes, werewith they ſtrike off the ſweate, and at the other certaine ſmall pipes of canes. They carry alſo certaine little long bagges about an hand broade tyed to their left arme, which ſerue them alſo in ſtead of braſers for their bowes, full of the powder of a certaine herbe, whereof they make a certaine beuerage. They haue their bodies traced with coles, their haire cut before, and behind it hangs downe to their waſt. The women goe naked, and weare a great wreath of fethers behind them, and before painted and glued together, and their haire like the men. There were among theſe Indians three or foure men in womens apparell, Nowe the next day being Saturday very early I went forward on my way vp the riuer, ſetting on ſhore two men for eache boate to drawe them with the rope, and about breaking foorth of the Sunne, wee heard a mightie crie of Indians on both ſides of the riuer with their weapons, but without any banner. I thought good to attend their comming, aſwell to ſee what they woulde haue, as alſo to try whether our interpreter could vnderſtand them. When they came ouer againſt vs they leapt into the riuer on both ſides with their bowes and arrowes, and when they ſpake, our interpreter vnderſtoode them not: whereupon I beganne to make a ſigne vnto them that they ſhould lay away their weapons, as the other had done. Some did as I willed them, and ſome did not, and thoſe which did, I willed to come neere me and gaue them ſome things which we had to trucke withall, which when the others perceiued, that they might likewiſe haue their part, they layd away their weapons likewiſe. I iudging my ſelfe to be in ſecuritie leaped on ſhore with them, and ſtoode in the the middeſt of them, who vnderſtanding that I came not to fight with them, began to giue ſome of thoſe ſhels and beades, and ſome brought me certaine ſkinnes well dreſſed, and others Maiz and a roll of the ſame naughtily grinded, ſo that none of them came vnto me that brought mee not ſomething, and before they gaue it me going a little way from mee they began to cry out amayne, and made a ſigne with their bodies and armes, and afterward they approched to giue me that which they brought. And now that the Sunne beganne to ſet I put off from the ſhore, and rode in the middeſt of the riuer. The next morning before breake of day on both ſides of the riuer wee heard greater cryes and of more Indians, which leaped into the riuer to ſwimme, and they came to bring mee certaine gourdes full of Maiz, and of thoſe wreathes which I ſpake of before. I ſhewed vnto them Wheate and Beanes, and other ſeedes, to ſee whether they had any of thoſe kindes: but they ſhewed mee that they had no knowledge of them, and wondred at all of them, and by ſignes I came to vnderſtand that the thing which they moſt eſteemed and reuerenced was the Sunne: and I ſignified vnto them that I came from the Sunne. Whereat they marueiled, and then they began to beholde me from the toppe to the toe, and ſhewed me more fauour then they did before: and when I aſked them for food, they brought me ſuch abundance that I was inforced twiſe to call for the boates to put it into them, and from that time forward of all the things which they brought me they flang vp into the ayre one part vnto the Sunne, and afterward turned towards me to giue mee the other part: and ſo I was alwayes better ſerued and eſteemed of them as well in drawing of the boats vp the riuer, as alſo in giuing me food to eat: and they ſhewed me ſo great loue, that when I ſtayed they would haue carried vs in their armes vnto their houſes: and in no kind of thing they would breake my commandement: and for my ſuretie, I willed them not to carry any weapons in my ſight: and they were ſo carefull to doe ſo, that if any man came newly thither with them, ſuddenly they would goe and meete him to cauſe him to lay them downe farre from mee: and I ſhewed them that I tooke great pleaſure in their ſo doing: and to ſome of the chiefe of them I gaue certaine little napkins and other trifles; for if I ſhould haue giuen ſomewhat to euery one of them in particular, all the ſmall wares in New Spayne would not haue ſufficed. Sometimes it fell out (ſuch was the great loue and good wil which they ſhewed me) that if any Indians came thither by chance with their weapons, and if any one being warned to leaue them behind him, if by negligence, or becauſe he vnderſtood them not at the firſt warning, he had not layd them away, they would runne vnto him, and take them from him by force, and would breake them in pieces in my preſence. Afterward they tooke the rope ſo louingly, and with ſtriuing one with another for it, that we had no need to pray them to doe it. Wherefore if we had not had this helpe, the current of the riuer being exceeding great, and our men that drew the rope being not well acquainted with that occupation, it would haue beene impoſſible for vs to haue gotten vp the riuer ſo againſt the ſtreame. When I perceiued that they vnderſtood mee in all things, and that I likewiſe vnderſtoode them, I thought good to try by ſome way or other to make a good entrance to find ſome good iſſue to obtaine my deſire: And I cauſed certaine croſſes to be made of certaine ſmall ſticks and paper, and among others when I gaue any thing I gaue them theſe as things of moſt price and kiſſed them, making ſignes vnto them that they ſhould honour them and make great account of them, and that they ſhould weare them at their necks: giuing them to vnderſtand that this ſigne was from heauen, and they tooke them and kiſſed them, and lifted them vp aloft, and ſeemed greatly to reioyce thereat when they did ſo, and ſometime I tooke them into my boate, ſhewing them great good will, and ſometime I gaue them of thoſe trifles which I caried with me. And at length the matter grew to ſuch iſſue, that I had not paper and ſtickes ynough to make croſſes. In this maner that day I was very well accompanied, vntill that when night approched I ſought to lanch out into the riuer, and went to ride in the middeſt of the ſtreame, and they came to aſke leaue of me to depart, ſaying that they would returne the next day with victuals to viſite me, and ſo by litle and little they departed, ſo that there ſtayed not aboue fiftie which made fires ouer againſt vs, and ſtayed there al night calling vs, and before the day was perfectly broken, they leapt into the water and ſwamme vnto vs aſking for the rope, and we gaue it them with a good will, thanking God for the good prouiſion which hee gaue vs to go vp the riuer: for the Indians were ſo many, that if they had gone about to let our paſſage, although we had bene many more then wee were, they might haue done it.

Chap. 3.

One of the Indians vnderſtanding the language of the interpreter, asketh many queſtions of the originall of the Spaniards, he telleth him that their Captaine is the child of the Sunne, and that he was ſent of the Sunne vnto them, and they would haue receiued him for their king. They take this Indian into their boat, and of him they haue many informations of that countrey.

IN this maner we ſailed vntil Tueſday at night, going as we were wont, cauſing mine interpreter to ſpeak vnto the people to ſee if peraduēture any of them could vnderſtand him, I perceiued that one anſwered him, whereupon I cauſed the boates to be ſtayed, and called him, which hee vnderſtoode, charging mine interpreter that hee ſhould not ſpeake nor anſwere him any thing elſe, but onely that which I ſaid vnto him: and I ſaw as I ſtood ſtill that that Indian began to ſpeake to the people with great furie: whereupon all of them beganne to drawe together, and mine interpreter vnderſtood, that he which came to the boate ſayd vnto them, that he deſired to knowe what nation we were, and whence wee came, and whither we came out of the water, or out of the earth, or from heauen: And at this ſpeech an infinite number of people came together, which marueiled to ſee mee ſpeake: and this Indian turned on this ſide and on that ſide to ſpeake vnto them in another language which mine interpreter vnderſtood not. Whereas he aſked me what we were, I anſwered that we were Chriſtians, and that we came from farre to ſee them: and anſwering to the queſtion, who had ſent me, I ſaid, I was ſent by the Sunne, pointing vnto him by ſignes as at the firſt, becauſe they ſhould not take mee in a lye. He beganne againe to aſke mee, how the Sunne had ſent me, ſeeing hee went aloft in the ſkie and neuer ſtoode ſtill, and ſeeing theſe many yeeres neither he nor their olde men had euer ſeene ſuch as we were, of whome they euer had any kind of knowledge, and that the Sunne till that houre had neuer ſent any other. I anſwered him that it was true that the Sunne made his courſe aloft in the ſkie, and did neuer ſtand ſtill, yet neuertheleſſe that they might well perceiue that at his going downe and riſing in the morning hee came neere vnto the earth, where his dwelling was, and that they euer ſawe him come out of one place, and that hee had made mee in that land and countrey from whence hee came, like as hee had made many others which hee ſent into other partes, and that nowe hee had ſent me to viſite and view the ſame riuer, and the people that dwelt neere the ſame, that I ſhould ſpeake vnto them, and ſhoulde ioyne with them in friendſhippe, and ſhould giue them things which they had not, and that I ſhould charge them that they ſhould not make warre one againſt another. Whereunto he anſwered, that I ſhould tell him the cauſe why the Sunne had not ſent mee no ſooner to pacifie the warres which had continued a long time among them, wherein many had beene ſlaine. I tolde him the cauſe hereof was, becauſe at that time I was but a child. Then he aſked the interpreter whether wee tooke him with vs perforce hauing taken him in the war, or whether he came with vs of his own accord. He anſwered him that he was with vs of his owne accord, and was very wel appaid of our company. He returned to enquire, why we brought none ſaue him onely that vnderſtood vs, and wherefore wee vnderſtood not all other men, ſeeing we were the children of the Sunne: he anſwered, that the Sunne alſo had begotten him, and giuen him a language to vnderſtand him, and me, and others: that the Sunne knew well that they dwelt there, but that becauſe he had many other buſineſſes, and becauſe I was but yong hee ſent me no ſooner. And he turning vnto me ſayd ſuddenly: Comeſt thou therefore hither to bee our Lord, and that wee ſhould ſerue thee? I ſuppoſing that I ſhould not pleaſe him if I ſhould haue ſaid yea, anſwered him, not to be their Lord, but rather to be their brother, and to giue them ſuch things as I had. He aſked me, whether the Sunne had begotten me as he had begotten others, and whether I was his kinſman or his ſonne: I anſwered him that I was his ſonne. He proceeded to aſke me whether the reſt that were with me were alſo the children of the Sunne, I anſwered him no, but that they were borne all with me in one countrey, where I was brought vp. Then he cryed out with a loud voyce and ſayd, ſeeing thou doeſt vs ſo much good, and wilt not haue vs to make warre, and art the child of the Sunne, wee will all receiue thee for our Lord, and alwayes ſerue thee, therefore wee pray thee that thou wilt not depart hence nor leaue vs: and ſuddenly hee turned to the people, and beganne to tell them, that I was the child of the Sunne, and that therefore they ſhould all chuſe me for their Lord. Thoſe Indians hearing this, were aſtonied beyond meaſure, and came neerer ſtill more and more to behold me. That Indian alſo aſked mee other queſtions, which to auoyd tediouſneſſe I doe not recite: and in this wiſe we paſſed the day, and ſeeing the night approch, I began by all meanes I could deuiſe to get this fellow into our boat with vs: and he refuſing to goe with vs, the interpreter told him that wee would put him on the other ſide of the riuer, and vpon this condition hee entred into our boate, and there I made very much of him, and gaue him the beſt entertaynement I could, putting him alwayes in ſecuritie, and when I iudged him to be out of all ſuſpition, I thought it good to aſke him ſomewhat of that countrey. And among the firſt things that I aſked him this was one, whether hee had euer ſeene any men like vs, or had heard any report of them. Hee anſwered mee no, ſauing that hee had ſometime hearde of olde men, that very farre from that Countrey there were other white men, and with beardes like vs, and that hee knewe nothing elſe. I aſked him alſo whether hee knewe a place called Ceuola, and a Riuer called Totonteac, and hee anſwered mee no. Whereupon perceiuing that hee coulde not giue mee any knowledge of Francis Vazquez nor of his company, I determined to aſke him other things of that countrey, and of their maner of life: and beganne to enquire of him, whether they helde that there was one God, creator of heauen and earth, or that they worſhipped any other Idol. And hee anſwered mee no: but that they eſteemed and reuerenced the Sunne aboue all other things, becauſe it warmed them and made their croppes to growe: and that of all things which they did eate, they caſt a little vp into the ayre vnto him. I aſked him next whether they had any Lorde, and hee ſayde no: but that they knewe well that there was a great Lorde, but they knewe not well which way hee dwelt. And I tolde him that hee was in heauen, and that hee was called Ieſus Chriſt, and I went no farther in diuinitie with him. I aſked him whether they had any warre, and for what occaſion. Hee anſwered that they had warre, and that very great, and vpon exceeding ſmall occaſions: for when they had no cauſe to make warre, they aſſembled together, and ſome of them ſayd, let vs goe to make warre in ſuch a place, and then all of them ſet forward with their weapons. I aſked them who commanded the armie: he anſwered the eldeſt and moſt valiant, and that when they ſayd they ſhould proceede no farther, that ſuddenly they retired from the warre. I prayed him to tell me what they did with thoſe men which they killed in battell: he anſwered me that they tooke out the hearts of ſome of them, and eat them, and others they burned; and he added, that if it had not bene for my comming, they ſhould haue bin now at warre: and becauſe I commanded them that they ſhould not war, and that they ſhould ceaſe from armes, therefore as long as I ſhould not command them to take armes, they would not begin to wage warre againſt others, & they ſaid among themſelues, that ſeeing I was come vnto them, they had giuen ouer their intention of making warre, & that they had a good mind to liue in peace. He complained of certaine people which dwelt behind in a mountaine which made great war vpon them, and ſlew many of them: I anſwered him, that from henceforward they ſhould not need to feare any more, becauſe I had cõmanded them to be quiet, & if they would not obey my commandement, I would chaſten them and kill them. He enquired of me how I could kill them ſeeing we were ſo few, and they ſo many in number. And becauſe it was now late, and that I ſaw that by this time he was weary to ſtay any longer with me, I let him goe out of my boat, and therewith I diſmiſſed him very well content.

Chap. 4.

Of Naguachato and other chiefe men of thoſe Indians they receiue great ſtore of victuals, they cauſe them to ſet vp a croſſe in their countreys, and hee teacheth them to worſhip it, They haue newes of many people, of their diuers languages, and cuſtomes in matrimony, how they puniſh adultery, of their opinions concerning the dead, and of the ſickneſſes which they are ſubiect vnto.

The next day betimes in the morning came the chiefe man among them called Naguachato, and wiſhed me to come on land becauſe he had great ſtore of victuals to giue me. And becauſe I ſaw my ſelfe in ſecuritie I did ſo without doubting; and incontinently an olde man came with rols of that Maiz, and certaine litle gourds, and calling me with a loud voyce and vſing many geſtures with his body and armes, came neere vnto me, and cauſing me to turne me vnto that people, and hee himſelfe alſo turning vnto them ſayd vnto them, Sagueyca, and all the people anſwered with a great voyce, Hu, and hee offred to the Sunne a little of euery thing that he had there, and likewiſe a little more vnto me (although afterward he gaue me all the reſt) and did the like to all that were with me: & calling out mine interpreter, by meanes of him I gaue them thanks, telling them that becauſe my boats were litle I had not brought many things to giue them in exchange, but that I would come againe another time and bring them, and that if they would go with me in my boates vnto my ſhips which I had beneath at the riuers mouth, I would giue them many things. They anſwered that they would do ſo, being very glad in countenance. Here by the helpe of mine interpreter I ſought to inſtruct them what the ſigne of the croſſe meant, and willed them to bring me a piece of timber, wherof I cauſed a great croſſe to be made, and commanded al thoſe that were with mee that when it was made they ſhould worſhip it, and beſeech the Lord to grant his grace that that ſo great a people might come to the knowledge of his holy Catholike faith: and this done I told them by mine interpreter that I left them that ſigne, in token that I tooke them for my brethren, and that they ſhould keepe it for me carefully vntill I returned, and that euery morning at the Sunne riſing they ſhould kneele before it. And they tooke it incontinently, & without ſuffring it to touch the ground they carried it to ſet it vp in the middeſt of their houſes, where all of them might beholde it; and I willed them alwayes to worſhippe it becauſe it would preſerue them from euill. They aſked me how deep they ſhould ſet it in the ground, & I ſhewed them.

Great ſtore of people followed the ſame, and they that ſtayed behinde inquired of mee, how they ſhould ioyne their hands, and how they ſhould kneele to worſhip the ſame; and they ſeemed to haue great deſire to learne it. This done, I tooke that chiefe man of the Countrey, and going to our boates with him, I followed my iourney vp the Riuer, and all the company on both ſides of the ſhoare accompanied me with great good will, and ſerued me in drawing of our boates, and in halling vs off the ſands, whereupon we often fel: for in many places we found the riuer ſo ſhoald, that we had no water for our boats. As wee thus went on our way, ſome of the Indians which I had left behind me, came after vs to pray mee that I would throughly inſtruct them, how they ſhould ioyne their hands in the worſhipping of the croſſe: others ſhewed me whether they were well ſet in ſuch & ſuch ſort, ſo that they would not let me be quiet. Neere vnto the other ſide of the riuer was greater ſtore of people, which called vnto me very often, that I would receiue the victuals which they had brought me. And becauſe I perceiued that one enuied the other, becauſe I would not leaue them diſcontented, I did ſo. And here came before me another old man like vnto the former with the like ceremonyes & offrings: and I ſought to learne ſomething of him as I had done of the other. This man ſaid likewiſe to the reſt of the people, This is our lord. Now you ſee how long ago our anceſters told vs, that there were bearded & white people in the world, and we laughed them to ſcorne. I which am old and the reſt which are here, haue neuer ſeene any ſuch people as theſe. And if you wil not beleeue me, behold theſe people which be in this riuer: let vs giue them therefore meate, ſeeing they giue vs of their victuals: let vs willingly ſerue this lord, which wiſheth vs ſo well, and forbiddeth vs to make warre, and imbraceth all of vs: and they haue mouth, handes and eyes as we haue, and ſpeake as we doe. I gaue theſe likewiſe another croſſe as I had done to the others beneath, and ſaid vnto them the ſelfe ſame words; which they liſtened vnto with a better will, & vſed greater diligence to learne that which I ſaid. Afterward as I paſſed farther vp the riuer, I found another people, whom mine interpreter vnderſtood not a whit: wherefore I ſhewed them by ſignes the ſelfeſame ceremonies of worſhipping the croſſe, which I had taught the reſt. And that principal old man which I tooke with me, told me that farther vp the riuer I ſhould find people which would vnderſtand mine interpreter: and being now late, ſome of thoſe men called me to giue me victuals, and did in all poynts as the others had done, dauncing and playing to ſhew me pleaſure. I deſired to know what people liued on the banks of this riuer: and I vnderſtood by this man that it was inhabited by 23 languages, and theſe were bordering vpon the riuer, beſides others not farre off, and that there were beſides theſe 23. languages, other people alſo which hee knewe not, aboue the riuer. I aſked him whether euery people were liuing in one towne together: and he anſwered me, No: but that they had many houſes ſtanding ſcattered in the fieldes, and that euery people had their Countrey ſeuerall and diſtinguiſhed, and that in euery habitation there were great ſtore of people. He ſhewed me a towne which was in a mountaine, and told me that there was there great ſtore of people of bad conditions, which made continual warre vpon them: which being without a gouernour, and dwelling in that deſert place, where ſmall ſtore of Maiz groweth, came downe into the playne to buy it in trucke of Deeres ſkinnes, wherewith they were apparelled with long garments, which they did cutte with raſors, and ſewed with needles made of Deeres bones: and that they had great houſes of ſtone. I aſked them whether there were any there of that Countrey; and I found one woman which ware a garment like a little Mantle, which clad her from the waſte downe to the ground, of a Deeres ſkin well dreſſed. Then I aſked him whether the people which dwelt on the riuers ſide, dwelt alwayes there, or els ſometime went to dwell in ſome other place: he anſwered mee, that in the ſummer ſeaſon they aboade there, and ſowed there; and after they had gathered in their croppe they went their way, and dwelt in other houſes which they had at the foote of the mountaine farre from the riuer. And hee ſhewed me by ſignes that the houſes were of wood compaſſed with earth without, and I vnderſtood that they made a round houſe, wherein the men and women liued all together. I aſked him whether their women were common or no: he tolde me no, and that hee which was married, was to haue but one wife only. I deſired to know what order they kept in marying: and he told me, that if any man had a daughter to marry, he went where the people kept, and ſaid, I haue a daughter to marry: is there any man here that wil haue her? And if there were any that would haue her, he anſwered that he would haue her: and ſo the mariage was made. And that the father of him which would haue her, brought ſome thing to giue the yong woman; and from that houre forward the mariage was taken to be finiſhed, and that they ſang & danced: and that when night came, the parents tooke them, and left them together in a place where no body might ſee them. And I learned that brethren, and ſiſters, and kinſfolks married not together: and that maydes before they were married conuerſed not with men, nor talked not with them, but kept at home at their houſes and in their poſſeſſions, and wrought: and that if by chance any one had company with men before ſhe were maried, her huſband forſooke her, and went away into other Countreyes: and that thoſe women which fell into this fault, were accompted naughty packs. And that if after they were maried, any man were taken in adultery with another woman, they put him to death: and that no man might haue more then one wife, but very ſecretly. They tolde mee that they burned thoſe which dyed; and ſuch as remayned widowes, ſtayed halfe a yeere, or a whole yeere before they married. I deſired to know what they thought of ſuch as were dead. Hee told me that they went to another world, but that they had neither puniſhment nor glory. The greateſt ſickneſſe that this people dye of, is vomiting of blood by the mouth: and they haue Phyſicions which cure them with charmes and blowing which they make. The apparell of theſe people were like the former: they carried their pipes with them to perfume themſelues, like as the people of New Spaine vſe Tabacco. I inquired whether they had any gouernour, and found that they had none, but that euery family had their ſeuerall gouernour. Theſe people haue beſides their Maiz certaine gourds, and another corne like vnto Mill: they haue grindſtones & earthen pots, wherein they boyle thoſe gourds, and fiſh of the riuer, which are very good. My interpreter could goe no farther then this place: for he ſaid that thoſe which we ſhould find farther on our way, were their enemies, and therefore I ſent him backe very well contented. Not long after I eſpied many Indians to come crying with a loude voice, and running after me. I ſtayed to know what they would haue; and they told me that they had ſet vp the croſſe which I had giuen them, in the midſt of their dwellings as I had appointed, but that I was to wit, that when the riuer did ouerflow, it was wont to reach to that place, therefore they prayed mee to giue them leaue to remoue it, and to ſet it in another place where the riuer could not come at it, nor carry it away: which I granted them.

Chap. 5.

Of an Indian of that countrey they haue relation of the ſtate of Cenola, and of the conditions and cuſtomes of theſe people, and of their gouernour: and likewiſe of the countreys not farre diſtant from thence, whereof one was called Quicoma, and the other Coama: of the people of Quicoma, and of the other Indians not farre diſtant they receiue courteſie.

Turqueſes in Cenola.

Thus ſayling, I came where were many Indians, and another interpreter, which I cauſed to come with me in my boat. And becauſe it was cold, & my people were wet, I leapt on ſhore, and commanded a fire to be made, and as we ſtood thus warming our ſelues, an Indian came and ſtrooke me on the arme, pointing with his finger to a wood, out of which I ſaw two companies of men come wᵗ their weapons, & he told me that they came to ſet vpon vs: & becauſe I meant not to fall out with any of them, I retired my company into our boats, & the Indians which were with me ſwam into the water, and ſaued themſelues on the other ſide of the riuer. In the meane ſeaſon I inquired of that Indian which I had with me, what people they were that came out of yᵉ wood: and he told me that they were their enemies, and therefore theſe others at their approch without ſaying any word leapt into the water: and did ſo, becauſe they meant to turne backe againe, being without weapons, becauſe they brought none with them, becauſe they vnderſtood my wil & pleaſure, that they ſhould cary none. I inquired the ſame things of this interpreter which I had done of the other of the things of that countrey, becauſe I vnderſtood that among ſome people one man vſed to haue many wiues, and among others but one. Now I vnderſtood by him, that he had bin at Cenola, and that it was a moneths iourney from his country, and that from that place by a path that went along that riuer a man might eaſily trauel thither in xl. daies, and that the occaſion that moued him to goe thither, was only to ſee Cenola, becauſe it was a great thing, & had very hie houſes of ſtone of 3. or 4. lofts, and windowes on ech ſide: that the houſes were compaſſed about with a wall conteining the height of a man & an halfe, and that aloft & beneath they were inhabited with people, and that they vſed the ſame weapons, that others vſed, which we had ſeene, that is to ſay, bowes & arrowes, maces, ſtaues & bucklers: and that they had one gouernor, & that they were apparelled with mantles, and with oxe-hides, & that their mantles had a painting about them, and that their gouernour ware a long ſhirt very fine girded vnto him, and ouer the ſame diuers mantles: and that the women ware very long garments, and that they were white, and went all couered: and that euery day many Indians wayted at the gate of their gouernor to ſerue him, & that they did weare many Azure or blew ſtones, which were digged out of a rocke of ſtone, and that they had but one wife, with whom they were maried, and that when their gouernors died, all the goods that they had were buried with them. And likewiſe all the while they eate, many of their men waite at their table to court them, and ſee them eate, and that they eate with napkins, and that they haue bathes. On thurſday morning ning at breake of day the Indians came with the like cry to the banke of the riuer, and with greater deſire to ſerue vs, bringing me meat to eat, and making me the like good cheere, which the others had done vnto me, hauing vnderſtood what I was: & I gaue them croſſes, with the ſelf ſame order which I did vnto the former. And going farther vp the riuer, I came to a country where I found better gouernment: for the inhabitants are wholy obedient vnto one only. But returning againe to conferre with mine interpreter touching the dwellings of thoſe of Ceuola, he tolde me, that the lord of that country had a dog like that which I caried with me. Afterward when I called for dinner, this interpreter ſaw certaine diſhes caried in the firſt and later ſeruice, whereupon he told me that the lord of Ceuola had alſo ſuch as thoſe were, but that they were greene, and that none other had of them ſauing their gouernour, and that they were 4. which he had gotten together with that dogge, and other things, of a blacke man which had a beard, but that he knew not from what quarter he came thither, and that the king cauſed him afterward to be killed, as he heard ſay.

This was the Negro that went with Frier Marco de Niza.

I aſked him whether he knew of any towne that was neere vnto that place: he tolde me that aboue the riuer he knew ſome, & that among the reſt there was a lord of a towne called Quicoma, and another of a towne called Coama: and that they had great ſtore of people vnder them.

Quicoma.
Coama.

And after he had giuen me this information, he craued leaue of me to returne vnto his companions. From hence I began againe to ſet ſaile, and within a dayes ſayling I found a towne diſpeopled: where aſſoone as I was entred, by chance there arriued there 500. Indians with their bowes & arrowes, and with them was that principall Indian called Naguachato, which I had left behind, and brought with them certaine conies & yucas: and after I had friendly interteined them all, departing from them, I gaue them licenſe to returne to their houſes.

Conies and yucas.

As I paſſed further by the deſert, I came to certain cotages, out of which much people came toward me with an old man before them, crying in a language which mine interpreter wel vnderſtood, and he ſaid vnto thoſe men: Brethren, you ſee here that lord; let vs giue him ſuch as we haue, ſeeing he dooth vs pleaſure, and hath paſſed through ſo many diſcourteous people, to come to viſit vs. And hauing thus ſaid, he offred to the Sunne, and then to me in like ſort as the reſt had done. Theſe had certaine great bags & well made of the ſkins of fiſhes called Sea-bremes. And I vnderſtood that this was a towne belonging vnto the lord of Quicoma, which people came thither onely to gather the fruit of their harueſt in ſummer; and among them I found one which vnderſtood mine interpreter very well: whereupon very eaſily I gaue them the like inſtruction of the croſſe which I had giuen to others behind. Theſe people had cotton, but they were not very carefull to vſe the ſame: becauſe there was none among them that knew the arte of weauing, & to make apparel thereof.

Cotton.

They aſked me how they ſhould ſet vp their croſſe when they were come to their dwelling which was in the mountaine, and whether it were beſt to make an houſe about it, that it might not be wet, & whether they ſhould hang any thing vpō the armes therof.

A mountaine.

I ſaid no; & that it ſufficed to ſet it in a place where it might be ſeene of all men, vntil I returned: and leſt peraduenture any men of warre ſhould come that way, they offred mee more men to goe with me, ſaying that they were naughty men which I ſhould finde aboue; but I would haue none: neuertheleſſe 20. of them went with me, which when I drew neere vnto thoſe which were their enemies, they warned mee thereof: and I found their centinels ſet vpon their guarde on their borders. On Saturday morning I found a great ſquadron of people ſitting vnder an exceeding great arbour, & another part of them without: and when I ſaw that they roſe not vp, I paſſed along on my voyage: when they beheld this, an old man roſe vp which ſaid vnto me, Sir, why doe you not receiue victuals to eate of vs, ſeeing you haue taken food of others? I anſwered, that I tooke nothing but that which was giuen me, & that I went to none but to ſuch as requeſted me. Here without any ſtay they brought me victuals, ſaying vnto me, that becauſe I entred not into their houſes, and ſtayed all day and all night in the riuer, and becauſe I was the ſonne of the Sunne, all men were to receiue me for their lord. I made them ſignes to ſit down, and called that old man which mine interpreter vnderſtood, and aſked him whoſe that countrey was, and whether the lord thereof were there, he ſaid, yea: and I called him to me; and when he was come, I imbraced him, ſhewing him great loue: & when I ſaw that all of them tooke great pleaſure at the friendly interteinment which I gaue him, I put a ſhirt vpon him, and gaue him other trifles, and willed mine interpreter to vſe the like ſpeaches to that lord which he had done to the reſt; and that done, I gaue him a croſſe, which he receiued with a very good wil, as the others did: and this lord went a great way with me, vntill I was called vnto from the other ſide of the riuer, where the former old man ſtood with much people: to whom I gaue another croſſe, vſing the like ſpeach to them which I had vnto the reſt, to wit, how they ſhould vſe it. Then following my way, I mette with another great company of people, with whom came that very ſame olde man whom mine interpreter vnderſtood; and when I ſaw their lord which he ſhewed vnto me, I prayed him to come with me into my boat, which he did very willingly, and ſo I went ſtill vp the riuer, and the olde man came and ſhewed me who were the chiefe lords: and I ſpake vnto them alwayes with great courteſie, & all of them ſhewed that they reioiced much thereat, & ſpake very wel of my comming thither. At night I withdrew my ſelfe into the midſt of the riuer, & aſked him many things concerning that country: and I found him as willing & wel diſpoſed to ſhew them me, as I was deſirous to know them. I aſked him of Ceuola: and he told me he had bin there, and that it was a goodly thing, & that the lord thereof was very wel obeyed: and that there were other lords thereabout, with whom he was at continual warre. I aſked him whether they had ſiluer & gold, and he beholding certain bels, ſaid they had metal of their colour. I inquired whether they made it there, and he anſwered me no, but that they brought it from a certain mountaine, where an old woman dwelt. I demanded whether he had any knowledge of a riuer called Totonteac, he anſwered me no, but of another exceeding mighty riuer, wherein there were ſuch huge Crocodiles, that of their hides they made bucklers, and that they worſhip the Sunne neither more nor leſſe then thoſe which I had paſſed: and when they offer vnto him the fruits of the earth, they ſay: Receiue hereof, for thou haſt created them, and that they loued him much, becauſe he warmed them; and that when he brake not foorth, they were acolde. Herein reaſoning with him, he began ſomewhat to complaine, ſaying vnto me, I know not wherefore the Sunne vſeth theſe termes with vs, becauſe he giueth vs not clothes, nor people to ſpin nor to weaue them, nor other things which he giueth to many other, and he complayned that thoſe of that country would not ſuffer them to come there, and would not giue them of their corne. I told him that I would remedie this, whereat he remayned very well ſatiſfied.

They are aduertiſed by the Indians, wherefore the lorde of Cenola killed the Negro, which went with Frier Marco, and of many other things: And of an old woman called Guatazaca, which liueth in a lake and eateth no food. The deſcription of a beaſt, of the ſkinne whereof they make targets. The ſuſpition that they conceiue of them, that they are of thoſe Chriſtians which were ſeene at Cenola, and how they cunningly ſaue themſelues.

The next day which was Sunday before breake of day, began their cry as they were woont: and this was the cry of 2. or 3. ſorts of people, which had lyen all night neere the riuers ſide, wayting for me: and they tooke Maiz & other corne in their mouth, and ſprinkled me therewith, ſaying that that was the faſhion which they vſed when they ſacrificed vnto the Sunne: afterward they gaue me of their victuals to eat, and among other things, they gaue me many white peaſon. I gaue them a croſſe as I had done to the reſt: and in the meane ſeaſon that old man tolde them great matters of my doing, and poynted me out with his finger, ſaying, this is the lord, the ſonne of the Sunne: and they made me to combe my beard, & to ſet mine apparell handſomely which I ware vpon my backe. And ſo great was the confidence that they had in me, that all of them told me what things had paſſed, & did paſſe among them, & what good or bad mind they bare one toward another. I aſked them wherefore they imparted vnto me all their ſecrets, and that old man anſwered mee: Thou art our lord, & we ought to hide nothing from our lord. After theſe things, following on our way, I began againe to inquire of him the ſtate of Ceuola, & whether he knewe that thoſe of this country had euer ſeene people like vnto vs: he anſwered me no, ſauing one Negro which ware about his legs & armes certain things which did ring. Your lordſhip is to cal to mind how this Negro which went with frier Marco was wont to weare bels, & feathers on his armes & legs, & that he caried plates of diuers colours, and that it was not much aboue a yeere agoe ſince he came into thoſe parts. I demanded vpon what occaſion he was killed; and he anſwered me, That the lord of Ceuola inquired of him whether he had other brethren: he anſwered that he had an infinite number, and that they had great ſtore of weapons with them, and that they were not very farre from thence. Which when he had heard, many of the chiefe men conſulted together, and reſolued to kil him, that he might not giue newes vnto theſe his brethren, where they dwelt, & that for this cauſe they ſlew him, and cut him into many pieces, which were diuided among all thoſe chiefe lords, that they might know aſſuredly that he was dead; and alſo that he had a dogge like mine, which he likewiſe killed a great while after. I aſked him whether they of Ceuola had any enemies, and he ſaid they had. And he reckoned vnto me 14. or 15. lords which had warre with them: and that they had mantles, and bowes like thoſe aboue mentioned: howbeit he told me that I ſhould find going vp the riuer a people that had no warre neither with their neighbors, nor with any other. He told me that they had 3. or 4. ſorts of trees bearing moſt excellent fruite to eate: and that in a certaine lake dwelt an olde woman, which was much honoured and worſhipped of them: and that ſhee remayned mayned in a litle houſe which was there, and that ſhe neuer did eate any thing: and that there they made things which did ſound, and that many mantles, feathers and Maiz were giuen vnto her. I aſked what her name was, and he tolde me that ſhe was called Guatuzaca, and that thereabout were many lords which in their life & death, vſed the like orders which they of Ceuola did, which had their dwelling in the ſummer with painted mantles, and in the winter dwelt in houſes of wood of 2. or 3. lofts hie: and that he had ſeene all theſe things, ſauing the old woman. And when againe I began to aſke him more queſtions, he would not anſwere me, ſaying that he was wearie of me: and many of thoſe Indians comming about me, they ſaid among themſelus: Let vs marke him well, that we may knowe him when he commeth backe againe. The Monday following, the riuer was beſet with people like to them, and I began to requeſt the old man to tell me what people were in that countrey, which told me he thought I would ſoone forget them: and here he reckoned vp vnto me a great number of lords, and people at the leaſt 200. And diſcourſing with him of their armour, he ſaid that ſome of them had certaine very large targets of lether, aboue two fingers thicke. I aſked him of what beaſts ſkinne they made them: and he deſcribed vnto me a very great beaſt, like vnto an Oxe, but longer by a great handfull, with broad feete, the legs as bigge as the thigh of a man, and the head ſeuen handfuls long, the forehead of three ſpannes, and the eyes bigger then ones fiſt, and the hornes of the length of a mans leg, out of which grew ſharpe poynts, an handfull long, the forfeete and hinderfeete aboue ſeuen handfuls bigge, with a wrethed tayle, but very great; and holding vp his armes aboue his head, he ſaid the beaſt was higher then that. After this hee gaue mee information of another olde woman which dwelt toward the ſea ſide. I ſpent this day in giuing croſſes to thoſe people as I had done vnto the former. This old man that was with me leapt on ſhore, & fell in conference with another which that day had often called him; and here both of them vſed many geſtures in their ſpeach, moouing their armes, and poynting at me. Therefore I ſent mine interpreter out, willing him to drawe neere vnto them, and liſten what they ſaid; and within a while I called him, and aſked him whereof they talked, and he ſayd, that he which made thoſe geſtures ſaid vnto the other, that in Ceuola there were others like vnto vs with beards, and that they ſaid they were Chriſtians, and that both of them ſayd that we were all of one company, and that it were a good deede to kill vs, that thoſe others might haue no knowledge of vs, leſt they might come to doe them harme: and that the old man had anſwered him, this is the ſonne of the Sunne, & our lord, he doth vs good, and wil not enter into our houſes, although we requeſt him thereunto: he will take away nothing of ours, he wil meddle with none of our women, and that to be ſhort, he had ſpoken many other things in my commendation and fauour: and for all this the other ſtedfaſtly affirmed that we were all one, and that the old man ſaid, Let vs goe vnto him, and aſke him whether he be a Chriſtian as the other be, or els the ſonne of the Sunne: and the old man came vnto me, and ſayd: In the countrey of Ceuola whereof you ſpake vnto me doe other men like vnto you dwell. Then I began to make as though I wondred, and anſwered him, that it was impoſſible; and they aſſured me that it was true, and that two men had ſeene them which came from thence, which reported that they had things which did ſhoote fire, and ſwords as we had. I aſked them whether they had ſeene them with their owne eyes: and they anſwered no; but that certaine of their companions had ſeene them. Then he aſked mee whether I were the ſonne of the Sunne, I anſwered him yea. They ſaid that thoſe Chriſtians of Ceuola ſaid ſo likewiſe. And I anſwered them that it might well be. Then they aſked mee if thoſe Chriſtians of Ceuola came to ioyne themſelues with me, whether I would ioyne with them: and I anſwered them, that they needed not to feare any whit at all, for if they were the ſonnes of the Sunne as they ſaid, they muſt needes be my brethren, and would vſe towards all men the like loue and courteſie which I vſed: whereupon hereat they ſeemed to be ſomewhat ſatiſfied.

Chap. 7.

It is tolde him that they are ten dayes iourney diſtant from Ceuola, and that there be Chriſtians there, which make warre againſt the lords of that countrey. Of the Sodomie which thoſe Indians vſe with foure yong men, appoynted for that ſeruice, which weare womens apparel. Seeing they could not ſend newes of their being there to them of Ceuola, they went backe againe downe the riuer to their ſhips.

Then I prayed them to tel me how many dayes that kingdom of Ceuola, which they ſpake of, was diſtant from that riuer: and that man anſwered, that there was the ſpace of tenne dayes iourney without habitation, and that he made none accompt of the reſt of the way, becauſe there were people to be found. Vpon this aduertiſement I was deſirous to certifie Captaine Francis Vazquez of my being there, and imparted my mind with my ſouldiers, among whom I found none that was willing to goe thither, although I offered them many rewards in your lordſhips name, onely one Negro ſlaue though with an euil wil offred himſelfe vnto me to go thither: but I looked for the comming of thoſe two Indians which they told me of, and herewithall we went on our way vp the riuer againſt the ſtreame in ſuch ſort as we had done before. Here that olde man ſhewed me as a ſtrange thing a ſonne of his clad in womans apparel, exerciſing their office: I aſked him how many there were of theſe among them, and he told me there were foure; & that when any of them died, there was a ſearch made of all the women with child which were in the country, and that the firſt ſonne which was borne of them, was appoynted to doe that duetie belonging vnto women, and that the women clad him in their apparell, ſaying, that ſeeing he was to doe that which belonged to them, he ſhould weare their apparel: theſe yong men may not haue carnall copulation with any woman: but all the yong men of the countrey which are to marrie, may company with them. Theſe men receiue no kind of reward for this inceſtuous act of the people of that countrey, becauſe they haue libertie to take whatſoeuer they find in any houſe for their food. I ſaw likewiſe certaine women which liued diſhoneſtly among men: and I aſked the old man whether they were married, who anſwered me noe, but they were common women, which liued apart from the married women. I came at length after theſe diſcourſes to pray them to ſend for thoſe Indians, which they ſaid had bin at Ceuola, & they told me that they were eight dayes iourney diſtant from that place, but that notwithſtanding there was one among them which was their companion and which had ſpoken with them, as he met them on the way, when they went to ſee the kingdome of Ceuola, and that they told him that he were not beſt to goe any farther, for he ſhould find there a fierce nation like vs, and of the ſame qualities and making, which had fought much with the people of Ceuola, becauſe they had killed a Negro of their company, ſaying, Wherefore haue yee killed him? what did he to you? did he take any bread from you, or do you any other wrong? and ſuch like ſpeach. And they ſaid moreouer, that theſe people were called Chriſtians, which dwelt in a great houſe, & that many of them had oxen like thoſe of Ceuola, and other litle blacke beaſts with wooll and hornes, & that ſome of them had beaſts which they rode vpō, which ran very ſwiftly; & that one day before their departure, from ſunne riſing vntill ſunne ſetting theſe Chriſtians were all day in comming thither, & all of them lodged in that place where others had lodged, & that theſe two met with two Chriſtians, which aſked them whence they were, & whether they had fields ſowen with corne; and they told them that they dwelt in a farre country, and that they had corne, and that then they gaue each of them a litle cap, and they gaue them another to cary to their other companions, which they promiſed to do, & departed quickly. When I vnderſtood this, I ſpoke againe with my company, to ſee if any one of them would go thither, but I found them vnwilling as at the firſt, and they laid againſt me greater incōueniences. Then I called the old man to ſee if he would giue me any people to goe with me, & victuals to trauel through that wildernes, but he laid before me many inconueniences & dangers, which I might incurre in that voyage, ſhewing me the danger that there was in paſſing by a lord of Cumana, which threatned to make warre vpon them, becauſe his people had entred into the others countrey to take a ſtagge, and that I ſhould not therefore depart thence without ſeeing him puniſhed. And when I replied that in any wiſe I muſt needes goe to Ceuola, he willed me to ſurceaſe from that purpoſe, for they looked that that lord without al doubt would come to annoy them, & that therefore they could not leaue their countrey naked to goe with me, and that it would be better, that I would make an end of that warre betweene them, and that then I might haue their company to Ceuola. And vpon this point we grew to ſuch variance, that we began to grow into choler, and in a rage he would haue gone out of the boat, but I ſtayed him, and with gentle ſpeeches began to pacifie him, ſeeing that it imported mee much to haue him my friend: but for all my courteſies which I ſhewed him, I could not alter him from his mind, wherein he ſtil remained obſtinate. In this meane while I ſent a man away vnto my ſhips to giue them knowledge of the iourney that I had determined to make. After this I prayed the old man that he would fetch him backe againe, becauſe I had determined, that ſeeing I ſaw no meanes to be able to go to Ceuola, & becauſe I would ſtay no longer among thoſe people, becauſe they ſhould not diſcouer me, and likewiſe becauſe I meant in perſon to viſit my ſhips, with determination to returne againe vp the riuer, carying with me other companions, & leaue there ſome which I had ſicke, and telling the olde man and the reſt that I would returne, and leauing them ſatiſfied the beſt I could (although they alwayes ſaid that I went away for feare) I returned downe the riuer: and that way which I had gone againſt the ſtreame vp the riuer in 15. dayes and an halfe, I made in my returne in 2. dayes and an halfe, becauſe the ſtreame was great and very ſwift. In this wiſe going downe the riuer, much people came to the banks, ſaying, Sir, wherefore doe you leaue vs? what diſcourteſie hath bin done vnto you? did you not ſay that you would remayne continually with vs, and be our Lord: And turne backe againe: if any man aboue the riuer hath done you any wrong we will goe with our weapons with you and kill him; and ſuch like words ful of loue and kindnes.

Chap. 8.

When they came to their ſhippes the Captaine named that coaſt La Campanna de la Cruz, and builded a Chapel vnto our Lady, and called the riuer El Rio de Buena Guia, and returned vp the ſame againe: when he came to Quicona and Coama the Lords of thoſe places vſed him very courteouſly.

Vpon mine arriuall at my ſhips I found all my people in health, although very heauie for my long ſtay, and becauſe the current had fretted fower of their cables, and that they had loſt two ankers which were recouered. After we had brought our ſhips together, I cauſed them to bring thē into a good harbour, & to giue the carena to the ſhippe called Sanct Peter, & to mend all things that were needfull. And here aſſembling all my company together, I opened vnto them what knowledge I had receiued of Francis Vaſquez; and how it might be that in thoſe ſixteene dayes ſpace which I was in ſayling vp the riuer he might peraduenture haue ſome knowledge of me, and that I was minded to returne vp the riuer once againe to try if I could finde any meanes to ioyne my ſelfe with him: and although ſome ſpake againſt my determination, I cauſed al my boates to bee made ready, becauſe the ſhips had no need of them. I cauſed one of them to be filled with wares of exchange, with corne and other ſeedes, with hennes & cockes of Caſtile, and departed vp the riuer, leauing order that in that prouince called Campanna de la Cruz they ſhould build an Oratorie or Chapell, and called it the Chappell of our Lady de la Buena Guia, and that they ſhould call this riuer Rio de Buena Guia becauſe that is your Lordſhips Deuiſe: I carried with me Nicolas Zamorano Pilote mayor, to take the height of the pole. And I departed on tueſday the fourteenth of September, & on wedneſday I came vnto the firſt dwellings of the firſt Indians, which came running to hinder my paſſage, ſuppoſing that we had bene other people, for we caried with vs a fifer, & a drummer, and I was clad in other apparell then I went in before, when they ſaw me firſt of all: and when they knew me they ſtayed, though I could not grow vnto perfect friendſhip with them, whereupon I gaue them ſome of thoſe ſeedes which I brought with mee; teaching them how they ſhould ſow them: and after I had ſayled 3 leagues, my firſt interpretour came euen to my boat to ſeeke me with great ioy, of whom I demanded wherefore he had left me, he tolde me that certaine companions of his had led him away. I made him good countenance and better intertainment, becauſe he ſhould beare me companie againe, conſidering howe much it did importe me to haue him with me. He excuſed himſelfe becauſe he ſtayed there to bring mee certaine feathers of Parrats, which he gaue me. I aſked him what people theſe were, and whether they had any Lord: hee anſwered me, yea; and named three or foure vnto me, of foure or 25 names of people which he knew and that they had houſes painted within, and that they had trafficke with thoſe of Ceuola, and that in two moones hee came into the countrey. He told me moreouer many other names of Lords, and other people, which I haue written downe in a booke of mine, which I will bring my ſelfe vnto your Lorſhip. But I thought good to deliuer this briefe relation to Auguſtine Guerriero in this hauen of Colima, that he might ſend it ouerland to your Lordſhippe, to whom I haue many other things to imparte.

But to returne to my iourney, I arriued at Quicama, where the Indians came forth with great ioy and gladnes to receiue me, aduertizing me that their Lord waited for my comming; to whom when I was come I found that he had with him fiue or ſixe thouſand men without weapons, from whom he went aparte with ſome two hundred onely, all which brought victuals with them, and ſo he came towards me, going before the reſt with great authoritie, and before him and on each ſide of him were certaine which made the people ſtande aſide, making him way to paſſe. Hee ware a garment cloſe before and behind and open on both ſides, faſtened with buttons, wrought with white and blacke checker worke, it was very ſoft and well made, being of the ſkinnes of certaine delicate fiſhes called Sea breams. Aſſoone as he was come to the waters ſide his ſeruants tooke him vp in their armes, and brought him into my boate, where I embraced him and receiued him with great ioy, ſhewing vnto him much kindneſſe: vpon which intertainment his people ſtanding by and beholding the ſame ſeemed not a litle to reioyce. This Lord turning himſelfe to his people willed them to conſider my courteſie, and that he being of his owne accord come vnto me with a ſtrange people, they might ſee how good a man I was, and with how great loue I had entertained him, and that therefore they ſhould take me for their Lord, and that all of them ſhould become my ſeruants, and doe whatſoeuer I would command them. There I cauſed him to ſit downe, and to eat certaine conſerues of ſugar which I had brought with mee, and willed the interpreter to thanke him in my name for the fauour which he had done me in vouchſafing to come to ſee mee, recommending vnto him the worſhipping of the croſſe, and all ſuch other things as I had recommended to the reſt of the Indians; namely that they ſhould liue in peace, and ſhould leaue off warres, and ſhould continue alwayes good friendes together: he anſwered, that of long time they had continued in warres with their neighbours, but that from thence forward he would command his people that they ſhould giue food to all ſtrangers that paſſed through his kingdome, and that they ſhould doe them no kinde of wrong, and that if any nation ſhould come to inuade him, he ſaid he would tell them howe I had commanded that they ſhould liue in peace, and if they refuſed the ſame, he would defend himſelfe, and promiſed me, that he would neuer goe to ſeeke warre, if others came not to inuade him. Then I gaue him certaine trifles, as well of the ſeedes which I brought, as of the hens of Caſtile, wherewith he was not a litle pleaſed. And at my departure I caryed certaine of his people with me, to make friendſhip betweene them and thoſe other people which dwelt aboue the Riuer: and here the interpreter came vnto me, to craue leaue to returne home; and I gaue him certaine gifts wherewith he departed greatly ſatiſfied.

Coama. The next day I came to Coama, and many of them knew me not, ſeeing me clad in other apparel, but the old man which was there as ſoone as he knew me leapt into the water, ſaying vnto me; Sir, lo here is the man which you left with me, which came forth very ioyfull & pleaſant declaring vnto me the great courteſies which that people had ſhewed him, ſaying that they had ſtrouen together who ſhould haue him to his houſe, and that it was incredible to thinke what care they had at the riſing of the Sunne to hold vp their hands and kneele before the Croſſe. I gaue them of my ſeedes, and thanked them hartily for the good entertainement which they had ſhewed my man, and they beſought me that I would leaue him with them, which I granted them vntill my return, and he ſtayed among them very willingly. Thus I went forward vp the Riuer, taking that olde Cumana. man in my companie, which told mee, that two Indians came from Cumana to enquire for the Chriſtians, & that he had anſwered them that he knew none ſuch, but that he knew one which was Treaſon of the ſauages. the ſonne of the Sunne, and that they had perſwaded him to ioyne with them to kill mee and my companions. I wiſhed him to lend me two Indians, and I would ſend word by them, that I would come vnto them and was deſirous of their friendſhip, but if that they on the contrary would haue warre, I would make ſuch a warre with them, that ſhould diſpleaſe them. And ſo I paſſed through all that people, and ſome came and aſked me, why I had not giuen them Croſſes as well as the reſt, and ſo I gaue them ſome.

Chap. 9.

They goe on land, and ſee the people worſhip the Croſſe which they had giuen them. The Captaine cauſeth an Indian to make a draught of the countrey: hee ſendeth a Croſſe to the Lord of Cumana, and going down the Riuer with the ſtreame, he arriueth at his ſhips, Of the error of the Pilots of Cortez as touching the ſituation of this Coaſt.

The next day I went on land to ſee certaine cottages, and I found many women and children holding vp their hands and kneeling before a Croſſe which I had giuen them. When I came thither I did the like my ſelf; and conferring with the old man, he began to informe me of as many people and Prouinces as he knew. And when euening was come I called the old man to come and lodge with mee in my boate; hee anſwered that hee would not goe with mee becauſe I would wearie him with aſking him queſtions of ſo many matters: I told him that I would requeſt him nothing elſe but that he would ſet me downe in a charte as much as he knew concerning that Riuer, and what maner of people thoſe were which dwelt vpon the banckes thereof on both ſides: which he did willingly. And then he requeſted me that I would deſcribe my countrey vnto him, as he had done his vnto me. And for to content him, I cauſed a draught of certaine things to be made for him. The next day I entred betweene certaine very high mountaines, through which this Riuer paſſeth with a ſtreight chanel, and the boats went vp againſt the ſtreame very hardly An Inchanter. for want of men to draw the ſame. Here certaine Indians came and told me, that in the ſame place, there were certaine people of Cumana, and among the reſt an enchanter, who enquired which way we would paſſe; & they telling him that we meant to paſſe by the Riuer, he ſet certaine canes on both ſides thereof, through which wee paſſed, without receiuing any kinde of demage which they intended againſt vs. Thus going forward I came vnto the houſe of the olde man which was in my company, and here I cauſed a very high Croſſe to be ſet vp, wherupon I engraued certaine letters to ſignifie that I was come thither: and this I did, that if by chance any of the people of the generall Vaſquez de Coronado ſhould come thither, they might haue knowledge of my being there. At length ſeeing I could not attaine to the knowledge of that which I ſought for, I determined to returne backe vnto my ſhips. And being ready to depart there arriued two Indians, which by meanes of the interpreters of the old man, told me that they were ſent to me, and that they were of Cumana, and that their Lord could not come himſelfe, becauſe he was farre from that place, but deſired me to ſignifie vnto him what my pleaſure was. I told them, that I wiſhed that he would alwayes imbrace peace, and that I was comming to ſee that countrey, but being inforced to returne backe downe the Riuer I could not now doe it, but that hereafter I would returne, and that in the meane ſeaſon they ſhould giue that Croſſe vnto their Lorde, which they promiſed me to do, and they went directly to cary him that Croſſe with certaine feathers which were on the ſame. Of theſe I ſought to vnderſtand what people dwelt vpward vpon the bankes of the Riuer, which gaue me knowledge of many people, and told me that the Riuer went farre more vp into the land then I had yet ſeene, but that they knew not the head thereof, becauſe it was very far into the countrey, and that many other Riuers fell into the ſame.

This Riuer ran much farther vp then he had trauelled.

Hauing learned thus much the next day morning I returned downe the Riuer, and the day following I came where I had left my Spaniard, with whom I ſpake, and told him that all things had gone well with me, and that at this time and the former I had gone aboue 30 leagues into the countrey. The Indians of that place inquired of me what the cauſe was of my departure, and whē I would returne; to whom I anſwered, that I would returne ſhortly. Thus ſayling downe the ſtreame, a woman leapt into the water crying vnto vs to ſtay for her, and ſhee came into our boate, and crept vnder a bench, from whence we could not make her to come out: I vnderſtood that ſhee did this, becauſe her huſband had taken vnto him another wife, by whom hee had children, ſaying that ſhe ment not to dwell any longer with him, ſeeing he had taken another wife. Thus ſhee and another Indian came with me of their owne accord, and ſo I came into my ſhips, and making them ready we proceeded home on our voyage, coaſting and oftentimes going on land, and entering a great way into the countrey, to ſee if I could learne any newes of Captaine Francis Vaſquez and his companie; of whom I could haue no other knowledge, but ſuch as I learned in the aforeſaide Riuer. I bring with me many actes of taking poſſeſſion of all that Coaſt. And by the ſituation of the Riuer and the height which I tooke, I finde that that which the Maſters and Pilots of the Marqueſſe tooke is falſe, & that they were deceiued by 2 degrees, and I haue ſayled beyond them aboue 4 degrees. I ſayled vp the Riuer 85 leagues, where I ſaw and learned all the particulars before mentioned, and many other things, whereof when it ſhall pleaſe God to giue mee leaue to kiſſe your Lordſhips hands, I will deliuer you the full and perfect relation. I thinke my ſelfe to haue had very good fortune, in that I found Don Luis de Caſtilia, and Auguſtine Ghenero in the port of Colima: for the Galiot of the Adelantado came vpon mee, which was there with the reſt of his fleet, and commanded me to ſtrike ſayle, which ſeeming a ſtrange thing vnto me, and not vnderſtanding in what ſtate things were in Nueua Eſpanna, I went about to defend my ſelfe, and not to doe it. In the meane while came Don Luis de Caſtilia in a boate and conferred with mee, and I lay at anchor on the other ſide of the hauen where the ſaide fleete road, and I gaue vnto him this relation (and to auoyd ſtriffe I determined to ſayle away by night) which relation I caryed about me briefly written; for I alwayes had a purpoſe to ſend the ſame, as ſoone as I ſhould touch vpon Nueua Eſpanna, to aduertize your Lordſhip of my proceedings.

He ſayled 85 leagues vp the Riuer.

An extract of a Spaniſh letter written from Pueblo de los Angeles in Nueua Eſpanna in October 1597, touching the diſcouerie of the rich Iſles of California, being diſtant eight dayes ſayling from the maine.

WE haue ſeene a letter written the eight of October 1597, out of a towne called Pueblo de los Angeles ſituate eighteene leagues frō Mexico, making mention of the Iſlands of California ſituate two or three hundreth leagues frō the maine land of Nueua Eſpanna, in Mar del Sur: as that thither haue bene ſent before that time ſome people to conquer them: which with loſſe of ſome twentie men were forced backe. After that they had wel viſited and found thoſe Iſlands or countreys to be very rich of gold and ſiluer mynes, and of very fayre Orientall pearles, which were caught in good quantitie vpon one fathome and an halfe paſſing in beautie the pearles of the Iſland Margarita: the report thereof cauſed the Vice-roy of Mexico to ſend a citizen of Mexico with two hundreth men to conquer the ſame. Therein alſo was affirmed that within eight dayes they could ſayle thither from the mayne.

The courſe which Sir Francis Drake held from the hauen of Guatulco in the South ſea on the backe ſide of Nueua Eſpanna, to the North-weſt of California as far as fourtie three degrees: and his returne back along the ſaid Coaſt to thirtie eight degrees: where finding a faire and goodly hauen, he landed, and ſtaying there many weekes, and diſcouering many excellent things in the countrey and great ſhewe of rich minerall matter, and being offered the dominion of the countrey by the Lord of the ſame, hee tooke poſſeſſion thereof in the behalfe of her Maieſtie, and named it Noua Albion.

WEe kept our courſe from the Iſle of Cano (which lyeth in eight degrees of Northerly latitude, and within two leagues of the maine of Nicaragua, where wee calked and trimmed our ſhip) along the Coaſt of Nueua Eſpanna, vntill we came to the Hauen and Towne of Guatulco, which (as we were informed) had but ſeuenteene Spaniards dwelling in it, and we found it to ſtand in fifteene degrees and fiftie minutes.

Aſſoone as we were entred this Hauen we landed, and went preſently to the towne, and to the Towne houſe, where we found a Iudge ſitting in iudgement, he being aſſociate with three other officers, vpon three Negroes that had conſpired the burning of the Towne: both which Iudges, and priſoners we tooke, and brought them a ſhippeboord, and cauſed the chiefe Iudge to write his letter to the Towne, to command all the Towneſmen to auoid, that we might ſafely water there. Which being done, and they departed, wee ranſaked the Towne, and in one houſe we found a pot of the quantitie of a buſhell full of royals of plate, which we brought to our ſhip.

And here one Thomas Moone one of our companie, took a Spaniſh gentleman as he was flying out of the Towne, and ſearching him, he found a chaine of Gold about him, and other iewels, which we tooke and ſo let him goe.

The Portugal Pilote ſet on land.

At this place our Generall among other Spaniards, ſet aſhore his Portugall Pilote, which he tooke at the Iſland of Cape Verde, out of a ſhip of Saint Marie port of Portugall, and hauing ſet them a ſhoore, we departed thence.

Our General at this place and time thinking himſelfe both in reſpect of his priuate iniuries receiued from the Spaniards, as alſo of their contempts and indignities offered to our Countrey and Prince in generall, ſufficiently ſatiſfied, and reuenged: and ſuppoſing that her Maieſtie at his returne would reſt contented with this ſeruice, purpoſed to continue no longer vpon the Spaniſh coaſtes, but began to conſider and to conſult of the beſt way for his Countrey.

He thought it not good to returne by the Streights, for two ſpeciall cauſes: the one, leaſt the Spaniards ſhould there waite, and attend for him in great number and ſtrength, whoſe handes he being left but one ſhip, could not poſſibly eſcape. The other cauſe was the dangerous ſituation of the mouth of the Streights of the South ſide, with continuall ſtormes raining and bluſtring, as he found by experience, beſides the ſhoals and ſands vpon the coaſt, wherefore he thought it not a good courſe to aduenture that way: he reſolued therefore to auoide theſe hazards, to goe forward to the Iſlands of the Malucos, and therehence to ſaile the courſe of the Portugales by the Cape of Bona Sperança.

Vpon this reſolution, he began to thinke of his beſt way for the Malucos, and finding himſelfe, where hee now was, becalmed, hee ſawe that of neceſſitie hee muſt bee enforced to take a Spaniſh courſe, namely to ſaile ſomewhat Northerly to get a winde. Wee therefore ſet ſaile, and ſayled 800 leagues at the leaſt for a good winde, and thus much we ſayled from the 16 of April after our olde ſtile till the third of Iune.

Sir Francis Drake ſayled on the backe ſide of America to 43 degrees of Northerly latitude.

The fift day of Iune being in fortie three degrees towardes the pole Arcticke, being ſpeedily come out of the extreame heate, wee found the ayre ſo colde, that our men being pinched with the ſame, complayned of the extremitie thereof, and the further we went, the more the colde increaſed vpon vs, whereupon we thought it beſt for that time to ſeeke land, and did ſo, finding it not mountainous, but low plaine land, & we drew backe againe without landing, til we came within thirtie eight degrees towardes the line. In which height it pleaſed God to ſend vs into a faire and good Bay, with a good winde to enter the ſame.

In this Bay wee ankered the ſeuenteenth of Iune, and the people of the Countrey, hauing their houſes cloſe by the waters ſide, ſhewed themſelues vnto vs, and ſent a preſent to our Generall.

When they came vnto vs, they greatly wondred at the things which we brought, but our Generall (according to his naturall and accuſtomed humanitie) curteouſly intreated them, and liberally beſtowed on them neceſſarie things to couer their nakedneſſe, whereupon they ſuppoſed vs to be gods, and would not be perſwaded to the contrary: the preſents which they ſent vnto our Generall were feathers, and cals of net worke.

A deſcription of the people and Countrey of Noua Albion.

Their houſes are digged round about with earth, and haue from the vttermoſt brimmes of the circle clifts of wood ſet vpon them, ioyning cloſe together at the toppe like a ſpire ſteeple, which by reaſon of that cloſeneſſe are very warme.

Their bed is the ground with ruſhes ſtrawed on it, and lying about the houſe, they haue the fire in the middeſt. The men goe naked, the women take bulruſhes and kembe them after the maner of hempe, and thereof make their looſe garments, which being knit about their middles, hang downe about their hippes, hauing alſo about their ſhoulders a ſkinne of Deere, with the haire vpon it. Theſe women are very obedient and ſeruiceable to their huſbands.

After they were departed from vs, they came and viſited vs the ſecond time, and brought with them feathers and bags of Tabacco for preſents: And when they came to the toppe of the hil (at the bottome whereof wee had pitched our tents) they ſtayed themſelues, where one appointed for ſpeaker weaired himſelfe with making a long oration, which done, they left their bowes vpon the hill and came downe with their preſents.

In the meane time the women remaining on the hill, tormented themſelues lamentably, tearing their fleſh from their cheekes, whereby we perceiued that they were about a ſacrifice. In the meane time our Generall, with his companie, went to prayer, and to reading of the Scriptures, at which exerciſe they were attentiue and ſeemed greatly to be affected with it: but when they were come vnto vs they reſtored againe vnto vs thoſe things which before we had beſtowed vpon them.

The newes of our being there being ſpread through the countrey, the people that inhabited round about came downe, and amongſt them the king himſelf, a man of a goodly ſtature, and comely perſonage, with many other tall and warlike men: before whoſe comming were ſent two Ambaſſadours to our Generall, to ſignifie that their king was comming, in doing of which meſſage, their ſpeech was continued about halfe an howre. This ended, they by ſignes requeſted our Generall to ſend ſomething by their hand to their king, as a token that his comming might bee in peace: wherein our Generall hauing ſatiſfied them, they returned with glad tidings to their king, who marched to vs with a princely Maieſtie, the people crying continually after their maner, and as they drewe neere vnto vs, ſo did they ſtriue to behaue themſelues in their actions with comelineſſe.

In the fore front was a man of a goodly perſonage, who bare the ſcepter, or mace before the king, whereupon hanged two crownes, a leſſe and a bigger, with three chaines of a merueilous length: the crownes were made of knit work wrought artificially with feathers of diuers colours: the chaines were made of a bony ſubſtance and few be the perſons among them that are admitted to weare them: and of that number alſo the perſons are ſtinted, as ſome ten, ſome twelue, &c. Next vnto him which bare the ſcepter, was the king himſelfe, with his Guarde about his perſon, clad with Conie ſkinnes, and other ſkinnes: after them followed the naked common ſort of people, euery one hauing his face painted, ſome with white, ſome with blacke, and other colours, and hauing in their hands one thing or other for a preſent, not ſo much as their children, but they alſo brought their preſents.

Theſe are like chaines of Eſurnoy in Canada and Hochelage.

In the meane time, our Generall gathered his men together, and marched within his fenced place, making againſt their approching, a very warlike ſhewe. They being trooped together in their order, and a general ſalutation being made, there was preſently a generall ſilence. Then he that bare the ſcepter before the king, being informed by another, whome they aſſigned to that office, with a manly and loftie voice, proclaimed that which the other ſpake to him in ſecret, continuing halfe an houre: which ended, and a generall Amen as it were giuen, the king with the whole number of men, and women (the children excepted) came downe without any weapon, who deſcending to the foote of the hill, ſet themſelues in order.

In comming towards our bulwarks and tents, the ſcepter bearer began a ſong, obſeruing his meaſures in a dance, and that with a ſtately countenance, whom the king with his Garde, and euery degree of perſons following, did in like maner ſing and dance, ſauing onely the women which daunced and kept ſilence. The General permitted them to enter within our bulwark where they continued their ſong and daunce a reaſonable time. When they had ſatiſfied themſelues, they made ſignes to our Generall to ſit downe, to whom the king, and diuers others made ſeueral orations, or rather ſupplication, that he would take their prouince and kingdom into his hand, and become their king, making ſignes that they would reſigne vnto him their right and title of the whole land, and become his ſubiects. In which to perſwade vs the better, the king and the reſt, The king reſignes his crowne and kingdome to Sir Francis Drake.

with one conſent and with great reuerence, ioyfully ſinging a ſong, did ſet the crowne vpon his head, inriched his necke with all their chaines, and offered vnto him many other things, honouring him by the name of Hioh, adding thereunto as it ſeemed a ſigne of triumph: which thing our Generall thought not meete to reiect, becauſe hee knewe not what honour and profite it might bee to our countrey. Wherefore in the name, and to the vſe of her Maieſtie, he tooke the ſcepter, crowne and dignitie of the ſaid Countrey in his hands, wiſhing that the riches & treaſure thereof might ſo conueniently be tranſported to the inriching of her kingdome at home, as it aboundeth in the ſame.

The common ſort of the people leauing the king and his Guarde with our Generall, ſcattered themſelues together with their ſacrifices among our people, taking a diligent viewe of euery perſon; and ſuch as pleaſed their fancie, (which were the yongeſt) they incloſing them about offred their ſacrifices vnto them with lamentable weeping, ſcratching, and tearing the fleſh from their faces with their nayles, whereof iſſued abundance of blood. But wee vſed ſignes to them of diſliking this, and ſtayed their hands from force, and directed them vpwardes to the liuing God, whome onely they ought to worſhippe. They ſhewed vnto vs their wounds, and craued helpe of them at our handes, whereupon wee gaue them lotions, plaiſters, and ointments agreeing to the ſtate of their griefes, beſeeching God to cure their deſeaſes. Euery thirde day they brought their ſacrifices vnto vs, vntill they vnderſtoode our meaning, that we had no pleaſure in them: yet they could not be long abſent from vs, but daily frequented our company to the houre of our departure, which departure ſeemed ſo grieuous vnto them, that their ioy was turned into ſorrow. They intreated vs, that being abſent wee would remember them, and by ſtelth prouided a ſacrifice, which we miſliked.

Great heards of Deere.

Our neceſſarie buſineſſe being ended, our Generall with his companie traueiled vp into the Countrey to their villages, where we found heardes of Deere by a thouſand in a companie, being moſt large and fat of body.

Abundance of ſtrange conies.

We found the whole countrey to bee a warren of a ſtrange kinde of Conies, their bodyes in bignes as be the Barbary Conies, their heads as the heades of ours, the feet of a Want, and the taile of a Rat being of great length: vnder her chinne on either ſide a bagge, into the which ſhee gathereth her meate when ſhe hath filled her belly abroad. The people eate their bodies, and make great account of their ſkinnes, for their Kings coate was made of them.

Noua Albion.

Our Generall called this countrey, Noua Albion, and that for two cauſes: the one in reſpect of the white bankes and cliffes, which ly towardes the ſea: and the other, becauſe it might haue ſome affinitie with our Countrey in name, which ſometime was ſo called.

Golde and ſiluer in the earth of Noua Albion.

There is no part of earth here to bee taken vp, wherein there is not ſome ſpeciall likelihood of gold or ſiluer.

At our departure hence our Generall ſet vp a monument of our being there; as alſo of her Maieſties right and title to the ſame, namely a plate nailed vpon a faire great poſte, whereupon was ingrauen her Maieſties name, the day and yeere of our arriuall there, with the free giuing vp of the Prouince and people into her Maieſties hands, together with her highnes picture and armes, in a peice of ſixe pence of current Engliſh money vnder the plate, where vnder was alſo written the name of our Generall.

It ſeemeth that the Spaniards hitherto had neuer bene in this part of the countrey, neither did euer diſcouer the land by many degrees to the Southwards of this place.

The true and perfect deſcription of a voyage performed and done by Franciſco de Gualle a Spaniſh Captaine and Pilot, for the Vice-roy of New Spaine, from the Hauen of Acapulco in New Spaine, to the Iſlands of the Luçones or Philippinas, vnto the Hauen of Manilla, & from thence to the Hauen of Macao in China, and from Macao backe againe to Acapulco, accompliſhed in the yeere of our Lord, 1584.

Chap. 1.

The tenth of March in the yeere of our Lorde 1582 wee ſet ſayle out of the Hauen of Acapulco, lying in the countrey of New Spaine, directing our courſe towards the Iſlands of the Luçones, or Philippinas Weſt Southweſt, turning in that maner for the ſpace of twentie fiue leagues, til wee came vnder ſixteene degrees, that ſo wee might ſhunne the calmes by ſayling cloſe by the ſhoare. From thence forward we held our courſe Weſt for the ſpace of 30 leagues, & being there, we ran Weſt, and Weſt & by South, for the ſpace of 1800 leagues, to the Iſland called Iſla del Enganno, which is the furtheſt Iland lying in the South parts of yͤ Ilands called De los Ladrones, that is, The Ilands of rouers, or Iſlas de las Velas, vnder 13. degrees and ½. in latitude Septentrionall, and 164. degrees in longitude Orientall, vpon the fixed Meridionall line, which lyeth right with the Iland of Terçera. From thence we helde our courſe Weſtward for the ſpace of 280. leagues, till we came to the point called El capo de Eſpirito Santo, that is, The point of the holy Ghoſt, lying in the Iland Tandaya, the firſt Iland of thoſe that are called Philippinas, Luçones, or Manillas, which is a countrey with fewe hilles, with ſome mines of brimſtone in the middle thereof. From the point aforeſayde, wee ſailed Weſt for the ſpace of eighteene leagues to the point or entrie of the chanell, which runneth in betweene that Iland and the Iland of Luçon. This point or entrie lieth ſcarce vnder 12. degrees. All the coaſt that ſtretcheth from the entrie of the chanel to the point of El capo del Spirito ſanto, is not very faire.

Eight leagues from the ſayde point lyeth a hauen of indifferent greatneſſe, called Baya de Lobos, that is, The Bay of woolues, hauing a ſmall Iland in the mouth thereof: and within the chanell about halfe a league from the ende of the ſayd Iland lyeth an Iland or cliffe, & when you paſſe by the point in the middle of the chanell, then you haue fiue and twentie fathom deepe, with browne ſand: there we found ſo great a ſtreame running Weſtward, that it made the water to caſt a ſkum as if it had beene a ſande, whereby it put vs in feare, but caſting out our lead, wee found fiue and twentie fathom deepe.

From the aforeſayd entrie of the chanell North, and North and by Eaſt about tenne leagues, lyeth the Iland of Catanduanes, about a league diſtant from the lande of Luçon, on the furtheſt point Eaſtward, and from the ſame entrie of the chanell towards the Weſt and Southweſt, lyeth the Iland Capuli about ſixe leagues from thence, ſtretching Weſtſouthweſt, and Eaſtnortheaſt, being fiue leagues long, and foure leagues broad: and as wee paſt by it, it lay Northward from vs vnder twelue degrees and ¾. and ſomewhat high lande. Foure leagues from the aforeſayd Iland of Capuli Northweſtward lie the three Ilands of the hauen of Bollon in the Iland of Luçones, ſtretching North and South about foure leagues, diſtant from the firme lande halfe a league, whereof the furtheſt Southward lieth vnder thirteene degrees: In this chanell it is twentie fathom deepe, with white ſand, and a great ſtreame, running Southeaſt: we paſſed through the middle of the chanell. From this chanell wee helde our courſe Southweſt, and Southweſt and by Weſt, for the ſpace of twentie leagues, vntill wee came to the Weſt ende of the Iland of Tycao, which reacheth Eaſt and Weſt thirteene leagues. This point or hooke lyeth vnder 12. degrees and ¾. In the middle betweene this Iland and the Iland Capuli there lie three Ilands called the Faranias, and we ranne in the ſame courſe on the Northſide of all the Ilands, at the depth of of 22. fathom with white ſand.

From the aforeſayd Weſt point of the Iland Tycao to the point of Buryas it is Eaſt and Weſt to ſayle about the length of a league or a league and an halfe: we put into that chanell, holding our courſe South, and South and by Weſt about three leagues, vntill we were out of the chanell at ſixteene fathom deepe, with halfe white and reddiſh ſande in the chanell, and at the mouth thereof, whereof the middle lyeth vnder 12. degrees and ½. and there the ſtreames runne Northward.

The Iland of Buryas ſtretcheth Northweſt and Southeaſt, and is lowe lande, whereof the Northweſt point is about three leagues from the coaſt of Luçon, but you cannot paſſe betweene them with any ſhippe, but with ſmall foiſts and barkes of the countrey. This ſhallowe chanell lieth vnder twelue degrees: and running thorow the aforeſaid chanell betweene the Ilands Tycao and Buryas, as I ſayd before, we ſayled Southward about two leagues from the Iland of Maſbate, which ſtretcheth Eaſt and Weſt 8. leagues long, being in bredth 4. leagues, and lyeth vnder 12. degrees and ¼. in the middle thereof, and is ſomewhat high land.

The Iſle of Maſbate.

From the ſayd chanell betweene Tycao and Buryas, wee helde our courſe Weſtnorthweſt for thirteene leagues, leauing the Iland Maſbate on the Southſide, and the Iland Buryas on the North ſide: at the ende of thirteene leagues wee came by an Iland called Banton, which is in forme like a hat, vnder twelue degrees and ⅔. when we had ſayled the aforeſayd thirteene leagues and eight leagues more, on the South ſide wee left the Iland called Rebuiam, which ſtretcheth Northweſt, and Northweſt and by North, and Southeaſt, and Southeaſt and by South, for the ſpace of eight leagues, being high and crooked lande, whereof the North point lyeth vnder twelue degrees and ⅔. and there you finde 35. fathom deepe, with white ſand.

From the aforeſayd Iland of Banton Southward nine leagues, there beginne and followe three Ilandes, one of them being called Bantonſilla, which is a ſmall Iland in forme of a ſugar loafe: the ſecond Crymara, being ſomewhat great in length, reaching Eaſt and Weſt about two leagues: the third Icaa, or the Ile of Goates, hauing certaine houels. By all theſe Ilandes aforeſayd you may paſſe with all ſortes of ſhippes, whereof the foremoſt lyeth Southward vnder twelue degrees and $\frac{1}{4}$. From the Iland of Bantonſilla, or ſmall Banton, wee helde our courſe Northweſt for the ſpace of foure leagues, to the chanell betweene the Ilands called de Vereies, and the Iland Marinduque, the Vereies lying on the South ſide vnder twelue degrees and $\frac{3}{4}$. (which are two ſmall Ilands like two Frigats) and the Iland Marinduque on the North ſide vnder twelue degrees, and $\frac{2}{3}$. which is a great Iland, ſtretching Weſt northweſt, and Eaſtſoutheaſt, hauing in length 12.& in bredth 7. leagues. On the North ſide with the Iland Luçon it maketh a long and ſmall chanell, running ſomewhat crooked, which is altogether full of ſhallowes and ſandes, whereby no ſhippes can paſſe through it. The furtheſt point Weſtward of the ſame Iland lyeth vnder thirteene degrees and $\frac{1}{4}$. It is high lande, on the Eaſt ſide hauing the forme of a mine of brimſtone or fierie hill, and on the Weſt ſide the land runneth downeward at the point thereof being round like a loafe of bread: in the chanell betweene it and the Vereies, there are 18. fathom deepe with ſmall blacke ſand.

From the aforeſayd chanell of Vereies and Marinduque, wee helde our courſe Weſtnorthweſt twelue leagues to the lande of Mindora, to the point or hooke called Dumaryn, lying full vnder thirteene degrees: Fiue leagues forward from the ſayde chanell on the South ſide wee left an Iland called Iſla del maeſtro del Campo, that is, The Iland of the Colonell, lying vnder twelue degrees and $\frac{3}{4}$. which is a ſmall and flat Iland: In this courſe we had 45. fathom deep, with white ſand.

By this point or end of the Iland Marinduque beginneth the Iland of Myndoro, which hath in length Eaſt and Weſt fiue and twentie leagues, and in bredth twelue leagues, whereof the furtheſt point Southward lyeth vnder thirteene degrees, and the furtheſt point Northward vnder thirteene degrees and $\frac{2}{3}$. and the furtheſt point Weſtward vnder thirteene degrees. This Iland with the Iland of Luçon maketh a chanell of fiue leagues broad, and ten or twelue fathom deepe with muddie ground of diuers colours, with white ſande. Fiue leagues forward from Marinduque lyeth the riuer of the towne of Anagacu, which is ſo ſhallowe, that no ſhippes may enter into it. From thence two leagues further lie the Ilands called Bacco, which are three Ilands lying in a triangle, two of them being diſtant from the land about three hundred cubits, and betweene them and the land you may paſſe with ſmall ſhippes: And from the lande to the other Iland, are about two hundred cubites, where it is altogether ſhallowes and ſandes, ſo that where the ſhippes may paſſe outward about 150. cubites from the lande, you leaue both the Ilands on the South ſide, running betweene the third Iland and the riuer called Rio del Bacco, ſomewhat more from the middle of the chanell towardes the Iland, which is about a league diſtant from the other: the chanell is tenne fathom deepe, with mud and ſhelles vpon the ground: the riuer of Bacco is ſo ſhallowe, that no ſhips may enter into it. From this Iland with the ſame courſe two leagues forward, you paſſe by the point called El Capo de Reſcaleo, where wee caſt out our lead, and found that a man may paſſe cloſe by the lande, and there you ſhall finde great ſtrong ſtreames: and halfe a league forward with the ſame courſe, lyeth the towne of Mindoro, which hath a good hauen for ſhippes of three hundred tunnes. Three leagues Northward from the ſame hauen lyeth the Iland called Caſaa, ſtretching Eaſt and Weſt, being hilly ground.

From the ſayde towne of Myndoro, wee helde our courſe Weſtnorthweſt eight leagues, till wee came to the poynt or hooke of the ſandes called Tulen, lying vpon the Iland of Luçon, which ſande or banke reacheth into the Sea halfe a league from the coaſt: you muſt keepe about an hundred cubites from it, where you finde eight fathom water, muddie and ſhellie ground: you runne along by thoſe ſandes North, and North and by Weſt for the ſpace of two leagues, till you come to the riuer called Rio de Anaſebo: all the reſt of the coaſt called De los Limbones to the mouth or entrie of the Bay called Manilla, (which are foure leagues) is ſayled with the ſame courſe. The Limbones (which are Ilands ſo called) are high in forme like a paire of Organs, with good hauens for ſmall ſhippes, running along by the Limbones: and two leagues beyond them on the South ſide, wee leaue the Ilands of Fortan, and foure Ilands more, but the three Ilands of Lubao, which are very low, lie vnder 13. degrees and $\frac{1}{3}$. and the Limbones lie in the mouth or entrie of the Bay of Manilla vnder 14 degrees and $\frac{1}{4}$.

The Bay of Manilla in 14. degrees and one quarter.

From thence we ranne Northweſt for the ſpace of ſixe leagues to the hauen of Cabite, keeping along by the land lying on the Weſt ſide, where it is ſhallowe, and is called Los Baixos del Rio de Cannas, The ſhallowes of the riuer of Reedes: all along this Bay in the ſame courſe, there is from ten to foure fathom deepe.

Being by the point or hooke of Cabite, then wee kept but an hundred paces from it, running Southweſt, ſouthſouthweſt, and South, vntill wee diſcouered the whole mouth or entrie of the Bay, where we might anker at foure fathom about two hundred cubites from the lande, and then the towne of Manilla was two leagues Northward from vs.

Chap. 2.

The courſe and voyage of the aforeſayd Franciſco Gualle out of the hauen or roade of Manilla, to the hauen of Macao in China, with all the courſes and ſituations of the places.

Sayling out of the hauen of Cabite, lying in the Bay of Manilla, wee helde our courſe Weſtwarde for the ſpace of eighteene leagues, to the point called El Cabo de Samballes: and when wee were eight leagues in our way, wee left the two Ilands Maribillas on the South ſide, and ſailed about a league from them: the point of Samballes aforeſayde lyeth vnder foureteene degrees, and ⅔, being low land, at the end of the ſame coaſt of Luçon, on the Weſt ſide.

From the hooke or point aforeſayde, wee ranne North, and North and by Weſt, for the ſpace of fiue and twentie leagues (about a league from the coaſt of Luçon) to the point called Cabo de Bullinao: all this coaſt and Cape is high and hilly ground, which Cape lyeth vnder ſixteene degrees and ⅔. From this Cape de Bullinao we helde our courſe North, and North and by Eaſt, for 45. leagues to the point called El Cabo de Bojador, which is the furtheſt lande Northwarde from the Iland Luçon lying vnder 19. degrees.

The Cape de Bullinao being paſt the lande maketh a great creeke or bough, and from this creeke the coaſt runneth North to the point of Bojador, being a land full of cliffes and rockes that reach into the Sea, and the land of the hooke or point is high and hilly ground.

From the point of Bojador, wee helde our courſe Weſtnorthweſt an hundred and twentie leagues, vntill we came to the Iland called A Ilha Branca, or the white Iland, lying in the beginning of the coaſt and Bay of the riuer Canton vnder two and twentie degrees, hauing foure and twentie fathom browne muddie ground.

Canton 22. degrees.

From the Iland Ilha Branca, wee helde the aforeſayde courſe of Weſtnorthweſt, for the ſpace of ſixteene leagues, to the Iland of Macao lying in the mouth of the riuer of Canton, and it maketh the riuer to haue two mouthes or entries, and it is a ſmall Iland about three leagues great.

The Iland of Macao.

Chap. 3.

The Nauigation or courſe of the aforeſayd Franciſco Gualle out of the hauen of Macao to Newe Spaine, with the ſituation and ſtretchings of the ſame, with other notable and memorable things concerning the ſame voyage.

When we had prepared our ſelues, and had taken our leaues of our friends in Macao, we ſet ſaile vpon the foure and twentieth of Iuly, holding our courſe Southeaſt, & Southeaſt and by Eaſt, being in the wane of the Moone: for when the Moone increaſeth, it is hard holding the courſe betweene the Ilands, becauſe as then the water and ſtreames run very ſtrong to the Northweſt; wee trauailed through many narrowe chanels by night, hauing the depth of eight or ten fathom, with ſoft muddie ground, vntill wee were about the Iland Ilha Branca, yet we ſaw it not, but by the height we knew that we were paſt it.

Ilha Branca.

Being beyond it, we ranne Eaſtſoutheaſt an hundred and fiftie leagues, to get aboue the ſands called Os Baixos dos Peſcadores, and the beginning of the Ilands Lequeos on the Eaſt ſide, which Ilands are called As Ilhas fermoſas, that is to ſay, The faire Ilands. This I vnderſtoode by a Chinar called Santy of Chinchon, and hee ſayde that they lie vnder one and twentie degrees and ¾. there it is thirtie fathom deepe: and although wee ſawe them not, notwithſtanding by the height and depth of the water we knew we were paſt them.

As Ilhas fermoſas.

Being paſt As Ilhas fermoſas, or the faire Ilands, wee helde our courſe Eaſt, and Eaſt and by North, for two hundred and ſixtie leagues, vntill we were paſt the length of the Ilands Lequeos, ſayling about fiftie leagues from them: the ſaid Chinar tolde me, that thoſe Ilands called Lequeos are very many, and that they haue many and very good hauens, and that the people and inhabitants thereof haue their faces and bodies painted like the Byſayas of the Ilands of Luçon or Philippinas and are apparelled like the Byſayas, and that there alſo are mines of gold: Hee ſayd likewiſe that they did often come with ſmall ſhippes and barkes laden with Bucks and Harts-hides, and with golde in graines or very ſmall pieces, to traffique with them of the coaſt of China, which hee aſſured mee to bee moſt true, ſaying that hee had bene nine times in the ſmall Ilands, bringing of the ſame wares with him to China: which I beleeued to bee true, for that afterwarde Lequeos.

Mines of gold

I

I enquired thereof in Macao, and vpon the coaſt of China, and found that hee ſayde true. The furtheſt or vttermoſt of theſe Ilands ſtretching Northwarde and Eaſtwarde, lie vnder nine and twentie degrees.

Firando.

Being paſt theſe Ilands, then you come to the Ilands of Iapon, whereof the firſt lying Weſt and South, is the Iland of Firando, where the Portugals vſe to traffique: they are in length altogether an hundred and thirtie leagues, and the furtheſt Eaſtward lieth vnder two and thirtie degrees: we ranne ſtill Eaſt, and Eaſt and by North, vntill we were paſt the ſayd hundred and thirtie leagues.

Other Ilands Eaſtward of Iapon.

All this information I had of the aforeſayd Chinar, as alſo that there I ſhould ſee ſome mines of brimſtone or fierie hilles, being ſeuentie leagues beyond them, and thirtie leagues further I ſhould finde foure Ilands lying together, which I likewiſe found, as hee had tolde mee: And that being in Iapon, he ſayd hee had there ſeene certaine men of a very ſmall ſtature, with great rolles of linnen cloth about their heads, that brought golde in ſmall pieces, and ſome white Cangas of cotton, (which are pieces of cotton-linnen ſo called by the Chinars) as alſo ſalte-fiſh like the Spaniſh Atun, or Tunney, which hee ſayde came out of other Ilandes Eaſtward from Iapon: and by the tokens and markes which hee ſhewed mee, I geſſed whereabout thoſe Ilands ſhould bee, and found them not farre from whence he ſayd they lay. Hee ſayd likewiſe that all the Ilands of Iapon haue good hauens and chanels, being a Countrey full of Rice, Corne, Fiſh, and fleſh, and that they are an indifferent and reaſonable people to traffique with, and that there they haue much ſiluer.

Iapon 900. leagues diſtant from the coaſt of America in 37 degrees and an halfe.

Running thus Eaſt, and Eaſt and by North about three hundred leagues from Iapon, wee found a very hollowe water, with the ſtreame running out of the North and Northweſt, with a full and very broad Sea, without any hinderance or trouble in the way that wee paſt: and what winde ſoeuer blewe, the Sea continued all in one ſort, with the ſame hollow water and ſtreame, vntill wee had paſſed ſeuen hundred leagues. About two hundred leagues from the coaſt and land of newe Spaine wee beganne to loſe the ſayd hollow Sea and ſtreame: whereby I moſt aſſuredly thinke and beleeue, that there you ſhall finde a channell or ſtraight paſſage, betweene the firme lande of newe Spaine, and the Countreys of Aſia and Tartaria. Likewiſe all this way from the aforeſayde ſeuen hundred leagues, we found a great number of Whale-fiſhes and other fiſhes called by the Spaniards Atuns or Tunnies, whereof many are found on the coaſt of Gibraltar in Spaine, as alſo Albacoras and Bonitos, which are all fiſhes, which commonly keepe in chanels, ſtraights, and running waters, there to diſperſe their ſeede when they breede: which maketh mee more aſſuredly beleeue, that thereabouts is a chanell or ſtraight to paſſe through.

Seuen and thirty deg. and an halfe. Read Francis Viloa chap. 16.

Being by the ſame courſe vpon the coaſt of newe Spaine, vnder ſeuen and thirtie degrees and ½. wee paſſed by a very high and faire lande with many trees, wholly without ſnowe, and foure leagues from the lande, you finde thereabouts many drifts of rootes, leaues of trees, reeds, and other leaues like figge leaues, the like whereof wee found in great abundance in the countrey of Iapon, which they eate: and ſome of thoſe that wee found, I cauſed to bee ſodden with fleſh, and being ſodden, they eate like Coleworts: there likewiſe wee found great ſtore of Seales: whereby it is to bee preſumed and certainely to bee beleeued, that there are many riuers, bayes, and hauens along by thoſe coaſtes to the hauen of Acaculpo.

From thence wee ranne Southeaſt, Southeaſt and by South, and Southeaſt and by Eaſt, as wee found the winde, to the point called El Cabo de Sant Lucas, which is the beginning of the lande of California, on the Northweſt ſide, lying vnder two and twentie degrees, being fiue hundred leagues diſtant from Cape Mendoçino.

Cabo de San Lucas in 22. deg.

Hauens lately found out.

In this way of the aforeſayde fiue hundred leagues along by the coaſt, are many Ilands: and although they bee but ſmall, yet without doubt there are in them ſome good hauens, as alſo in the firme land, where you haue theſe hauens following, now lately found out, as that of the Ile of Sant Auguſtine, lying vnder thirtie degrees and ¾. and the Iland called Iſla de Cedros, ſcarce vnder eight & twenty deg. and ¼. and the Iland lying beneath Saint Martyn, vnder three and twentie degrees and ½. All this coaſt and countrey, as I thinke, is inhabited, and ſheweth to be a very good countrey: for there by night wee ſawe fire, and by day ſmoke, which is a moſt ſure token that they are inhabited.

From the poynt or hooke of Saint Lucas, to the Southeaſt ſide of California, wee helde our courſe Eaſtſoutheaſt, for the ſpace of 80. leagues, to the point called El cabo de las corrientes, that is, the Cape of the ſtreames lying vnder 19. degrees and ½. And running this courſe, Northward about a league from vs wee ſawe three Ilands called Las tres Marias, (that is to ſay, The three Maries) running the ſame courſe. About foure leagues from the other Ilands, there are other Ilands, lands reaching about two or three leagues: All this way from the mouth or gulfe of California aforeſayd, for the ſpace of the ſayd foureſcore leagues, there are great ſtreames that run Weſtward.

From the point or Cape de las Corrientes, wee ranne Southeaſt, and ſometimes Southeaſt and by Eaſt, for the ſpace of an hundred and thirtie leagues to the hauen of Acapulco. In this way of an hundred and thirtie leagues, being twentie leagues on the way, we had the hauen of Natiuidad, that is, of the birth of the Virgin Mary: and other eight leagues further, the hauen of Saint Iago, or Saint Iames: and ſixe leagues further, the ſea Strand called La Playa de Colima, that is, the Strand of Colima. All this coaſt from California to the hauen of Acapulco is inhabited by people that haue peace and traffique with the Spaniards, and are of condition and qualities like the people of the other places of new Spaine.

The concluſion of the Author of this laſt voyage.

All this deſcription and nauigation haue I my ſelfe ſeene, prooued, and well noted in my voyage made & ended in the yeere of our Lord 1584. from great China out of the hauen and riuer of Canton, as I will more at large ſet it downe vnto your honour, with the longitudes and latitudes thereof, as God ſhall permit mee time and leyſure, whom I beſeech to ſend you long and happie dayes.

And the ſame was truely tranſlated out of Spaniſh into lowe Dutch verbatim out of the Originall copie, (wich was ſent vnto the Viceroy of the Portugall Indies) by Iohn Huyghen Van Linſchoten,

DIVERS VOYAGES MADE BY ENGLISHmen to the famous Citie of Mexico, and to all or moſt part of the other principall prouinces, cities, townes and places throughout the great and large kingdom of New Spaine, euen as farre as Nicaragua and Panama, & thence to Peru: together with a deſcription of the Spaniards forme of gouernment there: and ſundry pleaſant relations of the maners and cuſtomes of the natural inhabitants, and of the manifold rich commodities & ſtrange rarities found in thoſe partes of the continent: & other matters moſt worthy the obſeruation.

The voyage of Robert Tomſon Marchant, into Noua Hiſpania in the yeere 1555. with diuers obſeruations concerning the ſtate of the Countrey: And certaine accidents touching himſelfe.

Robert Tomſon borne in the towne of Andouer in Hampſhire began his trauaile out of England in An. 1553. in the moneth of March: who departing out of the citie of Briſtoll in a good ſhip called The barke yong, in companie of other Marchants of the ſayde citie, within 8. dayes after arriued at Liſbone in Portugall, where the ſayd Robert Tomſon remained 15. dayes, at the end of which he ſhipped himſelfe for Spaine in the ſayd ſhippe, and within 4. dayes arriued in the bay of Cadiz in Andaluſia, which is vnder the kingdom of Spaine, & from thence went vp to the citie of Siuil by land, which is 20. leagues, and there hee repaired to one Iohn Fields houſe an Engliſh Marchant, who had dwelt in the ſaid city of Siuil 18. or 20. yeres maried with wife and children: In whoſe houſe the ſaid Tomſon remained by the ſpace of one whole yeere or thereabout, for two cauſes: The one to learne the Caſtillian tongue, the other to ſee the orders of the countrey, and the cuſtomes of the people. At the end of which time hauing ſeene the fleetes of ſhippes come out of the Indies to that citie, with ſuch great quantitie of gold & ſiluer, pearles, precious ſtones, ſuger, hides, ginger, and diuers other rich commodities, he did determine with himſelfe to ſeeke meanes and opportunitie to paſſe ouer to ſee that rich countrey from whence ſuch great quantitie of rich commodities came. And it fell out that within ſhort time after, the ſayd Iohn Field (where the ſayd Tomſon was lodged) did determine to paſſe ouer into the Weſt Indies, himſelfe, with his wife, children, and familie, and at the requeſt of the ſayde Tomſon, he purchaſed a licence of the King to paſſe into the Indies, for himſelfe, his wife and children, and among them alſo for the ſayde Tomſon to paſſe with them: ſo that preſently they made preparation of victuall and other neceſſarie prouiſion for the voyage. But the ſhippes which were prepared to perfourme the voyage being all ready to depart, vpon certaine conſiderations by the kings commandement were ſtayed and arreſted till further ſhould bee knowen of the Kings pleaſure. Whereupon the ſaid Iohn Field, with Robert Tomſon departed out of Siuil and came down to S. Lucar 15. leagues off, and ſeeing the ſtay made vpon the ſhips of the ſaid fleet, & being not aſſured when they would depart, determined to ſhip themſelues for the Iles of the Canaries, which are 250. leagues from S. Lucar, and there to ſtay till the ſaid fleet ſhould come thither: for that is continually their port to make ſtay at 6. or 8. daies, to take in freſh water, bread, fleſh, & other neceſſaries.

So that in the moneth of February in An. 1555, the ſayde Robert Tomſon with the ſaid Iohn Field and his companie, ſhipped themſelues out of the towne of S. Lucar in a caruel of the citie of Cadiz, and within 6. dayes they arriued at the port of the Grand Canaria, where at our comming the ſhips that rode in the ſaid port began to cry out of all meaſure with loud voyces, in ſo much that the caſtle which ſtood faſt by began to ſhoot at vs, and ſhot 6. or 7. ſhot at vs, and ſtrooke downe our maine maſte, before we could hoiſe out our boat to goe on land, to know what the cauſe of the ſhooting was, ſeeing that we were Spaniſh ſhips, and were comming into his countrey. So that being on lande, and complaining of the wrong and damage done vnto vs; they anſwered, that they had thought we had bene French rouers, that had come into the ſaid port to do ſome harme to the ſhips that were there. For that 8. dayes paſt there went out of the ſaid port a caruell much like vnto ours, laden wit ſugers and other marchandiſe for Spaine and on the other ſide of the point of the ſayd Iland, met with a Frenchman of warre, who tooke the ſaid caruell, & vnladed out of her into the ſaid French ſhip both men & goods. And being demanded of the ſaid Spaniards what other ſhips remained in the port whence they came, they anſwered that there remained diuers other ſhips, & one laden with ſugers (as they were) & ready to depart for Spaine: vpon the which newes the Frenchmen put 30. tall men of their ſhip well appointed into the ſaid caruel which they had taken, and ſent her backe againe to the ſaid port from whence ſhe had departed the day before. And ſomewhat late towards the euening came into the port, not ſhewing paſt 3. or 4. men, and ſo came to an anker hard by the other ſhips that were in the ſaid port, and being ſeene by the caſtle and by the ſaid ſhips, they made no reconing of her, becauſe they knew her, & thinking that ſhe had found contrary windes at the ſea, or had forgot ſomething behinde them, they had returned backe againe for the ſame, and ſo made no accompt of her, but let her alone riding quietly among the other ſhips in the ſaid port: So that about midnight the ſaid caruel with the Frenchmen in her went aboord the other ſhip that lay hard by laden with ſugers, and droue the Spaniards that were in her vnder hatches, & preſently let ſlip her cables and ankers, and ſet ſaile & carried her cleane away, and after this ſort deceiued them: And they thinking or fearing that we were the like, did ſhoote at vs as they did. This being paſt, the next day after our arriuall in the ſayd port, wee did vnbarke our ſelues and went on lande vp to the citie or head towne of the great Canaria, where we remained 18. or 20. dayes: and there found certaine Engliſhmen marchants ſeruants of one Anthony Hickman and Edward Caſtelin marchants of the citie of London that lay there in traffique, of whom wee receiued great courteſie and much good cheere. After the which 20. dayes being paſt, in the which we had ſeene the countrey, the people, and the diſpoſition thereof, wee departed from thence, and paſſed to the next Ile of the Canaries 18. leagues off, called Teneriffe, and being come on land, went vp to the citie called La Laguna, where we remained 7. moneths, attending the comming of the whole fleete, which in the ende came, and there hauing taken that which they had neede of, wee ſhipped our ſelues in a ſhip of Cadiz, being one of the ſaide fleete, which was belonging to an Engliſhman maried in the citie of Cadiz in Spaine, whoſe name was Iohn Sweeting, and there came in the ſayd ſhip for captain alſo an Engliſhman maried in Cadiz, and ſonne in law to the ſayde Iohn Sweeting, whoſe name was Leonard Chilton: there came alſo in the ſaid ſhip another Engliſhman which had bene a marchant of the citie of Exeter, one of 50. yeeres or thereabout, whoſe name was Ralph Sarre. So that wee departed from the ſayd Ilands in the moneth of October the foreſayd yeere, 8. ſhips in our companie, and ſo directed our courſe towards the bay of Mexico, and by the way towardes the Iland of S. Domingo, otherwiſe called Hiſpaniola. So that within 32. dayes after we departed from the Iles of Canaries wee arriued with our ſhip at the port of S. Domingo, and went in ouer the barre where our ſhip knocked her keele at her entrie: and there our ſhip rid before the towne, where wee went on land, & refreſhed our ſelues 16. dayes, where we found no bread made of wheat, but biſcuit brought out of Spaine, and out of the bay of Mexico: for the countrey it ſelfe doeth yeelde no kinde of bread to make graine withall. But the bread they make there, is certaine cakes made of rootes called Caſſaui, which is ſomething ſubſtantiall, but it hath but an vnſauorie taſte in the eating thereof. Fleſh of beefe and mutton they haue great ſtore: for there are men that haue 10000. head of cattell, of oxen, bulles and kine, which they doe keepe onely for the hides: for the quantitie of fleſh is ſo great, that they are not able to ſpend the hundreth part. Hogs fleſh is there good ſtore, very ſweete and ſauorie, and ſo holſome, that they giue it to ſick folkes to eat in ſtead of hennes and capons, although they haue good ſtore of poultrie of that ſort, as alſo of Guinycocks & Guinyhens.

At the time of our being there, the citie of S. Domingo was not of aboue 500. houſholds of Spaniards, but of the Indians dwelling in the ſuburbs there were more. The coūtry is moſt part of the yere very hot, & very ful of a kind of flies or gnats with long bils, which do pricke & moleſt the people very much in the night when they are aſleepe, in pricking their faces and hands, and other parts of their bodies that lie vncouered, & make them to ſwel wonderfully. Alſo there is another kind of ſmall worme which creepeth into the ſoles of mens feet & eſpecially of the black Moores and children which vſe to go barefoot, & maketh their feet to grow as big as a mans head, & doth ſo ake that it would make one run mad. They haue no remedy for the ſame, but to open the fleſh ſometimes 3. or 4. inches & ſo dig them out. The countrey yeeldeth great ſtore of ſuger, hides of oxen, buls and kine, ginger, Cana fiſtula & Salſa perillia: mines of ſiluer & gold there are none, but in ſome riuers there is found ſome ſmal quantitie of gold. The principal coine that they do trafique withal in that place, is blacke money made of copper & braſſe: and this they ſay they do vſe not for that they lacke money of gold and ſiluer to trade withall out of the other parts of India, but becauſe if they ſhould haue good money, the marchants that deale with them in trade, would cary away their gold and ſiluer, and let the countrey commodities lie ſtill. And thus much for S. Domingo. So we were comming from the yles of Canaries to S. Domingo, & there ſtaying vntil the moneth of December, which was 3. moneths. About the beginning of Ianuary we departed thence towards the bay of Mexico & new Spaine, toward which we ſet our courſe, and ſo ſailed 24. dayes till we came within 15. leagues of S. Iohn de Vllua, which was the port of Mexico of our right diſcharge: And being ſo neere our ſaid port, there roſe a ſtorme of Northerly windes, which came off from Terra Florida, which cauſed vs to caſt about into the ſea againe, for feare leaſt that night we ſhould be caſt vpon the ſhoare before day did breake, and ſo put our ſelues in danger of caſting away: the winde and ſea grew ſo foule and ſtrong, that within two houres after the ſtorme began, eight ſhips that were together were ſo diſperſed, that we could not ſee one another. One of the ſhips of our company being of the burthen of 500. tun called the hulke of Carion, would not caſt about to ſea as we did, but went that night with the land, thinking in the morning to purchaſe the port of S. Iohn de Vllua, but miſſing the port went with the ſhoare and was caſt away. There were drowned of that ſhip 75. perſons, men, women and children, and 64. were ſaued that could ſwim, and had meanes to ſaue themſelues: among thoſe that periſhed in that ſhip, was a gentleman who had bene preſent the yere before in S. Domingo, his wife and 4. daughters with the reſt of his ſeruants & houſhold. We with the other 7. ſhips caſt about into the ſea, the ſtorme during 10. dayes with great might, boiſterous winds, fogs & raine: our ſhip being old and weake was ſo toſſed, that ſhe opened at the ſterne a fadome vnder water, and the beſt remedy we had was to ſtop it with beds and pilobiers, and for feare of ſinking we threw and lighened into the ſea all the goods we had or could come by: but that would not ſerue. Then we cut our maine maſt and threw all our Ordinance into the ſea ſauing one piece, which early in a morning when wee thought wee ſhould haue ſunke, we ſhot off, and as pleaſed God there was one of the ſhips of our company neere vnto vs, which we ſaw not by meanes of the great fogge, which hearing the ſound of the piece, & vnderſtanding ſome of the company to be in great extremitie, began to make towards vs, and when they came within hearing of vs, we deſired them for the loue of God to helpe to ſaue vs, for that we were all like to periſh. They willed vs to hoiſe our foreſaile as much as we could & make towards them, for they would do their beſt to ſaue vs, and ſo we did: And we had no ſooner hoiſed our foreſaile, but there came a gale of winde & a piece of a ſea, ſtrooke in the foreſaile, and caried ſaile & maſte all ouerboord, ſo that then we thought there was no hope of life. And then we began to imbrace one another, euery man his friend, euery wife her huſband, and the children their fathers and mothers, committing our ſoules to Almighty God, thinking neuer to eſcape aliue: yet it pleaſed God in the time of moſt need when all hope was paſt, to aide vs with his helping hand, and cauſed the winde a little to ceaſe, ſo that within two houres after, the other ſhip was able to come aboord vs, & tooke into her with her boat man, woman and child, naked without hoſe or ſhoe vpon many of our feete. I do remember that the laſt perſon that came out of the ſhip into the boat, was a woman blacke Moore, who leaping out of the ſhip into the boat with a yong ſucking child in her armes, lept too ſhort and fell into the ſea, and was a good while vnder the water before the boat could come to reſcue her, and with the ſpreading of her clothes roſe aboue water againe, and was caught by the coat & pulled into the boate hauing ſtill her childe vnder her arme, both of them halfe drowned, and yet her naturall loue towards her child would not let her let the childe goe. And when ſhe came aboord the boate ſhe helde her childe ſo faſt vnder her arme ſtill, that two men were ſcant able to get it out. So we departed out of our ſhip & left it in the ſea: it was worth foure hundreth thouſand ducats, ſhip & goods when we left it. And within three dayes after we arriued at our port of S. Iohn de Vllua in New Spaine. I do remember member that in the great and boyſterous ſtorme of this foule weather, in the night, there came vpon the toppe of our maine yarde and maine maſte, a certaine little light, much like vnto the light of a little candle, which the Spaniards called the Cuerpo ſanto, and ſaide it was S. Elmo, whom they take to bee the aduocate of Sailers. At the which ſight the Spaniards fell downe vpon their knees and worſhipped it, praying God and S. Elmo to ceaſe the torment, and ſaue them from the perill that they were in, with promiſing him that at their comming on land, they would repaire vnto his Chappell, and there cauſe Maſſes to be ſaide, and other ceremonies to be done. The friers caſt reliques into the ſea, to cauſe the ſea to be ſtill, and likewiſe ſaid Goſpels, with other croſſings and ceremonies vpon the ſea to make the ſtorme to ceaſe: which (as they ſaid) did much good to weaken the furie of the ſtorme. But I could not perceiue it, nor gaue no credite to it, till it pleaſed God to ſend vs the remedie & deliuered vs from the rage of the ſame, His Name be praiſed therefore. This light continued aboord our ſhip about three houres, flying from maſte to maſte, & from top to top: and ſometime it would be in two or three places at once. I informed my ſelfe of learned men afterward what that light ſhould be, and they ſaid, that it was but a congelation of the winde and vapours of the Sea congealed with the extremitie of the weather, which flying in the winde, many times doeth chance to hit on the maſts and ſhrowds of the ſhips that are at ſea in foule weather. And in trueth I do take it to be ſo: for that I haue ſeene the like in other ſhips at ſea, and in ſundry ſhips at once. By this men may ſee how the Papiſts are giuen to beleeue and worſhip ſuch vaine things and toyes, as God, to whom all honour doth appertaine, and in their neede and neceſſities do let to call vpon the liuing God, who is the giuer of all good things.

Many of our men died of theſe wormes at the taking of Puerto rico.

Cuerpo Santo.

His arriuall at Vera Cruz.

Florida 300. leagues from San Iuan de Vllua.

Mexico.

The 16. of April in Anno 1556, we arriued at the port of S. Iohn de Vllua in new Spaine, very naked and diſtreſſed of apparell, and all other things, by meanes of the loſſe of our foreſaid ſhip and goods, and from thence we went to the new Towne called Vera Cruz, fiue leagues from the ſaid port of S. Iohn de Vllua, marching ſtill by the ſea ſide, where wee found lying vpon the ſands great quantitie of mightie great trees with rootes and all, ſome of them of foure, fiue, and ſixe cart load by our eſtimation, which, as the people tolde vs, were in the great ſtormy weather, which we indured at ſea, rooted out of the ground in Terra Florida, which is three hundreth leagues ouer by Sea, and brought thither. So we came to the ſaide Towne of Vera cruz, where wee remained a moneth: and there the ſaid Iohn Field chanced to meete with an olde friend of his acquaintance in Spaine, called Gonçalo Ruiz de Cordoua, a very rich man of the ſaide Towne of Vera cruz: who hearing of his comming thither with his wife and family, and of his miſfortune by Sea, came vnto him and receiued him and all his houſhold into his houſe, and kept vs there a whole moneth, making vs very good cheere, and giuing vs good intertainement, and alſo gaue vs that were in all eight perſons of the ſaid Iohn Fields houſe, double apparell new out of the ſhop of very good cloth, coates, cloakes, hoſe, ſhirts, ſmocks, gownes for the women, hoſe, ſhooes, and al other neceſſary apparel, and for our way vp to the Citie of Mexico, horſes, moiles and men, and money in our purſes for the expences by the way, which by our accompt might amount vnto the ſumme of 400. Crownes, And after wee were entred two dayes iourney into the Countrey, I the ſaide Robert Tomſon fell ſo ſicke of an ague, that the next day I was not able to ſit on my horſe, but was faine to be caried vpon Indians backes, from thence to Mexico. And when wee came within halfe a dayes iourney of the Citie of Mexico, the ſaide Iohn Field alſo fell ſicke, and within three dayes after we arriued at the ſaid Citie, hee died: And preſently ſickened one of his children, and two more of his houſhold people, and within eight dayes died. So that within tenne dayes after we arriued at the Citie of Mexico, of eight perſons that were of vs of the ſaide company, there remained but foure aliue, and I the ſaid Tomſon was at the point of death of the ſicknes that I got vpon the way, which continued with mee the ſpace of ſixe moneths. At the ende of which time it pleaſed Almightie God to reſtore me my health againe, although weake and greatly diſabled. And being ſome thing ſtrong, I procured to ſeeke meanes to liue, and to ſeeke a way how to profite my ſelfe in the Countrey, ſeeing it had pleaſed God to ſende vs thither in ſafetie. Then by friendſhip of one Thomas Blake a Scottiſhman borne, who had dwelt and had bene married in the ſaid Citie aboue twentie yeeres before I came to the ſaide Citie, I was preferred to the ſeruice of a gentleman a Spaniard dwelling there, a man of great wealth, and one of the firſt conquerours of the ſaid Citie, whoſe name was Gonçalo Cerezo, with whom I dwelt twelue moneths and a halfe. At the ende of which I was maliciouſly accuſed by the Holy houſe for matters of Religion, and ſo apprehended and caried to priſon, where I lay cloſe priſoner ſeuen moneths, without ſpeaking to any creature, but to the Iailer that kept the ſaid priſon, when he brought me my meat and drinke. In the meane time was brought into the ſaide priſon one Auguſtin Boacio an Italian of Genoua alſo for matters of Religion, who was taken at Sacatecas 80. leagues to the Northweſt of the Citie of Mexico: At the ende of the ſaid ſeuen moneths, we were both caried to the high Church of Mexico, to doe open penance vpon an high ſcaffold, made before the high Altar, vpon a Sunday, in the preſence of a very great number of people, who were at the leaſt fiue or ſixe thouſand. For there were that came one hundreth mile off, to ſee the ſaide Auto (as they call it) for that there were neuer none before, that had done the like in the ſaid Countrey, nor could not tell what Lutheranes were, nor what it meant: for they neuer heard of any ſuch thing before. We were brought into the Church, euery one with a S. Benito vpon his backe, which is halfe a yard of yellow cloth, with a hole to put in a mans head in the middeſt, and caſt ouer a mans head: both flaps hang one before, and another behinde, and in the middeſt of euery flap, a S. Andrewes croſſe, made of red cloth, ſowed on vpon the ſame, and that is called S. Benito. The common people before they ſawe the penitents come into the Church, were giuen to vnderſtand that wee were heretiques, infidels, and people that did deſpiſe God, and his workes, and that wee had bene more like deuils then men, and thought wee had had the fauour of ſome monſters, or heathen people. And when they ſaw vs come into the Church in our players coates, the women and children beganne to cry out, and made ſuch a noiſe, that it was ſtrange to ſee and heare, ſaying, that they neuer ſawe goodlier men in all their liues, and that it was not poſſible that there could be in vs ſo much euill as was reported of vs, and that we were more like Angels among men, then ſuch perſons of ſuch euill Religion as by the Prieſtes and friers wee were reported to be, and that it was great pitie that wee ſhould bee ſo vſed for ſo ſmall an offence. So that being brought into the ſaide high Church, and ſet vpon the ſcaffold which was made before the high Altar, in the preſence of all the people, vntill high Maſſe was done, and the ſermon made by a frier, concerning our matter, they did put vs in all the diſgrace they could, to cauſe the people not to take ſo much compaſſion vpon vs, for that wee were heretiques, & people that were ſeduced of the deuill, & had forſaken the faith of the Catholique Church of Rome, with diuers other reprochfull wordes, which were too long to recite in this place. High Maſſe and Sermon being done, our offences, as they called them, were recited, euery man what he had ſaid and done, and preſently was the ſentence pronounced againſt vs. That was, that the ſaid Auguſtine Boacio was condemned to weare his S. Benito all the dayes of his life, and put into perpetuall priſon, where hee ſhould fulfill the ſame, and all his goods confiſcated and loſt. And I the ſaide Tomſon to weare the S. Benito for three yeeres, and then to be ſet at libertie. And for the accompliſhing of this ſentence or condemnation, we muſt be preſently ſent downe from Mexico, to Vera Cruz, and from thence to S. Iohn de Vllua, and there to be ſhipped for Spaine, which was 65. leagues by land, with ſtrait commandement, that vpon paine of 1000. duckets, the Maſters euery one ſhould looke ſtraitly vnto vs, and carry vs to Spaine, and deliuer vs vnto the Inquiſitors of the Holy houſe of Siuill, that they ſhould put vs in the places, where we ſhould fulfill our penances that the Archbiſhop of Mexico had enioyned vnto vs, by his ſentence there giuen. For performance of the which, we were ſent downe from Mexico, to the Sea ſide, which was 65. leagues, with fetters vpon our feete, and there deliuered to the Maſters of the ſhips, to be caried for Spaine, as before is ſaid. And it was ſo, that the Italian, fearing that if he had preſented himſelfe in Spaine before the Inquiſitors, that they would haue burned him, to preuent that danger, when wee were comming homeward, and were arriued at the yland of Terçera, one of the yles of the Açores, the firſt night that we came into the ſaid port to an ancker, about midnight he found the meanes to get him naked out of the ſhip into the ſea, & ſwam naked a ſhoare, and ſo preſently got him to the further ſide of the yland, where hee found a little Caruel ready to depart for Portugal, in the which he came to Lisbone, and paſſed into France, and ſo into England, where hee ended his life in the Citie of London. And I for my part kept ſtill aboord the ſhip, and came into Spaine, and was deliuered to the Inquiſitors of the Holy houſe of Siuill, where they kept me in cloſe priſon, till I had fulfilled the three yeeres of my penance. Which time being expired, I was freely put out of priſon, and ſet at libertie: and being in the Citie of Siuil a caſher of one Hugh Typton, an Engliſh marchant of great doing, by the ſpace of one yeere, it fortuned that there came out of the Citie of Mexico, a Spaniard, called Iohn de la Barrera, that had bene long time in the Indies, and had got great ſummes of golde and ſiluer, and with one onely daughter ſhipped himſelfe for to come for Spaine, and by the way chanced to die, and gaue all that hee had vnto his onely daughter, whoſe name was Marie de la Barrera, and being arriued at the Citie of Siuil, it was my chance to marry with her. The marriage was worth to mee 2500. pounds in barres of golde and ſiluer, beſides iewels of great price. This I thought good to ſpeake of, to ſhew the goodnes of God to all them that put their truſt in him, that I being brought out of the Indies, in ſuch great miſery and infamy to the world, ſhould be prouided at Gods hand in one moment, of more then in all my life before I could attaine vnto by my owne labour.

After we departed from Mexico, our S. Benitoes were ſet vp in the high Church of the ſaid Citie, with our names written in the ſame, according to their vſe and cuſtome, which is and will be a monument and a remembrance of vs, as long as the Romiſh Church doth raigne in that country. The ſame haue bene ſeene ſince by one Iohn Chilton, and diuers others of our nation, which were left in that countrey long ſince, by Sir Iohn Hawkins. And becauſe it ſhalbe knowen wherefore it was that I was ſo puniſhed by the Clergies hande, as before is mentioned, I will in briefe words declare the ſame.

It is ſo, that being in Mexico at the table, among many principall people at dinner, they began to inquire of me being an Engliſhman, whether it were true, that in England they had ouerthrowen all their Churches and houſes of Religion, and that all the images of the Saints of heauen that were in them were throwen downe, broken, and burned, and in ſome places high wayes ſtoned with them, and whether the Engliſh nation denied their obedience to the Pope of Rome, as they had bene certified out of Spaine by their friends. To whom I made anſwere, that it was ſo, that in deed they had in England put downe all the Religious houſes of friers and monks that were in England, and the images that were in their Churches and other places were taken away, and vſed there no more: for that (as they ſay) the making of them, and putting of them where they were adored, was cleane contrary to the expreſſe cōmandement of Almighty God, Thou ſhalt not make to thy ſelfe any grauen image, &c. and that for that cauſe they thought it not lawfull that they ſhould ſtand in the Church, which is the houſe of adoration. One that was at the declaring of theſe words, who was my maſter Gonſalo Cereſo, anſwered and ſaid, if it were againſt the commandement of God, to haue images in the Churches, that then he had ſpent a great deale of money in vaine, for that two yeres paſt he had made in the monaſtery of Santo Domingo, in the ſaid citie of Mexico, an image of our Lady of pure ſiluer & golde, with pearles and precious ſtones, which coſt him 7000. and odde peſos, and euery peſo is 4. s. 8. d. of our money: which indeed was true, for that I haue ſeene it many times my ſelfe where it ſtands. At the table was another gentleman, who preſuming to defend the cauſe more then any other that was there, ſaide, that they knew well ynough that they were made but of ſtockes and ſtones, and that to them was no worſhip giuen, but that there was a certaine veneration due vnto them after they were ſet vp in the Church, and that they were ſet there to a good intent: the one, for that they were books for the ſimple people, to make them vnderſtand the glory of the ſaints that were in heauen, & a ſhape of them to put vs in remembrance to cal vpon them, to be our interceſſors vnto God for vs, for that we are ſuch miſerable ſinners, that we are not worthy to appeare before God, & that vſing deuotion to ſaints in heauen, they may obtaine at Gods hands the ſooner, the thing that we demand of him. As for example, ſaid he, imagin that a ſubiect hath offended his king vpon the earth in any kind of reſpect, is it for the party to go boldly to the king in perſon, & to demand pardon for his offences? No, ſaith he, the preſumptiō were too great, & poſſibly he might be repulſed, and haue a great rebuke for his labour. Better it is for ſuch a perſon to ſeek ſome priuate man neere the king in his Court, and make him acquainted with his matter, & let him be a mediator to his Maieſty for him, & for the matter he hath to do with him, and ſo might he the better come to his purpoſe, and obteine the thing which he doeth demand: euen ſo ſaith he, it is with God and his ſaints in heauen: for we are wretched ſinners, and not worthy to appeare nor preſent our ſelues before the Maieſty of God, to demand of him the thing that we haue need of: therefore thou haſt need to be deuout, and haue deuotion to the mother of God, and the ſaints of heauen, to be interceſſors to God for thee, and ſo mayeſt thou the better obtaine of God the thing that thou doſt demand. To this I anſwered, & ſaid, ſir, as touching the compariſon you made of the interceſſors to the king, how neceſſary they were, I would but aſke you this queſtion. Set the caſe that this king you ſpeak of, if he be ſo merciful, as when he knoweth that one, or any of his ſubiects hath offended him, he ſend for him to his owne towne, or to his owne houſe, or palace, & ſay vnto him, come hither, I know that thou haſt offended many lawes, if thou doeſt know thereof, and doeſt repent thee of the ſame, with ful intent to offend no more, I wil forgiue thy treſpaſſe, and remember it no more: ſaid I, if this be done by the kings owne perſon, what then hath this man need to go ſeeke friendſhip at any of the kings priuat ſeruants hands, but go to the principal, ſeeing that he is readier to forgiue thee, then thou art to demand forgiuenes at his hands? Euen ſo is it with our gracious God, who calleth and crieth out vnto vs throughout all the world, by the mouth of his Prophets, Apoſtles, and by his owne mouth, ſaying, Come vnto me al ye that labour and are ouer laden, and I wil refreſh you: beſides 1000. other offers and proffers which hee doth make vnto vs in his holy Scriptures. What then haue we need of the ſaints helpe that are in heauen, whereas the Lord himſelf doth ſo freely offer himſelfe vnto vs? At which ſayings, many of the hearers were aſtonied, and ſaid, that by that reaſon, I would giue to vnderſtand, that the inuocation of Saints was to be diſanulled, and by the Lawes of God not commanded. I anſwered, that they were not my words, but the words of God himſelfe: looke into the Scriptures your ſelfe, and you ſhall ſo finde it. The talke was perceiued to be preiudiciall to the Romish doctrine, and therefore it was commanded to be no more entreated of, and all remained vnthought vpon, had it not bene for a villanous Portugal that was in the company, who ſaid, Baſta ſer Ingles para ſaber todo eſto y mas: who the next day, without imparting any thing to any body, went to the Biſhop of Mexico, and his Prouiſor, and ſaid, that in a place where he had bene the day before, was an Engliſhman, who had ſaid, that there was no need of Saints in the Church, nor of any inuocation of Saints, vpon whoſe denomination I was apprehended for the ſame words here rehearſed, and none other thing, and thereupon was vſed, as before is written.

Sant Iuan de Vllua.

Now to ſpeake ſomewhat of the deſcription of the countrey, you ſhall vnderſtand, that the port of S. Iohn de Vllua is a very little Iſland low by the water ſide, the broadeſt or longeſt part thereof not aboue a bow ſhoote ouer, and ſtandeth within two furlongs of the firme land. In my time there was but one houſe, and a little Chappel to ſay Maſſe in, in all the Iſland: the ſide to the land wards is made by mans handes, with free-ſtone and grauel, and is 4. fadome deepe downe right, wherfore the great ſhips that come in there do ride ſo neere the ſhoare of the Iſland, that you may come and goe aland vpon their beake noſes. They vſe to put great chaines of yron in at their halſers, and an ancker to the landward, and all little ynough to more well their ſhippes for feare of the Northerly winds, which come off the coaſt of Florida, that ſometimes haue caried ſhips, & houſes, and all away to the ſhoare. The king was wont to haue 20. great mightie Negroes, who did ſerue for nothing elſe, but onely to repaire the ſaid Iſland, where the foule weather doeth hurt it. The Countrey all thereabout is very plaine ground, & a mile from the ſea ſide a great wildernes, with great quantitie of red Deere in the ſame, ſo that when the mariners of the ſhips are diſpoſed, they go vp into the wildernes, and do kil of the ſame, and bring them aboord to eate, for their recreation.

The way and diſtance from San Iuan de Vllua to Vera Cruz, is fiue leagues.

From this port to the next towne, which is called Vera Cruz, are 5. leagues almoſt by the Sea ſide, till you come within one league of the place, and then you turne vp towards the land, into a wood, till you come to a litle riuer hard by the ſaid townes ſide, which ſometimes of the yere is dry without water. The towne of Vera Cruz in my time, had not paſt 300. houſholds, and ſerued but for the folke of the ſhips; to buy and bring their goods aland, and deliuer it to their owners, as alſo the owners and their factors to receiue their goods of the Maſters of the ſhips. This towne ſtandeth alſo in a very plaine on the one ſide the riuer, and the other ſide is enuironed with much ſande blowen from the ſea ſide with the tempeſt of weather, many times comming vpon that coaſt. This towne alſo is ſubiect to great ſicknes, and in my time many of the Mariners & officers of the ſhips did die with thoſe diſeaſes there accuſtomed, & eſpecially thoſe that were not vſed to the countrey, nor knew the danger therof, but would commonly go in the Sunne in the heat of the day, & did eat fruit of the countrey with much diſorder, and eſpecially gaue themſelues to womens company at their firſt comming: whereupon they were caſt into a burning ague, of the which few eſcaped.

Venta de Rinconado

Halfe a dayes iourney from Vera Cruz, towards Mexico, is a lodging of fiue or ſixe houſes, called the Rinconado, which is a place, where is a great pinacle made of lime and ſtone, faſt by a riuer ſide, where the Indians were wont to doe their ſacrifices vnto their gods, and it is plaine and low ground betwixt that and Vera Cruz, and alſo ſubiect to ſicknes: but afterward halfe a dayes iourney that you do begin to enter into the high land, you ſhall find as faire, good, and ſweet countrey as any in the world, and the farther you go, the goodlier and ſweeter the countrey is, till you come to Pueblo de los Angeles, which may be ſome 43 leagues from Vera Cruz, which was in my time a towne of 600. houſholds, or thereabout, ſtanding in a goodly ſoile. Betweene Vera Cruz and that you ſhall come through many townes of the Indians, and villages, and many goodly fieldes of medow grounds, Riuers of freſh waters, forreſts, and great woods, very pleaſant to behold. From Pueblo de los Angeles, to Mexico, is 20. leagues of very faire way and countrey, as before is declared. Mexico was a Citie in my time, of not aboue 1500. houſholds of Spaniards inhabiting there, but of Indian people in the ſuburbs of the ſaid city, dwelt aboue 300000. as it was thought, and many more. This City of Mexico is 65. leagues from the North ſea, and 75. leagues from the South ſea, ſo that it ſtandeth in the midſt of the maine land, betwixt the one ſea and the other. It is ſituated in the middeſt of a lake of ſtanding water, and enuironed round about with the ſame, ſauing in many places, going out of the Citie, are many broad wayes through the ſaid lake or water. This lake and Citie is enuironed alſo with great mountaines round about, which are in compaſſe aboue thirtie leagues, and the ſaide Citie and lake of ſtanding water, doeth ſtand in a great plaine in the middeſt of it. This lake of ſtanding water doeth proceed from the ſhedding of the raine, that falleth vpon the ſaide mountaines, and ſo gather themſelues together in this place.

Pueblo de los Angeles.

Mexico.

All the whole proportion of this Citie doeth ſtand in a very plaine ground, and in the middeſt of the ſaid Citie is a ſquare place of a good bow ſhoote ouer from ſide to ſide: and in the middeſt of the ſaid place is the high Church, very faire and well builded all through, at that time not halfe finiſhed, and round about the ſaid place, are many faire houſes built: on the one ſide, are the houſes where Mutezuma the great king of Mexico that was, dwelt, and now there lye alwayes the viceroyes that the King of Spaine ſendeth thither euery three yeeres. And in my time there was for viceroy a gentleman of Caſtil, called Don Luis de Velaſco. And on the other ſide of the ſaide place, ouer againſt the ſame, is the Biſhops houſe, very faire built, and many other houſes of goodly building. And hard by the ſame, are alſo other very faire houſes, built by the Marques de Valle, otherwiſe called Hernando Cortes, who was hee that firſt conquered the ſaide Citie and Countrey, who after the ſaid conqueſt which hee made with great labour and trauaile of his perſon, and danger of his life, and being growen great in the Countrey, the King of Spaine ſent for him, ſaying that he had ſome particular matters to impart vnto him. And when he came home, he could not bee ſuffered to returne backe againe, as the King before had promiſed him. With the which, for ſorrow that he tooke, he died; and this he had for the reward of his good ſeruice.

Don Luis de Velaſco.

This is to be underſtood of his ſecond comming into Spaine.

The ſaid Citie of Mexico hath the ſtreetes made very broad, and right, that a man being in the high place, at the one ende of the ſtreet, may ſee at the leaſt a good mile forward, and in all the one part of the ſtreets of the North part of their Citie, there runneth a pretie lake of very cleare water, that euery man may put into his houſe as much as he will, without the coſt of any thing, but of the letting in. Alſo there is a great caue or ditch of water, that commeth through the Citie, euen vnto the high place, where come euery morning at the break of the day twentie or thirtie Canoas, or troughes of the Indians, which bring in them all maner of prouiſion for the citie, which is made, and groweth in the Countrey, which is a very good commoditie for the inhabitants of that place. And as for victuals in the ſaid Citie, of beefe, mutton, and hennes, capons, quailes, Guiny-cockes, and ſuch like, all are very good cheape: To ſay, the whole quarter of an oxe, as much as a ſlaue can carry away from the Butchers, for fiue Tomynes, that is, fiue Royals of plate, which is iuſt two ſhillings and ſixe pence, and a fat ſheepe at the Butchers for three Royals, which is 18. pence and no more. Bread is as good cheape as in Spaine, and all other kinde of fruites, as apples, peares, pomegranats, and quinces, at a reaſonable rate. The Citie goeth wonderfully forwards in building of Frieries and Nunneries, and Chappels, and is like in time to come, to be the moſt populous Citie in the world, as it may be ſuppoſed. The weather is there alwayes very temperate, the day differeth but one houre of length all the yere long. The fields and the woods are alwayes greene. The woods full of popiniayes, and many other kinde of birdes, that make ſuch an harmonie of ſinging, and crying, that any man will reioyce to heare it. In the fields are ſuch odoriferous ſmels of flowers and hearbs, that it giueth great content to the ſenſes. About the Citie of Mexico two, three, or foure leagues off, are diuers townes of Indians, ſome of 4000. or 6000. houſholds, which doe ſtand in ſuch a goodly ſoyle, that if Chriſtians had the inhabitation thereof, it would be put to a further benefite. In my time were dwelling and aliue in Mexico, many ancient men that were of the conquerours at the firſt conqueſt with Hernando Cortes: for then it was about 36. yeeres agoe, that the ſaid Countrey was conquered.

Mexico conquered Anno 1519. and 1520.

About Mexico there are diuers Mines of ſiluer, and alſo in other places there about, but the principall Mines that are in all New Spaine are in Sacatecas, 80. leagues from Mexico, and the Mines of S. Martin, thirtie leagues, both to the Northweſtward of Mexico, where is great ſtore of gold and ſiluer. Alſo there is a place called the Miſteca, fiftie leagues to the Northweſt, which doth yeeld great ſtore of very good ſilke, and Cochinilla. Wine and oyle there is none growing in the Countrey, but what commeth out of Spaine. Alſo there are many goodly fruits in that Countrey, whereof we haue none ſuch, as Plantanos, Guyaues, Sapotes, Tunas, and in the wildernes great ſtore of blacke cheries, and other wholſome fruites. The Cochinilla is not a worme, or a flye, as ſome ſay it is, but a berrie that groweth vpon certaine buſhes in the wilde field, which is gathered in time of the yeere, when it is ripe. Alſo the Indico that doeth come from thence to die blew, is a certaine hearbe that groweth in the wilde fieldes, and is gathered at one time of the yeere, and burnt, and of the aſhes thereof, with other confections put thereunto, the ſaide Indico is made. Balme, Salſa perilla, Cana fiſtula, ſuger, oxe hides, and many other good and ſeruiceable things the Countrey doeth yeeld, which are yeerely brought into Spaine, and there ſolde and diſtributed to many nations.

Cochinilla is not a worme nor a flie, but a berry.

ROBERT TOMSON.

A voyage made by M. Roger Bodenham to S. Iohn de Vllua in the bay of Mexico, in the yeere 1564.

I Roger Bodenham hauing a long time liued in the city of Siuil in Spaine, being there married, and by occaſion thereof vſing trade and traffique to the parts of Barbary, grew at length to great loſſe and hindrance by that new trade begun by me in the city of Fez: whereupon being returned into Spaine, I began to call my wits about mee, and to conſider with my ſelfe by what meanes I might recouer and renew my ſtate: and in concluſion, by the ayde of my friends, I procured a ſhip called The Barke Fox, perteining to London, of the burden of eight or nine ſcore tunnes; and with the ſame I made a voyage to the Weſt India, hauing obteined good fauour with the Spaniſh merchants, by reaſon of my long abode, and marriage in the countrey. My voyage was in the company of the Generall Don Pedro Melendes for Noua Hiſpania: who being himſelfe appointed Generall for Terra Firma and Peru, made his ſonne Generall for New Spaine, although Pedro Melendes himſelfe was the principall man and directer in both fleets. We all departed from Cadiz together the laſt day of May in the yere 1564: and I with my ſhip being vnder the conduct of the ſonne of Don Pedro aforeſayd, arriued with him in Noua Hiſpania, where immediatly I tooke order for the diſcharge of my merchandiſe at the port of Vera Cruz, otherwiſe called Villa Rica, to be tranſported thence to the city of Mexico, which is ſixty and odde leagues diſtant from the ſayd port of Villa Rica. In the way are many good townes, as namely, Pueblo de los Angeles, and another called Tlaxcalan. The city of Mexico hath three great cauſeyes to bring men to it, compaſſed with a lake, ſo that it needeth no walles, being ſo defended by the water. It is a city plentifull of all neceſſary things, hauing many faire houſes, churches, and monaſteries. I hauing continued in the countrey the ſpace of nine moneths, returned againe for Spaine with the Spaniſh fleet, and deliuered the merchandiſe and ſiluer which I had in the ſhip into the Contractation houſe, and there receiued my fraight, which amounted outwards and homewards to the value of 13000 ducats and more. I obſerued many things in the time of my abode in Noua Hiſpania, aſwell touching the commodities of the countrey as the maners of the people both Spaniards and Indians: but becauſe the Spaniſh hiſtories are full of thoſe obſeruations, I omit them, and referre the readers to the ſame: onely this I ſay, that the commodity of Cochinilla groweth in greateſt abundance about the towne of Pueblo de los Angeles, and is not there worth aboue forty pence the pound.

A new trade begun in the city of Fez by Roger Bodenham.

The place where Cochinilla groweth, and the price thereof.

A notable diſcourſe of M. Iohn Chilton, touching the people, maners, mines, cities, riches, forces, and other memorable things of New Spaine, and other prouinces in the Weſt Indies, ſeene and noted by himſelfe in the time of his trauels, continued in thoſe parts, the ſpace of ſeuenteene or eighteene yeeres.

In the yeere of our Lord 1561, in the moneth of Iuly, I Iohn Chilton went out of this city of London into Spaine, where I remained for the ſpace of ſeuen yeres, & from thence I ſailed into Noua Hiſpania, and ſo trauelled there, and by the South ſea, vnto Peru, the ſpace of ſeuenteene or eighteene yeeres: and after that time expired, I returned into Spaine, and ſo in the yere 1586 in the moneth of Iuly, I arriued at the foreſayd city of London; where peruſing the notes which I had taken in the time of my trauell in thoſe yeeres, I haue ſet downe as followeth.

In the yeere 1568, in the moneth of March, being deſirous to ſee the world, I embarked my ſelfe in the bay of Cadiz in Andaluzia, in a ſhippe bound for the Iſles of the Canaries, where ſhe tooke in her lading, & ſet forth from thence for the voyage, in the moneth of Iune, the ſame yere. Within a moneth after, we fell with the Iſle of S. Domingo, and from thence directly to Noua Hiſpania, and came into the port of S. Iohn de Vllua, which is a litle Iſland ſtanding in the ſea, about two miles from the land, where the king mainteineth about 50 ſouldiers, and captaines, that keepe the forts, and about 150 negroes, who all the yeere long are occupied in carying of ſtones for building, & other vſes, and to helpe to make faſt the ſhips that come in there, with their cables. There are built two bulwarkes at ech ende of a wall, that ſtandeth likewiſe in the ſayde Iſland, where the ſhippes vſe to ride, made faſt to the ſayd wall with their cables, ſo neere, that a man may leape aſhore. From this port I iourneyed by land to a towne called Vera Cruz, ſtanding by a riuers ſide, where all the factours of the Spaniſh merchants dwell, which receiue the goods of ſuch ſhips as come thither, and alſo lade the ſame with ſuch treaſure and merchandize as they returne backe into Spaine. They are in number about foure hundred, who onely remaine there, during the time that the Spaniſh fleet diſchargeth, and is loden againe, which is from the end of Auguſt to the beginning of April following. And then for the vnwholeſomneſſe of the place they depart thence ſixteene leagues further vp within the countrey, to a towne called Xalapa, a very healthfull ſoile. There is neuer any woman deliuered of childe in this port of Vera Cruz: for ſo ſoone as they perceiue themſelues conceiued with child, they get them into the countrey, to auoid the perill of the infected aire, although they vſe euery morning to driue thorow the towne aboue two thouſand head of cattell, to take away the ill vapours of the earth. From Xalapa ſeuen leagues I came to another place, named Perota, wherein are certaine houſes builded of ſtraw, called by the name of ventas, the inhabitants whereof are Spaniards, who accuſtome to harbour ſuch trauellers as are occaſioned to iourney that way vp into the land. It ſtandeth in a great wood of Pine and Cedar trees, the ſoile being very colde, by reaſon of ſtore of ſnow which lieth on the mountaines there all the yere long. There are in that place an infinite number of deere, of bigneſſe like vnto great mules, hauing alſo hornes of great length. From Perota nine leagues, I came to the Fuentes of Ozumba, which fuentes are ſprings of water iſſuing out of certeine rocks into the midſt of the high wayes, where likewiſe are certaine ranges, and houſes, for the vſes before mentioned. Eight leagues off from this place I came to the city of the Angels, ſo called by that name of the Spanyards, which inhabit there to the number of a thouſand, beſides a great number of Indians. This city ſtandeth in very plaine fields, hauing neere adioyning to it many ſumptuous cities, as namely the city of Tlaxcalla, a city of two hundred thouſand Indians, tributaries to the king, although he exacteth no other tribute of them then a handfull of wheat a piece, which amounteth to thirteene thouſand hanneges yeerely, as hath appeared by the kings books of account. And the reaſon why he contenteth himſelfe with this tribute, onely for them, is, becauſe they were the occaſion that he tooke the city of Mexico, with whom the Tlaxcallians had warre at the ſame time when the Spanyards came into the countrey. The gouernour of this city is a Spanyard, called among them The Alcalde mayór, who adminiſtreth chiefeſt cauſes of iuſtice both vnto the Chriſtians and Indians, referring ſmaller and lighter vices, as drunkenneſſe and ſuch like, to the iudgement and diſcretion of ſuch of the Indians as are choſen euery yeere to rule amongſt them, called by the name of Alcaldes. Theſe Indians from foureteene yeeres olde vpwards, pay vnto the king for their yeerely tribute one ounce of ſiluer, and an hannege of maiz, which is valued among them commonly at twelue reals of plate. The widowes among them pay halfe of this. The Indians both of this city, and of the reſt, lying about Mexico, goe clothed with mantles of linnen cloth made of cotton wooll, painted thorowout with works of diuers and fine colours. It is diſtant from the city of the Angels foure leagues to the Northward, & foureteene from Mexico. There is another city a league from it, called Chetula, conſiſting of more then ſixty thouſand Indians, tributaries, and there dwell not aboue twelue Spanyards there. From it, about two leagues, there is another, called Acaſſingo, of aboue fifty thouſand Indians, and about eight or twelue Spanyards, which ſtandeth at the foot of the Vulcan of Mexico, on the Eaſt ſide. There are beſides theſe, three other great cities, the one named Tepiaca, a very famous city, Waxazingo, and Tichamachalcho: all theſe in times paſt belonged to the kingdome of Tlaxcalla: and from theſe cities they bring moſt of their Cochinilla into Spaine. The diſtance from the city of the Angels, to the city of Mexico is twenty leagues. This city of Mexico is the city of greateſt fame in all the Indies, hauing goodly and coſtly houſes in it, builded all of lime and ſtone, and ſeuen ſtreets in length, and ſeuen in breadth, with riuers running thorow euery ſecond ſtreet, by which they bring their prouiſion in canoas. It is ſituated at the foot of certaine hilles, which conteine in compaſſe by eſtimation aboue twenty leagues, compaſſing the ſayd city on the one ſide, and a lake which is foureteene leagues about on the other ſide. Upon which lake there are built many notable and ſumptuous cities, as the city of Teſcuco, where the Spanyards built ſixe frigats, at that time when they conquered Mexico, and where alſo Fernando Cortes made his abode fiue or ſix moneths in curing of the ſickneſſe of his people, which they had taken at their comming into the countrey. There dwell in this city about ſixty thouſand Indians, which pay tribute to the king. In this city the ſayd Fernando built the fineſt church that euer was built in the Indies, the name whereof is S.Peters.

His voyage from Mexico to Nueua Biſcaia.

After I had continued two yeeres in this city, being deſirous to ſee further the countreys, I imployed that which I had, and tooke my voyage towards the prouinces of California, in the which was diſcouered a certeine countrey, by a Biſcaine, whoſe name was Diego de Guiara, and called it after the name of his countrey, New Biſcay, where I ſolde my merchandiſe for exchange of ſiluer, for there were there certaine rich mines diſcouered by the aforeſayd Biſkaine. Going from Mexico I directed my voyage ſomewhat toward the Southweſt, to certaine mines, called Tamaſcaltepec, and ſo trauelled forward the ſpace of twenty dayes thorow deſert places vnhabited, till I came to the valley of S. Bartholomew, which ioyneth to the prouince of New Biſcay. In all theſe places the Indians for the moſt part go naked, and are wilde people. Their common armour is bowes and arrowes: they vſe to eate vp ſuch Chriſtians as they come by. From hence departing, I came to another prouince named Xaliſco, and from thence to the port of Nauidad, which is 120 leagues from Mexico, in which port arriue alwayes in the moneth of April, all the ſhips that come out of the South ſea from China, and the Philippinas, and there they lay their merchandiſe aſhore. The moſt part whereof is mantles made of Cotton wooll, Waxe, and fine platters gilded, made of earth, and much golde.

The next Summer following, being in the yeere 1570 (which was the firſt yeere that the Popes Buls were brought into the Indies) I vndertooke another voyage towards the prouince of Sonſonate, which is in the kingdome of Guatimala, whither I caried diuers merchandize of Spaine, all by land on mules backs. The way thitherward from Mexico is to the city of the Angels, and from thence to another city of Chriſtians 80 leagues off, called Guaxaca, in which there dwelt about 50 Spanyards, and many Indians. All the Indians of this prouince pay their tribute in mantles of Cotton wooll, and Cochinilla, whereof there groweth abundance thorowout this countrey. Neere to this place there lieth a port in the South ſea, called Aguatulco, in the which there dwell not aboue three or foure Spanyards, with certaine Negroes, which the king mainteineth there: in which place Sir Francis Drake arriued in the yeere 1579, in the moneth of April, where I loſt with his being there aboue a thouſand duckets, which he tooke away, with much other goods of other merchants of Mexico from one Franciſco Gomes Rangifa, factour there for all the Spaniſh merchants that then traded in the South ſea: for from this port they vſe to imbarke all their goods that goe for Peru, and to the kingdome of Honduras. From Guaxaca I came to a towne named Nixapa, which ſtandeth vpon certaine very high hilles in the prouince of Sapotecas, wherein inhabit about the number of twenty Spanyards, by the King of Spaines commandement, to keepe that country in peace; for the Indians are very rebellious: and for this purpoſe hee beſtoweth on them the townes & cities that be within that prouince. From hence I went to a city called Tecoantepec, which is the fartheſt towne to the Eaſtward in all Noua Hiſpania, which ſometime did belong to the Marques de Valle, and becauſe it is a very fit port, ſtanding in the South ſea, the king of Spaine, vpon a rebellion made by the ſayd Marques againſt him, tooke it from him, and doth now poſſeſſe it as his owne. Heere in the yeere 1572 I ſaw a piece of ordinance of braſſe, called a Demy culuerin, which came out of a ſhip called the Ieſus of Lubec, which captaine Hawkins left in S. John de Vllua, being in fight with the Spanyards in the yeere 1568; which piece they afterwards caried 100 leagues by land ouer mighty mountaines to the ſayd city, to be embarked there for the Philippinas. Leauing Tecoantepec, I went ſtill along by the South ſea about 150 leagues in the deſolate prouince of Soconuſco, in which prouince there groweth cacao, which the Chriſtians cary from thence into Noua Hiſpania, for that it will not grow in any colde countrey. The Indians of this countrey pay the king their tribute in cacao, giuing him foure hundred cargas, and euery carga is 24000 almonds, which carga is worth in Mexico thirty pieces of reals of plate. They are men of great riches, and withall very proud: and in all this prouince thorowout, there dwell not twenty Chriſtians. I trauelled thorow another prouince called Suchetepec; and thence to the prouince of Guaſacapan: in both which prouinces are very few people, the biggeſt towne therein hauing not aboue two hundred Indians. The chiefeſt merchandiſe there, is cacao. Hence I went to the city of Guatimala, which is the chiefe city of all this kingdome: in this city doe inhabit about 80 Spanyards: and here the king hath his gouernors, & councell, to whom all the people of the kingdome repaire for iuſtice. This city ſtandeth from the coaſt of the South ſea 14 leagues within the land, and is very rich, by reaſon of the golde that they fetch out of the coaſt of Veragua. From this city to the Eaſtward 60 leagues lieth the prouince Sonſonate, where I ſolde the merchandize I caried out of Noua Hiſpania. The chiefeſt city of this prouince is called S. Saluador, which lieth 7 leagues from the coaſt of the South ſea, and hath a port lying by the ſea coaſt, called Acaxutla, where the ſhips arriue with the merchandize they bring from Noua Hiſpania; and from thence lade backe againe the cacao: there dwell heere to the number of threeſcore Spanyards. From Sonſonate I trauelled to Nicoia, which is in the kingdome of Nicaragua, in which port the king buildeth all the ſhipping that trauell out of the Indies to the Malucos. I went forward from thence to Coſta rica, where the Indians both men and women go all naked, and the land lieth betweene Panama, and the kingdome of Guatimala: and for that the Indians there liue as warriers, I durſt not paſſe by land, ſo that here in a towne called S. Saluador I beſtowed that which I caried in annile (which is a kinde of thing to die blew withall) which I caried with me to the port of Cauallos, lying in the kingdome of Honduras, which port is a mighty huge gulfe, and at the comming in on the one ſide of it there lieth a towne of little force without ordinance or any other ſtrength, hauing in it houſes of ſtraw: at which towne the Spanyards vſe yeerely in the moneth of Auguſt to vnlade foure ſhips which come out of Spaine laden with rich merchandiſe, and receiue in heere againe their lading of a kinde of merchandiſe called Annile and Cochinilla (although it be not of ſuch value as that of Noua Hiſpania) and ſiluer of the mines of Tomaangua, and golde of Nicaragua, and hides, and Salſa perilla, the beſt in all the Indies: all which merchandize they returne, and depart from thence alwayes in the moneth of April following, taking their courſe by the Iſland of Iamaica, in which Iſland there dwell on the Weſt ſide of it certeine Spanyards of no great number. From this place they go to the cape of S. Anthony, which is the vttermoſt part of the Weſtward of the Iſland of Cuba, and from thence to Hauana lying hard by, which is the chiefeſt port that the king of Spaine hath in all the countreys of the Indies, and of greateſt importance: for all the ſhips, both from Peru, Hunduras, Porto rico, S. Domingo, Iamaica, and all other places in his Indies, arriue there in their returne to Spaine, for that in this port they take in victuals and water, and the moſt part of their lading: here they meet from all the foreſayd places alwayes in the beginning of May by the kings commandement: at the entrance of this port it is ſo narrow, that there can ſcarſe come in two ſhips together, although it be aboue ſixe fadome deepe in the narroweſt place of it. In the North ſide of the comming in there ſtandeth a tower, in which there watcheth euery day a man to deſcrie the ſailes of ſhips which hee can ſee on the ſea; and as many as he diſcouereth, ſo many banners he ſetteth vpon the tower, that the people of the towne (which ſtandeth within the port about a mile from the tower) may vnderſtand thereof. Vnder this tower there lieth a ſandy ſhore, where men may eaſily go aland; and by the tower there runneth a hill along by the waters ſide, which eaſily with ſmall ſtore of ordinance ſubdueth the towne and port. The port within is ſo large that there may eaſily ride a thouſand ſaile of ſhips without anker or cable, for no winde is able to hurt them. There inhabit within the towne of Hauana about three hundred Spanyards, and about threeſcore ſouldiers, which the king mainteineth there for the keeping of a certeine caſtle which hee hath of late erected, which hath planted in it about twelue pieces of ſmall ordinance, and is compaſſed round with a ſmall ditch, wherethorow at their pleaſure they may let in the ſea. About two leagues from Hauana there lieth another towne called Wanabacoa, in which there is dwelling about an hundred Indians, and from this place 60 leagues there lieth another towne named Bahama, ſituate on the North ſide of the Iſland. The chiefeſt city of this Iſland of Cuba (which is aboue 200 leagues in length) is alſo called Sant Iago de Cuba, where dwelleth a biſhop & about two hundred Spanyards; which towne ſtandeth on the South ſide of the Iſland about 100 leagues from Hauana. All the trade of this Iſland is cattell, which they kill onely for the hides that are brought thence into Spaine: for which end the Spanyards mainteine there many negroes to kil their cattell, and foſter a great number of hogs, which being killed, and cut into ſmall pieces, they dry in the Sun, and ſo make it prouiſion for the ſhips which come for Spaine.

Hauing remained in this Iſland two moneths, I tooke ſhipping in a frigat, and went ouer to Nombre de Dios, and from thence by land to Panama, which ſtandeth vpon the South ſea. From Nombre de Dios to Panama is 17 leagues diſtance: from which towne there runneth a riuer which is called the riuer of Chagre, which runneth within 5 leagues of Panama, to a place called Cruzes, thorow which riuer they cary their goods, and diſimbarke them at the ſayd Cruzes, and from thence they are conueyed on mules backs to Panama by land; where they againe imbarke them in certeine ſmall ſhippes in the South ſea for all the coaſt of Peru. In one of theſe ſhips I went to Potoſſi, and from thence by land to Cuſco, and from thence to Paita.

Vera Paz.

Here I remained the ſpace of ſeuen moneths, and then returned into the kingdome of Guatimala, and arriued in the prouince of Nicoia, and Nicaragua. From Nicaragua I trauelled by land to a prouince called Nicamula (which lieth toward the North ſea in certaine high mountaines) for that I could not paſſe thorow the kingdome of Guatimala at that time for waters, wherewith all the Low countreys of the prouince of Soconuſco, lying by the South ſea, are drowned with the raine that falleth aboue in the mountaines, enduring alwayes from April to September: which ſeaſon for that cauſe they call their Winter. From this prouince I came into another called De Vera Paz, in which the chiefeſt city is alſo called after that name, where there dwelleth a biſhop and about forty Spanyards. Among the mountaines of this countrey toward the North ſea, there is a prouince called La Cãdona, where are Indian men of war which the king can not ſubdue, for that they haue townes and forts in a great lake of water aboue in the ſayd mountaines: the moſt part of them goe naked, and ſome weare mantles of cotton wooll. Diſtant from this about 80 leagues, I came into another prouince called the prouince of Chiapa, wherein the chiefeſt city is called Sacatlan, where there dwelleth a biſhop and about an hundred Spanyards. In this countrey there is great ſtore of Cotten wooll, whereof the Indians make fine linnen cloth, which the Chriſtians buy and cary into Noua Hiſpania. The people of this prouince pay their tribute to the king all in Cotton wooll and Feathers. Foureteene leagues from this city there is another called Chiapa, where are the fineſt gennets in all the Indies, which are caried hence to Mexico, 300 leagues from it. From this city I trauelled ſtill thorow hilles and mountaines, till I came to the end of this prouince, to a hill called Ecatepec, which in Engliſh ſignifieth The hill of winde: for that they ſay, it is the higheſt hill that euer was diſcouered: for from the top of it may be diſcouered both the North and the South ſeas; and it is in height ſuppoſed to be nine leagues. They which trauell ouer it, lie alwayes at the foot of it ouer night, and begin their iourney about midnight, to trauell to the top of it before the Sunne riſe the next day, becauſe the winde bloweth with ſuch force afterwards, that it is impoſſible for any man to goe vp: from the foot of this hill to Tecoantepec, the firſt towne of Noua Hiſpania, are about fifteene leagues. And ſo from hence I iourneyed to Mexico.

By and by after I came to Mexico (which was in the yere 1572) in the company of another Spanyard, which was my companion in this iourney, we went together toward the prouince of Panuco, which lieth vpon the coaſt of the North ſea, and within three dayes iourney we entred a city called Meſtitlan, where there dwelt twelue Spanyards: the Indian inhabitants there were about thirty thouſand. This city ſtandeth vpon certaine hie mountaines, which are very thicke planted with townes very holeſome and fruitfull, hauing plentifull fountaines of water running thorow them. The high wayes of theſe hilles are all ſet with fruits, and trees of diuers kindes, and moſt pleaſant. In euery towne as we paſſed thorow, the Indians preſented vs with victuals. Within twenty leagues of this place there is another city called Clanchinoltepec, belonging to a gentleman, where there inhabit about fourty thouſand Indians; and there are among them eight or nine friers of the Order of Saint Auguſtine, who haue there a Monaſtery. Within three dayes after we departed from this place, and came to a city called Guaxutla, where there is another Monaſtery of friers of the ſame Order: there dwell in this towne about twelue Spanyards. From this place forwards beginneth a prouince called Guaſtecan, which is all plaine grounds without any hilles. The firſt towne we came vnto is called Tancuylabo, in which there dwell many Indians, high of ſtature, hauing all their bodies painted with blew, and weare their haire long downe to their knees, tied as women vſe to doe with their haire-laces. When they goe out of their doores, they cary with them their bowes and arrowes, being very great archers, going for the moſt part naked. In thoſe countreys they take neither golde nor ſiluer for exchange of any thing, but onely Salt, which they greatly eſteeme, and vſe it for a principall medicine for certaine wormes which breed in their lips and in their gummes. After nine dayes trauell from this place, we came to a towne called Tampice, which is a port towne vpon the ſea, wherein there dwell, I thinke, forty Chriſtians, of which number whileſt wee abode there, the Indians killed foureteene, as they were gathering of Salt, which is all the trade that they haue in this place: it ſtandeth vpon the entrie of the riuer of Panuco, which is a mighty great riuer; and were it not for a ſand that lieth at the mouth of it, ſhips of fiue hundreth tunne might goe vp into it aboue three ſcore leagues. From hence we went to Panuco, foureteene leagues from Tampice, which in times paſt had bene a goodly city, where the king of Spaine had his gouernour: but by reaſon that the Indians there deſtroyed the Chriſtians, it lieth in a maner waſte, conteining in it not aboue tenne Chriſtians with a prieſt. In this towne I fell ſicke, where I lay one and forty dayes, hauing no other ſuſtenance then fruit and water, which water I ſent for aboue ſixe leagues off within the countrey. Here I remained till my companion came to me, which had departed from me another way, retaining in my company onely a ſlaue, which I brought with me from Mexico. And the laſt day in Eaſter weeke my companion came to me, finding me in a very weake ſtate, by reaſon of the vnholeſomeneſſe of the place. Notwithſtanding my weakeneſſe, I being ſet on an horſe, and an Indian behinde mee to holde mee, wee went forward on our voyage all that day till night. The next day in the morning we paſſed ouer the riuer in a canoa; and being on the other ſide, I went my ſelfe before alone: and by reaſon there met many wayes traled by the wilde beaſts, I loſt my way, and ſo trauelled thorow a great wood about two leagues: and at length fell fell into the hands of certaine wilde Indians, which were there in certaine cottages made of ſtraw; who ſeeing me, came out to the number of twenty of them, with their bowes and arrowes, and ſpake vnto mee in their language, which I vnderſtood not: and ſo I made ſignes vnto them to helpe mee from my horſe; which they did by commandement of their lord, which was there with them; and lighted downe. They caried me vnder one of their cottages, and layed me vpon a mat on the ground: and perceiuing that I could not vnderſtand them, they brought vnto mee a little Indian wench of Mexico, of fifteene or ſixteene yeeres of age, whom they commanded to aſke me in her language from whence I came, and for what intent I was come among them: for (ſayth ſhe) doeſt thou not know Chriſtian, how that theſe people will kill and eat thee? To whom I anſwered, let them doe with me what they will; heere now I am. Shee replied, ſaying, thou mayeſt thanke God thou art leane; for they feare thou haſt the pocks: otherwiſe they would eate thee. So I preſented to the king a little wine which I had with me in a bottle; which he eſteemed aboue any treaſure: for for wine they will ſell their wiues and children. Afterwards the wench aſked me what I would haue, and whether I would eat any thing. I anſwered that I deſired a little water to drinke, for that the countrey is very hote: and ſhee brought me a great Venice glaſſe, gilded, full of water. And maruelling at the glaſſe, I demanded how they came by it. She tolde me that the Caſique brought it from Shallapa, a great towne diſtant 30 leagues from this place on the hilles, whereas dwelt certeine Chriſtians, and certeine friers of the Order of S. Auguſtine, which this Caſique with his people on a night ſlew; and burning the friers monaſterie, among other things reſerued this glaſſe: and from thence alſo brought me. Hauing now bene conuerſant with them about three or foure houres, they bid her aſke me if I would goe my way. I anſwered her, that I deſired nothing els. So the Caſique cauſed two of his Indians to leade me forward in my way; going before me with their bowes and arrowes, naked, the ſpace of three leagues, till they brought me into an high way: and then making a ſigne vnto me, they ſignified that in ſhort time I ſhould come to a towne where Chriſtians inhabited, which was called S. Iago de los valles, ſtanding in plaine fields, walled about with a mud wall: the number of the Chriſtians that dwelt therein, were not aboue foure or fiue and twenty, vnto which the king of Spaine giueth Indians and townes, to keepe the countreys ſubiect vnto him. Heere the Chriſtians haue their mighty mules, which they cary for all the parts of the Indies, and into Peru, for that all their merchandize are caried by this meanes by land. In this towne aforeſayd, I found my company which I had loſt before, who made no other account of me but that I had beene ſlaine: and the Chriſtians there likewiſe maruelled to heare that I came from thoſe kinde of Indians aliue, which was a thing neuer ſeene nor heard of before: for they take a great pride in killing a Chriſtian, and to weare any part of him where he hath any haire growing, hanging it about their necks, and ſo are accounted for valiant men. In this towne I remained eighteene dayes, till I recouered my health, and in the meane ſpace there came one Don Franciſco de Pago, whom the viceroy Don Henrico Manriques had ſent for captaine generall, to open and diſcouer a certeine way from the ſea ſide to the mines of Sacatecas, which were from this place 160 leagues, for to tranſport their merchandize by that way, leauing the way by Mexico, which is ſeuen or eight weeks trauell. So this captaine tooke me and my company, with the reſt of his ſouldiers, to the number of forty, which he had brought with him, and fiue hundred Indians, which we tooke out of two towns in this prouince called Tanchipa, and Tamaclipa, all good archers, and naked men, and went thence to the riuer de las Palmas, which is of great bigneſſe, parting the kingdome of Noua Hiſpania and Florida: and going ſtill along by this riuer the ſpace of three dayes, ſeeking paſſage to paſſe ouer; and finding none, we were at length inforced to cut timber to make a balſa or raft, which when we had made, we ſate on it, the Indians ſwimming in the water, and thruſting it before them to the other ſide. Within thirty dayes after, trauelling thorow woods, hilles, and mountaines, we came to the mines of Sacatecas, which are the richeſt mines in all the Indies, and from thence they fetch moſt ſiluer: at which mines there dwelt aboue three hundred Chriſtians: and there our captaine gaue vs leaue to depart. So we came to the valley of S.Michael toward Mexico; and from thence to Pueblo nouo; and from that place to the prouince of Mechuacan, after which name the chiefeſt city of that place is called, where there dwelles a biſhop, and aboue an hundred Spanyards in it: it aboundeth with all kind of Spaniſh fruits, and hath woods full of nut trees, and wild vines. Heere are many mines of copper, and great ſtore of cattell. It lieth 60 leagues from Mexico, whither we came within foure dayes after. The Indians of this countrey are very mighty and big men.

Afterwards I returned another way to the prouince of Sonſonate by Vera cruz, and ſo to Rio Aluarado, and from thence to the prouince of Campeche, which lieth on the South ſide of the bay of of Mexico: the chiefe towne of this prouince is called Merida, in which is a biſhop and almoſt 100 Spanyards. The Indians of this prouince pay all their tribute in mantles of cotton wooll and cacao. There is no port in all this prouince for a ſhip of 100 tun to ride in, but onely in the riuer of Tabaſco, by which riuer this city of Merida ſtandeth. The chiefeſt merchandize which they lade there in ſmall frigats, is a certeine wood called campeche, (wherewith they vſe to die) as alſo hides and annile. By this there lieth the prouince of Iucatan, nere the Honduras by the North ſea coaſt, where there is alſo another biſhop, and a towne likewiſe named Iucatan, where there dwell a few Spanyards. They haue no force at all in all this coaſt to defend themſelues withall, ſaue only that the land is low, and there is no port to receiue any ſhipping, vnleſſe they be frigats, which cary from thence to the port of S. Iohn de Vllua, waxe, cacao, hony, and alſo mantles of cotton wool, whereof they make there great ſtore, and of which kind of merchandize there is great trade thence to Mexico: of the ſame alſo they pay their tribute to the king.

The king hath tribute brought him yeerly out of the Indies into Spaine betweene nine and ten millions of gold and ſiluer: for he receiueth of euery Indian which is ſubiect vnto him (excepting thoſe which do belong to the Incommenderos, which are the children of thoſe Spanyards, who firſt conquered the land, to whom the king gaue and granted the gouernment of the cities and townes ſubdued for three liues) twelue reals of plate, and a hannege of maiz, which is a wheat of the countrey, (fiue of them making a quarter of Engliſh meaſure) and of euery widow woman he hath ſixe reals, & halfe a hannege of maiz. And ſo if any Indian haue twenty children in his houſe, he payeth for euery one of them, being aboue fifteene yeres old, after that rate. This Wheat being duely brought to the gouernour of euery prouince and city, is ſold in Mexico by the kings gouernours there euery yeere; ſo that the money receiued for it, is put into the kings Treaſurie there, and ſo is yeerely caried from thence into Spaine. Of the Spanyards which are owners of the mines of gold and ſiluer, he receiueth the fift part of it, which he calleth his quintas, which being taken out of the heape, there is his armes ſet on it; for otherwiſe it may not be brought out of the land into Spaine, vnder paine of death. The marke of ſiluer, which is eight ounces, when it commeth out of the mines, not hauing the kings ſeale vpon it, is worth three and forty reals of plate, and ſo it is current: and when they will bring it for Spaine, they cary it to the kings Treaſure houſe, where his ſeale is ſet vpon it; and ſo it is raiſed in value thereby to threeſcore and foure reals of plate: and ſo the king hath for his cuſtome of euery marke of plate one and twentie reals.

The greatneſſe of the king of Spaines tribute out of the Weſt Indies.

The marke of ſiluer is 64 reals of plate.

From the yere of 1570, which was the yeere that the Popes buls came into the Indies, as is afore mentioned, he hath receiued both of the Indians which are tributaries vnto him, and alſo of all others belonging to the Incommenderos, of euery one being aboue twelue yeeres of age, foure reals of euery bull. Alſo they cary other pardons with them into the Indies, for ſuch as be dead, although an hundred yeres before the Spanyards came into the countrey: which pardons the friers in their preachings perſwaded the poore Indians to take, telling them that with giuing foure reals of plate for a Maſſe, they would deliuer their ſoules out of purgatory. Of the Chriſtians likewiſe dwelling there he hath fourteene reals for euery bull: and there be certeine buls brought thither for the Chriſtians beſides the former, which ſerue for pardoning all ſuch faults wherein they haue treſpaſſed either againſt the king, by keeping backe his cuſtomes, or one againſt another by any other iniury; for euery hundred crownes whereof a mans conſcience doth accuſe him that he hath deceiued the king or any other, he muſt giue ten for a bull, and ſo after that rate for euery hundred which he hath any way ſtollen, and ſo is pardoned the fault. The reuenue of his buls after this maner yeeldeth vnto his treaſury yeerely aboue three millions of gold, as I haue bene credibly informed, although of late both the Spanyards and Indians do refuſe to take the buls; for that they perceiue he doth make a yeerely cuſtome of it: onely ech Indian taketh one pardon for all his houſeholde, (whereas in former time euery Indian vſed to take one for euery perſon in his houſe) and teareth the ſame into ſmall pieces, and giueth to euery one of his houſeholde a little piece, ſaying thus, they need now no more, ſeeing in that which they bought the yeere before they had aboue ten thouſand yeres pardon. Theſe pieces they ſticke vp in the wall of the houſes where they lie. Both the Chriſtians & Indians are weary with theſe infinite taxes and cuſtomes, which of late he hath impoſed vpon them, more then in the yeeres before: ſo as the people of both ſorts did rebell twiſe in the time that I was among them, and would haue ſet vp another king of themſelues: for which cauſe the king hath commanded vpon paine of death, that they ſhould not plant either wine or oile there, but ſhould alwayes ſtand in need of them to be brought out of Spaine, although there would more grow there in foure yeeres, then there groweth in Spaine in twenty, it is ſo fertile a countrey.

The reuenue of the kings buls and pardons came yeerly to three millions.

Rebellions in Noua Hiſpania by too great exactions.

The reaſons which mooue the kings of Spaine to forbid forren traffike in the Weſt Indies.

And the king to keepe the countrey alwayes in ſubiection, and to his owne vſe, hath ſtreightly prouided by lawe, vpon paine of death, and loſſe of goods, that none of theſe countreys ſhould traffique with any other nation, although the people themſelues doe much now deſire to trade with any other then with them, and would vndoubtedly doe, if they feared not the perill enſuing thereupon.

Magueis.

About Mexico, and other places in Noua Hiſpania, there groweth a certeine plant called magueis, which yeeldeth wine, vineger, hony, and blacke ſugar, and of the leaues of it dried they make hempe, ropes, ſhooes which they vſe, and tiles for their houſes: and at the ende of euery leafe there groweth a ſharpe point like an awle, wherewith they vſe to bore or pearce thorow any thing.

Thus to make an end, I haue heere ſet downe the ſumme of all the chiefeſt things that I haue obſerued and noted in my ſeuenteene yeres trauell in thoſe parts.

A relation of the commodities of Noua Hiſpania, and the maners of the inhabitants, written by Henry Hawks merchant, which liued fiue yeeres in the ſayd countrey, and drew the ſame at the requeſt of M. Richard Hakluyt Eſquire of Eiton in the county of Hereford, 1572.

S. Iohn de Vllua.

SAint Iohn de Vllua is an Iſland not high aboue the water, where as now the Spanyards vpon M. Iohn Hawkins being there, are in making a ſtrong fort. In this place all the ſhips that come out of Spaine with goods for theſe parts, do vnlade: for they haue none other port ſo good as this is. The comming into this place hath three chanels, and the beſt of all is the Northermoſt, which goeth by the maine land: and on euery ſide of the chanels there are many ſmall rocks as big as a ſmall barrell: they wil make men ſtand in doubt of them, but there is no feare of them. There is another Iſland there by, called The Iſland of ſacrifices, where as the Spanyards did in times paſt vnlade their goods: and for that, they ſay, there are vpon it ſpirits or deuils, it is not frequented as it hath bene. In theſe places the North wind hath ſo great dominion, that oftentimes it deſtroyeth many ſhips and barks. This place is giuen to great ſickneſſe. Theſe Iſlands ſtand in 18 degrees and a halfe, and about the ſame is great plenty of fiſh.

Spirits.

Vera Cruz.

Fiue leagues from S. Iohn de Vllua is a faire riuer; it lieth Northweſt from the port, and goeth to a little towne of the Spanyards called Vera Cruz, and with ſmall veſſels or barks, which they call frigats, they cary all their merchandize which commeth out of Spaine, to the ſaid towne: and in like maner bring all the gold, ſiluer, cochinilla, hides, and all other things that the ſhippes cary into Spaine vnto them. And the goods being in Vera Cruz, they cary them to Mexico, and to Pueblo de los Angeles, Sacatecas, and Saint Martin, and diuers other places ſo farre within the countrey, that ſome of them are 700 miles off, and ſome more, and ſome leſſe, all vpon horſes, mules, and in waines drawen with oxen, and in carres drawen with mules.

In this towne of Vera Cruz within theſe twenty yeres, when women were brought to bed, the children new borne incontinently died; which is not ſo now in theſe dayes, God be thanked.

Muſquito.

This towne is inclined to many kinde of diſeaſes, by reaſon of the great heat, and a certeine gnat or flie which they call a muſquito, which biteth both men and women in their ſleepe; and aſſoone as they are bitten, incontinently the fleſh ſwelleth as though they had bene bitten with ſome venimous worme. And this muſquito or gnat doth moſt follow ſuch as are newly come into the countrey. Many there are that die of this annoyance.

Popiniaps.
Monkeys.

This towne is ſituated vpon the riuer aforeſayd, and compaſſed with woods of diuers maners and ſorts, and many fruits, as orenges and limons, guiaues, and diuers others, and birds in them, popiniayes both ſmall and great, and ſome of them as big as a rauen, and their tailes as long as the taile of a fezant. There are alſo many other kinde of birds of purple colour, and ſmall munkeys, maruellous proper.

Wheat twiſe in a yeere.

This hote or ſicke countrey continueth fiue and forty miles towards the city of Mexico; and the fiue and forty miles being paſſed, then there is a temperate countrey, and full of tillage: but they water all their corne with riuers which they turne in vpon it. And they gather their Wheat twiſe a yere. And if they ſhould not water the ground where as their corne is ſowen, the country is ſo hote it would burne all.

Tlaxcalla a free city.

Before you come to Mexico, there is a great towne called Tlaxcalla, which hath in it aboue 16000 houſholds. All the inhabitants thereof are free by the kings of Spaine: for theſe were the occaſion that Mexico was woonne in ſo ſhort time, and with ſo little loſſe of men. Wherefore they are all gentlemen, and pay no tribute to the king. In this towne is all the cochinilla growing.

Mexico.

Mexico is a great city; it hath more then fifty thouſand houſeholds, whereof there are not paſt fiue or ſixe thouſand houſes of Spanyards: all the other are the people of the countrey, which liue vnder the Spanyards lawes. There are in this city ſtately buildings, and many monaſteries of friers and nunnes, which the Spanyards haue made. And the building of the Indians is ſomewhat beautifull outwardly, and within full of ſmall chambers, with very ſmall windowes, which is not ſo comly as the building of the Spanyards. This city ſtandeth in the midſt of a great lake, and the water goeth thorow all or the moſt part of the ſtreets, and there come ſmall boats, which they call canoas, and in them they bring all things neceſſary, as wood, and coales, and graſſe for their horſes, ſtones and lime to build, and corne.

This city is ſubiect to many earthquakes, which oftentimes caſt downe houſes, and kil people. This city is very well prouided of water to drinke, and with all maner of victuals, as fruits, fleſh and fiſh, bread, hennes and capons, Guiny cocks and hennes, and all other fowle. There are in this city euery weeke three Faires or Markets, which are frequented with many people, aſwell Spanyards as the people of the countrey. There are in theſe Faires or Markets all maner of things that may be inuented, to ſell, and in eſpeciall, things of the countrey. The one of theſe Faires is vpon the Munday, which is called S.Hypolitos faire, and S.Iames his faire is vpon the Thurſday, and vpon Saturday is S.Iohns faire. In this city is alwayes the kings gouernour or viceroy, and there are kept the Termes and Parliaments. And although there be other places of iuſtice, yet this is aboue all: ſo that all men may appeale vnto this place, and may not appeale from this city, but onely into Spaine before the king: and it muſt be for a certeine ſumme: and if it be vnder that ſumme, then there is no appellation from them. Many riuers fall into this lake which the city ſtandeth in: but there was neuer any place found whither it goeth out.

A way to drowne Mexico.

The Indians know a way to drowne the city, and within theſe three yeeres they would haue practiſed the ſame: but they which ſhould haue bene the doers of it were hanged: and euer ſince the city hath bene well watched both day and night, for feare leaſt at ſome time they might be deceiued: for the Indians loue not the Spanyards. Round about the towne there are very many gardens and orchards of the fruits of the countrey, maruellous faire, where the people haue great recreation. The men of this city are maruellous vicious; and in like maner the women are diſhoneſt of their bodies, more then they are in other cities or townes in this countrey.

Crocodiles.

There are neere about this city of Mexico many riuers and ſtanding waters, which haue in them a monſtrous kinde of fiſh, which is maruellous rauening, and a great deuourer of men and cattell. He is woont to ſleepe vpon the drie land many times, and if there come in the meane time any man or beaſt and wake or diſquiet him, he ſpeedeth well if he get from him. He is like vnto a ſerpent, ſauing that he doth not flie, neither hath he wings.

Nauigation to China from Puerto de Acapulco.

There is Weſt out of Mexico a port towne which is on the South ſea, called Puerto de Acapulco, where as there are ſhippes which they haue ordinarily for the nauigation of China, which they haue newly found. This port is threeſcore leagues from Mexico.

The North-weſt ſtreight.

There is another port towne which is called Culiacan, on the South ſea, which lieth Weſt and by North out of Mexico, and is 200 leagues from the ſame: and there the Spanyards made two ſhips to goe ſeeke the ſtreight or gulfe, which, as they ſay, is betweene the New found-land and Groenland; and they call it the Engliſhmens ſtreight: which as yet was neuer fully found. They ſay, that ſtreight lieth not farre from the maine land of China, which the Spanyards account to be maruellous rich.

The more Northward, the richer ſiluer mines.

Toward the North from Mexico there are great ſtore of ſiluer mines. There is greater quantitie of ſiluer found in theſe mines toward the North, then there is in any other parts: and as the moſt men of experience ſayde alwayes, they finde the richer mines the more Northerly. Theſe mines are commonly vpon great hilles and ſtony ground, maruellous hard to be laboured and wrought.

Painting earth.

Out of ſome of the mines the Indians finde a certeine kinde of earth of diuers colours, wherewith they paint themſelues in times of their dances, and other paſtimes which they vſe.

Golde mines.

In this countrey of Noua Hiſpania there are alſo mines of golde, although the golde be commonly found in riuers, or very neere vnto riuers. And nowe in theſe dayes there is not ſo much golde found as there hath bene heretofore.

There are many great riuers, and great ſtore of fiſh in them, not like vnto our kindes of fiſh. And there are maruellous great woods, and as faire trees as may be ſeene, of diuers ſorts, and eſpecially firre trees, that may maſt any ſhippe that goeth vpon the ſea, okes and pineapples, and another tree which they call Meſquiquez : it beareth a fruit like vnto a peaſcod, maruellous ſweet, which the wilde people gather, and keepe it all the yere, and eat it in ſtead of bread.

Seuen cities by witchcraft not found of the ſeekers.

The Spanyards haue notice of ſeuen cities which old men of the Indians ſhew them ſhould lie towards the Northweſt from Mexico. They haue vſed and vſe dayly much diligence in ſeeking of them, but they cannot find any one of them. They ſay that the witchcraft of the Indians is ſuch, that when they come by theſe townes they caſt a miſt vpon them, ſo that they cannot ſee them.

Pedro Morales & Nicolas Burgignon write the like of Copalla.

They haue vnderſtanding of another city which they call Copalla : and in like maner, at my beeing in the countrey, they haue vſed much labour and diligence in the ſeeking of it : they haue found the lake on which it ſhould ſtand, and a canoa, the head whereof was wrought with copper curiouſly, and could not finde nor ſee any man nor the towne, which to their vnderſtanding ſhould ſtand on the ſame water, or very neere the ſame.

The ſtrange oxen of Cibola.

There is a great number of beaſts or kine in the countrey of Cibola, which were neuer brought thither by the Spanyards, but breed naturally in the countrey. They are like vnto our oxen, ſauing that they haue long haire like a lion, and ſhort hornes, and they haue vpon their ſhoulders a bunch like a camell, which is higher then the reſt of their body. They are maruellous wild and ſwift in running. They call them the beaſts or kine of Cibola.

Cibola abandoned.

This Cibola is a city which the Spanyards found now of late, without any people in the ſame, goodly buildings, faire chimneys, windowes made of ſtone & timber excellently wrought, faire welles with wheeles to draw their water, and a place where they had buried their dead people, with many faire ſtones vpon the graues. And the captaine would not ſuffer his ſouldiers to breake vp any part of theſe graues, ſaying, he would come another time to do it.

A great riuer nere Cibola.

They aſked certeine people which they met, whither the people of this city were gone : and they made anſwere, they were gone downe a riuer, which was there by, very great, and there had builded a city which was more for their commodity.

This captaine lacking things neceſſary for himſelfe and his men, was faine to returne backe againe, without finding any treaſure according to his expectation : neither found they but fewe people, although they found beaten wayes, which had beene much haunted and frequented. The captaine at his comming backe againe, had a great checke of the gouernour, becauſe he had not gone forwards, and ſeene the end of that riuer.

Water congealed to ſalt.

They haue in the countrey, farre from the ſea ſide, ſtanding waters, which are ſalt : and in the moneths of April and May the water of them congealeth into ſalt, which ſalt is all taken for the kings vſe and profit.

Dogs of India deſcribed.

Their dogs are all crooked backt, as many as are of the countrey breed, and cannot run faſt : their faces are like the face of a pig or an hog, with ſharpe noſes.

Cacao a fruit currant as money.

In certeine prouinces which are called Guatimala, & Soconuſco, there is growing great ſtore of cacao, which is a berry like vnto an almond : it is the beſt merchandize that is in all the Indies. The Indians make drinke of it, and in like maner meat to eat. It goeth currantly for money in any market or faire, and may buy any fleſh, fiſh, bread or cheeſe, or other things.

Fruits.

There are many kinde of fruits of the countrey, which are very good, as plantans, ſapotes, guiaues, pinas, aluacatas, tunas, mamios, limons, orenges, walnuts very ſmall and hard, with litle meat in them, grapes which the Spanyards brought into the countrey, and alſo wilde grapes, which are of the countrey, and are very ſmall, quinſes, peaches, figs, and but few apples, and very ſmall, and no peares : but there are melons and calabaças or gourds.

There is much hony, both of bees and alſo of a kind of tree which they call magueiz. This hony of magueiz is not ſo ſweet as the other hony is, but it is better to be eaten only with bread, then the other is ; and the tree ſerueth for many things, as the leaues make thred to ſowe any kinde of bags, and are good to couer and thatch houſes, and for diuers other things.

Hot ſprings.

They haue in diuers places of the countrey many hote ſprings of water : as aboue all other, I haue ſeene one in the prouince of Mechuacan. In a plaine field without any mountaine, there is a ſpring which hath much water, & it is ſo hot, that if a whole quarter of beefe be caſt into it, within on halfe houre it will be as well ſodden as it will be ouer a fire in halfe a day. I haue ſeene halfe a ſheepe caſt in, and immediatly it hath bene ſodden, and I haue eaten part of it.

Hares and conies.

There are many hares, and ſome conies. There are no partridges, but abundance of quailes.

Sea fiſh.

They haue great ſtore of fiſh in the South ſea, and many oiſters, and very great. The people do open the oiſters, and take out the meat of them and dry it as they do any other kinde of fiſh, and keepe them all the yeere : and when the times ſerue, they ſend them abroad into the countrey to ſell, as all other fiſh. They haue no ſalmon, nor trowt, nor pele, nor carpe, tench, nor pike in all the countrey.

Burning mountaines.

There are in the countrey mighty high mountaines, and hilles, and ſnow vpon them: they commonly burne; and twiſe euery day they caſt out much ſmoke and aſhes at certeine open places, which are in the tops of them.

Manna.

There is among the wilde people much manna. I haue gathered of the ſame, and haue eaten it, and it is good: for the Apothecaries ſend their ſeruants at certeine times, to gather of the ſame for purgations, and other vſes.

Wilde hogs, lions, and tigres.

There are in the mountaines many wilde hogs, which all men may kill, and lions and tygres; which tygres do much harme to men that trauell in the wilderneſſe.

Mines diſcouered, not found againe.

The authour fiue yeeres in Nueua Eſpanna.

In this countrey, not long ſince, there were two poore men that found a maruellous rich mine; and when theſe men went to make a regiſter of the ſame (according to the law and cuſtome) before the kings officers, they thought this mine not meet for ſuch men as they were: and violently tooke the ſayd mine for the king; and gaue no part thereof vnto the two poore men. And within certaine dayes the kings officers reſorted thither to labor in the mine, & they found two great mighty hilles were come together; ſo they found no place to worke in. And in the time while I was among them, which was fiue yerees, there was a poore ſhepheard, who keeping his ſheepe, happened to finde a well of quicke-ſiluer; and he went in like maner to manifeſt the ſame, as the cuſtome and maner is; the kings officers dealt in like order as they did with the two poore men that found the rich mine, taking it quite from the ſhepheard: but when they went to fetch home the quicke-ſiluer, or part thereof, they could neuer finde it againe. So theſe things haue bene declared vnto the king, who hath giuen commandement, that nothing being found in the fields, as mines, and ſuch like, ſhall be taken away from any man. And many other things haue bene done in this countrey, which men might count for great maruels.

Sugar & conſerues.

There is great abundance of ſugar here, & they make diuers conſerues, & very good, and ſend them into Peru, where as they ſell them maruellous well, becauſe they make none in thoſe parts.

Deſcription of the Indians perſon and maners.

The people of the countrey are of a good ſtature, tawny coloured, broad faced, flat noſed, and giuen much to drinke both wine of Spaine and alſo a certeine kind of wine which they make with hony of Magueiz, and roots, and other things which they vſe to put into the ſame. They call the ſame wine Pulco. They are ſoone drunke, and giuen to much beaſtlineſſe, and void of all goodneſſe. In their drunkenneſſe they vſe and commit Sodomy; and with their mothers and daughters they haue their pleaſures and paſtimes. Whereupon they are defended from the drinking of wines, vpon paines of money, aſwell he that ſelleth the wines as the Indian that drinketh the ſame. And if this commandement were not, all the wine in Spaine and in France were not ſufficient for the Weſt Indies onely.

The people of Nueua Eſpanna great cowards.

They are of much ſimplicity, and great cowards, voide of all valour, and are great witches. They vſe diuers times to talke with the diuell, to whom they do certeine ſacrifices and oblations: many times they haue bene taken with the ſame, and I haue ſeene them moſt cruelly puniſhed for that offence.

The people are giuen to learne all maner of occupations and ſciences, which for the moſt part they learned ſince the comming of the Spanyards: I ſay all maner of arts. They are very artificiall in making of images with feathers, or the proportion or figure of any man, in all kind of maner as he is. The fineneſſe and excellency of this is woonderfull, that a barbarous people as they are, ſhould giue themſelues to ſo fine an arte as this is. They are goldſmiths, blacke ſmiths; and copperſmiths, carpenters, maſons, ſhoomakers, tailers, ſadlers, imbroderers, and of all other kind of ſciences: and they will do worke ſo good cheape, that poore yoong men that goe out of Spaine to get their liuing, are not ſet on worke: which is the occaſion there are many idle people in the countrey. For the Indian will liue all the weeke with leſſe then one groat; which the Spanyard cannot do, nor any man els.

The Indians ignorance frō whence they came.

They ſay, that they came of the linage of an olde man which came thither in a boat of wood, which they call a canoa. But they cannot tell whether it were before the flood or after, neither can they giue any reaſon of the flood, nor frō whence they came. And when the Spanyards came firſt among them, they did certeine ſacrifice to an image made in ſtone, of their owne inuention. The ſtone was ſet vpon a great hill, which they made of bricks of earth: they call it their Cowa. And certeine dayes in the yere they did ſacrifice, certeine olde men, and yoong children; and onely beleeued in the Sunne and the Moone, ſaying, that from them they had all things that were needful for them. They haue in theſe parts great ſtore of cotton wooll, with which they make a maner of linnen cloth, which the Indians weare, both men and women, and it ſerueth for ſhirts & ſmocks, and all other kind of garments, which they weare vpon their bodies: and the Spanyards vſe it to all ſuch purpoſes, eſpecially ſuch as cannot buy other. And if it were not for this kind of cloth, all maner of cloth that goeth out of Spaine, I ſay linnen cloth, would be ſolde out of all meaſure.

The wilde Indians.

The wilde people go naked, without any thing vpon them. The women weare the ſkinne of a deere before their priuities, and nothing els vpon all their bodies. They haue no care for any thing, but onely from day to day for that which they haue need to eat. They are big men, and likewiſe the women. They ſhoot in bowes which they make of a cherry tree, and their arrowes are of cane, with a ſharpe flint ſtone in the end of the ſame; they will pierce any coat of maile: and they kill deere, and cranes, and wilde geeſe, ducks and other fowle, and wormes, and ſnakes, and diuers other vermin, which they eat. They liue very long: for I haue ſeene men that haue beene an hundred yeres of age. They haue but very litle haire in their face, nor on their bodies.

Friers in reuerence.

The Indians haue the friers in great reuerence: the occaſion is, that by them and by their meanes they are free and out of bondage; which was ſo ordeined by Charles the emperor: which is the occaſion that now there is not ſo much gold and ſiluer comming into Europe as there was while the Indians were ſlaues. For when they were in bondage they could not chuſe but doe their taſke euery day, and bring their maſters ſo much metall out of their mines: but now they muſt be well payed, and much intreated to haue them worke. So it hath bene, and is a great hinderance to the owners of the mines, and to the kings quinto or cuſtome.

Copper mines

There are many mines of copper in great quantity, whereof they ſpend in the countrey as much as ſerueth their turnes. There is ſome golde in it, but not ſo much as will pay the coſts of the fining. The quantity of it is ſuch, and the mines are ſo farre from the ſea, that it will not be worth the fraight to cary it into Spaine. On the other ſide, the kings officers will giue no licence to make ordinance thereof; whereupon the mines lie vnlaboured, and of no valuation.

There is much lead in the countrey; ſo that with it they couer churches, and other religious houſes: wherefore they ſhall not need any of our lead, as they haue had need thereof in times paſt.

The pompe of owners of mines.

The pompe and liberalitie of the owners of the mines is maruellous to beholde: the apparell both of them and of their wiues is more to be compared to the apparell of noble perſons then otherwiſe. If their wiues goe out of their houſes, as vnto the church, or any other place, they goe out with great maieſty, and with as many men and maids as though ſhe were the wife of ſome noble man. I will aſſure you, I haue ſeene a miners wife goe to the church with an hundred men, and twenty gentlewomen and maids. They keepe open houſe: who will, may come to eat their meat. They call men with a bell to come to dinner and ſupper. They are princes in keeping of their houſes, and bountifull in all maner of things.

Things neceſſary to mines of ſiluer and golde.

A good owner of mines muſt haue at the leaſt an hundred ſlaues to cary and to ſtampe his metals; he muſt haue many mules, and men to keepe the mines; he muſt haue milles to ſtampe his metals; he muſt haue many waines and oxen to bring home wood to fine the oare; he muſt haue much quicke-ſiluer, and a maruellous quantity of ſalt-brine for the metals; and he muſt be at many other charges. And as for this charge of quicke-ſiluer, it is a new inuention, which they finde more profitable then to fine their oare with lead. Howbeit the ſame is very coſtly: for there is neuer a hundred of quick-ſiluer but coſteth at the leaſt threeſcore pounds ſterling. And the mines fall dayly in decay, and of leſſe value: and the occaſion is, the few Indians that men haue to labour their mines.

The plenty of cattell.

There is in New Spaine a maruellous increaſe of cattel, which dayly do increaſe, and they are of a greater growth then ours are. You may haue a great ſteere that hath an hundred weight of tallow in his belly for ſixteene ſhillings; and ſome one man hath 20000 head of cattel of his owne. They ſell the hides vnto the merchants, who lade into Spaine as many as may be well ſpared. They ſpend many in the countrey in ſhooes and boots, and in the mines: and as the countrey is great, ſo is the increaſe of the cattell woonderfull. In the Iſland of Santo Domingo they commonly kill the beaſts for their hides and tallow; and the fowles eat the carkeiſes: and ſo they do in Cuba and Porto Rico, whereas there is much ſugar, and cana fiſtula, which dayly they ſend into Spaine. They haue great increaſe of ſheepe in like maner, and dayly do intend to increaſe them. They haue much wooll, and as good as the wooll of Spaine. They make cloth as much as ſerueth the countrey, for the common people, and ſend much cloth into Peru. I haue ſeene cloth made in the city of Mexico, which hath beene ſolde for tenne pezos a vare, which is almoſt foure pounds Engliſh, and the vare is leſſe then our yard. They haue woad growing in the countrey, and alum, and braſill, and diuers other things to die withall, ſo that they make all colours. In Peru they make no cloth: but heereafter our cloth will be little ſet by in theſe parts, vnleſſe it be ſome fine cloth. The wools are commonly foure ſhillings euery roue, which is fiue & twenty pounds: and in ſome places of the countrey that are farre from the places where as they make cloth, it is woorth nothing, and doth ſerue but onely to make beds for men to lie on.

They make hats, as many as doe ſerue the Countrey, very fine and good, and ſell them better cheape, then they can be brought out of Spaine, and in like maner ſend them into Peru.

Many people are ſet on worke both in the one and in the other: they ſpin their wooll as we doe, and in ſteed of oyle, they haue hogs greaſe: they twiſt not their threed ſo much as wee doe, neither worke ſo fine a threed. They make no kerſies, but they make much cloth, which is courſe, and ſell it for leſſe then 12. pence the vare. It is called Sayall.

Hogs greaſe in ſtead of oile.

They haue much ſilke, and make all maner of ſorts thereof, as Taffataes, Sattins, Veluets of all colours, and they are as good as the ſilkes of Spaine, ſauing that the colours are not ſo perfect: but the blackes are better then the blackes that come out of Spaine.

Silks of ſundry ſorts.

They haue many horſes, and mares, and mules, which the Spaniards brought thither. They haue as good Iennets, as any are in Spaine, and better cheape then they bee in Spaine. And with their mules they cary all their goods from place to place.

Horſes. Mules. Iennets.

There is raine vſually in this Countrey, from the moneth of May, to the midſt of October, euery day, which time they call their winter, by reaſon of the ſaid waters. And if it were not for the waters which fall in theſe hot ſeaſons, their Maiz, which is the greateſt part of their ſuſtenance, would be deſtroyed. This Maiz is the greateſt maintenance which the Indian hath, and alſo all the common people of the Spaniards. And their horſes and mules which labour, cannot be without the ſame. This graine is ſubſtantiall, and increaſeth much blood. If the Miners ſhould bee without it, they coulde not labour their Mines: for all their ſeruants eate none other bread, but onely of this Maiz, and it is made in cakes, as they make oaten cakes, in ſome places of England.

Maiz graine for man and beaſt, eaten in cakes.

The Indians pay tribute, being of the age of 20. yeeres, 4. ſhillings of money, and an hanege of Maiz, which is worth 4. ſhillings more vnto the King euery yeere. This is payd in all Noua Hiſpania, of as many as be of the age of 20. yeeres, ſauing the Citie of Tlaſcalla, which was made free, becauſe the citizens thereof were the occaſion that Cortes tooke Mexico in ſo little a time. And although at the firſt they were freed from paiment of tribute, yet the Spaniards now begin to vſurpe vpon them, and make them to till a great field of Maiz, at their owne coſtes euery yeere for the King, which is as beneficial vnto him, and as great coſt vnto them, as though they paid their tribute, as the others doe.

An Hanega is a buſhel and an halfe.

The ſhips which goe out of Spaine with goods for Peru, goe to Nombre de dios, and there diſcharge the ſaid goods: and from thence they be caried ouer the necke of a land, vnto a port towne in the South ſea, called Panama, which is 17. leagues diſtant from Nombre de dios. And there they doe ſhip their goods againe, and ſo from thence goe to Peru. They are in going thither three moneths, and they come backe againe in 20. dayes. They haue ſeldome foule weather, and fewe ſhips are loſt in the South ſea. Foure yeeres paſt, to wit 1568. there was a ſhip made out of Peru, to ſeek Salomons Iſlands, and they came ſomewhat to the South of the Equinoctial, & found an Iſland with many blacke people, in ſuch number that the Spaniards durſt not go on land among them. And becauſe they had bene long vpon the voyage, their people were very weake, and ſo went not on land, to know what commoditie was vpon it. And for want of victuals, they arriued in Noua Hiſpania, in a port called Puerto de Nauidad, and thence returned backe againe vnto Peru, whereas they were euil entreated, becauſe they had not knowen more of the ſame Iſland.

Salomons Iſlands ſought, and found in the South ſea 1568.

They haue in this port of Nauidad ordinarily their ſhips, which goe to the Iſlands of China, which are certaine Iſlands which they haue found within theſe 7. yeres. They haue brought from thence gold, and much Cinamom, and diſhes of earth, and cups of the ſame, ſo fine, that euery man that may haue a piece of them, will giue the weight of ſiluer for it. There was a Mariner that brought a pearle as big as a doues egge from thence, & a ſtone, for which the Viceroy would haue giuen 3000. duckets. Many things they bring from thence, moſt excellent. There are many of theſe ylands, and the Spaniards haue not many of them as yet: *for the Portugals diſturbe them much, and combate with them euery day, ſaying, it is part of their conqueſt, and to the maine land they cannot come at any hand. There are goodly people in them, and they are great Mariners, richly apparelled in cloth of gold, and ſiluer, and ſilke of all ſorts, and goe apparelled after the maner of the Turkes. This report make ſuch as come from thence. The men of the maine land haue certaine trafique with ſome of theſe ylanders, and come thither in a kind of ſhips, which they haue with one ſaile, and bring of ſuch marchandize as they haue need of. And of theſe things there haue bene brought into New Spaine both cloth of gold and ſiluer, and diuers maners of ſilks, and works of gold and ſiluer, maruellous to be ſeene. So by their ſaying, there is not ſuch a countrey in the whole world. The maine land is from the ylands 190. leagues: and the ylands are not farre from the Malucos Northwards. And the people of thoſe ylands, which the Spaniards haue, ſay, that if they would bring their wiues and children, that then they ſhould haue among them what they would haue. So there goe women dayly, and the king payeth all the charges of the maried men and their wiues, that go to thoſe ylands. And there is no doubt, but the trade will be marueilous rich in time to come. It was my fortune to be in company with one Diego Gutieres, who was the firſt Pilot that euer went to that Countrey of the Philippinas. Hee maketh report of many ſtrange things in that Countrey, aſwell riches, as other, and ſaith, if there bee any Paradiſe vpon earth, it is in that countrey: and addeth, that ſitting vnder a tree, you ſhall haue ſuch ſweet ſmels, with ſuch great content and pleaſure, that you ſhall remember nothing, neither wife, nor children, nor haue any kinde of appetite to eate or drinke, the odoriferous ſmels wil be ſo ſweete. This man hath good liuings in Noua Hiſpania, notwithſtanding hee will returne thither, with his wife and children, and as for treaſure there is abundance, as he maketh mention. In this countrey of Noua Hiſpania there are many buckes and does, but they haue not ſo long hornes as they haue here in England. The Spaniards kill them with hand-guns, and with grayhounds, and the Indians kill them with their bowes and arrowes, and with the ſkins they make chamoyce, ſuch as we in England make doublets and hoſe of, as good as the ſkins that are dreſſed in Flanders, & likewiſe they make marueilous good Spaniſh leather of them. There is a bird which is like vnto a Rauen, but he hath ſome of his feathers white: there is ſuch abundance of them, that they eate all the corrupt and dead fleſh which is in the countrey. Otherwiſe the abundance of carren is ſo much, that it would make a marueilous corrupt aire in all the Countrey, and be ſo noiſome, that no man could abide it. Therefore it is commanded, there ſhall none of them be killed. Theſe birds are alwayes about Cities, and townes, where there is much fleſh killed.

India Rauens not killed, to deuoure carrion.

Wrongs done to the Indians puniſhed.

The Indians are much fauoured by the Iuſtices of the Countrey, and they call them their orphanes. And if any Spaniard ſhould happen to doe any of them harme, or to wrong him in taking any thing from him, as many times they doe, or to ſtrike any of them, being in any towne, whereas iuſtice is, they are aſwell puniſhed for the ſame, as if they had done it one Spaniard to another. When a Spaniard is farre from Mexico, or any place of iuſtice, thinking to doe with the poore Indian what he liſt, conſidering he is ſo farre from any place of remedy, he maketh the Indian do what he commaundeth him, and if he will not doe it, hee beateth and miſuſeth him, according to his owne appetite. The Indian holdeth his peace, vntill hee finde an opportunitie, and then taketh a neighbour with him, and goeth to Mexico, although it be 20. leagues off, and maketh his complaint. This his complaint is immediatly heard, & although it be a knight, or a right good gentleman, he is forthwith ſent for, and puniſhed both by his goods, and alſo his perſon is impriſoned, at the pleaſure of the Iuſtice. This is the occaſion that the Indians are ſo tame and ciuill, as they are: and if they ſhould not haue this fauour, the Spaniards would ſoone diſpatch all the Indians, or the Indians would kill them. But they may cal them dogs, and vſe other euill words, as much as they will, and the Indian muſt needes put it vp, and goe his way.

Iuſtice yͤ cauſe of ciuilitie.

The poore Indians wil go euery day two or three leagues to a Faire or market, with a childe vpon their necks, with as much fruit or rootes, or ſome kinde of ware, as cotton wooll, or cadis of all colours, as ſhall be not paſt worth a pennie: and they wil mainteine themſelues vpon the ſame. For they liue with a marueilous ſmall matter.

They are in ſuch pouertie, that if you neede to ride into the Countrey, you ſhall haue an Indian to goe with you all the day with your bed vpon his backe, for one royall of plate: and this you ſhall haue from one towne to another. Here you are to vnderſtand, that all men that traueile by the way, are alwayes wont to carry their beds with them. They are great theeues, and wil ſteale all that they may, and you ſhall haue no recompence at their hands.

The apparel of the Indians.

The garments of the women, are in this maner. The vppermoſt part is made almoſt like to a womans ſmocke, ſauing that it is as broad aboue as beneath, and hath no ſleeues, but holes on eche ſide one to put out their armes. It is made of linnen cloth made of cotton wooll, and filled full of flowers, of red cadis and blew, and other colours. This garment commeth downe to the knees, and then they haue another cloth made after the ſame maner, and that goeth rounde about their waſte, and reacheth to their ſhooes, and ouer this a white fine ſheet vpon their heads, which goeth downe halfe the legge. Their haire is made vp round with an haire lace about their head. And the men haue a ſmall paire of breeches of the ſame cotton wool, and their ſhirts which hang ouer their breeches, and a broad girdle about their middles, and a ſheete with flowers vpon their backes, and with a knot vpon one ſhoulder, & an hat vpon their heads, and a paire of ſhooes. And this is all their apparell, although it be a Caſique, which they vſe in all the Countrey.

The houſes of the Indians.

The wals of the houſes of the Indians, are but plaine, but the ſtones are layd ſo cloſe, that you ſhall not well perceiue the ioynts betweene one ſtone and another, they are ſo finely cut: and by the meanes that the ſtones are ſo workmanly done, and finely ioyned together, there is ſome beautie in their wals. They are marueilous ſmall and light, as Pumie ſtones. They make their doores very little, ſo that there can go in but one man at a time. Their windowes, and roomes within their houſes are ſmall, and one roome they haue reſerued for their friends, when they come to talke one with another, and that is alwayes faire matted, and kept marueilous cleane, and hanged full of images, and their chaires ſtanding there to ſit in. They eate their meate vpon the ground, and ſleepe on the ground vpon a mat, without any bed, both the gentlemen, and other.

The Indians ſtrike their fire with one ſticke in another, aſwell the tame people, as the wilde. For they know not how to doe it with an yron, and a ſtone.

Fire rubbed out of two ſtickes.

In Noua Hiſpania, euery 10. or 12. leagues they haue a contrary ſpeach, ſauing onely about Mexico: ſo there is a number of ſpeeches in the Countrey.

Diuers ſpeeches.

Mutezuma which was the laſt King of this Countrey, was one of the richeſt princes which haue bene ſeene in our time, or long before. He had all kinde of beaſts which were then in the countrey, and all maner of birds, and fiſhes, and all maner of wormes, which creepe vpon the earth, and all trees, and flowers, and herbes, all faſhioned in ſiluer and gold, which was the greateſt part of al his treaſure, and in theſe things had he great ioy, as the old Indians report. And vnto this day, they ſay that the treaſure of Mutezuma is hidden, and that the Spaniards haue it not. This King would giue none of his people freedome, nor forgiue any of them that ſhould pay him tribute, though he were neuer ſo poore. For if it had bene told him that one of his tributaries was poore, & that he was not able to pay his tribute according to the cuſtome, then he would haue him bound to bring at ſuch times as tributes ſhould be payd, a quill full of Lice, ſaying, hee would haue none free, but himſelfe. He had as many wiues or concubines, as hee would haue, and ſuch as liked him. Alwayes whenſoeuer he went out of his Court to paſſe the time, he was borne vpon 4. of his noble mens ſhoulders ſet vpon a table, ſome ſay, of golde, and very richly dreſſed with feathers of diuers and many colours and flowers. He waſhed all his body euery day, were it neuer ſo cold. And vnto this day ſo do all the Indians, and eſpecially the women.

Mutezuma, and his riches.

The Indians waſh themſelues euery day.

The Spaniards keepe the Indians in great ſubiectiõ. They may haue in their houſes no ſword nor dagger, nor knife with any point, nor may weare vpon them any maner of armes, neither may they ride vpon any horſe nor mules, in any ſadle nor bridle, neither may they drinke wine, which they take for the greateſt paine of all. They haue attempted diuers times to make inſurrections, but they haue bene ouerthrowen immediatly by their owne great and beaſtly cowardlineſſe.

There remaine ſome among the wild people, that vnto this day eate one another. I haue ſeene the bones of a Spaniard that haue bene as cleane burniſhed, as though it had bene done by men that had no other occupation. And many times people are caried away by them, but they neuer come againe, whether they be men or women.

Cannybals.

They haue in the Sea ylands of red ſalt in great abundance, whereas they lade it from place to place about the Sea coaſt: and they ſpend very much ſalt with ſalting their hides, and fiſh: and in their Mines they occupie great quantitie. They haue much Alume, and as good as any that is in all the Leuant, ſo that they neede none of that commoditie. They haue alſo of their owne growing, much Cana fiſtula, & much Salſa Perilla, which is marueilous good for many kind of diſeaſes.

Wherein is ſhewed the day and time of our departure from the coaſt of England, with the number and names of the ſhips, their Captaines and Maſters, and of our trafique and dealing vpon the coaſt of Africa.

VPon munday the ſecond of October 1567. the weather being reaſonable faire, our Generall M. Iohn Hawkins, hauing commanded all his Captaines and Maſters to be in a readineſſe to make ſaile with him, hee himſelfe being imbarked in the Ieſus, whereof was appointed for Maſter Robert Barret, hoiſed ſaile, and departed from Plimmouth vpon his intended voyage for the parts of Africa, and America, America, being accompanied with fiue other ſaile of ſhips, as namely the Mynion, wherein went for Captaine M. Iohn Hampton, and Iohn Garret Maſter. The William and Iohn, wherein was Captaine Thomas Bolton, and Iames Raunce Maſter. The Iudith, in whom was Captaine M. Francis Drake afterward knight, and the Angel, whoſe Maſter, as alſo the Captaine and Maſter of the Swallow I now remember not. And ſo ſayling in company together vpon our voyage vntill the tenth of the ſame moneth, an extreeme ſtorme then tooke vs neere vnto Cape Finiſter, which dured for the ſpace of foure dayes, and ſo ſeparated our ſhips, that wee had loſt one another, and our Generall finding the Ieſus to bee but in ill caſe, was in minde to giue ouer the voyage, and to returne home. Howbeit the eleuenth of the ſame moneth the Seas waxing calme, and the winde comming faire, hee altered his purpoſe, and held on the former entended voyage: And ſo comming to the yland of Gomera being one of the ylands of the Canaries, where according to an order before appointed, we met with all our ſhips which were before diſperſed, wee then tooke in freſh water and departed from thence the fourth of Nouember, and holding on our courſe, vpon the eighteenth day of the ſame moneth wee came to an ancker vpon the coaſt of Africa, at Cape Verde in twelue fadome water; and here our Generall landed certaine of our men, to the number of 160. or thereabout, ſeeking to take ſome Negros. And they going vp into the Countrey for the ſpace of ſixe miles, were encountred with a great number of the Negros: who with their inuenomed arrowes did hurt a great number of our men, ſo that they were inforced to retire to the ſhips, in which conflict they recouered but a fewe Negros, and of theſe our men which were hurt with their enuenomed arrowes, there died to the number of ſeuen or eight in very ſtrange maner, with their mouths ſhut, ſo that wee were forced to put ſtickes and other things into their mouths to keepe them open, and ſo afterward paſſing the time vpon the coaſt of Guinea, vntill the twelfth of Ianuary, wee obteined by that time the number of 150. Negros. And being ready to depart from the Sea coaſt, there was a Negro ſent as an Ambaſſadour to our Generall, from a King of the Negros, which was oppreſſed with other Kings his bordering neighbours, deſiring our Generall to graunt him ſuccour and ayde againſt thoſe his enemies, which our Generall granted vnto, and went himſelfe in perſon a lande, with the number of two hundreth of our men or thereabouts, and the ſaid King which had requeſted our ayde, did ioyne his force with ours, ſo that thereby our Generall aſſaulted, and ſet fire vpon a Towne of the ſaid King his enemies, in which there was at the leaſt the number of eight or ten thouſand Negros, and they perceiuing that they were not able to make any reſiſtance ſought by flight to ſaue themſelues, in which their flight there were taken priſoners to the number of eight or nine hundreth, which our Generall ought to haue had for his ſhare: howbeit the Negro King which requeſted our ayde, falſifying his word and promiſe, ſecretly in the night conueyed himſelfe away with as many priſoners as he had in his cuſtodie: but our Generall notwithſtanding finding himſelfe to haue now very neere the number of 500. Negros thought it beſt without longer abode to depart with them, and ſuch marchandize as hee had from the coaſt of Africa, towards the Weſt Indies, and therefore commanded with all diligence to take in freſh water and fewel, and ſo with ſpeed to prepare to depart. Howbeit before we departed from thence, in a ſtorme that wee had, wee loſt one of our ſhips, namely the William and Iohn, of which ſhip and of her people, we heard no tidings during the time of our voyage.

The William and Iohn ſeparated and neuer after met with the fleete.

Chap. 2.

Wherein is ſhewed the day and time of our departure from the coaſt of Africa, with the day and time of our arriuall in the Weſt Indies, alſo of our trade, and trafique there, and alſo of the great crueltie that the Spaniards vſed towards vs, by the Vice-roy his direction, and appointment, falſifying his faith and promiſe giuen, and ſeeking to haue intrapped vs.

All things being made in a readineſſe, at our Generall his appointment, vpon the thirde day of Februarie 1568, wee departed from the coaſt of Africa, hauing the weather ſomewhat tempeſtuous, which made our paſſage the more hard; and ſayling ſo for the ſpace of 52. dayes, vpon the 27. of March 1568, we came in ſight of an yland called Dominica, vpon the coaſt of America in the Weſt Indies, ſituated in 14. degrees of latitude, and 322. of longitude: from thence our Generall coaſted from place to place, euer making trafique with the Spaniards and Indians as hee might, which was ſomewhat hardly obtained, for that the King had ſtraightly charged all his gouernours in thoſe parts not to trade with any: yet notwithſtanding, during the moneths of April and May, our Generall had reaſonable trade and trafique, and courteous entertainement in ſundry places, as at Margarita, Coraçao, and elſe where, til we came to Cape de la vela, and Rio de Hacha, (a place from whence all the pearles doe come:) the gouernour there would not by any meanes permit vs to haue any trade or traffique, nor yet ſuffer vs to take in freſh water: by meanes whereof our Generall for the auoyding of famine and thirſt about the beginning of Iune, was enforced to land two hundreth of our men, and ſo by maine force and ſtrength to obtaine that which by no faire meanes hee could procure: And ſo recouering the Towne with the loſſe of two of our men, there was a ſecret and peaceable trade admitted, and the Spaniards came in by night, and bought of our Negroes to the number of 200. and vpwards, and of our other marchandize alſo. From thence we departed for Carthagena, where the Gouernour was ſo ſtraight, that wee could not obteine any traffique there, and ſo for that our trade was neere finiſhed, our Generall thought it beſt to depart from thence the rather for the auoyding of certaine dangerous ſtormes called the Huricanos, which accuſtomed to begin there about that time of the yere, & ſo the 24. of Iuly 1568. we departed frō thence directing our courſe North: and leauing the yland of Cuba vpon our right hand, to the Eaſtward of vs, and ſo ſayling toward Florida, vpon the 12. of Auguſt an extreeme tempeſt aroſe, which dured for the ſpace of 8. dayes, in which our ſhips were moſt dangerouſly toſſed and beaten hither, & thither, ſo that we were in continuall feare to be drowned by reaſon of the ſhallownes of the coaſt, and in the end we were conſtrained to flee for ſuccour to the port of S. Iohn de Vllua, or Vera Cruz, ſituated in 19. degrees of latitude, and in 279. degrees of longitude, which is the port that ſerueth for the Citie of Mexico: in our ſeeking to recouer this port our Generall met by the way three ſmall ſhips that caried paſſengers, which hee tooke with him, and ſo the ſixteenth of September 1568. wee entered the ſaide port of S. Iohn de Vllua. The Spaniards there ſuppoſing vs to haue bene the King of Spaines Fleete, the chiefe officers of the Countrey thereabouts came preſently aboord our Generall, where perceiuing themſelues to haue made an vnwiſe aduenture, they were in great feare to haue bene taken and ſtayed: howbeit our Generall did vſe them all very courteouſly. In the ſaid port there were twelue ſhips which by report had in them in treaſure to the value of two hundreth thouſand pound, all which being in our Generall his power and at his deuotion, he did freely ſet at libertie, as alſo the paſſengers which he had before ſtayed, not taking from any of them all the value of one groat: onely hee ſtayed two men of credite and accompt, the one named Don Laurenzo de Alua, and the other Don Pedro de Riuera, and preſently our Generall ſent to the Viceroy to Mexico which was threeſcore leagues off, certifying him of our arriuall there by force of weather, deſiring that foraſmuch as our Queene his Soueraigne, was the king of Spaine his louing ſiſter and friend, that therefore hee would, conſidering our neceſſities and wants, furniſh vs with victuals for our Nauie, and quietly ſuffer vs to repaire and amend our ſhips. And furthermore that at the arriual of the Spaniſh Fleet which was there dayly expected and looked for, to the ende that there might no quarell ariſe betweene them, and our Generall and his company for the breach of amitie, he humbly requeſted of his excellencie, that there might in this behalfe ſome ſpecial order be taken. This meſſage was ſent away the 16. of September 1568. it being the very day of our arriuall there.

Mexico 60. leagues from S. Iuan de Vllua.

The next morning being the ſeuenteenth of the ſame moneth, wee deſcried 13. ſaile of great ſhippes: and after that our Generall vnderſtood, that it was the king of Spaines Fleete then looked for, he preſently ſent to aduertiſe the Generall hereof, of our being in the ſaid port, and giuing him further to vnderſtand, that before he ſhould enter there into that harbour, it was requiſite that there ſhould paſſe betweene the two Generals ſome orders and conditions to bee obſerued on either part, for the better contriuing of peace betweene them and theirs, according to our Generals requeſt made vnto the Viceroy. And at this inſtant our Generall was in a great perplexitie of minde, conſidering with himſelfe that if hee ſhould keepe out that Fleete from entring into the port, a thing which hee was very well able to doe with the helpe of God, then ſhould that Fleete be in danger of preſent ſhipwracke and loſſe of all their ſubſtance, which amounted vnto the value of one million and eight hundreth thouſand pounds. Againe he ſaw that if he ſuffered them to enter, hee was aſſured that they would practiſe by all maner of meanes to betray him and his, and on the other ſide the hauen was ſo little, that the other Fleete entring, the ſhippes were to ride one hard aboord of another. Alſo hee ſaw that if their Fleete ſhould periſh by his keeping of them out, as of neceſſitie they muſt if he ſhould haue done ſo, then ſtood hee in great feare of the Queene our Soueraignes diſpleaſure in ſo waightie a cauſe: therefore did he chooſe the leaſt euill, which was to ſuffer them to enter vnder aſſurance, and ſo to ſtand vpon his guard, and to defend himſelfe and his from their treaſons which we were well aſſured they would practiſe, and ſo the meſſenger being returned from Don Martin de Henriques, the newe Viceroy, who came in the ſame Fleete, and had ſufficient authoritie to command in all caſes both by Sea and by lande in this prouince of Mexico or new Spaine, did certifie our Generall, that for the better maintenance of amitie betweene the king of Spaine and our Soueraigne, all our requeſts ſhould bee both fauourably granted, and faithfully perfourmed: ſignifying further that he heard and vnderſtood of the honeſt and friendly dealing of our Generall, toward the king of Spaines ſubiects in all places where he had bene, as alſo in the ſaid port: ſo that to bee briefe our requeſts were articled, and ſet downe in writing. Viz.

4. Articles concluded vpon, betwixt the Engliſh & the Spaniards: although the treacherous Spaniards kept none of them.

1 The firſt was that wee might haue victuals for our money, and licenſe to ſell as much wares, as might ſuffice to furniſh our wants.

2 The ſecond, that we might be ſuffered peaceably to repaire our ſhips.

3 The thirde that the yland might bee in our poſſeſſion during the time of our abode there, In which yland our Generall for the better ſafetie of him and his, had alreadie planted and placed certaine Ordinance which were eleuen pieces of braſſe, therefore he required that the ſame might ſo continue, and that no Spaniard ſhould come to lande in the ſaide yland, hauing or wearing any kinde of weapon about him.

4 The fourth and the laſt, that for the better and more ſure performance and maintenance of peace, and of all the conditions, there might twelue gentlemen of credite bee deliuered of either part as hoſtages.

Theſe conditions were concluded and agreed vpon in writing by the Viceroy and ſigned with his hand, and ſealed with his ſeale, and 10. hoſtages vpon either part were receiued. And further it was concluded that the two Generals ſhould meet, and giue faith ech to other for the performance of the premiſſes. Al which being done, the ſame was proclaimed by the ſound of a trumpet, & commandement was giuen that none of either part ſhould violate or breake the peace vpon paine of death: thus at the ende of three dayes all was concluded, and the Fleete entred the port, the ſhips ſaluting one another as the maner of the Sea doth require: the morrow after being friday we laboured on all ſides in placing the Engliſh ſhips by themſelues, & the Spaniſh ſhips by themſelues, the Captaines and inferiour perſons of either part, offering, and ſhewing great courteſie one to another, and promiſing great amitie vpon all ſides. Howbeit as the ſequel ſhewed, the Spaniards meant nothing leſſe vpon their parts. For the Viceroy and gouernour thereabout had ſecretly at land aſſembled to the number of 1000. choſen men, and wel appointed, meaning the next thurſday being the 24. of September at dinner time to aſſault vs, and ſet vpon vs on all ſides. But before I go any further, I thinke it not amiſſe briefly to diſcribe the maner of the yland as it then was, and the force and ſtrength, that it is now of. For the Spaniards ſince the time of our Generals being there, for the better fortifying of the ſame place, haue vpon the ſame yland built a faire Caſtle, and bulwarke very well fortified: this port was then at our being there, a little yland of ſtones, not paſt three foote aboue water in the higheſt place, and not paſt a bow-ſhotte ouer any way at the moſt, and it ſtandeth from the maine land, two bowſhootes or more: and there is not in all this coaſt any other place for ſhips ſafely to ariue at: alſo the North windes in this coaſt are of great violence and force, and vnleſſe the ſhippes bee ſafely mored in, with their anckers faſtened in this yland, there is no remedie, but preſent deſtruction and ſhipwracke. All this our generall wiſely foreſeeing, did prouide that he would haue the ſaid yland in his cuſtody, or els the Spaniards might at their pleaſure, haue but cut our cables, and ſo with the firſt Northwinde that blewe we had had our paſport, for our ſhips had gone a ſhoore. But to returne to the matter.

A faire caſtle and bulwarke builded vpon the yland of San Iuan de Vllua.

The time approching that their treaſon muſt be put in practiſe, the ſame Thurſday morning, ſome appearance thereof began to ſhewe it ſelfe, as ſhifting of weapons from ſhippe to ſhippe, and planting, and bending their Ordinance againſt our men that warded vpon the lande, with great repaire of people: which apparant ſhewes of breach of the Viceroyes faith cauſed our Generall to ſende one to the Viceroy, to enquire of him what was meant thereby, which preſently ſent and gaue order, that the Ordinance aforeſayde, and other things of ſuſpicion ſhould bee remooued, returning anſwere to our Generall in the faith of a Viceroy, that hee would bee our defence, and ſafetie from all villanous treacherie: this was vpon Thurſday in the morning. Our Generall not being therewith ſatiſfied, ſeeing they had ſecretly conueyed a great number of men aboord a great hulke or ſhip of theirs of ſixe hundreth tunne, which ſhippe rode hard by the Mynion, hee ſent againe to the Viceroy Robert Barret the Maſter of the Ieſus, a man that could ſpeake the Spaniſh tongue very well, and required that thoſe men might bee vnſhipt againe, which were in that great hulke. The Viceroy then perceiuing that their treaſon was throughly eſpied, ſtayed our Maſter, and ſounded the Trumpet, and gaue order that his people ſhould vpon all ſides charge vpon our men, which warded on ſhoore, and elſe where, which ſtrooke ſuch a maſe, and ſudden feare among vs, that many gaue place, and ſought to recouer our ſhippes for the ſafetie of themſelues. The Spaniards which ſecretly were hid in ambuſh at lande were quickly conueyed ouer to the yland in their long boates, and ſo comming to the yland, they ſlewe all our men that they could meete with, without mercy. The Minion which had ſomewhat before prepared her ſelfe to auoyd the danger, haled away and abode the firſt brunt of the 300 men that were in the great hulke: then they ſought to fall aboord the Ieſus, where was a cruel fight, and many of our men ſlaine: but yet our men defended themſelues, and kept them out: ſo the Ieſus alſo got looſe, and ioyning with the Minion, the fight waxed hote vpon all ſides: but they hauing woon and got our ordinance on ſhore, did greatly annoy vs. In this fight there were two great ſhippes of the Spaniards ſunke, and one burnt, ſo that with their ſhippes they were not able to harme vs, but from the ſhore they beat vs cruelly with our owne ordinance, in ſuch ſort that the Ieſus was very ſore ſpoyled: and ſuddenly the Spaniards hauing fired two great ſhips of their owne, they came directly againſt vs, which bred among our men a marueilous feare. Howbeit the Minion which had made her ſayles ready, ſhifted for her ſelfe, without conſent of the Generall, Captaine or Maſter, ſo that very hardly our Generall could be receiued into the Minion: the moſt of our men that were in the Ieſus ſhifted for themſelues, and followed the Minion in the boat, and thoſe which that ſmall boat was not able to receiue, were moſt cruelly ſlaine by the Spaniards. Of our ſhips none eſcaped ſauing the Minion and the Iudith: and all ſuch of our men as were not in them were inforced to abide the tyrannous cruelty of the Spaniards. For it is a certaine trueth, that whereas they had taken certaine of our men aſhore, they tooke and hung them vp by the armes vpon high poſtes vntill the blood burſt out of their fingers ends: of which men ſo vſed, there is one Copſtow, and certaine others yet aliue, who by the mercifull prouidence of the almighty, were long ſince arriued here at home in England, carying ſtill about with them (and ſhal to their graues) the marks and tokens of thoſe their inhumane and more then barbarous cruell dealings.

Chap. 3.

Wherein is ſhewed, how that after we were eſcaped from the Spaniards, wee were like to periſh with famine at the Sea, and how our Generall, for the auoiding thereof was conſtrained to put halfe of his men on land, and what miſeries wee after that ſuſtained amongſt the Sauage people, and how againe we fell into the hands of the Spaniards.

After that the Viceroy, Don Martin Henriques, had thus contrary to his faith and promiſe, moſt cruelly dealt with our Generall maſter Hawkins, at S. Iohn de Vllua, where moſt of his men were by the Spaniards ſlaine and drowned, and all his ſhips ſunke and burned, ſauing the Minion, and the Iudith, which was a ſmall barke of fiftie tunne, wherein was then Captaine maſter Francis Drake aforeſayd: the ſame night the ſaid barke loſt vs, we being in great neceſſitie, and inforced to remooue with the Minion two bow-ſhoote from the Spaniſh fleete, where we ankered all that night: and the next morning wee weyed anker, and recouered an Iſland a mile from the Spaniards, where a ſtorme tooke vs with a North winde, in which we were greatly diſtreſſed, hauing but two cables and two ankers left: for in the conflict before we had loſt three cables and two ankers. The morrow after, the ſtorme being ceaſed and the weather faire, we weied, and ſet ſayle, being many men in number, and but ſmall ſtore of victuals to ſuffice vs for any long time: by meanes whereof we were in deſpaire and feare that we ſhould periſh through famine, ſo that ſome were in minde to yeelde themſelues to the mercy of the Spaniards, other ſome to the Sauages or Infidels, and wandring thus certaine daies in theſe vnknowen ſeas, hunger conſtrained vs to eate hides, cats and dogs, mice, rats, parrats and munkies: to be ſhort, our hunger was ſo great, that wee thought it ſauourie and ſweete whatſoeuer wee could get to eate.

And on the eight of October wee came to land againe, in the bottome of the bay of Mexico, where we hoped to haue found ſome inhabitants, that wee might haue had ſome reliefe of victuals, and a place where to repaire our ſhip, which was ſo greatly bruiſed, that we were ſcarſe able with our weary armes to keepe foorth the water: being thus oppreſſed with famine on the one ſide, and danger of drowning on the other, not knowing where to finde reliefe, wee began to be in wonderfull deſpaire, and we were of many mindes, amongſt whom there were a great many that did deſire our Generall to ſet them on land, making their choiſe rather to ſubmit themſelues to the mercie of the Sauages or Infidels, then longer to hazard themſelues at ſea, where they very well ſawe, that if they ſhould remaine together, if they periſhed not by drowning, yet hunger would inforce them in the ende to eate one another: to which requeſt our Generall did very willingly agree, conſidering with himſelfe that it was neceſſary for him to leſſen his number, both for the ſafetie of himſelfe & the reſt: and therupon being reſolued to ſet halfe his people aſhore that he had then left aliue, it was a world to ſee how ſuddenly mens minds were altered: for they which a little before deſired to be ſet on land, were now of another minde, and requeſted rather to ſtay: by meanes whereof our Generall was inforced, for the more contentation of all mens minds, and to take away all occaſions of offence, to take this order: Firſt he made choice of ſuch perſons of ſeruice and account, as were needefull to ſtay, and that being done, of thoſe which were willing to goe he appointed ſuch as he thought might be beſt ſpared, and preſently appointed that by the boat they ſhould bee ſet on ſhore, our Generall promiſing vs that the next yeere he would either come himſelfe, or elſe ſend to fetch vs home. Here againe it would haue cauſed any ſtony heart to haue relented to heare the pitifull mone that many did make, and howe loth they were to depart: the weather was then ſomewhat ſtormy and tempeſtuous, and therefore we were to paſſe with great danger, yet notwithſtanding there was no remedy, but we that were appointed to goe away, muſt of neceſſitie doe ſo. Howbeit thoſe that went in the firſt boat were ſafely ſet on ſhore, but of them which went in the ſecond boate, of which number I my ſelfe was one, the ſeas wrought ſo high, that we could not attaine to the ſhore, and therefore we were conſtrained through the cruell dealing of Iohn Hampton captaine of the Minion, and Iohn Sanders boatſwaine of the Ieſus, and Thomas Pollard his mate, to leape out of the boate into the maine ſea, hauing more then a mile to ſhore, and ſo to ſhift for our ſelues, and either to ſinke or ſwimme. And of thoſe that ſo were (as it were) throwen out, and compelled to leape into the ſea, there were two drowned, which were of captaine Blands men.

They were put on land 25 leagues northward of Panuco the 8 of October 1568.

In the euening of the ſame day, it being Munday the eight of October, 1568, when we were all come to ſhore, we found freſh water, whereof ſome of our men drunke ſo much, that they had almoſt caſt themſelues away, for wee could ſcarſe get life of them for the ſpace of two or three houres after: other ſome were ſo cruelly ſwollen, what with the drinking in of the ſalt water, and what with the eating of the fruit which wee found on land, hauing a ſtone in it much like an almond (which fruit is called Capule) that they were all in very ill caſe, ſo that we were in a maner all of vs both feeble, faint and weake.

Capule a kind of ſtone fruit.

The next morning being Tewſday, the ninth of October, we thought it beſt to trauell along by the ſea coaſt, to ſeeke out ſome place of habitation: (whether they were Chriſtians or Sauages, we were indifferent, ſo that we might haue wherewithall to ſuſtaine our hungry bodies) and ſo departing from an hill where we had reſted all night, not hauing any drie threed about vs, (for thoſe that were not wet being not throwen into the ſea, were thorowly wet with raine, for all the night it rained cruelly:) As we went from the hil, and were come into the plaine, we were greatly troubled to paſſe for the graſſe and weedes that grewe there higher then any man. On the left hand we had the ſea, and vpon the right hand great woods, ſo that of neceſſitie we muſt needs paſſe on our way Weſtward, through thoſe marſhes; and going thus, ſuddenly we were aſſaulted by the Indians, a warlike kind of people, which are in a maner as Canibals, although they doe not feede vpon mans fleſh as Canibals doe.

Chichimici a warlike and cruel people.

Theſe people are called Chichimici, and they vſe to weare their haire long, euen down to their knees, they doe alſo colour their faces greene, yellow, red and blew, which maketh them to ſeeme very ougly and terrible to beholde. Theſe people doe keepe warres againſt the Spaniards, of whom they haue bene oftentimes very cruelly handled: for with the Spaniards there is no mercy. They perceiuing vs at our firſt comming on land, ſuppoſed vs to haue bene their enemies, the bordering Spaniards, and hauing by their forerunners deſcried what number we were, and how feeble and weake without armour or weapon, they ſuddenly according to their accuſtomed maner, when they encounter with any people in warlike ſorte, raiſed a terrible and huge crie, and ſo came running fiercely vpon vs, ſhooting off their arrowes as thicke as haile, vnto whoſe mercy we were conſtrained to yeeld, not hauing amongſt vs any kind of armour, nor yet weapon, ſauing one caliuer, and two old ruſtie ſwords, whereby to make any reſiſtance, or to ſaue our ſelues: which when they perceiued, that wee ſought not any other then fauour and mercie at their handes, and that we were not their enemies the Spaniards, they had compaſſion on vs, and came and cauſed vs all to ſit down: and when they had a while ſurueyed, and taken a perfect view of vs, they came to all ſuch as had any coloured clothes amongſt vs, and thoſe they did ſtrip ſtarke naked, and tooke their clothes away with them, but thoſe that were apparelled in blacke they did not meddle withall, and ſo went their wayes, and left vs without doing vs any further hurt, onely in the firſt brunt they killed eight of our men. And at our departure, they perceiuing in what weake caſe we were, pointed vs with their hands which way we ſhould go to come to a towne of the Spaniards, which as we afterwards perceiued, was not paſt ten leagues from thence, vſing theſe words: Tampice, Tampice Chriſtiano, Tampice Chriſtiano, which is as much (we thinke) as to ſay in Engliſh, at Tampice you ſhall find the Chriſtians. The weapons that they vſe are no other but bowes and arrowes, and their arme is ſo good, that they very ſeldome miſſe to hit any thing that they ſhoote at. Shortly after they had left vs ſtript (as aforeſayd) we thought it beſt to deuide our ſelues into two companies, and ſo being ſeparated, halfe of vs went vnder the leading of one Anthony Godard, who is yet a man aliue, and dwelleth at this inſtant in the towne of Plimmouth, whom before we choſe to be captaine ouer vs all, and thoſe which went vnder his leading, of which number I Miles Philips was one, trauailed Weſtward that way which the Indians with their hands had before pointed vs to go. The other halfe went vnder the leading of one Iohn Hooper, whom they did chooſe for their captain, & with the company that went with him, Dauid Ingram was one, and they tooke their way and trauelled Northward, and ſhortly after, within the ſpace of two dayes, they were againe incountered with the ſauage people, and their captaine Hooper and two more of his company were ſlaine: then againe they diuided themſelues, and ſome held on their way ſtill Northward, and other ſome, knowing that we were gone Weſtward, ſought to meet with vs againe, as in truth there was about the number of 25 or 26 of them that met with vs in the ſpace of foure dayes againe, and then we began to reckon amongſt our ſelues, how many wee were that were ſet on ſhore, and we found the number to be an hundred and fourteene, whereof two were drowned in the ſea, and eight were ſlaine at the firſt incounter, ſo that there remained an hundred and foure, of which 25 were Weſtward with vs, and 52 to the North with Hooper and Ingram: and as Ingram ſince hath often told me, there were not paſt three of their company ſlaine, and there were but ſixe and twenty of them that came againe to vs, ſo that of the company that went Northward, there is yet lacking, and not certainely heard of, the number of three and twenty men. And verely I doe thinke that there are of them yet aliue, and married in the ſaid countrey, at Cibola, as hereafter I purpoſe (God willing) to diſcourſe of more particularly, with the reaſon and cauſes that make mee ſo to thinke of them that were lacking, which were Dauid Ingram, Twide, Browne, and ſundry others, whoſe names wee could not remember. And being thus met againe together, we trauelled on ſtill Weſtward, ſometime thorow ſuch thicke woods, that we were inforced with cudgels to breake away the brambles and buſhes from tearing our naked bodies: other ſometimes we ſhould trauell thorow the plaines, in ſuch high graſſe that wee could ſcarſe ſee one another, and as we paſſed in ſome places, we ſhould haue of our men ſlaine, and fall downe ſuddenly, being ſtrooken by the Indians, which ſtood behinde trees and buſhes, in ſecret places, and ſo killed our men as they went by, for wee went ſcatteringly in ſeeking of fruites to relieue our ſelues. We were alſo oftentimes greatly annoyed with a kind of flie, which in the Indian tongue is called Tequani, and the Spaniards called them Muskitos. There are alſo in the ſayd countrey a number of other kinde of flies, but none ſo noyſome as theſe Tequanies bee: you ſhall hardly ſee them they be ſo ſmall, for they are ſcarſe ſo big as a gnat: they will ſucke ones blood marueilouſly, and if you kill them while they are ſucking, they are ſo venimous that the place will ſwell extremely, euen as one that is ſtoong with a Waſpe or Bee: but if you let them ſucke their fill, and to goe away of themſelues, then they doe you no other hurt, but leaue behinde them a red ſpot ſomewhat bigger then a flea-biting. At the firſt wee were terribly troubled with theſe kinde of flies, not knowing their qualities, and reſiſtance wee could make none againſt them, being naked: as for cold wee feared not any, the countrey there is alwayes ſo warme. And as we trauelled thus for the ſpace of tenne or twelue dayes, our captaine did oftentimes cauſe certaine to goe vp into the toppes of high trees, to ſee if they could deſcrie any towne or place of inhabitants, but they could not perceiue any, and vſing often the ſame order to climbe vp into high trees, at the length they deſcried a great riuer that fell from the Northweſt into the maine ſea, and preſently after, we heard an harquebuze ſhot off, which did greatly incourage vs, for thereby wee knew that we were neere to ſome Chriſtians, and did therefore hope ſhortly to finde ſome ſuccour and comfort, and within the ſpace of one houre after, as we trauelled, we heard a cocke crowe, which was alſo no ſmall ioy vnto vs, and ſo we came to the North ſide of the riuer of Panuco, where the Spaniards haue certaine Salines, at which place it was that the haquebuze was ſhot off, which before we heard: to which place we went not directly, but miſſing thereof, we left it about a bowſhot vpon our left hand: of this riuer wee dranke very greedily, for wee had not met with any water in ſixe dayes before, and as we were here by the riuer ſide reſting our ſelues, and longing to come to the place where the cocke did crowe, and where the harquebuze was ſhot off, we perceiued many Spaniards vpon the other ſide of the riuer, riding vp and downe on horſebacke, and they perceiuing vs, did ſuppoſe that we had beene of the Indians their bordering enemies, the Chichimeci: the riuer was not paſt halfe a bowe ſhoot ouer: and preſently one of the Spaniards tooke an Indian boate called a Canoa, and ſo came ouer, being rowed by two Indians, and hauing taken the view of vs, did preſently rowe ouer backe againe to the Spaniards, who without any delay made out about the number of twenty horſemen, and imbarking themſelues in the Canoas, they led their horſes by the reines ſwimming ouer after them, and being come ouer to that ſide of the riuer where we were, they ſadled their horſes, and being mounted vpon them with their lances charged, they came very fiercely running at vs. Our captaine Anthony Godard ſeeing them come in that order, did perſwade vs to ſubmit and yeelde our ſelues vnto them, for being naked, as we at this time were, and without weapon, we could not make any reſiſtance, whoſe bidding we obeied, and vpon the yeelding of our ſelues, they perceiued vs to be Chriſtians, and did call for more Canoas, and caried vs ouer by foure and foure in a boat, and being come on the other ſide, they vnderſtanding by our captaine how long we had bene without meate, imparted betweene two and two a loafe of bread made of that countrey wheat, which the Spaniards call Maiz, of the bigneſſe of our halfepenie loaues, which bread is named in the Indian tongue Claſhacally. This bread was very ſweete and pleaſant vnto vs, for we had not eaten any in a long time before: and what is it that hunger doth not make to haue a ſauory and a delicate taſte? And hauing thus parted the bread amongſt vs, thoſe which were men they ſent afore to the towne, hauing alſo many Indians inhabitants of that place to garde them: they which were yong, as boyes, and ſome ſuch alſo as were feeble, they tooke vp vpon their horſes, behind them, and ſo caried vs to the towne where they dwelt, which was very neere diſtant a mile from the place where we came ouer.

The Salines of Panuco.

This towne is well ſituated, and well repleniſhed with all kindes of fruits, as Orenges, Limons, Pomegranates, Apricoks, and Peaches, and ſundry others, and is inhabited with a great number of tame Indians, or Mexicans, and had in it alſo at that time about the number of two hundred Spaniards, men, women, and children, beſides Negros. Of their Salines, which lie vpon the Weſt ſide of the riuer, more then a mile diſtant from thence, they make a great profit, for it is an excellent good merchandize there: the Indians doe buy much thereof, and carie it vp into the countrey, and there ſell it to their owne countrey people, in doubling the price. Alſo much of the Salt made in this place, is tranſported from thence by ſea to ſundry other places, as to Cuba, S. Iohn de Vllua, and the other ports of Tamiago, and Tamachos, which are two barred hauens Weſt and by South aboue threeſcore leagues from S. Iohn de Vllua. When we were all come to the towne, the Gouernour there ſhewed himſelfe very ſeuere vnto vs, and threatned to hang vs all: and then he demanded what money wee had, which in trueth was very little, for the Indians which we firſt met withall, had in a maner taken all from vs, and of that which they left, the Spaniards which brought vs ouer, tooke away a good part alſo: howbeit, from Anthony Godard the Gouernour here had a chaine of gold, which was giuen vnto him at Carthagena, by the Gouernour there, and from others he had ſome ſmall ſtore of money: ſo that wee accounted that amongſt vs all he had the number of fiue hundred Pezos, beſides the chaine of gold.

And hauing thus ſatiſfied himſelfe, when he had taken all that we had, he cauſed vs to be put into a little houſe much like a hogſtie, where we were almoſt ſmoothered: and before we were thus ſhut vp into that little coat, they gaue vs ſome of the countrey wheate, called Mayz, ſodden, which they feede their hogs withall. But many of our men which had bene hurt by the Indians at our firſt comming on land, whoſe wounds were very ſore and grieuous, deſired to haue the helpe of their Surgeons to cure their wounds. The gouernour, and moſt of them all anſwered, that wee ſhould haue none other Surgeon but the hangman, which ſhould ſufficiently heale vs of all our griefes: and thus reuiling vs, and calling vs Engliſh dogs, and Lutheran heretikes, we remained the ſpace of three dayes in this miſerable ſtate, not knowing what ſhould become of vs, waiting euery houre to be bereaued of our liues.

Wherin is ſhewed how we were vſed in Panuco, and in what feare of death we were there, and how we were caried to Mexico to the Viceroy, and of our impriſonment there and at Teſcuco, with the courteſies and cruelties wee receiued during that time, and how in the end wee were by proclamation giuen to ſerue as ſlaues to ſundry gentlemen Spaniards.

VPon the fourth day after our comming thither, and there remaining in a perplexitie, looking euery houre when we ſhould ſuffer death, there came a great number of Indians and Spaniards weaponed to fetch vs out of the houſe, and amongſt them wee eſpied one that brought a great many of new halters, at the ſight whereof we were greatly amazed, and made no other account but that we ſhould preſently haue ſuffered death, and ſo crying and calling to God for mercie and forgiueneſſe of our ſinnes, we prepared our ſelues, making vs ready to die: yet in the end, as the ſequel ſhewed,their meaning was not ſo : for when wee were come out of the houſe, with thoſe halters they bound our armes behind vs,and ſo coupling vs two and two together,they commanded vs to march on through the towne, and ſo along the countrey from place to place toward the citie of Mexico, which is diſtant from Panuco Weſt and by South the ſpace of ninetie leagues,hauing onely but two Spaniards to conduct vs, they being accompanied with a great number of Indians warding on either ſide with bowes and arrowes, leſt we ſhould eſcape from them. And trauelling in this order,vpon the ſecond day at night we came vnto a towne which the Indians call Nohele,and the Spaniards call it Santa Maria : in which towne there is a houſe of white friers, which did very courteouſly vſe vs,and gaue vs hote meat,as mutton and broth,and garments alſo to couer our ſelues withal,made of white bayes : we fed very greedily of the meat, and of the Indian fruit,called Nochole, which fruit is long and ſmall, much like in faſhion to a little cucumber. Our greedy feeding cauſed vs to fall ſicke of hote burning agues. And here at this place one Thomas Baker one of our men died of a hurt : for he had bene before ſhot with an arrow into the throat at the firſt incounter.

The next morrow about ten of the clocke, we departed from thence, bound two & two together, and garded as before,and ſo trauailed on our way toward Mexico,till we came to a towne within forty leagues of Mexico, named Meſtitlan, where is a houſe of blacke friers : and in this towne there are about the number of three hundred Spaniards, both men, women, and children. The friers ſent vs meat from the houſe ready dreſſed,and the friers,and the men and women vſed vs very courteouſly, and gaue vs ſome ſhirts and other ſuch things as we lacked. Here our men were very ſicke of their agues,and with eating of another fruit called in the Indian tongue,Guiaccos, which fruit did binde vs ſo ſore, that for the ſpace of tenne or twelue dayes we could not eaſe our ſelues. The next morning we departed from thence with our two Spaniards and Indian gard, as aforeſayd. Of theſe two Spaniards the one was an aged man,who all the way did very courteouſly intreate vs,and would carefully go before to prouide for vs both meat and things neceſſary to the vttermoſt of his power : the other was a yong man who all the way trauelled with vs, and neuer departed from vs, who was a very cruell caitiue, and he caried a iaueline in his hand, and ſometimes when as our men with very feebleneſſe and faintneſſe were not able to goe ſo faſt as he required them, he would take his iauelin in both his handes, and ſtrike them with the ſame betweene the necke and the ſhoulders ſo violently, that he would ſtrike them downe;then would he cry,and ſay, Marchad,marchad Ingleſes perros, Luterianos,enemigos de Dios : which is as much to ſay in Engliſh, as March, march on you Engliſh dogges,Lutherans, enemies to God. And the next day we came to a towne called Pachuca, and there are two places of that name : as this towne of Pachuca, and the mines of Pachuca, which are mines of ſiluer, and are about ſixe leagues diſtant from this towne of Pachuca towards the Northweſt.

Here at this towne the good olde man our Gouernour ſuffered vs to ſtay two dayes and two nights, hauing compaſſion of our ſicke and weake men, full ſore againſt the minde of the yong man his companion. From thence we tooke our iourney, and trauelled foure or fiue dayes by little villages; and Stancias, which are farmes or dairie houſes of the Spaniards, and euer as wee had neede, the good olde man would ſtill prouide vs ſufficient of meates, fruites, and water to ſuſtaine vs. At the end of which fiue dayes wee came to a towne within fiue leagues of Mexico, which is called Quoghliclan, where wee alſo ſtayed one whole day and two nights, where was a faire houſe of gray friers, howbeit wee ſaw none of them. Here wee were told by the Spaniards in the towne, that wee had not paſt fifteene Engliſh miles from thence to Mexico, whereof we were all very ioyfull and glad, hoping that when we came thither, we ſhould either be relieued, and ſet free out of bonds, or els bee quickly diſpatched out of our liues : for ſeeing our ſelues thus caried bound from place to place, although ſome vſed vs courteouſly, yet could wee neuer ioy, nor be merrie till wee might perceiue our ſelues ſet free from that bondage, either by death or otherwiſe.

The next morning we departed from thence on our iourney towards Mexico, and ſo trauelled till wee came within two leagues of it, where there was built by the Spaniards a very faire church,called our Ladyes church,in which there is an image of our Lady of ſiluer & gilt, being as high,& as large as a tall woman, in which church, and before this image, there are as many lamps of ſiluer as there be dayes in the yeere, which vpon high dayes are all lighted. Whenſoeuer any Spaniards paſſe by this church,although they be on horſe backe, they will alight, and come into the church,and kneele before this image, and pray to our Lady to defend them from all euil;ſo that whether he be horſeman or footman he will not paſſe by, but firſt goe into the Church, and pray as aforeſayd, which if they doe not,they thinke and beleeue that they ſhall neuer proſper: which image they call in the Spaniſh tongue, Nueſtra ſennora de Guadalupe. At this place there are certain cold baths, which ariſe, ſpringing vp as though the water did ſeeth: the water whereof is ſomewhat brackiſh in taſte, but very good for any that haue any ſore or wound, to waſh themſelues therewith, for as they ſay, it healeth many: and euery yeere once vpon our Lady day the people vſe to repaire thither to offer, and to pray in that Church before the image, and they ſay that our Lady of Guadalupe doeth worke a number of miracles. About this Church there is not any towne of Spaniards that is inhabited, but certaine Indians doe dwell there in houſes of their own countrey building.

Here we were met with a great number of Spaniards on horſebacke, which came from Mexico to ſee vs, both gentlemen, and men of occupations, and they came as people to ſee a wonder: we were ſtill called vpon to march on, and ſo about foure of the clocke in the afternoone of the ſaid day we entred into the citie of Mexico, by the way or ſtreet called La calle Santa Catherina: and we ſtayed not in any place till we came to the houſe or palace of the Vice Roy, Don Martin Henriques, which ſtandeth in the middeſt of the city, hard by the market place, called La plaça del Marqueſe. We had not ſtayed any long time at this place, but there was brought vs by the Spaniards from the market place great ſtore of meat, ſufficient to haue ſatisfied fiue times ſo many as we were: ſome alſo gaue vs hats, & ſome gaue vs money: in which place we ſtayed for the ſpace of two houres, & from thence we were conueyed by water in two large Canoas to an hoſpital where as certaine of our men were lodged, which were taken before the fight at S. Iohn de Vllua:

we ſhould haue gone to our Ladies hoſpitall, but that there were alſo ſo many of our men taken before at that fight that there was no roome for vs. After our comming thither, many of the company that came with me from Panuco dyed within the ſpace of fourteene dayes: ſoone after which time we were taken forth from that place, and put altogether into our Ladies hoſpitall, in which place we were courteouſly vſed, and viſited oftentimes by vertuous gentlemen and gentlewomen of the citie, who brought vs diuers things to comfort vs withall, as ſuccats and marmilads, and ſuch other things, and would alſo many times giue vs many things, and that very liberally. In which hoſpitall we remained for the ſpace of ſixe moneths, vntill we were all whole and ſound of body, and then we were appointed by the Vice Roy to be caried vnto the town of Teſcuco, which is from Mexico Southweſt diſtant eight leagues: in which towne there are certaine houſes of correction and puniſhment for ill people called Obraches, like to Bridewell here in London: into which place diuers Indians are ſold for ſlaues, ſome for ten yeeres, and ſome for twelue. It was no ſmall griefe vnto vs when we vnderſtood that we ſhould be caried thither, and to bee vſed as ſlaues, we had rather be put to death: howbeit there was no remedy, but we were caried to the priſon of Teſcuco, where we were not put to any labour, but were very ſtraitly kept, & almoſt famiſhed, yet by the good prouidence of our mercifull God, we happened there to meet with one Robert Sweeting, who was the ſonne of an Engliſhman borne of a Spaniſh woman:

Robert Sweeting an Engliſhmā

this man could ſpeake very good Engliſh, and by his means wee were holpen very much with victuals from the Indians, as mutton, hennes, & bread. And if we had not bene ſo relieued, we had ſurely periſhed: and yet all the prouiſion that wee had gotten that way was but ſlender. And continuing thus ſtraightly kept in priſon there for the ſpace of two moneths, at the length wee agreed amongſt our ſelues to breake forth of priſon, come of it what would, for we were minded rather to ſuffer death then longer to liue in that miſerable ſtate. And ſo hauing eſcaped out of priſon, we knew not what way to flie for the ſafetie of our ſelues, the night was darke, and it rained terribly, and not hauing any guide, we went we knew not whither, and in the morning, at the appearing of the day, we perceiued our ſelues to be come hard to the city of Mexico, which is 24 Engliſh miles frō Teſcuco. The day being come we were eſpied by the Spaniards, & purſued, and taken, and brought before the Vice Roy and head iuſtices, who threatned to hang vs for breaking of the kings priſon.

Engliſh gētlemen hoſtages.

Yet in the end they ſent vs into a garden belonging to the Vice Roy, & comming thither, we found there our Engliſh gentlemen which were deliuered as hoſtages when as our General was betrayed at S. Iohn de Vllua, as is aforeſaid, and with them wee alſo found Robert Barret, the Maſter of the Ieſus, in which place we remained labouring and doing ſuch things as we were commanded, for the ſpace of 4 moneths, hauing but two ſheepe a day allowed to ſuffice vs all, being very neere a hundred men, and for bread we had euery man two loaues a day, of the quantity of one halfpeny loafe.

Almoſt an hūdred Engliſhmen priſoners in Mexico.

At the end of which foure moneths, they hauing remooued our gentlemen hoſtages, and the Maſter of the Ieſus to a priſon in the Vice Roy his owne houſe, did cauſe it to be proclaimed, that what gentleman Spaniard ſoeuer was willing, or would haue any Engliſh man to ſerue him, and be bound to keepe him forth comming, to appeare before the Iuſtices within one moneth after notice giuen, that they ſhould repaire to the ſaid garden, and there take their choice: which proclamation was no ſooner made, but the gentlemen came and repaired to the garden amaine, ſo that happie was he that could ſooneſt get one of vs.

Chap. 5.

Wherein is ſhewed in what good ſort, and how wealthily we liued with our maſters vntill the comming of the Inquiſition, when as againe our ſorowes began a freſh: Of our impriſonment in the holy houſe, and of the ſeuere iudgement and ſentences giuen againſt vs, and with what rigour and crueltie the ſame were executed.

The gentlemen that thus tooke vs for their ſeruants or ſlaues, did new apparell vs through out, with whom we abode, doing ſuch ſeruice as they appointed vs vnto, which was for the moſt part to attend vpon them at the table, and to be as their chamberlaines, & to waite vpon them when they went abroad, which they greatly accounted of: for in that countrey no Spaniard will ſerue one another, but they are all of them attended and ſerued by Indians weekely, and by Negroes which be their ſlaues during their life. In this ſort we remained and ſerued in the ſaid citie of Mexico, and thereabouts for the ſpace of a yeere and ſomewhat longer. Afterwards many of vs were by our maſters appointed to go to ſundry of their Mines where they had to doe, and to be as ouerſeers of the Negroes and Indians that laboured there. In which mines many of vs did profite & gaine greatly: for firſt we were allowed three hundred Pezos a man for a yeere, which is threeſcore pound ſterling, and beſides that the Indians and Negroes which wrought vnder our charge, vpon our well vſing & intreating of them, would at times as vpon Saturdayes when they had left worke, labour for vs, and blow as much ſiluer as ſhould be worth vnto vs 3 markes or thereabouts, euery marke being worth 6 Pezos, and a halfe of their money, which 19 Pezos & a halfe, is worth 4 li. 10 s. of our money. Sundry weekes we did gaine ſo much by this meanes beſides our wages, that many of vs became very rich, and were worth three thouſand or foure thouſand Pezos, for we liued and gained thus in thoſe Mines ſome three or foure yeeres. As concerning thoſe Gentlemen which were deliuered as hoſtages, and that were kept in priſon, in the Viceroy his houſe, after that we were gone from out the garden to ſerue ſundry gentlemen as aforeſaid, they remained priſoners in the ſaid houſe for the ſpace of 4 moneths after their comming thither, at the end whereof the fleete being readie to depart from S. Iohn de Vlua, to goe for Spaine, the ſaid Gentlemen were ſent away into Spaine with the fleete, where as I haue heard it credibly reported, many of them died with the cruell handling of the Spaniards in the Inquiſition houſe, as thoſe which haue bene deliuered home after they had ſuffered the perſecution of that houſe can more perfectly declare, Robert Barret alſo maſter of the Ieſus, was ſent away with the fleete into Spaine the next yeere following, where afterwards he ſuffered perſecution in the Inquiſition, and at the laſt was condemned to be burnt, and with him one more of our men whoſe name was Iohn Gilbert.

Now after that ſixe yeeres were fully expired ſince our firſt comming into the Indies, in which time we had bene impriſoned and ſerued in the ſaid countreys as is before truely declared, In the yeere of our Lord one thouſand fiue hundred ſeuentie foure, the Inquiſition began to be eſtabliſhed in the Indies, very much againſt the mindes of many of the Spaniards themſelues: for neuer vntill this time ſince their firſt conquering and planting in the Indies, were they ſubiect to that bloodie and cruell Inquiſition. The chiefe Inquiſitor was named Don Pedro Moya de Contreres, and Iohn de Bouilla his companion, and Iohn Sanches the Fiſchall, and Pedro de los Rios, the Secretary: they being come and ſetled, and placed in a very faire houſe neere vnto the white Friers, conſidering with themſelues that they muſt make an entrance and beginning of that their moſt deteſtable Inquiſition here in Mexico, to the terror of the whole countrey, thought it beſt to call vs that were Engliſhmen firſt in queſtion, and ſo much the rather, for that they had perfect knowledge and intelligence, that many of vs were become very rich, as hath bene alreadie declared, and therefore we were a very good booty and pray to the Inquiſitors: ſo that now againe began our ſorrowes a freſh, for we were ſent for, and ſought out in all places of the countrey, and proclamation made vpon paine of looſing of goods and excommunication, that no man ſhould hide or keepe ſecret any Engliſhmen or any part of their goods. By means whereof we were all ſoone apprehended in all places, and all our goods ſeized and taken for the Inquiſitors vſe, and ſo from all parts of the countrey we were conueied and ſent as priſoners to the citie of Mexico, and there committed to priſon in ſundry darke dungeons, where we could not ſee but by candlelight, & were neuer paſt two together in one place, ſo that we ſaw not one another, neither could one of vs tell what was become of another. Thus we remained cloſe impriſoned for the ſpace of a yeere and a halfe, and others for ſome leſſe time, for they came to priſon euer as they were apprehended. During which time of our impriſonmẽt, at the firſt beginning we were often called before the Inquiſitors alone, and there ſeuerely examined of our faith, and commanded to ſay the Pater noſter, the Aue Maria, & the Creed in Latin, which God knoweth a great number of vs could not ſay, otherwiſe then in the Engliſh tongue. And hauing the ſaid Robert Sweeting who was our friend at Teſcuco alwayes preſent with thẽ for an interpreter, he made report for vs, ẏ in our own countrey ſpeech we could ſay them perfectly, although not word for word as they were in Latin. Then did they proceede to demand of vs vpon our othes what we did beleeue of the Sacrament, & whether there did remaine any bread or wine after the words of conſecration, yea or no, and whether we did not beleeue that the hoſt of bread which the prieſt did hold vp ouer his head, and the wine that was in the chalice, was the very true and perfect body & blood of our Sauiour Chriſt, yea or no: To which if we anſwered not yea, then was there no way but death. Then they would demand of vs what we did remember of our ſelues, what opinions we had held, or had bin taught to hold contrary to the ſame whiles we were in England: to which we for the ſafety of our liues were conſtrained to ſay, that we neuer did beleeue, nor had bene taught otherwiſe then as before we had ſayd. Then would they charge vs that we did not tell them the truth, that they knew the contrary, and therfore we ſhould cal our ſelues to remembrance, & make them a better anſwer at the next time, or els we ſhould be rackt, and made to confeſſe the trueth whether we would or no. And ſo comming againe before them the next time, we were ſtill demanded of our beliefe whiles we were in England, and how we had bin taught, & alſo what we thought or did know of ſuch of our owne company as they did name vnto vs, ſo that we could neuer be free from ſuch demands, and at other times they would promiſe vs, that if we would tell them trueth, then ſhould we haue fauour & be ſet at libertie, although we very wel knew their faire ſpeeches were but means to intrap vs, to the hazard and loſſe of our liues: howbeit God ſo mercifully wrought for vs by a ſecret meanes that we had, that we kept vs ſtill to our firſt anſwer, & would ſtil ſay that we had told the trueth vnto them, and knew no more by our ſelues nor any other of our fellows then as we had declared, and that for our ſinnes and offences in England againſt God and our Lady, or any of his bleſſed Saints, we were heartily ſory for the ſame, and did cry God mercy, and beſought the Inquiſitors for Gods ſake, conſidering that we came into thoſe countreys by force of weather, & againſt our wils, and that neuer in all our liues we had either ſpoken or done any thing contrary to their lawes, that therfore they would haue mercy vpõ vs. Yet all this would not ſerue: for ſtil from time to time we were called vpon to confeſſe, and about the ſpace of 3 moneths before they proceeded to their ſeuere iudgement, we were al rackt, and ſome enforced to vtter that againſt themſelues, which afterwards coſt them their liues. And thus hauing gotten frõ our owne mouths matter ſufficient for them to proceed in iudgement againſt vs, they cauſed a large ſcaffold to be made in the middeſt of the market place in Mexico right ouer againſt the head church, & 14 or 15 daies before the day of their iudgement, with the ſound of a trumpet, and the noiſe of their Attabalies, which are a kind of drummes, they did aſſemble the people in all parts of the citie: before whom it was then ſolemnely proclaimed, that whoſoeuer would vpon ſuch a day repaire to the market place, they ſhould heare the ſentence of the holy Inquiſition againſt the Engliſh heretikes, Lutherans, and alſo ſee the ſame put in execution. Which being done, and the time approching of this cruell iudgement, the night before they came to the priſon where we were, with certaine officers of that holy helliſh houſe, bringing with thẽ certaine fooles coats which they had prepared for vs, being called in their language S. Benitos, which coats were made of yellow cotten & red croſſes vpon them, both before & behind: they were ſo buſied in putting on their coats about vs, and in bringing vs out into a large yard, and placing and pointing vs in what order we ſhould go to the ſcaffold or place of iudgement vpon the morrow, that they did not once ſuffer vs to ſleepe all that night long. The next morning being come, there was giuen to euery one of vs for our breakfaſt a cup of wine, and a ſlice of bread fried in honie, and ſo about eight of the clocke in the morning, we ſet foorth of the priſon, euery man alone in his yellow coat, and a rope about his necke, and a great greene Waxe candle in his hand vnlighted, hauing a Spaniard appointed to goe vpon either ſide of euery one of vs; and ſo marching in this order and maner toward the ſcaffold in the market place, which was a bow ſhoot diſtant or thereabouts, we found a great aſſembly of people all the way, and ſuch a throng, that certaine of the Inquiſitors officers on horſeback were conſtrained to make way, and ſo comming to the ſcaffold, we went vp by a paire of ſtayres, and found ſeates readie made and prepared for vs to ſit downe on, euery man in order as he ſhould be called to receiue his iudgement. We being thus ſet downe as we were appointed, preſently the Inquiſitors came vp another paire of ſtaires, and the Viceroy and all the chiefe Iuſtices with them. When they were ſet downe and placed vnder the cloth of eſtate agreeing to their degrees and calling; then came vp alſo a great number of Friers, white, blacke and gray, about the number of 300 perſons, they being ſet in the places for them appointed. Then was there a ſolemne Oyes made, and ſilence commanded, and then preſently beganne their ſeuere and cruell iudgement.

The cruell iudgements of the Spaniſh Inquiſitors vpõ our poore countreymen.

The firſt man that was called was one Roger the chiefe Armourer of the Ieſus, and hee had iudgement to haue three hundred ſtripes on horſebacke, and after condemned to the gallies as a ſlaue for 10 yeeres.

After him were called Iohn Gray, Iohn Browne, Iohn Rider, Iohn Moone, Iames Collier, and one Thomas Browne: theſe were adiudged to haue 200 ſtripes on horſebacke, and after to be committed to the gallies for the ſpace of 8 yeeres.

Then was called Iohn Keyes, and was adiudged to haue 100 ſtripes on horſebacke, and condemned to ſerue in the gallies for the ſpace of 6 yeeres.

Then were ſeuerally called the number of 53 one after another, and euery man had his ſeuerall iudgement, ſome to haue 200 ſtripes on horſebacke, and ſome 100, and condemned for ſlaues to the gallies, ſome for 6 yeeres, ſome for 8 and ſome for 10.

And then was I Miles Philips called, and was adiudged to ſerue in a monaſterie for 5 yeeres, without any ſtripes, and to weare a fooles coat, or S. Benito, during all that time.

Then were called Iohn Storie, Richard Williams, Dauid Alexander, Robert Cooke, Paul Horſewell and Thomas Hull: theſe ſixe were condemned to ſerue in monaſteries without ſtripes, ſome for 3 yeeres and ſome for foure, and to weare the S. Benito during all the ſaid time. Which being done, and it now drawing toward night, George Riuely, Peter Momfrie, and Cornelius the Iriſhman, were called and had their iudgement to be burnt to aſhes, and ſo were preſently ſent away to the place of execution in the market place but a little from the ſcaffold, where they were quickly burnt and conſumed. And as for vs that had receiued our iudgement, being 68 in number, we were caried backe that night to priſon againe. And the next day in the morning being good Friday, the yeere of our Lord 1575, we were all brought into a court of the Inquiſitors pallace, where we found a horſe in a readineſſe for euery one of our men which were condemned to haue ſtripes, and to be committed to the gallies, which were in number 60. and ſo they being inforced to mount vpon horſebacke naked from the middle vpward, were carried to be ſhewed as a ſpectacle for all the people to behold throughout the chiefe and principall ſtreetes of the citie, and had the number of ſtripes to euery one of them appointed, moſt cruelly laid vpon their naked bodies with long whips by ſundry men appointed to be the executioners thereof: and before our men there went a couple of criers which cried as they went: Behold theſe Engliſh dogs, Lutherans, enemies to God, and all the way as they went there were ſome of the Inquiſitors themſelues, and of the familiars of that rakehel order, that cried to the executioners, Strike, lay on thoſe Engliſh heretiks, Lutherans, Gods enemies: and ſo this horrible ſpectacle being ſhewed round about the citie, they returned to the Inquiſitors houſe, with their backes all gore blood, and ſwollen with great bumps, and were then taken from their horſes, & carried againe to priſon, where they remained vntill they were ſent into Spaine to the gallies, there to receiue the reſt of their martirdome: and I and the 6 other with me which had iudgement, and were condemned amongſt the reſt to ſerue an apprentiſhip in the monaſtery, were taken preſently and ſent to certaine religious houſes appointed for the purpoſe.

Chap. 6.

Wherein is ſhewed how we were vſed in the religious houſes, and that when the time was expired, that we were adiudged to ſerue in them, there came newes to Mexico of M. Francis Drakes being in the South Sea, and what preparation was made to take him, and how I ſeeking to eſcape, was againe taken and put in priſon at Vera Cruz, and how againe I made mine eſcape from thence.

I Miles Philips and William Lowe were appointed to the blacke Friers, where I was appointed to be an ouerſeer of Indian workmen, who wrought there in building of a new church: amongſt which Indians I learned their language or Mexican tongue very perfectly, and had great familiaritie with many of them, whom I found to be a courteous and louing kind of people, ingenious, and of great vnderſtanding, and they hate and abhorre the Spaniardes with all their hearts, they haue vſed ſuch horrible cruelties againſt them, and doe ſtill keepe them in ſuch ſubiection and ſeruitude, that they and the Negros alſo doe daily lie in waite to practiſe their deliuerance out of that thraldome and bondage, that the Spaniardes doe keepe them in. William

Lowe he was appointed to ſerue the Cooke in the kitchin, Richard Williams and Dauid Alexander were appointed to the gray Friers, Iohn Story and Robert Cooke to the white Friers: Paul Horſewel the Secretary tooke to be his ſeruant: Thomas Hull was ſent to a Monaſtery of prieſts, where afterward he died. Thus we ſerued out the yeeres that we were condemned for, with the vſe of our fooles coates, and we muſt needs confeſſe that the Friers did vſe vs very courteouſly: for euery one of vs had his chamber with bedding & diet, and all things cleane and neat: yea many of the Spaniards and Friers themſelues do vtterly abhorre and miſlike of that cruell Inquiſition, and would as they durſt bewaile our miſeries, and comfort vs the beſt they could, although they ſtood in ſuch feare of that diueliſh Inquiſition, that they durſt not let the left hande know what the right doth. Now after that the time was expired for which we were condemned to ſerue in thoſe religious houſes, we were then brought againe before the chiefe Inquiſitor, and had all our fooles coates pulled off and hanged vp in the head church, called Eccleſia Maior, and euery mans name and iudgement written thereupon with this addition, An heretike Lutheran reconciled. And there are alſo all their coates hanged vp, which were condemned to the gallies, with their names and iudgements, and vnderneath his coat, Heretike Lutheran reconciled. And alſo the coats and names of the three that were burned, whereupon were written, An obſtinate heretike Lutheran burnt. Then were we ſuffered to goe vp and downe the countrey, and to place our ſelues as we could, and yet not ſo free, but that we very well knew that there was good eſpiall alwayes attending vs and all our actions, ſo that we durſt not once ſpeake or looke awry. Dauid Alexander & Robert Cooke returned to ſerue the Inquiſitor, who ſhortly after maried them both to two of his Negro women: Richard Williams maried a rich widow of Biskay with 4000 Pezos: Paul Horſewell is maried to a Meſtiſa, as they name thoſe whoſe fathers were Spaniards, and their mothers Indians, and this woman which Paul Horſewell hath maried, is ſayd to be the daughter of one that came in with Hernando Cortes the Conquerour, who had with her in marriage foure thouſand Pezos, and a faire houſe: Iohn Storie is maried to a Negro woman: William Lowe had leaue and licence to goe into Spaine where he is now married: for mine owne part I could neuer throughly ſettle my ſelfe to marry in that countrey, although many faire offers were made vnto me of ſuch as were of great abilitie and wealth, but I could haue no liking to liue in that place, where I muſt euery where ſee and know ſuch horrible idolatrie committed, and durſt not once for my life ſpeake againſt it: and therefore I had alwayes a longing and deſire to this my natiue countrey: and, to returne and ſerue againe in the Mines where I might haue gathered great riches and wealth, I very well ſaw that at one time or another I ſhould fall againe into the danger of that diueliſh Inquiſition, and ſo be ſtript of all, with loſſe of life alſo, and therefore I made my choiſe rather to learne to weaue Grogranes and Taffaties, and ſo compounding with a Silke-weauer, I bound my ſelfe for three yeeres to ſerue him, and gaue him an hundred and fiftie Pezos to teach me the ſcience, otherwiſe he would not haue taught mee vnder ſeuen yeeres prentiſhip, and by this meanes I liued the more quiet, and free from ſuſpition. Howbeit I ſhould many times be charged by familiars of that diueliſh houſe, that I had a meaning to runne away into England, and to be an heretike Lutherane againe: To whom I would anſwere that they had no neede to ſuſpect any ſuch thing in mee, for that they knewe all very well that it was impoſſible for me to eſcape by any maner of meanes: yet notwithſtanding I was called before the Inquiſitor, and demaunded why I did not marrie: I anſwered that I had bound my ſelfe at an occupation. Well ſaid the Inquiſitor, I knowe thou meaneſt to runne away, and therefore I charge thee here vpon paine of burning as an heretike relapſed, that thou depart not out of this citie, nor come neere to the port of S. Iohn de Vllua, nor to any other port: To the which I anſwered, that I would willingly obey. Yea ſaid he, ſee thou doe ſo and thy fellowes alſo, they ſhall haue the like charge.

So I remained at my ſcience the full time, and learned the Art, at the end whereof there came newes to Mexico that there were certaine Engliſhmen landed with a great power at the port of Acapulco, vpon the South ſea, and that they were comming to Mexico to take the ſpoyle therof, which wrought a maruellous great feare amongſt them, & many of thoſe that were rich, began to ſhift for themſelues, their wiues & children: vpon which hurlie burlie the Viceroy cauſed a generall muſter to be made of all the Spaniards in Mexico, and there were found to be the number of 7000 and odde houſholders of Spaniards in the citie and ſuburbs, and of ſingle men vnmaried, the number of 3000 and of Meſtizoes, which are counted to be the ſonnes of Spaniards borne of Indian women, twenty thouſand perſons, and then was Paul Horſewel & I Miles Philips ſent for before the Viceroy, and were examined if we did know an Engliſh man named Francis Drake, which was brother to Captaine Hawkins: to which we anſwered, that Captaine Hawkins had not any brother but one, which was a mau of the age of threeſcore yeeres or thereabouts, and was now gouernour of Plimmouth in England. And then he demanded of vs if we knewe one Francis Drake, and we anſwered, no.

While theſe things were in doing, there came newes that all the Engliſhmen were gone, yet were there eight hundred men made out vnder the leading of ſeueral Captains, whereof two hundred were ſent to the port of S. Iohn de Vllua, vpon the North Sea vnder the conduct of Don Luys Suares, two hundred were ſent to Guatimala in the South ſea, who had for their captaine Iohn Cortes, two hundred more were ſent to Guaculco, a port of the South ſea, ouer whom went for captaine Don Pedro de Robles, and two hundred more were ſent to Acapulco, the port where it was ſaid that Captaine Drake had bene. And they had for Captaine doctor Robles Alcalde de Corte, with whom I Miles Philips went as interpreter, hauing licence giuen by the Inquiſitors. When we were come to Acapulco, we found that Captaine Drake was departed from thence, more then a moneth before we came thither. But yet our captaine Alcalde de Corte there preſently embarked himſelfe in a ſmall ſhip of threeſcore tunne or thereabout, hauing alſo in companie with him two other ſmall barkes, and not paſt two hundred men in all, with whom I went as interpreter in his owne ſhip, which God knoweth was but weake and ill appointed, ſo that for certaine, if we had met with Captaine Drake, he might eaſily haue taken vs all: We being imbarked kept our courſe and ranne Southward towards Panama, keeping ſtill as nigh the ſhore as we could, and leauing the land vpon our left hand, and hauing coaſted thus for the ſpace of eighteene or twentie dayes, and being more to the South then Guatimala, we met at laſt with other ſhips which came from Panama, of whom we were certainely informed that he was cleane gone off the coaſt more then a moneth before: and ſo we returned backe to Acapulco againe, and there landed, our Captaine being thereunto forced, becauſe his men were very ſore ſea-ſicke: All the while that I was at Sea with them, I was a glad man, for I hoped that if we met with maſter Drake, we ſhould all be taken, ſo that then I ſhould haue beene freed out of that danger and miſerie wherein I liued, and ſhould returne to mine owne countrey of England againe. But miſſing thereof, when I ſawe there was no remedie but that we muſt needes come on land againe, little doeth any man know the ſorow and griefe that inwardly I felt, although outwardly I was conſtrained to make faire weather of it. And ſo being landed, yͤ next morow after, we began our iourney towardes Mexico, and paſt theſe townes of name in our way, as firſt the towne of Tuatepec, 50 leagues from Mexico, from thence to Waſhaca, 40 leagues from Mexico: from thence to Tepiaca 24 leagues from Mexico, and from thence to Pueblo de los Angeles, where is a high hill which caſteth out fire three times a day, which hill is 18 leagues in maner directly West from Mexico, from thence we went to Stapelapa, 8 leagues from Mexico, and there our captaine and moſt of his men tooke boat, and came to Mexico againe, hauing bene foorth about the ſpace of ſeuen weekes or thereabouts. Our captaine made report to the Viceroy what he had done, and how farre he had trauelled, and that for certaine he was informed that captaine Drake was not to be heard of. To which the Viceroy replied and ſaid, Surely we ſhall haue him ſhortly come into our hands driuen a land through neceſſitie in ſome one place or other, for he being now in theſe ſeas of Sur, it is not poſſible for him to get out of them againe, ſo that if he periſh not at ſea, yet hunger wil force him to land. And then againe I was commanded by the Viceroy that I ſhould not depart the citie of Mexico, but alwaies be at my maſters houſe in a readineſſe at an houres warning, when ſoeuer I ſhould be called: for that notwithſtanding within one moneth after certaine Spaniards going to Mecameca, 18 leagues from Mexico, to ſend away certaine hides and Cochinilla, that they had there at their Stantias or dairie houſes, and my maſter hauing leaue of the Secretarie for me to go with them, I tooke my iourney with them being very well horſed and appointed, and comming thither and paſſing the time there at Mecameca certaine dayes till we had perfect intelligence that the fleete was readie to depart, I not being paſt 3 daies iourney from the port of S. Iohn de Vllua, thought it to be the meeteſt time for me to make an eſcape, and I was the bolder, preſuming vpon my Spaniſh tongue, which I ſpake as naturally as any of them all, thinking with my ſelfe, that when I came to S. Iohn de Vllua, I would get to be entertained as a ſouldiour, and ſo go home into Spaine in the ſame Fleete, and therefore ſecretly one euening late, the moone ſhining faire, I conueyed my ſelfe away, and riding ſo for the ſpace of two nights and two dayes, ſometimes in, and ſometimes out, reſting very little all that time, vpon the ſecond day at night I came to the towne of Vera Cruz, diſtant from the port of S. Iohn de Vllua, where the ſhips rode, but only 5 leagues, and here purpoſing to reſt my ſelfe a day or two, I was no ſooner alighted, but within the ſpace of one halfe houre after, I was by ill hap arreſted, and brought before Iuſtices there, being taken and ſuſpected to be a gentlemans ſonne of Mexico, that was runne away from his father, who in trueth was the man they ſought for: So I being arreſted, and brought before the Iuſtices, there was a great hurly burly about the matter, euery man charging me that I was the ſonne of ſuch a man dwelling in Mexico, which I flatly denied, affirming that I knewe not the man, yet would they not beleeue me, but vrged ſtil vpon me that I was he that they ſought for, and ſo I was conueied away to priſon. And as I was thus going to priſon, to the further increaſe of my griefe, it chanced that at that very inſtant there was a poore man in the preſſe that was come to towne to ſell hennes, who told the Iuſtices that they did me wrong, and that in truth he knew very well that I was an Engliſhman and no Spaniard. They then demanded of him how he knew that, and threatned him that he ſaid ſo, for that he was my companion, and ſought to conuey me away from my father, ſo that he alſo was threatned to be law in priſon with me: he for the diſcharge of himſelfe ſtood ſtifly in it, that I was an Engliſhman, & one of captaine Hawkins men, and that he had knowen me weare the S. Benito in the Blacke-friers at Mexico, for 3 or 4 whole yeres together: which when they heard, they forſooke him, and began to examine me anew, whether that ſpeech of his were true, yea or no, which when they perceiued that I could not denie, and perceiuing that I was run from Mexico, & came thither of purpoſe to conuey my ſelfe away with the fleete, I was preſently committed to priſon with a ſorrowfull heart, often wiſhing my ſelfe that that man which knew me had at that time bene further off: howbeit he in ſinceritie had compaſſion of my diſtreſſed eſtate, thinking by his ſpeech, and knowing of me, to haue ſet me free from that preſent danger which he ſaw me in: howbeit, contrary to his expectation, I was thereby brought into my extreme danger, and to the hazard of my life, yet there was no remedy but patience perforce. And I was no ſooner brought into priſon, but I had a great paire of bolts clapt on my legs, and thus I remained in that priſon for the ſpace of 3 weekes, where were alſo many other priſoners which were thither committed for ſundry crimes, & condemned to the gallies. During which time of impriſonment there, I found amongſt thoſe my priſon-fellowes ſome that had knowen me before in Mexico, and truely they had compaſſion of me, & would ſpare of their victuals and any thing els that they had to doe me good: amongſt whom there was one of them that told me that he vnderſtood by a ſecret friend of his which often came to the priſon to him, that I ſhold be ſhortly ſent backe againe to Mexico by wagon, ſo ſoone as the fleete was gone from S. Iohn de Vllua, for Spaine. This poore man my priſon-fellow of himſelfe, & without any requeſt made by me, cauſed his ſaid friend which came often vnto him to the grate of the priſon, to bring him wine and victuals, to buy for him 2 kniues which had files in their backes, which files were ſo wel made that they would ſerue & ſuffice any priſoner to file off his irons, & of thoſe kniues or files he brought one to me, & told me that he had cauſed it to be made for me, and let me haue it at that very price it coſt him, which was 2 Pezos, the value of 8. s. of our money: which knife when I had it, I was a ioyfull man, and conueied the ſame into the foote of my boot, vpon the inſide of my left leg, and ſo within 3 or 4 dayes after that I had thus receiued my knife, I was ſuddenly called for, & brought before the head Iuſtice which cauſed thoſe my irons with the round bolt to be ſtricken off and ſent to a Smiths in the towne, where was a new paire of bolts made ready for me of another faſhion, which had a broad iron barre comming betweene the ſhackles, and cauſed my hands to be made faſt with a paire of manacles, and ſo was I preſently laid into a wagon all alone, which was there readie to depart with ſundry other wagons, to the number of 60, towardes Mexico, and they all were laden with ſundry merchandiſe which came in the fleete out of Spaine.

The wagon that I was in was foremoſt in all the companie, and as we trauelled I being alone in the wagon, began to trie if I could plucke my hands out of the manacles, and as God would, although it were ſomewhat painefull for me, yet my handes were ſo ſlender that I could pull them out, and put them in againe, and euer as we went, when the wagon made moſt noyſe, and the men were buſieſt, I would be working to file off my bolts, & trauelling thus for the ſpace of 8 leagues from Vera Cruz, we came to an high hill, at the entring vp of which (as God would) one of the wheeles of the wagon wherein I was, brake, ſo that by that meanes the other wagons went afore, and the wagon-man that had charge of me ſet an Indian Carpenter a worke to mend the wheele: and here at this place they baited at an hoſtrie that a Negro-woman keepes: and at this place, for that the going vp of the hill is very ſteepe, for the ſpace of two leagues and better, they doe alwaies accuſtome to take the moiles of 3 or 4 wagons, and to place them all together for the drawing vp of one wagon, and ſo to come downe againe, and fetch vp others in that order. All which came very well to paſſe: for as it drew towards night when moſt of the Wagoners were gone to draw vp their wagons, in this ſort I being alone had quickly filed off my boltes, and ſo eſpying my time in the darke of the euening before they returned downe the hill againe, I conueyed my ſelfe into the woods there adioyning, carrying my bolts and manacles with me, & a few biſcuits, and two ſmall cheeſes. And being come into the woods, I threw my yrons into a thicke buſh, and then couered them with moſſe and other things, and then ſhifted for my ſelfe as I might all that night. And thus by the good prouidence of Almightie God, I was freed from mine yrons all ſauing the collar that was about my necke, and ſo got my libertie the ſecond time.

Chap. 7.

Wherein is ſhewed how I eſcaped to Guatimala, vpon the South ſea, and from thence to the port of Cauallos, where I got paſſage to goe into Spaine, and of our arriuall at Hauana, and our comming to Spaine, where I was againe like to haue bene committed priſoner, and how through the great mercy of God I eſcaped, and came home in ſafetie into England in February 1582.

The next morning (day light being come) I perceiued by the Sunne riſing what way to take to eſcape their hands, for when I fledde, I tooke the way into the woods vpon the left hand: and hauing left that way that went to Mexico vpon my right hand, I thought to keepe my courſe as the woods and mountaines lay, ſtill direct South as neere as I could: by meanes whereof I was ſure to conuey my ſelfe farre ynough from that way that went to Mexico. And as I was thus going in the woods, I ſaw many great fires made to the North not paſt a league from the mountaine where I was; and trauailing thus in my bootes with mine yron coller about my necke, and my bread and cheeſe, the very ſame forenoone I mette with a company of Indians which were hunting of Deere for their ſuſtenance: to whom I ſpake in the Mexican tongue, and told them how that I had of a long time bin kept in priſon by the cruel Spanyards, and did deſire them to helpe me file to off mine yron coller, which they willingly did: reioycing greatly with me, that I was thus eſcaped out of the Spanyards hands. Then I deſired that I might haue one of them to guide mee out of thoſe deſert mountaines towardes the South, which they alſo moſt willingly did: and ſo they brought mee to an Indian towne 8. leagues diſtant from thence, named Shalapa, where I ſtayed three dayes, for that I was ſomewhat ſickely. At which towne (with the gold that I had quilted in my dublet) I bought me an horſe of one of the Indians, which coſt mee 6. pezos, and ſo trauailing South, within the ſpace of 2. leagues I happened to ouertake a gray Frier, one that I had bene familiar withall in Mexico, whom then I knewe to be a zealous good man, and one that did much lament the crueltie vſed againſt vs by the Inquiſitors, and truely hee vſed me very courteouſly: and I hauing confidence in him did indeede tel him, that I was minded to aduenture to ſee if I could get out of the ſayd countrey if I could finde ſhipping, and did therefore pray him of his ayde, direction, and aduiſe herein, which he faithfully did, not onely in directing me which was my ſafeſt way to trauaile, but he alſo of himſelfe kept me company for the ſpace of three dayes, and euer as we came to the Indians houſes (who vſed and intertained vs well) hee gathered among them in money to the value of 20. pezos, which at my departure from him hee freely gaue vnto mee. So came I to the citie of Guatimala vpon the South ſea, which is diſtant from Mexico about 250. leagues, where I ſtayed 6. dayes, for that my horſe was weake. And from thence I trauailed ſtill South and by Eaſt ſeuen dayes iourney, paſſing by certaine Indian townes, vntill I came to an Indian towne diſtant from Mexico, direct South 309. leagues. And here at this towne enquiring to go to the Port de Cauallos in the Northeaſt ſea, it was anſwered that in trauailing thither I ſhould not come to any towne in 10. or 12. dayes iourney: ſo heere I hired two Indians to be my guides, and I bought hennes, and bread to ſerue vs ſo long time, and tooke with vs things to kindle fire euery night, becauſe of wilde beaſtes, and to dreſſe our meate: and euery night when we reſted, my Indian guides would make two great fires, betweene the which we placed our ſelues, and my horſe. And in the night time we ſhould heare the Lions roare, with Tygres, Ounces, and other beaſtes, and ſome of them we ſhould ſee in the night, which had eyes ſhining like fire. And trauailing thus for the ſpace of twelue dayes, wee came at laſt to the port of Cauallos vpon the Eaſt ſea, diſtant from Guatimala South and by Eaſt, two hundreth leagues, and from Mexico 450. or thereabouts. This is a good harborough for ſhippes, and is without either caſtle or bulwarke. I hauing diſpatched away my guides, went downe to the Hauen, where I ſaw certaine ſhips loden chiefly with Canary wines, where I ſpake with one of the Maſters, who aſked me what Countrey man I was, and I told him that I was borne in Granado, & he ſaid, that then I was his countreyman. I required him that I might paſſe home with him in his ſhip, paying for my paſſage: and he ſaid yea, ſo that I had a ſafe conduct, or letter teſtimoniall to ſhew, that he might incurre no danger; for ſaid he, it may be that you haue killed ſome man, or be indebted, and would therefore run away. To that I anſwered, that there was not any ſuch cauſe.

Guatimala on the South ſea.

Puerto de Cauallos.

Wel, in the end we grew to a price, that for 60. pezos he would cary me into Spaine: a glad man was I at this good hap, and I quickly ſolde my horſe, and made my prouiſion of hennes and bread to ſerue me in my paſſage; And thus within 2. dayes after we ſet ſaile, and neuer ſtayed vntill we came to Hauana, which is diſtant from puerto de Cauallos by ſea 500. leagues: where we found the whole fleete of Spaine, which was bound home from the Indies. And heere I was hired for a ſouldier to ſerue in the Admiral ſhip of the ſame fleete, wherein the General himſelf went. There landed while I was here 4. ſhips out of Spaine, being all full of ſouldiers and ordinance, of which number there were 200. men landed here, & 4. great braſſe pieces of ordinance, although the caſtle were before ſufficiently prouided: 200. men more were ſent to Campeche, & certaine ordinance: 200. to Florida with ordinance: and 100. laſtly to S. Iohn de Vllua. As for ordinance there they haue ſufficient, and of the very ſame which was ours, which we had in the Ieſus, and thoſe others which we had planted in the place, where the Vice-roy betrayed M. Hawkins our general, as hath bene declared. The ſending of thoſe ſouldiers to euery of thoſe Ports, and the ſtrengthening of them, was done by commandement from the king of Spaine, who wrote alſo by them to the general of his fleete, giuing him in charge ſo to doe, as alſo directing him what courſe he ſhould keepe in his comming home into Spaine, charging him in any hand not to come nigh to the yles of Açores, but to keepe his courſe more to the Northward, aduertiſing him withal, what number and power of French ſhips of warre, and other, Don Antonio had at that time at Terçera, & the yles aforeſaid: which the general of the fleete wel conſidering, and what great ſtore of riches he had to bring home with him into Spaine, did in all very ductifully obſerue and obey: for in trueth he had in his ſaid fleete 37. ſaile of ſhips, and in euery of them there was as good as 30. pipes of ſiluer one with another, beſides great ſtore of gold, Cochinilla, ſugars, hides, and Cana Fiſtula, with other Apothecary drugs. This our general, who was called Don Pedro de Guzman, did prouidently take order for, for their moſt ſtrength and defence, if neede ſhould be, to the vttermoſt of his power, and commanded vpon paine of death, that neither paſſenger nor ſouldier ſhould come aboord without his ſword and harquebuſh, with ſhot and powder, to the end that they might be the better able to encounter the fleete of Don Antonio, if they ſhould hap to meete with them, or any of them: and euer as the weather was faire, the ſaid general would himſelf go aboord from one ſhip to another, to ſee that euery man had his ful prouiſion according to the commandement giuen. Yet to ſpeake truely what I thinke, two good tall ſhips of warre would haue made a foule ſpoile amongſt them. For in all this fleete there were not any that were ſtrong and warlike appointed, ſauing only the Admiral, and Vice-admiral: And againe ouer and beſides the weakeneſſe and the ill furniſhing of the reſt, they were all ſo deeply laden, that they had not bene able (if they had bene charged) to haue held out any long fight. Wel, thus we ſet ſaile, & had a very ill paſſage home, the weather was ſo contrary. We kept our courſe in maner Northeaſt, and brought our ſelues to the height of 42. degrees of latitude, to be ſure not to meete with Don Antonio his fleete, and were vpon our voyage from the 4. of Iune, vntill the 10. of September, and neuer ſaw land till we fell with the Arenas Gordas hard by S. Lucar. And there was an order taken that none ſhould goe on ſhoare vntill he had licence: as for me, I was knowen by one in the ſhip, who told the Maſter that I was an Engliſhmā, which (as God would) it was my good hap to heare: for if I had not heard it, it had coſt me my life. Notwithſtanding, I would not take any knowledge of it, and ſeemed to be mery & pleaſant, that we were all come ſo wel in ſafety. Preſently after, licence came that we ſhould go on ſhoare, and I preſſed to be gone with the firſt: howbeit, the Maſter came vnto me, & ſaid, Sirra, you muſt goe with me to Siuil by water: I knew his meaning well inough, & that he meant there to offer me vp as a ſacrifice to the Holy houſe. For the ignorant zeale of a number of theſe ſuperſtitious Spaniards is ſuch, that they thinke that they haue done God good ſeruice, when they haue brought a Lutheran heretike to the fire to be burnt: for ſo do they account of vs. Wel, I perceiuing all this, tooke vpon me not to ſuſpect any thing, but was ſtill iocund & mery: howbeit, I knew it ſtood me vpon to ſhift for my ſelfe. And ſo wayting my time when the Maſter was in his cabbin aſleepe, I conueyed my ſelfe ſecretly downe by the ſhrowds into the ſhip boate, and made no ſtay but cut the rope wherewithal ſhe was moared, and ſo by the cable haled on ſhore, where I leapt on land, & let the boate goe whither it would. Thus by the helpe of God I eſcaped that day, & then neuer ſtayed at S. Lucar, but went all night by the way which I had ſeene other take toward Siuil: ſo that the next morning I came to Siuil, and ſought me out a workemaſter, that I might fall to my ſcience, which was weauing of taffataes; and being intertained I ſet my ſelfe cloſe to my worke, and durſt not for my life once to ſtirre abroad for feare of being knowen: and being thus at my worke, within 4. dayes after I heard one of my fellowes ſay, that he heard there was great inquiry made for an Engliſhman that came home in the fleete: what an heretique Lutheran (quoth I) was it, I would to God I might knowe him, ſurely I would preſent him to the holy houſe. And thus I kept ſtill within doores at my worke, and fained my ſelfe not well at eaſe, & that I would labour as I might to get me new clothes. And continuing thus for the ſpace of 3. moneths I called for my wages, and bought me all things new, different from the apparell that I did weare at ſea, and yet durſt not be ouerbold to walke abroad: and after vnderſtanding that there were certaine Engliſh ſhips at S. Lucar bound for England, I tooke a boat and went aboord one of them, and deſired the Maſter that I might haue paſſage with him to goe into England, and told him ſecretly that I was one of thoſe which Captaine Hawkins did ſet on ſhore in the Indies: he very courteouſly prayed me to haue him excuſed, for he durſt not meddle with me, & prayed me therefore to returne from whence I came. Which when I perceiued, with a ſorowful heart, God knoweth, I tooke my leaue of him, not without watry cheekes. And then I went to S. Mary port, which is 3. leagues from S, Lucar, where I put my ſelfe to be a ſouldier to goe in the king of Spaines Gallies, which were bound for Maiorca, and comming thither in the end of the Chriſtmas holidayes, I found there two Engliſh ſhips, the one of London, and the other of the Weſt countrey, which were ready fraighted and ſtayed but for a faire wind. To the Maſter of the one, which was of the Weſt countrey went I, and told him that I had bene 2. yeeres in Spaine to learne the language, and that I was now deſirous to goe home and ſee my friends, for that I lacked maintenance: and ſo hauing agreed with him for my paſſage, I tooke ſhipping. And thus through the prouidence of Almighty God, after 16. yeeres abſence, hauing ſuſtained many and ſundry great troubles and miſeries, as by this diſcourſe appeareth, I came home to this my natiue countrey of England in the yeere 1582. in the moneth of February, in the ſhip called the Landret, and arriued at Poole.

He commeth home in an Engliſh ſhip from Maiorca.

The trauailes of Iob Hortop, which Sir Iohn Hawkins ſet on land within the Bay of Mexico, after his departure from the Hauen of S. Iohn de Vllua in Nueua Eſpanna, the 8. of October 1568.

NOt vntruely nor without cauſe ſaid Iob the faithfull ſeruant of God (whom the ſacred Scriptures tell vs, to haue dwelt in the land of Hus) that man being borne of a woman, liuing a ſhort time, is repleniſhed with many miſeries: which ſome know by reading of hiſtories, many by the view of others calamities, and I by experience in my ſelfe, as this preſent Treatiſe inſuing ſhall ſhew.

It is not vnknowen vnto many, that I Iob Hortop powder-maker was borne at Bourne, a towne in Lincolnſhire, from my age of twelue yeeres brought vp in Redriffe neere London, with M. Francis Lee, who was the Queenes Maieſties powder-maker, whom I ſerued, vntil I was preſt to go on the 3. voyage to the Weſt Indies, with the right worſhipful Sir Iohn Hawkins, who appointed me to be one of the Gunners in her Maieſties ſhip called the Ieſus of Lubeck, who ſet ſaile from Plimmouth in the moneth of October 1567. hauing with him another ſhip of her Maieſties, called the Minion, and foure ſhips of his owne, namely the Angel, the Swallow, the Iudith, and the William and Iohn. He directed his Vice-admiral, that if foule weather did ſeparate them, to meete at the Iland of Tenerif. After which by the ſpace of ſeuen dayes and ſeuen nights, we had ſuch ſtormes at ſea, that we loſt our long boats and a pinneſſe, with ſome men: comming to the Iſle of Tenerif, there our Generall heard that his Vice-admirall with the Swallow, and the William and Iohn were at the Iland called Gomera, where finding his Vice-admirall, he anchored, tooke in freſh water, and ſet ſaile for Cape Blank, where in the way wee tooke a Portugal carauel, laden with fiſh called Mullets: from thence we ſailed to cape Verde. In our courſe thither we met a Frenchman of Rochel called captaine Bland, who had taken a Portugal carauel, whom our vice admiral chaſed and tooke. Captaine Drake, now Sir Francis Drake was made maſter & captaine of the Carauel, and ſo we kept our way till we came to Cape Verde, and there we anchored, tooke our boates, & ſet ſouldiers on ſhore. Our Generall was the firſt that leapt on land, & with him Captaine Dudley: there we tooke certaine Negroes, but not without damage to our ſelues. For our Generall, Captaine Dudley, & 8. other of our company were hurt with poyſoned arrowes: about nine dayes after, the 8. that were wounded died. Our general was taught by a Negro, to draw the poyſon out of his wound with a cloue of garlike, whereby he was cured. From thence wee went to Sierra leona, where be monſtrous fiſhes called Sharkes, which will deuoure men. I amongſt others was ſent in the Angell with two Pinneſſes into the riuer called Calouſa, to ſeeke two Carauels that were there trading with the Negros: wee tooke one of them with the Negros, and brought them away.

A remedie againſt poyſoned arrowes.

The riuer of Calouſa.

In this riuer in yͤ night time we had one of our pinneſſes bulged by a ſea-horſe, ſo that our men ſwimming about the riuer, were all taken into the other pinneſſes, except two that tooke hold one of another, and were caried away by the ſea-horſe. This monſter hath the iuſt proportion of a horſe, ſauing that his legs be ſhort, his teeth very great, and a ſpan in length: hee vſeth in the night to goe on land into the woods, ſeeking at vnawares to deuoure the Negroes in their cabbins, whom they by their vigilancie preuent, and kill him in this maner. The Negroes keepe watch, and diligently attend their comming, and when they are gone into the woods, they forthwith lay a great tree ouerthwart the way, ſo that at their returne, for that their legs be ſo ſhort, they cannot goe ouer it: then the Negroes ſet vpon them with their bowes, arrowes and darts, and ſo deſtroy them.

From thence we entred the riuer called the Caſſerroes, where there were other Carauels trading with the Negroes, and them we tooke. In this Iland betwixt the riuer and the maine, trees grow with Oiſters vpon them. There grow Palmito trees, which bee as high as a ſhips maine maſt, and on their tops grow nuts, wine and oyle, which they call Palmito wine and Palmito oyle. The Plantan tree alſo groweth in that countrey; the tree is as bigge as a mans thigh, and as high as a firre pole, the leaues thereof be long and broad, and on the top grow the fruit which are called Plantanos: they are crooked, and a cubite long, and as bigge as a mans wriſt, they growe on cluſters: when they be ripe, they be very good and daintie to eate: Sugar is not more delicate in taſte then they be.

The riuer of Taggarin.

From thence with the Angel, the Iudith, and the two pinneſſes, we ſailed to Sierra leona, where our Generall at that time was, who with the captaines and ſouldiers went vp into the riuer called Taggarin, to take a towne of the Negroes, where he found three kings of that countrey with fiftie thouſand Negroes beſieging the ſame towne, which they could not take in many yeeres before, when they had warred with it. Our General made a breach, entred, & valiantly tooke the towne, wherein were found fiue Portugals which yeelded themſelues to his mercy, and hee ſaued their liues: we tooke & caried thence for traffique to the Weſt Indies 500. Negroes. The three kings droue 7000. Negroes into yͤ ſea at low water, at the point of the land, where they were all drowned in the Oze, for that they could not take their canoas to ſaue themſelues. Wee returned backe againe in our pinneſſes to the ſhips, and there tooke in freſh water, and made ready ſayle towards Rio grande.

500. Negroes taken.

Rio grande.

At our comming thither we entred with the Angel, the Iudith, and the 2. pinneſſes, and found there ſeuen Portugal Caruels, which made great fight with vs. In the ende by Gods helpe wee wonne the victory, and droue them to the ſhore, from whence with the Negroes they fled, and we fetcht the caruels from the ſhore into the riuer. The next morning M. Francis Drake with his caruel, the Swallow, and the William and Iohn came into the riuer, with captaine Dudley and his ſouldiers, who landed being but a hundred ſouldiers, and fought with ſeuen thouſand Negroes, burned the towne, and returned to our Generall with the loſſe of one man.

In that place there be many muſke-cats, which breed in hollow trees: the Negroes take thẽ in a net, & put them in a cage, & nouriſh them very daintily, & take the muſke from them with a ſpoone.

Now we directed our courſe from Guinea towards the Weſt Indies.

And by the way died Captaine Dudley.

Dominica.

Margarita.

In ſayling towards the Indies, the firſt land that we eſcryed, was the Iland called Dominica, where at our comming we ancored, & tooke in freſh water and wood for our prouiſion: which done, we ſayled towards the Iland called Margarita, where our Generall in deſpite of the Spaniards anchored, landed, & tooke in freſh victuals. A mile off the Iland there is a rocke in the ſea, wherein doe breede many fowles like vnto Barnacles: in the night we went out in our boates, and with cudgels we killed many of them, and brought them with many of their egs aboord with vs: their egges be as bigge as Turkies egges, and ſpeckled like them. We did eate them, and found them very good meate.

Burboroata.

From thence wee ſayled to Burboroata, which is in the maine land of the Weſt Indies: there we came in, mored our ſhips, and taried two moneths trimming and dreſſing our ſhips, and in the meane time traded with certaine Spanyards of that countrey. There our Generall ſent vs vnto a towne called Placencia, (which ſtood on a high hil) to haue intreated a Biſhop that dwelt there for his fauour & friendſhip in their lawes, who hearing of our comming, for feare forſooke yͤ town.

Placencia in the maine.

In our way vp the hil to Placencia, wee found a monſtrous venemous worme with two heads: his body was as bigge as a mans arme, and a yard long: our maſter Robert Barret did cut him in ſunder with his ſword, and it made it as blacke as if it were coloured with ynke.

Heere be many Tygers, monſtrous and furious beaſts, which by ſubtiltie deuoure and deſtroy many men: they vſe the traded wayes, & wil ſhew themſelues twiſe or thriſe to the trauellers, and ſo depart ſecretly, lurking till they be paſt, then ſuddenly & at vnawares they leape vpon them and deuoure them: they had ſo vſed two of our company, had not one of them looked behind. Our Generall ſent three ſhips vnto the Iland called Coraçao, to make prouiſion for the reſt, where they remayned vntill his comming. Hee ſent from thence the Angel and the Iudith to Rio de Hacha, where we anchored before the town. The Spaniards ſhot three pieces at vs from the ſhore, whom we requited with two of ours, and ſhotte through the Gouernours houſe: we wayed anchor, & anchored againe without ſhot of the towne, where wee rid fiue dayes in deſpite of the Spanyards, and their ſhot. In the meane ſpace there came a Caruel of aduiſe from S. Domingo, whom with the Angel, and the Iudith wee chaſed and droue to the ſhore: we fetcht him from thence in ſpite of 200. Spaniards hargubuſh ſhot, and anchored againe before the towne, and rid there with them, till our Generals comming, who anchored, landed his men, and valiantly tooke the Towne, with the loſſe of one man, whoſe name was Thomas Surgeon: wee landed and planted on the ſhore for our ſafeties, our field ordinance: we droue the Spaniards vp into the country aboue two leagues, whereby they were inforced to trade with our General, to whom he ſold moſt part of his Negros.

In this riuer we killed a monſtrous Lagarto or Crocodile in this port at ſunne ſet: ſeuen of vs went in the pinneſſe vp into the Riuer, carying with vs a dogge, vnto whom with rope-yarne we bound a great hooke of ſteele, with a chaine that had a ſwiuel, which we put vnder the dogs belly, the point of the hooke comming ouer his back faſt bound, as aforeſaid: we put him ouer boord, and vered out our rope by litle and litle, rowing away with our boate: the Lagarto came & preſently ſwallowed vp the dogge, then did we rowe hard, till we had choked him: he plunged and made a wonderful ſtirre in the water: we leapt on ſhore, and haled him on land: he was 23. foote by the rule, headed like a hogge, in body like a ſerpent, full of ſcales as broad as a ſawcer: his taile long and full of knots as bigge as a fawcon ſhotte: he hath foure legs, his feete haue long nailes like vnto a dragon: we opened him, tooke out his guts, flayed him, dried his ſkinne, and ſtuffed it with ſtraw, meaning to haue brought it home, had not the ſhip bin caſt away. This monſter will cary away and deuoure both man and horſe.

From hence we ſhaped our courſe to Santa Martha, where we landed, traded, and ſold certaine Negroes: there two of our company killed a monſtrous adder, going towards his caue with a Conie in his mouth: his body was as bigge as any mans thigh, and ſeuen foote long: vpon his tayle he had ſixteene knottes, euery one as bigge as a great walnut, which they ſay, doe ſhew his age: his colour was greene and yellow: they opened him, and found two conies in his belly.

Santa Martha.

From thence wee ſayled to Cartagena, where we went in, mored our Shippes, and would haue traded with them, but they durſt not for feare of the King: wee brought vp the Minion againſt the Caſtle, and ſhotte at the Caſtle and Towne: then we landed in an Iland, where were many gardens: there in a caue we found certaine Botijos of wine, which wee brought away with vs, in recompence whereof, our Generall commanded to be ſet on ſhore woollen and linnen cloth, to the value thereof. From hence by foule weather wee were forced to ſeeke the Port of Saint Iohn de Vllua. In our way thwart of Campeche we met with a Spaniard, a ſmall ſhip, who was bound for Santo Domingo: he had in him a Spaniard called Auguſtin de villa nueua, who was the man that betrayed all the Noble men in the Indies, and cauſed them to be beheaded, wherefore he with two Friers fled to S. Domingo: them we tooke and brought with vs into the Port of S. Iohn de Vllua. Our Generall made great account of him, and vſed him like a Noble man: howbeit in the ende he was one of them that betrayed vs. When wee had mored our ſhips, and landed, wee mounted the Ordinance that wee found there in the Ilande, and for our ſafeties kept watch and warde. The next day after wee diſcouered the Spaniſh fleete, whereof Luçon a Spanyard was Generall: with him came a Spanyard called Don Martin Henriquez, whom the king of Spaine ſent to be his Vice-roy of the Indies. He ſent a Pinneſſe with a flagge of truce vnto our Generall, to knowe of what Countrey thoſe Shippes were that rode there in the King of Spaines Port; who ſayd, they were the Queene of Englands ſhips, which came in there for victuals for their money: wherefore if your Generall will come in here, he ſhall giue me victuals and all other neceſſaries, and I will goe out on the one ſide of the Port, and he ſhall come in on the other ſide. The Spanyard returned for anſwere, that he was a Vice-roy, and had a thouſand men, & therefore he would come in. Our Generall ſayd, If he be a Vice-roy, I repreſent my Queenes perſon, & I am a Vice-roy as well as he: and if he haue a thouſand men, my powder and ſhot will take the better place. Then the Vice-roy after counſell among themſelues, yeelded to our Generals demaund, ſwearing by his King and his Crowne, by his commiſſion and authority that he had from his King, that hee would performe it, and thereupon pledges were giuen on both parts. Our Generall bearing a godly and Chriſtian minde, voyde of fraude and deceit, iudged the Spanyards to haue done the like, deliuered to them ſixe gentlemen, not doubting to haue receiued the like from them: but the faithleſſe Spanyardes, in coſtly apparell gaue of the baſeſt of their company, as afterwardes it was well knowen. Theſe things finiſhed, proclamation was made on both ſides, that on payne of death no occaſion ſhould be giuen, whereby any quarel ſhould grow to the breach of the league, and then they peaceably entred the port, with great triumph on both ſides.

The Spaniards preſently brought a great Hulke, a ſhip of ſixe hundred, and mored her by the ſide of the Minion, and they cut out ports in their other ſhips, planting their ordinance towards vs, in the night they filled the Hulke with men, to lay the Minion aboord, as the ſequel did ſhew, which made our General doubtful of their dealings: wherefore, for that he could ſpeake the Spaniſh tongue, he ſent Robert Barret aboord the Vice-roy, to knowe his meaning in thoſe dealings, who willed him with his company to come in to him, whom he commanded preſently to be ſet in the bilbowes, and forthwith a Cornet (for a watchword among the falſe Spaniards) was ſounded for the enterpriſing of their pretended treaſon againſt our Generall, whom Auguſtine de villa noua ſitting at dinner with him, ſhould then preſently haue killed with a poynado which hee had priuily in his ſleeue, which was eſpyed and preuented by one Iohn Chamberlayne, who tooke the poynado out of his ſleeue. Our General haſtily roſe vp, and commanded him to be put priſoner in the Stewards roome, & to be kept with two men. The faithleſſe Spanyards, thinking all things to their deſire had bene finiſhed, ſuddenly ſounded a Trumpet, and therewith three hundred Spaniards entred the Minion, whereat our General with a loude and fierce voyce called vnto vs, ſaying, God and Saint George, vpon thoſe traiterous villaines, and reſcue the Minion, I truſt in God the day ſhalbe ours: and with that the Mariners & ſouldiers leapt out of the Ieſus of Lubeck into the Minion, and beat out the Spanyards, and with a ſhot out of her fiered the Spaniards Viceadmirall, where the moſt part of 300. Spanyards were ſpoyled, and blowen ouer boord with powder. Their Admirall alſo was on fire halfe an houre: we cut our cables, wound off our ſhips, and preſently fought with them: they came vpon vs on euery ſide, and continued the fight from ten of the clocke vntil it was night: they killed all our men that were on ſhore in the Iland, ſauing three, which by ſwimming got aboord the Ieſus of Lubeck. They ſunke the Generals ſhip called the Angel, and tooke the Swallow: the Spaniards Admirall had aboue threeſcore ſhot through her: many of his men were ſpoyled: foure other of their ſhips were ſunke. There were in that fleete, and that came from the ſhore to reſcue them, fifteene hundred: we ſlew of them fiue hundred and fourtie, as we were credibly informed by a note that came to Mexico. In this fight the Ieſus of Lubeck had fiue ſhotte through her mayne Maſt: her fore-maſt was ſtrooke in ſunder vnder the hounds with a chayne ſhotte, and her hull was wonderfully pearced with ſhotte, therefore it was vnpoſſible to bring her away. They ſet two of their owne Shippes on fire, intending therewith to haue burnt the Ieſus of Lubeck, which we preuented by cutting our cables in the halſe, and winding off by our ſternefaſt.

The Spaniſh vice-admirall fiered.

One of thoſe three was Iob Hortop the reporter hereof. Foure Spaniſh ſhips ſunke.

The Minion was forced to ſet ſaile and ſtand off from vs, and come to an anker without ſhot of the Iſland. Our Generall couragiouſly cheered vp his ſouldiers and gunners, and called to Samuel his page for a cup of Beere, who brought it him in a ſiluer cup, and hee drinking to all men willed the gunners to ſtand by their Ordinance luſtily like men. He had no ſooner ſet the cup out of his hand, but a demy Culuerin ſhot ſtroke away the cup and a Coopers plane that ſtoode by the maine maſt, and ranne out on the other ſide of the ſhip: which nothing diſmaid our Generall, for he ceaſed not to incourage vs, ſaying, feare nothing, for God, who hath preſerued me from this ſhot, will alſo deliuer vs from theſe traitours and villaines. Then Captaine Bland meaning to haue turned out of the port, had his maine maſt ſtroke ouer boord with a chaineſhot that came from the ſhore, wherefore he ankered, fired his ſhip, tooke his pinneſſe with all his men, and came aboord the Ieſus of Lubek to our Generall, who ſaid vnto him, that he thought he would not haue runne away from him: he anſwered, that he was not minded to haue run away from him, but his intent was to haue turned vp, and to haue laid the weathermoſt ſhip of the Spaniſh fleete aboord, and fired his ſhip in hope therewith to haue ſet on fire the Spaniſh fleete, hee ſaid if he had done ſo he had done well. With this, night came on. Our Generall commanded the Minion, for ſafegard of her maſts to be brought vnder the Ieſus of Lubecks lee: he willed M. Francis Drake to come in with the Iudith, and to lay the Minion aboord, to take in men and other things needefull, and to goe out, and ſo he did.

At night when the wind came off the ſhore, wee ſet ſayle, and went out in deſpite of the Spanyards and their ſhot, where wee ankered, with two ankers vnder the Iſland, the wind being Northerly, which was wonderfull dangerous, and wee feared euery houre to be driuen with the lee ſhore. In the end when the wind came larger, we waied anker, and ſet ſaile, ſeeking the riuer of Panuco for water, whereof we had very little, and victuals were ſo ſcarce, that we were driuen to eate hides, cats, rats, parrats, munkies, and dogges: wherefore our Generall was forced to diuide his company into two parts, for there was a mutinie among them for want of victuals: and ſome ſaid that they had rather be on the ſhore to ſhift for themſelues amongſt the enemies, then to ſterue on ſhip-boord. He aſked them who would go on ſhore, and who would tarry on ſhip-boord, thoſe that would goe on ſhore, he willed to goe on foremaſt, and thoſe that would tarrie, on baſe maſt: foureſcore and ſixteene of vs were willing to depart. Our Generall gaue vnto euery one of vs ſixe yards of Roane cloth, and money to them that demanded it. When we were landed, he came vnto vs, where friendly imbracing euery one of vs, he was greatly grieued that he was forced to leaue vs behind him, he counſelled vs to ſerue God, and to loue one another, and thus courteouſly he gaue vs a ſorowful farewell, and promiſed if God ſent him ſafe home, he would do what he could, that ſo many of vs as liued ſhould by ſome means be brought into England, & ſo he did.

About an hundred Engliſhmen landed.

Since my returne into England I haue heard that many miſliked that he left vs ſo behind him, and brought away Negros: but the reaſon is this, for them he might haue had victuals, or any other thing needfull, if by foule weather hee had bene driuen vpon the Iſlands, which for gold nor ſiluer he could not haue had.

And thus our Generall departed to his ſhip, and we remained on land, where for our ſafeties, fearing the wild Indians that were about vs, we kept watch all night, and at Sunne riſing wee marched on our way, three and three in a ranke, vntill that we came into a fielde vnder a groue, where the Indians came vpon vs, aſking vs what people we were, and how we came there. Two of our company, namely Anthony Goddard, and Iohn Corniſh, for that they could ſpeake the Spaniſh tongue, went to them, and ſaid wee were Engliſhmen, that neuer came in that countrey before, and that we had fought with the Spaniards, and for that we lacked victuals, our Generall ſet vs on ſhore: they aſked vs whither we intended to goe, we ſaid to Panuco. The Captaine of the Indians willed vs to giue vnto them ſome of our clothes & ſhirts, which we did: then he bad vs giue them all, but we would not ſo doe, whereupon Iohn Corniſh was then ſlaine with an arrow, which an Indian boy that ſtoode by the Captaine ſhot at him, wherefore hee ſtroke the boy on the necke with his bow, that he lay for dead, and willed vs to follow him, who brought vs into a great fielde, where we found freſh water: hee bad vs ſit downe about the pond and drinke, and he with his company would goe in the meane ſpace to kill fiue or ſixe Deere, and bring them vs. We taryed there till three of the clocke, but they came not: there one of our company whoſe name was Iohn Cooke, with foure other departed from vs into a groue to ſeeke reliefe, where preſently they were taken by the Indians, and ſtript as naked as euer they were borne, and ſo returned to vs.

Iohn Corniſh ſlaine.

Then we diuided our ſelues into two parts, halfe to Anthony Goddard, and the reſt to Iames Collier, and thus ſeuerally we ſought for Panuco. Anthony Goddard with his company, bid vs farewell, they paſſed a riuer, where the Indians robbed many of them of their clothes, and ſo paſſing on their way, came to a ſtony hill, where they ſtayed. Iames Collier with his company that day paſſed the ſame riuer, and were alſo robbed, and one of them ſlaine by chance: wee came that night vnto the hill, where Anthony Goddard and his company reſted, there we remained til morning, and then we marched altogether from thence, entring betweene two groues, where the Indians robbed vs of all our clothes, and left vs naked, they hurt many, and killed eight of vs. Three dayes after we came to another riuer, there the Indians ſhewed vs the way to Panuco, and ſo left vs: we paſſed the riuer into the wildernes, where we made wreaths of greene graſſe, which we wound about our bodies, to keepe vs from the Sunne, and gnats of that Countrey. We trauelled there ſeuen dayes, and ſeuen nights, before wee came to Panuco, feeding on nothing but roots, and Guiauos, a fruit like figs. At our comming to the riuer of Panuco two Spaniſh horſemen came ouer vnto vs in a Canowe: they aſked vs how long we had bene in the wilderneſſe, and where our generall was, for they knewe vs to be of the company that had fought with their countrimen: we told them ſeuen dayes and ſeuen nights, and for lacke of victuals our Generall ſet vs on ſhore, & he was gone away with his ſhips. They returned to their Gouernour, who ſent them with fiue Canowes to bring vs all ouer. Which done, they ſet vs in aray, where a hundred horſemen with their lances, came forceably vpon vs, but did not hurt vs, they carried vs priſoners to Panuco, where we remained one night. In the riuer of Panuco there is a fiſh like a calfe, the Spanyards call it a Mallatin, hee hath a ſtone in his head, which the Indians vſe for the diſeaſe of the Collicke, in the night he commeth on land, and eateth graſſe. I haue eaten of it, and it eateth not much vnlike to bacon. From thence we were ſent to Mexico, which is 90 leagues from Panuco. In our way thither, 20 leagues from the ſea ſide, I did ſee white Crabs running vp & downe the ſands, I haue eaten of them, and they be very good meat. There groweth a fruit which the Spanyards call Auocottes, it is proportioned like an egge, and as blacke as a cole, hauing a ſtone in it, and it is an excellent good fruit. There alſo groweth a ſtrange tree which they call Magueis, it ſerueth them to many vſes, below by the root they make a hole, wherat they do take out of it twiſe euery day a certaine kind of licour, which they ſeeth in a great kettle, till the third part be conſumed, & that it waxe thick, it is as ſweet as any hony, and they do eat it. Within 20. daies after that they haue taken al the licour from it, it withereth, & they cut it down, & vſe it as we vſe our hempe here in England, which done, they conuert it to many vſes: of ſome part they make mantles, ropes, and threed: of the ends they make needles to ſow their ſaddles, pannels, & other furniture for their horſes: of the reſt they make tyles to couer their houſes, and they put it to many other purpoſes.

The manifold vſe of Magueis.

Mexico.

And thus we came to Mexico, which is ſeuen or eight miles about, ſeated in a great fen, inuironed with 4 hils, it hath but two wayes of entrance, and it is full of creeks, in the which in their Canowes they paſſe from place to place, & to the Iſlands there within. In the Indies ordinarily three times a yeere bee wonderfull earthquakes, which put the people in great feare and danger: during the time of two yeeres that I was in Mexico, I ſaw them ſixe times: when they come they throw downe trees, houſes, and Churches. There is a citie 25. leagues from Mexico, called Tlaxcalla, which is inhabited with a hundred thouſand Indians, they goe in white ſhirts, linnen breeches, and long mantles, and the women weare about them a garment much like vnto a flannell petticote. The kings pallace was the firſt place that wee were brought vnto in Mexico, where without we were willed to ſit downe. Much people, men, women, and children came wondring about vs, many lamented our miſery, & ſome of their clergy aſked vs if we were Chriſtians, we ſaid, we praiſed God, we were as good Chriſtians as they: they aſked how they might know that, we ſaid, by our confeſſions. From thence we were carried in a Canow to a Tanners houſe, which ſtandeth a little from the citie: the next morning two friers and two prieſts came thither to vs, and willed vs to bleſſe our ſelues, and ſay our prayers in the Latin tongue, that they might vnderſtand vs, many of our company did ſo, whereupon they returned to the viceroy, and told him that we were good Chriſtians, and that they liked vs well, and then they brought vs much reliefe, with clothes, our ſicke men were ſent to their Hoſpitals, where many were cured, and many died. From the Tanners houſe we were led to a gentlemans place, where vpon paine of death we were charged to abide, and not to come into the citie, thither we had all things neceſſary brought vs: on Sundayes and holy dayes much people came, and brought vs great reliefe.

The viceroy practiſed to hang vs, and cauſed a paire of new gallowes to be ſet vp, to haue executed vs, wherunto the noblemen of that countrey would not conſent, but prayed him to ſtay vntil the ſhip of aduiſe brought newes from the king of Spaine, what ſhould be done with vs, for they ſaid they could not find any thing by vs, whereby they might lawfully put vs to death.

The viceroy then commanded vs to be ſent to an Iſland there by, and he ſent for the Biſhop of Mexico, who ſent foure prieſts to the Iſland, to examine and confeſſe vs, who ſaid, that the viceroy would burne vs, when wee were examined and confeſſed according to the lawes of the countrey. They returned to the Biſhop, and told him that we were very good Chriſtians. The Biſhop certified the viceroy of our examinations and confeſſions, and ſaid that wee were good Chriſtians, therefore he would not meddle with vs. Then the viceroy ſent for our maſter R. Barret, whom he kept priſoner in his pallace, vntill the fleete was departed for Spayne. The reſt of vs he ſent to a towne ſeuen leagues from Mexico called Teſcuco, to card wooll among the Indian ſlaues, which drudgery we diſdained, and concluded to beat our maſters, and ſo wee did: wherefore they ſent to the viceroy, deſiring him for Gods ſake and our Ladies, to ſend for vs, for they would not keepe vs any longer, they ſaid that we were deuils and no men.

The viceroy ſent for vs, and impriſoned vs in a houſe in Mexico, from thence he ſent Anthony Goddard, & ſome other of our company with him into Spaine, with Luçon, the Generall that tooke vs: the reſt of vs ſtaied in Mexico two yeres after, and then were ſent priſoners into Spaine, with Don Iuan de Velaſco de Varre, admirall and generall of the Spaniſh fleet, who caried with him in his ſhip, to be preſented to the K. of Spaine, the anatomie of a giant, which was ſent from China to Mexico, to the viceroy Don Martin Henriquez, to bee ſent to the king of Spaine for a great wonder. It did appeare by the anatomie, that he was of a monſtrous ſize, the ſkull of his head was neere as bigge as halfe a buſhel, his necke-bones, ſhoulder-plates, arme-bones, and all other lineaments of his other partes, were huge and monſtrous to behold, the ſhanke of his legge from the ankle to the knee was as long as from any mans ankle vp to his waſt, and of bigneſſe accordingly.

At this time, and in this ſhip, were alſo ſent to be preſented to the king of Spaine, two cheſtes full of earth with ginger growing in them, which were alſo ſent from China, to be ſent to the king of Spaine. The ginger runneth in the ground like to liccoras, the blades grow out of it in length and proportion like vnto the blades of wild garlicke, which they cut euery fifteene dayes, they vſe to water them twiſe a day, as we doe our herbes here in England, they put the blades in their pottage, and vſe them in their other meates, whoſe excellent ſauour and taſt is very delightfull, and procureth a good appetite.

When we were ſhipped in the Port of S.Iohn de Vllua, the Generall called our maſter Robert Barret and vs with him into his cabbin, & aſked vs if wee would fight againſt Engliſhmen, if we met them at the ſea, we ſaid that we would not fight againſt our Crowne, but if we met with any other, we would do what we were able. He ſaid if we had ſaid otherwiſe, he would not haue beleeued vs, and for that we ſhould be the better vſed, and haue allowance as other men had: and he gaue a charge to euery one of vs, according vnto our knowledge. Robert Barret was placed with the pilote, I was put in the gunners roome, William Cawſe with the boat-ſwaine, Iohn Beare with the quarter-maſters, Edward Rider, & Geffrey Giles, with the ordinary mariners, Richard the maſters boy attended on him and the pilote: ſhortly after we departed from the port of S. Iohn de Vllua with all the fleete of Spaine, for the port called Hauana: wee were 26. dayes ſayling thither. There wee came in, ankered, tooke in freſh water, and ſtayed 16. dayes for the fleete of Nombre de Dios, which is the fleet that brings the treaſure from Peru.

Hauana.

The Generall of that fleet was called Diego Flores de Valdes. After his comming, when he had watred his ſhips, both the fleetes ioyned in one, and Don Iuan de Velaſco de Varre was the firſt fifteen daies Generall of both the fleets, who turning through the chanell of Bahama, his pilote had like to haue caſt away all the fleet vpon the Cape called Cannaueral, which was preuented by me Iohn Hortop, & our maſter Robert Barret: for I being in the ſecond watch eſcried land, and called to Robert Barret, bidding him looke ouer boord, for I ſaw land vnder the lee-bow of the ſhip: he called to the boat-ſwaine, & bid him let flie the fore ſaile ſheat, and lay the helm vpon the lee, and caſt the ſhip about. When we were caſt about, we were but in ſeuen fathome water: we ſhot off a piece, giuing aduice to the fleet to caſt about, and ſo they did. For this we were beloued of the Generall, and all the fleet. The Generall was in a great rage, and ſwore by the king, that he would hang his pilote: for he ſaid, that twiſe before he had almoſt caſt away the Admirall. When it was day, he commanded a piece to be ſhot off, to call to councill: the other Admirall in his ſhip came vp to him, and aſked what the matter was, he ſaid, that his pilote had caſt away his ſhip and all the fleet, had it not bene for two of the Engliſhmen, and therefore he would hang him. The other Admirall with many faire words perſwaded him to the contrary.

A ſea-monſter in the ſhape of a man.

When we came in the height of Bermuda, we diſcouered a monſter in the ſea, who ſhewed himſelfe three times vnto vs from the middle vpwards, in which parts hee was proportioned like a man, of the complection of a Mulato or tawny Indian. The Generall did commaund one of his clearks to put it in writing, and hee certified the King and his Nobles thereof. Preſently after this, for the ſpace of ſixteene dayes we had wonderful foule weather, and then God ſent vs a faire wind, vntill ſuch time as we diſcouered the Iland called Faial.

On S. Iames day we made rackets, wheeles, and other fire-workes, to make paſtime that night, as it is the order of the Spanyards. When we came neere the land, our maſter R. Barret conferred with vs, to take the pinneſſe one night, when we came on the Iland called Terçera, to free our ſelues from the danger and bondage that we were going into, whereunto we agreed: none had any pinneſſe aſterne then but our ſhip, which gaue great courage to our enterpriſe: we prepared a bagge of bread, and a Botijo of water, which would haue ſerued vs nine dayes, and prouided our ſelues to goe: our Maſter borrowed a ſmall compaſſe of the Maſter gunner of the ſhip, who lent it him, but ſuſpected his intent, and cloſely made the Generall priuy to it, who for a time diſſembled the matter. In the ende ſeeing our pretenſe, he called R. Barret, commanding his head to bee put in the ſtocks, and a great payre of yron bolts on his legs, & the reſt of vs to be ſet in the ſtocks by the legs. Then he willed a peece to be ſhot off, and hee ſent the pinneſſe for the other Admirall, and all the captaines, maſters and pilots of both fleetes to come aboord of him. He commanded the mayne-yard to be ſtrooke downe, and to put 2. pullies, on euery yard-arme one; the hangman was called, and we were willed to confeſſe our ſelues, for he ſwore by the king that he would hang vs.

When the other Admiral, and the reſt were come aboord, he called them into his counſel-chamber, and told them that he would hang the maſter of the Engliſhmen, and all his company. The Admirall, whoſe name was Diego Flores de Valdes, aſked him wherefore: he ſayd, that we had determined to riſe in the night with the pinneſſe, and with a ball of fire-worke to ſet the ſhip on fire, and goe our wayes: therefore, ſayd he, I will haue you the Captaines, Maſters, and Pilotes, to ſet your hands vnto that, for I ſweare by the king that I will hang them. Diego Flores de Valdes anſwered, I nor the Captaines, Maſters, and Pilotes wil not ſet our hands to that, for hee ſaid, if he had bin priſoner as we were, he would haue done the like himſelfe. He counſelled him to keepe vs faſt in priſon, till he came into Spaine, & then ſend vs to the Contratation houſe in Siuil, where, if we had deſerued death the law would paſſe on vs, for hee would not haue it ſaid that in ſuch a fleet as that was, ſixe men and a boy ſhould take the pinneſſe, and goe away, and ſo he returned to his ſhip againe.

When he was gone, the Generall came to the maine maſt to vs, and ſwore by the king, that we ſhould not come out of the ſtocks til we came into Spaine: within 16. dayes after we came ouer the Bar of S. Lucar, and came vp to the Hurcados, then he put vs into a pinneſſe in the ſtocks, and ſent vs priſoners to the Contratation houſe in Siuill. From thence after one yere we brake priſon, on S. Steuens day at night, 7. of our company eſcaped, Robert Barret, I Iob Hortop, Iohn Emerie, Humphrey Roberts, and Iohn Gilbert were taken, and brought backe to the contratation houſe, where we remained in the ſtocks till twelfe tide was paſt. Then our keeper put vp a petition to the Iudge of the contratation houſe, that we might be ſent to the great priſon houſe in Siuill, for that we broke priſon, whereupon we were preſently led thither, where we remained one moneth, and then from thence, to the caſtell of the Inquiſition houſe in Triana, where wee continued one yere: which expired, they brought vs out in proceſſion, euery one of vs hauing a candle in his hand, and the coate with S. Andrewes croſſe on our backs: they brought vs vp on an high ſcaffold, that was ſet vp in the place of S. Francis, which is in the chiefe ſtreet of Siuill: there they ſet vs downe vpon benches, euery one in his degree, and againſt vs on another ſcaffold ſate all the Iudges, and the Clergy on their benches: the people wondered, and gazed on vs, ſome pittying our caſes, other ſaid, burne thoſe heretikes. When we had ſit there two houres, we had a ſermon made to vs: after which one called Breſinia, ſecretarie to the Inquiſition, went vp into the pulpit with the proceſſe, and called Robert Barret and Iohn Gilbert, whom two familiars of the Inquiſition brought from the ſcaffold before the Iudges, where the ſecretarie read the ſentence, which was that they ſhould be burnt, and ſo they returned to the ſcaffold, and were burnt.

Robert Barret and Iohn Gilbert burned.

Iob Hortop his condemnation.

Then I Iob Hortop, and Iohn Bone were called, and brought to the place, as before, where we heard our ſentence, which was, that we ſhould go to the Gallies, and there row at the oares ende ten yeeres, and then to be brought backe to the Inquiſition houſe, to haue the coate with S. Andrewes croſſe put on our backs, and from thence to goe to the euerlaſting priſon remedileſſe, and ſo we were returned from the ſcaffold from whence we came. Thomas Marks, & Thomas Ellis were called, and had ſentence to ſerue in the Galleys eight yeeres, and Humphrey Roberts, and Iohn Emery to ſerue fiue yeeres, & ſo were returned to the benches on the ſcaffold, where we ſate till foure of clocke in the afternoone. Then we were led againe to the Inquiſition houſe, from whence we were brought. The next day in the morning Breſinia the treaſurer came thither to vs, and deliuered to euery one of vs his ſentence in writing. I with the reſt were ſent to the Gallies, where we were chained foure and foure together: euery mans daily allowance was 26. ounces of courſe blacke biſket and water, our clothing for the whole yeere two ſhirts, two paire of breeches of courſe canuas, a red coat of courſe cloth, ſoone on, and ſoone off, and a gowne of haire with a friers hood: our lodging was on the bare boords, and banks of the Gallies, our heads and beards were ſhauen euery month, hunger, thirſt, cold, and ſtripes we lacked none, til our ſeueral times expired. And after the time of 12. yeeres, for I ſerued two yeeres aboue my ſentence, I was ſent backe to the Iuqniſition houſe in Siuill, and there hauing put on the coat with S. Andrewes croſſe, I was ſent to the euerlaſting priſon remedileſſe, where I wore the coat 4. yeres, & then vpon great ſuit, I had it taken off for 50. duckets, which Hernando de Soria treaſurer of the kings mint lent me,
1590 whom I ſerued for it as a drudge 7. yeres, and vntil the moneth of October laſt, 1590. and then I came from Siuill to S. Lucar, where I made meanes to come away in a flie-boat, that was laden with wines and ſalt, which were Flemings goods, the king of Spaines ſubiects, dwelling in Siuil, maried to Spaniſh women, and ſworne to their king. In this moneth of October laſt, departing from S. Lucar, at ſea, off the ſouthernmoſt Cape, we met an Engliſh ſhip, called the Galeon Dudley, who took the Flemming, & me out of him, & brought me to Portſmouth, where they ſet me on 1590 land, the 2. day of December laſt paſt, 1590. From thence I was ſent by M. Muns the lieutenant of Portſmouth, with letters to the R. honorable the Earle of Suſſex, who commanded his ſecretary to take my name and examination, how long I had bene out of England, and with whom I went, which he did. And on Chriſtmas euen I took my leaue of his honor, and came to Redriffe.

The Computation of my impriſonment.

I ſuffered impriſonment in Mexico two yeeres.

In the Contratation houſe in Siuill one yeere.

In the Inquiſition houſe in Triana one yeere.

I was in the Gallies twelue yeeres.

In the euerlaſting priſon remediles, with the coat with S. Andrews croſſe on my back 4. yeres.

And at libertie I ſerued as a drudge Hernando de Soria 3. yeeres, which is the full complement of 23. yeeres.

Since my departure from England, vntill this time of my returne, I was fiue times in great danger of death, beſides the many perils I was in, in the Gallies.

Firſt in the Port of S. Iohn de Vllua, where being on ſhore, with many other of our company, which were all ſlaine ſauing I, and two other that by ſwimming got aboord the Ieſus of Lubek.

Secondly, when we were robbed by the wild Indians.

Thirdly, after we came to Mexico, the viceroy would haue hanged vs.

Fourthly, becauſe he could not haue his mind to hang vs, he would haue burnt vs.

Fiftly, the Generall that brought vs into Spaine, would haue hanged vs at ſea.

Thus hauing truely ſet downe vnto you my trauels, miſery and dangers, endured the ſpace of 23. yeeres, I ende.

A relation of the Hauen of Tecuanapa, a moſt conuenient place for building of ſhips, ſituate vpon the South ſea not farre from Nicaragua, which was ſent vnto the viceroy of Mexico or to the king of Spaine: wherein are deſcribed the riuers of Ometepec, Tlacamama, and Tlacolula falling into the ſaid Hauen, with the townes, people, and mountaines adioyning to the ſaid riuers, and other things fit for the building and victualling of ſhips.

The Port of Tecuanapa.

The Biſhopricks of Guaxacan, & Tlarcali.

The Port and ſmall harbour of Tecuanapa hath in the drieſt time of Sommer in the chanell little leſſe then one fathome at low water, and at full ſea one fathome and an halfe: in the time of raine, with the increaſing of the land-water it hath three fathoms and more. It lyeth toward the Weſt, and there the Biſhopricks of Guaxacan and Tlarcali are ſeparated. From hence toward the point called Punta de Intla and Dordaci there is a Bay 2. leagues diſtant, which though it be no ſpecial harbour, yet vpon an extremity ſhips may come and ride there, as in times paſt they haue done. This Bay on the right hand toward the North maketh a lake ſomewhat large towards the midſt of the chanell, and in ſome parts deepe, but ſpecially on the ſide of Cuahintla, but on either ſide it is but ſhallow. As you paſſe betweene the ſea & certaine great and large woods of orenge trees, and trees of other nature which grow along the ſea coaſt, which are of no great bredth, al the countrey appeareth very open: howbeit on the ſide of Cuahintla the mountaines haue many creeks and a ſmall lake called Tulaningo, and the countrey cannot be trauelled, except you take the way betweene the ſea and the end of this lake, which may be about two leagues of ſandy way. And on the North ſide there is another ſmall creeke. And going by the ſands ſide one quarter of a league, you come to the way that leadeth vnto Quacapotla a manſion of Intla.

Tulaningo a ſmall lake.

Quacapotla.

The riuer of Ometepec.

The riuer of Ometepec being the principal riuer which commeth to this hauen hath his head in the mountaines of Xicayan de Touer about 24. leagues frō this hauen, from diuers brooks which come out of the mountaines of Cacatepec, and beneath a towne called Suchiſtlahuaca litle more then 3. leagues all the brooks ioyne together: and from that place you may paſſe downe to the ſea with Canoas and Lighters; and you might come farther but for the fall of a furious ſtreame or current which rūneth between two great rocks, paſſing from Cocahulapa a manſion of Ometepec vnto Yanguitle a manſion of the ſaid Ometepec. Theſe inconueniences being paſt (which in my iudgement may be about one league) the riuer is more nauigable, ſo that you may ſayle in the ſame about 12. leagues. During the ſpace of which 12. leagues, about a league and a halfe diſtance from the waters ſide, and in many other parts of the ſame riuer it hath great quantitie of woods which vſe to grow in hot ſoiles, fit for ſhip-timber, as Huber trees, & Suchicuhitil, whereof they of Nicaragua make great profit. Alſo there be white okes and Tehegurtes in great quantitie, and many other kinds of timber: and in the mountaines there be firre-trees, okes, and cork-trees, which eaſily may bee caried downe the riuer, becauſe they may be cut ſome 2, 3, 4, and 5. leagues from the riuer, and may be brought downe to the waters ſide with the ſeruice and helpe of thoſe that dwell in the townes thereabout.

Nicaragua.

Xicaian.

At the head of theſe brooks where the riuer beginneth is the towne which is called Xicaian, belonging to the heires of Francis de Touer y de Guillen, containing about 350. Indians of rude ſpeech and of little policie, being 24. leagues from the ſea, little more or leſſe. The place it ſelfe is hot, although the mountaines round about be cold.

Aioanapa.

A litle from this is the towne of Aioanapa poſſeſſed by the heires of Perez Gomez, hauing in it about 300. Indians of the ſelfe ſame ſpeach and qualitie. The countrey is more ſubiect to heate then cold; yet hath it neere it cold countreys and mountaines. It is diſtant from Xicaian de Touer 4. leagues, and from the ſea 20. leagues.

Suchiſtlahuaca.

Sixe leagues downeward toward the South is the towne of Suchiſtlahuaca on the ſaid riuer, and the inhabitants are of the ſame ſpeach and qualities. The countrey is more ſubiect to heate then cold. It is in the charge of Gonzaluo Fernandez a citizen of Mexico, and hath about 150. Indians, and is 15. leagues diſtant from the ſea.

Ometepec.

From this towne vnto the towne of Ometepec are 6. leagues. The place is very hoat, and in the ſame gouernment, and is ſituate betweene certaine hils one league from the riuer: he and his followers haue vnder them about 700. Indians, which ſpeake the Ayacaſtecan, Amuſgan, and Niciecan tongues, and this place is from the ſea nine leagues.

Ihualapa.

From this towne vnto Ihualapa are two great leagues: it is in the gouernment of the heires of Laurence de Caſtro, of the foreſaid temperature, and the people vſe the ſaid language, and are of the like ſtature: and it ſtandeth three leagues from the riuer, and from the ſea ten leagues.

Niciecan.

Theſe are the beſt townes, and of the beſt traffique that are vpon all this coaſt. The Indians are rich in Cacao and victuals, and in theſe townes doe the Indians of Niciecan principally trade. And in the towne of Ihualapa the chiefe Alguazil of the prouince is reſident for the moſt part of the yeere.

Pio a frontier towne againſt the Mexicans.

More lowe beneath the riuer of Tlacolula, about a league or a league and an halfe from the towne of Ometepec is the towne called Pio, which was wont to be a towne of Tlacolula, and was a frontier towne againſt the Mexicans. There be in it about 50. Indians of the ancient inhabitants: one Grauiel de Chiauez a citizen of Mexico hath the gouernement thereof: it is 4. leagues from Ihualapa, and 6. from the ſea.

Huehuatlan.

A little below this is the towne of Huehuatlan in the ſelfe ſame gouernement ſtanding one league from the riuer on certaine high hils: it hath 10. Indians, and is from the ſea 5. leagues.

Cuahucapotla.

And one league from this towne ſtands the towne of Cuahucapotla a manſion of Antla or Intla: it hath to the number of 15. Indians; it ſtandeth one league and a halfe from the riuer, and 4. leagues from the mouth thereof.

Cacatepec.

At the fountaines or heads of the reſt of the brooks is the towne of Cacatepec being in the gouernment of Raphael de Treyo: he and his tenants haue vnder them ſome 700. Indians of Niciecan: it is from the ſea ſome 22. leagues.

The riuer of Tlacamama.

The riuer which is called Tlacamama commeth from the mountains of Atoyaque and Amuſgos, which are ſome 17. leagues from the ſea. There it maketh a formed riuer, ſo big, that it is nauigable to the ſea with canoas and lighters: I ſay from a litle below Toliſtlahuaca a manſion of Xicaian. It is nauigable 8. moneths in the yeere, and the other 4. not, becauſe that the ſands of the plaines do ſoke and drink vp the water in ſuch wiſe, that there remaineth ſo little, that there is no paſſage: howbeit in ſmall lighters timber may bee brought downe this riuer one league from the place where it is cut, vnto the place that I haue ſpoken of; whereas bigger veſſels may bee made; for nigh vnto that place other brooks and running waters doe ioyne and meet, which make it a maine riuer. It hath nigh vnto it in the mountaines of Atoyaque, Cacatepec, and Amuſgos many woods of pine-trees, cork-trees, and okes of great bigneſſe: and beneath thoſe mountaines in the warme countrey, neere vnto the riuers there is much timber of thoſe ſorts which I mentioned before to be about the riuer of Ometepec, which may eaſily be cut and carried downe vnto Tecuanapa in the time before ſpecified.

Atoiaque.

This riuer hath likewiſe townes adioyning to it; the firſt at the foote of the mountaines is the town of Atoiaque belonging to the king, & to the heires of Pronetto: their language is Niciecan, the countrey hot, the people politique, & it is from the ſea 15. leagues. It hath about 200. Indians.

Xicaian.

One league from this towne, and 14. from the ſea is the towne of Xicaian belonging likewiſe to the king, and to the heires of Pronetto. They are Niciecan people and very comely, and in a hot countrey. It hath by account 300. Indians. There are reſident in it the Vicar and Iuſtice; it is from the riuer a league and a halfe.

Pinoteſpan.

A league from this towne, and 14. from the ſea is ſituate the manſion of Pinoteſpan ſubiect to Tututepec, which hath with the manors ſubiect vnto it 500. Indians.

The towne of Tlacamama.

Two leagues from the towne, and one from Xicayan, and 13. from Tecuanapa, and 3. from the riuer is the towne of Tlacamama: the people are very comely and politique. It containeth ſome 100. Indians, and belongeth to the king.

More toward the South 5. leagues from the riuer, and two from this towne, and 14. from the ſea is the towne called Pinoteſpan del Rey. They are handſome people, but of ſlow ſpeach: this towne conteineth about 100. Indians like vnto the former. They be wealthie, becauſe they make great quantitie of ſalte; for they haue a lake in which ſalte groweth vnder the water, (a thing repugnant to nature, that two contraries doe grow and are conſerued together) whereout they take it in breaking it with ſtones vpon the ground vnder the water.

A lake hauing hard ſalt growing vnder the water.

It hath alſo the towne of Amuſgos, which is in the gouernment of Fernando de Auila, which may be from Tecuanapa 18. leagues. They ſpeake the Amuſgan tongue. The countrey is hotter: it ſtandeth on the high way from Nicieca: it hath 400. Indians, few more or leſſe.

Theſe are all the townes of account ſituate neere this riuer.

Neere vpon this riuer are two farmes, the one belonging to Pedro Brauo, and the other to him that maketh this relation vnto your Excellencie, which may be from the ſea ſome 8. or 9. leagues all plaine ground. And in this territorie there is but one towne called Queſala ſituate vpon the riuer, and 6. leagues from the ſea; which in times paſt hath beene a great towne, and nowe hath but three Indians onely, and it is from the farmes 3. leagues.

Queſala.

The manſion houſe of Don Mattheo is more toward the South, ſtanding in a large mountainous and waſte countrey, which aboundeth with cattell, being 3. leagues from the riuer; and as farre from Tecuanapa, as from the place where all the cattell is; and the ſea that way is from it but one league.

A little below this manſion about 4. leagues, and 7. leagues from the ſea, is a garden of Alonſo Pedraza which beareth Cacao.

And 2. leagues from this garden, and 6. leagues from the ſea ſtandeth the towne of Cuahintlan belonging to the king, a towne of 19. houſholds, but very rich, for they gather much Cacao and the beſt in that countrey. They ſpeake the Tlapanecan tongue. This towne hath the ſea that way within halfe a league.

Cuahintlan del Rey.

And this coaſt from Cuahintlan to Tecuanapa, and the coaſt which runneth to Huatulco is a coaſt of much pearle, for in olde time the Indians gathered much pearle there.

And 2. leagues from Cuahintlan and 4. from Tecuanapa is the garden of Cacao in the landes of Franciſco Maldonado, which is called Cacahu-Atoyaque.

Huatulco or Guatulco in 15. deg. and 50. minutes.

Theſe are the things worthy of relation from the head-ſprings of this riuer of Tlacamama vnto the ſea: and this foreſaid riuer entreth into the riuer of Ometepec 5. leagues from Tecuanapa.

The riuer of Tlacolula ſpringeth within the boundes of Chilſiztlahuaca ſubiect to Comaſtlahuaca a towne of Suchiſtlahuaca, neere which are many mountaines. This riuer is nauigable little more then 2. leagues before it entreth into the riuer of Ometepec, where it is 5. leagues from the ſea.

The riuer of Tlacolula.

Hard by it is the towne of Tlacolula abouenamed; and 3. leagues from it is the towne of Azoyoque an olde manour of Tlapa. The towne of Chilſiztlahuaca hath but 3. Indians; and the towne of Azoyoque hath more then 300. Indians. But becauſe in this hauen muſt bee the building of ſhips the prouinces of Tlapa and Tututepec may ſtand them in great ſtead; the prouince of Tututepec being neighbour to the riuer of Tlacamama, and the prouince of Tlapa to the riuer of Tlacolula. For they may, as I haue ſayd, carrie the timber in lighters or rafts downe the riuers, and may vſe the Indians in the townes thereabout to fell, and draw the ſame out of the cold mountaines; for in the warme countreyes the moſt is plaine ground, whereas with very fewe men and oxen it may be brought vnto the place where it ſhould be imbarqued.

Azoyoque.

The prouinces of Tututepec and Tlapa.

There may come flat bottomes, and canoas vnto the townes thereabout, and lade themſelues with victuals: For they haue already come by that riuer to the rode of Ometepec, & made there prouiſion at the manſion of Don Mattheo, and at the farmes, at that time when his Maieſtie did people the plaines which are betweene theſe riuers, conteining a large and voyde countrey ſufficient for the erecting of 20. manours, being a countrey well furniſhed with water and paſture without any danger or perill, according to the deſcription hereunto annexed.

This ſmall harbour of Tecuanapa being ſeene and viewed, ſeemeth very commodious for to build ſhippes in, by reaſon of the great abundance of mountaines full of good timber for that purpoſe, with the commodities of riuers, and with the ſeruice and victuals from the townes thereabout, which be very good for coaſt townes.

Tecuanapa a moſt fit harborough to build ſhips for the South ſea.

The deſire of him that made this relation, hath bene with zeale to ſerue your excellencie; who therewithall deſireth the Lord God to giue the ſucceſſe.

The voyage of Sir Thomas Pert, and Sebaſtian Cabot, about the eight yeere of King Henry the eight, which was the yere 1516. to Braſil, Santo Domingo, and S. Iuan de Puerto rico.

That learned and painefull writer Richard Eden in a certaine Epiſtle of his to the duke of Northumberland, before a worke which he tranſlated out of Munſter in the yeere 1553, called A treatiſe of new India, maketh mention of a voyage of diſcouerie vndertaken out of England by ſir Thomas Pert and Sebaſtian Cabota, about the 8. yere of King Henry the eight of famous memorie, imputing the ouerthrow thereof vnto the cowardiſe and want of ſtomack of the ſaid Sir Thomas Pert, in maner following. If manly courage, ſaith he, (like vnto that which hath bene ſeene & proued in your Grace, as well in forreine realmes, as alſo in this our countrey) had not bene wanting in other in theſe our dayes, at ſuch time as our ſoueraigne lord of famous memorie king Henry the 8. about the ſame yeere of his raigne, furniſhed and ſent out certaine ſhippes vnder the gouernance of Sebaſtian Cabot yet liuing and one ſir Thomas Pert, whoſe faint heart was the cauſe that the voyage tooke none effect; it, I ſay, ſuch manly courage, whereof wee haue ſpoken, had not at that time beene wanting, it might happily haue come to paſſe, that that rich treaſurie called Perularia, (which is nowe in Spaine in the citie of Siuill, and ſo named, for that in it is kept the infinite riches brought thither from the newfound land of Peru) might long ſince haue beene in the tower of London, to the kings great honour and wealth of this realme. Hereunto that alſo is to bee referred which the worſhipfull M. Robert Thorne wrote to the ſayde king Henry the 8. in the yeere 1527. by doctor Leigh his ambaſſadour ſent into Spaine to the Emperour Charles the fift, whoſe wordes bee theſe. Now reſt to be diſcouered the North parts, the which it ſeemeth vnto me, is onely your highnes charge and dutie, becauſe the ſituation of this your realme is thereunto neereſt and apteſt of all other: and alſo, for that already you haue taken it in hand. And in mine opinion it will

will not ſeeme well to leaue ſo great and profitable an enterpriſe, ſeeing it may ſo eaſily and with ſo litle coſt, labour and danger be followed and obteined. Though hitherto your grace haue made thereof a proofe, & found not the commoditie thereby as you truſted, at this time it ſhalbe none impediment: for there may be now prouided remedies for things then lacked, and the inconueniences and lets remooued, that then were cauſe your graces deſire tooke no full effect: which is, the courſes to be changed, and to follow the aforeſayd new courſes. And concerning the mariners, ſhips, and prouiſion, an order may be deuiſed and taken meete and conuenient, much better then hitherto: by reaſon whereof, & by Gods grace, no doubt your purpoſe ſhall take effect. And whereas in the aforeſayd wordes M. Robert Thorne ſayth, that he would haue the old courſes to bee changed, and the newe courſes (to the North) to be followed: It may plainely be gathered, that the former voyage, whereof twiſe or thriſe he maketh mention, wherein it is like that ſir Thomas Pert and Sebaſtian Cabot were ſet forth by the king, was made towarde Braſill and the South parts. Moreouer it ſeemeth that Gonſaluo de Ouiedo, a famous Spaniſh writer, alludeth vnto the ſayde voyage in the beginning of the 13. chapter of the 19. booke of his generall and natural hiſtorie of the Weſt Indies, agreeing very well with the time about which Richard Eden writeth that the foreſaid voyage was begun. The authors wordes are theſe, as I finde them tranſlated into Italian by that excellent and famous man Baptiſta Ramuſius. Nel 1517. Vn Corſaro Ingleſe, ſotto colore di venire á diſcoprire ſe ne venne con vna gran naue alla volta del Braſil nella coſtiera di Terra ferma, & indi attrauerſo á queſta iſola Spagnuola, & giunſe preſſo la bocca del porto di queſta città di S. Domenico, & mandò in terra il ſuo battello pieno di gente, & chieſe licentia di potere qui entrare, dicendo che venia con mercantie a negotiare. Ma in quello inſtante il caſtellano Franceſco di Tapia fece tirare alla naue vn tiro d' artiglieria da queſto caſtello; perche ella ſe ne venina diritta al porto. Quando gli Ingleſi viddero queſto ſi ritirarono fuori, & quelli del battello toſto ſi raccolſero in naue. Et nel vero il Caſtellan fece errore: perche ſe ben foſſe naue entrata nel porto, non ſarebbono le genti potuto ſmontare à terra ſenza volontà & della città & del caſtello. La naue adunque veggendo come vi era riceuuta, tirò la volta dell' iſola di San Giouanni, & entrata nel porto di San Germano parlarono gli Ingleſi con quelli della terra, & dimandarono vettouaglie & fornimenti per la naue, & ſi lamentarono di quelli di queſta città, dicendo che eſſi non veniuano per fare diſpiacere, ma per contrattare, & negotiare con ſuoi danari & mercantie. Hora quini hebbero alcune vettouaglie, & in compenſa eſſi diedero & pagarono in certi ſtagni lauorati & altre coſe. Et poi ſi partirono alla volta d' Europa, doue ſi crede, che non gungeſſero, perche non ſe ne ſeppe piu nuoua mai. This extract importeth thus much in Engliſh, to wit: That in the yeere 1517. an Engliſh Rouer vnder the colour of trauelling to diſcouer, came with a great ſhippe vnto the parts of Braſill on the coaſt of the firme land, and from thence he croſſed ouer vnto this Iland of Hiſpaniola, and arriued neere vnto the mouth of the hauen of this citie of S. Domingo, and ſent his ſhipboate full of men on ſhoare, and demaunded leaue to enter into this hauen, ſaying that hee came with marchandiſe to traffique. But at that very inſtant the gouernour of the caſtle Francis de Tapia cauſed a tire of ordinance to be ſhot from the caſtle at the ſhip, for ſhe bare in directly with the hauen. When the Engliſhmen ſawe this, they withdrew themſelues out, and thoſe that were in the ſhipboate, got themſelues with all ſpeede on ſhipboord. And in trueth the warden of the caſtle committed an ouerſight: for if the ſhippe had entred into the hauen, the men thereof could not haue come on lande without leaue both of the citie and of the caſtle. Therefore the people of the ſhip ſeeing how they were receiued, ſayled toward the Iland of S. Iohn, and entring into the port of S. Germaine, the Engliſh men parled with thoſe of the towne, requiring victuals and things needefull to furniſh their ſhip, and complained of the inhabitants of the city of S. Domingo, ſaying that they came not to doe any harme, but to trade and traffique for their money and merchandiſe. In this place they had certaine victuals, and for recompence they gaue and paid them with certain veſſell of wrought tinne and other things. And afterward they departed toward Europe, where it is thought they arriued not: for wee neuer heard any more newes of them. Thus farre proceedeth Gonſaluo de Ouiedo, who though it pleaſe him to call the captain of this great Engliſh ſhip a rouer, yet it appeareth by the Engliſhmens owne words, that they came to diſcouer, and by their traffique for pewter veſſell and other wares at the towne of S. Germaine in the Iland of S. Iohn de puerto rico, it cannot bee denied but that they were furniſhed with wares for honeſt traffique and exchange. But whoſoeuer is conuerſant in reading the Portugall and Spaniſh writers of the Eaſt and Weſt Indies, ſhall commonly finde that they account all other nations for pirats, rouers and theeues, which viſite any heathen coaſt that they haue once ſayled by or looked on. Howbeit their paſſionate and ambitious reckoning ought not to bee preiudiciall to other mens chargeable and painefull enterpriſes and honourable trauels in diſcouerie.

An Engliſh great ſhippe at Braſill 1517.

San Iuan de puerto Rico.

A brieſe note concerning a voyage of one Thomas Tiſon an Engliſh man, made before the yeere 1526. to the Weſt Indies, & of his abode there in maner of a ſecret factor for ſome Engliſh marchants, which vnder hand had trade thither in thoſe dayes: taken out of an olde ligier-booke of M. Nicolas Thorne the elder, a worſhipfull marchant of Briſtol.

IT appeareth out of a certaine note or letter of remembrance, in the cuſtodie of mee Richard Hakluyt, written 1526. by maſter Nicolas Thorne the elder, a principall marchant of Briſtol, vnto his friend and factour Thomas Midnall, and his ſeruant William Ballard at that time remaining at S. Lucar in Andaluzia: that before the ſayd yeere one Thomas Tiſon an Engliſhman had found the way to the Weſt Indies, and was there reſident: vnto whom the aforeſayd M. Nicolas Thorne ſent armour and other commodities ſpecified in the letter aforeſayd. This Thomas Tiſon (ſo farre as I can coniecture) may ſeeme to haue bene ſome ſecret factour for M. Thorne and other Engliſh marchants in thoſe remote partes; wherereby it is probable that ſome of our marchants had a kinde of trade to the Weſt Indies euen in thoſe ancient times and before alſo: neither doe I ſee any reaſon why the Spaniards ſhould debarre vs from it at this preſent.

The firſt voyage of the right worſhipfull and valiant knight ſir Iohn Hawkins, ſometimes treaſurer of her Maieſties nauie Roial, made to the Weſt Indies 1562.

MAſter Iohn Haukins hauing made diuers voyages to the Iles of the Canaries, and there by his good and vpright dealing being growen in loue and fauour with the people, informed himſelfe amongſt them by diligent inquiſition, of the ſtate of the Weſt India, whereof hee had receiued ſome knowledge by the inſtructions of his father, but increaſed the ſame by the aduertiſments and reports of that people. And being amongſt other particulars aſſured, that Negros were very good marchandiſe in Hiſpaniola, and that ſtore of Negros might eaſily bee had vpon the coaſt of Guinea, reſolued with himſelfe to make triall thereof, and communicated that deuiſe with his worſhipfull friendes of London: namely with Sir Lionell Ducket, ſir Thomas Lodge, M. Gunſon his father in law, ſir William Winter, M. Bromfield, and others. All which perſons liked ſo well of his intention, that they became liberall contributers and aduenturers in the action. For which purpoſe there were three good ſhips immediatly prouided: The one called the Salomon of the burthen of 120. tunne, wherein M. Haukins himſelfe went as Generall: The ſecond the Swallow of 100. tunnes, wherein went for Captaine M. Thomas Hampton: and the third the Ionas a barke of 40. tunnes, wherein the Maſter ſupplied the Captaines roome: in which ſmall fleete M. Hawkins tooke with him not aboue 100. men, for feare of ſickneſſe and other inconueniences, whereunto men in long voyages are commonly ſubiect.

M. Thomas Hampton.

With this companie he put off and departed from the coaſt of England in the moneth of October 1562. and in his courſe touched firſt at Teneriffe, where hee receiued friendly intertainement. From thence he paſſed to Sierra Leona, vpon the coaſt of Guinea, which place by the people of the countrey is called Tagarin, where he ſtayed ſome good time, and got into his poſſeſſion, partly by the ſworde, and partly by other meanes, to the number of 300. Negros at the leaſt, beſides other merchandiſes which that countrey yeeldeth. With this praye hee ſayled ouer the Ocean ſea vnto the Iland of Hiſpaniola, and arriued firſt at the port of Iſabella: and there hee had reaſonable vtterance of his Engliſh commodities, as alſo of ſome part of his Negros, truſting the Spaniards no further, then that by his owne ſtrength he was able ſtill to maſter them. From the port of Iſabella he went to Puerto de Plata, where he made like ſales, ſtanding alwaies vpō his guard: from thence alſo hee ſayled to Monte Chriſti another port on the North ſide of Hiſpaniola, and the laſt place of his touching, where he had peaceable traffique, and made vent of the whole number of his Negros: for which he receiued in thoſe 3. places by way of exchange ſuch quantitie of merchandiſe, that hee did not onely lade his owne 3. ſhippes with hides, ginger, ſugars, and ſome quantitie of pearles, but he fraighted alſo two other hulkes with hides and other like commodities, which hee ſent into Spaine. And thus leauing the Iland, he returned and diſemboqued, paſſing out by the Ilands of the Caycos, without further entring into the bay of Mexico, in this his firſt voyage to the Weſt India. And ſo with proſperous ſucceſſe and much gaine to himſelfe and the aforeſayde aduenturers, he came home, and arriued in the moneth of September 1563.

The Iles of Caycos.

The voyage made by M. Iohn Hawkins Eſquire, and afterward knight, Captaine of the Ieſus of Lubek, one of her Maieſties ſhippes, and Generall of the Salomon, and other two barkes going in his companie, to the coaſt of Guinea, and the Indies of Noua Hiſpania, begun in An. Dom. 1564.

MAſter Iohn Hawkins with the Ieſus of Lubek, a ſhippe of 700. and the Salomon a ſhippe of 140. the Tiger a barke of 50. and the Swallow of 30. tunnes, being all well furniſhed with men to the number of one hundreth threeſcore and tenne, as alſo with ordinance and victuall requiſite for ſuch a voyage, departed out of Plymmouth the 18. day of October, in the yeere of our Lord 1564. with a proſperous winde: at which departing, in cutting the foreſaile, a maruellous miſfortune happened to one of the officers in the ſhippe, who by the pullie of the ſheat was ſlaine out of hand, being a ſorowfull beginning to them all. And after their ſetting out ten leagues to the ſea, he met the ſame day with the Minion a ſhip of the Queenes Maieſtie, whereof was Captaine Dauid Carlet, and alſo her conſort the Iohn Baptiſt of London, being bounde to Guinea alſo, who hailed one the other after the cuſtome of the ſea with certaine pieces of ordinance for ioy of their meeting: which done, the Minion departed from him to ſeeke her other conſort the Merlin of London, which was a ſterne out of ſight, leauing in M. Hawkins companie the Iohn Baptiſt her other conſort.

The Minion, the Iohn Baptiſt, and the Merline bound for Guinea.

Thus ſayling forwards on their way with a proſperous winde vntill the 21. of the ſame moneth, at that time a great ſtorme aroſe, the winde being at Northeaſt about nine a clocke in the night, and continued ſo 23. houres together, in which ſtorme M. Hawkins loſt the companie of the Iohn Baptiſt aforeſayd, and of his pinneſſe called the Swallow, his other 3. ſhippes being ſore beaten with a ſtorme. The 23. day the Swallow to his no ſmall reioycing, came to him againe in the night, 10. leagues to the Northward of Cape Finiſter, he hauing put roomer, not being able to double the Cape, in that there roſe a contrary winde at Southweſt. The 25. the wind continuing contrary, hee put into a place in Galicia, called Ferroll, where hee remained fiue dayes, and appointed all the Maſters of his ſhippes an order for the keeping of good companie in this manner: The ſmall ſhippes to bee alwayes ahead and aweather of the Ieſus, and to ſpeake twiſe a day with the Ieſus at leaſt: if in the day the Enſigne bee ouer the poope of the Ieſus, or in the night two lights, then ſhall all the ſhippes ſpeake with her: If there bee three lights aboord the Ieſus, then doeth ſhe caſt about: If the weather bee extreme, that the ſmall ſhippes cannot keepe companie with the Ieſus, then all to keepe companie with the Salomon, and foorthwith to repaire to the Iland of Teneriffe, to the Northward of the road of Sirroes; If any happen to any miſfortune then to ſhew two lights, and to ſhoote off a piece of ordinance. If any loſe companie, and come in ſight againe, to make three yawes, and ſtrike the Myſon three times: Serue God daily, loue one another, preſerue your victuals, beware of fire, and keepe good companie.

Good orders for a fleete in a long voyage.

The 26. day the Minion came in alſo where hee was, for the reioycing whereof hee gaue them certaine pieces of ordinance, after the courteſie of the ſea for their welcome: but the Minions men had no mirth, becauſe of their conſort the Merline, whome at their departure from Maſter Hawkins vpon the coaſt of England they went to ſeeke, and hauing met with her, kept companie two dayes together, and at laſt by miſfortune of fire (through the negligence of one of their gunners) the powder in the gunners roome was ſet on fire, which with the firſt blaſt ſtrooke out her poope, and therewithall loſt three men, beſides many ſore burned (which eſcaped by the brigandine being at her ſterne) and immediatly, to the great loſſe of the owners, and moſt horrible ſight to the beholders, ſhe ſunke before their eyes.

A dreadfull miſchance by fire.

The 20. day of the moneth M. Hawkins with his conſorts and companie of the Minion, hauing nowe both the brigandines at her ſterne, wayed anker, and ſet ſaile on their voyage, hauing a proſperous winde thereunto.

The fourth of Nouember they had ſight of the Iland of Madera, and the ſixt day of Teneriffe, which they thought to haue beene the Canarie, in that they ſuppoſed themſelues to haue beene to the Eaſtward of Teneriffe, and were not: but the Minion being three or foure leagues ahead of vs, kept on her courſe to Teneriffe, hauing better ſight thereof then the other had, and by that meanes they parted companie. For M. Hawkins and his companie went more to the Weſt, vpon which courſe hauing ſayled a while, hee eſpied another Iland, which hee thought to bee Teneriffe, and being not able by meanes of the fogge vpon the hils, to diſcerne the ſame, nor yet to fetch it by night, went roomer vntill the morning, being the ſeuenth of Nouember, which as yet hee could not diſ-cerne, but ſayled along the coaſt the ſpace of two houres, to perceiue ſome certaine marke of Teneriffe, and found no likelyhood thereof at all, accompting that to bee, as it was in deede, the Ile of Palmes: and ſo ſayling forwards, eſpied another Iland called Gomera, and alſo Teneriffe, with the which hee made, and ſayling all night, came in the morning the next day to the port of Adecia, where he found his pinneſſe which had departed from him the ſixt of the moneth, being in the weather of him, and eſpying the pike of Teneriffe all a high, bare thither. At his arriuall ſomewhat before hee came to anker, hee hoyſed out his ſhippes pinneſſe rowing a ſhoare, intending to haue ſent one with a letter to Peter de ponte, one of the gouernours of the Iland, who dwelt a league from the ſhoare: but as hee pretended to haue landed, ſuddenly there appeared vpon the two points of the roade, men leuelling of baſes and harguebuzes to them, with diuers others to the number of foureſcore, with halberds, pikes, ſwordes and targets which happened ſo contrary to his expectation, that it did greatly amaze him, and the more, becauſe hee was nowe in their danger, not knowing well howe to auoyde it without ſome miſchiefe. Wherefore hee determined to call to them for the better appeaſing of the matter, declaring his name, and profeſſing himſelfe to bee an eſpeciall friend to Peter de ponte, and that he had ſundry things for him which he greatly deſired. And in the meane time, while hee was thus talking with them, whereby hee made them to holde their hands, hee willed the marriners to rowe away, ſo that at laſt he gat out of their danger: and then aſking for Peter de ponte, one of his ſonnes being Sennor Nicolas de Ponte, came forth, whom hee perceiuing, deſired to put his men aſide, and hee himſelfe would leape a ſhoare, and commune with him, which they did: ſo that after communication had betweene them of ſundry things, and of the feare they both had, maſter Hawkins deſired to haue certaine neceſſaries prouided for him. In the meane ſpace, while theſe things were prouiding, hee trimmed the maine maſt of the Ieſus which in the ſtorme aforeſayd was ſprung: here he ſoiourned 7. dayes, refreſhing himſelfe and his men. In the which time Peter de ponte dwelling at S. Cruz, a citie 20. leagues off, came to him, and gaue him as gentle intertainment as if he had bene his owne brother. To ſpeake ſomewhat of theſe Ilands, being called in olde time Inſulæ fortunatæ, by the meanes of the flouriſhing thereof, the fruitfulneſſe of them doeth ſurely exceede farre all other that I haue heard of: for they make wine better then any in Spaine, they haue grapes of ſuch bigneſſe, that they may bee compared to damſons, and in taſte inferiour to none: for ſugar, ſuckets, raiſins of the Sunne, and many other fruits, abundance: for roſine & raw ſilke, there is great ſtore, they want neither corne, pullets, cattell, nor yet wilde foule: they haue many Camels alſo, which being young, are eaten of the people for victuals, and being olde, they are vſed for carryage of neceſſaries: whoſe propertie is as hee is taught to kneele at the taking of his loade, and vnlading againe: his nature is to ingender backward contrary to other beaſtes: of vnderſtanding very good, but of ſhape very deformed, with a little bellie, long miſſhapen legges, and feete very broad of fleſh, without a hoofe, all whole, ſauing the great toe, a backe bearing vp like a molehill, a large and thin necke, with a little head, with a bunch of hard fleſh, which nature hath giuen him in his breaſt to leane vpon. This beaſt liueth hardly, and is contented with ſtrawe and ſtubble, but of force ſtrong, being well able to carrie 500. weight. In one of theſe Ilands called Fierro, there is by the reports of the inhabitants, a certaine tree that raineth continually, by the dropping whereof the inhabitants and cattell are ſatiſfied with water, for other water haue they none in all the Iland. And it raineth in ſuch abundance, that it were incredible vnto a man to beleeue ſuch a vertue to bee in a tree, but it is knowen to be a diuine matter, and a thing ordeined by God, at whoſe power therein wee ought not to maruell, ſeeing he did by his prouidence as we read in the Scriptures, when the children of Iſrael were going into the land of promiſe, feede them with Manna from heauen, for the ſpace of 40. yeeres. Of the trees aforeſaid wee ſaw in Guinie many, being of great height, dropping continually, but not ſo abundantly as the other, becauſe the leaues are narrower, and are like the leaues of a peare tree. About theſe Ilands are certaine flitting Ilands, which haue beene oftentimes ſeene, and when men approched neere them, they vaniſhed: as the like hath bene of theſe Ilands nowe knowen by the report of the inhabitants, which were not found of long time one after the other: and therefore it ſhould ſeeme hee is not yet borne to whom God hath appoynted the finding of them. In this Iland of Teneriffe there is a hill called The Pike, becauſe it is piked which is in heigth by their reports twentie leagues, hauing both winter and ſummer abundance of ſnowe in the top of it: this Pike may bee ſeene in a cleere day fiftie leagues off, but it ſheweth as though it were a blacke cloude a great heigth in the element. I haue heard of none to be compared with this in heigth, but in the Indias I haue ſeene many, and in my iudgement not inferiour to the Pike, and ſo the Spaniards write.

The 15. of Nouember at night wee departed from Teneriffe, and the 20. of the ſame wee had ſight of ten Carauels, that were fiſhing at ſea, with whome we would haue ſpoken, but they fearing vs, fled into a place of Barbarie, called Cape de las Barbas.

Cape de las Barbas.

The twentieth, the ſhips pinneſſe with two men in her, ſayling by the ſhip, was ouerthrowē by the ouerſight of them that went in her, the winde being ſo great, that before they were eſpied, and the ſhip had caſt about for them, ſhe was driuen halfe a league to leeward of the pinneſſe, and had loſt ſight of her, ſo that there was ſmall hope of recouerie, had not Gods helpe and the Captaines deligence bene, who hauing wel marked which way the pinneſſe was by the Sunne, appointed 24 of the luſtieſt rowers in the great boate, to rowe to the wind-wardes, and ſo recouered, contrary to all mens expectations, both the pinneſſe and the men ſitting vpon the keele of her.

The 25 he came to Cape Blanco, which is vpon the coaſt of Africa, and a place where the Portugals do ride, that fiſh there in the moneth of Nouember eſpecially, and is a very good place of fiſhing, for Pargoes, Mullet, and Dogge fiſh. In this place the Portugals haue no holde for their defence, but haue reſcue of the Barbarians, whom they entertaine as their ſouldiers, for the time of their being there and for their fiſhing vpon that coaſt of Africa, doe pay a certaine tribute to the king of the Moores. The people of that part of Africa are tawnie, hauing long haire without any apparell, ſauing before their priuie members. Their weapons in warres are bowes and arrowes.

Cape Blanco.

The 26 we departed from S. Auis Baye, within Cape Blanco, where we refreſhed our ſelues with fiſh, and other neceſſaries: and the 29 wee came to Cape Verde, which lieth in 14 degrees, and a halfe. Theſe people are all blacke, and are called Negros, without any apparell, ſauing before their priuities: of ſtature goodly men, and well liking by reaſon of their food, which paſſeth all other Guyneans for kine, goats, pullin, riſe, fruits, and fiſh. Here wee tooke fiſhes with heades like conies, and teeth nothing varying, of a iolly thickneſſe, but not paſt a foote long, and is not to be eaten without flaying or cutting off his head. To ſpeake ſomewhat of the ſundry ſortes of theſe Guyneans: the people of Cape Verde are called Leophares, and counted the goodlieſt men of all other, ſauing the Congoes, which do inhabite on this ſide the cape de Buena Eſperança. Theſe Leophares haue warres againſt the Ieloffes, which are borderers by them: their weapons are bowes and arrowes, targets, and ſhort daggers, darts alſo, but varying from other Negros: for whereas the other vſe a long dart to fight with in their hands, they cary fiue or ſixe ſmall ones a peece, which they caſt with. Theſe men alſo are more ciuill then any other, becauſe of their dayly trafficke with the Frenchmen, and are of nature very gentle and louing: for while we were there, we tooke in a Frenchman, who was one of the 19 that going to Braſile, in a Barke of Diepe, of 60 tunnes, and being a ſea boord of Cape Verde, 200 leagues, the plankes of their Barke with a ſea brake out vpon them ſo ſuddenly, that much a doe they had to ſaue themſelues in their boats: but by Gods prouidence, the wind being Weſterly, which is rarely ſeene there, they got to the ſhore, to the Iſle Braua, and in great penurie gotte to Cape Verde, where they remained ſixe weekes, and had meate and drinke of the ſame people. The ſaid Frenchman hauing forſaken his fellowes, which were three leagues off from the ſhore, and wandring with the Negros too and fro, fortuned to come to the waters ſide: and communing with certaine of his countreymen, which were in our ſhip, by their perſwaſions came away with vs: but his entertainement amongſt them was ſuch, that he deſired it not: but through the importunate requeſt of his Countreymen, conſented at the laſt. Here we ſtayed but one night, and part of the day: for the 7 of December wee came away, in that pretending to haue taken Negros there perforce, the Mynions men gaue them there to vnderſtand of our comming, and our pretence, wherefore they did auoyde the ſnares we had layd for them.

The trafficke of the French men at Cape Verde.

The 8 of December wee ankered by a ſmall Iſland called Alcatrarſa, wherein at our going a ſhore, we found nothing but ſea-birds, as we call them Ganets, but by the Portugals, called Alcatrarſes, who for that cauſe gaue the ſaid Iſland the ſame name. Herein halfe of our boates were laden with yong and olde fowle, who not being vſed to the ſight of men, flew ſo about vs, that we ſtroke them downe with poles. In this place the two ſhippes riding, the two Barkes, with their boates, went into an Iſland of the Sapies, called La Formio, to ſee if they could take any of them, and there landed to the number of 80 in armour, and eſpying certaine made to them, but they fled in ſuch order into the woods, that it booted them not to follow: ſo going on their way forward till they came to a riuer, which they could not paſſe ouer, they eſpied on the other ſide two men, who with their bowes and arrowes ſhot terribly at them. Whereupon we diſcharged certaine harquebuzes to them againe, but the ignorant people waped it not, becauſe they knewe not the danger thereof: but vſed a marueilous crying in their fight, with leaping and turning their tayles, that it was moſt ſtrange to ſee, and gaue vs great pleaſure to beholde them. At the laſt, one being hurt with a harquebuz vpon the thigh, looked vpon his wound and wiſt not howe it came, becauſe hee could not ſee the pellet. Here Maſter Hawkins perceiuing no good to be done amongſt them, becauſe we could not finde their townes, and alſo not knowing how to goe into Rio grande, for want of a Pilote, which was the very occaſion of our comming thither: and finding ſo many ſholes, feared with our great ſhips to goe in, and therefore departed on our pretended way to the Idols.

The Canoas of Africa

The 10 of December, we had a Northeaſt winde, with raine and ſtorme, which weather continuing two dayes together, was the occaſion that the Salomon, and Tygre loſte our companie: for whereas the Ieſus, and pinneſſe ankered at one of the Iſlands called Sambula, the twelfth day, the Salomon and Tygre came not thither till the 14. In this Iſland we ſtayed certaine daies, going euery day on ſhore to take the Inhabitants, with burning and ſpoiling their townes, who before were Sapies, and were conquered by the Samboſes, Inhabitants beyond Sierra Leona. Theſe Samboſes had inhabited there three yeres before our comming thither, and in ſo ſhort ſpace haue ſo planted the ground, that they had great plentie of Mil, Riſe, Rootes, Pompions, Pullin, goates, of ſmall frye dried, euery houſe full of the Countrey fruite planted by Gods prouidence, as Palmito trees, fruites like dates, and ſundry other in no place in all that Countery ſo aboundantly, whereby they liued more deliciouſly then other. Theſe inhabitants haue diuerſe of the Sapies, which they tooke in the warres as their ſlaues, whome onely they kept to till the ground, in that they neither haue the knowledge thereof, nor yet will worke themſelues, of whome wee tooke many in that place, but of the Samboſes none at all, for they fled into the maine. All the Samboſes haue white teeth as we haue, farre vnlike to the Sapies which doe inhabite about Rio grande, for their teeth are all filed, which they doe for a brauerie, to ſet out themſelues, and doe iagge their fleſh, both legges, armes, and bodies, as workemanlike, as a Ierkinmaker with vs pinketh a ierkin. Theſe Sapies be more ciuill then the Samboſes: for whereas the Samboſes liue moſt by the ſpoile of their enemies, both in taking their victuals, and eating them alſo, The Sapies doe not eate mans fleſh, vnleſſe in the warre they be driuen by neceſſitie thereunto, which they haue not vſed, but by the example of the Samboſes, but liue onely with fruites, and cattell, whereof they haue great ſtore. This plentie is the occaſion that the Sapies deſire not warre, except they be thereunto prouoked by the inuaſions of the Samboſes, whereas the Samboſes for want of foode are inforced thereunto, and therefore are not woont onely to take them that they kill, but alſo keepe thoſe that they take, vntill ſuch time as they want meate, and then they kill them. There is alſo another occaſion that prouoketh the Samboſes to warre againſt the Sapies, which is for couetouſnes of their riches. For whereas the Sapies haue an order to burie their did in certaine places appointed for that purpoſe, with their golde about them, the Samboſes digge vp the ground, to haue the ſame treaſure: for the Samboſes haue not the like ſtore of golde, that the Sapies haue. In this Iſland of Sambula we found about 50 boates called Almadyes, or Canoas, which are made of one peece of wood digged out like a trough, but of a good proportion, being about 8 yards long, and one in breadth, hauing a beak-head and a ſterne very proportionably made, and on the out ſide artificially carued, and painted red and blewe: they are able to cary twenty or thirty men, but they are about the coaſt able to cary threeſcore and vpward. In theſe canoas they rowe ſtanding vpright, with an oare ſomewhat longer then a man, the ende whereof is made about the breadth and length of a mans hand, of the largeſt ſort. They row very ſwift, and in ſome of them foure rowers and one to ſteere make as much way, as a paire of oares in the Thames of London.

The forme of their townes.

The Conſultation houſe or towne-houſe.

Their Townes are pretily diuided with a maine ſtreete at the entring in, that goeth thorough their Towne, and another ouerthwart ſtreet, which maketh their townes croſſe wayes: their houſes are built in in a ranke very orderly in the face of the ſtreet, and they are made round, like a doue-cote, with ſtakes ſet full of Palmito leaues, in ſtead of a wall: they are not much more then a fathome large, and two of heigth, & thatched with Palmito leaues very cloſe, other ſome with reede, and ouer the roofe thereof, for the better garniſhing of the ſame, there is a round bundle of reede, pretily contriued like a louer: in the inner part they make a loft of ſtickes, whereupon they lay all their prouiſion of victuals: a place they reſerue at their enterance for the kitchin, and the place they lie in is deuided with certaine mattes artificially made with the rine of Palmito trees: their bedſteades are of ſmall ſtaues layd along, and rayſed a foote from the ground, vpon which is layde a matte, and another vpon them when they liſt: for other couering they haue none. In the middle of the towne there is a houſe larger and higher then the other, but in forme alike, adioyning vnto the which there is a place made of foure good ſtancions of woode, and a round roofe ouer it, the grounde alſo raiſed round with claye a foote high, vpon the which floore were ſtrawed many fine mats: this is the Conſultation-houſe, the like whereof is in all Townes, as the Portugals affirme: in which place, when they ſitte in Counſell the King or Captaine ſitteth in the midſt, and in the Elders vpon the floore by him: (for they giue reuerence to their Elders) and the common ſorte ſitte round about them. There they ſitte to examine matters of theft, which if a man be taken with, to ſteale but a Portugal cloth from another, hee is ſold to the Portugals for a ſlaue. They conſult alſo, and take order what time they ſhall goe to warres: and as it is certainely reported by the Portugals, they take order in gathering of the fruites in the ſeaſon of the yeere, and alſo of Palmito wine, which is gathered by a hole cut in the top of a tree, and a gourde ſet for the receiuing thereof, which falleth in by droppes, and yeeldeth freſh wine againe within a moneth, and this deuided part and portion-like to euery man, by the iudgement of the Captaine and Elders, euery man holdeth himſelfe contented: and this ſurely I iudge to be a very good order: for otherwiſe, whereas ſcarſitie of Palmito is, euery man would haue the ſame, which might breed great ſtrife: but of ſuch things, as euery man doeth plant for himſelfe, the ſower thereof reapeth it to his owne vſe, ſo that nothing is common, but that which is vnſet by mans hands. In their houſes there is more common paſſage of Lizardes like Euats, and other greater, of blacke and blew colour, of neere a foote long, beſides their tailes, then there is with vs of Miſe in great houſes. The Sapies and Samboſes alſo vſe in their warres bowes, and arrowes made of reedes, with heads of yron poyſoned with the iuyce of a Cucumber, whereof I had many in my handes. In their battels they haue target-men, with broad wicker targets, and darts with heades at both endes, of yron, the one in forme of a two edged ſworde, a foote and an halfe long, and at the other ende, the yron long of the ſame length made to counterpeaſe it, that in caſting it might flie leuel, rather then for any other purpoſe as I can iudge. And when they eſpie the enemie, the Captaine to cheere his men, cryeth Hungry, and they anſwere Heygre, and with that euery man placeth himſelfe in order, for about euery target man three bowemen will couer themſelues, and ſhoote as they ſee aduantage: and when they giue the onſet, they make ſuch terrible cryes, that they may bee heard two miles off. For their beliefe, I can heare of none that they haue, but in ſuch as they themſelues imagine to ſee in their dreames, and ſo worſhippe the pictures, whereof wee ſawe ſome like vnto deuils. In this Iſland aforeſayde wee ſoiourned vnto the one and twentieth of December, where hauing taken certaine Negros, and aſmuch of their fruites, riſe, and mill, as we could well cary away, (whereof there was ſuch ſtore, that wee might haue laden one of our Barkes therewith) wee departed, and at our departure diuers of our men being deſirous to goe on ſhore, to fetch Pompions, which hauing prooued, they found to bee very good, certaine of the Tygres men went alſo, amongſt the which there was a Carpenter, a yong man, who with his fellowes hauing fet many, and caryed them downe to their boates, as they were ready to depart, deſired his fellow to tary while he might goe vp to fetch a few which he had layed by for him ſelfe, who being more licorous then circumſpect, went vp without weapon, and as he went vp alone, poſſibly being marked of the Negros that were vpon the trees, eſpying him what hee did, perceauing him to be alone, and without weapon, dogged him, and finding him occupyed in binding his Pompions together, came behinde him, ouerthrowing him and ſtraight cutte his throate, as hee afterwardes was found by his fellowes, who came to the place for him, and there found him naked.

The two and twentieth the Captaine went into the Riuer, called Callowſa, with the two Barkes, and the Iohns Pinneſſe, and the Salomons boate, leauing at anker in the Riuers mouth the two ſhippes, the Riuer being twenty leagues in, where the Portugals roade: hee came thither the fiue and twentieth, and diſpatched his buſineſſe, and ſo returned with two Carauels, loaden with Negros.

The 27. the Captaine was aduertiſed by the Portugals of a towne of the Negros called Bymba, being in the way as they returned, where was not onely great quantitie of golde, but alſo that there were not aboue fortie men, and an hundred women and children in the Towne, ſo that if hee would giue the aduenture vpon the ſame, hee might gette an hundreth ſlaues: with the which tydings hee being gladde, becauſe the Portugals ſhoulde not thinke him to bee of ſo baſe a courage, but that hee durſt giue them that, and greater attempts: and being thereunto alſo the more prouoked with the proſperous ſucceſſe hee had in other Iſlands adiacent, where he had put them all to flight, and taken in one boate twentie together, determined to ſtay before the Towne three or foure houres, to ſee what hee could doe: and thereupon prepared his men in armour and weapon together, to the number of fortie men well appointed, hauing to their guides certaine Portugals, in a boat, who brought ſome of them to their death: wee landing boat after boat, and diuers of our men ſcattering themſelues, contrary to the Captaines will, by one or two in a company, for the hope that they had to finde golde in their houſes, ranſacking the ſame, in the meane time the Negros came vpon them, and hurte many being thus ſcattered, whereas if fiue or ſixe had bene together, they had bene able, as their companions did, to giue the ouerthrow to 40 of them, and being driuen downe to take their boates, were followed ſo hardly by a route of Negros, who by that tooke courage to purſue them to their boates, that not onely ſome of them, but others ſtanding on ſhore, not looking for any ſuch matter by meanes that the Negros did flee at the firſt, and our companie remained in the towne, were ſuddenly ſo ſet vpon that ſome with great hurt recouered their boates; otherſome not able to recouer the ſame, tooke the water, and periſhed by meanes of the oaze. While this was doing, the Captaine who with a doſen men, went through the towne, returned, finding 200 Negros at the waters ſide, ſhooting at them in the boates, and cutting them in pieces which were drowned in the water, at whoſe comming, they ranne all away: ſo he entred his boates, and before he could put off from the ſhore, they returned againe, and ſhot very fiercely and hurt diuers of them. Thus wee returned backe ſome what diſcomforted, although the Captaine in a ſingular wiſe maner caried himſelfe, with countenance very cheerefull outwardly, as though hee did litle weigh the death of his men, nor yet the great hurt of the reſt, although his heart inwardly was broken in pieces for it; done to this ende, that the Portugals being with him, ſhould not preſume to reſiſt againſt him, nor take occaſion to put him to further diſpleaſure or hinderance for the death of our men: hauing gotten by our going ten Negros, and loſt ſeuen of our beſt men, whereof M. Field Captaine of the Salomon, was one, and we had 27 of our men hurt. In the ſame houre while this was doing, there happened at the ſame inſtant, a maruellous miracle to them in the ſhippes, who road ten leagues to ſea-ward, by many ſharkes or Tiburons, who came about the ſhips: among which, one was taken by the Ieſus, and foure by the Salomon, and one very ſore hurt eſcaped: and ſo it fell out of our men, whereof one of the Ieſus men, and foure of the Salomons were killed, and the fift hauing twentie wounds, was reſcued, and ſcaped with much adoe.

The 28 they came to their ſhips, the Ieſus, and the Salomon, and the 30 departed from thence to Taggarin.

Taggarin. The riuer of Caſſerroes.

The firſt of Ianuary the two barkes, and both the boates forſooke the ſhips, and went into a riuer called the Caſſerroes, and the 6 hauing diſpatched their buſineſſe, the two barkes returned, and came to Taggarin, where the two ſhips were at anker. Not two dayes after the comming of the two ſhips thither, they put their water caſke a ſhore, and filled it with water, to ſeaſon the ſame, thinking to haue filled it with freſh water afterward: and while their men were ſome on ſhore, and ſome at their boates, the Negros ſet vpon them in the boates, and hurt diuers of them, and came to the caſkes, and cut of the hoopes of twelue butts, which loſt vs 4 or 5 dayes time, beſides great want we had of the ſame: ſoiourning at Taggarin, the Swallow went vp the riuer about her trafficke, where they ſaw great townes of the Negros, and Canoas, that had threeſcore men in a piece: there they vnderſtood by the Portugals, of a great battell betweene them of Sierra Leona ſide, and them of Taggarin: they of Sierra Leona, had prepared three hundred Canoas to inuade the other. The time was appointed not paſt ſixe dayes after our departure from thence, which we would haue ſeene, to the intent we might haue taken ſome of them, had it not bene for the death and ſickeneſſe of our men, which came by the contagiouſnes of the place, which made vs to make haſt away.

A new aſſault by the Negros. Great townes Very great Canoas.

The contagion of the countrey of Sierra Leona.

The 18 of Ianuarie at night, wee departed from Taggarin, being bound for the Weſt Indies, before which departure certaine of the Salomons men went on ſhore to fill water in the night, and as they came on ſhore with their boat being ready to leape on land, one of them eſpied an Negro in a white coate, ſtanding vpon a rocke, being ready to haue receiued thē when they came on ſhore, hauing in ſight of his fellowes alſo eight or nine, ſome in one place leaping out, and ſome in another, but they hid themſelues ſtreight againe: whereupon our men doubting they had bene a great companie, and ſought to haue taken them at more aduantage, as God would, departed to their ſhips, not thinking there had bene ſuch a miſchiefe pretended toward them, as then was in deede. Which the next day we vnderſtood of a Portugal that came downe to vs, who had trafficked with the Negros, by whom hee vnderſtood, that the king of Sierra Leona had made all the power hee could, to take ſome of vs, partly for the deſire he had to ſee what kinde of people we were, that had ſpoiled his people at the Idols, whereof he had newes before our comming, and as I iudge alſo, vpon other occaſions prouoked by the Tangomangos, but ſure we were that the armie was come downe, by meanes that in the euening wee ſaw ſuch a monſtrous fire, made by the watring place, that before was not ſeene, which fire is the onely marke for the Tangomangos to know where their armie is alwayes. If theſe men had come downe in the euening, they had done vs great diſpleaſure, for that wee were on ſhore filling water: but God, who worketh all things for the beſt, would not haue it ſo, and by him we eſcaped without danger, his name be prayſed for it.

Tangomangos.

The 29 of this ſame moneth we departed with all our ſhippes from Sierra Leona, towardes the Weſt Indies, and for the ſpace of eighteene dayes, we were becalmed, hauing nowe and then contrary windes, and ſome Ternados amongſt the ſame calme, which happened to vs very ill, beeing but reaſonably watered, for ſo great a companie of Negros, and our ſelues, which pinched vs all, and that which was worſt, put vs in ſuch feare that many neuer thought to haue reached to the Indies, without great death of Negros, and of themſelues: but the Almightie God, who neuer ſuffereth his elect to periſh, ſent vs the ſixteenth of Februarie, the ordinary Briſe, which is the Northweſt winde, which neuer left vs, till wee came to an Iſland of the Canybals, called Dominica, where wee arriued the ninth of March, vpon a Saturday: and becauſe it was the moſt deſolate place in all the Iſland, we could ſee no Canybals, but ſome of their houſes where they dwelled, and as it ſhould ſeeme forſooke the place for want of freſh water, for wee could finde none there but raine water, and ſuch as fell from the hilles, and remained as a puddle in the dale, whereof wee filled for our Negros. The Canybals of that Iſland, and alſo others adiacent are the moſt deſperate warriers that are in the Indies, by the Spaniardes report, who are neuer able to conquer them, and they are moleſted by them not a little, when they are driuen to water there in any of thoſe Iſlands: of very late, not two moneths paſt, in the ſaid Iſland. a Carauel being driuen to water, was in the night ſette vpon by the inhabitants, who cutte their cable in the halſer, whereby they were driuen a ſhore, and ſo taken by them, and eaten. The greene Dragon of Newhauen, whereof was Captaine one Bontemps, in Marche alſo, came to one of thoſe Iſlands, called Granada, and being driuen to water, could not doe the ſame for the Canybals, who fought with him very deſperatly two dayes. For our part alſo, if we had not lighted vpon the deſerteſt place in all that Iſland, wee could not haue miſſed, but ſhould haue bene greatly troubled by them, by all the Spaniards reports, who make them deuils in reſpect of me.

Dominica Iſland.

Canybals exceeding cruell, and to be auoyded.

The tenth day at night, we departed from thence, and the fifteenth had ſight of nine Iſlands, called the Teſtigos: and the ſixteenth of an Iſland, called Margarita, where wee were entertayned by the Alcalde, and had both Beeues and ſheepe giuen vs, for the refreſhing of our men: but the Gouernour of the Iſland, would neither come to ſpeake with our Captaine, neither yet giue him any licence to trafficke: and to diſpleaſe vs the more, whereas wee had hired a Pilote to haue gone with vs, they would not onely not ſuffer him to goe with vs, but alſo ſent word by a Carauel out of hand, to Santo Domingo, to the Vice-roy, who doeth repreſent the kings perſon, of our arriuall in thoſe partes, which had like to haue turned vs to great diſpleaſure, by the meanes that the ſame Vice-roy did ſend word to Cape de la Vela, and to other places along the coaſt, commanding them that by the vertue of his authoritie, and by the obedience that they owe to their Prince, no man ſhould trafficke with vs, but ſhould reſiſt vs with all the force they could. In this Iſland, notwithſtanding that wee were not within foure leagues of the Towne, yet were they ſo afraid, that not onely the Gouernour himſelfe, but alſo all the inhabitants forſooke their Towne, aſſembling all the Indians to them and fled into the mountaines, as wee were partly certified, and alſo ſawe the experience our ſelues, by ſome of the Indians comming to ſee vs who by three Spaniards a horſebacke paſſing hard by vs, went vnto the Indians, hauing euery one of them their bowes, and arrowes, procuring them away, who before were conuerſant with vs.

The Teſtigos Iſland.

Margarita Iſland.

Here perceiuing no trafficke to be had with them, nor yet water for the refreſhing of our men, we were driuē to depart the twentieth day, and the 2 and twentieth we came to a place in the maine called Cumana, whither the Captaine going in his Pinniſſe, ſpake with certaine Spaniards, of whom he demanded trafficke, but they made him anſwere, they were but ſouldiers newely come thither, and were not able to by on Negro: whereupon hee asked for a watring place, and they pointed him a place two leagues off, called Santa Fè, where we found marueilous goodly watering and commodious for the taking in thereof: for that the freſh water came into the Sea, and ſo our ſhippes had aboord the ſhore twentie fathome water. Neere about this place, inhabited certaine Indians, who the next day after we came thither, came down to vs, preſenting mill and cakes of breade, which they had made of a kinde of corne called Maiz, in bigneſſe of a peaſe, the eare whereof is much like to a teaſell, but a ſpanne in length, hauing thereon a number of granes. Alſo they brought down to vs Hennes, Potatoes and Pines, which we bought for beades, pewter whiſtles, glaſſes, kniues, and other trifles.

Theſe Potatoes be the moſt delicate rootes that may be eaten, and doe farre exceed our paſſeneps or carets. Their pines be of the bignes of two fiſts, the outſide whereof is of the making of a pine-apple, but it is ſoft like the rinde of a Cucomber, and the inſide eateth like an apple, but it is more delicious then any ſweet apple ſugred. Theſe Indians being of colour tawnie like an Oliue, hauing euery one of them both men and women, haire all blacke, and no other colour, the women wearing the ſame hanging downe to their ſhoulders, and the men rounded, and without beards, neither men nor women ſuffering any haire to growe in any part of their body, but dayly pull it off as it groweth. They goe all naked, the men couering no part of their body but their yard, vpon the which they weare a gourd or piece of cane, made faſt with a thrid about their loynes, leauing the other parts of their members vncouered, whereof they take no ſhame. The women alſo are vncouered, ſauing with a cloth which they weare a hand-breath, wherewith they couer their priuities both before and behind. Theſe people be very ſmall feeders, for trauelling they cary but two ſmall bottels of gourdes, wherein they put in one the iuice of Sorrell whereof they haue great ſtore, and in the other flowre of their Maiz, which being moiſt, they eate, taking ſometime of the other. Theſe men cary euery man his bowe and arrowes, whereof ſome arrowes are poiſoned for warres, which they keepe in a Cane together, which Cane is of the bigneſſe of a mans arme, other ſome with broad heades of iron wherewith they ſtricke fiſh in the water: the experience whereof we ſaw not once nor twiſe, but dayly for the time we taried there, for they are ſo good archers that the Spaniards for feare thereof arme themſelues and their horſes with quilted canuas of two ynches thicke, and leaue no place of their body open to their enemies, ſauing their eyes which they may not hide, and yet oftentimes are they hit in that ſo ſmall a ſcantling: their poyſon is of ſuch a force, that a man being ſtricken therewith dyeth within foure and twentie howers, as the Spaniards do affirme, & in my iudgement it is like there can be no ſtronger poyſon as they make it, vſing thereunto apples which are very faire and red of colour, but are a ſtrong poyſon, with the which together with venemous Bats, Vipers, Adders and other ſerpents, they make a medley, and therewith anoint the ſame.

The maners of the yong women.

The Indian women delight not when they are yong in bearing of children, becauſe it maketh them haue hanging breaſtes which they account to bee great deforming in them, and vpon that occaſion while they bee yong, they deſtroy their ſeede, ſaying, that it is fitteſt for olde women. Moreouer, when they are deliuered of childe, they goe ſtraight to waſhe themſelues, without making any further ceremonie for it, not lying in bed as our women doe. The beds which they haue are made of Goſſopine cotton, and wrought artificially of diuers colours, which they cary about with them when they trauell, and making the ſame faſt to two trees, lie therein they and their women. The people be ſurely gentle and tractable, and ſuch as deſire to liue peaceably, or els had it bene vnpoſſible for the Spaniards to haue conquered them as they did, and the more to liue now peaceably, they being ſo many in number, and the Spaniards ſo few.

The Iſle of Tortuga.

The crueltie of the Caribes.

From hence we departed the eight and twentie, and the next day we paſſed betwene the maine land, and the Iſland called Tortuga, a very lowe Iſland, in the yeere of our Lorde God one thouſande fiue hundred ſixtie fiue aforeſaide, and ſayled along the coaſt vntill the firſt of April, at which time the Captaine ſayled along in the Ieſus pinneſſe to diſcerne the coaſt, and ſaw many Caribes on ſhore, and ſome alſo in their Canoas, which made tokens vnto him of friendſhip, and ſhewed him golde, meaning thereby that they would trafficke for wares. Whereupon he ſtayed to ſee the maners of them, and ſo for two or three trifles they gaue ſuch things as they had about them, and departed: but the Caribes were very importunate to haue them come on ſhore, which if it had not bene for want of wares to trafficke with them, he would not haue denyed them, becauſe the Indians which we ſaw before were very gentle people, and ſuch as do no man hurt. But as God would haue it, hee wanted that thing, which if hee had had, would haue bene his confuſion: for theſe were no ſuch kinde of people as wee tooke them to bee, but more deuiliſh a thouſand partes and are eaters and deuourers of any man they can catch, as it was afterwards declared vnto vs at Burboroata, by a Carauel comming out of Spaine with certaine ſouldiers, and a Captaine generall ſent by the king for thoſe Eaſtward parts of the Indians, who ſayling along in his pinneſſe, as our Captaine did to deſcry the coaſt, was by the Caribes called a ſhoore with ſundry tokens made to him of friendſhippe, and golde ſhewed as though they deſired trafficke, with the which the Spaniard being mooued, ſuſpecting no deceite at all, went aſhore amongſt them: who was no ſooner a ſhore, but with foure or fiue more was taken, the reſt of his company being inuaded by them, ſaued themſelues by flight, but they that were taken, paied their ranſome with their liues, and were preſently eaten. And this is their practiſe to toll with their golde the ignorant to their ſnares: they are bloodſuckers both of Spaniards, Indians and all that light in their laps, not ſparing their own countreymen if they can conueniently come by them. Their policie in fight with the Spaniards is maruellous: for they chuſe for their refuge the mountaines and woodes where the Spaniards with their horſes cannot follow them, and if they fortune to be met in the plaine where one horſeman may ouer-runne 100. of them, they haue a deuiſe of late practiſed by them to pitch ſtakes of wood in the ground, and alſo ſmall iron pikes to miſchiefe their horſes, wherein they ſhew themſelues politique warriers. They haue more abundance of golde then all the Spaniards haue, and liue vpon the mountaines where the Mines are in ſuch number, that the Spaniards haue much adoe to get any of them from them, and yet ſometimes by aſſembling a great number of them, which happeneth once in two yeeres, they get a piece from them, which afterwards they keepe ſure ynough.

Burboroata.

Thus hauing eſcaped the danger of them, wee kept our courſe along the coaſt, and came the third of April to a Towne called Burboroata, where his ſhips came to an ancker, and hee himſelfe went a ſhore to ſpeake with the Spaniards, to whom hee declared himſelfe to be an Engliſhman, and came thither to trade with them by the way of marchandize, and therefore required licence for the ſame. Unto whom they made anſwere, that they were forbidden by the king to trafique with any forren nation, vpon penaltie to forfeit their goods, therfore they deſired him not to moleſt them any further, but to depart as he came, for other comfort he might not looke for at their handes, becauſe they were ſubiects and might not goe beyond the law. But hee replied that his neceſſitie was ſuch, as he might not ſo do: for being in one of the Queenes Armadas of England, and hauing many ſouldiours in them, hee had neede both of ſome refreſhing for them, and of victuals, and of money alſo, without the which hee coulde not depart, and with much other talke perſwaded them not to feare any diſhoneſt part of his behalfe towards them, for neither would hee commit any ſuch thing to the diſhonour of his prince, nor yet for his honeſt reputation and eſtimation, vnleſſe hee were too rigorouſly dealt withall, which hee hoped not to finde at their handes, in that it ſhould as well redound to their profite, as his owne, and alſo hee thought they might doe it without danger, becauſe their princes were in amitie one with another, and for our parts wee had free trafique in Spaine and Flanders, which are in his dominions, and therefore he knew no reaſon why he ſhould not haue the like in all his dominions. To the which the Spaniards made anſwere, that it lay not in them to giue any licence, for that they had a gouernour to whom the gouernment of thoſe parts was committed, but if they would ſtay tenne dayes, they would ſend to their gouernour who was threeſcore leagues off, and would returne anſwere within the ſpace appointed, of his minde.

In the meane time they were contented hee ſhould bring his ſhips into harbour, and there they would deliuer him any victuals he would require. Whereupon the fourth day we went in, where being one day and receiuing all things according to promiſe, the Captaine aduiſed himſelfe, that to remaine there tenne dayes idle, ſpending victuals and mens wages, and perhaps in the ende receiue no good anſwere from the gouernour, it were meere follie, and therefore determined to make requeſt to haue licence for the ſale of certaine leane and ſicke Negros which hee had in his ſhippe like to die vpon his hands if he kept them ten dayes, hauing little or no refreſhing for them, whereas other men hauing them, they would bee recouered well ynough. And this requeſt hee was forced to make, becauſe he had not otherwiſe wherewith to pay for victuals & for neceſſaries which he ſhould take: which requeſt being put in writing and preſented, the officers and towne-dwellers aſſembled together, and finding his requeſt ſo reaſonable, granted him licence for thirtie Negros, which afterwards they cauſed the officers to view, to the intent they ſhould graunt to nothing but that were very reaſonable, for feare of anſwering thereunto afterwards. This being paſt, our Captaine according to their licence, thought to haue made ſale, but the day paſt and none came to buy, who before made ſhewe that they had great neede of them, and therefore wiſt not what to ſurmiſe of them, whether they went about to prolong the time of the Gouernour his anſwere becauſe they would keepe themſelues blameleſſe, or for any other pollicie hee knew not, and for that purpoſe ſent them worde, marueiling what the matter was that none came to buy them. They anſwered, becauſe they had granted licence onely to the poore to buy thoſe Negros of ſmall price, and their money was not ſo ready as other mens of more wealth. More then that, as ſoone as euer they ſawe the ſhippes, they conueyed away their money by their wiues that went into the mountaines for feare, & were not yet returned, & yet aſked two dayes to ſeeke their wiues and fetch their money. Notwithſtanding, the next day diuers of them came to cheapen, but could not agree of price, becauſe they thought the price too high. Whereupon the Captaine perceiuing they went about to bring downe the price, and meant to buy, and would not confeſſe if hee had licence, that he might ſell at any reaſonable rate, as they were worth in other places, did ſend for the principals of the Towne, and made a ſhewe hee would depart, declaring himſelfe to be very ſory that he had ſo much troubled them, and alſo that he had ſent for the gouernour to come downe, ſeeing nowe his pretence was to depart, whereat they marueiled much, and aſked him what cauſe mooued him thereunto, ſeeing by their working he was in poſſibilitie to haue his licence.

To the which he replied, that it was not onely a licence that he ſought, but profit, which he perceiued was not there to bee had, and therefore would ſeeke further, and withall ſhewed him his writings what he payed for his Negros, declaring alſo the great charge he was at in his ſhipping, and mens wages, and therefore to counteruaile his charges, hee muſt ſell his Negros for a greater price then they offered. So they doubting his departure, put him in comfort to ſell better there then in any other place. And if it fell out that he had no licence, that he ſhould not looſe his labour in tarying, for they would buy without licence. Whereupon, the Captaine being put in comfort, promiſed them to ſtay, ſo that hee might make ſale of his leane Negros, which they granted vnto. And the next day did ſell ſome of them, who hauing bought and payed for them, thinking to haue had a diſcharge of the Cuſtomer for the cuſtome of the Negros, being the Kings duetie, they gaue it away to the poore for Gods ſake, and did refuſe to giue the diſcharge in writing, and the poore not truſting their wordes, for feare, leaſt hereafter it might bee demaunded of them, did refraine from buying any more, ſo that nothing elſe was done vntill the Gouernours comming downe, which was the fourteenth day, and then the Captaine made petition, declaring that hee was come thither in a ſhippe of the Queenes Maieſties of England, being bound to Guinie, and thither driuen by winde and weather, ſo that being come thither, hee had neede of ſundry neceſſaries for the reparation of the ſaid Nauie, and alſo great need of money for the paiment of his Souldiours, vnto whom hee had promiſed paiment, and therefore although hee would, yet would not they depart without it, & for that purpoſe he requeſted licence for the ſale of certaine of his Negros, declaring that although they were forbidden to trafique with ſtrangers, yet for that there was a great amitie betweene their princes, and that the thing perteined to our Queenes highneſſe, he thought hee might doe their prince great ſeruice, and that it would bee well taken at his hands, to doe it in this cauſe. The which allegations with diuers others put in requeſt, were preſented vnto the Gouernour, who ſitting in counſell for that matter, granted vnto his requeſt for licence. But yet there fell out another thing which was the abating of the kings Cuſtome, being vpon euery ſlaue 30. duckets, which would not be granted vnto.

An hundreth Engliſhmen in armour.

Whereupon the Captaine perceiuing that they would neither come neere his price hee looked for by a great deale, nor yet would abate the Kings Cuſtome of that they offered, ſo that either he muſt be a great looſer by his wares, or els compell the officers to abate the ſame kings Cuſtome which was too vnreaſonable, for to a higher price hee coulde not bring the buyers: Therefore the ſixteenth of April hee prepared one hundred men well armed with bowes, arrowes, harquebuzes and pikes, with the which hee marched to the townewards, and being perceiued by the Gouernour, he ſtraight with all expedition ſent meſſengers to knowe his requeſt, deſiring him to march no further forward vntill he had anſwere againe, which incontinent he ſhould haue. So our Captaine declaring how vnreaſonable a thing the Kings Cuſtome was, requeſted to haue the ſame abated, and to pay ſeuen and a halfe per centum, which is the ordinarie Cuſtome for wares through his dominions there, and vnto this if they would not graunt, hee would diſpleaſe them. And this word being caried to the Gouernour, anſwere was returned that all things ſhould bee to his content, and thereupon hee determined to depart, but the ſouldiers and Mariners finding ſo little credite in their promiſes, demanded gages for the performance of the premiſſes, or els they would not depart. And thus they being conſtrained to ſend gages, wee departed, beginning our trafique, and ending the ſame without diſturbance.

Thus hauing made trafique in the harborough vntill the 28. our Captaine with his ſhips intended to goe out of the roade, and purpoſed to make ſhew of his departure, becauſe nowe the common ſort hauing imployed their money, the rich men were come to towne, who made no ſhew that they were come to buy, ſo that they went about to bring downe the price, and by this pollicie the Captaine knew they would be made the more eger, for feare leaſt we departed, and they ſhould goe without any at all.

The reports of the miſhaps of the Minion in Guinie.

The nine and twentie wee being at ancker without the road, a French ſhip called the Greene Dragon of Newhauen, whereof was Captaine one Bon Temps came in, who ſaluted vs after the maner of the Sea, with certaine pieces of Ordinance, and we reſaluted him with the like againe: with whom hauing communication, he declared that hee had bene at the Mine in Guinie, and was beaten off by the Portugals gallies, and inforced to come thither to make ſale of ſuch wares as he had: and further that the like was happened vnto the Minion: beſides the Captaine Dauie Carlet and a Marchant, with a dozen Mariners betrayed by the Negros at their firſt arriuall thither, and remayning priſoners with the Portugals; and beſides other miſaduentures of the loſſe of their men, happened through the great lacke of freſh water, with great doubts of bringing home the ſhips: which was moſt ſorowfull for vs to vnderſtand.

Thus hauing ended our trafique here the 4.of May, we departed,leauing the Frenchman behinde vs,the night before the which the Caribes, whereof I haue made mention before,being to the number of 200. came in their Canoas to Burboroata, intending by night to haue burned the towne,and taken the Spaniards, who being more vigilant becauſe of our being there, then their cuſtome was,perceiuing them comming, raiſed the towne, who in a moment being a horſebacke, by meanes their cuſtome is for all doubts to keepe their horſes ready ſadled, in the night ſet vpon them,& tooke one,but the reſt making ſhift for themſelues,eſcaped away. But this one, becauſe he was their guide,and was the occaſion that diuers times they had made inuaſion vpon them,had for his trauelle a ſtake thruſt through his fundament,and ſo out at his necke.

May.

Horſes kept ready ſadled.

The ſixt of May aforeſaide, wee came to an yland called Curaçao,where wee had thought to haue anckered,but could not find ground, and hauing let fal an ancker with two cables,were faine to weigh it againe: and the ſeuenth ſayling along the coaſt to ſeeke an harborow,and finding none, wee came to an ancker where we rode open in the Sea. In this place we had trafique for hides, and found great refreſhing both of beefe,mutton and lambes,whereof there was ſuch plentie,that ſauing the ſkinnes,we had the fleſh giuen vs for nothing,the plentie whereof was ſo abundant,that the worſt in the ſhip thought ſcorne not onely of mutton, but alſo of ſodden lambe; which they diſdained to eate vnroſted.

Exceeding plentie of cattell in Curaçao.

The increaſe of cattell in this yland is marueilous, which from a doozen of each ſort brought thither by the gouernour,in 25.yeres he had a hundreth thouſand at the leaſt,& of other cattel was able to kill without ſpoile of the increaſe 1500.yeerely,which hee killeth for the ſkinnes, and of the fleſh ſaueth onely the tongues, the reſt hee leaueth to the foule to deuoure. And this I am able to affirme, not onely vpon the Gouernours owne report , who was the firſt that brought the increaſe thither, which ſo remaineth vnto this day, but alſo by that I ſaw my ſelfe in one field,where an hundred oxen lay one by another all whole,ſauing the ſkinne and tongue taken away. And it is not ſo marueilous a thing why they doe thus caſt away the fleſh in all the ylands of the Weſt Indies,ſeeing the land is great,and more then they are able to inhabite, the people fewe, hauing delicate fruites and meates ynough beſides to feede vpon,which they rather deſire, and the increaſe which paſſeth mans reaſon to beleeue , when they come to a great number : for in S.Domingo an yland called by the finders thereof Hiſpaniola, is ſo great quantitie of cattell, and ſuch increaſe therof,that notwithſtãding the daily killing of them for their hides,it is not poſſible to aſſwage the number of them , but they are deuoured by wilde dogs, whoſe number is ſuch by ſuffering them firſt to range the woods and mountaines, that they eate and deſtroy 60000. a yeere, and yet ſmall lacke found of them. And no marueile,for the ſaid yland is almoſt as bigge as all England,and being the firſt place that was founde of all the Indies, and of long time inhabited before the reſt, it ought therefore of reaſon to be moſt populous: and to this houre the Viceroy and counſell royall abideth there as in the chiefeſt place of all the Indies, to preſcribe orders to the reſt for the kings behalfe, yet haue they but one Citie and 13.villages in all the ſame yland, whereby the ſpoile of them in reſpect of the increaſe is nothing.

Great numbers of wilde dogs.

The 15.of the foreſaid moneth wee departed from Curaçao, being not a little to the reioycing of our Captaine and vs, that wee had there ended our trafique: but notwithſtanding our ſweete meate, wee had ſower ſauce,for by reaſon of our riding ſo open at ſea,what with blaſtes whereby our anckers being a ground, three at once came home, and alſo with contrary windes blowing, whereby for feare of the ſhore we were faine to hale off to haue anker-hold, ſometimes a whole day and a night we turned vp and downe; and this happened not once, but halfe a dozen times in the ſpace of our being there.

The 16. wee paſſed by an yland called Aruba,and the 17.at night anckered ſixe houres at the Weſt ende of Cabo de la vela, and in the morning being the 18. weighed againe, keeping our courſe,in the which time the Captaine ſailing by the ſhore in the pinneſſe, came to the Rancheria, a place where the Spaniards vſe to fiſh for pearles, and there ſpoke with a Spaniard, who tolde him how far off he was from Rio de la Hacha,which becauſe he would not ouerſhoot,he ankered that night againe,& the 19.came thither; where hauing talke with the kings treaſurer of the Indies reſident there,he declared his quiet trafique in Burboroata,& ſhewed a certificate of the ſame, made by the gouernour thereof,& therefore he deſired to haue the like there alſo: but the treaſurer made anſwere that they were forbidden by the Viceroy and councill of S.Domingo,who hauing intelligence of our being on the coaſt, did ſende expreſſe commiſſion to reſiſt vs,with all the force they could,inſomuch that they durſt not trafique with vs in no caſe, alleaging that if they did,they ſhould looſe all that they did trafique for, beſides their bodies at the magiſtrates commaundement. Our Captaine replied,that hee was in an Armada of the Queenes Maieſties of England, and ſent about other her affaires, but driuen beſides his pretended voyage, was inforced by contrary windes to come into thoſe parts, where he hoped to finde ſuch friendſhip as hee ſhould doe in Spaine, to the contrary whereof hee knewe no reaſon, in that there was amitie betwixt their princes. But ſeeing they would contrary to all reaſon go about to withſtand his trafique, he would it ſhould not be ſaid by him, that hauing the force he hath, to be driuen from his trafique perforce, but he would rather put it in aduenture to try whether he or they ſhould haue the better, and therefore willed them to determine either to giue him licence to trade, or elſe to ſtand to their owne harmes: So vpon this it was determined hee ſhould haue licence to trade, but they would giue him ſuch a price as was the one halfe leſſe then he had ſold for before, and thus they ſent word they would do, and none otherwiſe, and if it liked him not, he might do what he would, for they were not determined to deale otherwiſe with him. Whereupon, the captaine waying their vnconſcionable requeſt, wrote to them a letter, that they dealt too rigorouſly with him, to go about to cut his throte in the price of his cõmodities, which were ſo reaſonably rated, as they could not by a great deale haue the like at any other mans handes. But ſeeing they had ſent him this to his ſupper, hee would in the morning bring them as good a breakefaſt. And therefore in the morning being the 21. of May, hee ſhot off a whole Culuering to ſummon the towne, and preparing one hundred men in armour, went a ſhore, hauing in his great boate two Faulcons of braſſe, and in the other boates double baſes in their noſes, which being perceiued by the Townеſmen, they incontinent in battell aray with their drumme and enſigne diſplayed, marched from the Towne to the ſands, of footmen to the number of an hundred and fiftie, making great bragges with their cries, and weauing vs a ſhore, whereby they made a ſemblance to haue fought with vs in deed. But our Captaine perceiuing them ſo bragge, commanded the two Faulcons to be diſcharged at them, which put them in no ſmall feare to ſee, (as they afterward declared) ſuch great pieces in a boate. At euery ſhot they fell flat to the ground, and as wee approched neere vnto them, they broke their aray, and diſperſed themſelues ſo much for feare of the Ordinance, that at laſt they went all away with their enſigne. The horſemen alſo being about thirtie, made as braue a ſhew as might be, courſing vp and downe with their horſes, their braue white leather Targets in the one hand, and their iauelings in the other, as though they would haue receiued vs at our landing. But when wee landed, they gaue ground, and conſulted what they ſhould doe, for little they thought wee would haue landed ſo boldly: and therefore as the Captaine was putting his men in aray, and marched forward to haue encountred with them, they ſent a meſſenger on horſebacke with a flagge of truce to the Captaine, who declared that the Treaſurer marueiled what he meant to doe to come a ſhore in that order, in conſideration that they had granted to euery reaſonable requeſt that he did demaund: but the Captaine not well contented with this meſſenger, marched forwards. The meſſenger prayed him to ſtay his men, and ſaide, if hee would come apart from his men, the Treaſurer would come and ſpeake with him, whereunto hee did agree to commune together. The Captaine onely with his armour without weapon, and the Treaſurer on horſebacke with his iaueling, was afraide to come neere him for feare of his armour, which he ſaid was worſe then his weapon, and ſo keeping aloofe communing together, granted in fine to all his requeſts. Which being declared by the Captaine to the company, they deſired to haue pledges for the performance of all things, doubting that otherwiſe when they had made themſelues ſtronger, they would haue bene at defiance with vs: and ſeeing that now they might haue what they would requeſt, they iudged it to be more wiſedome to be in aſſurance then to be forced to make any more labours about it. So vpon this, gages were ſent, and we made our trafique quietly with them. In the meane time while we ſtayed here, wee watered a good breadth off from the ſhore, where by the ſtrength of the freſh water running into the Sea, the ſalt water was made freſh. In this Riuer we ſaw many Crocodils of ſundry bigneſſes, but ſome as bigge as a boate, with 4. feete, a long broad mouth, and a long taile, whoſe ſkinne is ſo hard, that a ſword wil not pierce it. His nature is to liue out of the water as a frogge doth, but he is a great deuourer, and ſpareth neither fiſh, which is his common food, nor beaſtes, nor men, if hee take them, as the proofe thereof was knowen by a Negro, who as hee was filling water in the Riuer was by one of them caried cleane away, and neuer ſeene after. His nature is euer when hee would haue his prey, to cry and ſobbe like a Chriſtian body, to prouoke them to come to him, and then hee ſnatcheth at them, and thereupon came this prouerbe that is applied vnto women when they weepe, Lachrymæ Crocodili, the meaning whereof is, that as the Crocodile when hee crieth, goeth then about moſt to deceiue, ſo doeth a woman moſt commonly when ſhe weepeth. Of theſe the Maſter of the Ieſus watched one, and by the banks ſide ſtroke him with a pike of a bill in the ſide, and after three or foure times turning in ſight, hee ſunke downe, and was not afterward ſeene. In the time of our being in the Riuers Guinie, wee ſawe many of a monſtrous bigneſſe, amongſt the which the captaine being in one of the Barks comming downe the ſame, ſhot a Faulcon at one, which very narowly hee miſſed, and with a feare hee plunged into the water, making a ſtreame like the way of a boate.

Now while we were here, whether it were of a feare that the Spaniards doubted wee would haue done them ſome harme before we departed, or for any treaſon that they intended towards vs, I am not able to ſay; but then came thither a Captaine from ſome of the other townes, with a dozen ſouldiers vpon a time when our Captaine and the treaſurer cleared al things betweene them, and were in a communication of a debt of the gouernours of Burboroata, which was to be payd by the ſaid treaſurer, who would not anſwere the ſame by any meanes. Whereupon certaine words of diſpleaſure paſſed betwixt the Captaine and him, and parting the one from the other, the treaſurer poſſibly doubting that our Captaine would perforce haue ſought the ſame, did immediatly command his men to armes, both horſemen and footemen: but becauſe the Captaine was in the Riuer on the backe ſide of the Towne with his other boates, and all his men vnarmed and without weapons, it was to be iudged he ment him little good, hauing that aduantage of him, that comming vpon the ſudden, hee might haue miſchieued many of his men: but the Captaine hauing vnderſtanding thereof, not truſting to their gentleneſſe, if they might haue the aduantage, departed aboord his ſhips, and at night returned againe, and demanded amongſt other talke, what they ment by aſſembling their men in that order, & they anſwered, that their Captaine being come to towne did muſter his men according to his accuſtomed maner. But it is to be iudged to bee a cloake, in that comming for that purpoſe hee might haue done it ſooner, but the trueth is, they were not of force vntill then, whereby to enterpriſe any matter againſt vs, by meanes of pikes and harquebuzes, whereof they haue want, and were now furniſhed by our Captaine, and alſo 3. Faulcons, which hauing got in other places, they had ſecretly conueyed thither, which made them the bolder, and alſo for that they ſaw now a conuenient place to do ſuch a feat, and time alſo ſeruing thereunto, by the meanes that our men were not onely vnarmed and vnprouided, as at no time before the like, but alſo were occupied in hewing of wood, and leaſt thinking of any harme: theſe were occaſions to prouoke them thereunto. And I ſuppoſe they went about to bring it to effect, in that *I with another gentleman being in the towne, thinking of no harme towards vs, and ſeeing men aſſembling in armour to the treaſurers houſe, whereof I marueiled, and reuoking to minde the former talke betweene the Captaine and him, and the vnreadineſſe of our men, of whom aduantage might haue bene taken, departed out of the Towne immediatly to giue knowledge thereof, but before we came to our men by a flight-ſhot, two horſemen riding a gallop were come neere vs, being ſent, as wee did geſſe, to ſtay vs leaſt wee ſhould cary newes to our Captaine, but ſeeing vs ſo neere our men they ſtayed their horſes, comming together, and ſuffring vs to paſſe, belike becauſe wee were ſo neere, that if they had gone about the ſame, they had bene eſpied by ſome of our men which then immediatly would haue departed, whereby they ſhould haue bene fruſtrate of their pretence: and ſo the two horſemen ridde about the buſhes to eſpie what we did, and ſeeing vs gone, to the intent they might ſhadow their comming downe in poſt, whereof ſuſpition might bee had, fained a ſimple excuſe in aſking whether he could ſell any wine, but that ſeemed ſo ſimple to the Captaine, that ſtanding in doubt of their courteſie, he returned in the morning with his three boats, appointed with Baſes in their noſes, and his men with weapons accordingly, where as before he caried none: and thus diſſembling all iniuries conceiued of both parts, the Captaine went aſhore, leauing pledges in the boates for himſelfe, and cleared all things betweene the treaſurer and him, ſauing for the gouerners debt, which the one by no meanes would anſwere, and the other, becauſe it was not his due debt, woulde not moleſt him for it, but was content to remit it vntill another time, and therefore departed, cauſing the two Barkes which rode neere the ſhore to weigh and go vnder ſaile, which was done becauſe that our Captaine demanding a teſtimoniall of his good behauiour there, could not haue the ſame vntill hee were vnder ſaile ready to depart: and therefore at night he went for the ſame againe, & receiued it at the treaſurers hand, of whom very courteouſly he tooke his leaue and departed, ſhooting off the baſes of his boat for his farewell, and the towneſmen alſo ſhot off foure Faulcons and 30. harquebuzes, and this was the firſt time that he knew of the conueyance of their Faulcons.

*The authour of this ſtorie.

The 31. of May wee departed, keeping our courſe to Hiſpaniola, and the fourth of Iune wee had ſight of an yland, which wee made to be Iamaica, marueiling that by the vehement courſe of the Seas we ſhould be driuen ſo farre to leeward: for ſetting our courſe to the Weſt end of Hiſpaniola we fel with the middle of Iamaica, notwithſtanding that to al mens ſight it ſhewed a headland, but they were all deceiued by the clouds that lay vpon the land two dayes together, in ſuch ſort that we thought it to be the head land of the ſaid yland. And a Spaniard being in the ſhip, who was a Marchant, and inhabitant in Iamaica, hauing occaſion to go to Guinie, and being by treaſon taken of the Negros, & afterwads bought by the Tangomangos, was by our Captaine brought from thence, and had his paſſage to go into his countrey, who perceiuing the land, made as though he knew euery place thereof, and pointed to certaine places which he named to be ſuch a place, and ſuch a mans ground, and that behinde ſuch a point was the harborow, but in the ende he pointed ſo from one point to another, that we were a leebord of all places, and found our ſelues at the Weſt end of Iamaica before we were aware of it, and being once to leeward, there was no getting vp againe, ſo that by truſting of the Spaniards knowledge, our Captaine ſought not to ſpeake with any of the inhabitants, which if he had not made himſelfe ſure of, he would haue done as his cuſtome was in other places: but this man was a plague not onely to our Captaine, who made him looſe by ouerſhooting the place 2000. pounds by hides, which hee might haue gotten, but alſo to himſelfe, who being three yeeres out of his Countrey, and in great miſery in Guinie, both among the Negros and Tangomangos, and in hope to come to his wife and friendes, as he made ſure accompt, in that at his going into the pinneſſe, when he went to ſhore he put on his new clothes, and for ioy flung away his old, could not afterwards finde any habitation, neither there nor in all Cuba, which we ſailed all along, but it fell out euer by one occaſion or other, that wee were put beſide the ſame, ſo that he was faine to be brought into England, and it happened to him as it did to a duke of Samaria, when the Iſraelites were beſieged, and were in great miſery with hunger, & being tolde by the Prophet Elizæus, that a buſhell of flower ſhould be ſold for a ſickle, would not beleeue him, but thought it vnpoſſible: and for that cauſe Elizæus propheſied hee ſhould ſee the ſame done, but hee ſhould not eate thereof: ſo this man being abſent three yeeres, and not euer thinking to haue ſeene his owne Countrey, did ſee the ſame, went vpon it, and yet was it not his fortune to come to it, or to any habitation, whereby to remaine with his friends according to his deſire.

The deceitfull force of the current.

Two hundred ylands for the moſt part not inhabited.

Thus hauing ſailed along the coaſt two dayes, we departed the ſeuenth of Iune, being made to beleeue by the Spaniard that it was not Iamaica, but rather Hiſpaniola, of which opinion the Captaine alſo was, becauſe that which hee made Iamaica ſeemed to be but a piece of the land, and thereby tooke it rather to be Hiſpaniola, by the lying of the coaſt, and alſo for that being ignorant of the force of the current, he could not beleeue he was ſo farre driuen to leeward, and therfore ſetting his courſe to Iamaica, and after certaine dayes not finding the ſame, perceiued then certainly that the yland which he was at before was Iamaica, and that the cloudes did deceiue him, whereof he maruelled not a little: and this miſtaking of the place came to as ill a paſſe as the ouerſhooting of Iamaica: for by this did he alſo ouerpaſſe a place in Cuba, called Santa Cruz, where, as he was informed, was great ſtore of hides to be had: & thus being diſappointed of two of his portes, where he thought to haue raiſed great profite by his trafique, and alſo to haue found great refreſhing of victuals and water for his men, hee was now diſappointed greatly, and ſuch want he had of freſh water, that he was forced to ſeeke the ſhore to obteine the ſame, which he had ſight of after certaine dayes ouerpaſſed with ſtormes and contrary windes, but yet not of the maine of Cuba, but of certaine ylands in number two hundred, whereof the moſt part were deſolate of inhabitants: by the which ylands the Captaine paſſing in his pinneſſe, could finde no freſh water vntill hee came to an yland bigger then all the reſt, called the yle of Pinas, where wee anckered with our ſhips the 16. of Iune, and found water, which although it were neither ſo toothſome as running water, by the meanes it is ſtanding, and but the water of raine, and alſo being neere the Sea was brackiſh, yet did wee not refuſe it, but were more glad thereof, as the time then required, then wee ſhould haue bene another time with fine Conduit water, Thus being reaſonably watered we were deſirous to depart, becauſe the place was not very cõuenient for ſuch ſhips of charge as they were, becauſe there were many ſhoales to leeward, which alſo lay open to the ſea for any wind that ſhould blow: and therfore the captaine made the more haſte away, which was not vnneedfull: for little ſooner were their anckers weyed, and foreſaile ſet, but there aroſe ſuch a ſtorme, that they had not much to ſpare for doubling out of the ſhoales: for one of the barks not being fully ready as the reſt, was faine for haſte to cut the cable in the hawſe, and looſe both ancker and cable to ſaue her ſelfe.

The Cape of S. Anthony in Cuba.

Florida.

Thus the 17. of Iun,e we departed and on the 20. wee fell with the Weſt end of Cuba, called Cape S. Antony, where for the ſpace of three dayes wee doubled along, till wee came beyond the ſhoales, which are 20. leagues beyond S. Anthony. And the ordinary Briſe taking vs, which is the Northeaſt winde, put vs the 24. from the ſhoare, and therefore we went to the Northweſt to fetch wind, and alſo to the coaſt of Florida to haue the helpe of the current, which was iudged to haue ſet to the Eaſtward: ſo the 29. wee found our ſelues in 27. degrees, and in the ſoundings of Florida, where we kept our ſelues the ſpace of foure dayes, ſailing along the coaſt as neere as we could, in tenne or twelue fadome water, hauing all the while no ſight of land.

The Iſles of Tortugas

Great ſtore of birds.

The fift of July we had ſight of certeine Iſlands of ſand, called the Tortugas (which is lowe land) where the captaine went in with his pinneſſe, and found ſuch a number of birds, that in halfe an houre he laded her with them; and if they had beene ten boats more, they might haue done the like. Theſe Iſlands beare the name of Tortoiſes, becauſe of the number of them, which there do breed, whoſe nature is to liue both in the water and vpon land alſo, but breed onely vpon the ſhore, in making a great pit wherein they lay egges, to the number of three or foure hundred, and couering them with ſand, they are hatched by the heat of the Sunne; and by this meanes commeth the great increaſe. Of theſe we tooke very great ones, which haue both backe and belly all of bone, of the thicknes of an inch: the fiſh whereof we proued, eating much like veale; and finding a number of egges in them, taſted alſo of them, but they did eat very ſweetly. Heere wee ankered ſixe houres, and then a faire gale of winde ſpringing, we weyed anker, and made ſaile toward Cuba, whither we came the ſixt day, and weathered as farre as the Table, being a hill ſo called, becauſe of the forme thereof: here we lay off and on all night, to keepe that we had gotten to wind-ward, intending to haue watered in the morning, if we could haue done it, or els if the winde had come larger, to haue plied to wind-ward to Hauana, which is an harborow whereunto all the fleet of the Spanyards come, and doe there tary to haue one the company of another. This hill we thinking to haue beene the Table, made account (as it was indeed) that Hauana was but eight leagues to wind-ward, but by the perſwaſion of a French man, who made the captaine beleeue he knew the Table very well, and had beene at Hauana, ſayd that it was not the Table, and that the Table was much higher, and neerer to the ſea ſide, and that there was no plaine ground to the Eaſtward, nor hilles to the Weſtward, but all was contrary, and that behinde the hilles to the Weſtward was Hauana. To which perſuaſion credit being giuen by ſome, and they not of the worſt, the captaine was perſuaded to goe to leeward, and ſo ſailed along the ſeuenth and eight dayes, finding no habitation, nor no other Table; and then perceiuing his folly to giue eare to ſuch praters, was not a little ſory, both becauſe he did conſider what time he ſhould ſpend yer he could get ſo far to wind-ward againe, which would haue bene, with the weathering which we had, ten or twelue dayes worke, & what it would haue bene longer he knew not, and (that which was worſt) he had not aboue a dayes water, and therfore knew not what ſhift to make: but in fine, becauſe the want was ſuch, that his men could not liue with it, he determined to ſeeke water, and to goe further to leeward, to a place (as it is ſet in the card) called Rio de los puercos, which he was in doubt of, both whether it were inhabited, & whether there were water or not, and whether for the ſhoalds he might haue ſuch acceſſe with his ſhips, that he might conueniently take in the ſame. And while we were in theſe troubles, and kept our way to the place aforeſayd, almighty God our guide (who would not ſuffer vs to run into any further danger, which we had bene like to haue incurred, if we had ranged the coaſt of Florida along as we did before, which is ſo dangerous (by reports) that no ſhip eſcapeth which commeth thither, (as the Spanyards haue very wel proued the ſame) ſent vs the eight day at night a faire Weſterly winde, whereupon the captaine and company conſulted, determining not to refuſe Gods gift, but euery man was contented to pinch his owne bellie, whatſoeuer had happened; and taking the ſayd winde, the ninth day of July got to the Table, and ſailing the ſame night, vnawares ouerſhot Hauana; at which place wee thought to haue watered: but the next day, not knowing that wee had ouerſhot the ſame, ſailed along the coaſt, ſeeking it, and the eleuenth day in the morning, by certeine knowen marks, we vnderſtood that we had ouerſhot it 20 leagues: in which coaſt ranging, we found no conuenient watering place, whereby there was no remedy but to diſemboque, and to water vpon the coaſt of Florida: for, to go further to the Eaſtward, we could not for the ſhoalds, which are very dangerous; and becauſe the current ſhooteth to the Northeaſt, we doubted by the force thereof to be ſet vpon them, and therefore durſt not approch them: ſo making but reaſonable way the day aforeſayd, and all the night, the twelfth day in the morning we fell with the Iſlands vpon the cape of Florida, which we could ſcant double by the meanes that fearing the ſhoalds to the Eaſtwards, and doubting the current comming out of the Weſt, which was not of that force we made account of; for we felt little or none till we fell with the cape, and then felt ſuch a current, that bearing all ſailes againſt the ſame, yet were driuen backe againe a great pace: the experience whereof we had by the Ieſus pinneſſe, and the Salomons boat, which were ſent the ſame day in the afternoone, whiles the ſhips were becalmed, to ſee if they could finde any water vpon the Iſlands aforeſaid; who ſpent a great part of the day in rowing thither, being further off then they deemed it to be, and in the meane time a faire gale of winde ſpringing at ſea, the ſhips departed, making a ſigne to them to come away, who although they ſaw them depart, becauſe they were ſo neere the ſhore, would not loſe all the labour they had taken, but determined to keepe their way, and ſee if there were any water to be had, making no account but to finde the ſhippes well enough: but they ſpent ſo much time in filling the water which they had foũd, that the night was come before they could make an end. And hauing loſt the ſight of the ſhips, they rowed what they could, but were wholly ignorant which way they ſhould ſeeke them againe; as indeed there was a more doubt then they knew of: for when they departed, the ſhippes were in no current; and ſailing but a mile further, they found one ſo ſtrong, that bearing all ſailes, it could not preuaile againſt the ſame, but were driuen backe: whereupon the captaine ſent the Salomon, with the other two barks, to beare neere the ſhore all night, becauſe the current was leſſe there a great deale, and to beare light, with ſhooting off a piece now and then, to the intent the boats might better know how to come to them.

The Ieſus alſo bare a light in her toppe gallant, and ſhot off a piece alſo now and then, but the night paſſed, and the morning was come, being the thirteenth day, and no newes could be heard of them, but the ſhips and barkes ceaſed not to looke ſtill for them, yet they thought it was all in vaine, by the meanes they heard not of them all the night paſt; and therefore determined to tary no longer, ſeeking for them till noone, and if they heard no newes, then they would depart to the Ieſus, who perforce (by the vehemency of the current) was caried almoſt out of ſight; but as God would haue it, now time being come, and they hauing tacked about in the pinneſſes top, had ſight of them, and tooke them vp: they in the boats, being to the number of one and twenty, hauing ſight of the ſhips, and ſeeing them tacking about; whereas before at the firſt ſight of them they did greatly reioyce, were now in a greater perplexitie then euer they were: for by this they thought themſelues vtterly forſaken, whereas before they were in ſome hope to haue found them. Truly God wrought maruellouſly for them, for they themſelues hauing no victuals but water, and being ſore oppreſſed with hunger, were not of opinion to beſtow any further time in ſeeking the ſhippes then that preſent noone time; ſo that if they had not at that inſtant eſpied them, they had gone to the ſhore to haue made prouiſion for victuals, and with ſuch things as they could haue gotten, either to haue gone for that part of Florida where the French men were planted (which would haue bene very hard for them to haue done, becauſe they wanted victuals to bring them thither, being an hundred and twenty leagues off) or els to haue remained amongſt the Floridians; at whoſe hands they were put in comfort by a French man, who was with them, that had remained in Florida at the firſt finding thereof, a whole yeere together, to receiue victuals ſufficient, and gentle entertainment, if need were, for a yeere or two, vntill which time God might haue prouided for them. But how contrary this would haue fallen out to their expectations, it is hard to iudge, ſeeing thoſe people of the cape of Florida are of more ſauage and fierce nature, and more valiant then any of the reſt; which the Spanyards well prooued, who being fiue hundred men, who intended there to land, returned few or none of them, but were inforced to forſake the ſame: and of their crueltie mention is made in the booke of the Decades, of a frier, who taking vpon him to perſuade the people to ſubiection, was by them taken, and his ſkin cruelly pulled ouer his eares, and his fleſh eaten.

In theſe Iſlands they being a ſhore, found a dead man, dried in a maner whole, with other heads and bodies of men: ſo that theſe ſorts of men are eaters of the fleſh of men, aſwel as the Canibals. But to returne to our purpoſe.

The foureteenth day the ſhippe and barks came to the Ieſus, bringing them newes of the recouery of the men, which was not a little to the reioycing of the captaine, and the whole company: and ſo then altogether they kept on their way along the coaſt of Florida, and the fifteenth day came to an anker, and ſo from ſixe and twenty degrees to thirty degrees and a halfe, where the French men abode, ranging all the coaſt along, ſeeking for freſh water, ankering euery night, becauſe we would ouerſhoot no place of freſh water, and in the day time the captaine in the ſhips pinneſſe failed along the ſhore, went into euery creeke, ſpeaking with diuers of the Floridians, becauſe hee would vnderſtand where the French men inhabited; and not finding them in eight and twentie degrees, as it was declared vnto him, maruelled thereat, and neuer left ſailing along the coaſt till he found them, who inhabited in a riuer, by them called the riuer of May, and ſtanding in thirty degrees and better. In ranging this coaſt along, the captaine found it to be all an Iſland, and therefore it is all lowe land, and very ſcant of freſh water, but the countrey was maruellouſly ſweet, with both mariſh and medow ground, and goodly woods among. There they found ſorell to grow as abundantly as graſſe, and where their houſes were, great ſtore of maiz and mill, and grapes of great bigneſſe, but of taſte much like our Engliſh grapes. Alſo Deere great plentie, which came vpon the ſands before them. Their houſes are not many together, for in one houſe an hundred of them do lodge; they being made much like a great barne, and in ſtrength not inferiour to ours, for they haue ſtanchions and rafters of whole trees, and are couered with palmito-leaues, hauing hauing no place diuided, but one ſmall roome for their king and queene. In the middeſt of this houſe is a hearth, where they make great fires all night, and they ſleepe vpon certeine pieces of wood hewen in for the bowing of their backs, and another place made high for their heads, which they put one by another all along the walles on both ſides. In their houſes they remaine onely in the nights, and in the day they deſire the fields, where they dreſſe their meat, and make prouiſion for victuals, which they prouide onely for a meale from hand to mouth. There is one thing to be maruelled at, for the making of their fire, and not onely they but alſo the Negros doe the ſame, which is made onely by two ſtickes, rubbing them one againſt another: and this they may doe in any place they come, where they finde ſticks ſufficient for the purpoſe. In their apparell the men onely vſe deere ſkinnes, wherewith ſome onely couer their priuy members, otherſome vſe the ſame as garments to couer them before and behind; which ſkinnes are painted, ſome yellow and red, ſome blacke & ruſſet, and euery man according to his owne fancy. They do not omit to paint their bodies alſo with curious knots, or antike worke, as euery man in his owne fancy deuiſeth, which painting, to make it continue the better, they vſe with a thorne to pricke their fleſh, and dent in the ſame, whereby the painting may haue better hold. In their warres they vſe a ſleighter colour of painting their faces, thereby to make themſelues ſhew the more fierce; which after their warres ended, they waſh away againe. In their warres they vſe bowes and arrowes, whereof their bowes are made of a kind of Yew, but blacker then ours, and for the moſt part paſſing the ſtrength of the Negros or Indians, for it is not greatly inferior to ours: their arrowes are alſo of a great length, but yet of reeds like other Indians, but varying in two points, both in length and and alſo for nocks and feathers, which the other lacke, whereby they ſhoot very ſtedy: the heads of the ſame are vipers teeth, bones of fiſhes, flint ſtones, piked points of kniues, which they hauing gotten of the French men, broke the ſame, & put the points of them in their arrowes heads: ſome of them haue their heads of ſiluer, otherſome that haue want of theſe, put in a kinde of hard wood, notched, which pierceth as farre as any of the reſt. In their fight, being in the woods, they vſe a maruellous pollicie for their owne ſafegard, which is by claſping a tree in their armes, and yet ſhooting notwithſtanding: this policy they vſed with the French men in their fight, whereby it appeareth that they are people of ſome policy: and although they are called by the Spanyards Gente triſte, that is to ſay, Bad people, meaning thereby, that they are not men of capacity: yet haue the French men found them ſo witty in their anſweres, that by the captaines owne report, a counſeller with vs could not giue a more profound reaſon.

The maner of kindling of fire in Florida.

The women alſo for their apparell vſe painted ſkinnes, but moſt of them gownes of moſſe, ſomewhat longer then our moſſe, which they ſowe together artificially, and make the ſame ſurpleſſe wiſe, wearing their haire downe to their ſhoulders, like the Indians. In this riuer of May aforeſayd, the captaine entring with his pinneſſe, found a French ſhip of foureſcore tun, and two pinneſſes of fifteene tun a piece, by her, and ſpeaking with the keepers thereof, they tolde him of a fort two leagues vp, which they had built, in which their captaine Monſieur Laudonniere was, with certeine ſouldiers therein. To whom our captaine ſending to vnderſtand of a watering place, where he might conueniently take it in, and to haue licence for the ſame, he ſtraight, becauſe there was no conuenient place but vp the riuer fiue leagues, where the water was freſh, did ſend him a pilot for the more expedition thereof, to bring in one of his barks, which going in with other boats prouided for the ſame purpoſe, ankered before the fort, into the which our captaine went; where hee was by the Generall, with other captaines and ſouldiers, very gently enterteined, who declared vnto him the time of their being there, which was foureteene moneths, with the extremity they were driuen to for want of victuals, hauing brought very little with them; in which place they being two hundred men at their firſt comming, had in ſhort ſpace eaten all the maiz they could buy of the inhabitants about them, and therefore were driuen certeine of them to ſerue a king of the Floridians againſt other his enemies, for mill and other victuals; which hauing gotten, could not ſerue them, being ſo many, ſo long a time: but want came vpon them in ſuch ſort, that they were faine to gather acorns, which being ſtamped ſmall, and often waſhed, to take away the bitterneſſe of them, they did vſe for bread, eating withall ſundry times, roots, whereof they found many good and holeſome, and ſuch as ſerue rather for medecines then for meates alone. But this hardneſſe not contenting ſome of them, who would not take the paines ſo much as to fiſh in the riuer before their doores, but would haue all things put in their mouthes, they did rebell againſt the captaine, taking away firſt his armour, and afterward impriſoning him: and ſo to the number of foureſcore of them, departed with a barke and a pinneſſe, ſpoiling their ſtore of victuall, and taking away a great part thereof with them, and ſo went to the Iſlands of Hiſpaniola and Iamaica a rouing, where they ſpoiled and pilled the Spanyards; and hauing taken two carauels laden with wine and caſaui, which is a bread made of roots, and much other victuals and treaſure, had not the grace to depart therewith, but were of ſuch haughty ſtomacks, that they thought their force to be ſuch that no man durſt meddle with them, and ſo kept harborow in Iamaica, going dayly aſhore at their pleaſure. But God which would not ſuffer ſuch euill doers vnpuniſhed, did indurate their hearts in ſuch ſort, that they lingered the time ſo long, that a ſhip and galliaſſe being made out of Santa Domingo came thither into the harborow, and tooke twenty of them, whereof the moſt part were hanged, and the reſt caried into Spaine, and ſome (to the number of fiue and twenty) eſcaped in the pinneſſe, and came to Florida; where at their landing they were put in priſon, and incontinent foure of the chiefeſt being condemned, at the requeſt of the ſouldiers, did paſſe the harquebuzers, and then were hanged vpon a gibbet. This lacke of threeſcore men was a great diſcourage and weakening to the reſt, for they were the beſt ſouldiers that they had: for they had now made the inhabitants weary of them by their dayly crauing of maiz, hauing no wares left to content them withall, and therefore were inforced to rob them, and to take away their victual perforce, which was the occaſion that the Floridians (not well contented therewith) did take certeine of their company in the woods, and ſlew them; wherby there grew great warres betwixt them and the Frenchmen; and therefore they being but a few in number durſt not venture abroad, but at ſuch time as they were inforced thereunto for want of food to do the ſame: and going twenty harquebuzers in a company, were ſet vpon by eighteene kings, hauing ſeuen or eight hundred men, which with one of their bowes ſlew one of their men, and hurt a dozen, & droue them all downe to their boats; whoſe policy in fight was to be maruelled at: for hauing ſhot at diuers of their bodies which were armed, and perceiuing that their arrowes did not preuaile againſt the ſame, they ſhot at their faces and legs, which were the places that the Frenchmen were hurt in. Thus the Frenchmen returned, being in ill caſe by the hurt of their men, hauing not aboue forty ſouldiers left vnhurt, whereby they might ill make any more inuaſions vpon the Floridians, and keepe their fort withall: which they muſt haue beene driuen vnto, had not God ſent vs thither for their ſuccour; for they had not aboue ten dayes victuall left before we came. In which perplexity our captaine ſeeing them, ſpared them out of his ſhip twenty barrels of meale, & foure pipes of beanes, with diuers other victuals and neceſſaries which he might conueniently ſpare: and to helpe them the better homewards, whither they were bound before our comming, at their requeſt we ſpared them one of our barks of fifty tun. Notwithſtanding the great want that the Frenchmen had, the ground doth yeeld victuals ſufficient, if they would haue taken paines to get the ſame; but they being ſouldiers, deſired to liue by the ſweat of other mens browes: for while they had peace with the Floridians, they had fiſh ſufficient, by weares which they made to catch the ſame: but when they grew to warres, the Floridians tooke away the ſame againe, and then would not the Frenchmen take the paines to make any more. The ground yeeldeth naturally grapes in great ſtore, for in the time that the Frenchmen were there, they made 20 hogſheads of wine. Alſo it yeeldeth roots paſſing good, Deere maruellous ſtore, with diuers other beaſts, and fowle, ſeruiceable to the vſe of man. Theſe be things wherewith a man may liue, hauing corne or maiz wherewith to make bread: for maiz maketh good ſauory bread, and cakes as fine as flowre. Alſo it maketh good meale, beaten and ſodden with water, and eateth like pap wherewith we feed children. It maketh alſo good beuerage, ſodden in water, and nouriſhable; which the Frenchmen did vſe to drinke of in the morning, and it aſſuageth their thirſt, ſo that they had no need to drinke all the day after. And this maiz was the greateſt lacke they had, becauſe they had no labourers to ſowe the ſame, and therfore to them that ſhould inhabit the land it were requiſit to haue labourers to till and ſowe the ground: for they hauing victuals of their owne, whereby they neither rob nor ſpoile the inhabitants, may liue not onely quietly with them, who naturally are more deſirous of peace then of warres, but alſo ſhall haue abundance of victuals profered them for nothing: for it is with them as it is with one of vs, when we ſee another man euer taking away frō vs, although we haue enough beſides, yet then we thinke all too little for our ſelues: for ſurely we haue heard the Frenchmen report, and I know it by the Indians, that a very little contenteth them: for the Indians with the head of maiz roſted, will trauell a whole day, and when they are at the Spanyards finding, they giue them nothing but ſodden herbs & maiz: and in this order I ſaw threeſcore of them feed, who were laden with wares, and came fifty leagues off. The Floridians when they trauell, haue a kinde of herbe dried, who with a cane and an earthen cup in the end, with fire, and the dried herbs put together, doe ſucke thorow the cane the ſmoke thereof; which ſmoke ſatiſfieth their hunger, and therwith they liue foure or fiue dayes without meat or drinke, and this all the Frenchmen vſed for this purpoſe: yet do they holde opinion withall, that it cauſeth water & fleame to void from their ſtomacks. The commodities of this land are more then are yet knowen to any man: for beſides the land it ſelfe, whereof there is more then any king Chriſtian is able to inhabit, it flouriſheth with medow, paſture ground, with woods of Cedar and Cypres, and other ſorts, as better can not be in the world. They haue for apothecary herbs, trees, roots and gummes great ſtore, as Storax liquida, Turpintine, Gumme, Myrrhe, and Frankinſence, with many others, whereof I know not the names. Colours both red, blacke, yellow, & ruſſet, very perfect, wherewith they ſo paint their bodies, and Deere ſkinnes which they weare about them, that with water it neither fadeth away, nor altereth colour. Golde and ſiluer they want not: for at the Frenchmens firſt comming thither they had the ſame offered them for little or nothing, for they receiued for a hatchet two pound weight of golde, becauſe they knew not the eſtimation thereof: but the ſouldiers being greedy of the ſame, did take it from them, giuing them nothing for it: the which they perceiuing, that both the Frenchmen did greatly eſteeme it, and alſo did rigourouſly deale with them, by taking the ſame away from them, at laſt would not be knowen they had any more, neither durſt they weare the ſame for feare of being taken away: ſo that ſauing at their firſt comming, they could get none of them: and how they came by this golde and ſiluer the French men know not as yet, but by geſſe, who hauing trauelled to the Southweſt of the cape, hauing found the ſame dangerous, by meanes of ſundry banks, as we alſo haue found the ſame; and there finding maſts which were wracks of Spanyards comming from Mexico, iudged that they had gotten treaſure by them. For it is moſt true that diuers wracks haue beene made of Spanyards, hauing much treaſure: for the Frenchmen hauing trauelled to the capeward an hundred and fiftie miles, did finde two Spanyards with the Floridians, which they brought afterward to their fort, whereof one was in a carauel comming from the Indies, which was caſt away foureteene yeeres ago, & the other twelue yeres; of whoſe fellowes ſome eſcaped, otherſome were ſlain by the inhabitants. It ſeemeth they had eſtimation of their golde & ſiluer, for it is wrought flat and grauen, which they weare about their neckes; otherſome made round like a pancake, with a hole in the midſt, to boulſter vp their breaſts withall, becauſe they thinke it a deformity to haue great breaſts. As for mines either of gold or ſiluer, the Frenchmen can heare of none they haue vpon the Iſland, but of copper, whereof as yet alſo they haue not made the proofe, becauſe they were but few men: but it is not vnlike, but that in the maine where are high hilles, may be golde and ſiluer aſwell as in Mexico, becauſe it is all one maine. The Frenchmen obteined pearles of them of great bigneſſe, but they were blacke, by meanes of roſting of them, for they do not fiſh for them as the Spanyards doe, but for their meat: for the Spanyards vſe to keepe dayly afiſhing ſome two or three hundred Indians, ſome of them that be of choiſe a thouſand: and their order is to go in canoas, or rather great pinneſſes, with thirty men in a piece, whereof the one halfe, or moſt part be diuers, the reſt doe open the ſame for the pearles: for it is not ſuffered that they ſhould vſe dragging, for that would bring them out of eſtimation, and marre the beds of them. The oiſters which haue the ſmalleſt ſort of pearles are found in ſeuen or eight fadome water, but the greateſt in eleuen or twelue fadome.

The Floridians haue pieces of vnicornes hornes, which they weare about their necks, whereof the Frenchmen obteined many pieces. Of thoſe vnicornes they haue many; for that they doe affirme it to be a beaſt with one horne, which comming to the riuer to drinke, putteth the ſame into the water before he drinketh. Of this vnicornes horne there are of our company, that hauing gotten the ſame of the Frenchmen, brought home thereof to ſhew. It is therfore to be preſuppoſed that there are more commodities aſwell as that, which for want of time, and people ſufficient to inhabit the ſame, can not yet come to light: but I truſt God will reueale the ſame before it be long, to the great profit of them that ſhal take it in hand. Of beaſts in this countrey beſides deere, foxes, hares, polcats, conies, ownces, & leopards, I am not able certeinly to ſay: but it is thought that there are lions and tygres aſwell as vnicornes; lions eſpecially; if it be true that is ſayd, of the enmity betweene them and the vnicornes: for there is no beaſt but hath his enemy, as the cony the polcat, a ſheepe the woolfe, the elephant the rinoceros; and ſo of other beaſts the like: inſomuch, that whereas the one is, the other can not be miſſing. And ſeeing I haue made mention of the beaſts of this countrey, it ſhall not be from my purpoſe to ſpeake alſo of the venimous beaſts, as crocodiles, whereof there is great abundance, adders of great bigneſſe, whereof our men killed ſome of a yard and a halfe long. Alſo I heard a miracle of one of theſe adders, vpon the which a faulcon ſeizing, the ſayd adder did claſpe her taile about her; which the French captaine ſeeing, came to the reſcue of the faulcon, and tooke her ſlaying the adder; and this faulcon being wilde, he did reclaime her, and kept her for the ſpace of two moneths, at which time for very want of meat he was faine to caſt her off. On theſe adders the Frenchmen did feed, to no little admiration of vs, and affirmed the ſame to be a delicate meat. And the captaine of the Frenchmen ſaw alſo a

Of fiſh alſo they haue in the riuer, pike, roch, ſalmon, trout, and diuers other ſmall fiſhes, and of great fiſh, ſome of the length of a man and longer, being of bigneſſe accordingly, hauing a ſnout much like a ſword of a yard long. There be alſo of ſea fiſhes, which we ſaw comming along the coaſt flying, which are of the bigneſſe of a ſmelt, the biggeſt ſort whereof haue foure wings, but the other haue but two: of theſe wee ſawe comming out of Guinea a hundred in a company, which being chaſed by the gilt-heads, otherwiſe called the bonitos, do to auoid them the better, take their flight out of the water, but yet are they not able to flie farre, becauſe of the drying of their wings, which ſerue them not to flie but when they are moiſt, and therefore when they can flie no further, they fall into the water, and hauing wet their wings, take a new flight againe. Theſe bonitos be of bigneſſe like a carpe, and in colour like a makarell, but it is the ſwifteſt fiſh in ſwimming that is, and followeth her prey very fiercely, not onely in the water, but alſo out of the water: for as the flying fiſh taketh her flight, ſo doeth this bonito leape after them, and taketh them ſometimes aboue the water. There were ſome of thoſe bonitos, which being galled by a fiſgig, did follow our ſhippe comming out of Guinea 500 leagues. There is a ſea-fowle alſo that chaſeth this flying fiſh aſwell as the bonito: for as the flying fiſh taketh her flight, ſo doth this fowle purſue to take her, which to beholde is a greater pleaſure then hawking, for both the flights are as pleaſant, and alſo more often then an hundred times: for the fowle can flie no way, but one or other lighteth in her pawes, the number of them are ſo abundant. There is an innumerable yoong frie of theſe flying fiſhes, which commonly keepe about the ſhip, and are not ſo big as butter-flies, and yet by flying do auoid the vnſatiableneſſe of the bonito. Of the bigger ſort of theſe fiſhes wee tooke many, which both night and day flew into the ſailes of our ſhip, and there was not one of them which was not worth a bonito: for being put vpon a hooke drabling in the water, the bonito would leape thereat, and ſo was taken. Alſo, we tooke many with a white cloth made faſt to a hooke, which being tied ſo ſhort in the water, that it might leape out and in, the greedie bonito thinking it to be a flying fiſh leapeth thereat, and ſo is deceiued. We tooke alſo dolphins which are of very goodly colour and proportion to behold, and no leſſe delicate in taſte. Fowles alſo there be many, both vpon land and vpon ſea: but concerning them on the land I am not able to name them, becauſe my abode was there ſo ſhort. But for the fowle of the freſh riuers, theſe two I noted to be the chiefe, whereof the Flemengo is one, hauing all red feathers, and long red legs like a herne, a necke according to the bill, red, whereof the vpper neb hangeth an inch ouer the nether; and an egript, which is all white as the ſwanne, with legs like to an hearnſhaw, and of bigneſſe accordingly, but it hath in her taile feathers of ſo fine a plume, that it paſſeth the eſtridge his feather. Of the ſea-fowle aboue all other not common in England, I noted the pellicane, which is fained to be the louingſt bird that is; which rather then her yong ſhould want, wil ſpare her heart bloud out of her belly: but for all this louingneſſe ſhe is very deformed to beholde; for ſhe is of colour ruſſet: notwithſtanding in Guinea I haue ſeene of them as white as a ſwan, hauing legs like the ſame, and a body like a hearne, with a long necke, and a thick long beake, from the nether iaw whereof downe to the breaſt paſſeth a ſkinne of ſuch a bigneſſe, as is able to receiue a fiſh as big as ones thigh, and this her big throat and long bill doeth make her ſeeme ſo ougly.

Meanes to reape a ſufficient profit in Florida and Virginia.

Here I haue declared the eſtate of Florida, and the commodities therein to this day knowen, which although it may ſeeme vnto ſome, by the meanes that the plenty of golde and ſiluer, is not ſo abundant as in other places, that the coſt beſtowed vpon the ſame will not be able to quit the charges: yet am I of the opinion, that by that which I haue ſeene in other Iſlands of the Indians, where ſuch increaſe of cattell hath bene, that of twelue head of beaſts in fiue & twenty yeeres, did in the hides of them raiſe a thouſand pound profit yerely, that the increaſe of cattel onely would raiſe profit ſufficient for the ſame: for wee may conſider, if ſo ſmall a portion did raiſe ſo much gaines in ſuch ſhort time, what would a greater do in many yeres? and ſurely I may this affirme, that the ground of the Indians for the breed of cattell, is not in any point to be compared to this of Florida, which all the yeere long is ſo greene, as any time in the Summer with vs: which ſurely is not to be marueilled at, ſeeing the countrey ſtandeth in ſo watery a climate: for once a day without faile they haue a ſhower of raine; which by meanes of the countrey it ſelfe, which is drie, and more feruent hot then ours, doeth make all things to flouriſh therein. And becauſe there is not the thing we all ſeeke for, being rather deſirous of preſent gaines, I doe therefore affirme the attempt thereof to be more requiſit for a prince, who is of power able to go thorow with the ſame, rather then for any ſubiect.

From thence wee departed the 28 of Iuly, vpon our voyage homewards, hauing there all things as might be moſt conuenient for our purpoſe: and tooke leaue of the Frenchmen that there ſtill remained, who with diligence determined to make as great ſpeede after, as they could. Thus by meanes of contrary windes oftentimes, wee prolonged our voyage in ſuch manner that victuals ſcanted with vs, ſo that we were diuers times (or rather the moſt part) in deſpaire of euer comming home, had not God of his goodneſſe better prouided for vs, then our deſeruing. In which ſtate of great miſerie, wee were prouoked to call vpon him by feruent prayer, which mooued him to heare vs, ſo that we had a proſperous winde, which did ſet vs ſo farre ſhot, as to be vpon the banke of Newfound land, on Saint Bartholomews eue, and we ſounded therupon, finding ground at an hundred and thirtie fadoms, being that day ſomewhat becalmed, and tooke a great number of freſh codde-fiſh, which greatly relieued vs: and being very glad thereof, the next day we departed, and had lingring little gales for the ſpace of foure or fiue dayes, at the ende of which we ſawe a couple of French ſhippes, and had of them ſo much fiſh as would ſerue vs plentifully for all the reſt of the way, the Captaine paying for the ſame both golde and ſiluer, to the iuſt value thereof, vnto the chiefe owners of the ſaide ſhippes, but they not looking for any thing at all, were glad in themſelues to meete with ſuch good intertainement at ſea, as they had at our hands. After which departure from them, with a good large winde the twentieth of September we came to Padſtow in Cornewall, God be thanked, in ſafetie, with the loſſe of twentie perſons in all the voyage, and with great profit to the venturers of the ſaid voyage, as alſo to the whole realme, in bringing home both golde, ſiluer, pearles and other iewels great ſtore. His name therefore be praiſed for euermore. Amen.

The Regiſter and true accounts of all herein expreſſed hath beene approoued by me Iohn Sparke the younger, who went vpon the ſame voyage, and wrote the ſame.

The third troubleſome voyage made with the Ieſus of Lubeck, the Minion, and foure other ſhips, to the parts of Guinea, and the Weſt Indies, in the yeeres 1567 and 1568 by M. Iohn Hawkins.

The ſhips departed from Plimmouth, the ſecond day of October, Anno 1567 and had reaſonable weather vntill the ſeuenth day, at which time fortie leagues North from Cape Finiſter, there aroſe an extreme ſtorme, which continued foure dayes, in ſuch ſort, that the fleete was diſperſed, and all our great boats loſt, and the Ieſus our chiefe ſhippe, in ſuch caſe, as not thought able to ſerue the voyage: whereupon in the ſame ſtorme we ſet our courſe homeward, determining to giue ouer the voyage: but the eleuenth day of the ſame moneth, the winde changed with faire weather, whereby we were animated to followe our enterpriſe, and ſo did, directing our courſe with the Ilands of the Canaries, where according to an order before preſcribed, all our ſhippes before diſperſed, met at one of thoſe Ilands, called Gomera, where we tooke water, and departed from thence the fourth day of Nouember, towards the coaſt of Guinea, and arriued at Cape Verde, the eighteenth of Nouember: where we landed 150 men, hoping to obtaine ſome Negros, where we got but fewe, and thoſe with great hurt and damage to our men, which chiefly proceeded of their enuenomed arrowes: and although in the beginning they ſeemed to be but ſmall hurts, yet there hardly eſcaped any that had blood drawen of them, but died in ſtrange ſort, with their mouthes ſhut ſome tenne dayes before they died, and after their wounds were whole; where I my ſelfe had one of the greateſt woundes, yet thankes be to God, eſcaped. From thence we paſt the time vpon the coaſt of Guinea, ſearching with all diligence the riuers from Rio grande, vnto Sierra Leona, till the twelfth of Ianuarie, in which time we had not gotten together a hundreth and fiftie Negros: yet notwithſtanding the ſickneſſe of our men, and the late time of the yeere commanded vs away: and thus hauing nothing wherewith to ſeeke the coaſt of the Weſt Indias, I was with the reſt of our company in conſultation to goe to the coaſt of the Mine, hoping there to haue obtained ſome golde for our wares, and thereby to haue defraied our charge. But euen in that preſent inſtant, there came to vs a Negro, ſent from a king, oppreſſed by other Kings his neighbours, deſiring our aide, with promiſe that as many Negros as by theſe warres might be obtained, aſwell of his part as of ours, ſhould be at our pleaſure: whereupon we concluded to giue aide, and ſent 120 of our men, which the 15 of Ianuarie, aſſaulted a towne of the Negros of our Allies aduerſaries, which had in it 8000 Inhabitants, being very ſtrongly impaled and fenced after their manner, but it was ſo well defended, that our men preuailed not, but loſt ſixe men and fortie hurt: ſo that our men ſent forthwith to me for more helpe: whereupon conſidering that the good ſucceſſe of this enterpriſe might highly further the commoditie of our voyage, I went my ſelfe, and with the helpe of the king of our ſide, aſſaulted the towne, both by land and ſea, and very hardly with fire (their houſes being couered with dry Palme leaues) obtained the towne, and put the Inhabitants to flight, where we tooke 250 perſons, men, women, & children, and by our friend the king of our ſide, there were taken 600 priſoners, whereof we hoped to haue had our choiſe: but the Negro (in which nation is ſeldome or neuer found truth) meant nothing leſſe: for that night he remooued his campe and priſoners, ſo that we were faine to content vs with thoſe few which we had gotten our ſelues.

Now had we obtained between foure and fiue hundred Negros, wherwith we thought it ſomewhat reaſonable to ſeeke the coaſt of the Weſt Indies, and there, for our Negros, and other our merchandize, we hoped to obtaine, whereof to counteruaile our charges with ſome gaines, wherunto we proceeded with all diligence, furniſhed our watering, tooke fuell, and departed the coaſt of Guinea the third of Februarie, continuing at the ſea with a paſſage more hard, then before hath bene accuſtomed till the 27 day of March, which day we had ſight of an Iland, called Dominica, vpon the coaſt of the Weſt Indies, in fourteene degrees: from thence we coaſted from place to place, making our traffike with the Spaniards as we might, ſomewhat hardly, becauſe the king had ſtraightly commanded all his Gouernors in thoſe parts, by no meanes to ſuffer any trade to be made with vs: notwithſtanding we had reaſonable trade, and courteous entertainment, from the Ile of Margarita vnto Cartagena, without any thing greatly worth the noting, ſauing at Capo de la Vela, in a towne called Rio de la Hacha (from whence come all the pearles) the treaſurer who had the charge there, would by no meanes agree to any trade, or ſuffer vs to take water, he had fortified his towne with diuers bulwarkes in all places where it might be entered, and furniſhed himſelfe with an hundred Hargabuziers, ſo that he thought by famine to haue inforced vs to haue put a land our Negros: of which purpoſe he had not greatly failed, vnleſſe we had by force entred the towne: which (after we could by no meanes obtaine his fauour) we were enforced to doe, and ſo with two hundred men brake in vpon their bulwarkes, and entred the towne with the loſſe onely of two men of our partes, and no hurt done to the Spaniards becauſe after their voley of ſhot diſcharged, they all fled.

Thus hauing the town with ſome circumſtance, as partly by the Spaniards deſire of Negros, and partly by friendſhip of the Treaſurer, we obtained a ſecret trade: whereupon the Spaniards reſorted to vs by night, and bought of vs to the number of 200 Negros: in all other places where we traded the Spaniards inhabitants were glad of vs and traded willingly.

Cartagena.

Furicanos.

Stormes.

At Cartagena the laſt towne we thought to haue ſeene on the coaſt, we could by no meanes obtaine to deale with any Spaniard, the gouernour was ſo ſtraight, and becauſe our trade was ſo neere finiſhed we thought not good either to aduenture any landing, or to detract further time, but in peace departed from thence the 24 of Iuly, hoping to haue eſcaped the time of their ſtormes which then ſoone after began to reigne, the which they call Furicanos, but paſſing by the Weſt end of Cuba, towards the coaſt of Florida there happened to vs the 12 day of Auguſt an extreme ſtorme which continued by the ſpace of foure dayes, which ſo beat the Ieſus, that we cut downe all her higher buildings, her rudder alſo was ſore ſhaken, and withall was in ſo extreme a leake that we were rather vpon the point to leaue her then to keepe her any longer, yet hoping to bring all to good paſſe, we ſought the coaſt of Florida, where we found no place nor Hauen for our ſhips, becauſe of the ſhalowneſſe of the coaſt: thus being in greater diſpaire, and taken with a newe ſtorme which continued other 3 dayes, we were inforced to take for our ſuccour the Port which ſerueth the citie of Mexico called Saint Iohn de Vllua, which ſtandeth in 19 degrees: in ſeeking of which Port we tooke in our way 3 ſhips which carried paſſengers to the number of an hundred, which paſſengers we hoped ſhould be a meane to vs the better to obtaine victuals for our money, & a quiet place for the repairing of our fleete. Shortly after this the 16 of September we entered the Port of Saint Iohn de Vllua and in our entrie the Spaniardes thinking vs to be the fleete of Spaine, the chiefe officers of the Countrey came aboord vs, which being deceiued of their expectation were greatly diſmayed: but immediatly when they ſawe our demand was nothing but victuals, were recomforted. I found alſo in the ſame Port twelue ſhips which had in them by the report two hundred thouſand pound in gold & ſiluer, all which (being in my poſſeſſion, with the kings Iland as alſo the paſſengers before in my way thitherward ſtayed) I ſet at libertie, without the taking from them the waight of a groat: onely becauſe I would not be delayed of my diſpatch, I ſtayed two men of eſtimation and ſent poſt immediatly to Mexico, which was two hundred miles from vs, to the Preſidentes and Councell there, ſhewing them of our arriuall there by the force of weather, and the neceſſitie of the repaire of our ſhippes and victuals, which wantes we required as friends to king Philip to be furniſhed of for our money: and that the Preſidents and Councell there ſhould with all conuenient ſpeede take order, that at the arriuall of the Spaniſh fleete, which was dayly looked for, there might no cauſe of quarrell riſe betweene vs and them, but for the better maintenance of amitie, their commandement might be had in that behalfe. This meſſage being ſent away the ſixteenth day of September at night, being the very day of our arriuall, in the next morning which was the ſeuenteenth day of the ſame moneth, we ſawe open of the Hauen thirteene great ſhippes, and vnderſtanding them to bee the fleete of Spaine, I ſent immediatly to aduertiſe the Generall of the fleete of my being there, doing him to vnderſtand, that before I would ſuffer them to enter the Port, there ſhould ſome order of conditions paſſe betweene vs for our ſafe being there, and maintenance of peace. Now it is to be vnderſtood that this Port is made by a little Iland of ſtones not three foote aboue the water in the higheſt place, and but a bow-ſhoot of length any way, this Iland ſtandeth from the maine land two bow ſhootes or more, alſo it is to be vnderſtood that there is not in all this coaſt any other place for ſhips to arriue in ſafety, becauſe the North winde hath there ſuch violence, that vnleſſe the ſhippes be very ſafely mored with their ankers faſtened vpon this Iland, there is no remedie for theſe North windes but death: alſo the place of the Hauen was ſo little, that of neceſſitie the ſhippes muſt ride one aboord the other, ſo that we could not giue place to them, nor they to vs: and here I beganne to bewaile that which after followed, for now, ſaid I, I am in two dangers, and forced to receiue the one of them. That was, either I muſt haue kept out the fleete from entring the Port, the which with Gods helpe I was very well able to doe, or elſe ſuffer them to enter in with their accuſtomed treaſon, which they neuer faile to execute, where they may haue opportunitie, to compaſſe it by any meanes: if I had kept them out, then had there bene preſent ſhipwracke of all the fleete which amounted in value to ſixe Millions, which was in value of our money 1800000. li. which I conſidered I was not able to anſwere, fearing the Queenes Maieſties indignation in ſo waightie a matter. Thus with my ſelfe reuoluing the doubts, I thought rather better to abide the Iutt of the vncertainty, then the certaintie. The vncertaine doubt I account was their treaſon which by good policie I hoped might be preuented, and therefore as chuſing the leaſt miſchiefe I proceeded to conditions. Now was our firſt meſſenger come and returned from the fleete with report of the arriuall of a Viceroy, ſo that hee had authoritie, both in all this Prouince of Mexico (otherwiſe called Nueua Eſpanna) and in the ſea, who ſent vs word that we ſhould ſend our conditions, which of his part ſhould (for the better maintenance of amitie betweene the Princes) be both fauourably granted, and faithfully performed, with many faire wordes how paſſing the coaſt of the Indies he had vnderſtood of our honeſt behauiour towardes the inhabitants where we had to doe, aſwell elſewhere as in the ſame Port, the which I let paſſe: thus following our demand, we required victuals for our money, and licence to ſell as much ware as might furniſh our wants, and that there might be of either part twelue gentlemen as hoſtages for the maintenance of peace: and that the Iland for our better ſafetie might be in our owne poſſeſſion, during our abode there, and ſuch ordinance as was planted in the ſame Iland which were eleuen peeces of braſſe: and that no Spaniard might land in the Iland with any kind of weapon: theſe conditions at the firſt he ſomewhat miſliked, chiefly the guard of the Iland to be in our owne keeping, which if they had had, we had ſoone knowen our fare: for with the firſt North winde they had cut our cables and our ſhips had gone aſhore: but in the end he concluded to our requeſt, bringing the twelue hoſtages to ten, which with all ſpeede of either part were receiued, with a writing from the Viceroy ſigned with his hande and ſealed with his ſeale of all the conditions concluded, & forthwith a trumpet blowen with commandement that none of either part ſhould be meane to violate the peace vpon paine of death: and further it was concluded that the two Generals of the fleetes ſhould meete, and giue faith ech to other for the performance of the premiſſes which was ſo done. Thus at the end of 3 dayes all was concluded & the fleete entered the Port, ſaluting one another as the maner of the ſea doth require. Thus as I ſaid before, thurſday we entred the Port, Friday we ſaw the fleete, and on munday at night they entered the Port: then we laboured 2 daies placing the Engliſh ſhips by themſelues & the Spaniſh ſhips by themſelues, the captaines of ech part & inferiour men of their parts promiſing great amity of al ſides: which euen as with all fidelitie it was ment on our part, ſo the Spaniards ment nothing leſſe on their parts, but from the maine land had furniſhed themſelues with a ſupply of men to the number of 1000, and ment the next thurſday being the 23 of September at dinner time to ſet vpon vs on all ſides. The ſame Thurſday in the morning the treaſon being at hand, ſome appearance ſhewed, as ſhifting of weapon from ſhip to ſhip, planting and bending of ordinance from the ſhips to the Iland where our men warded, paſſing too and fro of companies of men more then required for their neceſſary buſines, & many other ill likelihoods, which cauſed vs to haue a vehement ſuſpition, and therewithall ſent to the Viceroy to enquire what was ment by it, which ſent immediatly ſtraight commandement to vnplant all things ſuſpicious, and alſo ſent word that he in the faith of a Viceroy would be our defence from all villanies. Yet we being not ſatiſfied with this anſwere, becauſe we ſuſpected a great number of men to be hid in a great ſhip of 900 tunnes which was mored next vnto the Minion, ſent againe to the Viceroy the maſter of the Ieſus which had the Spaniſh tongue, and required to be ſatiſfied if any ſuch thing were or not. The Viceroy now ſeeing that the treaſon muſt be diſcouered, foorthwith ſtayed our maſter, blew the Trumpet, and of all ſides ſet vpon vs: our men which warded a ſhore being ſtricken with ſudden feare, gaue place, fled, and ſought to recouer ſuccour of the ſhips; the Spaniardes being before prouided for the purpoſe landed in all places in multitudes from their ſhips which they might eaſily doe without boates, and ſlewe all our men a ſhore without mercie, a fewe of them eſcaped aboord the Ieſus. The great ſhip which had by the eſtimation three hundred men placed in her ſecretly, immediatly fell aboord the Minion, but by Gods appointment, in the time of the ſuſpicion we had, which was onely one halfe houre, the Minion was made readie to auoide, and ſo leeſing her hedfaſts, and hayling away by the ſternefaſtes ſhe was gotten out: thus with Gods helpe ſhe defended the violence of the firſt brunt of theſe three hundred men. The Minion being paſt out, they came aboord the Ieſus, which alſo with very much a doe and the loſſe of manie of our men were defended and kept out. Then were there alſo two other ſhips that aſſaulted the Ieſus at the ſame inſtant, ſo that ſhe had hard getting looſe, but yet with ſome time we had cut our head-faſtes and gotten out by the ſterne-faſtes. Nowe when the Ieſus and the Minion were gotten about two ſhippes length from the Spaniſh fleete, the fight beganne ſo hotte on all ſides that within one houre the Admirall of the Spaniards was ſuppoſed to be ſunke, their Vice-admirall burned and one other of their principall ſhips ſuppoſed to be ſunke, ſo that the ſhippes were little able to annoy vs.

3. ſhips of the Spaniards conſumed.

Then is it to be vnderſtood, that all the Ordinance vpon the Ilande was in the Spaniardes handes, which did vs ſo great annoyance, that it cut all the maſtes and yardes of the Ieſus, in ſuch ſort that there was no hope to carrie her away; alſo it ſunke our ſmall ſhippes, wereupon we determined to place the Ieſus on that ſide of the Minion, that ſhe might abide all the batterie from the land, and ſo be a defence for the Minion till night, and then to take ſuch reliefe of victuall and other neceſſaries from the Ieſus, as the time would ſuffer vs, and to leaue her. As we were thus determining, and had placed the Minion from the ſhot of the land, ſuddenly the Spaniards had fired two great ſhippes which were comming directly with vs, and hauing no meanes to auoide the fire, it bredde among our men a maruellous feare, ſo that ſome ſayd, let vs depart with the Minion, other ſaid, let vs ſee whither the winde will carrie the fire from vs. But to be ſhort, the Minions men which had alwayes their ſayles in a readineſſe, thought to make ſure worke, and ſo without either conſent of the Captaine or Maſter cut their ſaile, ſo that very hardly I was receiued into the Minion.

A hard caſe.

The moſt part of the men that were left a liue in the Ieſus, made ſhift and followed the Minion in a ſmall boat, the reſt which the little boate was not able to receiue, were inforced to abide the mercie of the Spaniards (which I doubt was very little) ſo with the Minion only and the Iudith (a ſmall barke of 50 tunne) we eſcaped, which barke the ſame night forſooke vs in our great miſerie: we were now remooued with the Minion from the Spaniſh ſhips two bow-ſhootes, and there rode all that night: the next morning we recouered an Iland a mile from the Spaniardes, where there tooke vs a North winde, and being left onely with two ankers and two cables (for in this conflict we loſt three cables and two ankers) we thought alwayes vpon death which euer was preſent, but God preſerued vs to a longer time.

Small hope to be had of tyrants.

A ſtorme.

The weather waxed reaſonable, and the Saturday we ſet ſaile, and hauing a great number of men and little victuals our hope of life waxed leſſe and leſſe: ſome deſired to yeeld to the Spaniards, ſome rather deſired to obtaine a place where they might giue themſelues to the Infidels, and ſome had rather abide with a little pittance the mercie of God at Sea: ſo thus with many ſorowfull hearts we wandred in an vnknowen Sea by the ſpace of 14 dayes, till hunger inforced vs to ſeeke the land, for hides were thought very good meat, rats, cats, mice and dogs, none eſcaped that might be gotten, parrats and monkeyes that were had in great price, were thought there very profitable if they ſerued the turne one dinner: thus in the end the 8 day of October we came to the land in the botome of the ſame bay of Mexico in 23 degrees and a halfe, where we hoped to haue found inhabitants of the Spaniards, reliefe of victuals, and place for the repaire of our ſhip, which was ſo ſore beaten with ſhot from our enemies and bruſed with ſhooting off our owne ordinance, that our wearie and weake armes were ſcarce able to defende and keepe out water. But all things happened to the contrary, for we found neither people, victuall, nor hauen of reliefe, but a place where hauing faire weather with ſome perill we might land a boat: our people being forced with hunger deſired to be ſet on land, whereunto I conſented.

Small hopes of life.

Hard choice.

Miſeries.

And ſuch as were willing to land I put them apart, and ſuch as were deſirous to goe homewardes, I put a part, ſo that they were indifferently parted a hundred of one ſide and a hundred of the other ſide: theſe hundred men we ſet a land with all diligence in this little place beforeſaid, which being landed, we determined there to take in freſh water, and ſo with our little remaine of victuals to take the ſea.

An hundred men ſet on land in 23. deg. and a halfe.

The next day hauing a land with me fiftie of our hundreth men that remained for the ſpeedier preparing of our water aboord, there aroſe an extreame ſtorme, ſo that in three dayes we could by no meanes repaire aboord our ſhip: the ſhip alſo was in ſuch perill that euery houre we looked for ſhipwracke.

The greateſt miſerie of all.

But yet God againe had mercie on vs, and ſent faire weather, we had aboord our water, and departed the ſixteenth day of October, after which day we had faire and proſperous weather till the ſixteenth day of Nouember, which day God be prayſed we were cleere from the coaſt of the Indies, and out of the chanell and gulfe of Bahama, which is betweene the Cape of Florida, and the Ilandes of Iucayo. After this growing neere to the colde countrey, our men being oppreſſed with famine, died continually, and they that were left, grew into ſuch weakeneſſe that we were ſcantly able to manage our ſhippe, and the winde being alwayes ill for vs to recouer England, we determined to goe with Galicia in Spaine, with intent there to relieue our companie and other extreame wantes. And being arriued the laſt day of December in a place neere vnto Vigo called Ponte Vedra, our men with exceſſe of freſh meate grew into miſerable diſſeaſes, and died a great part of them. This matter was borne out as long as it might be, but in the end although there were none of our men ſuffered to goe a land, yet by acceſſe of the Spaniards, our feebleneſſe was knowen to them. Whereupon they ceaſed not to ſeeke by all meanes to betray vs, but with all ſpeede poſſible we departed to Vigo, where we had ſome helpe of certaine Engliſh ſhips and twelue freſh men, wherewith we repaired our wants as we might, and departing the 20 day of Ianuary 1568 arriued in Mounts bay in Cornewall the 25 of the ſame moneth, praiſed be God therefore.

If all the miſeries and troubleſome affaires of this ſorowfull voyage ſhould be perfectly and throughly written, there ſhould neede a painefull man with his pen, and as great a time as he had that wrote the liues and deathes of the Martyrs.

IOHN HAWKINS.

The firſt voyage attempted and ſet foorth by the expert and valiant captaine M. Francis Drake himſelfe, with a ſhip called the Dragon, and another ſhip and a Pinneſſe, to Nombre de Dios, and Dariene, about the yeere 1572, Written and recorded by one Lopez Vaz a Portugall borne in the citie of Eluas, in maner follow: which Portugale, with the diſcourſe about him, was taken at the riuer of Plate by the ſhips ſet foorth by the Right Honourable the Earle of Cumberland, in the yeere 1586.

There was a certaine Engliſh man named Francis Drake, who hauing intelligence how the towne of Nombre de Dios in Nueua Eſpanna, had but ſmall ſtore of people remaining there, came on a night, and entred the Port with foure Pinneſſes, and landed about 150 men, & leauing 70 men with a trumpet, in a Fort which was there, with the other 80 he entred the towne, without doing any harme, till he came to the market place, and there diſcharged his caliuers, & ſounded a trumpet very loud, and the other which he had left in the Fort anſwered him after the ſame maner, with the diſcharging their caliuers, and ſounding their trumpets: the people hereupon not thinking of any ſuch matter, were put in great feare, and waking out of their ſleepe fled all into the mountaines, inquiring one of another what the matter ſhould be, remaining as men amazed, not knowing what that vprore was which happened ſo ſuddenly in the towne. But 14 or 15 of them ioyning together with their harquebuzes, went to the market place to know what they were that were in the towne, and in a corner of the market place they did diſcouer the Engliſhmen, and ſeeing them to be but fewe, diſcharged their caliuers at thoſe Engliſhmen: their fortune was ſuch that they killed the Trumpetter, and ſhot one of the principall men thorow the legge, who ſeeing himſelfe hurt, retyred to the Fort, where the reſt of their company was left: they which were in the Fort ſounded their Trumpet, and ſeeing that they in the towne did not anſwere them, and hearing the caliuers, thought that all they in the towne had bene ſlaine, and thereupon fled to their Pinneſſes: the Engliſh captaine comming to the Fort, and not finding his men which he left there, he and his were in ſo great feare, that leauing their furniture behind them, and putting off their hoſe, they ſwamme, and waded all to their Pinneſſes, and ſo went with their ſhips againe out of the Port.

Thus this Engliſh Captaine called Francis Drake, departed from Nombre de Dios, & ſlew onely one man in the towne which was looking out of a windowe to ſee what the matter was, and of his men had onely his Trumpetter ſlaine.

The valiant exploit of M. Francis Drake betwixt Panama and Nombre de Dios.

But he being diſcontented with the repulſe which he had receiued there, came to the ſound of Dariene, and hauing conference with certaine Negros which were fled from their maſters of Panama, and Nombre de Dios, the Negros did tell him, that certaine Mules came laden with gold and ſiluer from Panama to Nombre de Dios, who in companie of theſe Negros went thereupon on land, and ſtayed in the way where the treaſure ſhould come with an hundred ſhot, and ſo tooke two companies of mules, which came onely with their driuers miſtruſting nothing, and he carried away the gold onely, for they were not able to carrie the ſiluer through the mountaines. And two dayes after he came to the houſe of Croſſes, where he killed ſixe or ſeuen marchants, but found no golde nor ſiluer but much marchandize: ſo he fired the houſe, where was burnt aboue 200000 Duckets in marchandize, and ſo went to his ſhip againe: and within halfe an houre after he was a ſhip-boord, there came downe to the ſandes three hundred ſhot of the Spaniards in the ſight of his ſhips, of purpoſe to ſeeke him, but he cared little for them being out of their reach, and ſo departed with his treaſure.

M. Francis Drake burnt the houſe of Croſſes.

The voyage of Iohn Oxnam of Plimmouth, to the VVeſt India, and ouer the ſtraight of Dariene into the South ſea. Anno 1575. Written by the foreſaid Lopez Vaz in the ſaid diſcourſe.

There was another Engliſhman, who hearing of the ſpoyle that Francis Drake had done vpon the coaſt of Nueua Eſpanna, and of his good aduenture and ſafe returne home, was thereby prouoked to vndertake the like enterpriſe, with a ſhip of 140 tunnes, and 70 men, and came thither, and had alſo conference with the foreſaide Negros: and hearing that the golde and ſiluer which came vpon the Mules from Panama to Nombre de Dios, was now conducted with ſouldiers, he determined to do that which neuer any man before enterpriſed: and landed in that place where Francis Drake before had had his conference with the Negros. This man couered his ſhip after he had brought her aground with boughes of trees, and hid his great Ordinance in the ground, and ſo not leauing any man in his ſhip, he tooke two ſmall pieces of ordinance, and his caliuers, and good ſtore of victuals, and ſo went with the Negros about twelue leagues into the maine land, to a riuer that goeth to the South ſea, and there he cut wood and made a Pinneſſe, which was fiue and fortie foote by the keele, and hauing made this Pinneſſe, he went into the South ſea, carrying ſixe Negros with him to be his guides, and ſo went to the Iland of Pearles, which is fiue & twentie leagues from Panama, which is in the way that they come from Peru to Panama, and there he was ten dayes without ſhewing himſelfe to any man, to ſee if he might get any ſhip that came from Peru: At laſt, there came a ſmall Barke by, which came from Peru from a place called Quito, which he tooke and found in her ſixtie thouſand pezos of golde, and much victuals. But not contenting himſelfe with this prize, hee ſtayed long without ſending away his prize or any of the men, and in the ende of ſixe dayes after, hee tooke another Barke which came from Lima, in which he tooke an hundred thouſand pezos of ſiluer in barres, with the which hee thought to haue gone, & entred the riuer, but firſt he went into the Iſlands to ſee if he could find any pearles: where he found a few, and ſo returned to his pinneſſe againe, & ſo ſailing to the riuer from whence he came, and comming neere to the mouth of the ſayd riuer, hee ſent away the two prizes that hee tooke, and with his pinneſſe he went vp the riuer. The Negros that dwelt in the Iſland of pearls, the ſame night that he went from them, went in Canoas to Panama, and the Gouernour within two dayes ſent foure barkes with 100 men, 25 men in euery one, and Negros to rowe with the captaine Iohn de Ortega, which went to the Iſland of pearles, and there had intelligence, which way the Engliſh men were gone, and following them he met by the way the ſhips which the Engliſh men had taken, of whom he learned, that the Engliſh men were gone vp the riuer, and he going thither, when he came to the mouth of the riuer, the captaine of Panama knew not which way to take, becauſe there were three partitions in the riuer to goe vp in, and being determined to goe vp the greateſt of the three riuers, he ſaw comming downe a leſſer riuer many feathers of hennes, which the Engliſhmen had pulled to eate, and being glad thereof, hee went vp that riuer where hee ſaw the feathers, and after that he had bene in that riuer foure daies, he deſcried the Engliſhmens pinneſſe vpon the ſands, and comming to her, there were no more then ſixe Engliſhmen, whereof they killed one, and the other fiue eſcaped away, and in the pinneſſe he found nothing but victuals: but this captaine of Panama not herewith ſatiſfied, determined to ſeeke out the Engliſhmen by land, and leauing twenty men in his pinneſſes, hee with 80 ſhot went vp the countrey: hee had not gone halfe a league, but hee found a houſe made of boughs, where they found all the Engliſhmens goods, and the gold and ſiluer alſo, and carying it backe to their pinneſſes, the Spaniards were determined to goe away, without following the Engliſh men any further.

But at the end of three dayes, the Engliſh captaine came to the riuer with all his men, and aboue 200 Negros, and ſet vpon the Spaniards with great fury: But the Spaniards hauing the aduantage of trees which they ſtood behind, did eaſily preuaile, and killed eleuen Engliſhmen, and fiue Negros, and tooke other ſeuen Engliſhmen aliue, but of the Spaniards, two were ſlaine and fiue ſore hurt.

A ſkirmiſh betweene the Engliſh men, and the Spaniards.

Among other things, the Spaniards enquired of the Engliſhmen which they tooke, why they went not away in fifteene dayes liberty which they had. They anſwered, that their Captaine had commanded them to carie all that golde and ſiluer which they had, to the place where they had left their ſhippe, and they had promiſed him to carie it, although they made three or foure iourneys of it, for hee promiſed to giue them part of it beſides their wages, but the mariners would haue it by and by, and ſo their Captaine being angry becauſe they would not take his word, fell out with them, and they with him, in ſo much that one of the company would haue killed the Captaine, ſo that the Captaine would not haue them to carie the treaſure, but ſayd hee would ſeeke Negros to carie it, and ſo he went and ſought for Negros, and bringing thoſe Negros to carie it, hee met with the fiue Engliſh men that hee had left in his pinneſſe which ranne from the Spaniards, and the reſt alſo which ran from the houſe, and they told him what the Spaniards had done, and then making friendſhip with all his men, hee promiſed them halfe of all the treaſure if they got it from the Spaniards, and the Negros promiſed to helpe him with their bowes and arrowes, and thereupon they came to ſeeke the Spaniards, and now that ſome of his company were killed and taken, hee thought it beſt to returne to his ſhip, and to paſſe backe for England. The Spaniſh captaine hearing this, hauing buried the dead bodies, and hauing gotten all things into his barkes, and taking the Engliſh men and their pinneſſe with him, he returned to Panama: ſo the voyage of that Engliſh man did not proſper with him, as hee thought it would haue done.

Nowe when the foure barkes were come to Panama, they ſent aduiſe alſo to Nombre de dios, and they of Nombre de dios ſent alſo from them other foure barkes which (as the Spaniards ſay) found the Engliſh ſhip where ſhe was hid, and brought her to Nombre de dios: and that the Viceroy of Peru not thinking it good to ſuffer fiftie Engliſh men to remaine in the countrey, ſent a ſeruant of his called Diego de Frees, with a hundreth and fifty ſhot into the mountaines to ſeeke them out, who found them making of certaine Canoas to goe into the North ſea, and there to take ſome barke or other: ſome of them were ſicke, and were taken, and the reſt fled with the Negros, who in the end betrayed them to the Spaniards, ſo that they were brought to Panama. And the Iuſtice of Panama aſked the Engliſh captaine whether hee had the Queenes licence, or the licence of any other Prince or Lord for his attempt. And he anſwered he had none, whereupon hee and all his company were condemned to dye, and ſo were all executed, ſauing the Captaine, the Maſter, the Pilot, and fiue boyes which were caried to Lima, and there the Captaine was executed with the other two, but the boyes be yet liuing.

The Engliſh betrayed to the Spaniards.

The death of Iohn Oxnam.

The King of Spaine hauing intelligence of theſe matters, ſent 300 men of warre againſt thoſe Negros which had aſſiſted thoſe Engliſh men, which before were ſlaues vnto the Spaniards, and as before is ſayd, fled from their maſters vnto thoſe mountaines, and ſo ioyned themſelues to the Engliſhmen, to the ende they might the better reuenge themſelues on the Spaniards.

At the firſt comming of theſe 300 ſouldiers, they tooke many of the Negros, and executed great iuſtice vpon them: But after a ſeaſon, the Negros grew wiſe and wary, and preuented the Spaniards, ſo that none of them could be taken.

The Spaniards of that countrey marueiled much at this one thing, to ſee that ſince the conquering of this land, there haue bene many Frenchmen, that haue come to thoſe Countreys, but neuer ſaw Engliſh men there but onely thoſe two of whom I haue ſpoken. And although there haue many Frenchmen bene on the coaſt, yet neuer durſt they put foote vpon land, only thoſe two Engliſh men aduentured it, and did ſuch exploits, as are before remembred.

The Engliſh mens comming to the Indies, cauſed the king of Spaine to build gallies to keepe the Seas.

All theſe things comming to the hearing of the king of Spaine, he prouided two Gallies well appointed to keepe thoſe coaſtes: and the firſt yeere they tooke ſixe or ſeuen French ſhips. And after that this was knowen, there were no more Engliſhmen or Frenchmen of warre that durſt aduenture to approch the coaſt, vntill this preſent yeere 1586, that the aforeſayd Francis Drake, with a ſtrong fleete of 24 ſhips arriued there, and made ſpoile of Santo Domingo, Carthagena, and S. Auguſtine, things that are knowen to all the worlde. But it is likely that if the King of Spaine liue, he will in time prouide ſufficient remedy, to keepe his countreys and ſubiects from the inuaſion of other nations.

The voyage of Maſter Andrew Barker of Briſtol, with two ſhips, the one called the Ragged ſtaffe, the other the Beare, to the coaſt of Terra firma, and the Bay of Honduras in the Weſt Indies, in the yeere 1576. Wherein the reaſons are premiſed which mooued him to ſet forth this voyage againſt the Spaniards: collected out of certaine notes and examinations touching this enterpriſe by M. Richard Hakluyt.

Firſt of all Andrew Barker hauing abode in one of the Canary Iſlands called Tenerif for a certaine time, and returning home left behind him Charles Cheſter (the ſonne of Dominic Cheſter merchant of Briſtol) to learn the language. Now the ſayd Andrew Barker forthwith vpon his arriuall in England, in Nouember, 1574, fraighted a ſmall ſhip (named the Speedwell of Briſtol) to goe for the Canaries with cloth and other merchandiſe of a great value. He ſent alſo one Iohn Drue of Baſtable as his Factor to make ſale and diſpoſe of the ſaid goods, who when he arriued at Tenerif, landed the marchandize, and ſent home the barke with ſome ſmall quantity of wine, making account to ſell the ſayd wares to greater aduantage in prouiding wines and ſugar for the lading of another ſhip, which Andrew Barker had appointed to ſend thither. Alſo according to this his purpoſe yͤ ſaid Andrew in March following ſent a ſhip called the Chriſtopher of Dartmouth, captaine whereof was one Henry Roberts of Briſtol: who when he had landed in Tenerif, & was in good hope to find the lading of his ſhip in a readines, cõtrary to his expectation, was ſuddenly caſt into priſon: the Spaniards alleaging that Andrew Barker was accuſed to the inquiſitiõ by Charles Cheſter, whereupon his goods were confiſcat, his factor Iohn Drue was attached, and he alſo (the ſaid captaine Roberts) being as they ſuppoſed Barkers partner, was in like ſort to be impriſoned. In fine all the foreſaid commodities appertaining to the ſaid Andrew and his brother M. Iohn Barker and others to the value of 1700 pound and vpwards (as it doth appeare by proofes of record in the Admiralty) were vtterly loſt, being confiſcat to the ſaid inquiſition. Howbeit captaine Roberts by the meanes of a frier was deliuered out of priſon (which coſt him all the marchandize he brought with him in his ſhip) and ſo returned with dead fraight to the ſumme of 200 pound that afterwards Andrew Barker diſcharged. In recompenſe of which iniurie (for that no ſuite preuaileth againſt the inquiſition of Spaine) & alſo to recouer his loſſe of the Spaniards themſelues, at his owne charge with the help of his friends hee furniſhed two barkes for the Weſt Indies, the greater of which barkes was called the Ragged ſtaffe, himſelfe being captaine, & Philip Roche Maſter thereof, the other named the Beare had one William Coxe of Limehouſe for her Maſter and captaine. And thus all our company being imbarked at Plimmouth on Whitſonday in the beginning of Iune, we ſet forward, & in our courſe we met with a ſhip of London, & afterwards with another ſhip, but tooke nothing frõ either of them. Our firſt arriual was at one of the Iſland of Cape Verde, named Del ſal, vz. the Iſle of ſalt, where we tooke certain fiſhes called Tortoiſes: and there we remained one night and halfe the day following. And from thence wee came to the

Iſle of Maio, being diſtant from Iſla del ſal, 14 or 15 leagues, where we tooke in freſh water and traffiqued with certaine Portugals inhabiting in that place, of whom we had ſome victuals for kniues and beades: and there we remained one day and one night: but our trumpetter was trecherouſly ſlaine by thoſe Portugals, in reuenge of which murther we ſet on fire two of their ſmall villages. From this Iſland wee ſhaped our courſe ouer the maine Ocean toward the Weſt Indies, and arriued happily at the Iſland of Trinidad, and had conference with certaine Indians inhabitants thereof, who gaue vs very friendly and courteous entertainement: and here we ſet vp a pinneſſe which we caried forth in the Ragged ſtaffe, and traffiqued with the foreſayd Indians for victuals. And after we had ſpent ſixe dayes in this place we departed, and arriued next at the Iſle of Margarita, where we tooke a ſmall Spaniſh ſhip hauing in her certaine pitch and 30 tuns of Canarie wines whereof we reſerued 4 or 5 tunnes to our ſelues, diſmiſſing them without any further damage. Thence (hauing remained there a day) wee ſet ſaile to the Iſland of Curaçao, where we remained a day & a night, & tooke in freſh water, at what time by the inhabitants of that Iſland (being few of them Spaniards, & the moſt part Indiãs) 14 of our men were treacherouſly hurt, but none ſlaine. And from thence we departed for the maine land Southwards, to a certain bay, and there we abode 3 daies, but nothing of any reckoning was there atchieued. From thẽce we arriued at Cape de la Vela, where grewe a contention betweene our Captaine M. Andrew Barker, and his Maſter Philip Roche, vpon compariſons made betweene them concerning the knowledge of Nauigation, and about other quarels, which quarels afterward were an occaſion of further miſchiefe. Hence we ſailed to the bay of Tulu (which is about 18 leagues Southweſtward from Carthagena) where wee tooke a Frigat and certaine treaſure therein to the value of 500 pound, namely barres of gold, and lingots of ſiluer, and ſome quantity of corriẽto or coyne in rials of plate, and certaine greene ſtones called Emeraudes, whereof one very great, being ſet in gold, was found tied ſecretly about the thigh of a frier. Here hauing ſtayed three dayes, and now being purſued by Spaniſh men of warre, wee departed with the ſayd treaſure, and left the Frigat behind vs, all which treaſure at that inſtant was committed to the keeping of our captaine Andrew Barker. From thence we paſſed to Nombre de dios, and ſo foorth to the mouth of the riuer of Chagre 18 leagues diſtant from Nombre de dios towards the Northweſt. There wee landed 10 of our men, who trauelled vp into the woods three or foure daies to ſeeke the Simerons, (which are certaine valiant Negros fled from their cruel maſters the Spaniards, and are become mortall enemies, ready to ioyne with the Engliſh and French againſt them) but in their ſearch they could find none of them. And though our men returned all free from peril of the enemie, yet the moſt part of the ſayd ten perſons preſently fell ſicke, and diuers other of our company: ſo that within 14 dayes 8 or 9 of our men died of a diſeaſe called there the Calentura, which is a hote and vehement feuer. And paſſing betweene Chagre and Veragua, we tooke a Frigat, and ſome quantity of golde wee found therein. In this Frigat were 23 Spaniards whom wee ſet on ſhore, and two Flemings, them wee brought into England with vs: wee had therein alſo foure caſt pieces of Ordinance, 3 harquebuzes on crocke, 16 Spaniſh caliuers, and a booke of Nauigation: and in this Frigat ſome of our company came homeward into England. Thus paſſing forward in our courſe, we came to Veragua, where captaine Barker, & Philip Roche his Maſter, fought vpon the foreſayd quarel, in which combat the captaine was hurt a little in the checke. Here we ſanke our Admirall the Ragged ſtaffe, becauſe of her great leakage, and imbarked part of our company in the Spaniſh Frigat, which immediately before we had ſurpriſed. From hence (by the direction of certain Indians) we ſayled into the gulfe of the Honduras: there we tooke a barke wherin were rials of plate, to the value of 100 pound, Maiz or Indian wheat, hennes, beefe and other ſmall things. In this barke alſo were certaine Spaniards, whereof one was the Scriuano or ſecretary of Carthagena, who (being a man of ſome note) was put to his ranſome, which was payd in gold: the reſt were diſmiſſed freely. And after paſſing by diuers Iſlands, we arriued at an Iſland called S. Franciſco, being in the mouth of the great bay, called the Honduras. And within two dayes next after our arriuall there, William Coxe and diuers others (which for certaine cauſes ſhalbe nameleſſe) came aboord the ſhip wherein the captaine then was, and diſpoſſeſſed him as well of the ſayd ſhip, as of the treaſure in the ſame, and forthwith put our captaine with violence on ſhore, where he and one Germane Weiborne fought together, and were both wounded. After this our captaine deſirous to come on boord, was reſiſted by the perſons aforeſayd, who anſwered him that he ſhould not come on boord till they were ready to depart. Our men had appointed ten perſons of their company for the keeping of this Iſland of S. Franciſco: but about breake of the day, on a certaine morning, ſixtie Spaniards arriuing ſecretly in the Iſland, ſurpriſed our people on the ſudden, what time there were thirtie of our men on ſhore: in which ſurpriſe, they they ſlew our captaine, M. Andrew Barker with eight others, namely, one Wilde of Briſtol, and Michael our Chirurgian, Richard of Briſtol, Thomas Sampoole, Thomas Freeman, Thomas Nightingale, Robert Iackſon, Walter Newton; and the captaines boy and one other were hurt. Now after that William Coxe, and the reſt (which were aboord the barke) perceiued that the captaine, & ſome others were ſlain, he receiued them that were liuing into the ſhip, hauing before that time refuſed ſome of them. After this miſfortune they went to an Iſland diſtant from thence a league, where Coxe deuided a chaine of gold (which was found in the captaines cheſt after his death) amongſt the company. After this Coxe went in a pineſſe (which wee tooke at the Iſle of Sant Franciſco) with certaine others of our men in a ſkyffe, to the towne of Truxillio, in the bay of Honduras, which towne they ſurpriſed, and had therein wine and oyle as much as they would, and diuers other good things, but no gold nor ſiluer, nor any other treaſure which they would confeſſe. But before they could returne to their company, thoſe that were in the barkes were had in chaſe by men of warre, whereby they were inforced euery man to ſhift for himſelfe: ſo for haſte they left thoſe that were in the ſkiffe (being 8 perſons) in the bay of Honduras: what became of them afterward God knoweth. Hereupon we determined to ſaile for Engiand, and being in the maine ſea homeward bound, about 60 leagues from the Iſle of S. Franciſco, the Frigat wherein was the treaſure for the aduenturers, and that which pertained to the captaine to the value of 2000 pound, being ouerſet with ſayle, with a flaw of wind was ouerthrowen, and all the goods therein periſhed: therein alſo were 14 perſons drowned, and nine ſaued, whereof William Coxe and William Gillam were two. After this Philip Roche, Maſter of the Admirall called the Ragged ſtaffe, died. And thus at length, (by the helpe of God) we arriued in the Iſle of Silly neere Cornwall where we left our Frigat which we built new vpon the ſhore of the Honduras, hauing in her at our landing ten botiſios of oyle, and the foure caſt Peeces that were in Iohn Oxnams Frigat (which the yeere before was taken in the ſtreit of Dariene) three harquebuzes on crocke, certaine caliuers, and certaine treaſure: Where William Cox and Andrew Browne deuided the treaſure amongſt their company, deliuering to ſome fiue pound, to ſome ſixe pound, to ſome ſeuen pound, to ſome more, as euery man was thought to haue deſerued. The barke and the reſt of the Ordinance was left in the Iſland, to the vſe of Andrew Browne. Diuers of our company, vpon our arriuall at Plimmouth were committed to priſon at the ſuite of M. Iohn Barker of Briſtol, brother vnto our captaine M. Andrew Barker, as acceſſaries to our captains death, and betrayers of him vnto the enemie. And after ſtraight examination of many of vs, by letters of direction from her Maieſties priuie Counſell, the chiefe malefactors were onely chaſtiſed with long impriſonment, where indeede before God they had deſerued to die: whereof ſome, although they eſcaped the rigor of mans law, yet could they not auoide the heauy iudgement of God, but ſhortly after came to miſerable ends. Which may be example to others to ſhew themſelues faithfull and obedient in all honeſt cauſes to their captaines and gouernours.

Rio de Ienero.

De Cabo Verde al rio de Ienero tardera quarenta dias, que vernan a ſer todos dos meſes: por manera, que eſtando el Armada todo eſte mes en Galicia, podra ſer en el rio de Ienero en fin de Deziembre.

A la entrada de la baia del Rio de Ienero ay vna baxa, adonde con facilidad ſe hara vn fuerte, en que pueden eſtar mas que quinientos hombres: y ponendole ſu artilleria, guardera el puerto, y el fuerte quedara aſſalado, que por la vna parte del ſudueſte y nordeſte tiene los dos canales, por donde entran los nauios en el puerto: En el qual podra Franciſco Draque concertar ſu Armada, y dexar alli alguna gente, y partir con la que le pareſciere, para entrar en el Mar del Sur, y yr en ſeguimiento de ſu viaje al Eſtrecho de Magallanes (que es quinientas y cinquenta leguas de aquel puerto, y eſta en cinquenta y dos grados y medio de parte del Sur) y entrar por el Eſtrecho a la Mar del Sur por todo el mes de Febrero; y yr a la ciudad de los Reys o Lima, que eſta en la coſta, y es de dos mil vezinos: y por no ſer gente de guerra, ni pueſta en milicia, y lugar abierto ſin fortaleza, ni artilleria, le podra tomar y ſaquear, y yr ſe apoderando de la tierra; pues tomando los nauios, que ay en aquella mar, no les podra entrar ſocorro de Eſpanna.

Lugar por hazer vn fuerte.

Eſtrecho de Magallanes.

Mar del Sur.

Lima es ciudad de dos mil vezinos, pero facil a tomar.

Y es de creer que ſe preuerra a tomar a Panama.

Panama.

No queriendo hazer eſte viaje, repartira ſu armada en dos vandas, y ſaqueare la yſla de San Domingo, Puerto Rico, y la coſta de Tierra firma, haſta Cartagena y Nombre de Dios. Y deſde el rio de Chagre, que es xv. leguas de Nombre de Dios, podra meter la Infanteria en lanchas de remo, y en las varcas de carga y deſcarga en a quel rio, que ſon mas de cinquenta, y llegar haſta la Venta de Cruzes, que es cinco leguas de Panama, que, por ſer lugar abierto, ſera facil a ſaquear.

La ſegunda viaje.

San Domingo.
Cartagena.
Rio de Chagre.

Panama lugar abierto y facil a ſaquear.

Y tambien corre peligro la Hauana; que aunque tiene fortaleza, es chica y flaca, y ſacando artilleria en tierra, la tomaran con facilidad.

La Hauana.

Y de mas de los dannos que podran hazer, conforme a eſte diſcorſo, no ſera el menor, cortar el hilo a la nauigacion de las Indias, a tomar las flotas, ſi alli fueren.

Tomar las flotas.

Lo que Connernia hazer para reparar eſtos dannos.

DEſpachar carauelas con grandiſſima diligencia a los virreys y gouernadores de las Indias, auertiendo les de la Nueua de la Armada Ingleſe, para que eſten preuenidos, y ſe pōgan en orden. Aunque, ſegun el numero de las Naues que han ſalido de Inglatierra, tengo por ſin duda, hauran paſſado de aquellas partes alguna banda dellas, haſta Tierra nueua. Porque la Reyna a tenido cuidado de embiar y tomar las naos de la Peſqueria del Baccalao: Y aſſi es de creer ſin duda lo de las Indias.

Y teniendo ſe conſideracion a que, por lo que ſe intiende de Inglatierra, han ſalido mas de ochenta nauios con los de Armada: Conuernia que ſu Mageſtad mandaſſe iuntar otra para buſcar la Ingleſe, y combatir con ella, ordinando que los galeones que tiene la corona deſte Reino, y los que tiene ſu Mageſtad en el Rio de Seuilla ſe adereſcan de yr oppoſito, dandoles carena, para che eſtubieſſen a punto a qualquier viaje, por largo que fueſſe: y que aſſi miſmo ſe embaraçe vn galeon del Duque de Florencia, que eſta muy bien armado y artillado, y a partido de Alicante para Cadiz, y complimiento haſta quarenta naos grueſas, que ſe hallaran en Viſcaia y Guipoſcoa: y que adereçadas, artilladas, y pueſtas en orden, como conuiene, ſe auituallen por ocho meſes, y que deſde luego ſe leuanten haſta mil marineros de Catalunna y Genoa para departir en las naues, y ſe trayen, como ſe hizo para la armada de la Terçera: y que aſſi miſmo ſe leuanten ſeys mil ſoldados, dando condutas para mas gente, que eſta, para que aya eſte numero de ſeruicio.

Quarenta naos grueſas.

Tambien conuernia, que de Viſcaia venga para eſta Armada 20 patazes, y veynte Azabras de Caſtro. Que las patazes ſean de 50 haſta 60 toneladas: y las Azabras, como las que vinieran a la Iornada de la Terçera.

Que ſe poruea el artilleria, poluere, y cuerda, y plomo neceſſario, arcabuzes, moſquetas, y picas de reſpito para la guardia de la coſta.

Conuerne hazer otra armada de dos naos cada 400 toneladas, y otras quatro de a dozientas, y quatro patazes, y mil ſoldados, de mas de la gente de mar.

Auiendo viſto y conſiderado, que en dos meſes han hecho tantos dannos los Ingleſes con los nauios de mercantes que nauegan por eſtos mares, y que es de creer que haran lo miſmo en las flotas que fueren y vinieren de las Indias, conuernia, que, como para la ordenança en tiempo de paz, lleua la armada las naos Capitana y Almirante, que lleuaſſen aora otras dos mas por lo menos en cada flota: y no por eſto ſe ha de dexar de aſegurar las con Armada.

Todas eſtas preuenciones, me pareſce, ſe deuen hazer, para ſolo lo que toca la Armada Ingleſe, y otros nauios que han ſalido de aquel Reyno.

Pero en caſo que Don Antonio Venieſe con la Armada, y quſieſe intentar lo d'eſte Reyno, ſeran meneſter las preuenciones ſiguientes.

QVe ſe apercibieſen el conde de Benauente, Marques de Soria, conde de Altamira, conde de Monte Rey, Marques de Cerraluo, y los de mas Sennores y Caualleros, a quien ſe dio orden que eſtubieſen a punto, quando ſe vino a eſte Reyno.

Que ſe exercibieſe tam bien la gente de las Ciudades de Toro, Zamora, Salamanca, cuidar para ſocorrer a la parte dentro Doro y Minno. Y las de Eſtremadura y Seuilla para ſocorrer eſta Ciudad de Lisbona, y ſu Comarca.

Que ſe auituallen los caſtillos deſta ciudad, ribera, y comarca, y prouean de poluere, cuerda, y plomo, y lo demas tocante el artilleria, como lo he pedido en las relaciones, que he embiado a ſu Mageſtad en 7 de março deſte anno 1585. Que ſe prouean las galeras por quatro meſes: y vengan otras ſeys de Eſpanna a eſte Rio con 120 ſoldados por galera, para que los pueden repartir, en las ocho que eſtan aca. Y en caſo que eſto ſe ay, que la armada Ingleſa no paſſe a las Indias, y ſe ocupen en lo deſte Reyno, porque haure nauios de Ingleſes, que acuden a lo vno y a lo otro, ſera forçoſo hazer otra armada para lo de las Indias, de doze naos, quatro patajes, y mil y quinjentos ſoldados.

Todo eſto, me pareſce, conuiene al ſeruicio de ſu Maieſtad, ſe preuéga y apercibieſe con mucha diligencia y cuidado, proueiendo del dinero neceſſario para ello, ſin que ſe aguarde lo vno a lo otro, ſiño que todo ſe haga ſin deſerirlo: Remitiendo me en todo a mejor pareſcer. Hecha en Lisboa a 26 de Otubre de 1585. Annos.

The opinion of Don Aluaro Baçan, Marques of Santa Cruz, and high Admirall of Spaine, touching the armie of ſir Francis Drake lying at the Iſles of Bayona in Galicia, written in Lisbon the 26 of October after the account of Spaine in the yere 1585.

THat which it ſeemeth vnto me, that the Engliſh army may doe, if they ſeeke to paſſe vnto the Weſt Indies, and enter into the South ſea (as Francis Drake hath done once before) with their thirty ſhips and galeons, and many pinneſſes and ſhalops with oares, which they haue with them, and 5000 men of warre, which they of Bayona thinke to be in the fleete, is as followeth.

The damage which may be done by paſſing by the riuer of Ienero into the South ſea.

They may take their courſe to the riuer of Ienero, which is on the coaſt of Braſil in 23 degrees to the South of the Equinoctial line. It is an hauen capable of many ſhips and very ſafe, where there is water, wood and fleſh: and likewiſe Drake may haue corne of Maiz in a towne two or three leagues from the ſayd hauen, which is called S. Vincente.

And becauſe the courſe is by the Iſles of Madera, the Canaries, and Cape verde, he may ſacke thoſe Iſlands, the time ſeruing him for that purpoſe.

Madera.

From Bayona to the Iſle of Madera, with the Northerne winds which now wil begin to blow, when the Weſterne winds be paſt, which preſently doe blowe becauſe that it beginneth to raine on the coaſt of Spaine, the fleete may run in 6 daies, and from thence to the Canaries in foure, and from the Canaries to the Iſles of Cape Verde in eight, which all together make eighteene dayes: and he may ſtay as much time more as ſhall ſerue him to ſacke the Iſlands in.

Canaries.

The Iſles of Cape Verde.

The riuer of Ienero.

He may ſaile from Cape Verde to the riuer of Ienero in 40 dayes, which in the whole amount vnto two moneths. So that the fleete remaining all this moneth of October on the coaſt of Galicia, it may come to the riuer of Ienero in the end of December.

A fort may bee builded on an Iſland in the mouth of the riuer of Ienero.

At the entry of the bay of the riuer of Ienero there is a flat low Iſland where a fort may very eaſily be made, wherin aboue 500 men may be left: and placing his artillery therein, he may keepe the hauen, & the fort wil be able to hold out all aſſault, becauſe that on the Southweſt and Northeaſt ſides are two chanels whereby the ſhips come into the hauen: wherein Francis Drake may repaire his army, and leaue there ſome people, and depart with ſo much of the reſt as ſhal ſeeme good vnto him to enter into the South ſea, & go on vpon his voyage to the ſtreight of Magelan, which is 550 leagues from the foreſaid hauen, and ſtandeth in 52 degrees & a halfe toward the South, and may enter by the ſtreight into the South ſea all the moneth of February, & ſo may to goe to the citie of Lima, otherwiſe called the citie de los Reys, which ſtandeth on the ſea coaſt hauing two thouſand inhabitants in it. But in reſpect that they be no warlike people nor exerciſed in armes, and becauſe the place is open and without fortreſſe & artillery, he may take and ſacke it, and make himſelf maſter on the land, & afterward taking thoſe ſhips which are in that ſea, our people can haue no ſuccour of ſhips out of Spaine, but by the ſtreight of Magelan, which is a long way about.

The ſtreight of Magelan.

The citie of Lima eaſie to bee taken, though it haue 2000 inhabitants.

The ſhips in the South ſea may be burnt.

Panama may be taken.

It is alſo very credible that he will be able to take Panama.

The ſecond courſe which indeede Drake tooke.

If he ſeeke not to take this courſe he may deuide his army into two parts, & ſacke the Iſle of S. Domingo, Puerto Rico, the coaſt of Tierra firma vnto Cartagena and Nombre de Dios.

And from the riuer of Chagre, which is fifteene leagues from Nombre de Dios, he may ſend his footemen in ſhalops with oares and in the veſſels which carrie goods vp and downe the riuer, whereof there are aboue fiftie there, and paſſe vp to the lodging of the Croſſes, called in Spaniſh Venta de Cruzes, which is fiue leagues from Panama, which becauſe it is an vnwalled towne may eaſily be taken.

Panama being an open place is eaſie to be taken.

And Hauana alſo will bee in great danger, which albeit it haue a fortreſſe, yet it is but little and weake, and bringing his great ordinance on ſhore hee may take the ſame with great facilitie.

Hauana eaſie to be taken.

And beſides theſe domages which he may do, according to this diſcourſe, it will not be the leaſt to cut off the nauigation of the Indies, to take the Weſt Indian fleet, if they chance to be there.

The Indian fleete may be taken.

What courſe is to be taken to preuent theſe miſchiefes.

To diſpatch Carauels with all poſſible diligence to the viceroyes and gouernours of the Indias, aduertiſing them of the newes of the Engliſh army, that they may be prouided, and make themſelues ready for them. Albeit, conſidering the number of ſhips which haue bene ſet foorth out of England, I aſſure my ſelfe, that ſome part of them are gone out of thoſe parts vnto Newfoundland. For the Queene hath taken carefull order to ſend to intercept the ſhips of the fiſhermen that goe to Baccalaos. And it is likewiſe to be thought that ſhee hath done the like for the intercepting of the fleet of the Indies.

Sir Barnard Drake tooke 17 sailes of the Spaniſh and Portugall fiſhers returning from Newfoundland. 1585.

And conſidering that according to our intelligence out of England, aboue fourеſcore ſhippes, and the army of Drake haue bene ſet foorth from thence, it is meete that his maieſtie ſhould prepare another army to ſeeke the Engliſh fleete, and to fight with it, commanding that the Galeons which belong to the crowne of Portugall, and thoſe of his maieſtie which lye in the riuer of Siuill bee prepared to ſend againſt them, and to giue them the Carena, that they may bee in a readineſſe for any voyage howe long ſoeuer it bee: And likewiſe to arreſt a Galeon of the Duke of Florence, which is very well armed and furniſhed with great ordinance, and paſſed lately from Alicante toward Cadiz, and to make vp the number of fortie great ſhippes, which are to bee had in Biſcay and Guipuſcoa: and that beeing rigged, armed and ſet in good order, they bee victualled for eight moneths, and that foorthwith there bee leuied a thouſand mariners of Catalunna and Genoa to bee diuided among the Fleete, and bee conducted, as they were for the Fleete of Terçera: furthermore that ſixe thouſande ſouldiers bee leuied, giuing commaundement to preſſe a greater number, to the ende that theſe may bee able men for ſeruice.

His intelligence was too true, as ſince I found in the office of the Admiraltу.

Fortie great ſhips to be prouided.

1583. Terçera was won by the Marques of Santa Cruz.

Moreouer it is needfull for this armie that 20. pataches be brought from Biſcay, and 20. Azabras from Caſtro. That the pataches bee from 50. to 60. tunnes: and that the Azabras bee like thoſe which were in the expedition to Terçera.

That ſufficient prouiſion be made of artillerie, powder, match, and lead, and harquebuzes, muskets, and choſen pikes for the keeping of the coaſt.

It is alſo meete to prouide another army of two ſhips of 400. tunnes apiece, and other foure of 200. tunnes, and foure pataches and a thouſand ſouldiers, beſides mariners.

Another army of ten ſailes.

Hauing ſeene and conſidered that the Engliſhmen with their marchants ſhips onely that trauerſe theſe ſeas haue made ſuch hauocke in two moneths, and that it is to bee thought that they will doe the like againſt the fleetes which goe and come from the Indies: it is expedient, that as by order in time of peace the fleete hath an Admirall and Viceadmirall, that now it ſhould haue two more at the leaſt in eche Fleete: and neuertheleſſe they are to bee wafted home with an armie.

The Indian fleete to be ſtrengthened with 4. ſhips of warre.

In mine opinion all theſe prouiſions ought to bee made onely in regard of the Engliſh army, and the reſt of the ſhips which haue bene ſet out of that kingdome.

But in caſe that Don Antonio ſhould come with an armie, and ſhould ſeeke to inuade this kingdome, theſe prouiſions following would be needefull.

That warning be giuen to the Conde de Beneuenta, to the Marques de Soria, to the Conde of Altamira, to the Conde of Monterey, to the Marqueſſe of Zerraluo, and to the reſt of the Lordes and Knights, which are to haue order to bee in a readineſſe, againſt hee come vnto this kingdome.

What prouiſion is to be made if Don Antonio ſhould come with an army.

That the people alſo be trained of the cities of Toro, Zamora, and Salamanca, to bee ready to ſuccour the countrey betweene the riuers of Doro and Minno: and the people of Eſtremadura and Siuilla are likewiſe to bee trained to be ready to ſuccour the citie of Lisbon, and the countrey about the ſame.

Alſo that the caſtles of this citie, riuer and territorie be victualled and prouided of gunpowder, match and lead, and all things elſe belonging to the artillerie, as I haue requeſted in the relations which I ſent vnto his maieſtie the 7. of March of this preſent yeere 1585.

An armie of 14. gallies to be prouided.

That the gallies be furniſhed for foure moneths: and that ſixe more bee brought from Spaine to this riuer of Lisbon with an hundred and twentie ſouldiers for ech gallie, that they may be deuided among the eight gallies which remaine here.

And in caſe it fall out that the armie of the Engliſh goe not for the Indies, but occupie themſelues vpon this kingdome, (for there may be Engliſh ſhips, which may attend the one and the other) we ſhal be enforced to make another armie, beſides that for the Indies, of twelue ſhips, foure pataches, and a thouſand fiue hundred ſouldiers.

Another armie of 12 great ſhips, 4. pataches, and 1500 ſouldiers.

In mine opinion all this is meet for his maieſties ſeruice to be foreſeene to be made ready with great diligence and care, and to prouide money needfull for the ſame, without neglecting the one or the other, but that all theſe things be done without delay: Referring my ſelfe in all things to thoſe of wiſer iudgement. Written in Lisbon the 26 of October, 1585.

A ſummarie and true diſcourſe of ſir Francis Drakes Weſt Indian voyage, begun in the yeere 1585. Wherein were taken the cities of Saint Iago, Santo Domingo, Cartagena, and the towne of Saint Auguſtine in Florida; Publiſhed by M. Thomas Cates.

This worthy knight for the ſeruice of his Prince and countrey hauing prepared his whole fleete, and gotten them downe to Plimmouth in Deuonſhire, to the number of fiue and twenty ſaile of ſhips and pinneſſes, and hauing aſſembled of ſouldiers and mariners, to the number of 2300. in the whole, embarked them and himſelfe at Plimmouth aforeſaid, the 12. day of September 1585, being accompanied with theſe men of name and charge, which hereafter follow:

Maſter Chriſtopher Carleil Lieutenant general, a man of long experience in the warres as well by ſea as land, who had formerly caried high offices in both kindes in many fights, which he diſcharged alwaies very happily, and with great good reputation.

Anthonie Powel Sergeant Maior.

Captaine Matthew Morgan, and Captaine Iohn Sampſon, Corporals of the field.

These officers had commandement ouer the reſt of the land-Captaines, whoſe names hereafter follow.

After our going hence, which was the fourteenth of September, in the yeere of our Lord 1585. and taking our courſe towards Spaine, wee had the winde for a fewe dayes ſomewhat ſkant, and ſometimes calme. And being arriued neere that part of Spaine, which is called the Moores, wee happened to eſpie diuers ſailes, which kept their courſe cloſe by the ſhore, the weather being faire and calme. The Generall cauſed the Viceadmirall to goe with the pinneſſes well manned to ſee what they were, who vpon ſight of the ſaid pinneſſes approching neere vnto them, abandoned for the moſt part all their ſhips (being Frenchmen) laden all with ſalt, and bound homewards into France, amongſt which ſhips (being all of ſmall burthen) there was one ſo wel liked, which alſo had no man in her, as being brought vnto yͤ general, he thought good to make ſtay of her for the ſeruice, meaning to pay for her, as alſo accordingly he performed at our returne: which barke was called the Drake. The reſt of theſe ſhips (being eight or nine) were diſmiſſed without any any thing at all taken from them. Who being afterwardes put ſomewhat farther off from the ſhore, by the contrariety of the wind, we happened to meet with ſome other French ſhips, full laden with Newland fiſh, being vpon their returne homeward from the ſaid Newfoundland: whom the Generall after ſome ſpeech had with them (and ſeeing plainly that they were Frenchmen) diſmiſſed, without once ſuffering any man to go aboord of them.

The day following ſtanding in with the ſhore againe, we diſcried another tall ſhip of twelue ſcore tunnes or thereaboutes, vpon whom Maſter Carliel the Lieutenant generall being in the Tygar, vndertooke the chaſe, whom alſo anon after the Admirall followed, and the Tygar hauing cauſed the ſaid ſtrange ſhip to ſtrike her ſailes, kept her there without ſuffering any body to go aboord vntill the Admirall was come vp: who forthwith ſending for the Maſter, and diuers others of their principall men, and cauſing them them to be ſeuerally examined, found the ſhip and goods to be belonging to the inhabitants of S. Sebaſtian in Spaine, but the mariners to bee for the moſt part belonging to S. Iohn de Luz, and the Paſſage. In this ſhip was great ſtore of dry Newland fiſh, commonly called with vs Poore Iohn, wherof afterwards (being thus found a lawfull prize) there was diſtribution made into all the ſhips of the fleet, the ſame being ſo new and good, as it did very greatly beſtead vs in the whole courſe of our voyage. A day or two after the taking of this ſhip, we put in within the Iſles of Bayon, for lacke of fauourable wind: where wee had no ſooner ankered ſome part of the fleete, but the Generall commanded all the pinneſſes with the ſhipboats to be manned, and euery man to be furniſhed with ſuch armes as were needful for that preſent ſeruice; which being done, the Generall put himſelfe into his gallie, which was alſo well furniſhed, and rowing towards the city of Bayon, with intent, and the fauour of the Almighty to ſurpriſe it, before we had aduanced one halfe league of our way, there came a meſſenger being an Engliſh merchant from the Gouernour, to ſee what ſtrange fleet we were, who came to our General, conferred a while with him, and after a ſmall time ſpent, our Generall called for Captaine Sampſon, and willed him to go to the Gouernour of the citie, to reſolue him of two points. The firſt, to know if there were any warres betweene Spaine and England. The ſecond, why our marchants with their goods were embarged or arreſted. Thus departed captain Sampſon with the ſaid meſſenger to the citie, where he found the gouernor & people much amazed of ſuch a ſudden accident.

The Iſles o Baion.

The Generall with the aduiſe and counſell of M. Carleil his Lieutenant generall, who was in the galley with him, thought not good to make any ſtand, till ſuch time as they were within the ſhot of the citie, where they might bee ready vpon the returne of Captanie Sampſon, to make a ſudden attempt if cauſe did require before it were darke.

Captaine Sampſon returned with his meſſage in this ſort. Firſt, touching peace or warres the Gouernour ſaid he knew of no warres, and that it lay not in him to make any, hee being ſo meane a ſubiect as he was. And as for the ſtay of the merchants with their goods, it was the kings pleaſure, but not with intent to endomage any man. And that the kings counter-commandement was (which had bene receiued in that place ſome ſeuennight before) that Engliſh merchants with their goods ſhould be diſcharged: for the more verifying wherof, he ſent ſuch merchãts as were in the towne of our nation, who traffiqued thoſe parts: which being at large declared to our General by them, counſell was taken what might beſt be done. And for that the night approched, it was thought needful to land our forces, which was done in the ſhutting vp of the day, & hauing quartered our ſelues to our moſt aduãtage, with ſufficient gard vpon euery ſtrait, we thought to reſt our ſelues for that night there. The Gouernour ſent vs ſome refreſhing, as bread, wine, oyle, apples, grapes, marmalad and ſuch like. About midnight the weather beganne to ouercaſt, inſomuch that it was thought meeter to repaire aboord, then to make any longer abode on land, and before wee could recouer the Fleete, a great tempeſt aroſe, which cauſed many of our ſhippes to driue from their anker-hold, and ſome were forced to ſea in great perill, as the barke Talbot, the barke

Hawkins, and the Speedewell, which Speedewel was onely driuen into England, the others recouered vs againe: the extremitie of the ſtorme laſted three dayes, which no ſooner began to aſſwage, but M. Carleil our Lieutenant generall was ſent with his owne ſhippe and three others: as alſo with the gallie and with diuers pinneſſes, to ſee what he might doe aboue Vigo, where hee tooke many boates and ſome carauels, diuerſly laden with things of ſmall value, but chiefly with houſhold ſtuffe, running into the high countrey, and amongſt the reſt, he found one boat laden with the principal church-ſtuffe of the high Church of Vigo, where alſo was their great croſſe of ſiluer, of very faire emboſſed worke, and double gilt all ouer, hauing coſt them a great maſſe of money. They complained to haue loſt in all kind of goods aboue thirty thouſand duckets in this place.

The next day the Generall with his whole fleete went from vp the Iſles of Bayon, to a very good harbour aboue Vigo, where M. Carleil ſtayed his comming, aſwell for the more quiet riding of his ſhips, as alſo for the good commoditie of freſh watering, which the place there did afourd full well. In the meane time the Gouernour of Galicia had reared ſuch forces as hee might, his numbers by eſtimate were ſome two thouſand foot, and three hundred horſe, and marched from Bayon to this part of the countrey, which lay in ſight of our fleete, where making a ſtand, he ſent to parley with our Generall, which was granted by our Generall, ſo it might bee in boats vpon the water: and for ſafetie of their perſons, there were pledges deliuered on both ſides: which done, the Gouernor of Galicia put himſelfe with two others into our Viceadmirals ſkiffe, the ſame hauing bene ſent to the ſhore for him, and in like ſort our Generall went in his owne ſkiffe; where by them it was agreed, we ſhould furniſh our ſelues with freſh water, to be taken by our owne people quietly on the land, and haue all other ſuch neceſſaries, paying for the ſame, as the place would affourd.

When all our buſineſſe was ended, wee departed, and tooke our way by the Iſlands of Canaria, which are eſteemed ſome three hundred leagues from this part of Spaine, and falling purpoſely with Palma, with intention to haue taken our pleaſure of that place, for the full digeſting of many things into order, and the better furniſhing our ſtore with ſuch ſeuerall good things as it affourdeth very abundantly, we were forced by the vile Sea-gate, which at that preſent fell out, and by the naughtineſſe of the landing place, being but one, and that vnder the fauour of many platformes well furniſhed with great ordinance, to depart with the receit of many their Canon-ſhot, ſome into our ſhips, and ſome beſides, ſome of them being in very deede full Canon high. But the only or chiefe miſchiefe was the dangerous ſea-ſurge, which at ſhore all alongſt plainly threatned the ouerthrow of as many pinneſſes and boates, as for that time ſhould haue attempted any landing at all.

Now ſeeing the expectation of this attempt fruſtrated by the cauſes aforeſaid, we thought it meeter to fall with the Iſle Hierro, to ſee if we could find any better fortune: and comming to the Iſland, we landed a thouſand men in a valley vnder a high mountaine, where we ſtayed ſome two or three houres, in which time the inhabitants, accompanied with a yong fellow borne in England, who dwelt there with them, came vnto vs, ſhewing their ſtate to be ſo poore, that they were all ready to ſtarue, which was not vntrue: and therefore without any thing gotten, we were all commanded preſently to imbarke, ſo as that night wee put off to ſea Southſoutheaſt along towards the coaſt of Barbary.

Vpon Saturday in the morning, being the 13. of Nouember, we fell with Cape Blanke, which is a low land and ſhallow water, where we catched ſtore of fiſh, and doubling the Cape, we put into the Bay, where we found certaine French ſhips of warre, whom wee entertained with great courteſie, and there left them. This afternoone the whole fleet aſſembled, which was a little ſcattered about their fiſhing, and put from thence to the Iſles of Cape Verde, ſailing till the 16. of the ſame moneth in the morning, on which day we diſcried the Iſland of S. Iago, and in the euening we ankered the fleet between the towne called the Playa or Praya, and S. Iago, where we put on ſhore 1000. men or more, vnder the leading of M. Chriſtopher Carleil Lieutenant general, who directed the ſeruice moſt like a wiſe commander. The place where we had firſt to march did afourd no good order, for the ground was mountainous & full of dales, being a very ſtony and troubleſome paſſage; but ſuch was his induſtrious diſpoſition, as he would neuer leaue, vntill wee had gottē vp to a faire plain, where we made ſtand for the aſſembling of the army. And when we were al gathered together vpon the plaine, ſome 2 miles from the town, the lieutenant general thought good not to make attēpt til daylight: becauſe there was not one that could ſerue for guid or giuing knowledge at al of yͤ place. And therfore after hauing wel reſted, euen halfe an houre before day, he commanded the army to be diuided into 3 ſpeciall parts, ſuch as he appointed, wheras before we had marched by ſeueral cōpanies, being therunto forced by the badneſſe of the way as is aforeſaid, Now by the time wee were thus ranged into a very braue order, daylight began to appeare, and being aduanced hard to the wall, we ſaw no enemie to reſiſt, whereupon the Lieutenant generall appointed Captaine Sampſon with thirtie ſhot, and Captaine Barton with other thirtie, to goe downe into the towne which ſtood in the valley vnder vs, and might very plainely bee viewed all ouer from that place where the whole Army was now arriued: and preſently after theſe Captaines was ſent the great enſigne, which had nothing in it but the plaine Engliſh croſſe, to be placed towardes the Sea, that our Fleet might ſee Saint Georges croſſe floriſh in the enemies fortreſſe. Order was giuen that all the ordinance throughout the towne and vpon all the platformes, which were aboue fiftie pieces all ready charged, ſhould be ſhot off in honour of the Queenes Maieſties coronation day, being the ſeuenteenth of Nouember, after the yeerely cuſtome of England, which was ſo anſwered againe by the ordinance out of all the ſhips in the fleete which now was come neere, as it was ſtrange to heare ſuch a thundering noyſe laſt ſo long together. In this meane while the Lieutenant generall held ſtill the moſt part of his force on the hill top, till ſuch time as the towne was quartered out for the lodging of the whole Armie: which being done euery captaine tooke his owne quarter, and in the euening was placed ſuch a ſufficient gard vpon euery part of the towne that we had no cauſe to feare any preſent enemie.

Thus we continued in the citie the ſpace of 14. dayes, taking ſuch ſpoiles as the place yeelded, which were for the moſt part, wine, oyle, meale, and ſome ſuch like things for victuall, as vineger, oliues, and ſome ſuch other traſh, as merchandiſe for their Indians trades. But there was not found any treaſure at all, or any thing elſe of worth beſides.

The citie of S. Iago taken and poſſeſſed for 14. dayes.

The ſituation of S. Iago is ſomewhat ſtrange, in forme like a triangle, hauing on the Eaſt and Weſt ſides two mountaines of rocke and cliffe, as it were hanging ouer it, vpon the top of which two mountaines were builded certaine fortifications to preſerue the towne from any harme that might bee offered, as in a plot is plainely ſhewed. From thence, on the South ſide of the towne is the maine ſea, and on the North ſide, the valley lying betweene the foreſayd mountaines, wherein the towne ſtandeth: the ſaid valley & towne both do grow very narrow, inſomuch that the ſpace betweene the two cliffes of this end of the towne is eſtimated not to be aboue 10. or 12. ſcore ouer.

In the middeſt of the valley commeth downe a riueret, rill, or brooke of freſh water, which hard by the ſea ſide maketh a pond or poole, whereout our ſhips were watered with very great eaſe and pleaſure. Somewhat aboue the towne on the North ſide betweene the two mountains, the valley waxeth ſomewhat larger then at the townes end, which valley is wholly conuerted into gardens and orchards well repleniſhed with diuers ſorts of fruites, herbes and trees, as lymmons, orenges, ſugar-canes, cochars or cochos nuts, plantans, potato-rootes, cucumbers, ſmall and round onions, garlicke, and ſome other things not now remembred, amongſt which the cochos nuts, and plantans are very pleaſant fruites, the ſaide cochos hath a hard ſhell and a greene huſke ouer it, as hath our walnut, but it farre exceedeth in greatneſſe, for this cochos in his greene huſke is bigger then any mans two fiſtes: of the hard ſhell many drinking cups are made here in England, and ſet in ſiluer as I haue often ſeene.

Next within this hard ſhell is a white rine reſembling in ſhewe very much euen as any thing may do, to the white of an egge when it is hard boyled. And within this white of the nut lyeth a water, which is whitiſh and very cleere, to the quantitie of halfe a pynt or thereaboutes, which water and white rine before ſpoken of, are both of a very coole freſh taſt, and as pleaſing as any thing may be. I haue heard ſome hold opinion, that it is very reſtoratiue.

The plantan groweth in cods, ſomewhat like to beanes, but is bigger and longer, and much more thicke together on the ſtalke, and when it waxeth ripe, the meate which filleth the rine of the cod becommeth yellow, and is exceeding ſweet and pleaſant.

In this time of our being there hapned to come a Portugall to the Weſterne fort, with a flag of truce, to whom Captaine Sampſon was ſent with Captaine Goring, who comming to the ſaid meſſenger, he firſt aſked them what nation they were, they anſwered Engliſhmen, hee then required to knowe if warres were betweene England and Spaine, to which they anſwered that they knew not, but if he would goe to their Generall he could beſt reſolue him of ſuch particulars, and for his aſſurance of paſſage and repaſſage, theſe Captaines made offer to ingage their credits, which he refuſed for that he was not ſent from his Gouernor. Then they told him, if his Gouernor did deſire to take a courſe for the common benefit of the people and countrey, his beſt way were to come and preſent himſelfe vnto our noble and mercifull Gouernour ſir Francis Drake, whereby hee might bee aſſured to find fauour, both for himſelfe and the inhabitantes. Otherwiſe within three dayes wee ſhould march ouer the land, and conſume with fire all inhabited places, and put to the ſword all ſuch liuing ſoules as wee ſhoulde chance vpon: ſo thus much hee tooke for the concluſion of his anſwere, and departing, hee promiſed to returne the next day, but we neuer heard more of him.

Upon the foure and twentieth of Nouember, the Generall accompanied with the lieutenant generall and ſixe hundred men marched foorth to a village twelue miles within the land, called Saint Domingo, where the Gouernour and the Biſhoppe with all the better ſort were lodged, and by eight of the clocke wee came to it, finding the place abandoned, and the people fled into the mountaines: ſo we made ſtand a while to eaſe our ſelues, and partly to ſee if any would come to ſpeake to vs.

After we had well reſted our ſelues, the Generall commaunded the troupes to march away homewards, in which retreat the enemie ſhewed themſelues, both horſe and foote, though not ſuch force as durſt encounter vs: and ſo in paſſing ſometime at the gaſe with them, it waxed late and towards night before we could recouer home to S. Iago.

On Munday the ſixe and twentieth of Nouember, the Generall commaunded all the pinneſſes with the boates, to vſe all diligence to imbarke the Armie into ſuch ſhippes as euery man belonged. The Lieutenant generall in like ſort commanded Captaine Goring and Lieutenant Tucker, with one hundred ſhot to make a ſtand in the market place, vntill our forces were wholly imbarked, the viceadmiral making ſtay with his pinneſſe & certaine boats in the harbour, to bring the ſayd laſt companie aboord the ſhips. Alſo the Generall willed forthwith the gallie with two pinneſſes to take into them the company of Captaine Barton, and the company of Captaine Bigs, vnder the leading of captaine Sampſon, to ſeeke out ſuch munition as was hidden in the ground, at the towne of Praya or Playa, hauing bene promiſed to be ſhewed it by a priſoner, which was taken the day before.

The Captaines aforeſayd comming to the Playa, landed their men, and hauing placed the troupe in their beſt ſtrength, Captaine Sampſon tooke the priſoner, and willed him to ſhewe that hee had promiſed, the which he could not, or at leaſt would not: but they ſearching all ſuſpected places, found two pieces of ordinance, one of yron, an other of braſſe. In the after noone the Generall ankered with the reſt of the Fleet before the Playa, comming himſelfe aſhore, willing vs to burne the towne and make all haſte aboord, the which was done by ſixe of the clocke the ſame day, and our ſelues imbarked againe the ſame night, and ſo we put off to Sea Southweſt.

A wiſe courſe to be imitated in all great actions.

But before our departure from the towne of S. Iago, wee eſtabliſhed orders for the better gouernment of the Army, euery man muſtered to his captaine, and othes were miniſtred to acknowledge her Maieſtie ſupreme Gouernour, as alſo euery man to doe his vttermoſt endeuour to aduance the ſeruice of the action, and to yeeld due obedience vnto the directions of the Generall and his officers. By this prouident counſell, and laying downe this good foundation before hand, all things went forward in a due courſe, to the atchieuing of our happy enterpriſe.

The treaſon of the Portugals againſt M. William Hawkins.

In all the time of our being here, neither the Gouernour for the king of Spaine, (which is a Portugall) neither the Biſhop, whoſe authoritie is great, neither the inhabitants of the towne, or Iſland euer came at vs (which we expected they ſhould haue done) to intreate vs to leaue them ſome part of their needfull prouiſions, or at the leaſt, to ſpare the ruining of their towne at our going away. The cauſe of this their vnreaſonable diſtruſt (as I doe take it) was the freſh remembrance of the great wrongs they had done to old M. William Hawkins of Plimmouth, in the voyage he made 4. or 5. yeeres before, when as they did both breake their promiſe, and murthered many of his men, whereof I iudge you haue vnderſtood, & therefore it is needleſſe to be repeated. But ſince they came not at vs, we left written in ſundry places, as alſo in the ſpittle houſe, (which building was only appointed to be ſpared) the great diſcontentment & ſcorne we tooke at this their refraining to come vnto vs, as alſo at the rude maner of killing, & ſauage kind of handling the dead body of one of our boyes found by them ſtragling al alone, from whom they had taken his head and heart, and had ſtragled the other bowels about the place, in a moſt brutiſh and beaſtly maner.

In reuenge whereof at our departing we conſumed with fire all the houſes, aſwell in the countrey which we ſaw, as in the towne of S. Iago.

From hence putting off to the Weſt Indies, wee were not many dayes at Sea, but there beganne among our people ſuch mortalitie, as in fewe dayes there were dead aboue two or three hundred men. And vntill ſome ſeuen or eight dayes after our comming from S. Iago, there had not died any one man of ſickneſſe in all the fleete: the ſickneſſe ſhewed not his infection wherewith ſo many were ſtroken, vntill we were departed thence, and then ſeazed our people with extreme hot burning and continuall agues, whereof very fewe eſcaped with life, and yet thoſe for the moſt part not without great alteration and decay of their wittes and ſtrength for a long time after. In ſome that died were plainely ſhewed the ſmall ſpots, which are often found vpon thoſe that be infected with the plague: wee were not aboue eighteene dayes in paſſage betweene the ſight of Saint Iago aforeſaid, and the Iſland of Dominica, being the firſt Iſland of the Weſt Indies that we fell withall, the ſame being inhabited with ſauage people, which goe all naked, their ſkinne coloured with ſome painting of a reddiſh tawney, very perſonable and handſome ſtrong men, who doe admit litle conuerſation with the Spanyards: for as ſome of our people might vnderſtand them, they had a Spaniard or twaine priſoners with them, neither doe I thinke that there is any ſafetie for any of our nation, or any other to be within the limits of their commandement, albeit they vſed vs very kindly for thoſe few houres of time which wee ſpent with them, helping our folkes to fill and cary on their bare ſhoulders freſh water from the riuer to our ſhips boates, and fetching from their houſes great ſtore of Tabacco, as alſo a kind of bread which they fed on, called Caſſaui, very white and ſauourie, made of the rootes of Caſſaui. In recompence whereof, we beſtowed liberall rewards of glaſſe, coloured beades, and other things, which we had found at Saint Iago, wherewith (as it ſeemed) they reſted very greatly ſatiſfied, and ſhewed ſome ſorowfull countenance when they perceiued that we would depart.

From hence wee went to another Iſland Weſtward of it, called Saint Chriſtophers Iſland, wherein we ſpent ſome dayes of Chriſtmas, to refreſh our ſicke people, and to cleanſe and ayre our ſhips. In which Iſland were not any people at all that we could heare of.

In which time by the Generall it was aduiſed and reſolued, with the conſent of the Lieutenant generall, the Vice-admirall, and all the reſt of the Captaines to proceede to the great Iſlande of Hiſpaniola, aſwell for that we knewe our ſelues then to bee in our beſt ſtrength, as alſo the rather allured thereunto, by the glorious fame of the citie of S. Domingo, being the ancienteſt and chiefe inhabited place in all the tract of Countrey thereabouts. And ſo proceeding in this determination, by the way we mette a ſmall Frigat, bound for the ſame place, the which the Vice-admirall tooke: and hauing duely examined the men that were in her, there was one found, by whom wee were aduertiſed, the Hauen to be a barred Hauen, and the ſhore or land thereof to bee well fortified, hauing a Caſtle thereupon furniſhed with great ſtore of Artillerie, without the danger whereof was no conuenient landing place within ten Engliſh miles of the Citie, to which the ſayd Pilot tooke vpon him to conduct vs.

All things being thus conſidered on, the whole forces were commaunded in the Euening to embarke themſelues in Pinneſſes, boats, and other ſmall barkes appoynted for this ſeruice. Our ſouldiers being thus imbarked, the Generall put himſelfe into the barke Francis as Admirall, and all this night we lay on the ſea, bearing ſmall ſaile vntill our arriuall to the landing place, which was about the breaking of the day, and ſo we landed, beeing Newyeeres day, nine or ten miles to the Weſtwards of that braue Citie of S. Domingo: for at that time nor yet is knowen to vs any landing place, where the ſea-ſurge doth not threaten to ouerſet a Pinneſſe or boate. Our Generall hauing ſeene vs all landed in ſafetie, returned to his Fleete, bequeathing vs to God, and the good conduct of Maſter Carliell our Lieutenant Generall: at which time, being about eight of the clocke, we began to march, and about noone time, or towards one of the clocke, we approched the towne, where the Gentlemen and thoſe of the better ſort, being ſome hundred and fiftie braue horſes or rather more, began to preſent themſelues; but our ſmall ſhot played vpon them, which were ſo ſuſteined with good proportion of pikes in all parts, as they finding no part of our troope vnprepared to receiue them (for you muſt vnderſtand they viewed all round about) they were thus driuen to giue vs leaue to proceed towards the two gates of the towne, which were the next to the ſeaward. They had manned them both, and planted their ordinance for that preſent, and ſudden alarme without the gate, and alſo ſome troopes of ſmall ſhot in Ambuſcado vpon the hie way ſide. We diuided our whole force, being ſome thouſand or twelue hundred men into two partes, to enterpriſe both the gates at one inſtant, the Lieutenant Generall hauing openly vowed to Captaine Powel (who led the troope that entred the other gate) that with Gods good fauour he would not reſt vntill our meeting in the market place.

Their ordinance had no ſooner diſcharged vpon our neere approch, and made ſome execution amongſt vs, though not much, but the Lieutenant generall began forthwith to aduance both his voyce of encouragement, and pace of marching; the firſt man that was ſlaine with the ordinance being very neere vnto himſelfe: and thereupon haſted all that hee might, to keepe them from the recharging of the ordinance. And notwithſtanding their Ambuſcados, we marched or rather ran ſo roundly in to them, as pell mell wee entred the gates, and gaue them more care euery man to ſaue himſelfe by flight, then reaſon to ſtand any longer to their broken fight. Wee forthwith repayred to the market place: but to be more truely vnderſtood, a place of very faire ſpacious ſquare ground, whither alſo came as had bene agreed Captaine Powel with the other troope: which place place with ſome part next vnto it, we ſtrengthened with Barricados, and there as the moſt conuenient place aſſured our ſelues, the Citie being farre too ſpacious for ſo ſmall and weary a troope to vndertake to guarde. Somewhat after midnight, they who had the guard of the Caſtle, hearing vs buſie about the gates of the ſaid Caſtle, abandoned the ſame: ſome being taken priſoners, and ſome fleeing away by the helpe of boates to the other ſide of the Hauen, and ſo into the countrey.

The next day we quartered a litle more at large, but not into the halfe part of the towne, and ſo making ſubſtantiall trenches, and planting all the ordinance, that ech part was correſpondent to other, we held this towne the ſpace of one moneth.

In the which time happened ſome accidents, more then are well remembred for the preſent, but amongſt other things, it chanced that the Generall ſent on his meſſage to the Spanyards a Negro boy with a flagge of white, ſignifying truce, as is the Spanyards ordinarie maner to doe there, when they approch to ſpeake to vs: which boy vnhappily was firſt mette withall by ſome of thoſe, who had bene belonging as officers for the King in the Spaniſh Galley, which with the Towne was lately fallen into our hands, who without all order or reaſon, & contrary to that good vſage wherewith wee had intertained their meſſengers, furiouſly ſtrooke the poore boy thorow the body with one of their horſemens ſtaues: with which wound the boy returned to the General, and after hee had declared the maner of this wrongfull crueltie, died foorthwith in his preſence, wherewith the Generall being greatly paſſioned, commaunded the Prouoſt Martiall, to cauſe a couple of Friers then priſoners, to be caried to the ſame place where the boy was ſtroken, accompanied with ſufficient guard of our ſouldiers, and there preſently to be hanged, diſpatching at the ſame inſtant another poore priſoner, with this reaſon wherefore this execution was done, & with this meſſage further, that vntill the party who had thus murdered the Generals meſſenger were deliuered into our hands, to receiue condigne puniſhment, there ſhould no day paſſe, wherein there ſhould not two priſoners be hanged, vntil they were all conſumed which were in our hands.

Whereupon the day following, hee that had bene Captaine of the kings Galley, brought the offendor to the townes ende, offring to deliuer him into our hands; but it was thought to be a more honourable reuenge to make them there in our ſight, to performe the execution themſelues: which was done accordingly.

During our being in this towne, as formerly alſo at S. Iago there had paſſed iuſtice vpon the life of one of our owne company for an odious matter, ſo heere likewiſe was there an Iriſhman hanged, for the murthering of his Corporall.

In this time alſo paſſed many treaties betweene their Commiſſioners and vs, for ranſome of their Citie; but vpon diſagreements we ſtill ſpent the early mornings in fiering the outmoſt houſes: but they being built very magnificently of ſtone, with high loftes, gaue vs no ſmall trauell to ruine them. And albeit for diuers dayes together we ordeined ech morning by day breake, vntil the heat began at nine of the clocke, that two hundred Mariners did nought els but labour to fire and burne the ſaid houſes without our trenches, whilſt the ſouldiers in a like proportion ſtood forth for their guard: yet did wee not, or could not in this time conſume ſo much as one third part of the towne: which towne is plainely deſcribed and ſet forth in a certaine Map. And ſo in the end, what wearied with firing, and what haſtened by ſome other reſpects, wee were contented to accept of fiue and twentie thouſand Ducats of fiue ſhillings ſixe pence the peece, for the ranſome of the reſt of the towne.

Moſt vnſatiable Spaniſh ambition.

Amongſt other things which happened and were found at S. Domingo, I may not omit to let the world know one very notable marke & token of the vnſatiable ambition of the Spaniſh king and his nation, which was found in the kings houſe, wherein the chiefe gouernour of that Citie and Countrey is appoynted alwayes to lodge, which was this: In the comming to the Hall or other roomes of this houſe, you muſt firſt aſcend vp by a faire large paire of ſtaires; at the head of which ſtaires is a handſome ſpacious place to walke in, ſomewhat like vnto a gallery: wherein vpon one of the wals, right ouer againſt you as you enter the ſaid place, ſo as your eye cannot eſcape the ſight of it, there is deſcribed & painted in a very large Scutchion the armes of the king of Spaine, and in the lower part of the ſaid Scutchion, there is likewiſe deſcribed a Globe, conteining in it the whole circuit of the ſea and the earth, whereupon is a horſe ſtanding on his hinder part within the globe, and the other fore-part without the globe, lifted vp as it were to leape, with a ſcroll painted in his mouth, wherein was written theſe words in Latin, Non ſufficit orbis: which is as much to ſay, as the world ſufficeth not. Whereof the meaning was required to be knowen of ſome of thoſe of the better ſort, that came in commiſſion to treate vpon the ranſome of the towne, who would ſhake their heads, and turne aſide their countenance in ſome ſmiling ſort, without anſwering any thing, as greatly aſhamed thereof. For by ſome of our company it was tolde them, that if the Queene of England would reſolutely proſecute the warres againſt the king of Spaine, hee ſhould be forced to lay aſide that proude and vnreaſonable reaching vaine of his: for hee ſhould finde more then inough to doe to keepe that which hee had alreadie, as by the preſent example of their loſt towne they might for a beginning perceiue well inough.

Now to the ſatiſfying of ſome men, who maruell greatly that ſuch a famous and goodly builded Citie ſo well inhabited of gallant people, very braue in their apparell (whereof our ſouldiers found good ſtore for their reliefe) ſhould afoord no greater riches then was found there: herein it is to be vnderſtood that the Indian people, which were the naturals of this whole Iſland of Hiſpaniola (the ſame being neere hand as great as England) were many yeeres ſince cleane conſumed by the tyrannie of the Spanyards, which was yͤ cauſe, that for lacke of people to worke in the Mines, the golde and ſiluer Mines of this Iſland are wholy giuen ouer, and thereby they are faine in this Iſland to vſe Copper money, whereof was found very great quantitie. The chiefe trade of this place conſiſteth of Sugar and Ginger, which groweth in the Iſland, and of Hides of oxen and kine, which in this waſte countrey of the Iſland are bredde in infinite numbers, the ſoyle being very fertile: and the ſayd beaſts are fedde vp to a very large grouth, and ſo killed for nothing ſo much, as for their Hides aforeſayd. Wee found heere great ſtore of ſtrong wine, ſweete oyle, vineger, oliues, and other ſuch like prouiſions, as excellent Wheate-meale packed vp in wine-pipes and other caſke, and other commodities likewiſe, as Woollen and Linnen cloth, and ſome Silkes: all which prouiſions are brought out of Spaine, and ſerued vs for great reliefe. There was but a little Plate or veſſell of Siluer, in compariſon of the great pride in other things of this towne, becauſe in theſe hotte Countreys they vſe much of thoſe earthen diſhes finely painted or varniſhed, which they call Porcellana, which is had out of the Eaſt India: & for their drinking, they vſe glaſſes altogether, whereof they make excellent good and faire in the ſame place. But yet ſome place we found, and many other good things, as their houſhold garniture very gallant and rich, which had coſt them deare, although vnto vs they were of ſmall importance.

From Saint Domingo we put ouer to the maine or firme land, and going all alongſt the coaſt, we came at the laſt in ſight of Cartagena, ſtanding vpõ the ſea ſide, ſo neere, as ſome of our barks in paſſing alongſt, approched within the reach of their Culuerin ſhot, which they had planted vpon certaine platformes. The Harbour mouth lay ſome three miles toward the Weſtward of the towne, whereinto wee entred about three or foure of the clocke in the afternoone without any reſiſtance of ordinance, or other impeachment planted vpon the ſame. In the Euening wee put our ſelues on land towards the harbour mouth, vnder the leading of Maſter Carliell our Lieutenant Generall, who after hee had digeſted vs to march forwarde about midnight, as eaſily as foote might fall, expreſly commanded vs to keepe cloſe by the ſea-waſh of the ſhore for our beſt & ſureſt way, whereby we were like to goe through, and not to miſſe any more of the way, which once wee had loſt within an houre after our firſt beginning to march, through the ſlender knowledge of him that tooke vpon him to be our guide, whereby the night ſpent on, which otherwiſe muſt haue bene done by reſting. But as we came within ſome two miles of the towne, their horſemen which were ſome hundred, met vs, and taking the alarme, retired to their townward againe vpon the firſt volley of our ſhot that was giuen them: for the place where wee encountred being woody and buſhy euen to the water ſide was vnmeete for their ſeruice.

Cartagena.

At this inſtant we might heare ſome pieces of Artillerie diſcharged, with diuers ſmall ſhot towards the harbour, which gaue vs to vnderſtand, according to the order ſet downe in the Euening before by our Generall, that the Vice-admirall accompanied with Captaine Venner, Captaine White, and Captaine Croſſe, with other ſea Captaines, and with diuers Pinneſſes and boates ſhould giue ſome attempt vnto the litle Fort ſtanding on the entrie of the inner Hauen, neere adioyning to the towne, though to ſmall purpoſe, for that the place was ſtrong, and the entry very narrow was chained ouer: ſo as there could be nothing gotten by the attempt, more then the giuing of them an alarme on that other ſide of the Hauen being a mile and a halfe from the place we now were at. In which attempt the Vice-admirall had the rudder of his ſkiffe ſtroken through with a Saker ſhot, and a litle or no harme receiued elſewhere.

The troopes being now in their march, halfe a myle behither the Towne or leſſe, the ground we were on grewe to bee ſtreight, and not aboue fiftie paces ouer, hauing the maine Sea on the one ſide of it, and the harbour-water or inner ſea (as you may tearme it) on the other ſide, which in the plot is plainely ſhewed. This ſtreight was fortified cleane ouer with a ſtone wall and a ditch without it: the ſayd wall being as orderly built with flanking in euery part, as can be ſet downe. There was onely ſo much of this ſtreight vnwalled, as might ſerue for the iſſuing of the horſemen, or the paſſing of caryage in time of neede: but this vnwalled part was not without a very good Barricado of wine-buts or pipes, filled with earth, full and thicke as they might ſtand on ende one by another, ſome part of them ſtanding euen within the maine ſea.

This place of ſtrength was furniſhed with ſixe great peeces, Demi-culuerins, and Sakers, which ſhotte directly in front vpon vs as wee approched. Now without this wall vpon the inner ſide of the ſtreight, they had brought likewiſe two great Galleis with their prowes to the ſhore, hauing planted in them eleuen peeces of ordinance, which did beate all croſſe the ſtreight, and flanked our comming on. In theſe two Galleis were planted three or foure hundred ſmall ſhot, and on the land in the guard onely of this place, three hundred ſhot and pikes.

They in this their full readineſſe to receiue vs, ſpared not their ſhot both great and ſmall. But our Lieutenant generall, taking the aduantage of the darke (the day light as yet not broken out) approched by the loweſt ground, according to the expreſſe direction which himſelfe had formerly giuen, the ſame being the ſea-waſh ſhore, where the water was ſomewhat fallen, ſo as moſt of all their ſhot was in vaine. Our Lieutenant generall commanded our ſhot to forbeare ſhooting vntill we were come to the wall ſide, and ſo with pikes roundly together we approched the place, where we ſoone found out the Barricados of pipes or buts, to be the meeteſt place for our aſſault, which, notwithſtanding it was well furniſhed with pikes and ſhot, was without ſtaying attempted by vs: downe went the buts of earth, and pell mell came our ſwordes and pikes together, after our ſhot had firſt giuen their volley, euen at the enemies noſe. Our pikes were ſomewhat longer then theirs, and our bodies better armed; for very few of them were armed: with which aduantage our ſwordes and pikes grew too hard for them, and they driuen to giue place. In this furious entry, the Lieutenant generall ſlew with his owne hands the chiefe Enſigne bearer of the Spaniards, who fought very manfully to his liues end.

We followed into the towne with them, and giuing them no leaſure to breath, we wanne the Market-place, albeit they made head, and fought a while before we got it, and ſo wee being once ſeazed and aſſured of that, they were content to ſuffer vs to lodge within their towne, and themſelues to goe to their wiues, whom they had caryed into other places of the countrey before our comming thither.

At euery ſtreetes end they had raiſed very fine Baricados of earth-workes, with trenches without them, as well made as euer we ſaw any worke done: at the entring whereof was ſome litle reſiſtance, but ſoone ouercome it was, with few ſlaine or hurt. They had ioyned with them many Indians, whom they had placed in corners of aduantage, all bowmen, with their arrowes moſt villanouſly empoyſoned, ſo as if they did but breake the ſkinne, the partie ſo touched died without great maruell: ſome they ſlew of our people with their arrowes: ſome they likewiſe miſchieued to death with certaine pricks of ſmall ſticks ſharply pointed, of a foote and a halfe long, the one ende put into the ground, the other empoyſoned, ſticking faſt vp, right againſt our comming in the way, as we ſhould approch from our landing towardes the towne, whereof they had planted a wonderfull number in the ordinarie way: but our keeping the ſea-waſh ſhore miſſed the greateſt part of them very happily.

Alonſo Brauo the gouernour of Cartagena taken.

I ouerpaſſe many particular matters, as the hurting of Captaine Sampſon at ſword blowes in the firſt entring, vnto whom was committed the charge of the pikes of the Vantguard by his lot and turne; as alſo of the taking of Alonſo Brauo the chiefe commander of that place by Captaine Goring, after the ſaid captaine had firſt hurt him with his ſword: vnto which Captaine was committed the charge of the ſhot of the ſayd Vantguard.

Captaine Winter was likewiſe by his turne of the Vantguard in this attempt, where alſo the Lieutenant generall marched himſelfe: the ſaid Captaine Winter through a great deſire to ſerue by land, hauing now exchanged his charge by ſea with Captaine Cecil for his band of footemen.

Captaine Powel the Sergeant maior had by his turne the charge of the foure companies which made the battaile.

Captaine Morgan, who at S. Domingo was of the Vantguard, had now by turne his charge vpon the companies of the Rereward.

Euery man as well of one part as of another, came ſo willingly on to the ſeruice, as the enemie was not able to endure the furie of ſuch hot aſſault.

We ſtayed here ſixe weekes, and the ſickneſſe with mortalitie before ſpoken of ſtill continued among vs, though not with the ſame furie as at the firſt: and ſuch as were touched with the ſayde ſickneſſe, eſcaping death, very few or almoſt none could recouer their ſtrength: yea, many of them were much decayed in their memorie, inſomuch that it was growen an ordinarie iudgement, when one was heard to ſpeake fooliſhly, to ſay he had bene ſicke of the Calentura, which is the Spaniſh name of their burning Ague: for as I tolde you before, it is a very burning and peſtilent ague. The originall cauſe thereof, is imputed to the Euening or firſt night ayre, which they tearme La ſerena, wherein they ſay and hold very firme opinion, that who ſo is then abroad in the open ayre, ſhall certainly be infected to the death, not being of the Indian or naturall race of thoſe countrey people: by holding their watch, our men were thus ſubiected to the infectious ayre, which at S. Iago was moſt dangerous and deadly of all other places.

With the inconuenience of continuall mortalitie, we were forced to giue ouer our intended enterpriſe, to goe with Nombre de Dios, and ſo ouerland to Panama, where we ſhould haue ſtrooken the ſtroke for the treaſure, and full recompence of our tedious trauailes. And thus at Cartagena wee tooke our firſt reſolution to returne homewardes: the forme of which reſolution I thought good here to put downe vnder the principall Captaines hands, as followeth.

A reſolution of the Land-captaines, what courſe they thinke moſt expedient to bee taken. Giuen at Cartagena the xxvij of Februarie 1585.

Whereas it hath pleaſed the Generall to demaund the opinions of his Captaines what courſe they thinke moſt expedient to be now vndertaken, the Land-captaines being aſſembled by themſelues together, and hauing aduiſed hereupon, doe in three ponits deliuer the ſame.

The firſt, touching the keeping of the towne againſt the force of the enemie, either that which is preſent, or that which may come out of Spaine, is anſwered thus.

We holde opinion, that with this troope of men which we haue preſently with vs in land-ſeruice, being victualled and munitioned, wee may well keepe the Towne, albeit that of men able to anſwere preſent ſeruice, we haue not aboue 700. The reſidue being ſome 150. men by reaſon of their hurts and ſickneſſe are altogether vnable to ſtand vs in any ſtead: wherefore hereupon the Sea-captaines are likewiſe to giue their reſolution, how they will vndertake the ſafetie and ſeruice of the Shippes vpon the arriuall of any Spaniſh Fleete.

The ſecond poynt we make to be this, whether it bee meete to goe preſently homeward, or els to continue further tryall of our fortune in vndertaking ſuch like enterpriſes as we haue done already, and thereby to ſeeke after that bountifull maſſe of treaſure for recompence of our trauailes, which was generally expected at our comming forth of England: wherein we anſwere.

That it is well knowen how both we and the ſouldiers are entred into this action as voluntarie men, without any impreſt or gage from her Maieſtie or any body els: and foraſmuch as we haue hitherto diſcharged the parts of honeſt men, ſo that now by the great bleſſing and fauour of our good God there haue bin taken three ſuch notable townes, wherein by the eſtimation of all men would haue bene found ſome very great treaſures, knowing that S. Iago was the chiefe citie of all the Ilands and traffiques thereabouts, S. Domingo the chiefe citie of Hiſpaniola, and the head gouernment not only of that Iland, but alſo of Cuba, and of all the Ilands about it, as alſo of ſuch inhabitations of the firme land, as were next vnto it, & a place that is both magnificently builded, and interteineth great trades of marchandiſe; and now laſtly the citie of Cartagena, which cannot be denied to be one of the chiefe places of moſt eſpeciall importance to the Spaniard of all the cities which be on this ſide of the Weſt India: we doe therefore conſider, that ſince all theſe cities, with their goods & priſoners taken in them, and the ranſoms of the ſaid cities being all put together are found farre ſhort to ſatiſfie that expectation which by the generality of the enterpriſers was firſt conceiued: And being further aduiſed of the ſlenderneſſe of our ſtrength, whereunto we be now reduced, aſwell in reſpect of the ſmall number of able bodies, as alſo not a litle in regard of the ſlacke diſpoſition of the greater part of thoſe which remaine, very many of the better mindes and men being either conſumed by death, or weakened by ſicknes and hurts: And laſtly, ſince that as yet there is not laid downe to our knowledge any ſuch enterpriſe as may ſeeme conuenient to be vndertaken with ſuch few as we are preſently able to make, and withall of ſuch certaine likelihoode, as with Gods good ſucceſſe which it may pleaſe him to beſtow vpon vs, the ſame may promiſe to yeeld vs any ſufficient contentment: We doe therefore conclude hereupon, that it is better to hold ſure as we may the honour already gotten, and with the ſame to returne towards our gracious Soueraigne and Countrey, from whence if it ſhall pleaſe her Maieſtie to ſet vs foorth againe with her orderly meanes and intertainment, we are moſt ready and willing to goe through with any thing that the vttermoſt of our ſtrength and indeuour ſhall be able to reach vnto; but therewithall wee doe aduiſe and proteſt that it is farre from our thoughts, either to refuſe, or ſo much as to ſeeme to be wearie of any thing, which for the preſent ſhalbe further required or directed to be done by vs from our Generall.

The third and laſt poynt is concerning the ranſome of this citie of Cartagena, for the which, before it was touched with any fire, there was made an offer of ſome xxvij. or xxviij. thouſand pounds ſterling.

Thus much we vtter herein as our opinions agreeing (ſo it be done in good ſort) to accept this offer aforeſayde, rather then to breake off by ſtanding ſtill vpon our demaunds of one hundred thouſand poundes, which ſeemes a matter impoſſible to bee performed for the preſent by them, and to ſay trueth, wee may now with much honour and reputation better be ſatiſfied with that ſumme offred by them at the firſt (if they will now bee contented to giue it) then wee might at that time with a great deale more, inaſmuch as we haue taken our full pleaſure both in the vttermoſt ſacking and ſpoyling of all their houſholde goods and marchandize, as alſo in that we haue conſumed and ruined a great part of their Towne with fire. And thus much further is conſidered herein by vs, that as there bee in the Voyage a great many poore men, who haue willingly aduentured their liues and trauailes, and diuers amongſt them hauing ſpent their apparell and ſuch other little prouiſions as their ſmall meanes might haue giuen them leaue to prepare, which being done vpon ſuch good and allowable intention as this action hath alwayes carryed with it, meaning, againſt the Spanyard our greateſt and moſt dangerous enemie: ſo ſurely wee cannot but haue an inward regarde ſo farre as may lye in vs, to helpe eyther in all good ſort towards the ſatiſfaction of this their expectation, and by procuring them ſome little benefite to incourage them and to nouriſh this readie and willing diſpoſition of theirs both in them and in others by their example againſt any other time of like occaſion. But becauſe it may bee ſuppoſed that heerein wee forgette not the priuate benefite of our ſelues, and are thereby the rather mooued to incline our ſelues to this compoſition, wee doe therefore thinke good for the clearing of our ſelues of all ſuch ſuſpition, to declare heereby, that what part or portion ſoeuer it bee of this ranſome or compoſition for Cartagena, which ſhould come vnto vs, wee doe freely giue and beſtowe the ſame wholy vpon the poore men, who haue remayned with vs in the Voyage, meaning as well the Sayler as the Souldier, wiſhing with all our hearts it were ſuch or ſo much as might ſeeme a ſufficient rewarde for their painefull indeuour. And for the firme confirmation thereof, we haue thought meete to ſubſigne theſe preſents with our owne hands in the place and time aforeſayd.

Captaine Chriſtopher Carliell Lieutenant Generall.
Captaine Goring. Captaine Sampſon. Captaine Powell &c.

But while wee were yet there, it happened one day, that our watch called the Centinell, vpon the Church-ſteeple, had diſcouered in the Sea a couple of ſmall Barkes or Boates, making in with the Harbour of Cartagena, whereupon Captaine Moone and Captaine Varney, with Iohn Grant the Maſter of the Tyger, and ſome other Sea-men, embarked themſelues in a couple of ſmall Pinneſſes, to take them before they ſhould come nigh the ſhore, at the mouth of the Harbour, leſt by ſome ſtragling Spanyardes from the Lande, they might bee warned by ſignes from comming in: which fell out accordingly, notwithſtanding all the diligence that our men could vſe: for the Spaniſh Boates, vpon the ſight of our Pinneſſes comming towardes them, ranne themſelues aſhore, and ſo their men preſently hidde themſelues in buſhes hard by the Sea ſide, amongſt ſome others that had called them by ſignes thither. Our men preſently without any due regard had to the qualitie of the place, and ſeeing no man of the Spanyards to ſhew themſelues, aboorded the Spaniſh Barkes or Boates, and ſo ſtanding all open in them, were ſuddenly ſhotte at by a troope of Spanyardes out of the buſhes: by which volley of ſhotte there were ſlaine Captaine Varney, which dyed preſently, and Captaine Moone, who dyed ſome fewe dayes after, beſides ſome foure or fiue others that were hurt: and ſo our folkes returned without their purpoſe, not hauing any ſufficient number of ſouldiers with them to fight on ſhore. For thoſe men they carryed were all Mariners to rowe, few of them armed, becauſe they made accompt with their ordinance to haue taken the Barkes well enough at ſea,which they might full eaſily haue done, without any loſſe at all, if they had come in time to the harbour mouth,before the Spaniards boates had gotten ſo neere the ſhore.

During our abode in this place,as alſo at S.Domingo,there paſſed diuers courteſies betweene vs and the Spaniards,as feaſting, and vſing them with all kindneſſe and fauour: ſo as amongſt others there came to ſee the Generall, the Gouernour of Cartagena, with the Biſhop of the ſame, and diuers other Gentlemen of the better ſort.

This towne of Cartagena we touched in the out parts,& conſumed much with fire, as we had done S.Domingo vpon diſcontentments, and for want of agreeing with vs in their firſt treaties touching their ranſome,which at the laſt was concluded between vs, ſhould be 100. and 10000. Ducats for that which was yet ſtanding,the Ducat valued at fiue ſhillings ſixe pence ſterling.

This towne though not halfe ſo bigge as S.Domingo,giues as you ſee, a farre greater ranſome,being in very deede of farre more importance, by reaſon of the excellencie of the Harbour, and the ſituation thereof,to ſerue the trade of Nombre de Dios and other places, and is inhabited with farre more richer Merchants. The other is chiefly inhabited with Lawyers and braue Gentlemen, being the chiefe or higheſt appeale of their ſuites in law of all the Iſlands about it, and of the maine land coaſt next vnto it. And it is of no ſuch accompt as Cartagena, for theſe and ſome other like reaſons,which I could giue you,ouer long to be now written.

The warning which this towne receiued of our comming towards them from S.Domingo,by the ſpace of twentie dayes before our arriuall here, was cauſe that they had both fortified and euery way prepared for their beſt defence. As alſo that they had caried and conueyed away all their treaſure and principall ſubſtance.

The ranſome of an hundred & ten thouſand Ducats thus concluded on,as is aforeſaid, the ſame being written,and expreſſing for nothing more then the towne of Cartagena, vpon the payment of the ſayd ranſome,we left the ſaid towne, and drewe ſome part of our ſouldiers into the Priorie or Abbey,ſtanding a quarter of an Engliſh mile belowe the towne vpon the harbour water-ſide, the ſame being walled with a wall of ſtone, which we told the Spaniards was yet ours, and not redeemed by their compoſition: whereupon they finding the defect of their contract, were contented to enter into another ranſome for all places, but ſpetially for the ſayde houſe, as alſo the Blockehouſe or Caſtle, which is vpon the mouth of the inner harbour. And when wee aſked as much for the one as for the other,they yeelded to giue a thouſand Crownes for the Abbey, leauing vs to take our pleaſure vpon the Blockehouſe, which they ſayd they were not able to ranſome,hauing ſtretched themſelues to the vttermoſt of their powers: and therefore the ſayd Blockehouſe was by vs vndermined,and ſo with gunne powder blowen vp in pieces.

While this latter contract was in making, our whole Fleete of ſhips fell downe towards the harbour mouth,where they anchored the third time, and imployed their men in fetching of freſh water aboord the ſhips for our voyage homewards, which water was had in a great well, that is in the Iſland by the harbour mouth: which Iſland is a very pleaſant place as hath bene ſeene,hauing in it many ſorts of goodly and very pleaſant fruites, as the Orenge trees and others, being ſet orderly in walkes of great length together. Inſomuch as the whole Iſland being ſome two or three miles about,is caſt into grounds of gardening and orchards. The Iſland of Carea.

After ſixe weekes abode in this place, we put to ſea the laſt of March, where after two or three dayes a great ſhip which we had taken at S. Domingo,and thereupon was called The new yeeres gift,fell into a great leake,being laden with ordinance,hides, and other ſpoyles, and in the night ſhe loſt the company of our Fleete; which being miſſed the next morning by the Generall, hee caſt about with the whole Fleete, fearing ſome great miſchance to bee happened vnto her, as in very deede it ſo fell out: for her leake was ſo great, that her men were all tyred with pumping. But at the laſt hauing found her & the Barke Talbot in her company,which ſtayed by great hap with her, they were ready to take their men out of her, for the ſauing of them. And ſo the General being fully aduertiſed of their great extremitie, made ſaile directly backe againe to Cartagena with the whole Fleete,where hauing ſtaied eight or ten dayes more, about the vnlading of this ſhip,and the beſtowing thereof and her men into other Ships, we departed once againe to Sea, directing our courſe towards the Cape S.Antony,being the Weſtermoſt part of Cuba, where wee arriued the ſeuen and twentieth of April. But becauſe freſh water could not preſently be found, we weyed anchor,and departed, thinking in few dayes to recouer the Matanças, a place to the Eaſtward of Hauana.

After wee had ſailed ſome fourteen dayes, wee were brought to Cape S. Anthony againe, through lacke of fauourable wind: but then our ſcarcity was growen ſuch,as neede made vs looke a litle better for water, which we found in ſufficient quantitie, being indeede, as I iudge, none gracious Soueraigne and Countrey, from whence if it ſhall pleaſe her Maieſtie to ſet vs foorth againe with her orderly meanes and intertainment, we are moſt ready and willing to goe through with any thing that the vttermoſt of our ſtrength and indeuour ſhall be able to reach vnto; but therewithall wee doe aduiſe and proteſt that it is farre from our thoughts, either to refuſe, or ſo much as to ſeeme to be wearie of any thing, which for the preſent ſhalbe further required or directed to be done by vs from our Generall.

The Iſland of Carex.

After ſixe weekes abode in this place, we put to ſea the laſt of March, where after two or three dayes a great ſhip which we had taken at S.Domingo, and thereupon was called The new yeeres gift, fell into a great leake, being laden with ordinance, hides, and other ſpoyles, and in the night ſhe loſt the company of our Fleete; which being miſſed the next morning by the Generall, hee caſt about with the whole Fleete, fearing ſome great miſchance to bee happened vnto her, as in very deede it ſo fell out: for her leake was ſo great, that her men were all tyred with pumping. But becauſe freſh water could not preſently be found, we weyed anchor, and departed, thinking in few dayes to recouer the Matanças, a place to the Eaſtward of Hauana.

After wee had ſailed ſome fourteen dayes, wee were brought to Cape S. Anthony againe, through lacke of fauourable wind: but then our ſcarcity was growen ſuch, as neede made vs looke a litle better for water, which we found in ſufficient quantitie, being indeede, as I iudge, none other then raine water newly fallen, and gathered vp by making pits in a plot of marriſh ground, ſome three hundred paces from the ſea ſide.

A moſt commendable example of diligence in a Generall.

I doe wrong if I ſhould forget the good example of the Generall at this place, who to encourage others, and to haſten the getting of freſh water aboord the ſhips, tooke no leſſe paine himſelfe then the meaneſt; as alſo at S. Domingo, Cartagena, and all other places, hauing alwayes ſo vigilant a care and foreſight in the good ordering of his Fleete, accompanying them, as it is ſayde, with ſuch wonderfull trauell of body, as doubtleſſe had he bene the meaneſt perſon, as hee was the chiefeſt, he had yet deſerued the firſt place of honour: and no leſſe happy doe we account him, for being aſſociated with Maſter Carliel his Lieutenant generall, by whoſe experience, prudent counſell, and gallant performance he atchieued ſo many and happy enterpriſes of the warre, by whom alſo he was very greatly aſſiſted, in ſetting downe the needfull orders, lawes, and courſe of iuſtice, and the due adminiſtration of the ſame vpon all occaſions.

After three dayes ſpent in watering our Ships, wee departed now the ſecond time from this Cape of S. Anthony the thirteenth of May, and proceeding about the Cape of Florida, wee neuer touched any where; but coaſting alongſt Florida, and keeping the ſhore ſtill in ſight, the 28. of May early in the Morning wee deſcried on the ſhore a place built like a Beacon, which was in deede a ſcaffold vpon foure long maſtes raiſed on ende, for men to diſcouer to the ſeaward, being in the latitude of thirtie degrees, or very neere thereunto. Our Pinneſſes manned, and comming to the ſhore, wee marched vp alongſt the riuer ſide, to ſee what place the enemie held there: for none amongſt vs had any knowledge thereof at all.

Here the Generall tooke occaſion to march with the companies himſelfe in perſon, the Lieutenant generall hauing the Vantguard; and going a mile vp or ſomewhat more by the riuer ſide, we might diſcerne on the other ſide of the riuer ouer againſt vs, a Fort which newly had bene built by the Spaniards: and ſome mile or thereabout aboue the Fort was a little Towne or Village without walles, built of woodden houſes, as the Plot doeth plainely ſhew. Wee forthwith prepared to haue ordinance for the batterie; and one peece was a litle before the Euening planted, and the firſt ſhot being made by the Lieutenant generall himſelfe at their Enſigne, ſtrake through the Enſigne, as wee afterwards vnderſtood by a French man, which came vnto vs from them. One ſhot more was then made, which ſtrake the foote of the Fort wall, which was all maſſiue timber of great trees like Maſtes. The Lieutenant generall was determined to paſſe the riuer this night with 4. companies, and there to lodge himſelfe intrenched as neere the Fort, as that he might play with his muskets and ſmalleſt ſhot vpon any that ſhould appeare, and ſo afterwards to bring and plant the batterie with him: but the helpe of Mariners for that ſudden to make trenches could not be had, which was the cauſe that this determination was remitted vntill the next night.

In the night the Lieutenant generall tooke a little rowing Skiffe, and halfe a dozen well armed, as Captaine Morgan, and Captaine Sampſon, with ſome others beſides the rowers, & went to view what guard the enemie kept, as alſo to take knowledge of the ground. And albeit he went as couertly as might be, yet the enemie taking ẏ Alarme, grew feareful that the whole force was approching to the aſſault, and therefore with all ſpeede abandoned the place after the ſhooting of ſome of their peeces. They thus gone, and hee being returned vnto vs againe, but nothing knowing of their flight from their Fort, forthwith came a French man being a Phipher (who had bene priſoner with them) in a litle boate, playing on his Phiph the tune of the Prince of Orenge his ſong; and being called vnto by the guard, he tolde them before he put foote out of the boate, what he was himſelfe, and how the Spaniards were gone from the Fort, offering either to remaine in hands there, or els to returne to the place with them that would goe.

Nicolas Borgoignon.

Upon this intelligence, the Generall, the Lieutenant generall, with ſome of the Captaines in one Skiffe, and the Vice-admirall with ſome others in his Skiffe, and two or three Pinneſſes furniſhed of ſouldiers with them, put preſently ouer towards the Fort, giuing order for the reſt of the Pinneſſes to follow. And in our approch, ſome of the enemie bolder then the reſt, hauing ſtayed behinde their company, ſhot off two peeces of ordinance at vs: but on ſhore wee went, and entred the place without finding any man there.

When the day appeared, we found it built all of timber, the walles being none other but whole Maſtes or bodies of trees ſet vp right and cloſe together in maner of a pale, without any ditch as yet made, but wholy intended with ſome more time; for they had not as yet finiſhed al their worke, hauing begunne the ſame ſome three or foure moneths before: ſo as, to ſay the trueth, they had no reaſon to keepe it, being ſubiect both to fire, and eaſie aſſault.

The platforme whereon the ordinance lay, was whole bodies of long pine trees, whereof there is great plentie, layd a croſſe one on another, and ſome litle earth amongſt. There were in it thirteene or fourteene great peeces of Braſſe ordinance, and a cheſt vnbroken vp, hauing in it the value of ſome two thouſand pounds ſterling by eſtimation of the kings treaſure, to pay the ſouldiers of that place, who were a hundred and fiftie men.

The Fort thus wonne, which they called S. Iohns Fort, and the day opened, wee aſſayed to goe to the towne, but could not by reaſon of ſome riuers and broken ground which was betweene the two places: and therefore being enforced to imbarke againe into our Pinneſſes, wee went thither vpon the great maine riuer, which is called as alſo the Towne, by the name of S. Auguſtin.

At our approching to land, there were ſome that began to ſhew themſelues, and to beſtow ſome few ſhot vpon vs, but preſently withdrew themſelues. And in their running thus away, the Sergeant Maior finding one of their horſes ready ſadled and brideled, tooke the ſame to follow the chaſe; and ſo ouergoing all his company, was (by one layd behind a buſh) ſhotte through the head: and falling downe therewith, was by the ſame and two or three more, ſtabbed in three or foure places of his body with ſwords and daggers, before any could come neere to his reſcue. His death was much lamented, being in very deede an honeſt wiſe Gentleman, and a ſouldier of good experience, and of as great courage as any man might be.

In this place called S. Auguſtin, we vnderſtood the king did keepe, as is before ſaid, one hundred and fiftie ſouldiers, and at another place ſome dozen leagues beyond to the Northwards, called S. Helena, he did there likewiſe keepe an hundred and fiftie more, ſeruing there for no other purpoſe, then to keepe all other nations from inhabiting any part of all that coaſt; the gouernement whereof was committed to one Pedro Melendez Marqueſſe, nephew to that Melendez the Admiral, who had ouerthrowen Maſter Iohn Hawkins in the bay of Mexico ſome ſeuenteen or eighteene yeeres agoe. This Gouernour had charge of both places, but was at this time in this place, and one of the firſt that left the ſame.

Heere it was reſolued in full aſſembly of Captaines, to vndertake the enterpriſe of S. Helena, and from thence to ſeeke out the inhabitation of our Engliſh countreymen in Virginia, diſtant from thence ſome ſixe degrees Northward.

Santa Helena.

When we came thwart of S. Helena, the ſholds appearing dangerous, and we hauing no Pilot to vndertake the entrie, it was thought meeteſt to goe hence alongſt. For the Admirall had bene the ſame night in foure fadome and a halfe, three leagues from the ſhore: and yet wee vnderſtood by the helpe of a knowen Pilot, there may and doe goe in Ships of greater burthen and draught then any we had in our Fleete.

We paſſed thus alongſt the coaſt hard aboord the ſhore, which is ſhallow for a league or two from the ſhore, and the ſame is lowe and broken land for the moſt part.

The ninth of Iune vpon ſight of one ſpeciall great fire (which are very ordinarie all alongſt this coaſt, euen from the Cape of Florida hither) the Generall ſent his Skiffe to the ſhore, where they found ſome of our Engliſh countreymen (that had bene ſent thither the yeere before by Sir Walter Ralegh) and brought them aboord: by whoſe direction wee proceeded along to the place which they make their Port. But ſome of our ſhips being of great draught vnable to enter, anchored without the harbour in a wilde roade at ſea, about two miles from ſhore.

From whence the General wrote letters to maſter Ralfe Lane, being gouernour of thoſe Engliſh in Virginia, and then at his Fort about ſixe leagues from the Rode in an Iſland which they call Roanoac, wherein eſpecially he ſhewed how ready he was to ſupply his neceſſities and wants, which he vnderſtood of, by thoſe he had firſt talked withall.

Roanoac.

The morow after, Maſter Lane himſelfe and ſome of his company comming vnto him, with the conſent of his captaines he gaue them the choice of two offers, that is to ſay: Either he would leaue a ſhip, a pinneſſe, and certaine boates with ſufficient Maſters and Mariners, together furniſhed with a moneths victuall, to ſtay and make farther diſcouery of the countrey and coaſtes, and ſo much victuall likewiſe as might be ſufficient for the bringing of them all (being an hundred and three perſons) into England, if they thought good after ſuch time, with any other thing they would deſire, and that he might be able to ſpare.

Or els if they thought they had made ſufficient diſcouerie already, and did deſire to returne into England, he would giue them paſſage. But they, as it ſeemed, being deſirous to ſtay, accepted very thankefully and with great gladneſſe, that which was offred firſt. Whereupon the ſhip being appointed and receiued into charge by ſome of their owne company ſent into her by Maſter Lane, before they had receiued from the reſt of the Fleete the prouiſion appoynted them, there aroſe a great ſtorme (which they ſayd was extraordinary and very ſtrange) that laſted three dayes together, and put all our Fleete in great danger, to bee driuen from their anchoring vpon the coaſt. For we brake many Cables, and loſt many Anchors; and ſome of our Fleete which had loſt all (of which number was the ſhip appointed for Maſter Lane and his company) was driuen to put to ſea in great danger, in auoyding the coaſt, and could neuer ſee vs againe vntill we mette in England. Many alſo of our ſmall Pinneſſes and boates were loſt in this ſtorme.

Notwithſtanding after all this, the Generall offred them (with conſent of his Captaines) an other ſhip with ſome prouiſion, although not ſuch a one for their turnes, as might haue bene ſpared them before, this being vnable to be brought into their Harbour. Or els if they would, to giue them paſſage into England, although he knew he ſhould performe it with greater difficultie then he might haue done before.

But Maſter Lane with thoſe of the chiefeſt of his company which hee had then with him, conſidering what ſhould be beſt for them to doe, made requeſt vnto the General vnder their hands, that they might haue paſſage for England: the which being graunted, and the reſt ſent for out of the countrey and ſhipped, we departed from that coaſt the 18. of Iune.

And ſo, God bee thanked, both they and wee in good ſafetie arriued at Porteſmouth the 28. of Iuly 1586. to the great glory of God, and to no ſmall honour to our Prince, our Countrey, and our ſelues.

The totall value of that which was gotten in this voyage is eſteemed at three ſcore thouſand pounds, whereof the companies which haue trauelled in the voyage were to haue twentie thouſand pounds, the aduenturers the other fortie. Of which twentie thouſand pounds (as I can iudge) will redound ſome ſixe pounds to the ſingle ſhare.

We loſt ſome ſeuen hundred and fiftie men in the voyage: aboue three parts of them onely by ſickneſſe.

The men of name that dyed and were ſlaine in this voyage, which I can preſently call to remembrance, are theſe.

Captaine Powel.
Captaine Varney.
Captaine Moone.
Captaine Forteſcue.
Captaine Bigges.
Captaine Cecill.
Captaine Hannam.
Captaine Greenefield.

Thomas Tucker a Lieutenant.
Alexander Starkey a Lieutenant.
Maſter Eſcot a Lieutenant.
Maſter Waterhouſe a Lieutenant.
Maſter George Candiſh.
Maſter Nicholas Winter.
Maſter Alexander Carliell.
Maſter Robert Alexander.
Maſter Scroope.
Maſter Iames Dier.
Maſter Peter Duke.

With ſome other, whom for haſte I cannot ſuddenly thinke on.

The ordinance gotten of all ſorts Braſſe and Iron, were about two hundred and forty peeces, whereof the two hundred and ſome more were braſſe, and were thus found and gotten.

At S. Iago ſome two or three and fiftie peeces.

In S. Domingo about foureſcore, whereof was very much great ordinance, as whole Cannon, Demi-canon, Culuerins, and ſuch like.

In Cartagena ſome ſixtie and three peeces, and good ſtore likewiſe of the greater ſort.

In the Fort of S. Auguſtin were fourteene peeces.

The reſt was Iron ordinance, of which the moſt part was gotten at S. Domingo, the reſt at Cartagena.

A relation of the ports, harbors, forts and cities in the VVeſt Indies which haue bene ſurueied, edified, finiſhed, made and mended, with thoſe which haue bene builded, in a certaine ſuruey by the king of Spaine his direction and commandement: Written by Baptiſta Antonio, ſurueyour in thoſe parts for the ſaid King. Anno 1587.

Santa Marta.

Santa Marta ſituate in 10. degrees and a halfe.

First Santa Marta the principall Citie of the Biſhopricke or Dioces of the coaſt of Tierra firma, or the firme land, lieth in 10. degrees and $\frac{1}{2}$, the city being ſituated vpon a ſandy bay adioyning vnto the ſea ſide, conteineth in it about 30. houſholds; all the houſes being made of canes, and couered ouer with Palmito trees, and ſome of them be couered with tyle.

They haue traffike with none, but with the Indians of the ſaid country, which doe bring vnto the Citie for to ſell earthen Pots and Pipkins, and Couerlits of Cotton wooll, and great earthen Iarres. Alſo they doe traffique to Cartagena. It is a countrey which hath but ſmall ſtore of cattel, becauſe it is all mountainous, and hath ſmall ſtore of people. There is a very good harbour before the ſaid towne, inuironed with mighty hils & great rocks, which reach euen vnto the ſea ſide, the which hie land doth greatly ſuccour the harbour, as alſo two Ilands which lie about ¾ of a league on the North ſide: ſo that although they be ſubiect to Eaſterly winds, and that with great ſtormes, yet they doe no great harme to goe on land. Within this Harbour there is a place which is called La Caldera, where in times paſt they were woont to trimme and carene their Shippes. As touching the Harbour, there is no cauſe to fortifie it, nor to make any account of it, by reaſon there is no trade nor traffique to this place from any other places, according as I haue certified your Maieſtie thereof. And alſo becauſe here are but few dwellers or inhabitants, and looſing euery day ſo many as it doeth, by reaſon that it is euery day robbed and ſpoyled by the enemie. But if your Maieſtie would command that the Fleete of Noua Hiſpania might direct their courſe to this Harbour being in their way, and here to water and refreſh themſelues, all the Pilots doe ſay that the Fleete may proceede on their Voyage from this place, ſtill going before the winde, and ſo goe to the Cape of Saint Anthony, which lieth on the Iland of Cuba, and from thence goe their direct courſe to Noua Hiſpania; and by this meanes the Fleete ſhould haue no occaſion to paſſe ſo many dangers as they doe, by reaſon of the Huricanos or ſtormy windes which many times do come vpon them, when they are vpon the coaſt of Hiſpaniola: and this is the cauſe that there are ſo many ſhips caſt away, as your Maieſtie doeth well know.

A new courſe to Noua Hiſpania, by the way of Santa Marta leſſe ſubiect to danger then the ordinary courſe.

And as concerning this courſe according as I haue certified your Maieſtie, they ſhall come into no danger at all, nor ſhall make any further way about; ſo by this meanes both the Fleetes may come from Spaine in company, and then come to S. Marta, and the Fleete of Noua Hiſpania may come into this Harbour, and the Fleete which doeth goe vnto the firme land, may goe directly to Cartagena as they doe. Then your Maieſtie may ſend to fortifie the ſaid Harbour, and the fortification muſt be thus: That on the morro or mount which is in the entring in of the ſaid harbour, there be built a litle Fort, and ſo to plant ſome ſmall quantitie of ordinance. And hard by on the South ſide, there to build a litle Towre, and another Sconce, where wee may plant ſome more ordinance. So by this meanes not onely the Shippes may ride heere in ſecuritie, but alſo it will bee a defence for thoſe which dwell heere in the Towne: and the better to effect this purpoſe, there is hard by the Towne great ſtore of Lyme, Stone, Sande, and Tymber, if occaſion ſhould ſerue.

Cartagena.

Cartagena is a Citie, and the principall place of the Biſhopricke; it lyeth fourtie leagues from Santa Marta: it ſtandeth in ſcant 11. degrees. The ſayd Citie is ſituated vpon a ſandy banke or bay like vnto an Iland: it hath about 450. dwellers therein. There are very faire buildings therein: as concerning their houſes, they are made of ſtone, and there are three Monaſteries, of which two of them are of Friers which are within the city, the one called Santo Domingo, and the other called Santo Auguſtin, and the other which is called Saint Francis, which ſtandeth without the citie about 30. paces off. And for to goe vnto the ſaid Frierie, you muſt goe vpon a Cauſey made of ſtone, and water on both ſides. This citie hath great trade out of Spaine, and out of The new kingdome of Granada, and out of the Ilands there adioyning, from Peru, and from all the coaſt of this firme land, and of the fiſhing of the pearles of Rio de la Hacha, and of Margarita: it is a very ſound countrey.

Cartagena ſituate in 11. degrees ſcant.

This Citie hath a very good Harbour, and ſufficient to receiue great ſtore of Ships: this ſaid Harbour hath two entrances in, the one of them lyeth halfe a league from the Citie, where all the Ships doe enter into the ſayd Harbour: the mouth or entring in of the ſayde Harbour is 1400. yardes or paces in bredth, and very deepe water. The other entring in which is called La boca chica, or litle mouth, lieth a league beyond this place to the weſtwards. It is 900. yards in bredth, and in the entring in thereof there lieth a channel in the midſt of it, which is 200. yards broad, and 20. or 15 fadome water, ſome places more, ſome leſſe. And to enter into the Harbour, you muſt go through this channel, and the land doth double in and out. And at the entring in of the ſayde Harbour, after you haue paſt this Channell, you muſt beare vp to the ſhoareward neere vnto the Iland of Cares, and looke how much is ouerplus more then the two hundred yardes of the Channell, all the reſt are certaine ledges of Rockes, coutred with two or three foote water vpon the toppe of them, ſome places more, and ſome leſſe. So the ſhips which muſt enter in at the mouth, muſt bring very good Pilots with them, which muſt be very ſkilfull: yet all this will not ſerue, but they muſt carry their Boate before, and ſound with their Lead to know where the beſt place of the Channell lyeth for them to goe in, ſo it will be ſmall hinderance to any ſhippe that ſhall enter, neither yet danger at all of ſinking.

There are three places about the ſayde Citie, where the Enemie may giue an attempt by Land. The one of them is where the enemie did enter in and landed, which is a ſandy Bay, and on the one ſide of the Bay is the Sea, and on the other ſide a great Lake which goeth towards the Harbour. The ſandy bay or banke, on the one ſide is 500. yardes broad, all ſandy ground without any trees. So that the enemie which giueth the aſſault in this place muſt bee conſtrayned to march all alongſt this ſandie Bay, the enemie lying open theſe 500. yardes, which reach vntill you doe come to the trench: And on the backſide other 500. yardes, till you doe come vnto the Citie.

Francis Drake.

The ſayde ſandie bay or banke is 130. yardes broad, where the trench is builded. And in this place this Citie hath bene taken by the enemie twiſe. Wherefore heere wee haue driuen in a great many of woodden ſtakes, which goe downe into the ſea 50. yardes deepe: and this wee haue done, becauſe this is a very dangerous and filthy coaſt. And below in the botteme of the Valley there we haue builded a little Sconce, where we may plant 3. or 4. peeces of ordinance. And likewiſe wee haue made a deepe ditch, which doeth anſwere to both parts of the ſea; ſo on this ſide the Citie is very ſtrong and ſufficient. For this was the place whereof the Citizens were moſt afrayde.

The other entring is lower downe by the ſayde ſandy Bay, which is called Cienaga, or The fenne del Rorcado. This is another place which is on the ſayd ſandy bay, which is 300. yardes broad from the one place downe to the ſea. And on the other ſide there lyeth the Cienaga, which is a certaine plat of ground that is ouerflowen with water all the yeere long. So that the enemie which ſhall come this way to winne the Citie, muſt come marching ouer land a good way vpon a ſandie banke or Bay, where the Sea lyeth on the one ſide, and a groue or boſke of wood on the other ſide, and through a plat of ground which is ouerflowen with water, but not all couered. So in this place wee haue made a Fort or Sconce with certaine Flanckers belonging thereunto. And I haue cauſed a deepe ditch to be digged of 60. foote in bredth, ſo that the Sea doeth come to that plat or place which is ouerflowen. And in this order we haue ſtopt this paſſage, ſo that the Citie ſtandeth in maner like vnto an Iland. There is 2600. yardes diſtance from this place to the other trench where the enemie Francis Drake did land laſt.

The entring in of this Harbour is by the bridge and Cauſey which doeth goe from the Citie to S. Francis; the ſayd Cauſey is 300. yardes in length, and 12. yardes in bredth: and the water is on both the ſides of the ſaide Cauſey: ſo this is the ſtrongeſt place of all the reſt of the three places. Alſo in this place there is order taken to make a draw bridge, and vpon the top of the ſaid bridge, to build a platforme, and plant ordinance vpon it: and on both ſides of the bridge there are certaine trenches made, where our men may be cloſe kept.

At the point of this land called ycacos, which is in the entring in of the harbour towards S. Anna, we haue made a Fort of timber foureſquare of 300. foote euery way, and trencht, where wee may plant 15. or 16. peeces of ordinance, and keepe 50. men in gariſon, and behinde the bourdes on the backſide of the timbers, a Barricado of earth or mudde wall being foure foote in thickneſſe, and behinde the mud-wall, ſand: ſo this Fort will bee of great importance for ſafegard of this Harbour, becauſe all the Shippes which doe enter into this Harbour doe come cloſe to this place where it is ſtrongeſt, ſo that ſometimes one may caſt a ſtone into the ſhips when they are comming in: and when any ſhip of warre or Pirate will giue any attempt to enter into this Harbour, there is order giuen that the two galleys ſhall go forth, and put themſelues behinde the Fort with their prows to the ſea, and ſo ſhooting at their enemies in the forepart of the ſhip, and then the Fort anſwering likewiſe with their ordinance at the ſide of the ſhippe, and at their tackling, ſo the enemie being in the Harbour all vnrigged, they muſt of neceſſitie be conſtrained to lye houering within the Harbour, or els they muſt driue vpon the rockes called the Iſmo, or els vpon thoſe rocks which are couered with the ſea at the Iland of Cares.

The gallies of Cartagena.

And put caſe that in this place we can doe no good by this meanes, and that the enemie will venture to come in with their long boates & Pinneſſes through this narrow mouth: then we are to haue in a readineſſe 4. Frigats to ayde and helpe the gallies, & to row with oares, and ſo to go to the narrow mouth, and there to ſtay in the channell. And foraſmuch as the entring in is ſo dangerous, according as I haue certified your Maieſtie, there can no ſhip come into this harbour, but we muſt needes ſinke them; ſo that theſe defences ſhall not onely bee annoyance to the enemie, but alſo animate and encourage the inhabitants of this citie: for they haue beene and are in ſuch feare of the enemie, and pirates, that if wee had not made theſe fortifications, ſtrengthened the citie in this order, and put ſome ſouldiers in gariſon, the citizens would haue fledde, and forſaken this citie: for all the perſwaſions made to them by the gouernour coulde not perſwade them to the contrary, but they would bee gone, if it had not beene for this fortification, and yet for all this wee haue much to doe to make them to ſtay here: ſo nowe by reaſon of theſe ſouldiers which ſhall come hither, the people of the citie haue taken heart of graſſe: ſo I haue tolde them that your maieſtie will command that this citie and the harbour ſhall be better fortified and made ſtronger, and all this which I haue cauſed to be builded, is with that money which I haue borrowed of the citizens.

As touching the ſafegard and defence of this harbour, if your maieſtie ſo pleaſe, here may we builde a very faire and ſtrong caſtle with foure bulwarks, on the poynt of the Ycacos which doth lie on the ſide where the citie is builded, becauſe all the ſhippes which doe come to this harbour, muſt come cloſe abord this ſhore, ſo neere, that wee may caſt a ſtone into them, and ſo ouertake any ſhip. So likewiſe if the ſhippes will goe on the other ſhore, then they doe goe in greater danger, becauſe of thoſe ſhoalds and ledges of rockes, and ſo are often caſt away. And foraſmuch as thoſe ſhips which here doe arriue are brought hither by Eaſterly winds, and ſometimes with thoſe winds which come out from the ſea, and therefore perforce muſt giue a good birth off, otherwiſe they cannot enter into this harbour, therefore of neceſſity they muſt come ſo cloſe to the ſhore: And on the other ſide where the Iſland of Cares ſtandeth, there may wee builde another tower foure-ſquare, and plant ſome foure or fiue pieces of ordinance, and this will ſerue for the night, if occaſion be offered that any ſmall ſhippe or barke ſhould come in here, or any pinneſſe in the night, to doe any harme, or to attempt to burne any Fleete which ſhoulde ride here at an anker within this harbour: ſo the fort beeing on the one ſide, and the tower on the other ſide, keeping good watch, there can no ſhippe nor barke come into this harbour, but they will bee eſpied.

The poynt of Ycacos.

In the narrow mouth at the entring in the other way towardes the Iſland of Cares, where the channell doth runne neere the ſhore, as I haue already certified your maieſtie, there may another caſtle be made, and there foure or fiue pieces of ordinance planted, and ſome ſixe or eight men to keepe watch and ward: this being done, your maieſtie ſhall haue this citie very well fortified, by reaſon it is of ſuch importance for the ſeruice of your maieſtie, and the trade of all Spaine and Peru, and all the Indies: for this is the principall fort of all this countrey.

Ouer againſt this point of the Ycacos, in the Iſle of Cares, hard by the water ſide, there are great ſtore of ſtones, free ſtones, and other ſtones to make lyme, and wood to burne the ſtones withall for the lyme, and great part of the ſtones doe lie about the water: ſo the wood will coſt but the cutting of it downe, and the working of it, and with little paines taking it will bee brought to good perfection, for wee haue already made triall thereof, for there was neuer building that went to decay after it hath bene made, nor periſhed by the ſea: ſo the charge hereof will be but litle or nothing.

And for to put this in practiſe to build a fort, it is needefull that your maieſtie ſhould ſend hither and to many other places, where any fort ſhall bee made, ſome ſtore of Negros, and to this place would be ſent 150 Negros brought from Guyney: and if the Negros of Hauana are not to bee imployed there, nor thoſe which are in Sant Iuan de Vllua, it may pleaſe your maieſtie to cauſe them to bee ſent for to this place, for moſt of them be artificers, ſome maſons, bricklayers, ſmithes and ſawyers, and to ſend ſome maſons from Spaine to teach our men theſe occupations. And after theſe fortifications are ended and all furniſhed, then the Negros may be ſolde to great profit, for a Negro that is of any occupation is ſold here for 600. and 700. pezos.

Nombre de Dios.

Nombre de Dios is builded vpon a ſandy Bay hard by the ſea ſide, it is a citie of ſome thirtie houſholdes or inhabitants: their houſes are builded of timber, and moſt of the people which are there be forreiners, they are there to day and gone to morrow: it is full of woods and ſome places of the land are ouerflowen with water continually by reaſon of much raine which doth fall vpon the hils. It is a very bad harbour, neither is there any good water: and it is ſubiect to Northerly winds and Eaſterly windes, which continually doe blow vpon this coaſt: many of the great ſhips which doe come to this place doe vnlade halfe their commodities betweene the two ledges of rockes, for that there is but little water in the harbour: and after that a ſhip hath hath vnladen halfe of her goods, then ſhee goeth to the ſecond rocke, as it doth appeare by the platforme, but the ſmall ſhips come neere vnto another rocke on the Weſt ſide. If the winde chance to come to the North and Northweſt, and that it ouerblowe, then ſuch great ſhips as then be in the roade muſt of force more themſelues with ſixe cables a head, eſpecially in a ſtorme, and yet neuertheleſſe ſometimes they are driuen aſhore and ſo caſt away, and all becauſe they dare not vier cable ynough, becauſe of ſo many ſhelues and rockes which are in both thoſe places: alſo the ſhippes doe roule very much in the harbour, by reaſon in foule weather the Sea will bee mightily growen, which is the cauſe that their cables do oftentimes breake, and their ruthers are vnhanged, the cauſe thereof is by reaſon the ſhippes doe ride but in little water, yet goeth there a great ſea.

The citie is builded and ſituated very well if it were a good harbour, it ſtandeth vpon the Eaſt ſide vpon a rocke where they may builde a very good fort, according to the platforme for the ſafegard of this harbour: but ſeeing it is but a bad hauen and ſhallow water, therefore I doe thinke that it is not needefull for your maieſtie to be at any charges in fortifying that place, but onely a trench to be made of earth or clay, ſo that theſe towneſmen may defend themſelues from danger of 3. or 4. ſhips.

The citie of Panama is eighteene leagues from Nombre de Dios, the wayes are exceeding bad thitherwards; yet notwithſtanding all the ſiluer is brought this way to Nombre de Dios, as well your maieſties treaſure as other marchandize; ſo likewiſe the moſt part of thoſe commodities which are caried to Peru, and the reſt of the marchandize are carried to the riuer of Chagre which is ſome 18 leagues from this citie and it is brought vp by this riuer within fiue leagues of Panama vnto an Inne or lodge called Venta de Cruzes, and from this place afterwards they are tranſported to Panama vpon Mules. The high way which goeth from Nombre de Dios to Panama may be very wel mended, only to remooue this way and to ſtop it quite vp, and ſo to make it againe vpon the ſide of a mountaine. This citie lieth in nine degrees and one tierce, and if your maieſtie will giue order that this citie ſhould be plucked downe and newly builded againe in Puerto Bello, then you are to make a new way through the mountains of Capira, by reaſon it may not be frequented and becauſe the high wayes are very bad: with little charges they may be broken and ſo ſhut vp, and the chanell of this harbour may bee ſtopt with the timber of thoſe old ſhips which are laid vp here euery yeere, and then afterwards may be caſt a great number of ſtones into the ſame, and ſo by this meanes to damme vp the harbour: and here is great want of ſtones to ballaſt the ſhippes: wherefore they are faine to goe to an Iſland three leagues from Cartagena called Iſla de los Baſtimentos, and this is a thing very needefull for this Countrey, as by experience I haue ſeene.

Nombre de Dios in 9. deg. and one tierce.

Puerto Bello.

PVerto Bello lieth fiue leagues from Nombre de Dios Weſtward: It is a very good harbour and ſufficient to receiue great ſtore of ſhips, and hath very good ankering, and freſh water: for neere the ſhore you ſhall find ſome ſixe fathome water, and in the middeſt of the ſame harbour you ſhall find twelue fathome, very good and cleane ground or ſant, without eyther banks or rockes. There are twelue ſmall riuers or brookes of water which doe belong to this harbour, and ſo doe meete all together: ſo that the fleete may at all times prouide themſelues of freſh water ſo much as ſhall ſerue their turnes. And likewiſe there is in this place great ſtore of timber to build ſhippes, and ſtones to ballaſt ſhippes. Alſo the harbour hath no danger at all in comming in, but onely when the wind is Weſterly, which is ſeldome ſeene vpon this coaſt. The windes which doe moſt blowe vpon this coaſt are Northerly windes, and they are more dangerous and hurtfull then the Eaſterly windes are. Within this harbour there lieth a ſmall creeke ſafe from all winds that can blow. This creek is about fiue hundred yards long, and ſo many in breadth, and in the entring in of this creekes mouth it is ſome 300. yardes broad, and foure fathome and a halfe of water: and entring farther in, ſixe fathome, all oaze and muddie ground: ſo that if a ſhip ſhould chance to ſtrike or come aground, ſhee could take no harme being ſoft oaze; alſo it doth ebbe and flow according as I haue certified your maieſtie already.

And likewiſe the comming in and going out of this harbour is very good: and with all kinde of weather a ſhippe may ſet ſaile from this place except with a Weſterly wind: and all this coaſt is very cleane where a ſhippe at all times may come to anker without the harbours mouth. This harbour is inuironed round about with woods: and at the ende of this harbour there is certaine land which is ouerflowen with water: it may bee eaſily dryed vp and walled round about, ſo this land will ſerue very well to feede cattell. For that is the chieſeſt thing which doth belong to any citie or towne, and of this paſture ground there is great want in Nombre de Dios, for there is no paſture at all to breede cattell, for all kinde of fleſh which is ſpent in this place is brought from Panama: ſo towards the South there is a very good place, where the citie may be newe built on a certaine plaine ground which lieth at the foot of certaine mountaines, which bee not very high; and in this place there runne three little riuers of freſh water very ſweete and good, and here is good arable ground to till and to ſow Maiz and other kinds of graine. Alſo in this circuite there are great ſtones to make lyme, and theſe ſtones muſt needes prooue very good as I doe thinke, but we neuer had any triall thereof.

This harbour hath all things neceſſary to builde a citie, where your maieſtie may haue your armies and fleetes of ſhippes to ride at an anker in ſafetie without danger of looſing: and it is a very healthfull countrey, and where the citie ſhall be builded it is all ſtony ground: and foraſmuch as the raine water which doth fall from the mountaines may doe hurt vnto the citie, there at the foote of the mountaine wee will make a great pond to receiue in all the water which doth fall from the mountaines, and ſo from thence to goe into the ſea, as more at large your maieſtie may ſee by my platforme.

If it would pleaſe your maieſtie, it were good that the citie of Nombre de Dios might bee brought and builded in this harbour: it would not bee very chargeable vnto the citizens by reaſon that all their houſes are made of timber, and they may benefite themſelues with the ſame againe, and likewiſe with the tyles of their houſes: the greateſt charge will bee to land timber and to cut downe the mountaine of wood.

If it pleaſe your maieſtie that the ſayd citie of Nombre de Dios ſhould bee builded in this harbour the firſt thing which muſt be finiſhed is to make vp this high way, and ſo to pull downe the Church which is in Nombre Dios, and the Contractation houſe, and ſo newe build it in this harbour: and then to command all the fleetes of ſhippes from time to time to come and vnlade their goods in this ſayd Puerto Bello: And that thoſe marchants and factors of Spaine which are lygers in Panama and Nombre de Dios, ſhall come to this harbour and builde anew their warehouſes for receiuing of their goods. So by theſe meanes in ſhort time it will be greatly inhabited with people: alſo the fleete ſhall not paſſe ſo many dangers as they dayly doe in Nombre de Dios: neither will there ſo many people die as there dayly doe in Nombre de Dios: and the cauſe thereof is, that thoſe labouring men which doe vſe to vnlade thoſe marchandize, are all the whole day wading in the water vp to the armepits to bring the packs of cloth and other commodities aland; for there is no landing place where there can come any boates to land any goods cloſe to the ſhore, ſo this wading and the parching of the Sunne is the cauſe why ſo many doe dye of a burning feuer. There are but 60. dwelling houſes in Nombre de Dios, and but thirtie dwellers which doe continually dwell there, and the reſt doe goe to Panama after the fleete is gone, and then this Towne doeth remayne deſolate, euery man forſaking it becauſe it is ſo full of diſeaſes.

In the entring in of this harbour for the more ſecuritie thereof and defence of the towne it is needefull to build vpon the toppe of the mount which lyeth to the Northward, a little fort foureſquare that will hold foure or fiue pieces of ordinance, and to appoynt ſixe men to watch and ward; and this beeing done wee ſhall haue no occaſion to make any more defence, by reaſon the countrey is full of rocks and filthy wayes, and all full of woods round about the harbour.

And ſo likewiſe on the other ſide to builde a little tower in maner of a fort, with eight pieces of ordinance and fiue and twenty ſouldiers to keepe it. And this will bee of more importance becauſe it muſt be builded on the towne ſide. And a little beyond this place on the Northſide there lyeth a creeke, where there is a very good ankering in eight fathome water: ſo this fort beeing builded in this place it will defend the harbour and offend the enemy: and will defend the coaſt along and a poynt of the land which doth runne from the Eaſt to the Weſt, and reacheth to the Iland of Buena Ventura. And put caſe that the fort which is builded on the other ſide doth decay, or be taken by the enemy, with this other fort wee may defend the citie very well, if the enemy ſhould chance to come into the harbour, and bee ſuccoured and holpen by the citizens, and twentie muſketters being planted vpon a mount which lyeth ouer the fort, will bee ſufficient to defende vs from a good many of our enemies, that ſhoulde come to aſſault vs, becauſe all the countrey is full of rockes and ſtones, and full of mountaines. So from this wood there may a way be made to goe to the citie, and to ioyne with that way which ſhall goe to Panama; and this may bee done with ſmall charges. This harbour doth lie in nine degrees and one tierce, and if occaſion ſhoulde ſerue wee may ſtop vp the way which doth goe to Capira, and the reſt of the wayes which goe from Nombre de Dios to Venta de Cruzes, according as it is certified me by the Negros called Simerons; for they told me that this way would not bee very troubleſome. Although in the Winter it is reported that here is good ſtore of water in this place, which in the Sommer it is all dryed vp, and where theſe waters are, there we may builde a cauſey, to which purpoſe there are great quantities of ſtones and timber very ſeruiceable: ſo this way may bee made with that treaſure which your maieſtie doeth receiue of the auerages and cuſtomes of Nombre de Dios and Panama, which doth amount vnto twelue or foureteene thouſand pezos yeerely: and an order might be taken for the ſame, that the ſayd money may ſerue for the building and reparing of theſe wayes.

Panama.

PAnama is the principall citie of this Dioces: it lieth 18. leagues from Nombre de Dios on the South ſea, and ſtandeth in 9. degrees. There are 3. Monaſteries in this ſaid city of fryers, the one is of Dominicks, the other is of Auguſtines, and the third is of S. Francis fryers: alſo there is a College of Ieſuits, and the royall audience or chancery is kept in this citie.

This citie is ſituated hard by the ſea ſide on a ſandy bay: the one ſide of this citie is enuironed with the ſea, and on the other ſide it is encloſed with an arme of the ſea which runneth vp into the land 1000. yards.

Panama hath 350. houſes.

This citie hath three hundred and fiftie houſes, all built of timber, and there are ſixe hundred dwellers and eight hundred ſouldiers with the towneſmen, and foure hundred Negros of Guyney, and ſome of them are free men: and there is another towne which is called Santa Cruz la Real of Negros Simerons, and moſt of them are imployed in your maieſties ſeruice, and they are 100. in number, and this towne is a league from this citie vpon a great riuers ſide, which is a league from the ſea right ouer againſt the harbour of Pericos. But there is no truſt nor confidence in any of theſe Negros, and therefore we muſt take heede and beware of them, for they are our mortall enemies.

Negros Simerons mortall enemies to the Spanyards.

There are three ſundry wayes to come to this citie, beſides the ſea, where the enemy may aſſault vs. The one is at the bridge which is builded vpon the riuer: and on the one ſide of this, there lieth a creeke: ſo on this ſide the citie is very ſtrong, becauſe it is all ſoft muddie ground, for in no way they cannot goe vpon it. And right ouer againſt it there lyeth a riuer which is in maner like vnto a ditch or moate; and on the other ſide of the Riuer there lyeth a great Lake or Pond which is full of water all the Winter, and part of the Sommer, ſo that on this ſide the city is very ſtrong, for with very ſmall ſtore of ſouldiers this place might bee kept verie well.

The beſt way to take Panama.

The greateſt danger for the ſurpriſing of this citie is the way that doth come from Nombre de Dios: for all this way is playne ground and no woods: and 2000. yardes from this citie there lyeth a riuer called Lauanderas, where the women doe vſe to waſh their linnen: and this riuer doth goe into the creeke, according as I haue certified your maieſtie: and being once paſt this riuer, there is a cauſey which goeth directly vnto them. The other way which doth go towards the citie is lower downe towards the ſea at a ſtone bridge lying vpon the way which goeth to the harbour of Perico. These two wayes cannot be kept nor reſiſted, becauſe it is all plaine ground and medowes.

Perico.

Upon the Eaſt ſide of this citie there are your maieſties royall houſes builded vpon a rocke ioyning hard to the Sea ſide, and they doe aſwell leane towards the ſea as the land. The royall audience or chancerie is kept here in theſe houſes, and likewiſe the priſon. And in this place all your maieſties treaſure is kept. There dwelleth in theſe houſes your maieſties Treaſurer, the Lord Preſident, and 3. Iudges, and maſter Atturney. All theſe doe dwell in theſe houſes, and the reſt of your maieſties officers: which are ſixe houſes beſides thoſe of the Lord Preſident, the which are all dwelling houſes, and all adioyning together one by another along vpon the rockes. And they are builded all of timber and bourdes, as the other houſes are. So where the priſon ſtandeth and the great hall, theſe two places may bee very well fortified, becauſe they ſerue ſo fitly for the purpoſe, by reaſon they are builded towardes the ſea, and that there lye certaine ſmall rocks, which at a lowe water are all diſcouered and drie, and ſome of them are ſeene at a high water. Right ouer theſe houſes to the Eaſtwardes there lyeth an Iſland about fiue hundred yardes from theſe houſes, and the Iſland is in forme of a halfe moone; and in this order it runneth all alongſt very neere the maine land: ſo ouer againſt theſe houſes there lyeth the harbour where all the ſhippes doe vſe to ride at an anker, after that they haue diſcharged and vnladen their marchandize. For when they haue their lading aboord, there can come in none but ſmall Barkes, and at a lowe water the ſhippes are all aground and drie, and ſo is all the ſpace ſome thirtie yardes from thoſe houſes. Right ouer againſt them ſtandeth the citie.

When newes were brought to this citie of thoſe Pirates which were come vpon this coaſt, the Lord Preſident and Iudges commanded that there ſhould a ſconce bee made, and trenched round about, made all of timber for the defence of this citie againſt the enemie, and to keepe your maieſties treaſure. So your officers cauſed Venta de Cruzes to be fortified, and likewiſe Chagre, and Quebrada, and fortified the garriſon of Ballano: for all theſe are places where the enemy may land, and by this meanes ſpoyle all this countrey.

Places good to land in.

There are three ſundry places, where this citie may without difficulty be taken, and ſpoyled by the Pirates. The firſt is on the North ſeas in a certaine place which lyeth foureteene leagues from Nombre de Dios, the place is called Acle to the Eaſtwards, where once before certaine men of warre haue entred into thoſe ſeas. The other place is Nombre de Dios, although this is a bad place and naughtie wayes, and full of waters and a very dirtie way: for three partes of the yeere the countrey people doe trauell vpon thoſe waters, and an other very badde way, which is the going vp of certaine rockes and mountaines which they muſt climbe, called the mountaines of Capira, which are of height three quarters of a league, ſo in this place with very ſmall ſtore of ſouldiers wee can defend our ſelues from the fury of the enemie, ſo theſe dwellers doe ſay that in Sommer the wayes are very good without either dirt or water,

1. Place.

2. Place. This was Oxenham.

The other entrance is vp the riuer of Chagre, which riuers mouth lyeth eighteene leagues from Nombre de Dios to the Weſtwards falling into the North ſea, and this is the place which the citizens of Panama doe moſt feare, for they may come vp this riuer to Venta de Cruzes, and ſo from thence march to this citie, which is but fiue leagues off. So vp this riuer there goe boates and barkes which doe carry 320. Quintals waight. Theſe are they which carry the moſt part of the marchandize which doe come from Spaine to be tranſported to Peru, and from Venta de Cruzes it is carried to Limaret which is three leagues off that place, and the dwellers doe report that it is a very good way: and if any men of warre will attempt to come into theſe ſeas, they may very eaſily come vp this riuer as farre as Venta de Cruzes, and from thence march vnto this citie, and if the enemy will, they may bring their pinneſſes ready made in foure quarters, and ſo taken in ſunder, may afterwards ſet them together againe: as it is reported that Francis Drake hath vſed it once before when he came that voyage; and ſo he may attempt vs both by ſea and land. And foraſmuch as the moſt part of theſe people are marchants, they will not fight, but onely keepe their owne perſons in ſafetie, and ſaue their goods; as it hath bene ſeene heretofore in other places of theſe Indies.

3. Place.

The place of moſt aduantage for the Engliſh.

So if it will pleaſe your maieſty to cauſe theſe houſes to bee ſtrongly fortified, conſidering it ſtandeth in a very good place if any ſudden alarms ſhoulde happen, then the citizens with their goods may get themſelues to this place, and ſo eſcape the terrour of the enemy: and ſo this will be a good ſecuritie for all the treaſure which doth come from Peru. So all the Pirats and rebels, which haue robbed in theſe parts, haue gone about what they can to ſtoppe this paſſage, and ſo by this meanes to ſtoppe the trade of Spaine, and to ſet ſouldiers in this place, for to intercept and take your maieſties treaſure, whereby none might be caried into Spaine. Therefore it behoueth your maieſtie to fortifie theſe places very ſtrongly.

Theſe places being fortified in this maner, your maieſty ſhal haue al your gold and ſiluer brought home in ſafetie which commeth from Peru. And all thoſe commodities which are laden in Spaine may come ſafe to this place. And if perchance any rebels ſhould riſe in theſe parts, which would rebel againſt your maieſty, which God forbid, & if they ſhould chãce to ioyn with any of theſe pirats, hauing this place ſo wel fortified, & Puerto Bello in ẏ North parts, & ſo to ſend ſome garriſon your maieſtie needs not to feare: for here in this harbor are alwayes 10 or 12 barks of 60 or 50 tunnes apiece, which do belong to this harbor. So if any of theſe places ſhalbe intercepted, thẽ your maieſtie hath no other place fitter then this to land your maieſties ſouldiers, for then they haue but 18. leagues to march by land, & preſently they may be ſhipped to ſupply theſe places which ſhal ſtand in moſt need of them. In al the coaſt of Peru there is no harbour that hath any ſhipping but onely this place, and the citie of Lima, where there are ſome ſhips and barks. The harbour being thus open without any defence, a man of war may very eaſily come to this place, as I haue certified your maieſtie, thorow the ſtreits of Magellane, & arriue at that inſtant, when thoſe barks do come from Peru with your maieſties gold & ſiluer, for ſometimes they bring 5 or 6 millions in thoſe barks; ſo the enemy may come and take al their treaſure, & not leeſe one man, becauſe here is not one man to Rebellion feared in the Weſt Indies.

5. or 6. millions of gold & ſiluer.

reſiſt

The harbour of Perico.

reſiſt him, therefore this place being thus fortified, the treaſure may be kept in the fort. There is a trench made round about your maieſties houſes which are builded of timber: the Preſident and Iudges did cauſe it to be made, for that here was newes brought that there were certaine men of warre, & pirats cõming for theſe parts. So this trench is thus maintained vntil ſuch time as your maieſties pleaſure is to the contrary, & in ſuch wiſe that your ſouldiers may fight lying behind the trench; ſo there is order giuen to build a platforme vpon the plaine ground, and ſo to plant ſuch ordinance in thoſe places, as ſhall be thought moſt conuenient.

Nota.

If it wil pleaſe your maieſtie, here we may make a ſconce or fort toward the land ſide, & ſo trench it round about and build it with ſtone, becauſe here is a place and al things readie for the ſame purpoſe; and by this meanes the citie would be ſecurely kept: as for the ſea there is no danger at al, by reaſon that the water doth ebbe & flow twiſe a day, and then when it is ebbing water it wil be all dry & muddy ground & rocks, ſo that in no wiſe at a low water the enemy can wade ouer the mud to come to this city, and it reacheth from the Iſland til you come to the bridge called Paita. Two leagues from this city there lieth a harbor called Perico downe to the Weſtward: this is a very ſure harbour by reaſon of 3. Iſlands which do ioyne in maner of a halfe moone, they lie halfe a league from the maine, the Iſlands do encloſe the harbor round about, the harbour is a very high land, & the Ilands are but reaſonable high, there is good ſtore of freſh water: alſo there hath neuer any ſhip bene caſt away in this harbour, for there is 7. fathome water at ful ſea, and 3 or 4 fathome at lower water, and very good ground for their ankering, and when they will trimme their ſhips they may hale them aſhore. All thoſe ſhips and barks which come from Peru with gold, ſiluer or any other kind of commodities, do firſt come to an anker in this harbour, and if they haue a contrary weather they cannot come into the harbour of Panama; and for ſo much as the harbour hath no defence for the ſafegard of the ſhips, if a man of warre ſhould chance to come into the harbour, all the barks with the treaſure may be very eaſily taken. And likewiſe theſe barks & ſhips which do nauigate in the South ſeas carrie not ſo much as one piece of ordinance or a rapier to defend them withall. From this place to Venta de Cruzes is not paſſing 5 leagues; ſo that if any pinneſſe ſhould happen to arriue there, no doubt but they might robbe and take al your treaſure which is in thoſe barks, by reaſon that from the ſhore they cannot be reſcued nor holpen, becauſe it is an Iſland and refuge for all ſhips and barks. If it would pleaſe your maieſtie here might ſome fort or defence bee made in the middlemoſt Iſland, and ſome ordinance planted, and this might bee made with little charges, becauſe in the ſaid Iſland there are all kinde of neceſſaries fit for that purpoſe, ſo by this meanes your maieſtie may haue both the harbour and the citie very well kept.

A new way into the South ſea.

And likewiſe there is another entring into the South ſea which is called the riuer of Franciſca, which lieth on this ſide of the Cabeça de Catiua, and this riuer doth come into another riuer which is called Caracol, and is fiue leagues from this citie; and once before theſe Simerons brought into this place certaine Frenchmen.

The riuer of Chagre.

Theſe fiue leagues are very good ground or champion countrey.

The riuer of Chagre lieth in 9. degrees and one tierce. The mouth of this riuer is in the North ſeas 18. leagues from Nombre de Dios, and 13. leagues from Puerto Bello: there is caryed vp this riuer certaine quantitie of thoſe merchandize which are vnladen at Nombre de Dios which come from Spaine. From the mouth of this riuer to Venta de Cruzes are eighteene leagues. From this place where the barkes vnlade their commodities, they are carried vpon mules to Panama, which is but fiue leagues off from this place.

This riuer hath great ſtore of water in the Winter. And the barkes which belong to this riuer are commonly of 320. Quintals that is of 16. tunnes in burthen: but in the Summer there is but ſmall ſtore of water: ſo then the barkes haue much to doe to get vp this riuer: and in many places theſe barks are conſtrained to vnlade their commodities; and are drawen by mens ſtrength and force a good way vp the riuer, and therefore if it would pleaſe your maieſtie to command that all thoſe goods may bee firſt vnladen in Puerto Bello, and there to build a litle caſtle in the mouth of the ſaid riuer, and at the foote of the caſtle to build a ſtorehouſe to vnlade and keepe all the ſayd goods, and there to build other barks of leſſe burthen: then theſe would ſerue for Sommer, and the great barks for the Winter.

If it would pleaſe your maieſtie, there might a very good high way be made on the one ſide of the riuer, and ſo they might bee towed, for it may bee made and not with much coſt becauſe it is all plaine ground, and there is growing vpon the ſayd riuer great ſtore of timber and trees which doe lie ouerthwart the ſaid Riuer; ſo that they are very cumberſome and great annoiance vnto the ſaid boates, aſwell thoſe that go vp the ſaid Riuer, as alſo that doe come downe the ſaid Riuer.

And therfore if it might pleaſe your maieſtie to command, that Puerto belo might be inhabited, and the towne made neerer the Riuers ſide, euery thing would be a great deale better cheape, if the commodities were caryed vp the Riuer: for it is a great danger to cary them vp by land, for it is daily ſeene that the mules do many times fall and breake their neckes with their lading vpon their backs, as well the treaſure as other kinde of commodities, becauſe it is ſuch a bad way. And your maieſtie might be at this charges and ſpend of your reuenewes of Nombre de dios and Panama, which do yerely yeild 12 or 14 thouſand pezos, & this being once done it would be a great ayd and benefit to thoſe, which doe trade and trafficke, and to thoſe merchantes which doe ſend their goods ouer-land, and eaſe them much of paine and purſe, becauſe the other is a moſt filthy way, as any is in the world.

A briefe remembrance of a voyage made in the yeere 1589 by William Michelſon Captaine, and William Mace of Ratcliffe, Maſter of a ſhip called the Dogge, to the Bay of Mexico in the Weſt India.

The aforeſaide ſhip called the Dogge, of the burthen of threeſcore and ten tunnes was furniſhed, and armed forth with the number of fortie men: it departed from the coaſt of England in the moneth of May, directly for the Weſt India: It fell with the Bay of Mexico, and there met with diuers Spaniſh ſhips at ſundry times, whereof three fel into her lapſe and were forced to yeeld vnto the mercie of the Engliſh: the laſt that they met within the Bay was a Spaniſh man of warre, whom the Engliſh chaſed, and after three ſeuerall fightes, vpon three diuers dayes, preſſed him ſo farre that he entreated a parle, by putting out a flagge of truce: the parle was granted, and certaine of the Spaniards came aboord the Engliſh. Where after conference about thoſe matters that had paſſed in the fight betwixt them, they receiued reaſonable intertainement and a quiet farewell. The Spaniſh, as if they had ment to requite the Engliſh courteſie, inuited our men to their ſhippe, who perſwading themſelues of good meaning in the Spaniſh, went aboord: but honeſt and friendly dealing was not their purpoſe, ſuddenly they aſſaulted our men, and one with a dagger ſtabde Roger Kingſnod the Engliſh Pilote to the heart and ſlewe him, and others were ſerued with the like ſauce, onely William Mace the Maſter & others, notwithſtanding al the prepared trappes of the enemie, lept ouerboord into the ſea, and ſo came ſafe to their own ſhip: and directing his courſe for England, arriued at Plimouth the tenth day of September 1589, laden with wines, yron, Roans, which is a kinde of linnen cloth, and other rich commodities, looking for the arriuall of the reſt of his conſorts, whereof one and the principall hath not long ſince obtained his Port. Thus much in generall termes onely I haue as yet learned, and receiued touching this voyage, extracted out of letters ſent from the aforeſaid William Mace, to Maſter Edward Wilkinſon of Towre-hill in London. My principall intention by this example is to admoniſh our nation of circumſpection in dealing with that ſubtill enemie, and neuer to truſt the Spaniſh further, then that their owne ſtrength ſhall be able to maſter them: for otherwiſe whoſoeuer ſhall through ſimplicitie truſt their curteſie, ſhall by tryall taſte of their aſſured crueltie.

Spaniſh treaſon.

CERTAINE SPANISH LETTERS INTERcepted by ſhippes of the Worſhipfull Maſter Iohn VVattes written from diuerſe places of the Iſlandes and of the maine land as well of Nueua Eſpanna, as of Tierra Firma and Peru, containing many ſecrets touching the aforeſaid Countreys, and the ſtate of the South Sea, and the Trade to the Philippinas.

A leter ſent from Hauana in Cuba from the general of the fleete Iohn de Ortmo to the king of Spaine the 18 of October 1590, touching the building of certaine excellent Frigats, &c.

It may pleaſe your maieſtie that at the date hereof one of the Frigates was lanched: and three more will be ready againſt the fleete depart from hence. They are very bigge and excellent of ſayle, which will carie 150 men a piece with ſouldiers and mariners. And hauing good ordinance, there are fewe or none of our enemies that can offend vs. For wee ſhall both leaue and take at all times when we liſt. But it behooueth your maieſtie to ſend both ſouldiers and mariners to man the Frigats. For we haue great want of ſouldiers and mariners, with tackling, ankers, powder, ſhot, caliuers, and all kinde of furniture for them. For theſe things are not here to bee had for money: and likewiſe to ſend ſome great ordinance for the Zabras. For the merchants ſhips are ſo weake and ſo vnprouided, that they haue almoſt none to defend themſelues. Alſo we ſhall be conſtrained to giue the carena againe vnto al the ſhips; for they are very weake by reaſon of the long voyage: and the mariners and ſouldiers are wearie with their long trauelling and keeping of them here. Thus if it would pleaſe your maieſtie to command with all expedition that theſe ſouldiers and mariners with al kinde of other furniture might be ſent vs, then the fleete may ſet forward and ſo proceede on their voyage. God preſerue your Catholike royal maieſtie. Frō Hauana the of 20 October 1590.

Your maieſties ſeruant, whoſe royall feet I kiſſe, IOHN DE ORIMO General of your Fleete.

A Letter ſent from the Gouernour of Hauana Iohn de Trexeda, to the King of Spaine, the twentieth of October 1590, touching the wants of that place.

The newe fortification in Hauana.

BY three ſhippes which departed from this Harbour ſince the Fleetes arriuall here, I haue giuen your maieſtie at large to vnderſtand, what hath happened as much as I can, and what thing is here to be done in this citie, and what your maieſtie muſt prouide. And now once againe I will returne to put your maieſtie in minde thereof. I beſeech your maieſtie to command to be prouided and to be ſent hither two hundred Negros, if you will haue this fortification to goe forwardes: becauſe your maieſtie is here at great charges with the maſter workeman and the Officers. And for want of Pioners the worke goeth not forwardes. For as the worke goeth dayly forward and increaſeth farther and farther, ſo we want men to worke, and to garde it, and likewiſe to keep it. We dare not meddle with thoſe of the Galies. And likewiſe it may pleaſe your maieſtie to ſend new working tooles of yron, according to a remembrance which I haue ſent to your maieſtie of late, which doeth ſignifie our wants more at large.

Souldiers ſent to Hauana.
A fort vpon an hill.

Likewiſe it is needefull that your maieſtie ſhould ſend powder and match to furniſh theſe forts. And likewiſe to ſend money to pay thoſe ſouldiers which are newly come hither, & for that companie of ſouldiers which were ſent from Mexico to this place. For it behooueth your maieſtie not to haue them as yet left, till ſuch time as the defences about the forts bee finiſhed, and that which is in building vpon the hill, which will be ended very ſhortly if you ſend the Negros, and yron tooles.

Fiue Frigats made at Hauana.
Iohn de Orimo General of the fleete.

Likewiſe I haue certified your maieſtie, that with all ſpeed I am making ready of the fiue Frigates, that they may cary all the treaſure. Alſo Iohn de Orimo ſeeing that it is of ſo great importance to haue them diſpatched, doeth furniſh mee with ſome money, although ſomewhat ſcantly, vntill ſuch time as your maieſtie doth ſend him ſome order therefore. I beſeech you to command it to bee done; conſidering the great charges and expences that we are at here, as by the accounts your Maieſtie ſhall more at large perceiue, what hath bene ſpent. Theſe Frigats will be made an end of without all doubt by the moneth of Februarie: but as yet their tackling and ſayles are not here arriued: but I doe ſtay the comming thereof euery day, according as the Duke of Medina and Iohn de Ibarra haue written vnto me, that thoſe ſhips which ſhould bring the ſame were readie to depart from thence. All theſe things it behooueth your Maieſtie to ſend in time: for I can aſſure your Maieſtie that you ſhall not haue vpon the ſea ſuch good ſhippes as theſe are. For as touching the other ſhips of the fleete, which are in this harbour, it is not conuenient to venture the ſiluer in them. This counſell your Maieſtie ſhall not take of mee, for I am a ſouldier, and haue but ſmall ſkill in nauigation. But euery day it is tolde me openly and in ſecret by many of the pilots, captaines, maſters, and mariners.

The excellency of the great Frygates built in Cuba.

As touching the copper, I haue put it in practiſe twiſe more, and haue made proofe thereof: wherein there hath bene more ſpent, then I was willing there ſhould haue bene, becauſe I haue gotten no fruit thereof: I know not the cauſe, but that it is not done effectually by thoſe that haue the working thereof. Therefore I beſeech your Maieſtie to ſend me that ſame founder which I wrote to your Maieſtie heretofore of. Our Lord keepe your Maieſtie many yeeres. From Hauana the 20 of October, 1590.

Your Maieſties ſeruant, whoſe royall feete I kiſſe, IOHN DE TREXEDA gouernour of Hauana.

A letter ſent to Don Petro de Xibar one of his Maieſties priuie Counſel of the Weſt Indies, from Don Diego Mendez de Valdes Gouernour of S. Iuan de Puerto Rico the 20 of Nouember 1590, touching the ſtate of that Citie and Iſland.

I Recieued your honours letter the 20 of Februarie, whereby I receiued great content, to heare that your honour is in good health. As touching the impriſonment of our couſin Don Pedro de Valdes, it doeth grieue me to the very ſoule. I beſeech God to ſend him his libertie: and likewiſe the impriſonment of Diego Flores de Valdes grieueth me very much: I pray God to ſend good iuſtice. The M. of the fielde Iuan de Texela, and the M. workeman Iuan Baptiſta Antonio arriued here in ſafetie, and haue veiwed this Citie with all the circuite round about and the ſituation as I haue informed his maieſtie thereof. They haue marked a place to build a ſtrong Fort, whereat the countrey remaineth very well contente. And it ſtandeth in a good ſituation, and in a conuenient place on a high mount which doeth lye vpon the entering in of the Harbour, & ſo cutteth ouer to a point of land, leauing in the Fort as much ſpace as wil containe 3000 perſons, without ioyning thereunto any part of the coaſt. So the M. del campo hath named the fort Citadella. He left me great ſtore of yron worke, tooles eight workemen, and 200 Negros, which are the kings. And the Iſland doth finde 400 pioners which are continually at worke. His maieſtie hath ſent me a warrant to ſpend the prouiſion of the Iſland, & to take thoſe rents which his maieſty hath here, & to certiſie his maieſtie what there is wanting for the maintaining of the workmen & that they may haue all things neceſſary. So I haue ſent to Nueua Eſpanna, for ſuch things as are here wanting. I haue writtē to the M. of the field, which is gone to Hauana, informing him that it doeth greatly import that the worke with all expedition ſhould go forward, ſeeing that it is begun for the defence of the Iſland. And we doe defend it as well as we can from the enemie, in reſpect of the great danger which otherwiſe might happen, if the enemie ſhould come and finde it begun, and not ended. And likewiſe that his maieſtie would ſend me that which I do requeſt. And the moſt principal thing of al is, to ſend more Negros. And ſending me all theſe things which be needful, I truſt in God I ſhal in ſhort time build vp the fort, to defend vs from the enemie. The fort muſt be builded triangle wiſe: for it will reach into the bay: and we ſhal be able to plant in the ſame 40 pieces of good ordinance, Canon, Demi canon, and Coluerine. The M. of the field, hath promiſed to ſend me ſome from Hauana. For that he is determined to caſt ſome there, by reaſon of the great ſtore of copper, which now of late is found in Hauana: for here we haue as yet but ſmall ſtore of ordinance to defend vs. I looke for 5 Canons which his maieſtie ſhould ſend from Spaine, with ſhot and powder and al kinde of weapons, becauſe that here is great want in the Iſland. His maieſtie hath ſent the whole number of 200 ſouldiers, and in the companie there came two capitaines. The corps de Guard is kept in the market place: and twiſe in a moneth I muſter all the men in the Iſland, and finde very neere 1500 fighting men, and 80 horſemen. The forte when it is ended will be the ſtrongeſt that his maieſtie hath in all the Indies. And now the people of the countrey ſleepe in ſecurity. For commonly before, the Engliſhmen would come and beard vs to the hauens mouth. God keep your honour, and ſend you long health. From Puerto Rico the 20 of Nouember 1590.

A letter to Iohn Lopez Canauate, Alderman in the towne of Canauate in Spaine written from his ſeruant Iuan de Porua Canauates, from Hauana the ſeuenteenth of October 1590, touching the ſtate of the ſaid place.

This is to giue you to vnderſtand, that ſince my departure from S. Lucar I haue written vnto you twiſe of mine arriuall here, and what ſucceſſe I haue had. And nowe you ſhall vnderſtand that I am determined to goe for Nueua Eſpanna. For I ſtay but opportunitie of time. For here is great watch dayly kept and great looking to the ſouldiers in keeping of them together, for running away. But neuertheleſſe I hope in God, to finde ſome friend to conuey mee away from hence. This countrey is ſo cloſe and narrow, that if a man ſteale not away hidden in ſome ſhippe, it is not poſſible for him to eſcape, nor to goe a league out out of the towne, no way but by ſea. And becauſe the harbour is ſo cloſe, it is the beſt harbour and the ſureſt in the world. The harbour is made in this order. The entrie in towarde the land is by a narrow ſtreight chanel, which continueth as long as a caliuer ſhot, and from that place the riuer openeth broader and broader: There are in the entring in, two points which make with the lande, whereupon are newly builded two ſtrong forts, which are fortified with very great ſtore of ordinance: beſides another ſtrong and famous Forte which is in the Citie, ſo that it is impoſſible to take it. There are in theſe three Fortes, a thouſand ſouldiers in Gariſon. And likewiſe here are two galies to keepe the coaſt. Yet for all this, the audacious Engliſhmen being without all ſhame are not afraid to come and dare vs at our owne doores. Our iourney to goe for England is moſt certaine in the yeere 1592. Here are making with great expedition 18 ſhips, which are called Frigats for that effect. They are very ſtrong ſhippes, and will drawe but very litle water, whereby they may enter amongſt the ſhoulds on the banckes of Flanders: they are builded the higher becauſe here is great ſtore of timber and excellent good and incorruptible. It is reported that the fleete will depart from hence in February, by reaſon that at that time the Engliſhmen are not departed out of their owne countrey. And thus I reſt. From this Iſland of S. Chriſtopher in Hauana this preſent day on S. Lukes euen; the 17 of October 1590.

A letter from Mexico, of Sebaſtian Biſcaino to his Father Antonio Biſcaino in Corchio in Spaine, touching the great profit of the trade to China, and ſomewhat of M. Thomas Candiſh. Written the 20 of June 1590.

Hauing written to your worſhip by a friend of mine at large, nowe I will bee ſomewhat ſhort. And this is onely to giue you to vnderſtand, that foure moneths paſt, I came from China, and landed in Acapulco, 70 leagues from Mexico, which is the harbour where the ſhips that goe downe to China lye: and all the marchants of Mexico bring all their Spaniſh commodities downe to this harbour, to ſhip them for that countrey. It is one of the beſt harbours in all Nueua Eſpanna; and where the ſhips may ride moſt ſafely without all kinde of danger. For it lyeth vnder a necke of land, and behind a great point. And in this harbour here are foure great ſhips of Mexico of 600 and 800 tunnes a piece, which onely ſerue to cary our commodities to China, and ſo to returne backe againe. The order is thus. From hence to China is aboue two thouſand leagues, farther then from hence to Spaine. And from hence their two firſt ſhips depart at one time to China: and are 13 or 14 moneths returning backe againe. And when thoſe two ſhips are returned, then the other twaine two moneths after depart from hence. They goe nowe from hence very ſtrong with ſouldiers. I can certifie you of one thing; That 200 ducates in Spaniſh commodities, and ſome Flemiſh wares which I caryed with me thither, I made worth 1400 ducates there in the countrey. So I make account that with thoſe ſilkes, and other commodities which I brought with me from thence to Mexico, I got 2500 ducates by the voyage: and had gotten more, if one packe of fine ſilkes had not beene ſpoiled with ſalt water. So as I ſayd, there is great gaine to be gotten if that a man returne in ſafetie. But the yeere 1588 I had great miſchance, comming in a ſhip from China to Nueua Eſpanna: which being laden with rich commodities, was taken by an Engliſhman which robbed vs and afterward burned our ſhip, wherein I loſt a great deale of treaſure and commodities.

A wonderfull gaine.

M. Thomas Candiſh.

If I ſhould write to you of the ſtate of this countrey of China, and of the ſtrange things which are there, and of the wealth of the countrey, I were not able to doe it, in an whole quier of paper. Onely I may certifie you, that it is the goodlieſt countrey, and the richeſt, and moſt plentifull in all the world. For here are great ſtore of golde mynes, ſiluer mynes, and pearle, great ſtore of cotten cloth: for the countrey people weareth nothing elſe but fine cotten cloth, which is more accepted then ſilkes. For here is great ſtore of ſilkes & they are good cheape. Al kinde of victuals, as bread, fleſh, wines and hennes and all kindes of foules, are very plentifull. Here are great ſtore of freſh riuers. The people are very louing. Here are very faire cities and townes with coſtly buildings, better then thoſe in Spaine. And the countrey people go very richly apparelled, both in ſilkes and gold. But here we haue order from the king of Spaine, that a Spaniard may not dwell in China, aboue 3 yeres, and afterwards they muſt returne again into Nueua Eſpanna, and other ſouldiers muſt come in their places. The countrey is very vnwholeſome for vs Spaniardes. For within theſe 20 yeres of 14000, which haue gone to the Philippinas, there are 13000 of them dead, and not paſt 1000 of them left aliue. There is a place in China which is an harbour, called Macaran, which the king hath giuen to the Spaniards freely: which ſhall be the place where the ſhips ſhall come and trafficke. For in this harbour there is a great riuer which goeth vp into the maine land, vnto diuers townes and cities, which are neere to this riuer. And thus troubling you no farther I reſt. From Mexico the 20 of Iune 1590.

A letter

A Letter of Bartholomew Cano to Peter de Tapia in Siuill, from Mexico the 30 of May 1590, touching the ſtate of Nueua Eſpanna, and the Fleet of that yeere.

BEcauſe I haue anſwered your letters which I haue receiued in the laſt Fleet, as touching that matter I haue no more to ſay. The occaſion of my writing vnto you at this time, is to giue you to vnderſtand, that thoſe commodities which came in the laſt Fleet, were ſold at the firſt good cheape, and thoſe that bought them, got much by them. For now at this inſtant white Roan cloth is ſolde for 8 or 9 reals a vare. The cauſe of this was, by reaſon there came a carauel of Aduiſe from Hauana; which brought vs newes, how the armie that his maieſtie did ſend for England, was all ſpoiled and caſt away: and therefore they of Spaine did write that there would come no Fleet from Spaine hither this yeere: And this is the cauſe that all linnen cloth is very deere in theſe parts. Wines alſo are very deere: for they are ſold for 90 and 100 deminas a pipe. When the Frigats departed from hence in Auguſt laſt 1589. Cochinilla was ſold at that inſtant for 50 peſos the quintall; and now it is ſold for 55 peſoes. And ſince that newes came from Spaine in a carauel of S. Lucar, that it was ſolde there for 72 ducates the quintall, there are laden in this Fleet 14000 Arouas of Cochinilla, and 7000 Arouas more were laden in the Frigats which departed before the Fleet. There is laden in the Fleet great quantitie of treaſure, more then hath bene ſent to Spaine theſe many yeres, both for the Kings and the Vice-royes account. And the marchants and gentlemen of all theſe prouinces doe ſend great quantitie to ſupply the Kings wants: for that his maieſtie hath written to the Vice-roy and to the gentlemen of theſe countreyes to ayde him with much money towardes the maintenance of his warres againſt France and other places, & therefore they haue ſent good ſtore: God ſend it well to Spaine. There are likewiſe laden aboord the Fleet to the number of 100000. hides, and great ſtore of other kindes of this countrey commodities. So that the the Fleet goeth very richly laden. Quicke ſiluer is here very deere, for here is almoſt none to bee had for any money to worke in the gold mynes: for without Quicke ſiluer wee cannot refine our gold. And no man vpon paine of death may bring any from Spaine hither; but all muſt come for the Kings account: and ſo the King doeth ſell it here: there is exceeding great gaine therein. And thus I reſt: From Mexico, the 30 of May 1590.

A letter of Frier Alonſo new elected Biſhop of Mechuacan, to the king of Spaine, written in Peru in the citie de los Reyes the firſt of March 1590, touching the ſtate of Arica a chiefe Hauen in Peru.

VPon Chriſtmas euen the yere 1589, I receiued your maieſties commiſſion in Potoſſi. For which I am and ſhall be continually bound to pray for your maieſties long health, for the great benefits which your maieſtie hath beſtowed vpon me, in ſending me to Mechuacan: whereby my great trauell and paines may be recompenced, which I haue taken with that vngrateful and deſperate people of the riuer of Plate, which they haue bene the occaſion of, in dealing ſo badly with me their Paſtour, which haue counſelled them, that they ſhould haue a great care to ſerue God, and be dutifull to your maieſtie, according as euery good and true ſubiect ought to do. Now for this gift which your maieſtie hath beſtowed on me, I moſt humbly kiſſe your maieſties handes a thouſand times. Thus preſently I departed from Potoſſi ſomewhat ſickely, to accompliſh that which your maieſtie hath commanded me. So I arriued at Lima in ſafetie the firſt of February by the way of Arica, which is an hauen towne, where they imbarke all the barres of ſiluer. And there I haue ſeene what is done, & what they haue prouided againſt the Engliſhmen in that hauen: which is; That there is a litle fort made hard by the waters ſide, with certaine ſmall pieces of ordinance in the ſaid fort to offend the enemie, if occaſion ſhould ſerue that they ſhould offer to come into the harbour and offer any violence. But the principall thing of all that we want is to haue ſouldiers, foote men, and horſemen. For according as I am informed, here want 100 men which ſhould keepe the coaſt, if they ſhould offer to land and march vp into the countrey. And likewiſe the people of this countrey haue told me, that if vpon an high mount which is here in the harbour neere to the hauens mouth, on the Southſide of the harbour where the ſea doth beat, ther were two or three great Canons planted on the top of the hill, (where very good watch is continually kept) from that place they may reach to doe the enemie great hurt, a league into the ſea. The new Vice-roy Don Garcia Vrtado de Mendoça, worthy of that dignitie, is in great fauour with al thoſe of theſe realmes : for that he is a great ſolliciter both by ſea and land in all kinde of diligence, not looſing one houre in your ſeruice, and that which he hath in charge. With as much ſpeed as may be I will depart from hence to Mechuacan, to ſerue that church and your maieſty : and there I will remaine according to your maieſties commandement, with the bulles or indulgences. Our Lord keepe your maieſty many yeres in his holy ſeruice. From the city de los Reyes the firſt of March 1590.

A letter of Don Iohn de Miramontes Suaſola to Don Iohn Garcias de Penaloſa from Arica on the coaſt of Peru the tenth of March 1590.

English men in the South ſea ſought 3 yeres.

This was M. Chidleys fleet, whereof the Delight was in the ſtreights of Magelan in Ianuary and Feb. 1589.

After my long trauell and badde ſucceſſe, my fortune brought mee to the Indies; where being void of all hope, and full of griefe, I am become a ſouldier : a thing in this countrey which is moſt hated of all other things, not onely of men, but of the wilde beaſts : and is an occupation which is choſen of idle perſons. The occaſion of this is, that there haue bene in theſe ſeas, and yet are certeine Engliſh rouers : and in ſeeking of them I haue trauelled theſe three yeres : the one of the yeres a ſouldier, and the other two yeeres I haue gone for captaine and enſigne-bearer. And at this time here is arriued Don Garcias Vrtado de Mendoça viceroy of theſe realmes : who hath choſen me to be chiefe enſigne-bearer of an army which departed from hence to ſcoure the coaſt. For here we haue newes of the enemy, which is comming vpon the coaſt : for wee haue ſtayed for their comming theſe foure moneths the ſame way which they muſt come, in a hauen called Arica, which is the firſt entry of Peru. So I haue 90 pezos a moneth, beſides other profits, at nine reals the pezo; & foure ſhares at nine reals the pezo. So that I haue 1800 pezos euery yere of pay : for the viceroy is my dere friend, and maketh great account of me. And I haue alwayes 400 ducats in my cheſt to goe like a man. I beſeech God ſend vs quietneſſe. But yet it is the part of a gentleman to ſerue the king his maſter in theſe actions. And thus I reſt. From the harbour of Arica the tenth of March 1590.

I kiſſe your worſhips hands, and am at your commandement
Don Iohn de Miramontes Suaſola.

This was M. Iohn Chidleys fleet.

There are foure great galeons of 350 tunnes a piece, which are in Arica men of warre, with a Generall, Admirall, Viceadmirall, with great ſtore of ſouldiers which keepe this hauen : for the viceroy hath intelligence that there are certeine Engliſhmen of war comming thither. This hauen of Arica is the beſt harbour in all the South ſea : for all the ſiluer which commeth from the mines of Potoſſi, is ſhipt in this harbour, and ſo brought to Lima. And likewiſe all the commodities which come from Spaine, and all the kings quickſiluer, is vnladen in this harbour, and ſo carried to the city of Lima and other places, where the mines of ſiluer are.

Famine.

Plague.

The laſt yeere 1588 I receiued letters from your worſhip and from my ſiſter : and ſince that time I haue receiued none, nor in the fleet which came to Cartagena 1589. And this yere 1590 there hath bene great want of corne in this kingdome of Potoſſi : for that there hath beene no raine in this kingdome of long time. For in March the huſbandmen vſe to ſowe their corne : and in Aprill Winter doth begin. And if in April there be no raine, the corne which is ſowen will conſume away : and ſo for want of raine we haue had two badde yeres of corne. And likewiſe here hath bene in theſe countreys of Potoſſi, and in the city De la paz, great ſickneſſe among the Indians, Mullatos, and Meſtiços, called the ſmall pocks, and a certeine plague, which hath deſtroyed all this countrey. And there haue no olde people died, nor Spanyards, but onely this countrey people, from one yeere to 30 yeeres of age : ſo for want of Indians we can not worke in the mines. This ſickneſſe runneth al along the coaſt of Peru, and hath paſſed into the ſtreights of Magalianes, whence we haue newes that thoſe ſouldiers which were ſent from Spain thither to build thoſe forts are moſt of them dead, & eſpecially the workemen which came to make the forts. The Generall Don Diego de Abolos hath written to his maieſty to ſend more ſouldiers and more workemen, whereby theſe three forts might be builded according to the kings commandement. This ſickneſſe came firſt from Cartagena to this countrey, which is 1000 leagues diſtant : and, as I ſayd, it hath gone all Peru ouer, to the vtter vndoing of this countrey: I pray God to ceaſe it. I pray you when you write any letters to mee, ſend them in thoſe ſhippes which come to Sainct Thomé, and take in Negros. And there are great ſtore of ſhips which goe to Sainct Thomé for Negros, and it is but 15. dayes ſailing ouer a gulfe to Braſill. And from Braſill their ſhippes bring their Negros to a hauen called The hauen of Buenos Aeres, which is within the entrance of the mightie riuer of Plate. And from this harbour all kinde of Spaniſh and Portugall commodities are caried to this citie of Potoſſi in carts and on horſes: for it is but 10. or 12. dayes iourney, and the countrey is very plaine for carts to trauaile. And from Potoſſi to this harbour is great ſtore of treaſure brought to buy that countrey commodities, and ſo they are ſhipped for Portugall: and the ſhips go and come againe in ſhort time. If his maieſtie will conſent that we may haue traffique from Spaine to this harbour, it will be very profitable: and in fiue or ſixe moneths I ſhall heare from you, & you ſhall doe the like from me. And by the way of Cartagena it is ſometime 2. yeres before we can receiue your letters from Spaine. By this way my brother may write, and ſo by this meane the letters may ſpeedily come to my hand. And thus I reſt. From this citie of Potoſſi the 20. of Iuly 1590.

IT may pleaſe your worſhip to vnderſtand, that I haue receiued a packet of letters from you, wherein you write vnto me of the great miſeries and the calamities of Spaine. And I promiſe you that theſe countreys are in no leſſe. For here is great want of corne and other kind of prouiſion: for here is almoſt none to be had for any money, by reaſon that from Lima there is no ſhipping come with maiz. Here wee haue had newes from Spaine of the great prouiſiō which is making ready for thoſe great wars which his maieſtie is in preparing, & of the great ſums of money that his maieſtie ſtandeth in neede of: So that it doth put vs all that are dwellers here in ſuch a perplexitie and confuſion, that we know not what we ſhall doe. I pray God his maieſtie take not away our money which wee haue ſent to Spaine in the fleete. For here are marchants that haue ſent ſome 200000. pezos, ſome 100000. pezos, ſome 60000. ſome more ſome leſſe, to haue it imployed in commodities of that countrey. Although the king hath ſent hither his ſcedule or bill of aſſignement ſigned and ſealed by his maieſtie, which hath bene proclaimed here: The contents whereof are, That what man ſoeuer marchant or other will ſend their money into Spaine in that fleete, his maieſtie will not take away any part or portion thereof, (which in ſo doing will bee a great comfort vnto vs all) yet here we were in doubt that hee would take it from vs all. Newes from the citie of Lima as yet we haue none: But I can certifie your worſhippe, that all things are very deere here, and that we ſtand in great extremitie for want of victuals; and likewiſe we haue great want of money. Alſo here is order come from the king with certaine priuie ſeales for to lend his maieſtie money, for that hee hath great neede thereof. This countrey at this inſtant is very poore, and there are none that can lend the king at this time any money at all, by reaſon that this lande is left ſo vnprouided of money: But wee are looking for great ſtore of money, which is to come from Lima and from The Valles.

WIth other letters which I diſpatched frō hēce in Auguſt 1589. I wrote vnto your worſhip by 2. or 3. wayes: but I know not whether you haue receiued them or no. Preſently after I departed to the gouernment of Popayan, which ioyneth with the citie of Quito in the coaſt of Peru, in companie of the gouernors lieutenant Don Diego Ordonez de

But I was faine to forſake his companie, by reaſon I fell ſicke in the citie of Marequita, where they haue diſcouered the great ſiluer mines: which citie is aboue 200. leagues from Cartagena: where I remained a certaine time very ſicke. And becauſe this countrey is extreme hotte, and I euery day grewe worſe and worſe, I was faine to trauaile 30. leagues further vp into the maine land to a citie called S. Fee in the new kingdom of Granada, being on the coaſt of Peru: which is a cold countrey: where I am admitted a procurator, for that the Roial audience is kept in this citie. So I finde my ſelfe very healthy of bodie, by reaſon this countrey is full of all kind of victuals, very good and very plentifull, as bread, cheeſe, bacon, beefe, great ſtore of hennes, and great ſtore of comfeitures. Onely here is want of golde: ſo that this countrey will be vtterly vndone, if the mines of Marequita help not to reſtore the ſame again: whereof there is good hope: for here is great ſtore of metall already found, and the workmen are in hand to refine the ſaid metal: ſo that we are in good hope that great ſtore of ſiluer will be found in theſe mines of great value and profite to his maieſtie. This riuer is called The great riuer of Magdalena. There is a fiſh in the riuer called Cayman, which followeth after the canoas: and if it can reach any man in the canoa, it will haile him out and deuoure him. All night they lie in the ſand on ſhore. In this riuer as we are going vp, there is at certaine ſeaſons great ſtore of lightning and thunder, with ſuch abundance of raine, as though the ſkies would fall downe: and ſo it doth continue from midnight vntil morning: ſo that we are faine to go aboord the canoas, & with certaine broad leaues which grow in the countrey, the mariners make a couering to caſt ouer the wares which are laden in the canoas: and it doth keepe both the raine & ſunne from vs which are paſſengers. The canoas are drawen vp this riuer of Magdalena by maine force of the mariners in rowing and haling them with ropes. There are 7. or 8. Indians commonly which guide theſe canoas, beſides the Maſter which keepeth the helme, and the paſſengers. We are commonly two moneths in going vp this riuer. It is 150. leagues to the landing place. And there the marchants vnlade their marchandiſe, which ſerue for all the cities and townes which are in this newe kingdome of Granada. And the marchants lade the canoas backe againe from thence with great ſtore of ſiluer and golde which is gotten out of the mines for Cartagena, and there it is ſhipped for Spaine. And likewiſe here is great quantitie of treaſure laden in the ſayd canoas which is for the kings cuſtome and other dueties which are paid: But they are but a moneth or three weekes going downe the riuer to Cartagena. Theſe are the richeſt mines in all Peru. And thus I reſt.

From Santa Fee de Bogota in the new kingdome of Granada in Peru the 10. of May 1590.

The Licenciate IOHN de

LABERA.

A letter of Hieronymo de Nabares to the licenciat Iohn Alonſo dwelling in Valladolid, written from Panama to Siuil the 24. day of Auguſt 1590. touching the gainefulnes of the trade to the Philippinas, and the extreme feare they haue of the Engliſhmen.

The great profite of the trade to the Philippinas.

NOt long agone I wrote to your worſhip from Panama by the way of Hauana: giuing you to vnderſtand of my being here, & of the ſtate of theſe countreys. After I departed from Spaine, in 37. dayes wee arriued at Cartagena: and from thence I tooke ſhipping to goe to Nombre de Dios, which is 80. leagues from Cartagena: and in 4. dayes wee got thither. And from thence I went to Panama: where I haue remained theſe 20. dayes, till the ſhippes goe for the Philippinas. My meaning is to carie my commodities thither: for it is conſtantly reported, that for euery hundred ducats a man ſhall get 600. ducats cleerely. Wee muſt ſtay here in Panama from Auguſt till it be Chriſtmaſſe. For in Auguſt, September, October and Nouember it is winter here, and extreme foule weather vpon this coaſt of Peru, and not nauigable to goe to the Philippinas, nor to any place elſe in the South ſea. So that at Chriſtmaſſe the ſhips begin to ſet on their voyage for thoſe places: and then in theſe parts the ſummer beginneth with very faire weather, and alwayes we ſhall haue the windes with vs. For in Iuly vntil October here is terrible thundering and lightening with extreme raines, ſo that it is not poſſible to go any way in this countrey. Here are in Panama 10. great ſhips of 500, 400, 300, & 200. tuns apiece, & ſome 15. barkes which vſe commonly to ſaile in the South ſea to Lima, to the Valles, to Arica, and to the Philippinas. This countrey in the ſummer is ſo extreme hotte, that it is not poſſible to trauel in the day time: it ſtandeth in 8. deg. & ½. and all this coaſt is in 9. and 10. deg.. Here is great ſtore of adders, ſnakes and toades, which are in the houſes, but they doe but ſmall hurt. Here bread, wine, and bacon are very deere, by reaſon the countrey doth not yeeld it: for it is brought from Peru. A li. of bread is worth here 2. rials of plate: a quart of wine is ſolde for 4. rials: for none groweth here. Here are very few ſheep, and thoſe extreme deere. The only food here for fleſh, are oxen, kine, buls & heffkers: you may buy 20. li. of beefe for one rial of plate. Their ſmalleſt money of ſiluer is a rial of plate, & very few of them, but all pieces of 4. & 8. For the ſiluer mines which dayly be found in Peru be wonderfull to bee ſpoken of. If a man did not ſee the ſiluer made, hee would neuer beleeue it: for the very earth which commeth out of the mines, & is afterward waſhed, being but 3. or 4. yeres on a mount, yeeldeth great ſtore of ſiluer afterwards againe. But as here we get much, ſo our charge in meat, drinke and apparell doth coſt very much. As for fruite here is none that is good, but onely muſke melons, and they are ſold for 6. or 8. rials apeece. I can certifie your worſhip of no newes, but only, that all this countrey is in ſuch extreme feare of the Engliſhmen our enemies, that the like was neuer ſeene nor heard of: for in ſeeing a ſaile, preſently here are alarmes in all the countrey. I pray you to write vnto me as touching the wars that his Maieſtie hath with our enemies, and howe his Maieſtie doth preuaile. And thus I reſt. From Panama in the firme land the 28. of Aug. 1590.

Twenty li. of beefe may bee bought for ſixe pence in Peru.

The Engliſhmen extremely feared in Peru.

HIERONYMO de
NABARES.

A relation of a memorable fight made the 13. of Iune 1591. againſt certaine Spaniſh ſhips & gallies in the Weſt Indies, by 3. ſhips of the honorable ſir George Carey knight, then marſhall of her Maieſties houſhold, and captaine of the Ile of Wight, now lord Hunſdon, lord Chamberlaine, and captaine of the honourable band of her Maieſties Penſioners.

THe 13. of Iune 1591. being ſunday, at 5. of the clock in the morning we deſcried 6. ſaile of the king of Spaine his ſhips. Foure of them were armadas, (viz. the Admirall and viceadmirall of 700. tuns apeece, and the other 2. of 600. apeece) and the other 2. were ſmal ſhips, each of them about 100. tuns. We met wͭ them off the Cape de Corrientes, which ſtandeth on the Iland of Cuba. The ſight of the foreſaid ſhips made vs ioyfull, hoping that they ſhould make our voyage. But aſſoone as they deſcryed vs, they made falſe fires one to another & gathered their fleet together, lying all cloſe by a wind to the Southwards. We therefore at 6. of the clock in the morning (the wind being at Eaſt) hauing made our prayers to almighty God, prepared our ſelues for the fight: And (in hope they had bene of the Cartagena fleete) wee bare vp with our admirall and viceadmiral, to determine of the combate for the better directiõ therof. Our parle being ended, our admiral, viceadmiral, & the Hopewel gaue their admiral the prow, bringing themſelues to leeward of him. We in the Content bare vp with their viceadmiral, and (ranging along by his broad ſide aweather of him) gaue him a voley of muskets and our great ordinance: then comming vp with another ſmall ſhip ahead of the former, wee hailed her in ſuch ſort, that ſhee payd roome. Thus being in fight with the little ſhip, we ſaw a great ſmoke come from our admiral, and the Hopewel & Swallow forſaking him with all the ſailes they could make: whereupon bearing vp with our admiral (before we could come to him) we had both the ſmall ſhips to windward of vs, purpoſing (if we had not bene too hotte for them) to haue layd vs aboord. Thus (the fight continuing between vs and them 3. houres) we were forced to ſtand to the Northwards, the Hopewel and the Swallow not comming in all this while to ayd vs, as they might eaſily haue done. Our admirall by this time being in fight with their viceadmiral, and another great ſhip of theirs, ſtood off to ſea with his topgallant ſaile, and all the ſailes he could make: then might the Hopewel & the Swallow haue payd roome to ſecond him, but they failed him as they did vs ſtanding off cloſe by a wind to the Eaſtward. All this time we were forced to the Northwards with 2. of their great ſhips and one of their ſmall. They hauing a loom gale (wee being altogether becalmed) wͭ both their great ſhips came vp faire by vs, ſhot at vs, and on the ſudden furled their ſpritſailes & mainſailes, thinking that we could not eſcape them. Then falling to prayer, we ſhipped our oars that we might rowe to ſhore, & anker in ſhallow water where their great ſhips could not come nie vs, for other refuge we had none. Then 1. of their ſmal ſhips being manned from 1. of their great, & hauing a boat to rowe thẽſelues in, ſhipped her oars likewiſe & rowed after vs, thinking wͭ their ſmall ſhot to haue put vs frõ our oars, vntil yͤ great ſhips might come vp with vs: but by yͭ time ſhe was within musket ſhot, the Lord of his mercie did ſend vs a faire gale of wind at the Northweſt off the ſhore. What time (they being all to leeward of vs) wee ſtood to the Eaſt. The ſmall ſhip was vnder our lee within Falcon ſhot, and another great ſhippe lay to the Weſtward, ſo that wee could no way poſſibly eſcape them vpon that boord: then (we thinking to auoyd them by caſting about to the Weſtwards) the other great ſhippe gate vnder our lee, and the ſmall ſhip on our weather quarter, purpoſing to make vs pay roome with the great ſhip, by force of her ſmall & great ſhot. Then (we being lee boord tacked, and they ſterboord) we made her ſpring her looffe, and by a fortunate ſhot which our gunner made, pierced her betwixt winde and water. Hereupon ſhee was forced to lay herſelfe vpon the carena, and to ſtand with one of the other ſhips for ayde. Afterward (commending our ſelues to almightie God in prayer, and giuing him thankes for the winde which he had ſent vs for our deliuerance) we looked forth and deſcryed two ſaile more to the offen: theſe we thought to haue bene the Hopewell, and the Swallow that had ſtoode in to ayde vs: but it prooued farre otherwiſe, for they were two of the kings gallies. Nowe hauing a loome gale of winde, wee ſhipped our oars, and rowed off the ſhore: and our watch was no ſooner ſet, but wee eſpied one gallie vnder our lee hard by vs, boging vp with vs. Then (becauſe it was euening) one of the great ſhips diſcharged ſixe great ſhot at vs, to the ende the gallies ſhould knowe that wee were the ſhippe they looked for. Then the gallie came vp, and (hayling vs of whence our ſhippe was) a Portugall which wee had with vs, made them anſwere, that we were of the fleete of Tierra firma, and of Siuil: with that they bid vs amaine Engliſh dogs, and came vpon our quarter ſtar-boord: and giuing vs fiue caſt pieces out of her prowe, they ſought to lay vs aboord: but wee ſo galled them with our muſkets, that we put them from our quarter. Then they winding their gallie, came vp into our ſterne, and with the way that the gallie had, did ſo violently thruſt in the boordes of our captaines cabbin, that her noſe came into it, minding to giue vs all their prowe, and ſo to ſinke vs. But wee being reſolute, ſo plyed them with our ſmall ſhot, that they could haue no time to diſcharge their great ordinance: and when they began to approch, wee heaued into them a ball of fire, and by that meanes put them off: whereupon they once againe fell aſterne of vs, and gaue vs a prowe. Then hauing the ſecond time put them off, wee went to prayer, and ſang the firſt part of the 25. Pſalme, prayſing God for our ſafe deliuerance. This being done, we might ſee 2. gallies and a frigat all three of them bending themſelues together to encounter vs: hereupon we (eftſoones commending our eſtate into the hands of God) armed our ſelues, and reſolued (for the honour of God, her Maieſtie, and our countrey) to fight it out till the laſt man. Then ſhaking a pike of fire in defiance of the enemie, and weauing them amaine, we bad them come aboord: and an Engliſhman in the gallie made anſwer, that they would come aboord preſently. So managing our ſelues to our furniture, and euery moment expecting the aſſault, wee heard them parle to this effect, that they determined to keepe vs companie till the morning, and then to make an end with vs: then giuing vs another ſhot from

A fight from 7. in the morning till 11. at night. one of the gallies, they fell aſterne. Thus our fight continued with the ſhippes and with the gallies, from ſeuen of the clock in the morning till eleuen at night. Howbeit God (which neuer faileth them that put their truſt in him) ſent vs a gale of winde about two of the clocke in the morning at Eaſtnortheaſt, which was for the preuenting of their crueltie, and the ſauing of our liues. Alſo (the Lord be praiſed for it) in all this dangerous fight, wee had not one man ſlaine, and but 2. hurt: but our ſayles and ropes were ſo rent with their ſhot, that it was wonderfull to behold: our maine maſt alſo was ſhot cleane through, whereby wee were in exceeding great danger. Thus our conſortes forſooke vs, and left vs in theſe extremities. The next day being the 14. of June in the morning, wee ſawe all our aduerſaries to lee-ward of vs, and they eſpying vs, chaſed vs till 10. of the clocke, and then ſeeing they could not preuaile, gaue vs ouer. So that day about 5. of the clocke in the afternoone, we bare vp to the Southweſt, in hope to finde our conſorces, but we had no ſight of them at that time, nor afterward. Then ſtoode we in all that night for the Cape of S. Anthonie, hoping there to ſee our Admirall according to his direction. The 15. day of June early in the morning, we deſcryed the Spaniſh fleete againe, being within 5. leagues of Cape S. Anthonie. Then (hauing no ſight of our conſortes) wee ſtoode for the place according to the direction of our owner ſir George Carey, where we did plie for the ſpace of 23. dayes, and neuer could ſee any ſayle but two frigats, which wee gaue chaſe vnto the 24. of June, and could not fet them vp. Thus wee giue God moſt humble thankes for our ſafe deliuerance from the cruell enemie, which hath beene more mightie by the prouidence of God, then any tongue can expreſſe: to whom bee all prayſe, honour, and glory, both now and euer, Amen.

Appendix.

The barke called The Content had but one Minion, one Falcon, one Saker, & 2. port-bases. She continued fight (from ſeuen in the morning til ſunſet) with 3. armadas of 600. and 700.

tunnes apiece, and one ſmall ſhippe of 100.tunnes, not being aboue musket ſhot from any of them. And before the ſunne was ſet, there came vp to her two of the kings gallies. Beſides, the Armadas ſhot their great ordinance continually at her, not ſo few as 500.times. And the ſides, hull, and maſtes of the Content were ſowed thicke with musket bullets. Moreouer, all their ſheats, tops and ſhrowdes were almoſt cut inſunder with their great & ſmall ſhot. There paſſed from the gallies (each whereof came thriſe vp to her, & diſcharged fiue great pieces at a time, out of euery their prowes forthright, within three yards of her poope) through her maine ſaile 19.great ſhot, through her main top-ſaile foure: through her fore-ſaile ſeuen: through her fore-top-ſaile fiue: and through her maine maſte one. The vpper part of the Content was hurt in fiue places. Onely 13.men continued this fight, the reſt being in holde.

A frigat of the Spaniards (being afterward taken) confeſſed, that there were in the gallies aboue 40.Spaniards ſlaine, and many were hurt in that combate.

A true report of a voyage vndertaken for the Weſt Indies by M. Chriſtopher Newport Generall of a fleete of three ſhippes and a pinneſſe, viz. The golden Dragon Admirall, whereof was Captaine M.Newport himſelfe; The Prudence Vice-admirall, vnder the conduct of Captaine Hugh Merrick; The Margaret vnder Captaine Robert Fred; and The Virgin our pinneſſe vnder Captaine Henry Kidgil: Begun from London the 25. of Ianuarie 1591. Written by M. Iohn Twitt of Harewich, Corporall in the Dragon. In which voyage they tooke and burnt vpon the coaſt of Hiſpaniola, within the bay of Honduras, and other places, 3. townes, and 19. ſaile of ſhippes and frigats.

The 12.day of Februarie An.1591. we ſet ſaile from Douer roade, and hauing a proſperous winde, the 27.day of the ſame moneth wee fell with Cape Cantin on the coaſt of Barbarie, and on the 28.wee arriued at Santa Cruz roade, where hauing refreſhed our ſelues ſome 3.or 4.dayes, we put off to ſea againe, and about the 5. of March wee paſſed by the Ilands of the Canaries: and hauing a fauourable wind, the 4.of April An.1592.we fell with Dominica in the Weſt Indies: where making ſtay a day or two, wee bartred with the Saluages for certaine commodities of theirs, viz. Tabacco, hennes, Potato rootes &c.

Paſſing from thence to a watering place on the other ſide of the cliffe, wee tooke a Portugall ſhip of Liſbone of 300. tuns, which came from Guinie, and was bound for Cartagena, wherein were 300.Negros young and olde. Which ſhip we tooke along with vs to S.Iuan de Puerto rico, where we landed the marchant and one Spaniard more within a league of the towne, and landing ſome 20. or 30. musketiers, ſome 20. horſemen made towards vs; but wee retired to our boates without any ſeruice done.

The 9.we lay houering all day before the towne, the caſtle making a ſhot or two at vs.

The reaſon why wee ſet the Portugall marchant aland there was, for that he hoped to helpe vs to ſome money for his Negros there, but he falſified his worde with vs, ſo that paſſing along to the Weſtermoſt ende of the ſayde Iland, about ſome 9. or 10.leagues from the towne wee landed the Negros, and ſunke their ſhip.

The 11. of Aprill we paſſed from thence to Mona ſome 15. leagues off, where we landed: there were on the Iland about 19. ſoules, the children of an olde Portugall, and his wife who affourded vs ſuch fruits as their Iland yeelded, viz. ſwines fleſh, Potato rootes, &c.

From thence along wee paſſed to Saona, a long Iland and very fruitfull, repleniſhed with ſtore of wilde beaſtes and ſwine, where we landed, hunted, and trained our men.

Paſſing from hence Weſtward along the South coaſt of Hiſpaniola, wee deſcryed a frigat, which wee chaſed and tooke; wherein were 22. iarres of copper-money, being bound for S. Iuan de Puerto rico, to buy wine there.

The next day we tooke 2. ſmall frigats more, but nothing of any value in them.

The 15. of Aprill at night wee ſacked a towne in the ſayde Iland of Hiſpaniola called Ocoa, where was an Ingenio, wherein we found ſugar & poultrie great ſtore, but the people had diſcouered our ſhips ouer night, and were fled into the mountaines. This town ſtandeth a league from the ſeaſide, conſiſting of ſome fortie or fiftie houſes. They brought vs much cattell, and two wayne loades of ſugar, to ranſome the towne. While this action was perfourmed, Robert Freed of Harwich, captaine of the Margaret, tooke two frigats with certaine Spaniards on the other ſide of the bay, which came to lade ſugar there at an Ingenio.

After we had here refreſhed our ſelues, wee ſtode along for Cape Tiburon, where we watered: and making no ſtay there, about the 23. of Aprill wee left our ſhippes in a faire road-ſted vnder an Iland not inhabited, and with our frigats which wee had taken before, wherein wee ſhipped all our ſtrength which poſſibly wee could affourd, leauing onely ſo fewe aboord our ſhippes as could hardly if neede had bene, haue wrought them; we paſſed along by the ſayd Iland to the Northweſt part of Hiſpaniola, to a towne called Yaguana; where the 27. in the morning 2. houres before day we landed; but wee were diſcouered by meanes of a frigat that lay laden with victuals, bound for Carthagena, the men of which frigat recouering on lande before vs, gaue an alarme to the towne, who were preſently vp in armes to the number of a hundred & fiftie horſes. Wee marched notwithſtanding along to the towne, hauing a Spaniard for our guide, where by that time the day brake, we were before the towne, where vpon a faire greene making a ſtand, we were encountred by the horſemen hauing no ſtrength of foote, but certaine few looſe ſhot which lay in a low valley at the entrie of the towne. The horſemen charged vs very fiercely, but ſeeing they could not preuaile, brought in a droue before them of two hundred beaſtes or more: and ſo forcibly thinking to haue broken our array, it pleaſed God to cauſe their cattell to returne backe vpon themſelues: and thus their owne deuice ſorted out to their owne detriment. In this ſkirmiſh wee ſlewe their gouernour, a man very hardy, and of great valure.

This towne ſtandeth from the waters ſide a league.

In the end, by reaſon of the Spaniards brags which they gaue out, (as by the life of their wiues and children, &c. that not one of vs ſhould goe aboord againe) a greater doubt of intercepting of vs and of our boates was ſtroken into our captaines hearts then needed: and ſo for that time we retired to our boates not entring the towne, and ſo paſſed with our boates to our ſhips againe; where the ſame night our captaine determined to goe vp with our ſhippes, but it fell ſo calme, that all the next day vntill night we could not get vp, and they hauing diſcouered vs, baricadoed vp their way, and conueyed all that they had into the mountaines, leauing their houſes onely bare and naked, notwithſtanding we landed, and with great difficultie wee paſſed their baricados with the loſſe of two men at both conflicts, entred their towne and fired it, leauing not an houſe vnburnt, being a towne of three ſtreetes hauing about 150. houſholds.

The ſame night wee paſſed with our boates to a ſmall village called Aguaua, where we found excellent fruites of the countrey, which by reaſon of their cowardly brags wee alſo ſet on fire.

Being thus fruſtrated of our pretended voyage, we ſtoode for the bay of Honduras, and about the ninth of May we diſcouered in the afternoone a ſaile thwart of the bay of Truxillo, with whom we ſtoode, and hauing a Spaniſh flagge out, they miſtruſted vs not, vntill we had almoſt ſet them vp: and then wee went off with our boate, and tooke them within ſhot of the caſtle, and with our boates wee went and ſet three or foure frigats which rode afore the towne, the caſtle playing vpon vs with their ordinance.

They thought ſome fleete had bene come from Spaine, for ſo they expected.

Our captaine hauing vnderſtanding by the Spaniards, that there were three ſhippes more at Puerto de Cauallos, ſtood along that night for that place, but it fell out to bee ſo calme, that it was the fifteenth day of May or euer wee came there, the ſhippes hauing peraduenture diſcouered vs, ſtole alongſt the ſhoare towards Truxillo, ſo that being voyde of that hope, we landed; the inhabitants forſaking the towne, fled into the mountaines. Wee remained in the towne all night, and the next day till towards night: where we found 5. or 6. tuns of quick ſiluer, 16. tuns of old ſacke, ſheepe, young kids, great ſtore of poultrie, ſome ſtore of money, & good linnen, ſilkes, cotton-cloth, and ſuch like; we alſo tooke three belles out of their church, and deſtroyed their images. The towne is of 200 houſes, and wealthy; and that yere there were foure rich ſhips laden from thence: but we ſpared it, becauſe wee found other contentment. And hauing taken our pleaſure of the towne, as aforeſayd, wee returned aboord our ſhips, ſtanding backe againe for Truxillo, we diſcouered one of the ſhippes which was laden at Puerto de Cauallos: but they had eſpied vs before, as it ſhould ſeeme; for they had conueyed away as much as poſſibly they could aſhore, and ſet their ſhip on fire; which ſo ſoone as we had diſcried, we made to her with our boats, and quenched the fire, and loaded vp with hides the ſhippe which we tooke at our firſt comming; for ſhe had but a thouſand hides in her, and certeine tarres of balſamum: which being accompliſhed, wee ſunke the ſhippe with the reſt of the goods, and ſo ſtood alongſt againe for Truxillo. It fell out to be ſo calme, that we were two and twenty dayes ſailing backe that we had ſailed in ſixe dayes, which was about forty leagues: ſo that when we came before Truxillo, which was about the ſixth of Iune, we found another of the ſhips there, but cloſe vnder the caſtle, her ruther vnhanged, her ſailes taken from the yards, &c. notwithſtanding we entered her, but they had placed ſuch a company of muſketiers vnder a rampire, which they had made with hides and ſuch like, that it was too hote for vs to abide, and ſo betaking vs to our ſhippes againe, and ſtanding out of the bay into the ſea, wee diſcouered great ſtore of ſhot intrenched in thoſe places where they ſuſpected we would haue landed. That night there fell ſuch a ſtorme of raine, thunder, lightening and tempeſtuous weather, that our ſhips were diſperſed either from other. And hauing determined all of vs to meet at a certeine Iſland, where wee purpoſed to water and refreſh our ſelues; by meanes of the ſtorme and other contagious weather which followed, we were fruſtrated of that hope.

We had loſt our prize, and certeine frigats with the men. Two of our ſhippes went to ſeeke our prize and our men: and other two of vs came homeward. And ſo we parted, not hearing either of other vntill we came into England.

Our place of meeting ſhould haue beene at the Tortugas neere vnto the point of Florida, but the Golden dragon and the Prudence were put to leeward of this place: neuertheleſſe wee fell with certeine iſlands within the point of Florida, were the captaine of the Dragon M. Chriſtopher Newport ſent his pinneſſe on ſhore with certeine ſhot to ſeeke for freſh water, where wee found none; but found the Sauages very courteous vnto vs, who came breſt high into the ſea, and brought vs a line to hall in our boat on ſhore, and ſhewed vs that vp into the land Northward was freſh water, and much golde. And one Michael Bagge of Ipſwich boatſwaines mate of the Dragon, had giuen him by one of the Sauages for an olde ruſty hatchet, a piece of golde wound hollow, and about the bigneſſe and value of an Engliſh angell, which the Sauage ware hanging about his knee, with two pieces of fine ſiluer plate, whereof one the ſayd Sauage gaue Iohn Locke, maſters mate of the Dragon, being foureteene groats in value, for an olde knife; the other piece he gaue to one William Wright a ſailer, for an olde knife: which pieces of ſiluer were in forme like vnto the boſſe of a bridle. Theſe Sauages were farre more ciuill then thoſe of Dominica: for beſides their courteſie, they couered their priuities with a platted mat of greene ſtraw, about three handfuls deepe, which came round about their waſte, with the buſh hanging downe behinde.

The next day in the morning very early, there came a frigat of the iland of Cuba of 30 tunnes, put in by weather, which was bound for Hauana, wherein were fifty hogges; to which we gaue chaſe all that day, paſſing the gulfe of Bahama, and about fiue of the clocke in the afternoone, after a ſhot or two made at her, ſhee yeelded vnto vs: wee hoiſted out our boat, and went aboord, where we found ſome fiue Spanyards, fiue and fifty hogs, and about ſome two hundred weight of excellent tabacco rolled vp in ſeynes. We lightened them of their hogges and tabacco, and ſent the men away with their frigat.

In this voyage we tooke and ſacked foure townes, ſeuenteene frigats, and two ſhips, whereof eight were taken in the bay of the Honduras; of all which we brought but two into England: the reſt we ſunke, burnt, and one of them we ſent away with their men. And to make vp the full number of twenty, the Spanyards themſelues ſet one on fire in the bay of the Honduras, leſt we ſhould be maſters of it.

We ſhaped our courſe from Florida homeward by the iſle of Flores one of the Açores, where we watered, finding ſir Iohn Burgh there, who tooke vs to be Spanyards, and made vp vnto vs; with whom wee ioyned in the taking the mighty Portugall caracke called Madre de Dios, and our captaine M. Chriſtopher Newport with diuers of vs was placed in her as captaine by the Generall ſir Iohn Burgh to conduct her into England, where we arriued in Dartmouth the ſeuenth of September 1592.

The voyage made to the bay of Mexico by M. VVilliam King Captaine, M. Moore, M. How, and M. Boreman Owners, with the Salomon of 200 tunnes, and the Iane Bonauenture of 40 tunnes of Sir Henry Palmer, from Ratcliffe the 26 of Ianuary 1592.

THe Salomon was manned with an hundred men, all mariners, and the Iane with ſixe and twenty, all likewiſe mariners. Wee came firſt to the Downes in Kent, and neuer ſtrooke ſaile in paſſing thence, vntill we came to Cape S. Vincent on the coaſt of Portugall. From thence we ſhaped our courſe to Lancerota one of the Canarie iſlands, where we landed threeſcore men, and fetched a carauell out of an harborow on the South ſide, and from a ſmall Iſland we tooke a demy-canon of braſſe in deſpight of the inhabitants, which played vpon vs with their ſmall ſhot at our firſt landing: of whom we ſlew three; and gaue them the repulſe. Thence we went to the Grand Canaria, where wee boorded a barke lying at anker: out of which wee were driuen by great ſtore of ſhot from the Iſland. From thence wee directed our courſe for the Weſt Indies, and fell with the iſle of Dominica about the tenth of April. There at a watering place we tooke a ſhippe of an hundred tunnes come from Guiny, laden with two hundred and ſeuenty Negros, which we caried with vs to S. Iuan de Puerto Rico, and there comming thorow El paſſaje, we gaue chaſe to a frigat which went in to S. Iuan de Puerto Rico, and in the night we ſent in our ſhallope with foureteene men. And out of the harborow we tooke away an Engliſh ſhippe of ſeuenty tunnes, laden with threeſcore tunnes of Canary-wines, in deſpight of the caſtle and two new bulwarks, being within caliuer ſhot. Theſe two prizes we caried away to the Weſtermoſt part of the iſland, and put the Negros, except fifteene, all on land in a Spaniſh carauell which the Iane Bonauenture tooke: and we caried away one of the former prizes, and ſet fire on the other. We paſſed thence by the iſle of Mona, where we watered, and refreſhed our ſelues with potatos and plantans, and ſo came to the iſle of Saona: and from thence arriued at the mouth of the riuer of Santo Domingo. And as we ſailed to Cape Tiburon, three leagues to the Weſtward of Santo Domingo we tooke a boat of fifteene tunnes, which had certeine iarres of maloſſes or vnrefined ſugar, with three men; which men with their boat wee caried with vs to Cape Tiburon, which, in reſpect of ſeruice done vnto vs in furniſhing vs with freſh water, we diſmiſſed. Thus contrary to other Engliſhmens courſes we ſhaped ours to the Southward of Iamaica, and our ſhallop with 12 men ranged the coaſt but found nothing. Thence we ranged the three iſlands of the Caimanes, and landed at Grand Caiman, being the Weſtermoſt, where we found no people, but a good riuer of freſh water; and there we turned vp threeſcore great tortoiſes; and of them we tooke our choiſe, to wit, fifteene of the females, which are the beſt and fulleſt of egges, whereof two ſerued an hundred men a day. And there with ſtones we might kill turtle doues, wilde geeſe, & other good fowles at our pleaſures. Thence we came to Cape de Corrientes on Cuba to water, and from thence to Cape S. Antonio, and ſo went ouer for the Tortugas, without taking of any new prize: and thence cut ouer to Rio de puercos on the coaſt of Cuba. There we tooke a ſmall barke of twenty tunnes, with foure men and forty liue hogs, with certeine dried porke cut like leather ierkins along, and dried hogs tongues and neats tongues, and 20 oxe hides. Then paſſing thence, within foure dayes we tooke a ſhip of 80 tunnes laden with hides, indico, & ſalſaperilla, North of an headland called Corugna: thence the current ſet vs to the Eaſt to the old chanel. There we tooke a frigat of 20 tunnes, hauing certeine pieces of Spaniſh broad cloth & other ſmall pillage: there continuing off the Matanças 12 dayes, with the winde ſo Weſterly that we could hardly recouer Hauana in the moneth of May. Here we tooke two boats laden with tortoiſes, which we ſunke, ſauing ſome of the tortoiſes, & ſetting the men on ſhore. Then at length we recouered vp to Hauana, where we came ſo neere to the forts, that for one houres fight they ouerreached vs with their long ordinance. Then came out the two gallies, hauing 27 banks on a ſide, and fought with vs another houre; which for that time left vs by reaſon of the increaſing of the winde. Then paſſing alongſt nine leagues to the Weſtward we found out an excellent harbour, hauing three fadome water at the flood, able within to receiue a thouſand ſaile, where we found hog-houſes, which they terme coralles, and tooke away certeine hogs and pigs. As we came out of this harbour, the weather being calme, we were incountered by the gallies, which had followed vs, and fought with them three houres, oftentimes within caliuer ſhot: but wee made ſuch ſpoile of their men and oares, that they beganne to be weary, and gaue vs ouer, with their great loſſe. Here within foure dayes after, as we lay to the Northward ſixe leagues off this harbour of Cauannas, we met with maſter captaine Lane, Generall of maſter Wats his fleet, and captaine Iamaica.

Roberts, in the Exchange, a ſhip of Briſtol, of an hundred and forty tunnes, and maſter Beniamin Wood with his foure ſhips which were ſet out by my lord Thomas Howard with captain Kenel of Limehouſe captaine of the Cantar of Weymouth. All we being heere together eſpied a ſhip of ſome 50 tunne, which we chaſed with their boats; but my ſhallope firſt boorded her, and tooke her: which had in her ſacke, Canary-wine, muſcadell, tent in iarres, and good ſtore of oile in iarres. The ſhip we vnladed and burned: the men ran on ſhore. Hence wee came all together, being about 13 ſailes, before Hauana; but paſſing by we gaue chaſe to a ſhip of 60 tun, which entred into an harbour a league to the Northweſt of Hauana, which with boats was boorded, and found to be of Puerto de Cauallos in the bay of Honduras, laden with tanned hides, ſalſa perilla, Indico, raw hides, and good ſtore of balſamum: and ſhe had foure cheſts of gold, which they got on land before we could come to them. We brought this ſhip into England. Thus ſpending a ſeuennight in lying off and on for purchaſe, and finding nothing come, I ſet ſaile for England, and arriued at Douer about the tenth of Nouember 1592.

A briefe note of a voyage to the Eaſt Indies, begun the 10 of April 1591, wherein were three tall ſhips, the Penelope of Captaine Raimond, Admirall, the Merchant royall, whereof was Captaine, Samuel Foxcroft, Viceadmirall, the Edward Bonauenture, whereof was Captaine, M. Iames Lancaſter, Rereadmirall, with a ſmall pinneſſe. Written by Henry May, who in his returne homeward by the Weſt Indies ſuffred ſhipwracke vpon the iſle of Bermuda, wherof here is annexed a large deſcription.

The tenth of April 1591 we departed from Plymmouth with the ſhips afore ſayd. In May following wee arriued at Grand Canaria one of the fortunate Iſlands. Alſo toward the end of this moneth we tooke a Portugall ſhippe being bound for Braſil, within three degrees to the Northward of the Equinoctiall, which ſerued greatly to our refreſhing. The 29 of Iuly following we came to Aguada Saldania a good harbour neere the cape of Buona Sperança, where we ſtayed about a moneth with the Merchant royall, which by reaſon of ſickneſſe in our fleet was ſent home for England with diuers weake men. Here we bought an oxe for a knife of three pence, a ſheepe for a broken knife or any other odde trifle, of the people which were Negros, clad in cloaks or mantles of raw hides, both men and women. The 8 of September the Penelope & the Edward Bonauenture weyed anker, and that day we doubled the cape of Buona Sperança. The 12 following we were taken with an extreame tempeſt or huricano. This euening we ſaw a great ſea breake ouer our admirall the Penelope, and their light ſtrooke out: and after that we neuer ſaw them any more. In October following we in the Edward fell with the Weſtermoſt part of the iſle of S. Laurence about midnight, knowing not where we were. Alſo the next day we came to an anker at Quitangone a place on the main land of Africa, which is two or three leagues to the Northward of Moçambique, where the Portugals of the iſle of Moçambique fetch all their freſh water. Here we tooke a pangaia, with a Portugall boy in it; which is a veſſell like a barge, with one matſaile of Coco nut leaues. The barge is ſowed together with the rindes of trees, and pinned with woodden pinnes. In this pangaia we had certeine corne called millio, hennes, and ſome fardels of blew Calicut cloth. The Portugall boy we tooke with vs, and diſmiſſed the reſt. From this place we went for an iſland called Comoro, vpon the coaſt of Melinde, which ſtandeth about 11 degrees to the South of the equinoctial: in which iſland we ſtayed all Nouember, finding the people blacke and very comly, but very treacherous and cruell: for the day before we departed from thence they killed thirty of our men on ſhore, among whom was William Mace our maſter, and two of his mates; the one of them being in the boat with him to fetch water, the other being on ſhore againſt our ſhip; they hauing firſt betrayed our boat. From hence we went for the iſle of Zanzibar, on the coaſt of Melinde, whereas wee ſtayed and Wintered vntill the beginning of February following.

The ſecond of February 1592 wee weyed anker, and ſet ſaile directly for the Eaſt Indies; but hauing calmes and contrary windes, wee were vntill the moneth of Iune before wee could recouer the coaſt of India neere Calicut; whereby many of our men died for want of refreſhing. In this moneth of Iune we came to an anker at the iſles of Pulo pinaom, whereas we ſtayed vntill the firſt day of September, our men being very ſicke, and dying apace. This day we ſet ſaile, and directed our courſe for Malaca: and wee had not bene farre at ſea, but wee tooke a ſhippe of the kingdome of Pegu of ſome foure ſcore tunnes with wooden ankers, and about fiftie men in her, with a pinneſſe of ſome eighteene tunnes at her ſtearne, both laden with pepper.

The iſles of Pulo pinaom.

But their pinneſſe ſtole from vs in a guſt in the morning. Here we might haue taken two ſhippes more of Pegu laden likewiſe with pepper and rice. In this moneth alſo we tooke a great Portugall ſhip of ſix or ſeuen hundred tun, laden chiefly with victuals, cheſts of hats, pintados, and Calicut clothes. Beſides this we tooke another Portugall ſhip of ſome hundred tun, laden with victuals, rice, Calicos, pintados, and other commodities. Theſe ſhips were bound for Malaca with victuals: for thoſe of Goa, of S. Thomas, and of other places in the Indies doe victuall it, becauſe that victuals there are very ſcarce.

The iſle of Nicubar.

In the moneth of Nouember 1592 we ſhaped our courſe for the iſland of Nicubar lying certeine leagues to the Northweſt of the famous iſland of Sumatra; whereas within ſhort time wee came to anker: and here wee had very good refreſhing: for after wee arriued there, the people (whom we found in religion Mahumetans) came aboord vs in their canoas, with hennes, cocos, plantans, and other fruits: and within two dayes they brought vnto vs reals of plate, giuing vs them for Calicut cloth: which reals they found by diuing in the ſea, which were loſt not long before in two Portugall ſhips which were bound for China, & were caſt away there. This was the furtheſt place that we were at to the Southeaſt: and heere becauſe our company by this time was much waſted and diminiſhed, we reſolued to turne backe to the iſle of Zeilan. Wherfore we weyed anker in the moneth of Nouember, and arriued at Zeilan about the end of the ſame moneth. In this iſland groweth great ſtore of excellent cinamom, and the beſt diamonds in the world. Here our captaine meant to ſtay to make vp our voyage: whereof hee conceiued great hope, by certeine intelligence which wee had receiued; but the company, which were in all but 33 men and boyes, being in a mutiny, and euery day ready to go together by the eares (the captaine being ſicke and like for to die) would not ſtay, but would needs go home.

They returne homeward.

The 8 of December 1592 we ſet ſaile homeward, but ſome 15 dayes before we had ſight of the cape of Good hope, we were forced to ſhare our bread, by reaſon we had certeine flies in our ſhip, which deuoured moſt part of our bread before we were aware: ſo that when we came to ſharing, we had but 31 pound of bread a man to cary vs into England, with a ſmall quantity of rice a day.

They double the cape of Bona Speranza. The iſle of S. Helena.

The laſt of March 1593 we doubled the cape of Bona Sperança.

In April next inſuing we came to anker at the iſland of S. Helena, whereas we found an Engliſh man a tailer, which had bene there 14 moneths before we came thither: ſo we ſending our boat on ſhore with ſome ten men, they found this Engliſh man in the chapell; who by reaſon of the heat of the climat was inforced to keepe himſelfe out of the Sun. Our company hearing one ſing in the chapell, ſuppoſing it had bene ſome Portugall, thruſt open the doore, and went in vnto him: but the poore man ſeeing ſo many come in vpon him on the ſudden, and thinking them to be Portugals, was firſt in ſuch a feare, not hauing ſeene any man in 14 moneths before, and afterwards knowing them to be Engliſhmen, and ſome of them of his acquaintance, in ſuch ioy, that what betweene exceſſiue ſudden feare & ioy, he became diſtracted of his wits, to our great ſorowes. Here we found of his drying ſome 40 goats. The party had made him for want of apparell two ſutes of goats ſkinnes with the hairy ſide outwards, like vnto the Sauages of Canada. Here we ſtayed all this moneth. This man liued vntill we came to the Weſt Indies, and then he died.

The ſtrange force of ſudden feare and ſudden ioy.

The iſle of Trinidad in the Weſt Indies.

In the moneth of Iune 1593 we arriued at the iſland of Trinidad in the Weſt Indies, hoping there to finde refreſhing: but we could not get any, by reaſon that the Spanyards had taken it. Here we were imbayed betweene the iſland and the maine; and for want of victuals the company would haue forſaken the ſhip: whereupon the captaine was inforced to ſweare euery man not to forſake the ſhip vntill we ſhould ſee further occaſion. Out of this bay, called Boca de Dragone, it pleaſed God to deliuer vs; from whence we directed our courſe for the iſle of S. Iuan de Puerto rico, but fell with the ſmall iſle of Mona, where we abode ſome fifteene dayes, finding in that place ſome ſmall refreſhing. And heere arriued a ſhip of Caen in Normandy, whereof was captaine one Monſieur Charles de la Barbotiere, who greatly refreſhed vs with bread and other prouiſion, which we greatly wanted. And ſo we tooke our leaues the one of the other.

The iſle of Mona.

Cape Tiburon.

In Iuly hauing foule weather at Mona, we were forced to wey anker, and to ſet ſaile, directing our courſe for Cape Tiburon: and in doubling of the cape we had a guſt from the ſhore, which caried away all our ſailes from the yards: ſo that we had left but one new forecourſe to helpe our ſelues withall: which canuas the aforeſayd Frenchman did helpe vs withall. Alſo hauing doubled the foreſayd cape in the diſtreſſe aforenamed, the forſayd capitan de la Barbotiere with his pinneſſe gaue chaſe vnto vs againe; who being come nere vnto vs, I went aboord him, certifying him what diſtreſſe we were in. The gentleman replied to me againe, that there was not any thing in his ſhippe, but what he could ſpare he would helpe vs withall. So to conclude, we agreed with him for canuas. Moreouer, he ſayd that if we would go with him to an harbour called *Gonnauy, which which is to the Northward of Cape Tiburon, that then he would helpe vs with freſh victuals enough. Whereupon I returned aboord our ſhip, and certified our captaine of all: who made it knowen vnto the company; which no ſooner heard of it, but they would all go in. So here we ſtaied with the aforeſaid Frenchman 15 dayes: but ſmall refreſhing we could get, becauſe the Spaniards ſtood in ſome feare of the Frenchman of war, ſuppoſing our ſhip to be a Portugal, and that we were his prize: neuertheleſſe hee certified them to the contrary. And in ſtaying ſo long with him, and hauing little refreſhing, our company began to be in a mutiny, and made report that the captaine & I went aboord the Frenchman but to make good cheere, and had not any care of them: but I proteſt before God, that our care was to get victuals wherby we might haue bene gone from him. But in the meane time a great part of our company had conſpired to take away the Frenchmans pinneſſe, and with her to boord the man of warre. While theſe things were in complotting, one of their conſorts went aboord the Frenchman, and certified him of all the conſpiracy. Whereupon the captaine of the French ſhip ſent for our captaine and me to come aboord to dinner: and we ſtayed with him all the afternoone, being inuited vnto ſupper: and being at ſupper, he himſelfe would not a great while come to vs: but at length hee came. At his comming wee aſked of him what newes. Who anſwered vs, that either we muſt depart from him, or els he muſt goe ſeeke ſome other harborow. Whereupon I tolde captaine Lancaſter; who prayed me to tell him that rather then we would be any hindrance vnto him, we would be gone. But in the mean time, while we were thus talking together, the Frenchman weyed & ſet ſaile: which we perceiued, and aſked him what he meant by it. He replied to the captaine & me, that he kept vs for his ſecurity, and that our men had purpoſed as is aforeſayd. When he came thwart our ſhippe, it blew a prety gaile of winde: the boat being aſterne of them, hauing in her two Moores & two men of Pegu, which we had giuen them, brake away. Then was the Frenchman worſe then before, & did threaten vs very ſore that we ſhould pay his voyage. In the meane time the Edward ſeeing vs paſt, weyed and ſet ſaile to go for England: and they did ſhare among them all the captaines victuals & mine, when they ſaw the Frenchman keepe vs as priſoners. So the next morning we went to ſeeke out the Frenchmans pinneſſe: which being at Laguna we ſhot off a piece, & ſo ſhe came to vs, hauing in her three more of our company, Edmund Barker our lieutenant, and one Iohn Weſt, and Richard Lucland one of the mutinous crew. The which I told the Frenchman of; & he could not deny, but that there was ſuch a thing pretended. Then I was put into the French pinneſſe to ſeeke their boat: and in the meane time they would go to ſee if they could ouertake our ſhippe. And the next day we ſhould meet againe at Cape S. Nicolas: ſo the next morning we met together all three of vs, but heard no newes of his boat. So he hauing Spanyards and Negros aboord of vs, requeſted to haue them. Our captaine deſired him to ſend his boat aboord our ſhippe, and he ſhould haue them with all his heart. So with much adoe he ſent his boat and had them. Then he demanded of them, if his boat were not aboord the ſhip. They anſwered no. So that then Monſieur de la Barbotiere was ſatiſfied: and then we were great friends againe, to all our ioyes.

The 12 of Auguſt 1593 our captaine was ſent aboord our ſhip: but before his departure he requeſted the captaine of the French ſhip that he would giue mee paſſage home with him, to certifie the owners what had paſſed in all the voyage, as alſo of the vnrulineſſe of the company. And this day we tooke our leaues the one of the other; the Edward for England: and we bare in for Gonnauy, where afterwards we found the Frenchmans boat.

The laſt of Nouember 1593 Monſieur de la Barbotiere departed from a port called Laguna in Hiſpaniola. The 17 of December next inſuing it was his fortune to haue his ſhip caſt away vpon the Northweſt part of the iſle of Bermuda about midnight; the pilots making themſelues at noone to be to the Southward of the iſland twelue leagues, certified the captaine that they were out of all danger. So they demanded of him their wine of heigth: the which they had. And being, as it ſhould ſeeme, after they had their wine, careleſſe of their charge which they tooke in hand, being as it were drunken, through their negligence a number of good men were caſt away: and I being but a ſtranger among 50 and odde Frenchmen & others, it pleaſed God to appoint me to be one of them that were ſaued, I hope to his ſeruice & glory. We made account at the firſt that we were caſt away hard by the ſhore, being hie cliffs, but we found our ſelues ſeuen leagues off: but with our boat and a raft which we had made & towed at our boats ſterne, we were ſaued ſome 26 of vs; among whom were no more Engliſh but my ſelfe. Now being among ſo many ſtrangers, & ſeeing not roome for the one halfe, I durſt neither preſſe into the boat, nor vpon the raft, for feare leſt they ſhould haue caſt me ouerboord, or els haue killed me: ſo I ſtayed in the ſhip which was almoſt full of water, vntill the captaine being entred the boat, called me vnto him being at hand, for that it ſtood vpon life or death: and so I preſently entred, leauing the better halfe of our company to the mercy of the ſea. After this we rowed all the day vntil an houre or two before night yet we could come on land, towing the raft with the boat. When we came on ſhore, being all the day without drinke, euery man tooke his way to ſee if he could finde any: but it was long before any was found. At length one of the pilots digging among a company of weeds found freſh water to all our great comforts, being only raine water: and this was all the freſh water that we found on ſhore. But there are in this Iſland many fine bayes, wherin if a man did dig, I thinke there might be foūd ſtore of freſh water. This Iſland is diuided all into broken Iſlands: and the greateſt part I was vpon, which might be ſome 4 or 5 miles long, and 2 miles & a halfe ouer; being all woods, as Cedar & other timber, but Cedar is the chiefeſt. Now it pleaſed God before our ſhip did ſplit, that we ſaued our carpenters tooles, or els I thinke we had bene there to this day: and hauing recouered the aforeſaid tooles, we went roundly about the cutting downe of trees, & in the end built a ſmall barke of ſome 18 tun, for the moſt part with tronnels and very few nailes. As for tackling we made a voyage aboord the ſhip before ſhe ſplit, and cut downe her ſhrowds, and ſo we tackled our barke, and rigged her. In ſtead of pitch we made lime, and mixed it with the oile of tortoiſes; and aſſoone as the carpenters had calked, I and another, with ech of vs a ſmall ſticke in our hands, did plaiſter the morter into the ſeames, and being in April, when it was warm and faire weather, we could no ſooner lay it on, but it was dry, and as hard as a ſtone. In this moneth of April 1594, the weather being very hot, we were afrayd our water ſhould faile vs; and therfore made the more haſte away: and at our departure we were conſtrained to make two great cheſts, and calked them, and ſtowed them on ech ſide of our maine maſt, and ſo put in our prouiſion of raine-water, and 13 liue tortoiſes for our food, for our voyage which we intended to Newfoundland. In the South part of this Iſland of Bermuda there are hogs, but they are ſo leane that you can not eat them, by reaſon the Iſland is ſo barren: but it yeeldeth great ſtore of fowle, fiſh and tortoiſes. And to the Eaſtward of the Iſland are very good harbours, ſo that a ſhippe of 200 tun may ride there landlocked, without any danger, with water enough. Alſo in this Iſland is as good fiſhing for pearles as is any in the Weſt Indies, but that the place is ſubiect to foule weather, as thundering, lightning and raine: but in April and part of May we had very faire and hot weather. The 11 of May it pleaſed God to ſet vs cleere of the Iſland, to the no little ioy of vs all, after we had liued in the ſame almoſt the ſpace of 5 moneths. And the 20 of May we fell with the land nere to Cape Briton, where we ran into a freſh water riuer, whereof there be many, and tooke in wood, water, and ballaſt. And here the people of the countrey came vnto vs, being clothed all in furs, with the furred ſide vnto their ſkins, & brought with them furres of ſundry ſorts to ſell, beſides great ſtore of wild ducks: ſo ſome of our company hauing ſaued ſome ſmall beads, bought ſome of their ducks. Here we ſtayed not aboue foure houres, and ſo departed. This ſhould ſeeme to be a very good countrey. And we ſaw very fine champion ground, and woods. From this place we ranne for the banke of Newfoundland, whereas we met with diuers, but none would take in a man of vs, vntill it pleaſed God that wee met with a barke of Falmouth, which receiued vs all for a little time; and with her we tooke a French ſhip, wherein I left capitan de la Barbotier my deere friend, and all his company, and ſtayed my ſelfe aboord the Engliſh barke: and hauing paſſage in the ſame, in the moneth of Auguſt I arriued at Falmouth 1594.

A voyage of the honourable Gentleman M. Robert Duddeley, now knight, to the Iſle of Trinidad, and the coaſt of Paria: with his returne home by the Iſles of Granata, Santa Cruz, Sant Iuan de puerto rico, Mona, Zacheo, the ſhoalds called Abreojos, and the iſle of Bermuda. In which voyage he and his company tooke and ſunke nine Spaniſh ſhips, wherof one was an armada of 600 tunnes. Written at the requeſt of M. Richard Hakluyt.

Hauing euer ſince I could conceiue of any thing bene delighted with the diſcoueries of nauigation, I foſtered in my ſelfe that diſpoſition till I was of more yeres and better ability to vndertake ſuch a matter. To this purpoſe I called to me the aduiſe of ſufficient ſeamen, and principally vndertooke a voyage for the South ſeas; but by reaſon that many before had miſcaried in the ſame enterpriſe, I could not be ſuffered to hazard more of her Maieſties ſubiects vpon ſo vncerteine a ground as my deſire: which made me by conſtraint (great charges already by me defrayed) to prepare another courſe for the Weſt Indies, without hope there to doe any thing worth note: and ſo common is it indeed to many, as it is not worth the regiſtring. Neuertheleſſe, I haue yeelded to your former importunity, and ſent you this my iournall to ſupply a vacant roome amongſt your more important diſcourſes.

Nowe being prouided for this laſt enterprize, rather to ſee ſome practiſe and experience, then any wonders or profite, I weighed ancker from Southampton road the ſixth of Nouember 1594. But the winde falling ſcant, it was the 17. day of the ſame moneth before I could put into the Sea. Vpon this day my ſelfe in the Beare a ſhippe of 200. tunnes my Admirall, and Captaine Munck in the Beares whelpe vice-admirall, with two ſmall pinneſſes called the Frisking and the Earewig paſſed through the Needles, and within two dayes after bare in with Plimmouth. My buſines at this port-towne diſpatched, I ſet ſaile; whither againe by contrary winds to my great miſfortune, I was inforced to returne backe. I might call it miſfortune; for by this meanes I vtterly (for all the voyage) loſt my vice-admirall; which was the cauſe likewiſe of looſing mine owne pinneſſe, which three were the principall ſtay of my voyage. For at this laſt leauing of England in a ſtorme I loſt mine owne pinneſſe, as is beforeſaid. Notwithſtanding all theſe croſſes all alone I went wandering on my voyage, ſailing along the coaſt of Spaine within view of Cape Finiſter, and Cape S. Vincent, the North & South capes of Spaine. In which ſpace hauing many chaſes, I could meet with none but my coūtreymen or countreys friends. Leauing theſe Spaniſh ſhores I directed my courſe the 14. of December towards the iſles of the Canaries. Here I lingered 12 dayes for two reaſons: The one, in hope to meete my vice-admiral: The other, to get ſome veſſel to remoue my peſtered men into, who being 140. almoſt in a ſhip of 200. tunnes, there grew many ſicke. The firſt hope was fruſtrated, becauſe my vice-admiral was returned into England with two prizes. The ſecond expectation fell out to our great comfort: for I tooke two very fine Carauels vnder the calmes of Tenerif and Palma, which both refreſhed and amended my company, and made me a Fleete of 3. ſailes. In the one Carauel called The Intent, I made Beniamin Wood Captaine, in the other, one Captaine Wentworth. Thus cheared as a deſolate traueller with the company of my ſmall and newe erected Fleete, I continued my purpoſe for the Weſt Indies, and firſt for Cape Blanco in Africa vpon the deſerts of Libya. My laſt hope was to meete my loſt ſhip, and withall to renue my victuals vpon the Canthers, which are Portugal fiſhermen: but the Canthers had bene ſo frighted by Frenchmen, as I could get none. Riding vnder this White Cape two daies, and walking on ſhore to view the countrey, I found it a waſte, deſolate, barren, and ſandie place, the ſand running in drifts like ſnow and being very ſtony; for ſo is all the countrey ſand vpon ſtone (like Arabia deſerta, and Petrea) and full of blacke venemous lizards, with ſome wilde beaſts and people which be tawny Moores, ſo wilde, as they would but call to my Carauels from the ſhore, who road very neere it. But not deſirous to make any longer aboad in this place, by reaſon of the moſt infectious ſerenas or dewes that fall all along theſe coaſts of Africa, I cauſed my Maſter Abraham Kendall to ſhape his courſe directly for the iſle of Trinidad in the Weſt Indies; which after 22. dayes we deſcried, and the firſt of February came to an anker vnder a point thereof called Curiapan, in a bay which was very full of pelicans, and I called it Pelicans bay. About 3. leagues to the Eaſtwards of this place we found a mine of Marcazites which gliſter like golde (but all is not gold that gliſtereth) for ſo we found the ſame nothing worth, though the Indians did aſſure vs it was Caluori, which ſignifieth gold with them. Theſe Indians are a fine ſhaped and a gentle people, al naked & painted red, their cōmanders wearing crownes of feathers. Theſe people did often reſort vnto my ſhip, & brought vs hennes, hogs, plantans, potatos, pinos, tabacco, & many other pretie commodities, which they exchanged with vs for hatchets, kniues, hookes, belles, and glaſſebuttons. From this bay I fell downe lower to a place called Paracoa, where I deſired rather to ride, becauſe it was a cōuenient place to water, balaſt, ground, & graue my Carauels. Then I commanded al my men to lye on ſhore, after I had cauſed to be made for them a little ſkonce like an halfe moone for their defence, being iealous of the Spaniards, of whoſe eſtate I could gather no certaintie, till frō Margarita Antonie Berreo for his defence had gotten ſome 300. ſouldiers, a greater number then I was able to encounter withall, hauing then but 50. men, becauſe my Carauels before their comming were ſent away. The Simerones of the yland traded with me ſtil in like ſort. And the Spaniards now prouided for me, began to ſend meſſengers to me in kindneſſe. Notwithſtanding though I had no reaſon to aſſault them, becauſe they were both poore & ſtrong, yet for my experience and pleaſure I marched 4. long marches vpon the yland, & the laſt from one ſide of the yland to the other, which was ſome 50. miles: going and comming through a moſt monſtrous thicke wood (for ſo is moſt part of the yland) and lodging my ſelfe in Indian townes. The country is fertile, and ful of fruits, ſtrange beaſts, and foules, whereof munkeis, babions & parats were in great abundance. Being much delighted with this yland, and meaning to ſtay here ſome time about diſcouering the maine right againſt the ſame (the entrance into the empire of Guiana) being ſhewed the diſcouery thereof by Captaine Popham, who receiued the diſcouery of the ſaide empire frō one captaine Harper, which being a priſoner learned of the Spaniards at the Canaries in the ſelfe ſame maner almoſt, as ſir Walter Ralegh very diſcreetly hath written. The intelligence of Harper, I conceiue, the Captaine hath yet to ſhew in Spaniſh. This diſcouery of Guiana I greatly deſired: yet leaſt I ſhould aduenture all occaſions vpon it onely, I ſent my two Carauels from me the 17. day of February, to try their fortunes in the Indies, not appointing any other place to meet but England, furniſhing them with all the prouiſion that I could ſpare, and diuiding my victuals equally with them, knowing they were able to do more good in the Indies then greater ſhips. The Carauels being gone, I began to enquire priuately of the Sauages concerning the maine ouer againſt vs, and learned that the names of the kingdomes ioyning to the Sea-coaſt were in order theſe. The kingdom of Morucca, the kingdome of Seawano, the kingdome of Waliame, the kingdom of Caribes, the kingdome of Yguirie, and right againſt the Northermoſt part of Trinidad, the maine was called The high land of Paria, the reſt a very lowe land. Morucco I learned to bee full of a greene ſtone called Tacarao, which is good for the ſtone. In Seawano I heard of a Mine of gold to be in a towne called Wackerew, the Captaines name Semaracon. Of Waliame I will ſpeake laſt, becauſe therein I made moſt diſcouery. The Caribes I learned to be man-eaters or Canibals, and great enemies to the Iſlanders of Trinidad. The kingdome of Yguiri I heard to be full of a metall called by the Indians Arara, which is either copper (as I coule learne) or very baſe gold. In the high land of Paria I was informed by diuers of theſe Indians, that there was ſome Perota, which with them is ſiluer, and great ſtore of moſt excellent Cane-tabacco. But laſtly to come to Waliame, it is the firſt kingdome of the empire of Guiana. The great wealth which I vnderſtood to be therein, and the aſſurance that I had by an Indian, mine interpreter, of a golden Mine in a towne of this kingdome called Orocoa, in the Riuer (as he called it) of Owrinoicke was much to be eſteemed. This Indian ſpake Spaniſh, and whatſoeuer he knew, he reueiled it to my ſelfe onely by a priuate interpreter, not in words alone, but offered vpon paine of life to be guide himſelfe to any place that he ſpake of. This diſcouery of the Mine I mentioned to my company, who altogether mutined againſt my going, becauſe they ſomething feared the villany of Abraham Kendal, who would by no meanes go. I then wanted my loſt pinneſſe, and was conſtrained to ſend 14. men in my ſhip-boat for this diſcouery, wich moſt of the diſcreeteſt men in my ſhip, & gaue them their directions to follow, written vnder mine owne hand. They went from me, and entred into one of the mouthes by the broken lands, which riuer goeth vnder the name of the great Riuer Orenoque, the foreland whereof was called Capulio bearing South & by Weſt, wanting a fourth part, from the point of Curiapan aforeſaid, being 4. leags diſtant. They found the maine (as China is reported) full of freſh Riuers running one into another, abounding with fiſh, and a land al woody, ſeeming to haue great ſtore of ſtrange beaſts and foules, & very populous. They entred into a ſmall riuer called Cabota, the people named Veriotaus, a courteous people. The next riuer they paſſed was called Mana in the kingdome of Tiuitiuas, where the king offered to bring a Canoa full of this golden oare, and to this purpoſe ſent a Canoa, which returned and brought my men this anſwere, that Armago Captaine of the towne of Orocoa and the Mine refuſed them, but if they would come thither, hee himſelfe would make them anſwere. Vpon this my boat went, and at his appointed place hee met them with ſome 100. men in Canoas, and tolde them that by force they ſhould haue nothing but blowes, yet if they would bring him hatchets, kniues, and Iewes-harps, he bid them aſſure me, he had a Mine of gold, and could refine it, & would trade with me: for token whereof he ſent me 3. or 4. Croiſſants or halfe moones of gold weighing a noble a piece or more, and two bracelets of ſiluer. Alſo he told them of another rich nation, that ſprinkled their bodies with the poulder of golde, and ſeemed to be guilt, and farre beyond them a great towne called El Dorado, with many other things. My men being ſatiſfied, and thinking their company too fewe to ſtay among theſe Sauages, and their victuall ſpent, returned. This Balthazar my Indian their guide ranne from them: which diſtreſſe cauſed them to borrow of Armago newe guides, who brought them home another way through a Riuer called Braha by the high land of Paria, and ſo to my ſhip. They accompted Orocoa 150. miles diſtant, ſo they rowed in my boate aboue 250. miles. Their abſence from mee was 16. dayes, making but one nights aboad any where. The report of this made mee attempt my company to goe with them againe. But nowe they were worſe then before; for vnleſſe I would haue gone my ſelfe alone, not one man would goe with me (no albeit I had had commiſſion to hang or kill them) for my men came home in very pitifull caſe almoſt dead for famine; and indeed ſuch was their miſery, as they dranke not in three dayes, for ſo long they were out of the freſh Riuers, before they recouered the ſhippe, and yet the boat was filled with as much victuall, as it could holde.

Captaine Pophams arriual.

In this time of my boates abſence there came to me a pinneſſe of Plimmouth, of which Captaine Popham before named was chiefe, who gaue vs great comfort. And if I had not loſt my pinneſſes, wherein I might haue caried victuals and ſome men, we had diſcouered further the ſecrets of thoſe places. Alſo this Captaine and I ſtayed ſome ſixe or eight dayes longer for Sir Walter Ralegh (who, as wee ſurmized, had ſome purpoſe for this diſcouery) to the ende, that by our intelligence and his boates we might haue done ſome good: but it ſeemed he came not in ſixe or eight weekes after. So Captaine Popham and I helde it not conuenient to ſtay any longer: therefore new watering our ſelues at Paracoa, we ſet ſaile to ſee further of the Indies, leauing the yle of Trinidad the 12. day of March. The 13. I tooke a ſmall prize of ſackes 25. leagues to the Northward of an yland which I ſailed by, called Granata. This prize refreſhed vs well: yet meaning to ſel her at the yle of Sant Iuan de Puerto rico, and ſhaping our courſe thither by the ylands of Santa Cruz and Infierno, I coaſted all the South ſide of the ſaid yle of S. Iohn, till I came to an ancker at Cape Roxo: where riding 14. dayes to expect S. Domingo men, which oftentimes fall with the yland of Mona, and finding none (neither would the Spaniards of S. Iuan de puerto rico buy my prize) I vnladed her, tooke in the goods, and after burned her. This ended, I diſemboqued (where fewe Engliſhmen had done before, by reaſon of the great dangers betweene this yland of S. Iuan de puerto rico and Hiſpaniola) by a little yland called Zacheo. And after carefully doubling the ſhouldes of Abreojos, I cauſed the Maſter, (hearing by a Pilote, that the Spaniſh fleete ment now to put out of Hauana) to beare for the Meridian of the yle of Bermuda, hoping there to finde the fleete diſperſed. The fleete I found not, but foule weather enough to ſcatter many fleetes; which companion left mee not in greateſt extremitie, till I came to the yles of Flores and Cueruo: whither I made the more haſte, hoping to meete ſome great Fleete of her Maieſtie my ſouereigne, as I had intelligence, and to giue them aduiſe of this rich Spaniſh fleet: but finding none, and my victuals almoſt ſpent, I directed my courſe for England.

Returning alone, and worſe manned by halfe then I went foorth, my fortune was to meete a great Armada of this fleete of ſome 600. tunnes well appointed, with whom I fought board and board for two dayes, being no way able in all poſſibilitie with fiftie men to board a man of warre of ſixe hundreth tunnes. And hauing ſpent all my powder I was conſtrained to leaue her, yet in ſuch diſtreſſe without ſailes and maſtes, and hull ſo often ſhot through with my great Ordinance betweene winde and water, that being three hundred leagues from land, I dare ſay, it was impoſſible for her to eſcape ſinking. Thus leauing her by neceſſitie in this miſerable eſtate, I made for England, where I arriued at S. Iues in Cornewall about the latter ende of May 1595, ſcaping moſt dangerouſly in a great fogge the rocks of Silly.

Thus by the prouidence of God landing ſafely, I was kindely intertained by all my friends, and after a ſhort time learned more certaintie of the ſinking of that great ſhippe, being alſo reputed rich by diuers intelligences out of Spaine: which we then ſuppoſed not, & were doubtfull whether ſhe had bin of Biſcay or S. Iohn de Luz in France laden with fiſh onely from Newfoundland.

In this voyage I and my fleete tooke, ſunke and burnt nine Spaniſh ſhips; which was loſſe to them, though I got nothing.

*The name of the riuer Orenoque may ſeeme to be deriued from this word.

The victorious voyage of Captaine Amias Preſton now knight, and Captaine George Sommers to the Weſt India, begun in March 1595.

Wherein the yle of Puerto Santo, the yle of Coche neere Margarita, the fort and towne of Coro, the ſtately city of S. Iago de Leon were taken ſacked and burned, and the towne of Cumana ranſomed, & Iamaica entred. Written by Robert Dauie one of the company.

CAptaine Amias Preſton, and captaine Sommers, both valiant gentlemen & diſcreet commanders, lying ready with two tall ſhips, the Aſcenſion and the Gift, and a ſmall pinneſſe at Plimmouth, for the ſpace of a moneth attending the comming of captaine Iones their conſort, which in al that time, through the bad dealing of thoſe which he put in truſt, could not make his ſhip in readines, according to his appointment, the 12. of March 1595. ſet forward on their voyage for the Weſt Indies. We with captaine Iones in the Derling, and Captaine Prowſe in the Angel, followed after them the 19. of the ſaid moneth. The laſt of March, captaine Preſton by giuing chaſe to a ſaile, was ſeparated from captaine Sommers, and his pinneſſe, ſo that they vtterly loſt ſight ech of other: whereupon captain Preſton in his ſhip alone, reſolued to ſurpriſe the yle of Puerto ſanto, and ſhortly after came before the ſame. This yland ſtandeth in the Northerly latitude of 33. degrees, and lieth to the Northward of the yle of Madera, and is inhabited by old ſouldiers, which the kings of Portugal were wont to reward for their former olde ſeruices, by placing of them there. This yland is rich in corne, wine, & oile; and hath good ſtore of ſheep, aſſes, goats & kine: they haue alſo plenty of foules, fiſhes & fruits. Captaine Preſton cõming before this yland with one ſhip only ſought with 2. long boats to land his men & to force the ſame: but the people were on ſhore in warlike array, with baricados & trenches made, ready to withſtand them. Wherupon, conſidering the great danger, and diſaduantage of the place, he cauſed his people to returne abord againe. And the next morning 3 or 4 houres before day, he landed in a place of greater ſecurity, with 60 men onely, who lay cloſely in a chapel, to defend themſelues from the raine til break of the day, and ſo marched forward vpon the backs of their enemies, which kept their baricados vpon the ſhore. By this time the enemie was 500 ſtrong. But, being ſo ſuddenly ſurpriſed, after ſome reſiſtance of our muſkets, when they ſaw our pikes approch, and had taſted ſomewhat of their force they began to flee into certaine thickets & ſhrubs, thinking from thence to gall our men: but with very litle or no loſſe at all, our men diſlodged them of that place alſo. Hereupon, they all fled toward the chiefe towne of the yland: but once againe they thought to make a new ſtand at a certaine houſe by the way, from whence they were repulſed by captaine Roberts. So in the flight part of them were ſlaine, and an enſigne, which one captaine Haruey an Engliſh man had loſt not long before, was recouered: and the chiefe towne it ſelfe was by our men wholly woon and poſſeſſed. But before the entrance of our men they had conueighed their wiues, their children, and the reſt of their goods into an exceeding high hil which ſtandeth neere the towne, and could not be conquered, but with exceeding loſſe. Although they ſent diuers times to redeeme their towne, which was very faire and large, yet in regard of their crueltie and treachery, which they vſed towards captaine Haruey and his people, captaine Preſton would ſhew them no fauour, but vtterly burnt their towne to aſhes, and ſent his men to waſt the reſt of their villages of the yland, preferring the honour & iuſt reuenge of his country men, before his owne priuate gaine, & commodity. And ſo with ſmall pillage and great honour he retired in ſafetie and all his ſmall company with him, from the conquered yland vnto his ſhip. But we in our ſhip met not with him, vntil the 12. of April following. We therefore in the Derling ling purſuing our voiage, had ſight of the yles of the Canaries the 6 of April, and the 8 of the ſame, we watered on the Southeaſtſide of the grand Canaria. There we met with capt. Sommers, & his pinneſſe, & 3 ſhips of Hampton, in one whereof was cap. Willis. The 9 of April we al departed for Tenerif to ſeeke captaine Preſton: and ſtanding ouer towards Tenerif, the 9 day at night I came into captaine Sommers ſhip. The 10 in the morning we brake our maine yard, yet we recouered Tenerif, & the ſame day towards night we ankered vnder the ſouthſide of the ſame. There I went a land in our boat, & found 3 or 4 fiſherboats, and brought one of them off. The reſt bulged themſelues. Here we rode to mend our yard til the 11 at night: then we ſet ſaile to find captaine Amias Preſton: and ſtanding towards Gomera, the 12 in the morning we had ſight of him. Then we thought to haue landed in Gomera: but the wind blew ſo much, that we could not. So we departed altogether with ioy the 13 of April, & ſet our courſe for the Weſt Indies. And the 8 of May next enſuing, we arriued at the yland of Dominica. In all which time nothing happened vnto vs ſauing this, that the 18 day of April at midnight, our admiral loſt her long boat in towing. We ſtaied at Dominica til the 14 of May, to refreſh our ſicke men. Here the Indians came vnto vs in canoas made of an whole tree, in ſome wherof were 3 men, in ſome 4 or 6, & in others 12 or 14, & brought in them plantans, pinos, and potatos, and trucked with vs, for hatchets, kniues, & ſmal beadſtones. Here in refreſhing of our men, we found an hot bath hard ioyning to a cold riuer ſide: wherein our ſick men bathed themſelues, and were ſoone recouered of their ſickneſſes. This is a goodly yland, and ſomething high land, but al ouergrowen with woods. The 14 we departed from thence, & the 16 ſailing Southweſtward, we had ſight of Granada, but landed not there. The 17 we arriued at the Teſtigos & ankered there, and conſorted with the 3 ſhips of Hampton, wherin captaine Willis was. The 18 we landed our men & tooke view and muſter of all, & the ſame night ſet ſaile away. The 19 we had ſight of Margarita, where the Spaniards by their Indians fiſh for pearle: we ſtood in very neere the rode, but ſaw nothing there. Therefore we went no further in, but ſtood from it againe. The ſame day toward night, we had ſight of a litle yland, betweene Margarita & the maine, called Coche. We came neer it in the night with our ſhips within ſome 3 leagues, & there ankered vnder the maine ſide, and about midnight we manned our pinneſſes & boats, and in the morning about breake of day, we landed on the yland, wherin are few or none inhabitants, but they cōmonly come frō Margarita in boats on the munday, and remaine there fiſhing for pearles vntill the ſaturday, and then returne & cary al that they haue taken to Margarita. Here we tooke ſome few Spaniards and Negros their ſlaues with them, and had ſome ſmal quantitie of pearls. We remained on this iland the 20 and 21, in which time we went a fiſhing with our ſeine, and tooke good ſtore of mullets and other fiſh, and amongſt the reſt drew a ſhore in the ſeine a fiſh called by the Spaniards Lagarto, and by the Indians Caiman, which is indeed a Crocodile, for it hath 4 feete and a long taile, and a wide mouth, and long teeth, & wil deuour men. Some of theſe Lagartos are in length 16 foot, ſome 20 foot, and ſome 30 foot: they haue muſke in them, and liue as wel on the land, as in the water. The 21 of May we departed for Cumana, thinking to haue gotten in that night to haue landed: but the current ſtriketh ſo ſtrong out of the bay that we could not recouer the towne till daylight. In the morning we eſpied 2 ſailes before the towne, but could not fetch them. Here we plied too and againe in the ſound all the forenoone, but could not get vp ſo farre as the towne. Theſe 2 ſailes came roome to vs, after they ſaw that we were at an anker, & came ſomewhat neere vs, and ſent their ſkyphs abord our admiral. They were 2 flieboats of Middleburgh which traded there, & had ſecretly aduertiſed the country of our comming, to our great hinderance: but we knew it not at our firſt arriuall. Here they of Cumana perceiuing that we would land, came to parle with vs, and tolde vs, if we would land, we might eaſily take the towne, for they ment not to withſtand vs, but that they had caried all their goods into the mountaines, but, if we would not land to burne and ſpoile the towne, they would giue vs ſome reaſonable ranſome, and any victuals that we wanted. So our general agreed with them, receiued their ranſome, and departed without landing. But at our firſt arriual in this bay, our generals long boat was ſent forth wel manned, and tooke 3 Carauels, but found litle or nothing of value in them: ſauing in one were ſome ſides of bacon, and ſome maiz and Guiny-wheat. Here we ſtaied til the 23 of May, & in the euening we ſet ſaile, and departed frō thence. And the 26 of the ſame we thought to haue landed at a fort that ſtandeth by the ſea-coaſt in the Caracos, as you go for S. Iago. This is a marueilous high land, as high as the pike of Tenerif. We could not land here ouer night, by reaſon of the roughnes of the ſea, which goeth in that place, & there is but one litle creeke againſt the fort, to come in with your boat. So, we perceiuing no fit place to land, by reaſon of the ſea, ſtood away ſome league to the Weſt-ward, about a litle head-land, there we ankered al night: and the 27 in the morning we all landed in ſafety, none reſiſting vs. Then we preſently ſet our ſelues in aray, and marched toward the fort, & tooke it without any reſiſtance. Here we remained al the reſt of this day vntil the 28, about 3 of the clock in the afternoone. We found nothing in this fort but a litle meale, or 2 or 3 tunnes of wine, which by reaſon of ſome diſorder amongſt the company ouercharging themſelues with the wine, our general for the moſt part cauſed to be ſpilt. While we remained here, ſome of our company ranging the woods, found the gouernor of the fort where he lay aſleepe, brought him to our general: who examined him touching the ſtate of the citie of S. Iago de Leon. Who declared vnto vs that they had newes of our comming a moneth before, and that they of the towne had made preparation for our comming: and that if we did go the cōmon beaten way, it was neuer poſſible for vs to paſſe, for that they had made in the midſt of the way betweene this fort and the ſaid city, an exceeding ſtrong baricado on the top of a very high hil, the paſſage being not aboue 25 or 30 foot in bredth, & on each ſide marueilous ſteep-vpright, and the woods ſo thicke that no man could paſſe for his life: which indeed at our returning backe we found to be true. Vpon which ſpeeches our general demanded of him if there were not any other way: who anſwered, there is another way marueilous bad and very ill to trauel which the Indians do cōmonly vſe: but he thought that the Spaniards had ſtopt the ſame, by cutting downe of great trees and other things, as indeed they had. This Spaniard was a very weake and ſickly man not able to trauel, ſo our generall ſent him abord his ſhip, & there kept him. In the taking of our 3 ſmall Carauels at Cumaná, we had a Spaniard in one of them that had trauelled theſe wayes to the citie of S. Iago. He told vs he would cary vs thither by any of both theſe wayes, if afterward we would ſet him at libertie: the which was granted. While we remained at the fort by the waters ſide, the Spaniards came downe vnto vs by the great & beaten way on horſebacke, who being diſcouered, our generall ſent out to meete them captaine Roberts with ſome 40 or 50 muſketeirs, who came to ſkirmiſh with them, but they would not ſtay. The ſame day in the afternoone we marched forth toward S. Iago, & tooke the Indians way called The vnknowen way. In our march we came to diuers Indians houſes, which we neuer hurt, but paſſed by and left them vntouched: but the Indians were all fled into the woods, and other places, we know not whither. We marched vntil it was night ouer ſuch high mountaines, as we neuer ſaw the like, and ſuch a way as one man could ſcarſe paſſe alone. Our general being in the forward, at length came whereas a riuer deſcended downe ouer the mountaines, and there we lodged all that night. Here in going this way, we found the Spaniſh gouernours confeſſion to be true: for they had baricadoed the way in diuers places with trees, & other things in ſuch ſort, that we were driuen to cut our way through the woods by Carpenters, which we caried with vs for that purpoſe. The next day being the 29 of May early in the morning we ſet forward to recouer the tops of the mountaines: but (God knoweth) they were ſo extreeme high and ſo ſteep-vpright, that many of our ſouldiers fainted by the way: and when the officers came vnto them, and firſt entreated them to goe, they anſwered, they could goe no further. Then they thought to make them goe by compulſion, but all was in vaine: they would goe a little and then lie downe, and bid them kill them, if they would, for they could not, nor would not goe any further. Whereby they were enforced to depart, & to leaue them there lying on the ground. To be ſhort, at length with much ado we gat the top of the mountaines about noone: there we made a ſtand til all the company was come vp, and would haue ſtayed longer to haue refreſhed our men: but the fogge and raine fell ſo faſt, that wee durſt not ſtay. So wee made haſt to deſcend towards the towne out of the fogge and raine: becauſe that in theſe high mountaines by report of the Spaniards themſelues, it doeth almoſt continually raine. Aſſoone as we were deſcended downe neere halfe the way to the towne the raine ceaſed, and going downe a little further, on the toppe of a hill we ſaw the towne not farre diſtant from vs. Here we all cleared our muſkets: and when our colours came in ſight, we diſcharged a ſecond volee of ſhot to the great diſcouragement of the enemie. Thus we marched on a round pace. The enemie was in readineſſe a little without the towne to encounter vs on horſebacke. Being nowe fully deſcended from the mountaines wee came into a faire plaine champien fielde, without either hedge, buſh or ditch, ſauing certaine trenches which the water had made, as it deſcendeth from the mountaines. Here we ſet our ſelues in a readineſſe, ſuppoſing the enemie would haue encountered vs: but hauing pitched our maine battell, and marching forward a good round pace, captaine Beling, and captaine Roberts tooke ech of them ſome looſeſhoot, and marched in all haſt toward the enemie before the maine battell, wherein was our generall with capt. Sommers and came to ſkirmiſh with them: but it was ſoone ended: for the enemie fled. One Spaniard was ſlaine in this ſkirmiſh, and not any one of our companies touched either with piece or arrow, God be thanked. We ſoone marched into the towne, and had it without any more reſiſtance: but there we found not the wealth that we expected: for they had conueyed all into the mountaines, except ſuch goods as they could not eaſily cary, as wine, and iron, and ſuch things. By three of the clocke in the afternoone the 29 of May, we entred the citie. Here we remained vntil the 3 of June without anie great diſturbance, ſauing ſometime by night they would come on horſe-backe hard vnto our Corps du guard, and finding vs vigilant, and readie for them, would depart againe.

The firſt of June, there came a Spaniard neere vnto vs alone: the Corps du guard perceiuing him, called our General, who ſoone came towards him: but before he approched, the Spaniard made ſignes that he ſhould lay aſide his armes: which he refuſed to doe, but promiſed as he was a ſouldier, if he would come, hee ſhould haue free paſſage. Vpon which promiſe hee came to him on horſe-backe, and our General brought him within the towne, and there communed with him. Who demanded what he ment to do with the towne: he anſwered that he meant to remaine there and keepe it; or if he did depart from it he would burne it. The Spaniard then demanded, what the ranſome of it ſhould be. Our General required 30000 ducats. Whereunto he replied that it was very much. So hauing had ſome other conference together, hee ſhewed him that hee had bene a ſouldier in Flanders a long time, and now was ſent thither by his kings commandement. Among other things our General demanded of him, what the reaſon was they had not walled the citie, being ſo faire a thing as that was. The Spaniard replied, that hee thought it to bee ſtronger walled then anie citie in the world, meaning, by thoſe huge & high mountains which the enemie muſt paſſe ouer before he can approch it; which we found very true. Thus with many other faire ſpeeches, he tooke his leaue for that day, and told our Generall, that he would go ſpeake with the gouernour: (but it might be himſelfe, for any thing we know) howbeit becauſe our General had granted him free comming and going, he ſuffred him to depart: who before his departure, requeſted to haue a token of our General, that he might ſhew to the Gouernour how he had ſpoken with vs, or elſe he doubted, that he would not beleeue him. Wherupon our General gaue him a piece of 12 pence: ſo he departed and promiſed the next day by ten of the clocke to returne vnto vs with an anſwere: in which meane time nothing befel. The next day being the 2 of June, at his houre appointed, he returned wͭ his Indian running by his horſes ſide. So he was brought to the Generall, and there remained till after dinner, and dined in his company in the gouernours houſe that was. The dinner ended, with the beſt entertainement which could be giuen him, they communed again about the ranſome of the citie. Our General propoſed his old demand of 30000 ducats. The Spaniard firſt proffered him 2000, then 3000, laſt of all 4000, and more he would not giue. Our General counting it a ſmall ſumme of money among ſo many, did vtterly refuſe it. So the Spaniard departed. But before his departure our general told him, that if he came not to him againe before the next day noone, with the ranſome which he demanded, he would ſet all on fire. That whole day paſt, and the night alſo without any thing of momẽt, except ſome ſhew of aſſault, by their approching towards our Corps du guard, and retiring backe againe. The 3 day being come, in the morning ſome of our company went forth, a league or more from the towne, & ſome two leagues and more vnto certaine villages thereabout, & ſet them on fire: but the enemy neuer came to reſiſt them, ſo they returned backe againe ſafe into the towne, and brought certaine Indian priſoners with them, among whom there was one which ſpake broken Spaniſh, which being examined, confeſſed vnto vs of his own accord, how the General had ſent to the other towns thereabout for aide, and that he thought they would be there with him that day. When we vnderſtood this, we grew into ſome diſtruſt of the Spaniards trechery, and thought vpon the meſſenger, how he had vſed long delayes with vs: wherupon we were commanded preſently, euery man to make ready to depart, and to fire the citie: which foorthwith was done. And after we had ſeene it all on fire, & burnt to aſhes, we tooke our leaues and ſo departed, & marched away that day being the 3 of June, not that way we came, but by the great beaten way. And when we had marched halfe the way towards the waters ſide, we came vnto that ſtrong baricado which they had made, and there lay all that night. Here we found the Spaniſh captaines word to be true which we tooke at the fort by the waters ſide: for this baricado was of ſuch force, that 100 men in it wel furniſhed, would haue kept backe from paſſing that way 100000: firſt by reaſon of the huge and high mountaines, next the ſteepenes of them, on both ſides, laſt of all in regard of the fine contriuing of it with the large trenches, and other munitions, which I ceaſe to recite. The fourth day of June in the morning wee departed from thence: but before our departure, wee ouerthrew on the one ſide of the ſteepe hill two baſes of yron, which we found there planted by the enemie, and ſo ſet forward toward our ſhips, and by 12 of the clocke came to the waters ſide, and there remayned in the fort which wee had taken before, vntill the fift day at night: in which time we laded ſome ſmall quantity of hides, and Salſa-perilla, which we found there at our firſt landing. So the fift day at night we departed from thence, to goe to a towne called Coro: but before wee departed, wee ſet fire in the fort, and all the Indians houſes that were about it, and burnt them. Then we ſet ſayle, Certain villages about Santiago fired.

The citie of S. Iago burned.

and ſtanding along the coaſt, our Spaniſh guide ſignified vnto vs, that there were foure ſayles of ſhips about fiue leagues from thence, in a place called Checherebiche, and Caio, and Maio. So the 6 day in the morning we were thwart of the place, and there our generall ſent away his long boate with captaine Sommers, vnto thoſe places, where they found 3 of the ſhips: but the Spaniards had conueyed their ſailes aſhore into the woods, ſo that they could not bring them off, but ſet fire in them and burnt them. From hence we ſtood along the ſhore, ſailing vntill the ninth day of Iune, on which day toward the euening we imbarked our ſelues in our pinneſſes and ſmall carauels, to land at Coros: but we had none that knew the place certainely: wherefore we ankored that night ſome two leagues to the Eaſtward of it, and in the morning I went on land, and nine more with me, to ſee if we could diſcouer the towne, but we could not, wee went aboue a league vp into the countrey, but could not ſee any village or towne. So returning backe, wee met our Generall, with diuers others which came aſhore with him, with whom we marched into the countrey againe, but could ſee nothing, & ſo returned. At the water ſide captaine Prowſe died. There we remained all that day on land, by reaſon the wind blew ſo much that wee could not get aboord vntill the euening. After our comming aboord a boat which we ſent into the bay, returned and brought vs newes, that there rode a barke within the bay, and by all likelyhood the towne ſhould be there. So preſently our Generall went into the bay with the Derling and ſome of the ſmall carauels. The tenth day in the morning, the reſt of our ſhipping came into the bay, and our men landed the ſame day, about 10 or 11 of the clocke in the night, & ſo marched on toward the towne: but in the way they had made baricados, and kept them very ſtrongly. Notwithſtanding the courage of our men was ſuch, as that they feared nothing, and forced them to leaue their forces, and flie. Hauing wonne this baricado they there remained vntill the next day being the 11 of Iune, and then early in the morning they marched on towards the towne, where by the way, the enemie often times came to ſkirmiſh with them, but alwayes fled. In fine they wan the towne without any great loſſe of men, God be thanked. Hauing gotten the town, they found nothing in it at all; for they had intelligence from Sant Iago, how wee had vſed them before, which cauſed them to conuey all their goods into the mountaines and woods: finding nothing in it, our Generall cauſed it to be ſet on fire, thinking it not good to remaine there, but to returne againe, backe to the ſhips: and the greateſt cauſe was by reaſon of the departure of captaine Sommers: who the day before in a moſt furious tempeſt, being in the pinneſſe, with ſome 50 men at anker, had his cables broken and loſt all his ankers, and ſo was faine to put to ſea to ſaue himſelfe, otherwiſe they had bene in danger of periſhing. Thus our General and his company, returned backe againe the twelfth day and imbarked themſelues, and departed away with all ſpeede to ſeeke captaine Sommers. The 13 toward night, hee came where captaine Sommers was, and found him riding, but not by anie ankers, but by two baſes, which they had made for to ſtay their barke by: at which meeting the company was very glad. Then they determined to go into a mighty great bay, to a towne called Laguna: but the bay was ſo deepe and ſhould withall, that we returned backe againe, after wee had ſtood in two daies & a night. So we ſayled ouer toward the Iſle of Hiſpaniola the ſixteenth of Iune: and the twentieth day we ſaw it. The 21 we ankored vnder Cape Tiburon. Here we watered, and ſtayed vntill the 25 of the ſame. After our departure out of the bay of Laguna, a great ſicknes fell among our fleete, and there died about eighty men of the ſame. This ſickneſſe was the fluxe of the bellie, which is a common diſeaſe in that countrey. We remayned about this Iſland vntill the eight and twentieth of this moneth. Then we departed from thence, and the ſecond of Iuly arriued at the Iſland of Iamaica. Before our comming hither, the three ſhips of Hampton had forſaken vs, and left our company. And the Derling wherein was captaine Iones, was ſent to diſcouer ſome other ſecret matter, in which diſcouery the valiant gentleman ended his life. So our whole fleete was now but our generall, with captaine Sommers, and a ſmall pinneſſe. We ſtayed at this Iſle of Iamaica vntil the ſixt of Iuly, in which meane time we landed to ſee if we could kill any beeues, but we could not, they were ſo wild: here is great ſtore of them, and great plenty of freſh-fiſh. We departed hence the 6 of Iuly, and paſſed by the Iſlands, called Caimanes, and the Iſle de Pinos, and the 12 of the ſaid moneth by Cape de Corrientes where we watered, and the ſame night, wee ſet ſaile towards the cape of S. Anthony, being the weſtermoſt part of the Iſle of Cuba. The 13 day in the morning we were vnder this cape, and the ſame day we met with the honourable knight, Sir Walter Ralegh, returning from his paineful, and happie diſcouery of Guiana, and his ſurpriſe of the Iſle of Trinidad. So with glad hearts, wee kept him and his fleete of three ſhips company till the twentieth day at night, what time we loſt them. In all which time nothing of moment fell out, ſaue that we gaue chaſe to a couple of frigats, but could not fetch them.

Afterward we plyed to recouer Hauana, vntill the fiue and twentieth of Iuly: then we ſet our courſe for the head of the Martyrs, the 27 we were in ſight of them. The 28 wee entred the gulfe of Bahama: then we ſet our courſe homeward toward Newfoundland, but we could not fetch it, but were on the Banke, and tooke fiſh there the 20 day of Auguſt. The ſame night we ſet ſayle to come home, by reaſon the wind was contrary to goe in with Newfoundland. So the tenth day of September, we arriued in ſafety (God be thanked) in Milford hauen in Wales, hauing performed ſo long a voyage in the ſpace of ſixe moneths, or ſomewhat leſſe.

The Banke of Newfoundland.

The voyage truely diſcourſed, made by ſir Francis Drake, and ſir Iohn Hawkins, chiefly pretended for ſome ſpeciall ſeruice on the Iſlands and maine of the Weſt Indies, with ſixe of the Queenes ſhips, and 21 other ſhippes and barkes, containing 2500 men and boyes, in the yeere 1595. In which voyage both the foreſayd knights died by ſickneſſe.

WEe brake ground out of the ſound of Plimmouth on Thurſday the 28 of Auguſt, and that night ankored againe in Cauſon bay, where we rode till Friday. Then we ſet ſayle and ſtoode Southweſt: and about three of the clocke the next morning the Hope, wherein ſir Thomas Baskeruil went, ſtrake vpon the Edy ſtone, and ſhot off a piece, but after cleared herſelfe wel enough.

On Munday at ſixe of the clocke in the morning the landes end bare Northweſt and by North, and then we ſtoode away Southweſt and by South for the coaſt of Spaine.

The 8 of September we tooke two ſmall Flemiſh fliboats bound for Barbary; which we caried a while with vs and afterward diſmiſſed them without doing them any harme: only wee learned newes of them, and ſtayed them from diſcrying our fleete to the enemie.

The 26 we ſaw Forteuentura, being one of the Iſlands of the Canaries.

The 27 being Saturday by breake of day we had ouer-ſhot the chiefe towne of Grand Canaria to the Northeaſt, and then ſtood about for it againe, and by nine of the clocke were at anker fayre before the fort to the Eaſtward of the towne ſome league. At one of the clocke wee offred to land one thouſand and foure hundreth men in the ſandie bay betwixt the fort and the towne: But by our detracting of the time they had made a bulwarke in the ſandie bay and planted Ordinance: ſo that by reaſon thereof, and the great breach of the ſea that went then on ſhore we were not able to land without endangering our whole forces, which our General would not doe. There were of Spaniards horſemen and footmen ſome 900. which played vpon vs out of their trenches, moſt of them being ſhot. At the time of our landing there went by commandement of our Generals within musket ſhot of the ſhore, & rode there at ankor ſome three houres, the Salomon, the Bonauenture, the Elizabeth Conſtance, the Phenix, the Iuell, the Little Iohn, the Delight, the Pegaſus, the Exchange, the Francis, the carauell, and the two catches: But when the Generall ſir Francis Drake gaue ouer the landing being in his barge, the ſhips weighed being in ſome danger, and ſtoode off againe to the great ſhips. Then we went to the Weſt end of the Iſland and there watered: where captaine Grimſton going vp the hill with 6 or 7 in his company was ſet vpon by the herdmen, who with their dogs and ſtaues killed the captaine and three or foure of his company: the reſt were ſore wounded: the Salomons Chirurgian taken priſoner, who diſcloſed our pretended voyage as much as in him lay: ſo as the Viceroy ſent a carauel of aduiſo into the Indies, vnto all ſuch places as wee did pretend to goe to. Howbeit they had intelligence from the king of all our voyage the eight of Auguſt, which was three weekes before we ſet foorth of England: as alſo by a Fleming that had ſeene all our prouiſion at London.

The 28 being Sunday at ten of the clocke at night wee ſet ſaile, and ſtood away Southweſt and Southſouthweſt ſome 200 leagues, vntil we came in the height of the Iſlands of Cape Verde, and then more Weſterly for Martinino, one of the Iſlands of the Weſt Indies, which we ſaw the 27 of October: but the night before we had a ſtorme, in which ſir Francis with foure or fiue other ſhips bearing on head of the fleete was ſeparated. Then we ſtood for Dominica, an Iſland full of inhabitants of the race of the Canibals, not paſt ten leagues diſtant from Martinino. In it groweth great ſtore of Tabacco: where moſt of our Engliſh and French men barter kniues, hatchets, ſawes, and ſuch like yron tooles in trucke of Tabacco.

Dominica.

Before we came to Dominica our Generall Sir Francis Drake altered his courſe, and went for Marigalante, which we had ſight of the 28 day, and came to an anker on the Northeaſt ſide a ſaker ſhot off the ſhore in 13 fathomes water faire ſholding. There the Generall went on ſhore in his barge, and by chance met a Canoa of Dominicans, to the people whereof he gaue a yellow waſtcoate of flanell and an hankerchiefe; and they gaue him ſuch fruits as they had, and the Dominicanes rowed to Dominica againe. They came thither to fetch ſome fruits which they ſowe and plant in diuers places of that Iſland, which they keepe like gardens.

The next morning by breake of day we weyed and ſtoode betweene the Todos Santos, which are 4 or 5 little Iſlands betweene Guadalupe and Dominica. There is nothing vpon theſe Iſlands but wood. We came to the Southeaſt ſide of Guadalupe and there ankered hard aboord the ſhore: the Southweſt ſide of the Iſland is deepe water and good ankorage: where that day ſir Iohn Hawkins came to vs againe ſtanding vp from the South ſide of Dominica. There we watered, waſhed our ſhips, ſet vp our pinneſſes, and refreſhed our ſouldiers on ſhore.

The 30 captaine Wignol in the Francis, a barke of 35 tunnes, being the ſternmoſt of ſir Iohn Hawkins fleete was chaſed by fiue of the king of Spaines frigats or Zabras being ſhips of 200 tunnes a piece, which came of purpoſe with 3 other Zabras for the treaſure of S. Iuan de Puerto rico: The Francis going roome with them, ſuppoſing they had bene our owne fleete, was by them taken in ſight of our carauel. They left the Francis driuing in the ſea with 3 or 4 hurt and ſicke men, and tooke the reſt of our men into their ſhips, as the priſoners which wee tooke at S. Iuan de Puerto rico told vs.

The 4 of Nouember we began to vnlade the Richard, one of our victuallers, which was by the next day vnladen, vnrigged and then ſunken. Then we ſtood Northweſt & by North: and the next morning ſaw the Iſlands of Monſerrata, Redonda, Eſtazia, S. Chriſtopher and Saba. The biggeſt of theſe Iſlands is not paſt 8 leagues long. There is good ankorage in 8, 7, and 5 fadomes water faire white ſand. Then we ſtood away Southweſt, and on the 8 in the morning being Saturday came to an anker ſome 7 or 8 leagues off within certain broken Iſlands called las Virgines, which haue bene accounted dangerous: but we found there a very good rode, had it bene for a 1000 ſails of ſhips in 14, 12, and 8 fadomes faire ſand and good ankorage, high Iſlands on either ſide, but no freſh water that we could find: here is much fiſh to be taken with hookes and nets: alſo we ſtayed on ſhore and fowled. Here ſir Iohn Hawkins was extreme ſicke; which his ſicknes began vpon newes of the taking of the Francis. The 18 day wee weyed and ſtoode North and by Eaſt into a leſſer ſound, which ſir Francis in his barge diſcouered the night before, and ankored in 13 fadoms, hauing hie ſteepe hils on either ſide, ſome league diſtant from our firſt riding.

The death of ſir Iohn Hawkins.

The 12 in the morning we weied and ſet ſayle into the ſea due South through a ſmall ſtreit but without danger, and then ſtode Weſt and by North for S. Iuan de Puerto rico, and in the after noone left the 3 ſmall Iſlands called The paſſages to the Southward of vs, and that night came vp to the Eaſtermoſt end of S. Iohn, where ſir Iohn Hawkins departed this life: vpon whoſe deceaſe ſir Thomas Baskeruil preſently went into the Garland. At 2 of the clocke we came to anker at the eſtermoſt ſide of the chiefe towne called Puerto rico in a ſandie bay 2 miles off: where we receiued from their forts and places where they planted Ordinance ſome 28 great ſhot, the laſt of which ſtrake the admirall through the miſen, and the laſt but one ſtrake through her quarter into the ſterage, the Generall being there at ſupper, and ſtrake the ſtoole from vnder him, but hurt him not, but hurt at the ſame table ſir Nicholas Clifford, M. Browne, captaine Stratford, with one or two more. Sir Nicholas Clifford and maſter Browne died of their hurts.

Then wee ſet ſayle and ſtood to the Eaſtward, and at midnight tacked about to the Weſt, and in the morning came to an anker before the point without the towne, a little to the Weſtwards by the 3 Iſlands.

The fight at S. Iuan de Puerto rico.

The 13 we rode ſtill vntill night, when in the beginning with twenty fiue pinneſſes, boats and ſhallops manned and furniſhed with fire-workes and ſmall ſhot wee went into the rode within the great caſtels, and in deſpite of them fired the fiue Zabras or frigats, all ſhips of two hundreth tunnes the piece or more, quite burning the Rereadmirall downe to the water, which was the greateſt ſhippe of them all, and alſo mightily ſpoiled the admirall and viceadmirall, notwithſtanding the caſtles and ſhips gaue vs a hundreth eightie and fiue great ſhot, beſides ſmall ſhot abundance. They had alſo ſunke a great ſhippe in the mouth of the chanell and rafted it ouer with her maſtes almoſt to the very fortes and caſtles, ſo as they thought it impregnable. The frigats had in each of them twenty pieces of braſſe, and a hundreth barrels of powder. Their chiefe lading that they brought thither was ſilke, oyle, and wine. The treaſure which they went to fetch, which was brought thither in a ſhip called the Vigonia, was conueyed into the ſtrongeſt and ſureſt caſtell of defence; being, as one of the priſoners confeſſed, three millions of ducats or fiue and thirty tunnes of ſiluer. Alſo they had ſent all the women, children, and vnable perſons into the woods, and left none but ſouldiers and fighting men in the towne. The fight on our ſide was reſolute, hote, and dangerous: wherein wee loſt ſome forty or fifty men, and ſo many were hurt. There was alſo great death of the Spaniards aboord the frigats, with burning, drowning, and killing, and beſides ſome taken priſoners.

The 14 we rode ſtil, being within ſhot of the vttermoſt caſtell: but they fearing the next night we would come in againe, began to warpe vp the other 4 frigats, beginning firſt with the Admirall: which whether by chance or their owne willes wee ſaw to ſinke; and as wee ſuppoſe ſo did they with all the reſt, or elſe by ſtealth got vp farther within their chiefeſt forces.

The 15 alſo we rode ſtill, and at afternoone wee eſpied a carauell comming from the caſtell point: but before our pinneſſes could fetch her vp, ſhe ranne on ſhore, where our boates could not come at her becauſe of the breach, and alſo many of the Iſlanders came downe to guard her with ſhot. The beginning of this night we weyed, and ſtoode one houre to the Eaſt, and then tacked about to the Weſt.

The 16 being Sunday, and the 17 alſo we were becalmed.

The 18 we ankered a little to the Southward of the Southweſt point of the Iſland, giuing the point a birth becauſe of a ſhoald of ſand that lieth ſome two cables length off: there we rode in foure, fiue, and ſixe fadomes faire white ſand, where wee ſet vp more pinneſſes, waſhed our ſhips, and refreſhed our men on ſhore. Here the Generall tooke a pinneſſe of Hiſpaniola with diuers letters, ſignifying that two Engliſhmen of warre had done great hurt along their Iſland.

The 20 the Generall rowed to the Phenix, the Delight and the carauell, and cauſed them to wey and anker right againſt the mouth of a freſh riuer in two fadomes water in ozie ſand to the Southward of the other ſhips ſome league or more. The Generall went into this riuer three or foure leagues vp, and tooke horſes in the countrey. Sir Thomas Baskeruil rowed vp the riuer and ſtayed there all night, and went vp into the land three or foure leagues.

The 23 wee diſcharged a barke called the Pulpit and burnt her: and at three of the clocke that afternoone, when we were ready to ſet ſaile, there came aboord the Defiance our Admiral, a Spaniard with his wife, who feared ſome great torment for not hauing repaired to the towne according to the Generals commandement of that Iſland, who had commanded that all able men of the fleete ſhould repaire to the towne to defend it againſt vs. Then we ſtood againe Weſt and by North becauſe of a ledge of rocks that lie ſunke 4 or 5 leagues off the Southſide of the Iſland.

The 25 we ſtood away Southweſt, and ſaw Mona being a lowe flat Iſland betweene Hiſpaniola and S. Iuan de Puerto rico. That day the Exchange of captaine Winter ſpent her boultſprite; and in the beginning of the night the Phenix was ſent backe to ſeeke her: which by Gods helpe that night met with her, and kept her company vntil the next morning, then taking in a ſmall cable from her for a towe: but by 9 that morning ſhe ſpent her maine maſt and ſplit her foreyard, breaking alſo her tow: ſo as they were faine to ſaue ſome trifles out of her and the men, and to ſinke the hull. Then we ſtood away South and South and by Weſt after the fleete: and the 26 in the morning had ſight of the fleete againe.

Mona.

The 29 we had ſight of the Iſland called Curaçao within 8 leagues of the maine, and on the Northweſt ſide came to an anker in very deepe water hard aboord the ſhore without any danger: but the Generall weyed preſently and ſtoode away Northweſt and by Weſt, and Northnorthweſt for the maine, and that night ſaw Aruba, being ſomewhat a leſſe Iſland then the other: we left it ſome three leagues to the Southward of vs.

The Iſle of Curazao.

Aruba.

On Sunday morning being the laſt of Nouember wee ſaw three or foure little Iſlands called the Monjes, betwixt Aruba and the next North point of the maine. At 12 of the clocke we ſawe the maine, where we ſaw a great current ſetting to the Weſtward, and alſo the water changing very white. The Phenix, the carauell, and one of the catches kept within, and at midnight came vnder Cape de la Vela, and made a fire, whereby the reſt of the fleete came to anker vnder the Cape, where is a very good rode, faire ſholding and ſandie ground, fourteene, twelue, and tenne fadoms neere the ſhore. Toe Cape is a bare land without trees or ſhrubs, and falleth in eight or ten leagues Southeaſt and Northweſt: and a ſaker ſhot off the point ſtandeth a little Iſland like Meweſtone neere Plimmouth, but ſomewhat bigger. In the morning the firſt of December wee imbarked all our ſouldiers for Rio de la Hacha, which is a towne twenty leagues to the Weſtwards, one of the ancienteſt in all the maine, although not very bigge: but it ſtandeth in a moſt fertile and pleaſant ſoyle. Our men tooke it by ten of the clock in the night. The ſhips beating all that night and the day before in 5 and 6 fadomes, the leſſer ſhips in 2 fadomes and an halfe water: the Phenix went ſo neere the ſhore by the Generals commandement, that ſhee ſtrake on ground, but got off againe. There lieth to the Eaſtward of the towne ſome mile thereabout a ſhold of ſand: therefore giue a birth ſome halfe league or more before you come right againſt the town. There wee came to anker in two fadomes, but the great ſhips rode off in fiue and ſixe fadomes.

Rio de la Hacha taken.

A ſhold of ſand

A freſh riuer. There is a freſh riuer about a bow-ſhot to the Eaſtward of the towne; whereinto our pinneſſes could ſcarſe enter by reaſon of a barre of ſand in the riuers mouth, but within it is nauigable for barkes of twenty or thirty tunnes ſome ſixe or eight leagues vp.

The ſixth day the Spaniards came in to talke about the ranſome of the towne, but not to the Generall his liking: and that night Sir Thomas Baskeruil marched vp into the countrey to ouer-runne thoſe parts: and the Generall the ſame night with ſome hundreth and fiftie men went by water ſixe leagues to the Eaſtward, and tooke the Rancheria a fiſher towne, where they drag for pearle.

La Rancheria taken.

The people all fled except ſome ſixteene or twenty ſouldiers, which fought a little, but ſome were taken priſoners, beſides many Negros, with ſome ſtore of pearles and other pillage. In the houſes we refreſhed our ſelues, and were all imbarked to come away, and then had ſight of a brigandine or a dredger, which the Generall tooke within one houres chaſe with his two barges: ſhe had in her Indie-wheat, which we call Maiz, and ſome ſiluer and pearle, but of ſmall value.

On Saturday the ſeuenth, maſter Yorke captaine of the Hope dyed of ſicknes, and then maſter Thomas Drake the Generals brother was made captaine of the Hope, and maſter Ionas Bodenham captaine of the Aduenture, and maſter Charles Cæſar captaine of the Amitie.

The tenth day the Spaniards concluded for the ranſome of the towne for 24000 ducats, and one priſoner promiſed to pay for his ranſome 4000 ducats.

The fourteenth day they brought in the townes ranſome in pearles, but rated ſo deare as the Generall after conference with them, miſliking it, ſent it backe againe, giuing them foure houres reſpite to cleere themſelues with their treaſure.

The ſixteenth the gouernour came into the towne about dinner, and vpon conference with the Generall told him plainely, that he cared not for the towne, neither would he ranſome it: and that the pearle was brought in without his command or conſent, and that his detracting of time ſo long was onely to ſend the other townes word, that were not of force to withſtand vs, whereby they might conuey all their goods, cattell, and wealth into the woods out of danger. So the Generall gaue the gouernour leaue to depart according to promiſe, hauing two houres to withdraw himſelfe in ſafety.

The ſeuenteenth Sir Thomas Baskeruil with the Elizabeth Conſtance, the Phenix, the carauel with foure or fiue pinneſſes went ſome fiue leagues to the Weſtward, & landing, marched ſome foure leagues vp into the countrey to a place called Tapia, which he tooke & burned certain villages and ferme houſes about it. He had ſome reſiſtance as he paſſed ouer a riuer, but had but one man hurt, which he brought abord aliue with him: he marched one league farther and burnt a village called Sallamca, and ſo returned with ſome priſoners, the ſouldiers hauing gotten ſome pillage.

Tapia taken.

Sallamca burnt.

The 18 the Rancheria, and the towne of Rio de la Hacha were burnt cleane downe to the ground, the Churches and a Ladies houſe onely excepted, which by her letters written to the Generall was preſerued. That day wee ſet ſayle and fell to lee-ward, to meete with Sir Thomas Baskeruil.

The 19 we weighed and ſtood to leeward for Cape de Aguja, which the twentieth at ſunne riſing we ſaw. It is a Cape ſubiect much to flawes, by reaſon it is a very hie land: and within the cape lieth an Iſland within the mouth of the ſound, which hath a white cliffe or ſpot in the Weſtnorthweſt part of the Iſland. The land all about the cape riſeth all in hemocks or broken ſteepie hils. A league Southweſt within that, (for ſo falleth the land thereabout) there ſtandeth on the top of a cliffe a watch-houſe: and a little within that a ſmall Iſland: you may goe in betweene the maine and it, or to leeward if you luſt: and hard within that is the rode and towne of Santa Martha, which at 11 of the clocke we tooke, the people all being fled, except a few Spaniards, Negros & Indiãs, which in a brauado at our landing gaue vs ſome 30 or 40 ſhot, & ſo ran away.

Cape de Aguja.

Santa Martha taken.

That night their Lieutenant generall was taken and ſome little pillage brought in out of the woods: for in the town nothing was left but the houſes ſwept clean. In all the main is not a richer place for gold: for the hops were mixt with the earth in euery place, and alſo in the ſand a little to the leewards of the towne. In the bay wee had a bad rode by reaſon of a ſmall moone, for euery ſmall moone maketh foule weather all the maine along.

The 21, the Generall cauſed the towne to be burnt, and all the ſhips to wey, and ſtood out, many of the ſouldiers being imbarked where the Generall had appointed, in the ſmall ſhips which rode neereſt the ſhore. We loſt that night the company of the Phenix, captaine Auſtin, Peter Lemond, and the Garlands pinneſſe, which ſtood along the ſhore, and being chaſed off by gallies out of Carthagena Peter Lemond with nine of our men was taken, the reſt came ſafe to our fleete.

The 26 we ſaw the Ilands ſome twelue leagues to the Eaſtward of Nombre de Dios ſtanding in toward the ſhore, but toward night we ſtood to the offin vntill the next day.

The 27 we came into the mouth of Nombre de Dios, and by one of the clocke tooke the towne, the people being all fled except ſome 100 Spaniards, which kept the Fort, and played vpon vs, hauing in the fort ſome 3 or 4 ſmall pieces of ordinance, and one of them brake in diſcharging at vs. They gaue vs alſo a voley of ſmall ſhot: but ſeeing our reſolution in running vpon them they all fled and tooke the woods.

Nombre de Dios taken.

The towne was bigge, hauing large ſtreetes, houſes very hie, all built of timber, but one Church very faire and large wrought all of timber likewiſe. Nothing was left in the towne of value: there was a ſhew in their ſhops of great ſtore of marchandiſes that had bene there. There was a mill aboue the towne, and vpon the toppe of another hill in the woods ſtood a little watch-houſe, where we tooke twentie ſowes of ſiluer, two barres of gold, ſome money in coyne, beſides other pillage.

The towne was ſituated in a waterie ſoile, and ſubiect much to raine, very vnhealthy as any place in the Indies, hauing great ſtore of Orenges, plantans, caſſauy-roots, & ſuch other fruits; but very dangerous to be eaten for breeding of diſeaſes. To the Eaſtwarde of the towne within the bay runneth out a freſh riuer of excellent good water, with houſes, and all about it gardens: halfe a league from hence due Eaſt into the countrey was an Indian towne, whither as we marched a little before our comming away with an hundred men they had broken downe a bridge to hinder our paſſage, where they lay in ambuſh with ſome twentie or thirtie ſmall ſhot, and bowes and arrowes, ſet vpon vs, and killed Lieutenant Iones, hurt three or foure and ſo fled into the woods, ranne before vs and fired their owne towne, and then fled farther into the woods: our men fired diuerſe other houſes in purſuing them, and ſo returned againe: our Generall with Sir Thomas being in the Riuers mouth with thirtie or fortie men filling water about ſome myle from vs.

An Indian towne fired.

The road of Nombre de Dios is a faire road: but on each ſide, as you come to ride before the towne, lyeth a ledge of rockes, but there is no danger becauſe they are in ſight. You may ride betweene them in three or foure fadome water, and without if you will in eight or ten fadomes, where neither Caſtle nor Fort can annoy you. The name of Nombre de Dios was greater then their ſtrength. For they had no Caſtle nor Fort, but onely the little fort aforeſaid ſtanding on the top of an hill, although they might haue made it ſtronger if they would.

The 29 ſir Thomas Baskeruil with 750 armed men, beſides Chirurgians and prouand boyes, went for Panama.

The laſt of December the Generall burned halfe the towne, and the firſt of Ianuarie burnt the reſt, with all the Frigats, Barks & Galiots, which were in the harbour and on the beach on ſhore, hauing houſes built ouer them to keepe the pitch from melting.

The ſecond of Ianuary ſir Thomas returned with his ſouldiers both weary and hungry, hauing marched more then halfe the way to the South ſea. The Spaniards played diuers times vpon vs both outward and homeward in the woods, the way being cut out of the woods & rockes both very narrow, and full of myre and water. The march was ſo ſore as neuer Engliſh man marched before. Hauing marched ſome ten leagues in a maruellous ſtraite way, vpon the top of an hill, through which we muſt needes paſſe, the Spaniards had ſet vp a Fort and kept it with ſome 80 or 90 men, who played vpon vs as we came vp, before wee were aware of them, and ſo killed ſome twentie or more of vs, amongſt whom was Captaine Marchant quarter-maſter Generall, and Enſigne Sampſon, Maurice Williams one of her Maieſties guard, beſides diuerſe were hurt, as M. Captaine Nicholas Baskeruil a valiant gentleman, with diuers others. Then ſir Thomas had perfect knowledge that they muſt paſſe two ſuch Forts more, if he got that, beſides Panama to be very ſtrong, the enemie knowing of our comming long before.

Alſo our ſouldiers had no victuals left, nor any meanes to get more: which conſiderations cauſed ſir Thomas to returne and giue ouer his attempt. As he marched thitherward he tooke an Indian and ſent him to Nombre de Dios with letters of his returne and proceeding.

The 5 we ſet ſaile at 12 of the clocke, and ſtood to the Weſtward.

The 10 day we ſaw an Iland lying Weſtward ſome 30 leagues called Eſcudo, where wee came to anker on the Southſide in 12 fadoms water, faire ſand and good ankorage. If you come into the Eaſterne point, giue it a birth, becauſe of a ledge of rockes, that lyeth out there from the end of the Iſland: comming to anker we ſawe a roader, who ſeeing vs, ſet ſayle, but that night with our Pinneſſes we tooke him, he had nothing in him but a little maiz. The men being examined by the Generall confeſſed him to be an Aduiſor ſent from Nombre de Dios to all the ports along the coaſt Weſtward. This Iland lyeth 9 or 10 leagues from the maine, & is not paſt two leagues long full of wood, and hath great ſtore of freſh water in euery part of the Iland, and that very good. It is a ſickly climat alſo, and giuen to much raine: here we waſhed our ſhips, and ſet vp the reſt of our Pinneſſes.

The 15 day captaine Plat died of ſickneſſe, and then ſir Francis Drake began to keepe his cabin, and to complaine of a ſcowring or fluxe.

The 23 we ſet ſaile and ſtood vp again for Puerto Bello, which is but 3 leagues to the Weſtwards of Nombre de Dios.

The death of ſir Francis Drake

The 28 at 4 of the clocke in the morning our Generall ſir Francis Drake departed this life, hauing bene extremely ſicke of a fluxe, which began the night before to ſtop on him. He vſed ſome ſpeeches at or a little before his death, riſing and apparelling himſelfe, but being brought to bed againe within one houre died. He made his brother Thomas Drake and captaine Ionas Bodenham executors, and M. Thomas Drakes ſonne his heire to all his lands, except one manor which he gaue to captaine Bodenham.

Puerto Bello.

The ſame day we ankored at Puerto Bello, being the beſt harbour we found al along the maine both for great ſhips and ſmall. There ſtandeth a ſaker ſhot off the ſhore at the Eaſterne point a little Iland: and there is betwixt the maine & that 5 or 6 fadomes: but the beſt comming in is the open mouth betwixt that Iland & another Iland that lyeth to the weſtward with a range of rocks.

In Puerto Bello were but 8 or 10 houſes, beſides a great new houſe which they were in building for the Gouernour that ſhould haue bene for that place: there was alſo a very ſtrong Fort all to the waters ſide with flankers of great trees and ſtones filled with earth betweene: and had not our comming diſappointed their pretence, they would haue made it one of the ſtrongeſt places in all the maine. There they ment to haue builded a great towne. We found there three pieces of braſſe ordinance ſunke in the ſea, which we weighed vp, all the people were fled and their goods carried away.

Up within this bay there was a little village but of no force, where we found a great freſh riuer, our men rowing vp ſome two leagues found pillage, as wine and oyle, and ſome ſmall quantitie of yron. After our comming hither to anker, and the ſolemne buriall of our Generall ſir Francis in the ſea: Sir Thomas Baskeruill being aboord the Defiance, where M. Bride made a ſermon, hauing to his audience all the captaines in the fleete, ſir Thomas commanded all aboord the Garland, with whom he held a Councell, & there ſhewing his Commiſſion was accepted for General, & captain Bodenham made captaine of the Defiance, & M. Sauill captaine of ẏ Aduenture.

The 27 died captaine Ioſias of the Delight, and captaine Egerton a Gentleman of the Foreſight, and Iames Wood chiefe chirurgion of the fleete out of the Garland.

The 28 died Abraham Kendall out of the Saker. At this place we watered againe, waſhed our ſhips & made new ſailes, it being by the Generall and all the captaines agreed, that if we could by any meanes turne vp againe for Santa Martha, we ſhould, if not, to goe directly for England. Here alſo we tooke in ſome balaſt as our neede required.

The 6 of Februarie the Elizabeth of M. Wattes was diſcharged and ſunke, and that day the Pegaſus iolly was going on ſhore for water, carying no guarde: The Spaniards perceiuing it came downe vpon them, killed two of them, and tooke 2 or 3 priſoners, and ſo ranne vp into the woods againe.

The ſeuenth the Delight and captaine Edens frigat were diſcharged and ſunke becauſe they were old and leaked, and the Queenes ſhips wanted ſaylers.

That day our men being muſtered we had ſicke and whole 2000. And the next day we ſet on ſhore all our priſoners as Spaniards and Negros. But before at our firſt comming to Puerto Bello ſir Thomas ſent two of thoſe Spaniards to Nombre de Dios and to Panama to fetch ranſome for ſome of the chiefeſt priſoners, but they neuer returned againe. As we were ſetting ſaile there came one with a flagge of truce, and told the General that they had taken 18 of our men, and that they were well vſed, adding that if he would ſtay 8 or 10 dayes longer they ſhould be brought from Panama. We ſuppoſed this to haue bene but a delay to haue kept vs there while the kings forces had come about by ſea, as they dayly expected. We ſet ſaile the 8 of Februarie, turning vp for Santa Martha, and the 14 day we ſaw the Ilands of Baru ſome 14 leagues to the Weſtward of Carthagena: The Generall that night told vs he would ſtand in for the towne of Baru in the bay: but that night blew ſo much winde and continued that ſmall moone, that the ſame night we loſt the Foreſight, and the next day ſtanding againe to make the land which we had made, we loſt companie of the Suſan Parnel, The Helpe, and the Pegaſus. Then the next day we put ouer for Cape S. Antonie, and gaue ouer Santa Martha.

The Grand Cayman.

The 25 we ſaw the Iland of Grand Cayman ſome 30 leagues to the Northweſtward of Iamaica, being a low ſandie Iland, hauing many tortoyſes about it.

The Ile of Pinos.

The 26 we ſaw the hie land of Cuba to the Eaſtward of the broken Ilands, to the Eaſt of the Iland of Pinos, and were imbayed in among thoſe dangerous places. But perceiuing it, we ſtood out againe Southſoutheaſt and ſo got cleere, and then ſtood away Weſt and by North for the Ile of Pinos, which we ſaw the firſt of March. It is a low land with wood and freſh water to the Weſtern end. If you come in with the middeſt of it you ſhall ſee riſe vp aboue the reſt of the land 8 or 9 round homockes, and the Weſtermoſt hath three in one.

Being ſhot foorth with the Weſt end, and ſtanding in for to water we eſpied 20 ſayle of ſhips about one in the afternone. This was a third part of the fleete which the king ſent for Carthagena, the reſt of the fleete being gone for the Honduras. They were in all 60 ſailes ſent onely to meete our fleete, being commanded whereſoeuer they heard we were, to come vpon vs with all their three forces. This fleete which we met withall came ſtanding for Cape de los Corrientes, and had bene refreſhed at Hauana.

The fight betweene the Engliſh and the Spaniſh fleetes.

Aſſoone as they diſcried vs, they kept cloſe vpon a tacke, thinking to get the winde of vs: but we weathered them. And when our Admirall with all the reſt of our fleet were right in the windes eye of them, ſir Thomas Baskeruil putting out the Queenes armes, and all the reſt of our fleete their brauerie, bare roome with them, and commanded the Defiance not to ſhoot, but to keepe cloſe by to ſecond him. The Viceadmirall of the Spaniards being a greater ſhip then any of ours, and the beſt ſayler in all their fleete looſed vp and gaue the Concord the two firſt great ſhot, which ſhe repayed preſently againe, thus the fight began. The Bonauenture bare full with her, ringing her ſuch a peale of ordinance and ſmall ſhot withall, that he left her with torne ſides. The Admirall alſo made no ſpare of powder and ſhot. But the Defiance in the middeſt of the Spaniſh fleete thundering of her ordinance and ſmall ſhot continued the fight to the end. So that the Viceadmirall with 3 or 4 of her conſorts were forced to tacke about to the Eaſtward, leauing their admirall and the reſt of the fleete, who came not ſo hotly into the fight as they did. The fight continued two houres & better. At ſunne ſet all the fleete tacked about to the Eaſtward, we continued our courſe to the Weſtward for cape de los Corrientes, ſuppoſing we ſhould haue met with more of their conſorts. In this conflict in the Defiance we had fiue men ſlaine, three Engliſh men, a Greeke and a Negro. That night ſome halfe houre after, their fleete keeping vpon their weather quarter, we ſaw a mightie ſmoke riſe out of one of their great ſhips which ſtayed behind: which happened by meanes of powder as we thinke, and preſently after ſhe was all on a light fire, and ſo was conſumed and all burnt, as we might well perceiue.

One of the Spaniſh great ſhips burnt.

Cape Sant Antonio.

The next day being the ſecond of March in the morning by breake of day we were hard aboord Cape de los Corrientes, which is a bare low cape, hauing a buſh of trees higher then the reſt ſome mile to the Eaſtward of the cape. All Cuba is full of wood on the Southſide. The Spaniſh fleete which then were but 14 no more then we were, kept ſtill vpon our weather quarter, but dared not to come roome with vs although our Admirall ſtayed for them. Aſſoone as we had cleered our ſelues of the Cape 3 of their beſt ſaylers came roome with the Salomon, which was ſo neere the land that ſhe could not double the Cape, but tacked about to the Eaſtward, & ſo was both a ſterne and alſo to leeward of all our fleete: But when we ſaw the Spaniards working, the Defiance tacked about to reſcue her: which the Spaniards ſeeing, & hauing not forgotten the fight which ſhe made the night before, they looſed vp into the middeſt of their fleete againe, and then all the fleete ſtayed vntill the Salomon came vp, and ſo ſtood along for Cape S. Antonio, which wee came in ſight of by two in the after noone, being a low cape alſo, and to the Southweſt a white ſandie bay where 3 or 4 ſhips may very well water. There is a good road for North & Eaſterly windes: there the Spaniardes began to fall a ſterne. That night wee ſtood away a glaſſe or two Northweſt, and Northnorthweſt, and Northeaſt, and in the morning-watch South, and in the morning had ſight of Cuba about the Eaſt part of the Organes, which are dangerous rocks lying 8 leagues off vpon the North part of Cuba, preſently aſſoone as you paſſe Cape S. Anthonie: then we ſtood to the Eaſtward of the land, the winde at Southſouthweſt, and at 6 at night had foule weather, but after were becalmed all night. The 5 the winde came ſcant. The 7 we ſawe a hie land like a crowne, which appeareth ſo 13 or 14 leagues to the Weſtward of Hauana, and another place in Cuba called The Table, 8 leagues to the Eaſtward of the crowne. The land ouer Hauana maketh two ſmall mountaines like a womans breaſts or paps. Here we found no great current vntill we came to the Gulfe of Bahama.

The Crowne.

The cape of Florida.

The 10 we ſaw the Cape of Florida being but a reaſonable low land and broken Ilands to the Southward of the Cape. And at two in the afternoone we loſt ſight of the land 12 leagues to the Northward of the Cape. After we had diſemboqued, we ſtood Weſt till midnight, and were in 28 degrees, and then ſtood Northeaſt till the 13 at night, when we were in 31 degrees. And after the wind ſcanted with a great ſtorme, in which we loſt the Bonauenture, and the Little Iohn, they bearing on head. Then we ſtood with our larbord tacked Eaſtſoutheaſt.

The 19 we were in 29 degrees our courſe Eaſtnortheaſt. The 21 we had a great ſtormie gale of winde and much raine but large. And then all the reſt of our fleete fell a ſterne except the Hope, which bare a head: ſo that there kept no more with the Admirall, but the Defiance, the Aduenture, and the Phenix.

The 28 we were in 39 degrees, and ſtood away for Flores, which the 8 of Aprill we ſaw, and the 9 came to an anker on the Southſide, where we watered becauſe the Defiance when we came in had but two buts of water. We bartered with the Portugals for ſome freſh victuals, and ſet here on ſhore at our comming away out of the Admirall our two Portugall Pilots; which ſir Francis Drake caried out of England with him.

The 10 being Eaſter-eue at night we ſet ſaile the winde ſeruing vs to lie ſome ſlent in our courſe. That night and Eaſter day we had much raine: the winde came vp at Northeaſt, wee beate it vp ſome 30 leagues to the Eaſtward, & then about to the Weſt, and ſo againe to the Eaſt, and tryed, and the next boord to the Weſt. On Thurſday towards night, being the 16 wee had ſight of Coruo againe, we tryed all that night: and on Friday towards night we came to an anker to the Weſtward of the point of Santa Cruz vnder Flores: but before midnight we draue, and ſet ſaile the next day ſtanding away Northeaſt. About three of the clocke in the afternoone the winde came vp againe at North. On ſunday the 19 by two of the clocke in the afternoone we had made 20 leagues an Eaſt way: and then the winde came vp a good gale at Northweſt, and ſo Northeaſt with a flowne ſheete we made the beſt way we could: but being diſperſed by bad weather we arriued about the beginning of May in the Weſt parts of England. And the laſt ſhips which came in together to Plimmouth were the Defiance, the Garland, the Aduenture, and the Phenix.

A Libell of Spaniſh lies written by Don Bernaldino Delgadillo de Auellaneda, Generall of the king of Spaines Armada, concerning ſome part of the laſt voyage of Sir Francis Drake; together with a confutation of the moſt notorious falſehoods therein contained, and a declaration of the truth by M. Henrie Sauile Eſquire: and alſo an approbation of both by ſir Thomas Baskeruil Generall of her Maieſties Armada after the deceaſe of ſir Francis Drake.

To the courteous Reader.

VHereas Don Bernaldino Delgadillo de Auellaneda, Generall of the Spaniſh fleete, hath by his printed letters publiſhed to the world diuerſe vntruthes, concerning our fleete and the Commanders thereof, ſeeking thereby his owne glorie, and our diſgrace; I haue taken vpon me (though of many leaſt able) to confute the ſame, the rather for that the printed copie came firſt into my hands, hauing my ſelfe bene Captaine of one of her Maieſties ſhips in the ſame voyage. Take this therefore (gentle Reader) as a token of my dutie and loue to my countrey and countrey-men, and expect onely a plaine truth, as from the pen of a ſouldier and Nauigator: Which if you take in good part, you may draw me hereafter to publiſh ſome greater labour.

HENRY SAVILE.

The true copie of a letter found at the ſacking of Cadiz, written by Don Bernaldino Delgadillo de Auellaneda, Generall of the king of Spaine his Nauie in the Weſt Indies, ſent vnto Doctor Peter Florez, Preſident of the contractation houſe for the Indies, and by him put in print with priuilege: wherein are declared many vntruthes, and falſe reports, tending to the diſgrace of the ſeruice of her Maieſties Nauie, and the commanders thereof, lately ſent to the Weſt Indies, vnder the command of ſir Francis Drake, and ſir Iohn Hawkins Generals at the ſea; and ſir Thomas Baskeruill Generall at land: with a confutation of diuers groſſe lies and vntruthes, contayned in the ſame letter: together with a ſhort relation of the fight, according to the truth.

Copia de vna carta, que embio Don Bernaldino Delgadillo de Auellaneda, General de la Armada de ſu Mageſtad, embiada al Doctor Pedro Florez Preſidente de la caſa de la Contratacion de las Indias: en que trata del ſuceſſo de la Armada de Ynglatierra, deſpues que partio de Panama, de que fue por General Franciſco Draque, y de ſu muerte.

DE Cartagena di cuenta a vueſtra Merced como ſali del puerto de la ciudad de Lisbona, en buſca de la armada Yngleſa, aunque por la mucha prieſſa, no ſe pudieron reparar tanbien los Galeones como fuera neceſſario, y con el tiempo ſe perdio uno, y por deſgracia ſe quemo vn Filibote, y auiendo andado muchos dias en buſca del enemigo, haſta que llegue a Cartagena, donde auiendo tomado el parecer de Don Pedro de Acunna Gouernador y capitan general de aquella ciudad, porque tenia mucha neceſſidad de agua, y reparar los Nauios por que venian faltos della, me detuue en aquel puerto, adonde tuve noticia por vn Auiſo, que Franciſco Draque murio en Nombre de Dios, de pena de auer perdido tantos Baxeles y gente, aunque deſpues ſe ſupo mas por eſtenſo. Y auiendo dado a vueſtra Merced cuenta de lo que haſta alli a ſucedido, agora la doy de que ſali de aquel puerto a dos de Março, y tome la derrota de la Hauana, donde entendi hallarlo: y auiendo hecho la diligencia poſible, Lunes à onze del dicho mes, alas dos deſpues de medio dia, al ſalir de la Yſla de Pinos, en la enſenada de Guaniguanico, tope con el, que yua con catorze Nauios muy buenos: fueme arrimando a el, aunque tenia el viento por ſuyo, y el Almiranta que yua mas al viento con otros dos Nauios commenço arrimarſele, y aunque vino ſobre ella con todos los ſuyos tres vezes, no fue parte acercarſele para que quiſieſſe enueſtir:los que eſtauamos mas apartados fuymos dando bordos acercandonos haſta jugar la artilleria, Moſqueteria, y Arcabuzeria de los mas dellos, en lo qual el recibio muy conocido danno, el lo hizo con el artilleria como ſuele, y particularmente el Almiranta, y en reconociendo la voluntad con que a el nos arrimauamos, con mas diligencia de lo que ſe puede creer ſe deſembaraço de todos, poniendoſe en huyda, dando las velas, dexando en la mar todas las Lanchas que traya. Yo le ſegui con nueue Nauios toda la noche, y con quatro mas todo el dia, haſta hazerle doblar el cabo de Sant Anton, y tomar la derrota de la Canal de Bahama, conforme a las inſtruciones de ſu Mageſtad: ſiruio de poco el ver me con menos numero de Nauios, ni todas las diligencias que ſe hizieron, para que ſe inclinaſe a eſperar ni abordar, ni tirar vn arcabuz, ni vna pieça, porque el ſe dio la diligencia que pudo, porque ſus Nauios los auia reduzido a la mitad, y los mejores, y eſtos acabaua de reparar en Puerto Bello, donde ſe eſtuvo mas de quarenta dias, y anſi venian muy reparados; y yo ſaque los mios desbaratados, que no me dio el tiempo lugar para adereçarlos. A que nauego dos meſes y medio, y traygo la capitana, que deſde que parti de Cartagena no an parado las bombas, y el dia que ſali ſe me lo arrimo vna Zabra con eſta neceſſidad; la Almiranta y los demas Nauios vienen con el miſmo trabajo, pero ſin embargo, por lo que yo vi en los enemigos; era muy conocida la ventaja que nos hazia, y mucha dicha ſeria apoderarſe del, ſino es hallarlo ſobre el Ferro. Con todo eſſo me an dexado vn Nauio muy bueno en las manos con muy buena gente, la qual dize como murio el Draque en Nombre de Dios, y que va por general de la dicha armada Yngleſa el Coronel Quebraran, y por el poco lugar que ſe a dado no an podido tomar Agua, lenna, ni carne, y van de manera que no ſe como an de llegar a Ynglatierra. Entre la gente deuen de ſer ciento y quarenta, y quinze nobles capitanes de lo mejor de alli, y algunos ricos, ſegun ſe echa de ver en ellos. No ſe ofrece otra coſa: nueſtro ſennor guarde a vueſtra Merced, como puede, y yo deſſeo. De la Hauana. 30 de Março, de 1596. Annos.

The Spaniſh letter Engliſhed.

The Copie of a letter which Don Bernaldino Delgadillo de Auellaneda, Generall of the king of Spaine his armie, ſent vnto Doctor Peter Florez, Preſident of the contractation houſe for the Indies, wherein he maketh mention of the ſucceſſe of the Engliſh armie, after they departed from Pañama, whereof was Generall Francis Drake, and of his death.

FRom Cartagena I gaue relation vnto your Worſhip how I departed from the citie of Lisbone, in the purſuite of the Engliſh armie: although for the great haſte the Galeons could not be ſo well repaired as was needfull, and with foule weather one was loſt, and a Fly-boat was burnt. And hauing ſayled many dayes in purſuite of the enemie, vntill I arriued at Cartagena, and there taking the aduiſe of Don Pedro de Acunna, Gouernour of the citie, and Captaine generall (for wee had great neede of water, and to repaire our ſhippes) we ſtayed in that port: whereas I had intelligence by an Indian that Francis Drake died in Nombre de Dios, for very griefe that he had loſt ſo many Barkes and men, as was afterwards more manifeſtly knowen. Thus hauing giuen you a relation of all that happened hitherto, now I let you vnderſtand, that I left this Port the ſecond of March, and tooke our courſe towardes Hauana, where I thought to haue found the Engliſh fleete. And hauing vſed all the diligence poſſible, vpon Munday the eleuenth of the ſaid moneth, about two of the clocke in the afternoone, at the end of the Iſle of Pinos, in the entrance of Guaniguanico, I met with the Engliſh fleete, being fourteene very good ſhips: I drew towardes them although they had the winde of vs, and our Admirall who bore vp towards the winde, with other two ſhips beganne to draw neere them, and although we ſet thus vpon them, three times with all their ſhips, yet would they not ſet againe vpon vs, and thoſe of our men which were fartheſt off cryed to them amaine, being both within ſhot of artillerie, muſkets, and caliuers, whereby they receiued euident hurt by vs: They plyed their great ordinance according to their manner, and eſpecially their Viceadmirall, and ſeeing our reſolution how ſharpe we were bent towards them, they with all expedition and ſpeede poſſible prepared to flie away, hoyſing ſailes and leauing their boates for haſte in the ſea: but I followed them, with nine ſhips all the night following, and with foure more the next day, till I made them double the Cape of S. Antonie, and to take the courſe towards the Chanell of Bahama, according to the inſtructions from his Maieſtie. It little auailed vs to be ſeene, with leſſe number of ſhips, neither yet all the diligence we could vſe, could cauſe them to ſtay or come neere vs nor to ſhoot off one harquebuze or peece of artillerie, for they fled away as faſt as they could, and their ſhippes were halfe diminiſhed, and that the beſt part of them; the reſt they repaired in Puerto Bello, whereas they were about fortie dayes, and ſo by that meanes they were all well repayred; and our ſhippes were very foule, becauſe the time would not permit vs to trim them: I haue ſayled 2 moneths and a halfe in the Admirall, ſince we departed from Cartagena, we haue not repaired their pumpes nor clenſed them: and the ſame day I departed thence, there came vnto me a ſmall Pinneſſe in the like diſtreſſe: our Viceadmirall and the reſt of our ſhips haue the like impediment, but no great hinderance vnto vs, for ought I could perceiue by our enemies: It is manifeſt what aduantage they had of vs, and by no meanes was it poſſible for vs to take them, vnleſſe we could haue come to haue found them at an anker. Neuertheleſſe they left vs one good ſhippe behinde for our ſhare, well manned, which tolde me that Drake died in Nombre de Dios, and that they haue made for Generall of the Engliſh fleete the Colonel Quebraran: and alſo by meanes of the ſmall time, being ſtraightly followed by vs, they had no opportunitie to take either water, wood or fleſh, and they are alſo in ſuch bad caſe, that I know not how they will be able to arriue in England. The number of men we haue taken are about an hundred and fortie, and fifteene noble captaines of their beſt ſort, and ſome of them rich, as well may appeare by their behauiour: I haue no other thing to write at this time. Our Lord keepe you who beſt can, and as I deſire. From Hauana the 30 of March, 1596.

DON BERNALDINO DELGADILLO
DE AVELLANEDA.

THe Licenciat Don Iohn Bermudes of Figueroa Lieutenant of the Aſſiſtants of the citie of Siuill, and the Prouince thereof, who doth ſupply the office of the Aſſiſtant in the abſence of the Right honourable the Earle of Priego, giueth licence to Roderigo de Cabriera to imprint the Relation of the death of Francis Drake, which onely he may do for two moneths, and no other to imprint the ſame within the ſaid terme, vpon paine of tenne thouſand Marauedis for his Maieſties chamber. Giuen in Siuill the 15 of May, 1596.

The Licenciat Don Iohn Bermudes of Figueroa.

By his Aſſigne Gregorie Gutierez Notarie.

THis letter of the Generall Don Bernaldino ſent into Spaine declaring the death of Sir Francis Drake and their ſuppoſed victorie, was altogether receiued for an vndoubted trueth, and ſo pleaſing was this newes vnto the Spaniarde, that there was preſent commandement giuen to publiſh the letter in print, that all the people of Spaine might be pertakers of this common ioy: the which letter printed in Siuill, bearing date the 15 of May, 1596 came to the hands of Henrie Sauile Eſquire, who being employed in that ſeruice for the Weſt Indies, and Captaine of her Maieſties good ſhippe the Aduenture, vnder the conduct of ſir Francis Drake, and ſir Iohn Hawkins, hath cauſed the ſaid printed letter to be tranſlated into Engliſh. And that the impudencie of the Spaniſh Generall may the more plainely appeare, the ſayde Henrie Sauile doth anſwere particularly to euery vntrueth in the ſame letter contayned, as hereafter followeth.

The anſwere to the Spaniſh letter.

Firſt the Generall doth ſay, that Francis Drake died at Nombre de Dios, as he had intelligence by an Indian.

THe Generall ſent this newes into his countrey confirmed with his hand and ſeale of Armes: It is the firſt newes in his letter, and it was the beſt newes that he could ſend into Spaine. For it did eaſe the ſtomackes of the timorous Spaniards greatly to heare of the death of him, whoſe life was a ſcourge and continuall plague vnto them: But it was a point of great ſimplicitie, and ſcarcely beſeeming a Generall, to tie the credite of his report locally to any place vpon the report of a ſilly Indian ſlaue. For it had bene ſufficient to haue ſayd, that Francis Drake was certainly dead, without publiſhing the lie in print, by naming Nombre de Dios: for it is moſt certaine ſir Francis Drake died t'wixt the Iland of Eſcudo, and Puerto Bello: but the Generall being rauiſhed with the ſuddaine ioy of this report as a man that hath eſcaped a great danger of the enemie, doth breake out into an inſolent kinde of bragging of his valour at Sea, and heaping one lie vpon another, doth not ceaſe vntill he hath drawen them into ſequences, and ſo doth commende them vnto Peter the Doctor, as cenſor of his learned worke.

The Generals firſt newes, & his beſt newes is in part lying newes.

Secondly, The Generall doth write vnto the Doctor, that Francis Drake died for very griefe that he had loſt ſo many barkes and men.

A Thing very ſtrange that the Generall or the Indian, whom hee doth vouch for his lie, ſhould haue ſuch ſpeculation in the bodie of him whom they neuer ſaw, as to deliuer for truth vnto his countrie, the very cauſe or diſeaſe whereof hee died: and this ſecond report of his is more groſſe then the firſt. For admit the miſtaking of the place might be tollerable; notwithſtanding, this preciſe affirming the cauſe of his death doth manifeſtly prooue that the Generall doth make no conſcience to lie. And as concerning the loſſe of any Barkes or men in our Nauie, by the valour of the Spaniard before Sir Francis Drake his death, we had none (one ſmall Pinneſſe excepted) which we aſſuredly know was taken by chance, falling ſingle into a fleete of fiue Frigates (of which was Generall Don Pedro Telio) neere vnto the Iland of Dominica, and not by the valour Don Bernaldino: the which fiue Frigates of the kings afterwardes had but ill ſucceſſe, for one of them we burnt in the harbour of S. Iuan de Puerto rico, and one other was ſunke in the ſame harbour, and the other three were burnt amongſt many other ſhippes at the taking of Cadiz. This I thinke in wiſe mens iudgements, will ſeeme a ſilly cauſe to make a man ſorrowe to death. For true it is, ſir Francis Drake died of the fluxe which hee had growen vpon him eight dayes before his death, and yeelded vp his ſpirit like a Chriſtian to his creatour quietly in his cabbin. And when the Generall ſhall ſuruey his loſſe, he ſhall finde it more then the loſſe of the Engliſh, and the moſt of his, deſtroyed by the bullet: but the death of Sir Francis Drake was of ſo great comfort vnto the Spaniard, that it was thought to be a ſufficient amendes, although their whole fleete had beene vtterly loſt.

Don Bernaldino doth lie impudently.

The ſucceſſe of the kings fiue Frigats.

The certaine cauſe whereof ſir Francis Drake died.

Thirdly, the Generall doth ſay of his owne credite, and not by intelligence from any Indian or other, that on the eleuenth of March laſt he met the Engliſh fleete at the Ile of Pinos, being fourteene good ſhippes: who although they had the winde of him, yet he ſet vpon them three times with all their ſhippes: but the Engliſh fleete fled, and refuſed to fight, ſhooting now and then a ſhot, but eſpecially the Viceadmirall.

This third lie of the Generall Don Bernaldino Delgadillo de Auellaneda (whoſe name for the prolixitie thereof may be drawen ſomewhat neere the length of a cable) hath no colour of protection, but it hath a iuſt proportion in meaſure to the lies of olde Bernardino de Mendoça his countreyman, concerning the ouerthrowe of hir Maieſties Nauie in the yeere one thouſand fiue hundred eightie and eight. For except Don Bernaldino the Generall did purpoſe to winne the whetſtone from Don Bernardino de Mendoça the olde Spaniſh lyer; I cannot coniecture why he ſhould write to his countrey for a truth, that he chaſed the Engliſh Nauie with nine ſhippes, and did three ſeuerall times giue the onſet to the Engliſh fleete, who being fourteene good ſhippes (as he ſaith) did flie and refuſe to fight; conſidering that the Spaniſh Viceadmirall (if he be liuing) and many other, can witneſſe the contrarie: who fighting like a true valiant man, departed from the fight with a torne and battered ſhippe to ſaue her from ſinking. Neither can I imagine that there is any one in the Spaniſh fleete (Don Bernaldino excepted) that will ſay they were leſſe then twentie ſayle of ſhippes when they met the Engliſh fleete: and the Spaniſh Nauie can witneſſe that they receiued ſuch ſtore of bullets from the Engliſh fleete, that they were glad to depart, and in deſpight of them the Engliſh nauie did holde their determined courſe: And taking a viewe of the Spaniſh fleete the next day, their number was not aboue thirteene ſhips, which did argue that they were either ſunke or fled to harbour to ſaue themſelues.

A parie of Spaniſh liers.

The Spaniſh Viceadmirall a man of valour.

The number of Spaniſh ſhips after the fight.

Fourthly, the General ſaith, that the Engliſh fleete fled away, and left their *oares for haſt behind them in the ſea.

* The tranſlation of the Spaniſh word Lanchas is here miſtaken.

IT was ſtrange that they ſhould leaue behinde them oares in the ſea, ſithence there was not in the Engliſh fleete either Galley or Galliaſſe, which required the vſe of oares: as for the oares of their ſhip-boates and other ſuch ſmall veſſels, they had ſtowed them aboord their ſhippes, and were no impediment vnto them, but moſt neceſſarie for them to vſe, and therefore not likely they would caſt them ouerboord: But it is more likely, that the Generall fell into ſome pleaſant dreame at Sea, wherein he did ſee a falſe apparition of victorie againſt the Engliſh, and for lacke of matter did ſet this downe in his letter for newes to his countrey: It is ſinne to belie the Deuill, and therefore the Generall ſhall haue his right: the letter is ſo well contriued, and yet with no great eloquence, but with ſuch art, that there are not many more lines, then there are lies, which ſhewed that there are wonderfull and extraordinarie gifts in the Generall: but I am perſwaded if Don Bernaldino had thought that his letter ſhould haue beene printed, he would haue omitted many things conteined in the letter: for the Doctor did vſe him ſomewhat hardly in ſhewing the letter openly, and more in ſuffering it to bee printed: for friendes may like good fellowes ſend lies one to the other for recreation, and feed their friends with ſome ſmall taſte thereof, ſo it be kept cloſe, without danger to incurre the title of a lying Generall: But as the matter is now handled through the ſimplicitie of the Doctor, I cannot ſee but the Generall Don Bernaldino is like to carrie the title equally twixt both his ſhoulders.

This lie was made in the Generals own forge.

Fiftly, the Generall doth ſay in his printed letter, that notwithſtanding all the diligence he could vſe, he could not cauſe the Engliſh fleete to ſtay nor come neere them, nor diſcharge one harquebuze or peece of artillerie, but fled away as faſt as they could.

And this lie alſo he doth not receiue by intelligence from any other, but himſelfe was an eye-witneſſe in the action, which made him bold to ſende this with the reſt into his countrey for current newes: but herein Don Bernaldino was more bolde then wiſe, for the torne and battered ſides of his Galeons, being compared with her Maieſties ſhippes, and others that ſerued in that fight, doe declare, that his ſhips receiued at leaſt two bullets for one. Neither can it be concealed but his owne countreymen (if any do fauour truth) may eaſily ſee the loſſe, and late reparations, done vnto the kings fleete, ſithence they did encounter with the Engliſh Nauie, whenſoeuer they that remaine ſhall arriue in Spaine. But the Generall ſeemeth to be a very good proficient in his profeſſion, and wareth ſomewhat bold, treading the true ſteps of olde Bernardino de Mendoça: and yet Mendoça was ſomewhat more warie in his lies, for he had ſometime the colour of intelligence to ſhadowe them: but the Generall growing from boldneſſe to impudencie maketh no ſcruple to ſay, that the Engliſh Nauie fled as faſt as they could without diſcharging any harquebuze or peece of artillerie, when as the battered ſides of his ſhips doe returne the lie to his face: For in this conflict Don Bernaldino did behaue himſelfe ſo valiantly, that he was alwayes fartheſt off in the fight, and had ſo great care of his owne perſon, that he ſtoode cleare from the danger of musket or any ſmall ſhot, and durſt not approch; whereas our Generall was the formoſt, and ſo helde his place, vntill by order of fight other ſhippes were to haue their turnes, according to his former direction: who wiſely and politikely had ſo ordered his vangarde, and rereward, that as the manner of it was altogether ſtrange to the Spaniarde, ſo might they haue bene without all hope of victorie, if their Generall had bene a man of any iudgement in ſea-fights: I knowe no reaſon why the Engliſh Nauie ſhould flie from him; for the Spaniarde may put all the gaine in his eye that euer he did winne from the Engliſh: Peraduenture ſome ſilly nouice of our countrey meeting the Generall in Spaine, and hearing a repetition of ſo many ſillables in one name, as Don Bernaldino Delgadillo de Auellaneda, might thinke them to be wordes of coniuration, and for feare of rayſing a ſpirit, might flie from him as from the Deuill: or ſome ſimple Indian ſlaue hearing the like repetition of his long and tedious name, might ſuppoſe it to be an armie of Spaniards, and for feare runne away: but the commanders and captaines of the Engliſh Nauie were men of ſuch reſolution, that no Spaniſh bragges could diſmay them (for they haue often met them with their Pikes in their Spaniſh beardes) nor the countenance of Don Bernaldino quaile them, although hee were acowtred in his gilt leather buſkins, and his Toledo rapier.

The torn ſides of the Spaniſh ſhips doe condemne Don Bernaldino of lying.

The order of the Engliſh Nauie.

The Spaniard cannot bragge of his gaine.

Spaniſh brags are of no value with the Engliſh.

Sixtly, the Generall ſaith in his letter, that notwithſtanding their flying away ſo faſt, the Engliſh left them one good ſhip well manned, who tolde him that Drake dyed in Nombre de Dios: in which ſhip were one hundred and fortie men, and fifteene noble captaines of the beſt ſort.

The Generall Don Bernaldino, like a reſolute Spaniarde hauing already gone ouer his ſhooes, maketh no danger to wade ouer his bootes alſo: and as he hath begunne, ſo hee doth conclude. I maruaile that he did not in writing his diſcourſe remember this old ſaying: that is, A liar ought to haue a good memorie: It were much better for him in mine opinion to reuoke the teſtimonie which he ſaith he had from the Engliſhmen, concerning Sir Francis Drake his death at Nombre de Dios, and ſtand to the intelligence receiued from the ſilly Indian ſlaue, as it appeareth in his firſt lie: for without all doubt there is no Engliſh man that will ſay (if he haue his right ſenſes) that he dyed at Nombre de Dios, for they all knowe the contrarie: neither can the General auouch that he receiued intelligence from any Engliſh man, that after the death of Sir Francis Drake they did elect for Generall Colonel Quebraran (as he doth moſt falſely affirme in the latter ende of his vaine and friuolous letter) ſeeing that this name was ſtrange & vnknowen to any in the Engliſh Nauie. Neither do I imagine that any of thoſe which the Generall ſaith he hath taken, were ſo forgetfull, as not to remember their Generals name. But without all doubt this addition of ſo new and ſtrange a name to the Engliſh Generall, doth prooue that Don Bernaldino is not vnfurniſhed of a forge and ſtorehouſe of lies, from whence as frõ an euerflowing fountaine, he ſendeth forth lies of al ſorts ſufficient for his own ſtore, Don Bernaldino his rare gift in coyning a new and ſtrange name.

The ſchoolemē of modeſty doe vſe this kind of reprehenſion, when they doe thinke the author to erre.

The difference twixt Quebraran and Baskeruill.

The Generall maketh great brags in taking a diſtreſſed ſhip, which is ſuppoſed not to ſtrike one blow.

The 15 noble Captaines cōtrary to the Generals lying occupation, wil proue but three.

The firſt diſcouery of the Generals printed letter.

and great plentie to furniſh his friends: the Generall was much beholding to his godfathers who gaue him the name Bernaldino, which we in Engliſh doe take to be plaine Barnard, which name hath as it were a kinde of priuilege from being ſharpely reprehended, when the partie is thought to erre: for it is a common ſaying amongſt the ſchoolemen that Bernardus non videt omnia, viz. Barnard ſeeth not all things, (when he doth diſſent from their opinions) the which fauour we could be content to yeeld to Bernaldino for the name ſake, if he were not taken with ſo many manifeſt and impudent lies: neither doe I thinke that Sennor Bernaldino will ſay, that he ſawe all that he hath written, be it ſpoken in councell for ſhaming the Generall: for is there any man ſo voide of reaſon as to thinke, that any Engliſhman being demanded of his Generals name, would write or ſpeake Quebraran for Baskeruil. So much difference there is in the ſound of the ſillables, as there is no affinitie at all, or likelihood of truth. But ſuch are the Generals rare gifts, (be it ſpoken to his ſmall prayſe) that we Engliſhmen muſt of force confeſſe, that the Generall hath giuen a proud onſet to carrie the whetſtone from Sennor Bernardino de Mendoça: neither will the hundred and fortie men and fifteene noble Captaines (which he ſaith he did take, of whom he might haue bene rightly informed of their Generals name) acquit him of lying forgerie, for giuing the name of Quebraran to the Engliſh Generall. As for the good ſhippe well manned, which he ſaith the Engliſh left them after the fight, I am perſwaded he hath no man to witneſſe that lie, for the ſhip was ſeparated by weather from the Engliſh fleete in the night, thirteene dayes before the fight with the Spaniſh Nauie, and neuer to any mans knowledge came more in ſight of the Engliſh fleete. If the Spaniſh ſhip by chance did take the ſaide well manned ſhip (as they call her) I doubt not but they haue the ſhip, the hundred and forty men, and the fifteene noble Captaines to ſhew: But euermore I geſſe the Spaniſh reckoning will fall ſhort when it is examined, for the fifteene noble Captaines will prooue (as I take it) but three, whoſe loſſe I grieue to thinke on: Neither did the Spaniards gaine them by valour, or we looſe or leaue them for cowardiſe, as moſt vntruely this bragging lier hath certified. But the Generall like a prouident man, to make his fame and credite the greater with his Prince and country, taketh vpon him (amongſt other his miracles performed before the Engliſh fleete) by way of amplification to make ſmall matters ſeeme great, as a little ſhooe to ſerue a great foote, and finding that it can hardly be brought to paſſe, he doth ſo ſtretch the leather with his teeth that it is readie to breake: and yet notwithſtanding al this will not ſerue his purpoſe; for the printing of the letter doth marre the play, and bringeth ſuch matter in queſtion, as the Generall doth wiſh might be concealed, and were he not of ſo drie and cholerick a complexion, as commonly Spaniards are, he would bluſh for very ſhame in publiſhing ſo impudently ſuch manifeſt vntruthes. For ſithence his meeting with the Engliſh fleete at the Ile of Pinos, there hath bene by the worthie Engliſh Generals an honourable expedition from England into the Continent of Spaine, where amongſt other exploites hauing taken the citie of Cadiz, in the ſacke thereof was found ſome of Don Bernaldino his printed letters: which comming to the handes of a captaine that ſerued in Sir Francis Drakes laſt voyage to the Weſt Indies, he hath thought very fit (in regard of the ſlanders to the Engliſh Nauie contained in the ſaide letter) to quote the errors, that the trueth onely may appeare, to all ſuch as haue a deſire to be rightly informed of ſuch accidents as befell them in this late voyage to the Weſt Indies: and this may ſuffiſe to ſhew Don Bernaldino Delgadillo de Auellaneda his great iudgement in amplyfying ſmall matters, or of nothing to make in ſhewe ſomewhat. And now hauing thus farre informed you of the trueth in reproofe of the ſlanderous, falſe, and vntrue reports of this glorious lying Generall, with a true diſproofe to ſome of the groſſeſt of his lies, I will leaue him with the reſt of his lying letter, and the circumſtances therein contained to your cenſures: who in diſcretion may eaſily diſcerne the ſame: And haue here following plainely and truely ſet downe the courſe and order of our whole fight after we met.

The meeting of our Engliſh Nauie and the Spaniſh fleete, and the order of our encounter.

The firſt diſcouery of the Spaniſh fleete.

MUnday the firſt of March, according to our computation, wee deſcryed the Iland of Pinos, where haling in for the Weſterne part thereof, thinking there to haue watered, being within foure leagues off it Southerly, we ſent in three of our Pinneſſes to diſcouer the harbour, and to ſound afore vs, about one of the clocke in the afternoone; the ſame day we diſcouered a fleete of twentie ſailes, and deeming them to be the Spaniſh fleete, we kept our looſe to get the winde, but their Viceadmirall with diuers other ſhips went about to cut off our Pinneſſes; ſo that our Generall with ſome other of our ſhippes, was forced to tacke about vpon the larbourd tacke, and ſo ranne in towardes the lande keeping the winde, ſo as we recouered our Pinneſſes; which forced the enemies ſhippes to tacke about, and to take the aide of their fleete, and being come neere vnto them they ſhot at vs; we ſtill approched, hauing our cloſe fights vp, our flags, enſignes and ſtreamers diſplayed, our men orderly placed in each quarter, but forbare our fight vntill our Generall beganne, and gaue vs warning to come in and fight, by ſhooting off a great peece, according to his former directions: ſo being within muſket ſhot, the Viceadmirall of the Spaniſh fleete came neereſt vnto vs, to whom our Viceadmirall Iohn Traughton Captaine of the Elizabeth Bonaduenture gaue fight, betwixt whom there was the greateſt voley of ſmall ſhot changed that lightly hath bene heard at Sea, which continued a long halfe houre. In which time the Spaniſh fleete came in to fight. Our Generall ſir Thomas Baskeruill being in the Garland (whereof Humphrey Reignolds was Captaine, being the next ſhippe vnto the Elizabeth Bonaduenture) bare vp to the enemie, playing with his great ordinance hotly vntill he came within muſket ſhot. Ionas Bodenham Captaine of the Defiance, and Henrie Sauile Captaine of the Aduenture, came likewiſe in to fight with them. After the Garland being within muſket ſhot played her part, and made good fight for the ſpace of an houre. The Defiance bare vp likewiſe and had her turne: after came the Aduenture againe within muſket ſhot, who hauing changed many a great bullet with them before, renewed his fight,& continued it an houre with ſmall ſhot. Then came Thomas Drake Captaine of the Hope, who laſt of all had his turne. Thus had all the Queenes ſhippes their courſe: The marchants ſhips with other ſmall veſſels being without the Queenes ſhips, ſhot when they ſaw opportunitie. After the enemie finding no good to be done (being well beaten) fell from vs, the Aduenture playing vpon them with her great ordinance, made three of the laſt ſhot at them: their Viceadmirall with diuers others of their ſhips, were ſo beaten that they left off the fight, and were forced to lie in the winde, for that they durſt not lie of either boord by reaſon of their many and great leakes, which they had receiued by our great ſhot. The Generall with the reſt of their fleete tacking about, fell in our wake, thinking to get the winde, which in the beginning wee ſought to hinder. But our Generall ſeeing that in holding the winde we ſhould ſhoot our ſelues into the bay, gaue them the winde. All that night they kept themſelues vpon our brode ſide, notwithſtanding our Admiral carried his creſſet-light all night, hauing great care of our ſmalleſt ſhippes. This fight continued about foure houres till it was neere night, in the which fight, thankes be to God, there were ſlaine ſo few perſons of our Engliſh fleete, as I thinke the like conflict hath not bene performed with ſo little loſſe of men: What harme befell the Spaniards in their fleete I leaue to your iudgements. Yet our eyes can witneſſe their ſhips were ſore beaten and raked thorough, whereby there was ſuch falling backe and lying by the lee to ſtoppe their leakes, as ſome of them were driuen to haſte away, and rather to runne on ſhore to ſaue themſelues then ſinke in the Sea: beſides within two houres after our fight with them, we ſawe one of their great ſhippes on fire which burnt into the Sea, and all the ſterne of another of their ſhips blowen vp: And in the morning a ſhippe of our fleete was runne ſo neere the land, that to double the Cape de los Corrientes he muſt of neceſſitie tacke about and fall in the wake of the enemie, which cauſed our Generall in the Garland and the Defiance to tacke about; which two ſhips forced the three ſhips of the enemies (which were put foorth to take our ſhippe, or elſe to cauſe her runne on ground) to returne to their fleete to ſaue themſelues, hoyſing all their ſayles for haſte: This morning they were faire by vs hauing the winde of vs, being but thirteene ſayle of their twentie to be ſeene: then we ſtroke our toppe ſayles thinking to haue fought with them againe, which they perceiuing tacked about from vs, and after that neuer durſt nor would come neere vs: What became of the reſt of their fleete wee knowe not, but true it was that they were in great diſtreſſe mightily beaten and torne, by hauing receiued many bullets from vs. All this day wee had ſight of them, but they ſhewed little will to fight or come neere vs, ſo we keeping our courſe Weſt, and by North, about ſixe of the clocke at night loſt the ſight of them. And this is a true diſcourſe of our fight with the Spaniſh fleete. The which the author hereof will iuſtifie with the aduenture of his life, againſt any Spaniarde ſeruing in that action, that ſhall contradict the ſame.

The incounter betwixt the Engliſh and the Spaniſh ſhips.

The Spaniſh Viceadmirall can witneſſe, what ſucceſſe they had in this fight.

The Engliſh Admirall carried his Creſſet light, notwithſtanding the enemie was vpon his broad ſide.

The Engliſh receiued little loſſe in this conflict.

The remainder of the Spaniſh fleete were but thirteene ſayles.

HENRY SAVILE.

Thomas Baskeruil knight, his approbation to the former twofold diſcourſe of Captaine Sauile.

I Thomas Baskeruill knight, Generall of her Maieſties late Indian armada in the late conflict had betweene the Spaniſh fleete and vs, hauing peruſed the Spaniſh letter written by Don Bernaldino Delgadillo de Auellaneda, Generall of the king of Spaines Nauie, and alſo hauing peruſed captaine Henrie Sauile his anſweres vnto the ſixe exceptions in the Generals letter, with his diſcourſe of the manner of our fight with the Spaniſh fleete, doe ſay that the ſaid Henrie Sauile hath anſwered the letter, and ſet downe the order of the fight ſincerely according to truth, for teſtimonie of which I haue hereunto ſet my hand.

And if Don Bernaldino Delgadillo de Auellaneda the Generall ſhall take any exceptions to this my approbation, or ſtand in the iuſtification of his lying letter written to Doctor Peter Florez, Preſident of the Contractation houſe for the Indies, and by him for Bernaldinos glorie lately put in print: I then ſay that he falſely lyed, and that I will maintaine againſt him with whatſoeuer armes he ſhall make choyce of. And becauſe the kingdomes wherein we abide are enemies (by reaſon of which there is no meanes in either of them, to maintaine that I haue written) let him make choiſe of any indifferent kingdome of equall diſtance from either realme, and I will there be readie to maintaine as much as I haue written: But if by my imployments into France I be ſo ſtayed by her Maieſties commandements, that I cannot out of that realme meete him in any other, I cannot ſee why he ſhould take any exception to that, conſidering the equalitie of the place, and that the Armies of both our Princes be there reſident.

THOMAS BASKERVILE.

A true relation of the voyage vndertaken by Sir Anthony Sherley Knight in Anno 1596. intended for the Ile of San Tomé, but performed to S. Iago, Dominica, Margarita, along the coaſt of Tierra firma, to the Ile of Iamaica, the bay of the Honduras, 30 leagues vp Rio Dolce, and homewarde by Newfoundland. With the memorable exploytes atchieued in all this voyage.

WE departed from Hampton the 23 of Aprill with nine ſhips and a gallie. The Beuice Admirall being 300 tunnes, the Galeon Viceadmirall being 240 tunnes. The George Rereadmirall being 160 tunnes. The Archangel being 250 tunnes. The Swanne 200 tunnes, the George Noble being 140 tunnes, the Wolfe 70 tunnes, the Mermayde 120 tunnes, the Little Iohn 40 tunnes the Galley and a Pinneſſe. All which ſhips we ſufficiently victualled and furniſhed for ten monethes, with all neceſſaries fit for the voyage. They were alſo manned with ſouldiers and ſaylers, exceeding well appointed with all furniture neceſſarie for the intended purpoſe of our Generall to the full number of 900. ratably & orderly diſtributed into euery ſhip. We arriued at Plimmouth the 29 of Aprill, where wee found the Right honourable Earle of Eſſex readie for the attempt of his Cadiz Action, with whom our Generall left three ſhips and 500 ſouldiers well victualed and furniſhed. So the 21 of May we departed from Plimmouth with the Beuice, the Gallion, the George, the George Noble, the Wolfe and the Galley and Pinneſſe, determining our voyage for the Ile of S. Tomé. But if our whole force had remayned with vs our Generals purpoſe was to haue firſt ſackt the Madera Ile, and ſo to haue proceeded for S. Tomé. The 27 of May we arriued vpon the coaſt of Spaine, coaſting all the ſhore, hoping to meete with ſome of the kings ſhips. From thence we paſt in ſight of the coaſt of Barbary, and came to Maſagant, within ſhot of the Fort, which our Generall reported to be an excellent fortification, where the Spaniard is in ſtrong garriſon. And bending our courſe for the Canarie Iles there purpoſing to water, our galley loſt her rudder; ſo our Generall directed the George Noble to goe for the Ile Mogador, there to repaire the Gallies wants. Betweene which place and the Canarie Iles we tooke a fly-bote of two hundred tunnes bound for Braſill, hauing nothing aboord her but ſome ſmall portion of victuals for their reliefe. The Captaine of this Flybote tooke vpon him to be a perfect Pilot of S. Tomé, and willingly conſented to ſtay with vs, being a Fleming. Hauing watered at the Canaries, by the counſell of this Fleming we ſhaped our courſe for the Iles of Cape Verde, he aſſuring vs that we ſhould there meet the fleete of Saint Tomé, for the yeere was ſo farre paſt, that we knewe they were all departed from S. Tomé.

The Fort of Maſagant.

A Flieboat taken.

The firſt of July we fell with the Iſle Maio, where wee ſaw ſmall hope of any fleete to bee expected, & therefore departed for Cape Verde, the appointed place for the George noble to meete vs: where we arriued the fift of July, and there found him. And ſo inſtantly we proceeded for our voyage, becauſe the yeere was farre ſpent. At this place moſt vnfortunately our Generall fell exceeding ſicke, and we wanting water were enforced to goe with a place named Peſcadores in 10 degrees of North latitude, where we had many ſkirmiſhes with the barbarous Negros. Our Generall now hopeleſſe of life, and we all diſmayed and comfortleſſe through that his exceeding extremity, hauing his memory very perfit, he called all his Captaines, Maſters, and officers vnto him, vnto whom he made a very pithie and briefe ſpeech, tending to this purpoſe: That as we were Chriſtians and all baptiſed and bred vp vnder one and the true faith, ſo wee ſhould liue together like Chriſtians in the feare and ſeruice of God: And as we were the ſubiects of our moſt excellent ſouereigne, and had vowed obedience vnto her: ſo we ſhould tend all our courſes to the aduancement of her dignity, and the good of our countrey, and not to enter into any baſe or vnfit actions. And becauſe we came for his loue into this action that for his ſake we would ſo loue together as if himſelfe were ſtill liuing with vs, and that we would follow (as our chiefe commander) him, vnto whom vnder his hand he would giue commiſſion to ſucceede himſelfe: all which with ſolemne proteſtation we granted to obey. Then for that the yeere was paſt, and finding the coſt of Guynea moſt tempeſtuous, hee ſaw in reaſon that the bay of Æthiopia would be our vtter ouerthrow, and infect vs all to death: whereupon he aduiſed vs to be reſpectiue of our ſelues, and to diuert our purpoſe from S. Tomé, either for Braſil or the Weſt India, yeelding many reaſons that it was our beſt courſe: but we all with one voice deſired to proceede for S. Tomé. And ſo departing from this contagious filthy place, we directed our courſe for S. Tomé, but could by no means double the ſholds of Madrabomba, but very dangerouſly ran into ſhold water, ſtill hoping of the beſt. In fine we were enforced to beare vp & take ſome other courſe; for the time waſted, our men fell ſicke, and the coaſt was contagious alwayes raging & tempeſtuous. The water falling from the heauens did ſtinke, and did in 6 houres turne into maggots where it fell, either among our clothes, or in wads of Ocombe.

The Iſle of Mayo.

A moſt contagious & filthy place.

So by a general conſent it was held to be our beſt courſe to goe for the Weſt India; & ſo much the rather, becauſe we had good pilots for that place, who vndertooke more then was after performed. So we bent our courſe for the Iſles of Cape Verde, & arriuing at the Iſle of S. Iago the 30 of Auguſt, we preſently landed at Praia, where we found a ſmal barke in the rode laden with wine and meale.

After we were departed from this vile coaſt of Guyny our General to our great comforts began to recouer ſtrength; ſo that being now at Praia, he was able to land with vs. In our landing the people made a ſhew of great reſiſtance, but we entred the towne without hindrance, being a very pretie towne, hauing a ſmall fort in it, with 6 or 8 caſt pieces.

The towne of Praya vpon the Iſle of S. Iago taken.

Being here on ſhore, and finding nothing left in the towne, diuers of our company were very importunate with our Generall, that he would go to the citie of S. Iago being 6 miles off: through their importunitie he yeelded conſent, and ſo we marched towards the citie with 280 ſouldiers. As we paſſed by the Negros and herdſmen, they would crie vnto vs Guarda S. Iago. That night we loſt our way, & lay vnder a hedge. The next morning the Ordinance of S. Iago was ſhot off to giue vs notice where the towne was: ſo wee marched towards it at the breake of the day. The countrey then being all ſpred ouer with people made ſhew of feare only to draw vs into the town: but we farther marched with our colours flying by the drumme. The gentelmen would come gallopping by vs and viewing vs very much. But when we came in ſight of the towne, we could ſee no way how to get into it, but by one little path downe a very ſteepe hill, only man by man to go downe. The ſtrength and ſituation of this towne was ſufficient to haue danted a man of very good courage, for it ſtandeth between two ſteepe cliffes ſtrongly houſed, & three exceeding good forts commanding the whole, the chiefeſt and beſt ſtanding vpon the top of the hill right ouer the towne: ſo that from thence with muſkets they command euery ſtreete, the other 2 forts ſtanding by the waters ſide, all three commanding the rode, and theſe two euery ſtreete in the towne. Upon the front of the towne the ſea beateth, the reſt ſtandeth betweene two mighty cliffes, not acceſſible but by one ſmall path, by which wee were enforced to goe. Our Generall ſeeing himſelfe thus ſtraighted, and perceiuing the drift of the Spaniard was to draw him into this trench, and knowing wel that he could not returne as we came, by reaſon of many ſtraights and aduantageable places, with an excellent reſolution (like vnto himſelfe) cryed out, all courage my hearts: aſſure your ſelues that the deuice of the Spaniard ſhall ſerue our turne this day: for they will ſuffer vs quietly to paſſe downe into their ſuppoſed trappe, and then will purſue vs, then which nothing can can happen better. The day is ours now ſhew your ſelues as I know you will: and ſo preſently we deſcended into the trench. And being downe the enemy purſued with a mightie crie, and all the cliffes on both ſides were beſet full of men; ſhot, and ſtones we wanted none from them on euery ſide in great plenty; for this naturall trench was not halfe a muſket ſhot ouer. Thoſe that attempted our Rereward by our Generals policie were ſo receiued that they made a ſtand, and neuer more came neere vs. We had nowe halfe a mile to the towne, into the which when wee came, wee were receiued with the ſtreetes full of ſouldiers, who ioyned with vs at the puſh of the pike. But their captaine and diuers of them being ſlaine (feare poſſeſſing them) they fled: and our Generall purſuing with ſuch furious ſpeede, did ſo diſmay them that they fled the towne, and the third of Auguſt we poſſeſſed both the lower forts.

The towne of S. Iago taken by Sir Anthony Sherley.

Being now maſters of the towne, we preſently by the Generals direction (whoſe ſkill, ſpirit, and diligence can neuer haue ſufficient commendation) baricadoed vp all the ſtreets, and brought our ſelues into a very conuenient ſtrength. After we had bene ſixe houres in the towne the Portugals ſtill comming in great multitudes to the vpper fort, began to ſally downe vpon vs, and to aſſault vs at euery baricado: ſo that in the firſt aſſault they ſlew and wounded eighty of our men, to our very great weakening. But they had ſmall cauſe of triumph, for their loſſe was thriſe more then ours: but they ſtill proſecuted their aſſault, not giuing vs time either to ſleepe or eate, ſo that we were in exceeding extremitie; for their forces did dayly increaſe to the number of three thouſand perſons: but we dayly loſt of our poore number. Whileſt we were thus keeping the towne, our ſhips came about vnto vs, who receiued many dangerous ſhot from the vpper caſtle. Our Generall finding himſelfe thus ſtreighted, & diſcreetely looking into the policie and ſtrength of the enemy, and ſcarſe able to defend any one aſſault more, ſent to the forts and to his ſhips that about ten of the clocke in the darke of the night they ſhould ſhoote at the vpper fort with all poſſible diligence, and ſend all the boates aſhore, which was accordingly perfourmed. And wee likewiſe keeping a tumult in the towne, the enemie ſuppoſing that our purpoſe was to aſſault the vpper fort, (which God knowes was moſt impregnable for vs) retyred from their plotted purpoſe for the defence thereof. So we in a ſouldierlike order with very good ſafety departed the towne, although the Portugals hauing eſpied our Generals policie came very furiouſly vpon the backe of vs, after we had kept it two dayes and two nights.

Iſla del Fuego.

In the rode of S. Iago we tooke a ſhip with wine and cloth, which did greatly refreſh our men. From hence we ſayled to an Iſle called Fuego, being a very ſmall Iſle, with a very high hill in the midſt of it, which continually burneth: this Iſle is inuincible by nature, high cliffed round about, yet by diligent ſearch we found a ſmall path where wee landed our men with exceeding much difficulty, and ſo were maſters of the Iſle the eleuenth of September, where wee tooke in water, but the Iſle yeelded vs nothing but miſerable infection. One night wee had a ſhowre of aſhes which fell ſo thicke into our ſhips from that burning hill of Fuego, that you might write your name with your finger vpon the vpper decke.

Departing from this place the twentieth of September, we ſhaped our courſe for Dominica an Iſle in the Weſt India: but before we came thither our men fell generally downe, ſo that the hole could not relieue the ſicke, the diſeaſe was ſo vile that men grew lothſome vnto themſelues, franticke and deſperately rauing, among whom our good Generals part was not the leaſt; for his diſeaſe was vehement, the griefe of his mind, the lamentation of his men, and the loſſe of thoſe whom he loued were to him torments more then durable: all which with patience and humilitie in prayer he humbled himſelfe vnto. But had not his mind bene inuincible and his deſires aboue the ordinary courſe of men, it had bene impoſſible that life ſhould now haue reſted in him: but God (I hope) hath preſerued him to ſome exceeding good purpoſe.

Dominica.
Two excellent hote bathes.

Arriuing at Dominica the ſeuenteenth of October, with all our men ſicke and feeble, wee found there two hote bathes, wherein our weake men waſhing themſelues were greatly comforted: and the Indians of this place vſed vs with great kindneſſe, ſo that we were all perfectly well before we departed from this place. For here we ſtayed vntill the 25 of Nouember. From Dominica we ſayled to Margarita, betweene the Iſle and the maine, thinking to meete with the perle dredgers, but wee found them not. And comming to the point of Araia in the road of Cumaná, we ſawe a Flemiſh ſhip riding; the marchant and men whereof came aboord vs, and brought with them my lord Admirals paſſe. By which meanes our General would in no ſort meddle with them, yet they were very rich. Departing thence by Cape Coadera, going for Cape de la Vela at the Iſle Buen aire our Fliboat was caſt away, & ſome of the men loſt, but the moſt part ſaued. Coaſting all the ſhore from Cape de la Vela, being bound for S. Martha, we tooke a ſmall frigat laden with Guiny corne, the eleuenth of September: ſhe had in her money to the valew of 500 pound, linnenlinnen cloth and China ſilke, all which our General beſtowed vpon his company to comfort them after their long ſuſtained miſeries: Out of which frigat we had 2 good pilots for thoſe coaſts: for our pilot, that promiſed many things before we came thither, was now abſent in the Woolfe, who, we thinke, did wilfully looſe vs. Arriuing at S. Martha, two leagues Weſt from the towne in a faire bay, we landed the 12 of September, & ſo marched to the towne being often times encountred by the way, and in a narrow way at our deſcent downe a hill, they had placed two caſt pieces of braſſe, which we recouered, and ſo entred the towne, the enemie flying before vs. While we abode in this towne, there came one Don Martin de Caſtilla, a gentleman of good education and a very great traueller, who knew the whole ſtate of the Weſt India, Malucos, & Philippinas: he had bene in China, and made many relations to our Generall, his purpoſe was to ſaue the towne from burning, wherein he preuailed, but ranſome I know of none we had: for this gentleman made many great proteſtations of great pouerty to be in that place. So wee departed, onely taking their ordinance, and a priſoner loſt there by ſir Francis Drake, with ſome reliefe of victuals. Hauing ſtayed there al the time of Chriſtmas, we departed thence on Newyeres day, with termes of great content to our General in the Spaniards great ſubmiſſion vnto him, for they were now within a league of vs with 700 ſouldiers. And being challenged by him to defend their towne like men of worth, they did notwithſtāding intreat fauour with great humilitie. Whileſt we were at S. Martha, the Wolfe came againe vnto vs: ſo wee ſhaped our courſe for Iamaica, and miſſing the rode, were conſtrained to ſaile round about the Iſle, a thing not before done. In this place the Wolfe abſolutely againe forſooke vs with the ſmal barke that we tooke at S. Iago, and returned for England with hard newes of our ruine, but by Gods fauourable help wee arriued in the road of Iamaica the 29 of January, which is very dangerous to enter by reaſon of the ſholds and rocks that lie before it. Here we landed and marched 6 miles into the countrey, where the towne ſtandeth; the people all on horſebacke made ſhew of great matters, but did nothing. Now being maſters of the towne and whole Iſle, the people ſubmitted themſelues to our Generals mercy: and here they prouided for vs great ſtore of dried beefe, and Caſſaui meale, a baſe food, yet the beſt that the countrey yeeldeth, to continue at ſea. This Iſle is a marueilous fertil Iſle, & is as a garden or ſtore houſe for diuers parts of the maine. It is full of plaine champion ground, which in the reſt of the Indies we haue not ſeene: it aboundeth with beeues and Caſſaui, beſides moſt pleaſant fruits of diuers ſorts. We haue not found in the Indies a more pleaſant and holſome place. During the time that we remained in this Iſle the captaine of the Iſle came often aboord vs, we hauing pledges for the ſecurity of their promiſe. They were in fine at our Generals deuotion, to diſpoſe of al things, and in all things as he pleaſed, ſo that now we were as one people & in one peace together. Being almoſt ready to depart, M. captaine Parker of Plimmouth came into the rode in his ſhips boat the ſecond of March, with whom our Generall conſorted to goe for the bay of Honduras, where by his perſwaſion we had great hope of a very good voyage. And departing frō Iamaica the 6 of March, we ſailed to Cape de Corrientes in Cuba, to looke for a barke of M. Parkers for our better ſtrength: but not finding her, we went for the cape of Honduras, where we purpoſed to entrap the watch, & ſo to ſacke the towne of Truxillo, but the watch diſcouering vs, made great fires, and the towne preſently ſhot off a great piece, and anſwered with fires. Notwithſtanding the next day being the 31 of March we brought our ſhips vnder the fort, and landed our men, but it was a vaine purpoſe: for the towne is not to be taken but by exceeding multitudes, for it is inuincible by nature. It ſtandeth vpon the top of a very ſteepe hill, bordering cloſe to the ſea: ſo enuironed with woods of ſuch exceeding thicknes, that there is no paſſage among the trees, which if they were gone, yet there is no climbing vp the hill, only hauing one narrow lane to go into the towne; at the end whereof is a great gate very ſtrongly fortified, ſo that it is not to be approched vnto, ſo that with the loſſe of ſome few men, we retired from this enterpriſe, being altogether impoſſible to be atchieued by our few and weake men.

Santa Martha taken.

The Iſle and chiefe towne of Iamaica taken.

We departed from Truxillo the ſecond of April and went for Puerto de Cauallos lower down in the bay, ſtil nouriſhing our hope of good ſucceſſe: and comming thither found it reaſonably fortified, but wee preſently preuailed and tooke it the 7 of April, being the moſt poore and miſerable place of all India. Now our hopes were all fruſtrate and no likelihood remayning how we could by any meanes make a voiage: our General reſeruing vnto himſelfe his ſilent inward impatience, laboured to doe ſome memorable thing. And in fine concluded by Rio Dolce to ſearch with his boats ſome narrow paſſage or Iſthmos for the South ſea, alleaging that if hee could but finde a boat there, it ſhould ſerue him to great purpoſe; againſt which there could be no reaſonable contradiction. All his chiefeſt ſea men conſented hereunto, but eſpecially the Captaine of the Admirall. So ſayling with the ſhips to Cape de tres puntas in the bottome of the bay, there leauing the the ſhips well mored the tenth of Aprill he departed with his boats for Rio Dolce, which in many Charts hath his paſſage through the land. Up this riuer by many uncertaine windings we paſſed 30 leagues and better, where we found a ſtrong built fort, a towne, and diuers ſtore-houſes: but for money or merchandize we found none. Wee learned by the miſerable people that we tooke, that the South ſea was 20 leagues from the nereſt of that riuer, and that it was 50 leagues to Guatimala, 40 leagues to Sonſonate, and 30 leagues to Sacatocaluca, being townes which we hoped to march unto: ſo that now we were in worſe caſe then before: for wee were fallen ſicke with the unholſomeneſſe of this ayre, and our victuals ſo waſted, as that we were deſperate how to recouer our countrey. Whereupon with moſt unwilling minds we returned to our ſhipping, and with all poſſible expedition weyed, & ſo laboured upon the tacke to turne out of this very deepe bay, being 60 leagues within the point of land. Being out of the bay, wee ſhaped our courſe for Cape S. Anthony. Our General, whoſe reſtles ſpirit continually laboured to auoide the frownes of fortune, had now plotted with the Beuice and Galeon to goe for Newfoundland, and there to reuictual, and to haue freſh men, of which we ſtood in good aſſurance, & ſo to depart for the ſtreits of Magellan, and ſo by his very good policie would haue concluded his voyage in the Eaſt India, which plat I thinke it unneceſſary here to reueale, being put in principall truſt by him.

Guatimala, Sonſonate, and Sacatocaluca.

Their returne

Being thwart Hauana, by what chance I know not, but all his ſhips forſooke him the 13 of May, and here in a deſperate place hee was left deſperately alone. The George departed by conſent with his letters, the Galeon I know not how: but our miſery in the Admirall was very great, for there was not one in the ſhip that was euer before in the Indies, beſides our miſerable want of victuals, the danger of the place, and the furious current of the chanel. Notwithſtanding we were enforced without ſtay to diſemboque: which happily being performed, we ſhaped our courſe for Newfoundland. And by Gods mercy we arriued there the fifteenth of June, not hauing one houres victuals to ſpare, and there by our countreymen we were well refreſhed: where we ſtayed till the 24 of June, ſtill expecting the Galeon, for the execution of this his laſt purpoſe: but ſhe not comming, and that plat ouerthrowen, we returned for England, where we found the right honourable the Erle of Eſſex bound to the ſeas, with whom wee preſently departed in his lordſhips ſhip, to doe him our humble ſeruice.

A voyage of Maſter VVilliam Parker of Plimmouth gentleman, to Margarita, Iamaica, Truxillo, Puerto de Cauallos ſituate within the bay of Honduras, and taken by ſir Anthony Sherley and him, as likewiſe vp Rio dolce: with his returne from thence, and his valiant and happie enterprize vpon Campeche the chiefe towne of Iucatan, which he tooke and ſacked with ſixe and fifty men, and brought out of the harbour a Frigat laden with the kings tribute, and ſurprized alſo the towne of Sebo.

IN the yeere 1596, Maſter William Parker of Plimmouth gentleman being furniſhed with a tall ſhippe and a barke at his owne charges, the ſhip called the Prudence of one hundreth and twenty tunnes, wherein himſelfe went captaine, and the barke called the Aduenture of fiue and twentie tunnes, whereof was captain one Richard Hen, departed frō the foreſayd hauen of Plimmouth in the moneth of Nouember, hauing one hundreth men in his company.

Margarita.

Sixe Engliſh men redeemed

Truxillo aſſailed

The firſt place where wee touched in the Weſt Indies was the Iſle of Margarita on the coaſt of Tierra firma, where we tooke a Spaniſh gentleman and others, who for his ranſome ſet at libertie Maſter Iames Willis, and fiue other Engliſhmen which were priſoners in Cumaná, who otherwiſe were neuer like to haue come from thence. Thus paſſing from thence, wee ſayled ouer to the Iſle of Iamaica, where the ſecond of March we met with ſir Anthony Sherley, who before our comming had taken the chiefe towne in the Iſland, and was now almoſt in a readines to depart. And here conſorting our ſelues with him, we departed from Iamaica the ſixt of March, and reſolued to ſet upon the ſtrong towne of Truxillo neere the mouth of the bay of the Honduras. And hauing ſayled to Cape de Corrientes upon Cuba, to ſeeke a barke of mine for our better ſtrength; but not finding her, we went for the cape of Honduras, where wee purpoſed to intrap the watch, and ſo to haue ſacked the towne of Truxillo. But the watch diſcouering us, made great fires, and the towne preſently ſhot off a great piece, and anſwered with fires. Notwithſtanding, the next day being the one and thirtieth of March, wee brought our ſhips under the fort, and landed our men: but it was a vaine purpoſe, for the towne is inuincible by nature, and ſtandeth vpon the top of a very ſteepe hill ioyning cloſe to the ſea, enuironed with woods of ſuch exceeding thicknes, that there is no paſſage through the trees: there is alſo but one very narrow and ſteepe lane to goe into the towne, at the end whereof is a gate very ſtrongly fortified; ſo that it is not to be approched vnto, vnleſſe it be vpon the ſudden, and with ſurprize of the watch: wherefore with the loſſe of ſome few men wee retired from this enterprize.

From hence we paſſed vp farther into the gulfe the ſecond of April, with intention to inuade the towne of Puerto de Cauallos, where wee arriued the ſeuenth of April, and tooke the ſame, finding it well fortified, but nothing anſwering our expectation for wealth. Whereupon Sir Anthony Sherley and I being hitherto fruſtrate of our hopes, reſolued here to enter vp to the bottome of Rio dolce, and to paſſe ouerland vnto the South ſea. Wherefore wee ſet forward, and entred aboue thirty leagues vp the ſayd Rio dolce, thinking to haue paſſed ouerland with two companies of men, and to haue caried a pinneſſe in ſixe quarters to be ſet together with ſkrewes, and therein to haue embarked our ſelues in the South ſea, and there for a time to haue tried our fortune; and to haue returned ouerland to the bay of Honduras. But this our diligence tooke no effect, becauſe of the huge highnes of the mountaines, and the length of the way, being more then was giuen out at the firſt. Then with much griefe we returned out to Truxillo, where I departed from Sir Anthony Sherley.

They paſſe aboue 30 leags vp Rio dolce.

After my departure from this worthy knight, I ſet my courſe for Cape de Cotoche which lieth on the Eaſt part of Iucatan from whence I ranged al the North coaſt of the ſaid promontory of Iucatan, vntill I came vnto Cape Deſconoſcido, where I put 56 of my men into a Periago, or long Indian Canoa; and leauing my ſhip ſixe leagues from the towne of Campeche at three of the clocke in the morning * I landed hard by the monaſterie of San Franciſco, and tooke the ſayd towne of Campeche, with the captaine and Alcalde, finding therein fiue hundreth Spaniards, and in two townes cloſe adioyning to the ſame eight thouſand Indians. The multitude of the Spaniards which fled vpon my firſt aſſault by ten of the clocke in the morning aſſembling together renued their ſtrength, and ſet furiouſly vpon me and my ſmall company. In which aſſault I loſt ſome ſixe of my men, and my ſelfe was ſhot vnder the left breſt with a bullet, which bullet lieth ſtill in the chine of my backe. Being thus put vnto our ſhifts wee deuiſed on the ſudden a newe ſtratagem: for hauing diuers of the towneſmen priſoners, we tied them arme in arme together, and placed them in ſtead of a baricado to defend vs from the fury of the enemies ſhot. And ſo with enſigne diſplayed, taking with vs our ſixe dead men, wee retired with more ſafetie to the hauen, where we tooke a frigat which rode ready fraught with the kings tribute in ſiluer and other good commodities, *which were preſently to bee tranſported to S. Iuan de Vllua, and brought the ſame and our Periago or Canoa to my ſhip, which lay in two fadome water ſixe leagues from the town, being not able to come any neerer for the ſholds vpō that coaſt. Ouer againſt the place where our ſhip rode, ſtoode a towne of 300 or 400 Indians called Sebo, which we likewiſe tooke, where wee found Champeche-wood good to dye withal, with waxe, and hony. This done we left this coaſt, and turned vp to Cape de Cotoche againe, and ankored euery day at noone, becauſe of the brizes, and in turning vp I loſt my barke called the Aduenture, which was taken by 2 frigats of warre, which were manned out from Campeche: wherein Captaine Hen and thirteen of my men were taken, and afterward executed, as ſince we vnderſtand by ſome Spaniſh priſoners that were taken in thoſe parts. After we had ſtayed fiue weekes on this coaſt, wee ſhaped our courſe for Hauana, where finding nothing, we diſemboqued, and came along by the Iſle of Bermuda, and croſſed ouer to The banke neere Cape Race in 22 fadomes: and from thence ſayling for England, we fel with Sillie about the firſt of Iuly, and within two dayes after arriued at Plimmouth, where we found the Right honorable the Erle of Eſſex ſetting forth with a great fleet for the Iſles of the Açores.

An excellent ruttier for the Iſlands of the VVeſt Indies, and for Tierra firma, and Nueua Eſpanna.

If a man depart from the barre of S. Lucar in Summer time, hee muſt ſteere Southweſt vntil hee hath ſight of Punta de Naga, which is in the Iſle of Tenerif. The markes to know it be theſe. An high point ſloping to the ſea, & at the Eaſter point it hath two down falles like particions, and they ſhew to be ſeparated from the maine of the Iſland & ſtand in 28 degrees & a halfe. And if thou wilt haue ſight of the Grand Canaria, and findeſt thy ſelfe with Punta de Naga, thou ſhalt then ſteere Southweſt and by South, and ſo thou ſhalt haue ſight of Canaria which ſtandeth in 28 degrees. And thou muſt come to ankor on the Southeaſt ſide of the Iſland. But I aduiſe thee, if it be in winter time, that thou keepe another courſe, and that as followeth.

The courſe that a man muſt keepe departing in winter for the Indies from Sant Lucar.

Cape Cantin.

A great wood before you come at Cape Cantin.

DEparting from Sant Lucar in winter thou ſhalt goe Weſt and by South keeping along the coaſt, becauſe if thou goe farre from the coaſt, thou ſhalt meete with the wind off the ſea vntill thou be as high ſhot as Cape Cantin, which is a low flat cape with the ſea. And thou ſhalt ſee a great wood before thou come at this cape, called Caſa del Cauallero. And from thence thou ſhalt ſteere thy olde courſe, that is Southweſt and by South for the Iſles of Alegrança and Lancerota; and when thou art North and South with Alegrança, thou ſhalt ſteere thence Southweſt, and ſo thou ſhalt ſee the Canaria, which is a round high land, and ſtandeth in twentie eight degrees.

What thou muſt doe if a contrary wind take thee fiftie leagues off the ſhore.

The bay of Cadiz.

San Pedro.

San Sebaſtian.

Los Puercos.

The Diamant.

WHen thou art fifty leagues ſhot on thy way into the ſea Southweſt off, and there thou chance to meete with a contrary winde off the ſea, and if it force thee to put roome, then thou ſhalt ſteere Northeaſt and by Eaſt, and ſhalt hall with ſight of Cabos del Plata, which ſhew when thou art a ſeaboord ſo farre as thou mayeſt deſcrie them, to be like two points of white ſand: and if it be cleere thou ſhalt ſee within the land certain high hilles lying Northweſt and by Weſt called las Sierras de Zahara, and being three leagues from land thou ſhalt haue thirtie fadomes water, and ſand: And from thence to the bay of Cadiz thou ſhalt goe along Northweſt by the coaſt: and if thou be in thirtie or forty fadomes, thou ſhalt haue oaze; but if thou bee in leſſe then thirtie fadomes, thou ſhalt haue other ſounding; which if it chance, then thou art againſt S. Pedro. And if it bee by day thou ſhalt ſee the Ermitage of Sant Sebaſtian, which ſeemeth to be a ſhippe vnder ſayle. And thou ſhalt goe into the bay taking heede of the Puercos, giue them a good birth off. And if thou chance to bee benighted when thou falleſt with the bay, and wouldeſt goe into the bay, thou ſhalt carie thy lead in thy hand, and be ſounding: and finding thy ſelfe in rockie ground, thou ſhalt ſteere North becauſe of ſhunning the Puercos: and yet giue them not too great a birth becauſe of The Diamant, and ſo thou mayeſt goe in, ſounding when thou thinkeſt good. And being benighted and then not Eaſt and Weſt with the bay, and if thou doeſt not goe into it, then make the largeſt boord thou canſt keeping off till day.

The Canaries.

The Iſle Deſeada in the Weſt Indies ſtandeth in 15 degrees of latitude.

If thou be at the Canaries and wouldeſt ſayle to Nueua Eſpanna, thou ſhalt ſayle foure and twenty houres South becauſe of the calmes of Fierro. And from thence thou ſhalt goe Weſtſouthweſt, vntill thou finde thy ſelfe in twenty degrees. And then thou muſt goe Weſt and by South, which is the courſe for the Iſle Deſeada. And from Deſeada thou ſhalt goe Weſt and by North, becauſe of the variation of the compaſſe. And falling with Deſeada, thou ſhalt finde it to riſe low with the ſea: and it ſtandeth in 15 degrees. And the eaſtermoſt part is the ſharpeſt, and ſmaller then the Weſt point.

Markes to know Dominica by.

And if thou art going for Tierra firma, thou ſhalt goe Weſt and by South vntill thou come to Dominica, and there on the Northweſt ſide is a riuer, where thou mayeſt water. The marks to know it bee a certaine high land full of hilles. And ſeeing it when thou art farre off to the ſeaward, it maketh in the middeſt a partition; ſo that a man would thinke it deuided the Iſland in two parts. And this Iſland ſtandeth in 14 degrees and a halfe.

Guadalupe. Monſerate.

Santa Cruz.

I aduiſe thee that if thou wouldeſt goe for Nueua Eſpanna, and ſo doeſt paſſe betweene Guadalupe and Monſerate to the Weſtward, that being thus open off the entrance betwixt them thou ſhalt go Weſtnorthweſt, and ſo ſhalt haue ſight of Santa Cruz, which ſtandeth in ſeuenteene degrees and a halfe. And the markes to know it be theſe. It is an Iſland not very high, and lyeth Eaſt and Weſt, and at the Eaſt end it is lower then at the Weſt end.

S. Iuan de Puerto rico.

Cape Roxo.

And going forward on thy courſe thou ſhalt runne Weſtnorthweſt, and ſo thou ſhalt goe to haue ſight of the Iſle of San Iuan de Puerto rico, which is an Iſland lying Eaſt and Weſt, and ſtandeth in eighteene degrees. And the markes be theſe. That on the Weſt end it is loweſt, and the Eaſtermoſt is the higheſt. And if thou fall with the middeſt of the Iſland, then thou ſhalt goe a long it to the Weſt vnto Cabo Roxo, which is the end of the Iſle. And from thence the coaſt runneth North to Punta Aguada. Cape Roxo hath certaine red cliffes. Thou muſt ſteere Weſt and by South from Cape Roxo to find Mona, and ſo thou ſhalt haue ſight of Mona. And the marks thereof be theſe, it is a low land lying Eaſt and Weſt: and on the Eaſt end it is higheſt, it hath a ſlope towards the ſea, and ſtandeth in 18. degrees, rather leſſe then more. And if it be by day, then thou ſhalt runne Weſt and ſhalt ſee Saona: which is an Iſland lying without Hiſpaniola, and lyeth Eaſt and Weſt, and is full of trees; and hath certaine ſandy bayes. And if it bee cleere weather thou ſhalt ſee within the land of Hiſpaniola certaine hie hils called las Sierras de Yguey. And being benighted vpon Mona, then thou ſhalt ſteere Weſt and by South, becauſe of certaine ſhoalds that lye off Saona: but hauing day light and no ſight of land, thou ſhalt looſe vp Northweſt and ſo paſſe by it, and as thou goeſt along the coaſt of Hiſpaniola, and ſeeſt the ſea to be caſt vp into the aire, then thou ſhalt be about 10 leagues off the harbour of Santo Domingo, and theſe mountings vp are called The Spoutes.

Mona.

Las Sierras de Yguey.

Los Buffaderos or The ſpoutes.

But I aduiſe thee, that if thou bee benighted when thou falleſt with Santo Domingo, then thou muſt keepe the hils called Sierras de las minas viejas to the Northweſt. And if thou wouldeſt goe into Santo Domingo, and meeteſt there with a forcible Northerly wind, then the beſt way is to runne Eaſt till it be day. And hauing daylight thou ſhalt caſt about, and ſo thou muſt ply to wind-ward vntill the Northerly wind be done: and when it is paſt, make all the ſaile thou canſt to hale with the ſight of Calle de las Damas: and when thou haſt ſight thereof thou ſhalt lye with thy ſtemme with a ſandie Bay, which lyeth on the other ſide: and thou muſt take in thy maine ſaile, and go ſo till thou bring thy ſelfe open with the midſt of the riuer; and ſo hauing opened the riuer, thou muſt go with great care in the middeſt of the ſame, with all thy ſailes vp, except thy maine ſaile, and thou muſt haue thy boat out, if it be needefull to ſound or to tow thy ſhip, if ſhe caſt too much to the looſe, for the currents will caſt here to the looſe: wherefore bee ſure to haue thy boat out to helpe thy ſteerage: and this is the way whereby thou muſt worke.

Santo Domingo.

Calle de las Damas.

The courſe from Santo Domingo to go for Nueua Eſpanna.

I Aduiſe thee that if thou wilt goe from Santo Domingo for Nueua Eſpanna, thou ſhalt goe Southweſt and by South, and ſo thou ſhalt haue ſight of Punta de Niçao, which is a low point, and is the end of the hilles called Sierras de las minas Vieias, and towards the Northweſt of them thou ſhalt ſee a lowe land, and to goe into Hocoa thou ſhalt ſtirre from this poynt of Niçao Weſtnorthweſt, and thou ſhalt ſee the point of Puerto Hermoſo, and the Bay that it maketh: and thou muſt be ſure to keepe neere the ſhore to find a good road, and feare not to go neere the land: for all is deepe water, and cleare ground, and let not fall thine anker till thou be paſt all the riuers; and beware of the land, for if thou ride much without, thy anker wil come home, becauſe it is rocky and flatte ground. And thou muſt be ready, that when thine anker commeth home, thou haue thy moarings readie in thy boat to carry on ſhore with foure or fiue men, and if thou thinke good, thou mayeſt let them fall on land with a rope. And when thou art come to anker thou mayeſt ſend on ſhore to moare, ſo ſhalt thou be beſt moared.

The courſe from Hocoa to Nueua Eſpanna.

GOing from Hocoa to Nueua Eſpanna thou ſhalt ſtirre Southweſt: and this way thou ſhalt find the Iſles Beata, and Alto velo: Beata hath theſe marks: It is a low land with the ſea, and full of trees: and on the Eaſt ſide an high land or cliffe; and Alto velo hath theſe markes. A blacke round land, and the Eaſtermoſt part thereof is higheſt, and it hath a downefall. When thou art North and South with * then thou ſhalt go Weſt, vntill thou be ſo farre ſhot as the Frailes: and from thence goe Weſt and by North, and keeping this courſe thou ſhalt haue ſight of Cape Tiburon. And if by keeping this courſe thou haue ſight of a little Iſland, thou mayeſt make account it is the Iſle of Baque: and it is hard to the land, and from thence thou ſhalt go Weſt, keeping thy ſelfe out vntill thou double a poynt that maketh as it were a great Bay, and then thou muſt go Weſt and by North, till thou come to Cape Tiburon, that hath a round blacke land, and in ſome part thereof certaine white cliffes.

I aduiſe thee that when thou art againſt Cape de Tiburon, thou ſtirre Northweſt, and ſo thou ſhalt haue ſight of Cuba, which lyeth Eaſt and Weſt: and thou ſhalt ſee certaine hilles which are called Sierras del Cobre, and in the higheſt of them is the harbour of S. Iago de Cuba: and finding thy ſelfe ſo, thou mayeſt runne Weſt vnto Cape de Cruz. And before thou ſeeſt Cape de Cruz thou ſhalt ſee the hils called Sierras de Tarquino, and from theſe hils to Cape de Cruz the land wareth lower and lower, and it is loweſt of all at the Cape it ſelfe. And if thou chance to haue the water troubled, as though thy ſhip did raiſe vp the ſand from the ground, be not afraid: for this place is called The nine fathoms: for thou ſhalt find no leſſe water vpon it, and it is the ſhalloweſt water that thou ſhalt haue.

Cape de Cruz in 19. deg. and better.

Thou muſt marke that Cape de Cruz maketh an ende of the coaſt that commeth from the Eaſt to the Weſt, and beginneth the courſe that goeth North and South, and ſtandeth in 19. degrees, rather more then leſſe.

Los Iardines.

The Iſle de Pinos.

From Cape de Cruz thou muſt ſtirre Weſtnorthweſt: and this way thou ſhalt haue ſight of the Iſle de Pinos, and if thou haue faire weather, then thou muſt goe Northweſt and by Weſt, becauſe of the currents that will ſet thee out to ſea. And keeping this courſe thou ſhalt haue ſight of an high land. I tell thee it is the marke of the Iſles called los Iardines, and is commonly called the land of Zagueio: and then thou ſhalt goe Weſt and by South: and if it bee by night, then goe Weſtſouthweſt vntill thou haue brought thy ſelfe out from The Iardines. And being by day thou ſhalt keepe off the land, and ſhalt goe Weſtnorthweſt, and ſo thou ſhalt ſee the Iſle de Pinos.

The markes to know the Cape de Santo Antonio.

Cape de Corrientes.

Cape de Sant Anton in 22. degrees.

The headland called Capo de Santo Antonio is a lowe land, and full of trees, and vpon the Cape it ſelfe it hath two or three thicke woods, and the coaſt lyeth Northweſt and Southeaſt. And thou muſt alſo take good heed that thou haue ſight on the ſame coaſt of a white ſandie Bay; and it is on the ſame coaſt that lyeth Northweſt and Southeaſt. And theſe be the markes from Punta de las Arenas, or The poynt of the ſands, to the Cape of Saint Anthonie, and from the Cape de Corrientes to Punta de las Arenas thou ſhalt haue a great Bay, being ſo long, that if thou be not very neere the ſhore thou canſt not ſee land, it is ſo low. And if thou ſee not the land well, it will ſhew to be a tuft of trees. And the Cape of S. Anthony ſtandeth in 22. degrees.

A ruttier that a man muſt keepe from Dominica to Martinino, and ſo to Tierra firma.

The Teſtigos.

Frailes.

Puerto de Iuan Griego.

I Aduiſe thee that going from Martinino or Dominica, if thou wouldeſt goe for Margarita, that thou ſtirre South and by Weſt, becauſe of the great currents that goe here, and ſet Northweſt. And by this courſe thou ſhalt find the Teſtigos, which be 4 or 5 Iſlands: and if thou wilt not goe ſo much to windward, then thou ſhalt ſee Frailes, which bee three ſmall Iſlands. And if thou wilt goe into the harbour of Manpater, it is preſently in doubling of the point on the Eaſt ſide to the Southward. And being minded to go for puerto de Iuan Griego, which lieth on the Northſide, then go neere the land, and along the coaſt of the Weſt, and preſently thou ſhalt haue ſight of puerto de Iuan Griego; it ſtandeth in 11. degrees.

Curaçao.

Aruba.

Monjes three litle Iſlands.

Coquebacoa.

I aduiſe thee that going from Matalino, which ſtandeth in 13. degrees, if thou wouldeſt goe to Cartagena, thou ſhalt goe Weſt and by South, and by this way thou ſhalt haue ſight of the Iſles of Curaçao and Aruba, which ſtand in 12. degrees: from theſe Iſlands thou ſhalt go Weſt; and when thou art North and South with Monjes, thou ſhalt ſee them to be three little white Iſlands, and they are white becauſe of the multitude of birds that are there: they ſtand in a triangle. From thence thou ſhalt goe Weſt, if it be by day, and ſo ſhalt haue ſight of Coquebacoa that ſtandeth in 12. degrees. And being by night, then goe Northweſt: and by day thou ſhalt caſt to goe for the land againe Weſtſouthweſt. Coquebacoa hath a certaine poynt not very high, and within this poynt thou ſhalt ſee in the inland certain hilles which bee called las Sierras de Auite.

Baia honda.

Portete.

Going from this poynt of Coquebacoa thou ſhalt run Weſt, and ſhalt run along the coaſt, and ſhalt go to haue the ſight of Baya honda and Portete, which is a low land euen with the ſea.

Cape de la vela.

The Cape de la Vela lieth with a redde ſhewe not very high; and without this Cape about a league there is a little coppled rocke. A man may be bold to go betwixt this rocke and the maine.

Cape del Aguja.

And going from this Cape to haue ſight of Cape del Aguja thou muſt ſtirre Southweſt, and thou ſhalt haue ſight of the Ancones which lye at the ende of the hilles called Sierras Neuadas. And then preſently thou ſhalt ſee the Cape del Aguja: the marks whereof are theſe: It is a low Cape, and vpon it is a copple not very high, and there beginneth the high land of the Sierras Neuadas, or ſnowy mountaines.

Take this for a warning that if thou goe for Cape de la Vela by night by the courſe abouesayd, and commeſt into a whitiſh water, then ſound and thou ſhalt find 40. fathoms, and thy ſound will be certaine ſmal ſandy white oaze, and ſome ſmal weeds. And then thou mayeſt make account that thou art North and South with the riuer called Rio de Palominos, which commeth out of the midſt of the Sierras Neuadas. And being benighted thou ſhalt go Weſtnorthweſt, or Weſt and by North vntil day: and being day then thou mayeſt hale in with ſight of the land Southweſt, becauſe thou mayeſt be ſure to come right in with it.

Rio de Palominos.

If thou goe from Cape del Aguja for Cartagena, if it bee by day, thou ſhalt goe Weſt and by South, and ſhalt goe to haue ſight of Morro Hermoſo, that is The faire mountaine, which lyeth to the Weſtward of Rio grande. And being alone, and with a good ſhip of ſaile, and drawing towards night, then thou muſt come to anker behind Morro hermoſo: and after the firſt watch thou muſt ſet ſaile, and go out Weſt and by North, becauſe thou muſt be ſure to keepe a ſeabord from the Iſland de Arenas, which lyeth 2 leagues to ſeaward right againſt Samba.

And if thou goe from Cape del Aguja by night, thou ſhalt goe Weſt and by North: and ſo thou ſhalt goe without the force of the water of Rio Grande. And being by day thou ſhall goe along the coaſt, and ſhalt ſee Morro hermoſo, which, as I haue ſayd, lyeth to the Weſt of Rio Grande, and hath for markes, a face of a blacke land not very hie, and it is round. And if thou depart by day from Morro hermoſo, thou muſt goe Weſt, and muſt take heede, as I ſayde before, of the Iſle de Arenas, which lyeth North and South off Samba. Samba hath for a marke as it were a gallie towed. And going this way by day, thou ſhalt ſee El buio del Gato, which is an high land with certaine white cliffes to the ſeaward: and alſo more to the Weſt thou ſhalt ſee the poynt called Punta de la Canoa, which is a low land euen with the water: and there endeth the coaſt which lyeth Eaſt and Weſt. And the Bay that goeth to Cartagena beginneth here, and lyeth Northeaſt and Southweſt.

And take this for a warning, that if thou be benighted againſt Samba, thou ſhalt take in thy ſailes, & lye off to the offward vntil midnight without any ſaile abroad vntil midnight: and from midnight forward thou ſhalt lye ſo into the land without ſayle: and if in the breake of day thou ſee no land, then goe Southweſt, and if this way thou haue ſight of certaine white cliffes, make account it is Buio del Gato. Take this for a warning, if thy ſhip bee great come not nigh the land in the Bay: I meane thou mayeſt not with a great ſhip come nigh the land from the poynt de la Canoa vntill thou come to Cartagena, becauſe in many places there are not aboue 3 or 4 fathoms at the moſt. In all this Bay there is no hie land but the Gallie, which is right ouer the harbour of Cartegena.

And if it chance that any man come for this place that neuer was here before, then let him looke for a little hill like a towed gallie lying Eaſt and Weſt, and all the land is low, and ſeemeth to be full of trees. Hauing theſe ſights, then make account thou art againſt Cartagena, and to goe in thou haſt nothing to be afraid of: but keepe thy ſelfe hard aboord the poynt of Ycacos: and then when thou commeſt to double the poynt del Iudeo, giue a breadth off, becauſe there is a ſhoald.

I aduiſe thee that if thou be benighted when thou art at The poynt de la canoa, and wouldeſt enter into Cartagena by night, that thou take good heede of a ſhoald that lyeth halfe a league to the ſea, and ſo thou ſhalt goe in 8 fathoms, and ſandie ground. And when thou findeſt thy ſelfe in deepe water, as in 30 fathoms and more, then the harbout will bee open before thee. And if thou haue any freſh Northerne winds, then looſe vp to the ſeaward, and lye with thy ſtemme Eaſt-ſoutheaſt, and ſo thou mayeſt goe in Eaſt through the middeſt of the chanell: and though it bee by night, yet thou mayeſt goe in ſafely, becauſe it is all cleere. And if the night be cleere thou ſhalt haue ſight of the Iſland called Cares, and it is an high land.

Comming from Cartagena to goe for Nombre de Dios in the time of the Northerne winds, thou muſt bring thy ſelfe to the offward of Sal medina: and thence ſtirre Weſt till thou bring thy ſelfe North and South with Cabeça de Catiua: and then goe Southweſt and by Weſt, and thou ſhalt ſo fall with Rio de Franciſco. It hath for markes a certaine land not very high, and within the land certaine high hils lying Eaſt and Weſt. And on the Weſt of the riuer of Franciſco thou ſhalt ſee certaine cliffes that bee ſixe leagues from Nombre de Dios, inclining toward the ſea.

I aduiſe thee that going this courſe aboue written; if thou ſee 3 or 4 Iſles lying lowe with the ſea, and alſo lying Eaſt and Weſt, thou mayeſt make account that they be the Iſlands de Catiua, and then runne Weſt, and ſo thou ſhalt go along the coaſt. And if thou ſee by this way a poynt of low land, make account it is Punta de Samblas: and vpon it thou ſhalt ſee a row of hie rockie hils, and they be the mountaines of Santa Cruz.

If thou come from Cartagena to go to Nombre de Dios in the time of the ſea winds, when thou art out from Sal Medina, thou ſhalt goe Weſt and by North, that thou mayeſt haue ſea-roome, and take the Briſas or Northerne winds when they come: and goe till thou be North and South with the harbour of Nombre de Dios: and from thence goe Southweſt, and if by this way thou ſee a row of high hils on a coaſt that lyeth Northeaſt and Southweſt, make account they are Sierras de las minas Viejas, which minas Viejas lie North and South with the harbour of Velo alto. Hauing kept this courſe aboueſaid, and hauing ſight of the former marke, thou mayeſt account that thou art on the Weſt ſide of Nombre de Dios.

Furthermore when thou haſt ſight of an high land, and thou bee North and South with it, and in the toppe thereof thou ſeeſt as it were a litle table, if it be higheſt toward the Eaſt, then make account that thou art North and South with Nombre de Dios, I ſay, with the harbour of Nombre de Dios, and this hill is called Sierra de Capira. And if thou wilt goe into the harbour, thou muſt keepe thy prow right againſt this hill, and comming neerer to the ſhore, thou ſhalt ſee a ledge of rockes, and it is without, and thou mayeſt goe in what depth thou thinkeſt good, or at which place thou findeſt moſt water in. And to the Weſt of the harbor thou ſhalt ſee two or three Iſlands called Iſlas de los Baſtimentos.

Take this for a warning, if thou come out of Nombre de Dios in the time of the Briſas or Northerne winds, and wouldeſt goe for Cartagena, thou ſhalt come out in the morning, and ſhalt go Northnorthweſt vntill 3 of the clocke at afternoone, and then caſt about to the land, vntill thou be hard aboord the ſhore, and ſo thou muſt go turning vntill thou haſt doubled Cabeça de Catiua: and hauing doubled it then ply to windward all that thou mayeſt: and if thou be Eaſtnortheaſt off it, then thou ſhalt haue ſight of the Iſlands of Baru, which are 3 or 4 Iſlands lying low, and are all full of trees: and then preſently thou ſhalt haue ſight of the gallie that is ouer Cartagena, and it is like a gallie towed.

Iſlas de Baru.

I aduiſe thee, that if thou come for Cartagena in the time aboueſayde, and commeſt from Cabeça de Catiua, if the wind will not ſuffer thee to lye but Weſt, then going thus if thou ſeeſt a great high Iſland full of mountaines, and on the North ſide thereof thou ſee a ledge of rocks two leagues into the ſea, thou mayeſt be ſure it is Iſla fuerte: but if thou ſee not the rocks, giue them a good breadth: and if thou wilt come to anker, thou mayeſt ride well on the Weſt ſide of them, betwixt the maine and them in fifteene fathomes; and the ſounding is clay. And if thou wilt go betweene this and the Iſlands of Saint Barnardo to goe into Cartagena, thou mayeſt goe ſafely. And if any man aſke thee how thou knoweſt the Iſlands of Baru and San Barnardo, thou mayeſt anſwere truely, that the Iſles of San Barnardo are full of high hilles, and certaine ſandie bayes to ſeaward; and the ſayd Iſles haue a good depth two or three leagues to the ſea: and this depth is called The Bacilla. And theſe are all the markes for the Iſlandes of San Barnardo. And touching the Iſles of Baru, they bee 3 or 4 little Iſlands and very euen with the ſea, and full of trees, and there is no good depth about them, but hard aboord them.

A ruttier from Cartagena to Hauana in Cuba.

Comming from Cartagena to goe to Hauana, thou muſt goe Northnorthweſt vntill thou be in fouretcene degrees: and then forwardes thou ſhalt goe with great care to anker euery night, and when it is day ſet ſayle. And this is to bee done in this place becauſe of the ſhoalds of Serrana: and ſo thou mayeſt procecde with a care to anker when thou commeſt about Serranilla, or neere to it, which is in fifteene degrees and a halfe. And vpon it thou ſhalt ſee a lowe flatte land lying Northeaſt and Southweſt: and the ſea beateth vpon it round about, except that on the Southeaſt part it hath certaine ſhelues of ſand, and on the Weſt ſide it hath a certain litle copple, which from ſea ſeemeth to bee a ſhippe vnder ſayle: and being Northeaſt and Southweſt off it, ſcant a league from the ſhoald commeth out on the Weſt ſide a certayne ſhoald, whereupon the ſea doth alwayes beate.

The ſhoalds of Serrana.
Serranilla.

I aduiſe thee that if thou canſt not paſſe on the Weſt ſide, then thou muſt goe betwixt the ſayd little copple that is like a ſayle and the ſhoald; for the paſſage is good. But if thou depart from the Serranilla to the Northweſt, and ſeeſt a lowe land with the ſea, and certaine white ſandy bayes, and on the Weſt ſide ſeeſt a low land, and on the Eaſtſide a little coaſt lying Eaſt and Weſt, thou mayeſt make account it is Cape de Corrientes.

Cape de Corrientes.
Cape de San Antonio.

And if thou goe from Cape de Corrientes for Cape de Santo Antonio, thou muſt goe Weſtnorthweſt, and ſo thou ſhalt goe with the Cape. The marks be a low land full of trees with certaine white ſandie bayes: and vpon the Cape it ſelfe thou ſhalt ſee two thicke groues of great trees, and they be vpon the Cape it ſelfe.

To go from the Cape de Sant Antonio for Hauana in the time of the North winds, thou ſhalt goe Northweſt vntill thou be cleere of all the ſhoalds of the Cape, and then hale thy bowlines, and go as neere the wind as thou canſt poſſibly, vntill thou bring thy ſelfe vnto 24. degrees, and there ſound, and thou ſhalt find it the Tortugas, and thy ſounding will be white ſand.

The Tortugas.

Thou muſt take heede what is ſaid in the Chapter before: for he that writ the ſame hath ſeene it, and bene witneſſe to this: that comming from Seranilla, and ſtirring North and by Eaſt he had ſight of an Iſland ſtanding in 16. degrees, and it is on the ſhoalds of Cape de Camaron. And from thence, if thou haue the wind large, goe Northeaſt and by Eaſt, becauſe of the variation of the compaſſe, and thou ſhalt make thy way Eaſtnortheaſt, and thou ſhalt fall with Iſla de Pinos. This I I ſay, becauſe the currents ſet ſometime Weſt: and ſo it fell out to bee true in March, Anno Domini 1582. I tell thee farther, that wee came out from this aforeſayd Iſle ſtirring North and by Eaſt, for the wind would not ſuffer vs to lye neerer the Eaſt, and one euening at Sunne going downe we fell with a land, that had the ſame markes to our iudgement with the Cape de Corrientes: and becauſe night was at hand, we wrought to double Cape de Sant Antonio, ſtirring Weſt: and about midnight we had land all high right ahead, & the coaſt lying Southweſt: and then we caſt and lay Northeaſt till day: And being day, wee ſaw the land all ahead, and we plied to wind-ward to the Eaſt, and kept it a larboord till we had brought it Southweſt. And to be ſhort, we went here on land in the ſame place that we firſt fell with in the euening before: and it was an Iſland called Coçumel, lying on the coaſt of Iucatan. And this Iſland was the land which we ſaw firſt, ſeeming by the marks to be the Cape de Corrientes. Wee came to an anker about the middeſt of the Iſland, rather to the Norther then the Souther part: there we found a towne of Indians, who gaue vs all things which we needed for our money: and wee carried our Aſtrolabs on ſhore and tooke the height in 19. degrees and one tierce. A man may goe betweene this Iſland and the coaſt of Iucatan, and the Cape de Cotoche at pleaſure Northeaſt; and the water wil ſet in thy fauour: and thou muſt go till thou be in 24. degrees, and ſo thou ſhalt haue the ſounding of the Tortugas.

The courſe to be kept from the Cape de Santo Antonio for Nueua Eſpanna.

If thou goe from the Cape de Santo Antonio for Nueua Eſpanna, and beeing late, thou ſhalt ſtirre Weſtnorthweſt till thou be in the height of 24. degrees: and from thence thou ſhalt ſtirre ſomething to the Weſt, vntil thou bring thy ſelfe North and South with the litle Iland called Vermeja: and when thou art ſo, thou ſhalt go Southweſt, & by this way thou ſhalt find Villa Rica, which is in 19 degrees & a halfe, and the ſignes be theſe. Thou ſhalt find a ledge of high hils lying Northeaſt and Southweſt. But if thou chance to fall with a coaſt that lieth North and South, then thou mayeſt account, that it is about the low ground of Almeria which hath theſe markes. It is a land not very high, and it is full of little copples. And if thou haue cleare weather, thou ſhalt ſee within the land certaine high hils which are called the hils of Papalo.

And I aduiſe thee that beeing ſo farre ſhotte as the poynt called Punta delgada, which is the ende of all thoſe hilles of Villa Rica, thou mayeſt ſtirre thence South and by Weſt, and thou ſhalt goe along the coaſt, and ſhalt ſee a lowe land, and with this land thou ſhalt fall, going for Saint Paul, and being ſo farre ſhotte as Saint Paul, if thou wilt goe into the harbour, thou muſt ſtirre Southweſt: and this is the courſe that thou muſt keepe being ſhotte into the Bay. And thou ſhalt goe along the coaſt of the lowe land in ſight thereof: and keeping this courſe thou ſhalt ſee on the other ſide a blacke hill, and it is called Monte de Carneros. Take this for a note, that it lyeth ouer the houſe of Buytron: and as thou doeſt come neerer to the poynt of rockes, thou muſt bee ſure to keepe thy lead going, and ſhalt haue foure fathomes and a halfe or fiue fathomes, and ſo thou mayeſt goe through the middeſt of the chanell. And comming againſt the caſtle, thou ſhalt giue it ſome breadth off towards the Arreciſe or rocke: and hauing doubled the caſtle, thou ſhalt goe from thence and ſhalt bring thy ſelfe to an anker hard by the Herreria, which is a cleane Bay, and thou ſhalt ride againſt the hoſpitall.

I aduiſe thee that if thou be benighted when thou art neere to S. And I aduiſe thee if thou come from Villa Rica, and findeſt thy ſelfe in 20. degrees and a halfe, and ſeeſt no land, and ſeeſt that the water doth alter, thou ſhalt ſound 60. fathomes water: and if in this depth thou haſt oaze, make account thou art Eaſt and Weſt with the riuer of Almeria. This courſe is from the Cape of Santo Antonio to Nueua Eſpanna without or aſeaboord the Alacranes or Scorpions.

Now followeth how to worke, if a man come betwixt the Alacranes and the maine.

IF thou goe from the Cape de Santo Antonio and wouldeſt goe for Nueua Eſpanna within the Alacranes, thou muſt ſtirre Weſt and by South, and by this way thou ſhalt bring thy ſelfe in 20. fathoms; and if thou keeping this courſe findeſt leſſe water, then go Weſt and by North, and that way thou ſhalt bring thy ſelfe into 20. fathomes againe, vntill thou haue brought thy ſelfe North and South with the triangle. And being North and South with the triangle, then thou ſhalt be alſo North and South with Surta: from thence thou ſhalt go Southweſt: and by this courſe thou ſhalt haue ſight of the high hils of S. Martin, which are certaine high hils lying Northweſt and Southeaſt, and they haue a partition in the midſt, and to the Northweſt they be higheſt: and on the Southeaſt part within the land, thou ſhalt ſee ſomething an high land, called Pan de Minſapa, that is, the loafe of Minſapa, which is a round loafe not very high.

The hils of S. Martin ſtand in 18. degrees leſſe one fift part.

I aduiſe thee, that when thou falleſt with Saint Martin, and wouldeſt go with Saint Iohn de Vllua, then thou ſhalt goe Weſtnorthweſt: and this is the courſe that thou muſt keepe, if thou bee farre off at ſea, I meane ſo farre off as thou mayeſt well diſcrie the hils of S. Martin.

Rio de Medelin.

But if thou be neere to the land, then thou muſt goe Northweſt and by Weſt, and thou ſhalt ſo come along the coaſt, and thou ſhalt find the coaſt to bee low land: and comming this courſe thou ſhalt haue ſight of certaine little hilles not very high: then thou ſhalt fall with the poynt called Punta de Antoni Serro: and theſe hilles lye ouer the riuer of Medelin. And if when thou art Eaſt and Weſt, with The Volcan or hill that caſteth out fire, any man doe aſke thee, where the harbour of Sant Iuan de Vllua is, thou mayeſt truely anſwere, Weſt and by South, and it ſtandeth in 18. degrees and a halfe.

Pan de Cabanas

Hauana.

COmming from S. Iuan de Vllua to goe for Spaine, thou ſhalt ſtirre Northeaſt vntill thou be in 24. degrees: and ſo beeing thou ſhalt goe Eaſt vntill thou bring thy ſelfe in the ſoundings of the Tortugas, and thy ground wil be white ſand. I aduiſe thee, that if it be by night, thou goe Eaſt; and finding the water to waxe ſhoalder, then goe Southweſt, with a care to keepe thy lead going, vntill thou looſe ground, and come into great depth, becauſe thou mayeſt fall to the North of the Tortugas. And going from this ſound for Hauana thou muſt ſtirre Southſoutheaſt, becauſe of the currents that carrie thee to the Eaſt. And if by this way thou haue ſight of an hie land, that ſeemeth to be like a loafe, make account it is the loafe of Cabanas. And to the Eaſt of this loafe thou ſhalt ſee a land that hath a plaine. It ſheweth to be low, euen with the ſea, and as ſmooth as the ſea: and from this land to the Eaſt the land is lower and lower. And from thence to Hauana thou muſt goe Eaſt. And if the wind will not let thee go that courſe, thou muſt turne vp till thou be vpon the harbour of Hauana.

The marks of the poynt of Hauana be theſe, that on the Eaſt ſide it hath an hie blacke land, which is ſloping to the ſea, with a litle white tower on the top thereof: and as thou goeſt into the port, thou muſt keepe neere the high blacke land, and when thou art hard to it, ſtrike thy toppeſayles in ſigne of peace to the caſtle, leaſt it ſhoote at thee.

Los Martyres.

IF from Hauana thou wouldeſt ſet thy courſe for Spaine, thou muſt goe Northeaſt, and ſhalt ſo haue ſight of the Martyres, which ſtand in 24. degrees and a halfe. And the coaſt lieth Eaſt and Weſt. The marks be theſe, it ſheweth like heads of trees, and in ſome places certaine rocks with white ſandy bayes. And if the wind be large, thou mayeſt go Eaſt and by South vntill thou ſee the coaſt to lye Northeaſt and Southweſt: and if the wind be ſcant, then go turning vp: and take good heed that euery euening at Sunne going downe thou haue ſight of the land, and ſo thou muſt do being in the chanell, vntill thou bring thy ſelfe into the middeſt of the chanell: and thou muſt lye off from the going downe of the ſunne, vntill the ende of the firſt watch with thy coarſes alone, without any more ſayle; and from midnight forwards caſt about, and lye the other way with the like ſayle vntill day: and thus thou muſt doe vntill thou bring thy ſelfe into the chanel. And if being in the Chanel thou finde the winde large, thou ſhalt ſtirre Northeaſt, with a care to goe cleane off the ſholds of the Mimbres or the Oſiars. And if being in the chanel thou meete with the wind at North, then thou muſt turne with a litle ſaile 4.glaſſes one way, and 4.another, as thou thinkeſt good. And if thou canſt not beare ſayle, then thou mayeſt goe with all thy ſayles downe, except when thou wouldeſt caſt about, thou mayeſt looſe ſome ſmall ſayle to winde thy ſhip.

The ſholds of Mimbres, that is, of Oſiars.

I aduiſe thee, that when thou art come out of the Chanel, thou ſhalt be in 28.degrees. And if it be in ſummer, thou ſhalt goe Northeaſt vntill thou be in 39.degrees and ½, which is the height of Flores: and thou ſhalt goe to the Northward of Bermuda. And if thou thinke good to go in more degrees, to haue the ſeawinds, thou ſhalt goe by the ſame height, as I haue ſayd: and if thou ſhalt finde the winde off the ſea, thou haſt no neede to goe in more heights: and from thence thou ſhalt goe Eaſt and by South: and thou muſt goe thus becauſe of the variation of the Compaſſe. And thus thou ſhalt find the iſles of Flores and Cueruo, which ſtand in 39.degrees ½, and in 40.large. The markes be theſe. *

Thou mayeſt goe from betwixt Flores and Cueruo, and muſt goe Eaſt Southeaſt, and ſo thou ſhalt haue ſight of the Iſland of Sayles, which is the Iſland of S. George. And beeing at the land thou ſhalt goe along it, and when thou haſt doubled a certaine litle Head-land that lyeth in the Eaſt poynt, then thou ſhalt ſtirre Eaſt and by North, and Eaſt. And thus going, thou ſhalt haue ſight of Terçera, which is in 39.degrees. The markes bee theſe. * And behinde a certaine blacke land ſomething high, which is called el Braſil, ſtandeth the Citie called Angra. Going from Terçera, thou ſhalt runne Eaſt Northeaſt, vntill thou bring thy ſelfe Northweſt, and Southeaſt with the Cape of Saint Vincent. And thou mayeſt worke thus being in ſummer: for alwayes thou ſhalt haue the windes at Northweſt. And beeing Northweſt and Southeaſt with this Cape, thou ſhalt ſtirre Southeaſt and by Eaſt, and thou ſhalt ſo fall with the land 6.or 7.leagues to the windward off the Cape on the coaſt, which lyeth North and South: then thou ſhalt goe along the coaſt to the South, vntill thou ſee the Cape. And the Cape ſtandeth in 37.degrees: the markes be theſe. It is a Cape not very hie, and is blacke, ſloping to the ſea. And from thence thou ſhalt double the Aſagreſal Southeaſt: and ſo running, thou ſhalt then goe Eaſt vnto the cape of S. Mary: and from this Cape goe Eaſt Northeaſt, and ſo thou ſhalt runne to haue ſight of Arenas Gordas: and then thou ſhalt ſee preſently a little hill towardes the Eaſt which is called Cabeça de Pedro Garcia. And if thou be benighted, and comming into 8.or 9.fathoms, then I wiſh thee to come to anchor, vntill it be day, and then call for a Pilote, that may by ſome meanes carie thee into harbour.

I aduiſe thee, if in the Winter time thou bee ſhot out of the narroweſt of the Chanel of Bahama, and wouldeſt goe for Spaine, that thou muſt goe Eaſt Northeaſt, vntill thou be in 30.degrees rather leſſe then more; and then thou mayeſt goe Eaſt and by South, becauſe of the variation of the Compaſſe. And ſtirring hence Eaſt Southeaſt, thou ſhalt goe on the Southſide of Bermuda: and muſt goe with great care, becauſe many haue bene loſt heere about this Iſland, becauſe of their negligence. And when thou art ſure thou art paſt this Iſland, then goe Eaſt Northeaſt, vntill thou bee in the height of ſeuen and thirtie degrees: which is in the heigth of the Iſland of Saint Marie. And going thus, and not ſeeing Land, but ſeeing the Sea to breake, make accompt it is the rocks called las Hormigas. GOing from the Cape of S.Nicolas, thou ſhalt goe North Northweſt, but thou muſt keepe to windward off the poynt, that thou mayeſt weather it, & it is called the poynt of Mayaci: and it is a very low land and ſmooth: and aboue vp within the land about a league it hath a long Hill, which is not very high but flat. And from that poynt to Baracoa is 7. leagues.

And being diſpoſed to goe into Baracoa, keepe the weather-ſhore all along, vntill thou open the Harbour. And to knowe if thou bee open of the Harbour, looke vpon the South ſide; and thou ſhalt ſee an Hill by it ſelfe, which maketh as it were a crowne vpon it. And if thou come along, it maketh as it were a Fort with Ports about it: And this is the marke if thou come out of the Sea. And this Hill is North and South of the Harbour, ouer the Harbour of Baracoa. And if thou wilt goe in, thou muſt take heede of a Shoald which lyeth on the Eaſt ſide, and thou muſt keepe the Weſt ſide: and goe not much from the Shoald, becauſe the foote of the Shoald that ſhooteth Weſtward hath 5. fathoms water. And when thou art within the Shoalds, thou muſt goe a litle within them, and then let fall an anchor: and looke that thou come not much on the Eaſt ſide, for it is ſhoaldie.

For before you come at it by 2. leagues or more, you ſhall vnderſtand that it hath a poynt of lowe land, and vpon the poynt it hath a Palme tree; which tree you ſhall ſee alwayes, before you ſee the point: and it is like a ſayle. From thence to The Pracellas or Flats you ſhall ſtirre Northweſt two parts of your way, that you haue to runne from Cayo de Moa to the ſayd Pracellas or Flats, and the one halfe part of the way North Northweſt and by Weſt. And this way you ſhall ſee The Pracellas or Flats in a cleane place of the ſhoald aboue the water, for all the breach of the ſea. And if you will goe with the Pracellas or Flats, you ſhall finde 4. or 5. fathomes: and you may goe ſure without danger a Northweſt courſe vntilll you come in 7. fathomes. And if you will goe vpon the Shoald, you ſhall goe vpon that depth, vntill you haue runne 40. or 45. leagues: And from thence you ſhall ſet your courſe Southweſt, till you ſee the Flattes of the maine land. You ſhall then ſee to the Weſtward a rocke diuided into 3. partes, which is called the Camoloquea. And looke that when you come from the Pracellas Southweſt, you haue certaine Flats before you: take heede of them that you fall not by night with them by foure leagues, for feare of the Mecala: and you ſhall ſet your courſe Weſt Northweſt vntill day: and when it is day, you muſt beare cloſe aboord the ſhore, and then you ſhall ſee a flat Iſland with many broken ſands, which is called Cropeda, and lyeth but a little out of the trade way, ſomewhat to the Northward. Off that you ſhall ſee 2. Rocks of ſtone, which are the poynt of all the Flats: And two leagues from them on the mayne land you ſhall ſee a poynt which ſheweth like broken land. This is called The poynt of Caucus. And from that poynt to Matanças on the Northſide of Cuba are 12. leagues, and your courſe lieth Weſt and by North: and then you muſt borrow vpon the land all that you can, becauſe of the currents: for the currents will cary you into the Chanell. And being at Matanças, you muſt runne all along the ſhore, becauſe of the currents. Remember that when you ſee one league before you a Rocke, and a Shoald, that hath vpon it but 2. fathomes water; and your marke if you come out of the ſea is an Hill, and the Hil is not very hie, it ſtandeth Eaſt and Weſt, and vpon it are ſome little riſings and they are not very high, and vpon theſe riſings ſtand two round homocks cloſe together, you ſhall ſee the Teates of Hauana.

The harbour of Xaroca.
Markes to know the harbour of Hauana.

To know along the ſhore when you are againſt the Harbour of Xaroca, the markes are theſe. A little to the Weſtward one league, you ſhall ſee along the ſhore a Hill that is broken, and that broken Hill is ouer the Harbour of Xaroca: and then a little more to the Weſtward a league, there is another broken Hill. And you ſhall ſee that North and South from theſe broken hils is a Flat off. And from that to Hauana is 7. leagues: and it is all cleane ground, and you may goe along the ſhore till you come to Hauana. To know the harbour of Hauana, you ſhall ſee before you come at it one litle rocke of ſtone not very hie, and ſmooth toward the ſea: vpon the rocke ſtandeth a litle white tower, wherein they keepe watch. And then if you haue the winde large, you ſhall ſee the harbour open, and then you may beare in with it.

Your ſhippe being of great burthen, when you are within, then keepe on the Weſt ſide, becauſe on the Eaſt ſide, on the Weſt end of the Rocke aforeſayde, there lieth a ledge to the Weſtward, which hath but three or foure fathoms ½ vpon it. If your ſhip be of ſmall burthen, you may run along the weather ſhore, vntill you come right againſt the Caſtle; and then halfe the Bay ouer you may come to an anchor.

How to worke comming through the olde Chanell, if you be not minded to goe ouer the Pracellas or ſhoalds.

If you will come through the olde Chanel, when you come as hie as the Shoalds, comming vpon your courſe from the Caio de Moa, as I told you, keepe 2. leagues from the Pracel or ſhoald: and then ſet our courſe Weſt vnto the low iſlands of the Firme land. And vpon this courſe you ſhal ken the Flats on the point of Caio Romano: and within it is one Flat higher then the other, and ſmooth vpon, and in the middeſt it maketh as it were broken land; and when you are in the chanel in the day time, you muſt take heede you come not neere the ſhore by 2. leagues, and by your ſounding no neerer then 3. fathoms. And you muſt take heede ſtil when yͤ night commeth to keepe 2. or three leagues off for feare of the ſhoalds. And in the night you muſt goe Northweſt as is aforeſaid. And alſo you muſt take heed that you keepe in the middle of the chanel, as nere as you can toward the ſhoald. And finding much wind & being benighted, from midnight till day ſtirre Weſt Northweſt, and when it is towards day, then you may edge towards the Flats as is aforeſaid.

Caio de Moa.

Caio Romano.

And as you ſtirre hence one day and one night from Caio Romano to the inwards of the Chanell, you ſhall ſee the firme land of Cuba, and other markes; and among the reſt, a round hamocke, which you may eaſily know. It is called Alcane de Baraſoga. And from thence to Sauano and to Baſquo is 6. leagues, and likewiſe Hauana 6. leagues. And from thence to croſſe vnder the Fort is 45. leagues. And ſtirre hence vpon your courſe aforeſaid. And if you haue gone from Baraſoga 30. leagues, you ſhall ſee none of the Flats of Mecala: And giue them a bredth off two or three leagues, and keepe your courſe Weſt Northweſt, as aforeſayd, vntill it be day, and preſently you may edge round to the Flats. And thus ſtirring, keepe your courſe vntill you ſee the hilles of Camaloqua.

The Flats of Mecala.

Take heede of that which is here ſayd, for it hath litle reaſon.

And looke that when you come from Caio de Moa, along the Pracel or ſhoald by night cloſe by it, you ſhall not ſee what land it is, till it be day: and in the Morning you ſhall ſet your courſe as is aforeſayd, vntill you ſee the ſhoald, and in ſeeing it, you may ſtirre on your courſe as is aboue mentioned, vntill you come to Hauana.

Sierras de Camaloquea.

Caio de Moa, Pracellas. Hauana.

For to ſet your courſe from the point of Mance to Caio Romano, when you are North and South with the point of Mance, you ſhall ſtirre thence Weſt Northweſt, vntil you thinke you be Northeaſt and Southweſt with the hill of Hama. And this hill is an high hill and ſmooth to the ſeaſide. And from this hill to Caio Romano you ſhall ſtirre Northweſt and by Weſt: and vpon this courſe you may be bolde to ſee Caio Romano. And the marke of this Flat is, that it maketh an hie land and ſmooth vpon the top: and in the middeſt of it, it ſheweth as it were broken. And when you come to it, you muſt take heede you come not neere it by 2. leagues, becauſe it is fowle. And looke that you bring not your ſelfe too neere the hill of Hama by night. For you muſt take heede of Caio Romano to keepe off it vntill Morning: in the Morning you may goe your courſe vntill you ſee it, and then ſet your courſe, as is aboueſaid.

A principal ruttier conteining moſt particular directions to ſaile from S. Lucar in Andaluzia by the Iſles of the Canaries, the ſmall Iſles called Las Antillas, along the South parts of the Iſles of S. Iuan de Puerto rico, Hiſpaniola and Cuba: and from Cabo de Corrientes, or Cabo de S. Anton without and within the litle Iſles called Los Alacranes, to the port of S. Iuan de Vllua in Nueua Eſpanna: and the courſe from thence backe againe by Hauana, and through the Chanell of Bahama to Spaine: together with the ſpeciall markes of all the Capes, Iſlands, and other places by the way; and a briefe declaration of their latitudes and longitudes.

If you depart from the barre of S. Lucar de Barameda toward the Weſt Indias in the Summer time, you muſt ſtirre away Southweſt vntill you come to the head-land called Punta de Naga vpon the Iſle of Tenerif. But if your departure be from the ſayd barre in the Winter, you muſt ſtirre away Southweſt and by South, vntill you come to the height of Cape Cantin on the coaſt of Barbarie: the markes and ſignes whereof be theſe following.

Punta de Naga.

The

The markes to know Cape Cantin.

CApe Cantin is a lowe Cape and ſmall to the ſea-ward, and maketh a ſnowt like the noſe of a galley, and hath vpon the top of the poynt a Heath or ſhrubby place, and on the toppe thereof ſtand two homocks, that to the ſea-ward being higher then the other; but that on the Souther ſide ſheweth like a tower: and this Cape is in 32. degrees and ½.

And he that wil ſeeke from this Cape to diſcouer Punta de Naga beforeſayd, muſt ſtirre away Southweſt and by Weſt, vntill hee bring himſelfe Northeaſt and Southweſt with the ſame point, and then he muſt ſtirre away South to fetch the ſaid point.

The ſignes of Punta de Naga.

Punta de hidalgo.

THe ſaid point or Head-land is an high point of Land, and plaine vpon the toppe like a table, and without it there are two litle rockie Iſlands; and vpon the North ſide of the ſaid point is another point called Punta de hidalgo, and vpon the top thereof are 2. picked rockes like vnto the eares of a Hare.

The courſe from the Canaries to the VVeſt Indies.

The calmes of Fierro.

IF you ſet ſaile from any of the Iſlands of the Canaries for the Weſt Indias, you muſt ſtirre away 30. or 40 leagues due South, to the ende you may auoid the calmes of the Iſland of Fierro: and being ſo farre diſtant from the ſaid Iſland, then muſt you ſtirre away Weſt Southweſt, vntill you finde your ſelfe in 20. degrees, and then ſaile Weſt and by South vntill you come to 15. degrees and ½. And from thence ſtirre away Weſt and by North; and ſo ſhall you make a Weſt way by reaſon of the Northweſting of the Compaſſe: which Weſt way will bring you to the Iſland of Deſeada.

The variation of the compaſſe.

The markes of the Iſland of Deſeada.

THis Iſland Deſeada lieth Eaſt Northeaſt, and Weſt Southweſt, hauing no trees vpon it, and it is proportioned like a Galley, and the Northeaſt ende thereof maketh a lowe noſe like the ſnowt of a galley; and by comming neere it, and paſſing by the Norther ende thereof, you ſhall perceiue white broken patches like heapes of ſand with red ſtrakes in them: & the Southweſt end of this Iſland maketh like the tilt of a galley. And this Iſland ſtandeth in 15. degrees and ½.

Deſeada in 15. degrees and a halfe.

Markes of the Iſland of Monſerate.

MOnſerate is an high Iſland, and round, full of trees, and vpon the Eaſt ſide thereof you ſhall perceiue certain white ſpots like ſheetes; and being vpon the South ſide at the very point of the Iſland, ſomewhat off the land, it maketh like a litle Iſland: and putting your ſelfe either Eaſt or Weſt from that point, in the midſt thereof will appeare a great broken land.

Markes of the Iſland of Marigalanta.

MArigalanta is a ſmooth Iſland, and full of wood or trees, and as it were of the faſhion of a galley vpon her decke: and being on the Southeaſt ſide about halfe a league off you ſhall make certaine homocks of blacke ſtones, and certain white patches: but on the Weſt ſide appeare faire white ſandy ſhores or plaines.

Markes of the Iſle of Dominica.

THe Iſland of Dominica lieth Northweſt and Southeaſt, and vpon the Northweſt ſide it ſheweth more high: and if you come neere it at full ſea, it will ſhew like two Iſlands, but by comming neerer vnto it, you ſhall perceiue it to be but one: and vpon the Southeaſt ſide you ſhall make or ſee a plaine and long point, and vpon the ſame point appeareth a cliffe like to the cliffe of Cape Tiburon; and vpon the North ſide a litle from the land it ſheweth like a litle Iſland, and vpon the top thereof is, as it were, an high ſteeple, and vpon the Norther ſide you ſhall perceiue it like many white ſheetes.

Markes of the Iſland of Guadalupe.

THe Iſland of Guadalupe lieth on the Weſt of Deſeada, and vpon the Southweſt part thereof appeare many hie mountaines, but vpon the Eaſt ſide it maketh certaine tables, which are called the high part of Guadalupe. And this Iſland is cut North and South; ſo that the Canoas of India do paſſe from the North to the South of it, as if it were two Iſlands.

Markes of the Iſle of Matalina, or Martinino.

The Iſle of Matalina is high and full of mountaines, hauing in the midſt thereof 3. homocks: the middlemoſt homocke being higheſt ſheweth like the great bowle of an hat. And vpon the North ſide it appeareth like three litle Iſlands. And in this Iſland there are warlik Indians like thoſe of Dominica.

Warlike and dangerous Indians like thoſe of Dominica.

Markes of the three ſmall Iſlands called Iſlas de Los Santos, or the Iſlands of Saintes.

Los Santos are 3. Iſlandes lying one cloſe by another vpon the South ſide of Guadalupe. For to goe with S. Iuan de Puerto rico you muſt ſtirre away Northweſt, vntill you fall with the Iſle of Saba.

Markes to know the Iſle of Saba.

Saba is a litle Iſland, and round about it you ſhall ſee the bottome; but feare not, for there is no danger but that which you ſhall ſee; and round about it, it maketh as it were certaine heapes of white ſand; and by the ſide thereof it ſheweth like a Ship vnder ſaile: but follow that direction that I haue giuen, and you ſhall ſee La virgin gorda.

Markes to know the Iſle called La virgin gorda.

La virgin gorda is an high Iſland and round, and ſeeing it, you ſhall eſpie all the reſt of the Virgines which lye Eaſt and Weſt one from another, and are bare without any trees. You may goe about by them vntil you ſee the litle gray Iſland, which you ſhal ſee by it ſelfe by the Virgines; and comming neere to the ſayd Iſland, ouer that you ſhall by and by rayſe ſight of the white litle Iſland, which ſeemeth like a ſhip vnder ſaile. And if you will paſſe betweene this litle white Iſland or bare rocke, and the greene Iſland, you muſt beware that you leaue the white Iſland on the larbourd ſide of you, and come no neerer it then a Calieuer-ſhot, and ſo ſhall you paſſe through 12. fadome-water: and then ſtirre away Northnorthweſt, and ſo ſhall you enter into the Hauen of Puerto rico: and if you chance to paſſe the ſayd Iſland by night, goe by the foreſaid direction, vntill the firſt watch be out, and then take in your ſayles, and ſo driue vntill it bee neere day: and then hoiſe ſayles, and ſtirre away Southweſt, ſeeking the ſayde Port: and when you come to the entring within, you muſt ſtay till 10. of the clocke for the ſea-turne. And know, that hauing the Loguilo at Southweſt, then ſhall the Harbour be off you North and South.

Theſe 2. the white and the gray Iſlands are rather bare rockes in the ſea, for ſo doth Farrallon the Spaniſh word ſignifie. But I interprete it Iſland, becauſe all the rocks ſeparated frõ the bigger Iſlands are ſayd to be litle Iſlands. This white & bare Iſland is made white by the dung of birdes and ſea-foules that reſort vnto it.

Directions from Monſerate to Santa Cruz.

He that departeth from Monſerate to Santa Cruz, muſt ſtirre away Weſtnorthweſt: and by the ſame courſe you ſhall ſeaze vpon S. Iuan de Puerto rico.

Markes to know the Iſle of Santa Cruz.

Santa Cruz is an Iſland not very high, all full of homocks: and comming with it at full ſea, it will ſhew like the Virgines: and vpon the Eaſt ſide there are two homocks higher then all the reſt. And by this courſe you may goe to the Iſle of S. Iuan de Puerto rico; and hauing found it, you may ſayle along the South coaſt Eaſt and Weſt, vntill you come to Cabo Roxo.

Markes to know Cape Roxo.

Cape Roxo is a low Cape and trayling to the ſea-ward, hauing certaine heapes of broken ground thereon, which are like a homocke, and at full ſea the ſame ſheweth like a litle Iſland from the land by it ſelfe, but comming neere vnto it, it will make all a whole land.

Directions from Cabo roxo to the Iſle of Mona.

If you will ſeeke Mona frõ Cape roxo, you muſt ſtirre away Weſt and by North.

Markes of the Iſle of Mona.

The Iſle of Mona is a low, round, and ſmooth Iſland, lying lowe by the ſea, and full of trees: and to goe from thence to the Iſle of Saona you muſt ſtirre away Weſt; and if you fall with it in the night ſeaſon, and come any thing neere the land, then ſtirre away Weſt and by South, vntill it be neere day, that you may keepe your ſelfe by the land; and if ſo be that in the Morning you ſee it not, then ſtirre away Northweſt, and ſo ſhall you finde it: and if it be faire weather, and you perceiue that the current hath ſet you to the Southweſt, then ſtirre away Northnorthweſt, and ſo ſhall you goe cleare off the land.

Markes of the Iſle of Saona.

If you chance to ſee the Iſle of Saona, it is an Iſland ſmooth with the ſea, and lyeth Northeaſt and Southweſt, and you ſhall ſee the trees before you ſee the Iſland: and on the Southweſt end of this Iſland appeareth a great high banke of white ſand which is called the head of Saona. And if you would come to an anchor, you may, for all is cleare ground. And to go from this Iſland to Santa Catelina, you muſt ſtirre away Northweſt.

Markes of the Iſle of Santa Catelina.

Santa Catelina is a litle lowe Iſland all full of low rockes euen from the water, and hath not any trees, and it is cloſe by the land; and if you doe not run along the coaſt of Hiſpaniola, you ſhall not ſee it: and from that Iſland to goe to Saint Domingo, you ſhall ſayle along as the land lyeth, Weſt and by North: and before you come to the point called Cauſedo, you ſhall ſee certaine holes in rockes, which lye alongſt as the rocks doe that caſt vp the water, which will ſhew like to the ſpouting of Whales. And a litle ahead off that, you ſhall ſee the point of Andreſa: and ahead thereof the poynt of Cauſedo. This poynt of Cauſedo lyeth lowe cloſe by the water, and paſſing thereby, the coaſt will make to thee Northweſt and Southeaſt; and from thence to S. Domingo are 5. leagues. And if the winde chop vp at North vpon you, by meanes whereof you ſhould be caſt off from the coaſt or Port, and that you happen to ſee the olde Mines (called Sierras de las minas viejas) beare Northweſt off you, and The teates which are within the land be open of you, then ſhal you be North and South with the harbour; and if The old Mines beare North off you, then ſhall you be below the harbour.

These rockes are called Los Buffaderos, or the ſpouters.

Directions from Saint Domingo to Nueua Eſpanna.

If you will ſayle from Saint Domingo in Hiſpaniola to Nueua Eſpanna, ſtirre away Southſouthweſt, vntil you come vp as farre as the point of Niçao: and from thence ſtirre away Weſtſouthweſt, and ſo you ſhall finde the Iſle of Beata. And if you ſaile from this point of Niçao for Ocoa, you muſt paſſe along the coaſt Weſt and by North, vntill you come to Puerto Hermoſo, or The beautifull hauen, which is 18. leagues diſtant from Saint Domingo: and if you proceede from Puerto Hermoſo for Nueua Eſpanna, you muſt ſtirre away Southſouthweſt, vntill you looke out for Beata and Alto velo.

Markes of the Iſle of Beata.

Beata is a ſmall Iſland and not very high: you may paſſe along the outſide thereof, and there is no danger but that you may ſee; and by and by you ſhall raiſe Alto velo: and from thence you muſt ſtirre away Weſt and by South, to giue a birth from the Iſlands called Los Frailes, or The Friers. And when you are as farre ahead as the Frailes, then muſt you ſtirre away Weſt and by North, and ſo ſhall you goe right with Bacoa, and before you come to it, you ſhall ſee high craggie cliffes, and at the deſcending of them white paths like great ſheetes; theſe high craggie mountaines are called Las ſierras de donna Maria. And before you come to the ſayde point of Bacoa, you ſhall diſcouer a little lowe Iſland euen with the Sea and full of trees, which is called Iſla Baque.

Directions from Iſla Baque to Cape Tiburon.

If you will goe from the Iſland Baque, or from the point of Bacoa for Cape Tiburon, or to the iſle of Nauaza, you muſt ſtirre away Weſtnorthweſt, and edge in ſomewhat to the Northweſt, and you ſhall paſſe betweene Nauaza and Cape Tiburon.

Cape Tiburon.
The Iſle of Nauaza.

Markes of Cape Tiburon, which is the Weſtern cape of Hiſpaniola.

Cape Tiburon lyeth ſliding downe to the Seaward, and maketh a ſharpe cliffe like the ſnout of a Tiburon or ſharke-fiſh; and vpon the top thereof it appeareth like white wayes with certaine gullets or draines vpon it, which are cauſed by the paſſage of the water from the mountaine in the Winter time.

Markes of the Iſle of Nauaza.

Nauaza is a litle round Iſland full of low trees or ſhrubs, and it lyeth Eaſt and Weſt from Cape Tiburon, and from this ſmall Iſland to go for Sierras de Cobre, or The mountaines or mines of Copper vpon the Southeaſt part of Cuba, you muſt ſtirre away Northnorthweſt.

Directions from Cape Tiburon to Cabo de Cruz in Cuba.

If you will ſaile from Cape Tiburon to Cape de Cruz in Cuba, you muſt ſtirre away Northweſt, and you ſhall ſee the Sierras or mountaines de Cobre; and from thence you may goe along the coaſt Weſt towardes Cabo de Cruz; and before you come at it you ſhall ſee The great Tarquino, and from this Tarquino you ſhall haue to Cape de Cruz 30. leagues, and this great Tarquino is the higheſt land vpon all that coaſt; and then by and by you ſhall ſee the leſſer Tarquino, from whence to the foreſayd Cape you haue 12. leagues, and ſo ſhall you goe diſcouering the coaſt, vntill you come to Cabo de Cruz.

Sierras de Cobre.

Sierras de Tarquino.

Markes of Cabo de Cruz.

Cape de Cruz is a low Cape full of ſhrubs; and from thence Weſtward you ſhall ſee no land; for the diſtance or bay is great betweene the ſayd Cape and the Iſles called Los Iardines.

Directions from Cape de Cruz to Iſla de Pinos.

If you ſayle from Cape de Cruz to ſeeke the Iſland of Pinos, you muſt ſtir away Weſtnorthweſt. And note, that if in this courſe you happen to ſounde, doe not feare; for you haue nine fathoms. If alſo going this courſe, you meete with certaine little Iſlands vpon the larboord ſide, which are called The Caimanes, or The crocodiles, hauing ſight of them, ſtir away Northweſt, and ſo ſhall you finde the Iſland of Pinos. And if by ſeeing the ſayde Iſlands called Caimanes you are amazed, you ſhall knowe by the latitude, whither they bee The Iardines or no: for if you finde your ſelfe in one and twentie degrees, then bee you ſure they are The Iardines, and then ſtir out againe South, till you bee cleare of them; and when you haue brought them North of you, then may you ſtirre away Weſt, if it bee by day; if it bee by night, Weſt and by South, till you ſee the Iſland of Pinos.

Los Caimanes.

Los Iardines.

The markes of Iſla de Pinos.

The Iſland of Pinos ſtretcheth it ſelfe Eaſt and Weſt, and it is full of homocks, and if you chance to ſee it at full ſea, it will ſhewe like 3. Iſlands, as though there were diuers ſoundes betweene them, and that in the midſt is the greateſt; and in rowing with them, it will make all a firme lande: and vpon the Eaſt ſide of theſe three homocks it will ſhewe all ragged; and on the Weſt ſide of them will appeare vnto you a lowe point euen with the ſea, and oftentimes you ſhall ſee the trees before you ſhall diſcerne the point.

Directions from the Iſle of Pinos to Cape de Corrientes.

If you ſaile from the foreſayde Iſle of Pinos to Cape de Corrientes, ſtir away Weſt and by North; and before you come to the ſayd Cape vpon the Northſide of you, you ſhall ſee certaine mountaines all full of homocks, which are called Las Sierras de Guanaguanico, and that vpon the Weſt part hath more homocks then that on the other.

Las ſierras de Guanaguarico.

Markes of Cape de Corrientes.

Cape de Corrientes is a lowe Cape, though not ſo low as the other part of the land that lyeth along by it: for it is more lowe, and hath vpon it 4. or 5. great ſplats like vnto oxen, and the very point of the Cape is all white ſand: and from thence Weſtward you ſhall diſcerne no lande, for it maketh a great bay: and from hence you muſt ſaile to Cape de Sant Anton.

Markes of Cape de Sant Anton.

The cape of Sant Anton is lowe by the ſea, and all full of ſhrubs or trees; and you ſhall ſee within the land a lake of freſh water; and if you want water, there you may water: and vpon the North ſide of the ſaid Cape you ſhall diſcerne a palme tree higher then the reſt of the trees, and it ſheweth round like a bowle at the top, like to the top of a ſhip: and North from the Cape are certaine ſholdes which are 2. or 3. leagues long.

A conuenient watering place.

Directions from the Cape de S. Anton to Nueua Eſpanna on the outſide of the ſmall Iſlands called Los Alacranes or The Scorpions.

If you will ſayle from Cape Sant Anton to Nueua Eſpanna with a North winde, then ſtirre away Weſtnorthweſt from 21. to 22. degrees, and then ſound vpon the pracel or flat; and if you ſee by this direction, that you holde water, then ſtir away Northweſt, vntill you loſe the ground; and then follow your courſe againe, vntill you haue brought your ſelfe into 24. degrees and ½. and then ſaile Weſt vntill you bring your ſelfe North and South with the Iſle Vermeja, or The red Iſle: then ſtir away Southweſt, and by this way you ſhall finde Villa rica on the coaſt of Nueua Eſpanna. And if by going this courſe you be in 19. degrees and ½. and chance not to ſee the lande, then ſtir away Weſt vntill you ſee Villa rica, and from thence ſaile you South for the harbour of S. Iuan de Villua: and if you ſhould be neere the land you muſt ſtir South and by Weſt towardes the ſame harbour. And if you chance to ſee the Volcan or burning hill to beare weſt & by South from you, then know, that the harbour of S. Iuan de Villua ſhalbe Eaſt and weſt off you.

A volcan or burning hil.

Markes of Villa rica.

Villa rica ſtandeth in 19. degres and ½. and the ſignes thereof are certaine high hilles full of homocks of many heads, which haue on the top of thē certain white patches after the maner of white beaten wayes; and theſe hils lie Northeaſt and Southweſt. And if you doubt whether theſe be the Sierras or hils of S. Martin, wet your lead or ſound, and if you finde bottome, they are the Sierras of Villa rica: and ſaile you to the landward, and looke by how much you come neerer the land, ſo much will they ſeeme lower vnto you: but ſo doe not the hilles of S. Martin; for the neerer you come to them, the higher will they appeare to you: and likewiſe if they be the hilles of S. Martin, you ſhall not finde bottome, but euen at land it ſelfe.

Rio de las palmas.
Rio de las montannas.
Rio de Panuco.
Rio Hermoſo, or The beautifull riuer.
The current of the bay of Mexico (the winde being at the Eaſt) ſetteth to the North, and 40. leagues from the ſhore to the Northeaſt.

If you ſhould chance to fall with Rio de las palmas, or The riuer of palmes, or els with the riuer of Mountaines, it is all a plaine lande, and full of trees and certaine woodie homocks, and among them certaine heapes of ſand, and all this along by the ſea ſide: and if you went by land to the riuer of Panuco, you ſhall haue many mouthes or openings of plaias or ſtrands, where alſo are many lizas or oazy places, which ſtretch to Rio Hermoſo.

You muſt beware what part ſoeuer you happen of this coaſt to fall withall, to diſcouer it, and although you knowe it, you muſt ſound the depth; becauſe if the windes bee Eaſterly, the current ſetteth there much to the North: but if you ſhould be 40. leagues at ſea, then this current ſetteth to the Northeaſt.

Markes of Rio Hermoſo or The beautifull riuer.

If you wil ſeeke the riuer called Rio Hermoſo, looking well within the land, you ſhal ſee three homocks of an high hill, and thoſe two which are to the landward within, are rounder thē the other which is neereſt the ſea, for that it is longer and bigger, and lyeth North and South, and you ſhall be 4. leagues at ſea when you ſhall ſee them: and they are called The ſierras, or mountaines of Tamaclipa; and from thence to the riuer of Panuco there is no high land, but all lowe and euen with the ſea, and full of palme trees and other trees.

The mountaines of Tamaclipa.

Markes of the riuer of Panuco.

If you fall with the riuer of Panuco (betweene which and the foreſayde Villa rica ſtandeth the Iſland called Iſla de Lobos or The Iſle of ſeales) the markes bee theſe. From the mouth of the riuer it maketh a great bay without, and at the ende of this bay vpon the Northſide there is oazy, low, and bare ground altogether without trees, and at the out ende of the oazy lowe place vpon the Weſt ſide it maketh a low homock like to a Lizards head: and when you ſee the aforeſayde cliffe, you ſhall bee in the opening of the mouth of the ſayd riuer, and then ſhall you ſee a little low tower hauing on the top of it a croſſe, which the fiſhermen call Marien: and this barre hath on it 2. fathom water, and 2. and ½. and you neede not to ſtay for the tyde, for that it floweth not there: and that you may the better knowe whether you bee in this bay which I haue mentioned, or not, you ſhall ſee certaine hils at Weſt Southweſt, which are called Las ſierras de Tarquia; and forthwith alſo you ſhall ſee the oazy place that I ſpeake of, which goeth to the mouth of the riuer, where ſtandeth a towne called S. Luis de Tampice, and from thence to Panuco you haue 9. leagues by land.

The markes of Iſla de lobos, or The Iſle of ſeales.

Iſla de lobos is a ſmall Iſland nothing ſo big as the carde doth ſhew it, and in it is a litle groue or wood of palme trees, and all the reſt of the Iſland is without trees, and round about it are ſundry

Playas or ſtrandes, and it is incloſed round about with arraçifes or ſhoalds, and chiefly toward the maine lande. And from thence to Cape Roxo or The red Cape are 3. leagues. And if you will come to anker at this Iſland to water, for that there is water in it, you may ride on all the South ſide cloſe by the poynt that ſtretcheth to the Weſtward, and you may paſſe by the Eaſt ſide of it, and ride in 22. fathom, and untill you come to 15. fathoms, all is cleane ground.

Cabo Roxo. A watering place.

Markes of the riuer of Tuſpa.

If you fall with the riuer of Tuſpa, you muſt beware the ſholdes which run 5. or 6. leagues into the ſea: and vpon this riuer of Tuſpa within the lande there are high hilles which lie Northeaſt and Southweſt, and haue their ending vpon the bay of Caſſones: and vpon the riuer you ſhall perceiue a white cliffe, which will ſhew vnto you like the caſtle of S. Iuan de Vllua.

The bay of Caſſones.

Markes of the riuer of S. Peter and S. Paul.

If you chance to fall with the bay of Caſſones, and vpon the riuer of S. Peter and S. Paul, take heede: for the ſayd bay is a deepe bay, and the hilles of Tuſpa haue their ending vpon this bay. And in the mouth of this riuer of S. Peter and S. Paul are two homockes of white ſand, the Weſtermoſt being bigger then that on the Northeaſt. And by and by you ſhall perceiue the water to change white which commeth out of the riuer, and ſounding you ſhall finde ſande mixed with clay vpon your lead; and looke vpon the Weſt ſide, and you ſhall ſee the Sierras or mountaines of S. Paul, which are two, and that on the North ſide is higher then the other.

All theſe are vpon the coaſt of Tabaſco. Las ſierras de S. Pablo.

Markes of Almeria.

If you ſhould chance to fall or come vpon the plaines of Almeria, it is a lande full of many homocks, ſome with tuftes of trees on them, and ſome bare with white ſand, and in 60. fathoms you ſhall haue clay or oaze, and in 30. fathom to the landward ſand. And from thence to Punta de hidalgo or Punta delgada the coaſt lyeth Northeaſt and Southweſt.

Punta delgada, or The ſlendor point.

Soundings of Villa rica.

If you fall with Villa rica in 30. fathoms, you ſhall finde clay or oaze, and in ſome places ſtones, and neere the lande you ſhall haue ſand: and vpon the port of S. Iuan de Vllua you ſhall haue in ſome places clay or oaze, and in ſome places herring bones, and in other places maſe and and vpon the rocks called Cabeças anegadas you ſhall haue ſmall blacke ſande at 17. fathom two leagues from land. And if you ſee a coaſt that lieth Northeaſt and Southweſt, and another Northweſt and Southeaſt, you ſhall be vpon S. Paul: and if you ſhould be vpon Cabeças anegadas, you ſhall finde in 30. fathoms great ſand & blacke, and in 28. fathoms you ſhall haue the ſand white like the ſhauings of free ſtone: and from S. Paul to the barre of Vera Cruz it is clay or oaze, and from thence to S. Iuan de Vllua you haue many deeps, which at one ſounding bring you clay, and at another ſand, and at another clay and maſe together, and herring bones: and in ſome 35. or 40. fathom you ſhal finde rockie ground, and in ſome places ſand, and in ſome other places herring bones: and we call this Comedera de peſcado, or The foode of fiſhes.

The courſe from Cabo de Corrientes and Cabo de S. Anton vpon the Weſt end of Cuba, towards Nueua Eſpanna, within the Iſles called Los Alacranes, or The Scorpions.

If you ſaile from Cape de Corrientes towarde Nueua Eſpanna on the inſide of The Alacranes, you muſt ſtir Weſt: and when you thinke you haue ſailed 35. or 40. leag. you ſhall ſound vpon the pracel, and you ſhall come vpon many briſtlings of waters, which, if it were faire weather, would ſeeme a ſkull of fiſh. And before you come out of the briſtlings, if you ſound you ſhal haue depth as I haue ſayd. If you goe from Cape de S. Anton by the inſide of The Alacranes, you muſt ſtir away Weſt and by South, and you ſhall finde ſounding in the ſame order as I haue ſayd: you ſhall haue white ſand, and neere the land you ſhall finde it like the ſhauings and peckings of free ſtone, and white ſand like houre-glaſſe-ſand, and ſometimes periwinkles or ſmall ſhelles. Alſo if you ſound in deepe water, and on the ſudden finde rockes, then knowe that you are vpon The Alacranes, and then ſtir away Weſtſouthweſt vntill you finde cleane ground, and til you bring your ſelfe into 18. or 20. fathoms. And if you goe deeping your water, then ſtir away Weſt, and by theſe depths you ſhall go ſounding; and then taking your heigth by ſunne or ſtarre, you muſt beware that you paſſe not 21. degrees & ⅓. or 21. degrees

Sierras de S. Martin.

Roca partida.

Or Minſapa.

When you haue loſt your depth, ſtirre away Southweſt to fetch the Sierras or hils of S. Martin: and to knowe the hils of S. Martin, there are 2. hils ſtretching Northeaſt and Southweſt, and the Southweſt is greater then that on the Northeaſt, but the Northermoſt hill is higher, and maketh on the top a flat point and very high, and without it, it hath an Iſland which is called Roca partida, or The clouen rock: and if it be cleare, on the Southweſt ſide an high lande like a top-ſaile will appeare, and then ſhall you bee North and South with The Pan or Loafe of Niſapa. Note, that theſe Sierras or Hilles of Sant Martin are all blacke and full of trees, and make no ſhewe as Villa rica doth: And marke this, that by how much you come neerer them, ſo much the higher will they ſhewe vnto you: neither ſhall you finde any bottome till you bee at the very ſhoare.

Las Tortugas.

If you depart from S. Iuan de Vllua to Hauana, you muſt ſtir away Northeaſt vntill you bring your ſelfe in 25. degrees, and from thence you muſt ſtir away Eaſt from the little Iſlands called Las Tortugas, vntill you haue the ſounding of them; and if you finde white ſande very ſmall, you ſhall bee Eaſt and Weſt with them, and if your ſounding bee ſhellie ground and periwinkles, or ſmall ſhelles or ſkales, then ſhall you be Northeaſt and Southweſt, and the ſhelles or ſkales muſt bee red, and if at ſome time you take vp blacke ſande, then are you North and South with the ſayd Tortugas.

Markes of The Tortugas.

If you chance to fall with The Tortugas, they are 5. or 6. little Iſlands of white ſand, lowe and cloſe by the ſea, ſauing one which hath on it ſome ſhrubs or buſhes of trees: and they are in 25. degrees.

La meſa de Marien.

If you depart from The Tortugas towards Hauana with a freſh winde, you muſt ſtir away Southweſt: and if it be faire weather, and a ſmall gale of winde, then ſtir South, that the current may not draw you in, nor ſet you too much to the Weſtward: and if you fall with Los Organos, they are a ranke of high and low hilles with many ſharpe heads like vnto Organ pipes, and at the entring thereof on the South ſide is Rio de puercos, or The riuer of hogs; and at the further ende is the deepe bay called Baya honda, and there is the round loafe or heape called El pan de baya honda, that is to ſay, The loafe of the deepe bay: and from this place vntill you come to Cape de S. Anton all is ſholdes and flats 4. or 5. leagues into the ſea, euen as farre as the ſayde Cape: and from Baya honda or The deepe bay to Hauana, all the coaſt is full of high and lowe hilles, which they call La Quadrilla de ſierras, which is as much to ſay, as A companie of hilles together like ſouldiers on a heape; and more to the Eaſtward you ſhall deſcry an high hill which is called El pan de Cabannas. And if you fall with Hauana, you ſhall ſee on the Southweſt ſide an hill called La meza de Marien, or The Table of Marien; and if it be cleare, you ſhall ſee lower to the Weſtwarde the heape or loafe that is called El pan de Cabannas. You muſt note, that about bout Hauana it is all lowe land euen with the ſea, till you come to Mela de Marien, and then looke well within the lande, and you ſhall ſee 2. little round trees like to the teates of womens breaſts; and bringing your ſelfe North and South, you ſhall be with the harborough of Hauana, and then ſhall you ſoone perceiue the tower that is vpon the cliffes of Hauana.

The tower of Hauana.

Markes of the hauen or port called Puerto de Marien.

Puerto de Marien is a harbour that you may enter into without any danger or feare, but at the entrance thereof you muſt borrow on the Weſt ſide, by reaſon of the rockes and ſhelues, and when you are within, then borrow on the Eaſt ſhoare, and leaue the other ſide, and ſo ſhall you enter ſafe: and from this place to Hauana is all lowe lande. Note, that if you ouerpaſſe the harborough of Hauana to the Eaſtward, or if the current hath ſet you paſt it by meanes of calmes, then ſhall you perceiue at full ſea vpon the coaſt certaine broken places like the enterances of harbours, becauſe the lande is lowe; and comming neere the ſhoare you ſhall ſee in ſome places of the coaſt Playas or ſtrandes of ſande which ſhew like vnto Chipiona: and looking Eaſtward along the ſea coaſt, you ſhall ſee a round loafe which is called El pon de Matanças: and alſo you ſhall perceiue in certaine places round white heapes of ſande called Barrancas. If you will recouer Hauana, go along the coaſt cloſe by the lande, for the current runneth very ſwift in the chanell, and there is no feare but of that which you may ſee; for all the coaſt is cleane ground.

The courſe from Hauana to Spaine.

If you will ſaile from Hauana to Spaine, you muſt ſtirre away Northeaſt, till you come to the head of The Martires called La Cabeça de los Martires. If it chance before you come to the ſaid head, that the winde ſhould chop vp at North on you, then ſtand to the Eaſtward, vntill you bring your ſelfe as farre ahead as Matanças; then caſt about to the Weſt, to diſcouer the lande of The Martires, or of Florida, that the current may not ſet you on The Mimbres: and if by chance you ſee The Pan de Matanças at ful ſea, it hath theſe markes following. It is a round heape or loafe, and high withall, and on the Weſterne ſide thereof, appeareth a rocke like to the head of a Tortoiſe: and betweene this Pan and the hilles of Seluco, there will appeare vnto you a great broken lande, like as it were ſunken places, and vpon the Eaſt ſide of this Pan toward Punta de los Puercos it is all lowe lande, and you ſhall ſee no high lande at all: and being ſo farre ſhot, that this Pan de Matanças ſhall beare Weſtnorthweſt and Southſoutheaſt off you, and being deſirous alſo to auoyde the furie of the current of the chanell of Bahama, ſtir away Northnortheaſt, and by this courſe you ſhall paſſe the chanell, and win the coaſt of Florida.

The courſe to come through the chanell of Bahama homeward for Spaine.

If in Winter you ſhould paſſe through the chanell of Bahama for Spaine, ſtirre away the firſt Sangradura or courſe Eaſtnortheaſt, and afterward Eaſt and by North, and ſo ſhall you paſſe by the South ſide of Bermuda: and you muſt take heede that you goe theſe foure hundred or fiue hundred leagues, becauſe you ſhall not come neere the ſaid Iſle of Bermuda; & when you are gone this courſe, then put your ſelfe in what heigth you will, and make your way as you will your ſelfe. But if you paſſe the chanell in the Summer time towards Spaine, ſtir away Eaſtnortheaſt, and you ſhall paſſe by the North ſide of Bermuda; and when you haue brought your ſelfe in 35. degrees, ſtirre Eaſt and by North, vntill you bring your ſelfe to 25. degrees and ½, and from thence ſtir away Eaſt for the Iſle of Fayal or of Flores.

And from this Iſland being one of The Açores, you may ſhape your courſe to which of the Iſlands you pleaſe, or to any other place which you know.

Markes to know the Iſle of Flores.

IF you happen to fall with Flores firſt, by this you ſhall know it: the Iſland lyeth Northeaſt and Southſouthweſt, and the Weſt ende thereof maketh a rocke or cliffe like the cliffe of Tiburon; and comming neere the lande, you ſhall ſee two little Iſlands neere the point of the lande; and to the Northward of this cliffe or rocke a little from the land you may ride and water; and betweene that and the village, in euery bay you may likewiſe ride and water: and you ſhall ſee the water run into the ſea in euery part that you looke on.

And if it ſhould be neere night when you ſee this lande, ſtir away Northweſt with a ſmall ſayle, becauſe of certaine rockes called Las Ouejas, or The Sheepe: and in the morning caſt about to ſee the land to the Southweſtward; and if when you ſee the land, it ſeemeth vnto you a ſmall iſland at full ſea like a round mountaine, then is it The cape del Enganno: and from thence ſtir away Weſt and by North toward Cabo Franco.

And from thence ſtir away Weſt, and you ſhall ſee an high mountaine, and on the top thereof a cloudie homock like the top of a hat,; and at the foote of this hill is the hauen or harbour called El puerto de plata, And if you will goe into this port, you muſt leaue the Iſland on the Weſt ſide, and then take heede of that which you ſee, and borrow on the caſtles ſide. And from thence to goe with the olde chanell, you muſt ſtirre away Northweſt, vntill you come out of ſight of lande, and then ſtir away Weſt and by North, and ſo ſhall you goe with the lande of Baracoa, and here are hilles very high, which make the teats which looke like 3. crownes. And you ſhall paſſe betweene the Iſle of Tortugas or Hinagua, and the Iſland of Iaico; and from thence run alongſt the coaſt Northeaſt and Southweſt; and hauing doubled the outmoſt high hill or mountaine, you ſhall ſee in the midſt thereof a round hill, and vpon the Southweſt ſide by the ſea you ſhall ſee a lowe euen lande foure or fiue leagues long, and a lowe point, and this point of the hill is called Las ſierde Cabanca; and then beginneth the bay of Cayo Romano: and ahead the ſierras you ſhall ſee a rounde loafe which is in the midſt of the ſame bay, and ahead of that you ſhall ſee a hill flat on the top like a table ſixe or ſeuen leagues, which hill is not very high, and from theſe hilles to Cayo Romano you haue fiue and thirtie leagues, and you muſt ſtirre the one halfe of the courſe Northweſt, and the other halfe Northweſt and by Weſt, and ſo ſhall you make or ſee the ſayd Cayo Romano vpon the larboord ſide of you. Note, that from Cayo Romano to Cabo de Cruz you haue three leagues, ane they lie North and South one from another.

Markes of Cayo Romano.

This Iſland lyeth 100. leagues from Hauana.

CAyo Romano is an high Iſland, and lyeth Northeaſt and Southweſt, and ſtretcheth it ſelfe as it were 4. leagues; and comming on it Northeaſt & Southweſt, it maketh a loafe or round heape or homock; in the midſt there are two ſaddles, as wee terme them, or lowe partitions, the one on the one ſide, and the other on the other ſide; and comming with it North and South, it maketh all one lowe ſend or ſaddle in the midſt. And if night ſhould come on you at this Cayo Romano, enter not the chanell, becauſe in the mid way is an Iſle, flat, or Cayo, which lyeth North and South with Cayo Romano, and it is called Cayo de la Cruz: and at full ſea you ſhall diſcerne a heath, which this Cayo hath in the midſt of it, which is like to a ſaile; but al night beare but your foreſaile a glaſſe one way and another glaſſe the other way vntill it be day, and then enter the chanell, and leaue theſe Cayos, on the larbourd ſide of you. Note, that if you bee within ſight of the Parcel, and ſee two litle Iſlands of white ſand, that then you are on the cantell of the Parcel: and if you goe more a head coaſting the Parcell, about fifteene leagues, you ſhall ſee three Iſlands full of trees, which are called Las Anguillas and all theſe three Iſlands beare North and South one from another. Item from Cayo de Cruz to Hauana, if it be by day, ſtir away Weſt Northweſt; but if it be by night, then ſtir a point more to the Weſtward: and if in this courſe you chance to ſee the Parcell, feare not; for in the loweſt water there are ſixe fathomes; then caſt about to the Southweſtward to get out about two glaſſes, and then ſtir away Weſtnorthweſt vntill it be day and ſo ſhall you goe by the Cayos: and in this courſe you muſt keepe twentie foure leagues or thereabout. And from this Cayo de Cruz ſixe or ſeuen leagues lyeth another Cayo vpon the Northeaſt and by North, which is great and white, and all euen; But the point on the Southweſt is ſmaller, and vpon the ſaid point is a ſhrub or buſh which ſheweth like a ſaile: alſo there is a banke of white ſand along by the ſea-ſide, which in the middeſt thereof maketh a cliff full of trees that ſeemeth like a ſadle: and vpon the Northeaſt ſide (for on this maner the coaſt lyeth along from the Cape) going by the chanell you ſhal ſee certaine hilles eighteene or twentie leagues long lying Northeaſt and Southweſt being all ſaddle-like: and bringing the poynt Southweſt off you, you ſhall be in the middeſt of the chanell: and from thence you haue as farre to Matanças as to Cayo Romano. Likewiſe from thence on the ſide of Hauana you ſhall ſee certaine hilles which ſhewe to be three, and ly Northeaſt and Southweſt, and that on the Southweſt is higheſt: they are called Las Sierras de Guana: and North and South from them lyeth a flat, which is called Cayo de Nicola, which ſtretched out two leagues into the Sea, and in the middle of the ſayde flatte there is a little Iſland of white ſand: and from thence you muſt ſayle to Cruz del Padre.

La Baia de Caos, or Cayos.

Markes of the hilles of Camoniaca.

THe hilles of Camoniaca ly Northweſt and Southeaſt, and the Southeaſt ſide is lowe land and euen: alſo vpon the Northeaſt ſide it is euen land, and runneth towards the Bay of Matanças, and in the middle of theſe hilles there is one high hill, and vpon the Northeaſt ſide there appeareth a round heape: and if you ſee this hill at Weſt Southweſt, the Pan or round heape of Matanças will beare off you Weſt and by South.

Or Camoloquea.

Markes of the round hill called El pan de Matanças.

THis Pan is a round heape ſtanding on a lowe land: and if you bring your ſelfe North and South with it, it will make you two ſaddles; and on the Weſt ſide it maketh a great parted lande as it were ſinking with the ſea. Note that wheresoeuer you ſhall goe to ſeeke the Tortugas, and ſhall come with the coaſt and finde it beare off you Northeaſt and Southweſt, I aduiſe you to goe along the coaſt to the Southweſtward: you may not deepen more then fortie fiue fathomes, for if you doe, you ſhall caſt your ſelfe without the Tortugas.

Alſo you muſt note, that if by chance you finde your ſelfe ſhotte betweene the Tortugas, and the Martyres, and that you cannot goe on the out-ſide of the ſayde Tortugas, then cauſe one to goe to the top, to ſee if you can deſcry them; and if you cannot ſee them, ſtir away Southweſt vntill you ſee them; and hauing gotten ſight of them, ſounde, and you ſhall finde eighteene or nineteene fathomes; and ſo ſholding ſtir away South and by Weſt, and goe by this courſe. And feare you not the ſholding, for you ſhall meete with 12 fathoms, and ſhall haue blacke ſand in your ſounding. And going neerer to the ende of the ſaid Tortugas (for hee that is on the toppe ſhall ſee them all) as you paſſe by, you ſhall finde but eight fathomes, and ſtony ground, and that is the ſholdeſt water you ſhall haue. And you ſhall paſſe by a buſtling of a tyde, that ſhoules out of the chanel that way: but you neede not feare any thing for you ſhall haue no leſſe then eight fathome water: and being paſt the ſaid buſtling but a minion ſhot, you ſhal looſe the ground and be in the chanell.

An aduertizment.

When you ſhall paſſe this courſe, goe not out of ſight of the Tortugas. And if you will goe from thence to Hauana, hauing a faire winde, ſtir away Southweſt becauſe the current may not ſet you off: and if with a freſh winde and Northerly, then ſtir away Southerly.

THE DISCOVERIE OF THE LARGE, RICH, and Beautifull Empire of Guiana, with a relation of the great and golden Citie of Manoa (which the Spaniards call El Dorado) and the Prouinces of Emeria, Aromaia, Amapaia, and other Countries, with their riuers adioyning.

Performed in the yeere 1595 by Sir Walter Ralegh Knight, Captaine of her Maieſties Guard, Lorde Warden of the Stanneries, and her Highneſſe Leiutenant generall of the Countie of Corne-wall.

To the right Honourable my ſingular good Lord and kinſman Charles Howard, Knight of the Garter, Baron and Counceller, and of the Admirals of England the moſt renowmed: and to the right Honourable Sir Robert Cecyll knight, Counceller in her Highneſſe Priuie Councels.

FOr your Honours many Honourable and friendly partes, I haue hitherto onely returned promiſes, and now for anſwere of both your aduentures, I haue ſent you a bundle of papers, which I haue deuided betwene your Lordſhip, and Sir Robert Cecyll in theſe two reſpects chiefly: Firſt for that it is reaſon, that waſtful factors, when they haue conſumed ſuch ſtockes as they had in truſt, doe yeeld ſome colour for the ſame in their account; ſecondly for that I am aſſured, that whatſoeuer ſhall bee done, or written by me, ſhall neede a double protection and defence. The triall that I had of both your loues, when I was left of all, but of malice and reuenge, makes me ſtill preſume, that you wil be pleaſed (knowing what litle power I had to performe ought, and the great aduantage of forewarned enemies) to anſwer that out of knowledge, which others ſhal but obiect out of malice. In my more happy times as I did eſpecially Hon. you both, ſo I found that your loues ſought mee out in the darkeſt ſhadow of aduerſitie, and the ſame affection which accompanied my better fortune, ſored not away from me in my many miſeries: al which though I can not requite, yet I ſhal euer acknowledge: & the great debt which I haue no power to pay, I can do no more for a time but confeſſe to be due. It is true that as my errors were great, ſo they haue yeelded very grieuous effects, & if ought might haue bene deſerued in former times to haue counterpoyſed any part of offences, the fruit thereof (as it ſeemeth) was long before fallen from the tree, & the dead ſtocke onely remained. I did therefore euen in the winter of my life, vndertake theſe trauels, fitter for bodies leſſe blaſted with miſ-fortunes, for men of greater abilitie, and for mindes of better incouragement, that thereby, if it were poſſible, I might recouer but the moderation of exceſſe, & the leaſt taſt of the greateſt plenty formerly poſſeſſed. If I had knowen other way to win, if I had imagined how greater aduentures might haue regained, if I could cõceiue what farther meanes I might yet vſe, but euen to appeaſe ſo powreful diſpleaſure, I would not doubt but for one yeere more to hold faſt my ſoule in my teeth, till it were performed. Of that litle remaine I had, I haue waſted in effect all herein. I haue vndergone many conſtructions

I haue bene accompanyed with many ſorrowes, with labour, hunger, heat, ſickenes, & perill: it appeareth notwithſtanding that I made no other brauado of going to the ſea, then was ment, and that I was neuer hidden in Cornewall, or els where, as was ſuppoſed. They haue groſſly belied me, that foreiudged, that I would rather become a ſeruant to the Spaniſh king, then returne, and the reſt were much miſtaken, who would haue perſwaded, that I was too eaſefull and ſenſuall to vndertake a iourney of ſo great trauell. But, if what I haue done, receiue the the gracious conſtruction of a painefull pilgrimage, and purchaſe the leaſt remiſſion, I ſhall thinke all too litle, & that there were wanting to the reſt many miſeries. But if both the times paſt, the preſent, and what may be in the future, doe all by one graine of gall continue in eternall diſtaſt; I doe not then know whether I ſhould bewaile my ſelfe, either for my too much trauell and expence, or condemne my ſelfe for doing leſſe then that, which can deſerue nothing. From my ſelfe I haue deſerued no thankes, for I am returned a begger, and withered, but that I might haue bettred my poore eſtate, it ſhall appeare by the following diſcourſe, if I had not onely reſpected her Maieſties future Honour, and riches. It became not the former fortune in which I once liued, to goe iourneys of picory, it had ſorted ill with the offices of Honour, which by her Maieſties grace I hold this day in England, to run from Cape to Cape, and from place to place, for the pillage of ordinaries prizes. Many yeeres ſince, I had knowledge by relation, of that mighty, rich and beautifull Empier of Guiana, and of that great and golden Citie, which the Spaniards call El Dorado, and the naturals Manoa, which Citie was conquered, reedified, and inlarged by a yonger ſonne of Guamacapa Emperour of Peru, at ſuch time as Franciſco Piçarro and others conquered the ſaid Empire, from his two elder brethrē, Guaſcar, and Atabalipa, both then contending for the ſame, the one being fauoured by the Orejones of Cuzco, the other by the people of Caxamalca. I ſent my ſeruant Iacob Whiddon the yere before, to get knowledge of the paſſages, and I had ſome light from Captaine Parker, ſometime my ſeruant, and nowe attending on your Lordſhip, that ſuch a place there was to the Southward of the great Bay of Charuas, or Guanipa: but I found that it was 600 miles farther off then they ſuppoſed, and many other impediments to them vnknowen and vnheard. After I had diſplanted Don Antonio de Berreo, who was vpon the ſame enterprize, leauing my ſhips at Trinidad, at the Port called Curiapan, I wandred 400 miles into the ſaid countrey by lande and riuer: the particulars I will leaue to the following diſcourſe. The countrey hath more quantity of gold by manifolde, then the beſt partes of the Indies, or Peru: All the moſt of the kings of the borders are already become her Maieſties vaſſals: and ſeeme to deſire nothing more then her Maieſties protection and the returne of the Engliſh nation. It hath another ground and aſſurance of riches and glory, then the voyages of the Weſt Indies, an eaſier way to inuade the beſt parts thereof, then by the common courſe. The king of Spaine is not ſo impoueriſhed, by taking three or foure Port townes in America, as wee ſuppoſe, neither are the riches of Peru, or Nueua Eſpanna ſo left by the ſea ſide, as it can bee eaſily waſht away with a great flood, or ſpringtide, or left dry vpon the ſandes on a lowe ebbe. The Port townes are fewe and poore in reſpect of the reſt within the lande, and are of litle defence, and are onely rich, when the Fleets are to receiue the treaſure for Spaine: and we might thinke the Spaniards very ſimple, hauing ſo many horſes and ſlaues, if they could not vpon two dayes warning cary all the golde they haue into the land, and farre enough from the reach of our foote-men, eſpecially the Indies being (as they are for the moſt part) ſo mountanous, ſo full of woodes, riuers, and mariſhes. In the Port townes of the Prouince of Veneçuela, as Cumana, Coro and S. Iago (whereof Coro and S. Iago were taken by Captaine Preſton, and Cumana and S. Ioſepho by vs) we found not the value of one riall of plate in either: but the Cities of Barquaſimeta, Valencia, S. Sebaſtian, Cororo, S. Lucia, Laguna, Maracaiba, and Truxillo, are not ſo eaſely inuaded: neither doeth the burning of thoſe on the coaſt impoueriſh the king of Spaine any one ducat: and if we ſacke the riuer of Hacha, S. Marta, and Cartagena, which are the Portes of Nueuo reyno, and Popayan; there are beſides within the land, which are indeed riche and populous, the townes and Cities of Merida, Lagrita, S. Chriſtophoro, the great Cities of Pamplon, S. Fe de Bogota, Tunxa and Mozo where the Eſmeralds are found, the townes and Cities of Marequita, Velez, la Villa de Leua, Palma, Unda, Anguſtura, the great citie of Timana, Tocaima, S. Aguila, Paſto, Iuago, the great Citie of Popaian it ſelfe, Los Remedios, and the reſt. If we take the Ports and villages within the Bay of Vraba in the kingdom or riuers of Dariene, and Caribana, the Cities and townes of S Iuan de Roydas, of Caſſaris, of Antiocha, Caramanta, Cali, and Anſerma haue gold enough to pay the kings part, and are not eaſily inuaded by the way of the Ocean: or if Nombre de Dios and Panama be taken in the Prouince of Caſtilla del oro, and the villages vpõ the riuers of Cenu & Chagre; Peru hath beſides thoſe & beſides the magnificent cities of Quito & Lima ſo many ylands, ports, cities, and mines, as if I ſhould name them with the reſt, it would ſeem incredible to the reader: of all which, becauſe I haue written a particular treatiſe of the Weſt Indies, I wil omit the repetition at this time, ſeeing that in the ſaid treatiſe I haue anatomized the reſt of the ſea-townes aſwel of Nicaragua, Iucatan, Nueua Eſpanna, & the ylands, as thoſe of the Inland, & by what meanes they may be beſt inuaded, as far as any meane iudgement can cõprehend. But I hope it ſhal appeare that there is a way found to anſwer euery mans longing, a better Indies for her Maieſtie then the King of Spaine hath any: which if it ſhal pleaſe her highnes to vndertake, I ſhal moſt willingly end the reſt of my daies in folowing the ſame: if it be left to the ſpoile & ſackage of cõmon perſons, if the loue & ſeruice of ſo many nations be deſpiſed, ſo great riches, & ſo mighty an empire refuſed, I hope her maieſty wil yet take my humble deſire and my labor therin in gracious part, which, if it had not bin in reſpect of her highnes future honor & riches, could haue laid hands on & ranſomed many of the kings & Caſiqui of the country, & haue had a reaſonable proportion of gold for their redemptiõ: but I haue choſen rather to beare the burden of pouerty, then reproch, & rather to endure a ſecond trauel and the chances therof, then to haue defaced an enterpriſe of ſo great aſſurance, vntill I knew whether it pleaſed God to put a diſpoſitiõ in her princely & royal heatt either to folow or foreſlow the ſame: I wil therefore leaue it to his ordinance that hath only power in all things, & do humbly pray that your honors wil excuſe ſuch errors, as without the defence of art, ouerrun in euery part of the folowing diſcourſe, in which I haue neither ſtudied phraſe, forme nor faſhion, that you will be pleaſed to eſteeme mee as your owne (though ouer dearly bought) and I ſhall euer remaine ready to do you all honour and ſeruice. W. R.

A treatiſe of the Weſt Indies.

¶ To the Reader.

BEcauſe there haue bin diuers opiniõs cõceiued of the gold oare broght frõ Guiana, and for ỷ an Alderman of London & an officer of her Maieſties Mint, hath giuen out that the ſame is of no price, I haue thought good by the additiõ of theſe lines to giue anſwer aſwel to the ſaid malicious ſlãder, as to other obiections. It is true that while we abode at the yland of Trinidad, I was informed, by an Indian, that not far frõ the Port, where we ancored, there were found certaine mineral ſtones which they eſteemed to be gold, & were thereunto perſwaded the rather for that they had ſeene both Engliſh and Frenchmen gather, & imbark ſome quantities therof: vpon this likelyhood I ſent 40. men & gaue order that each one ſhould bring a ſtone of that mine to make trial of ỷ goodnes: which being performed, I aſſured them at their returne that the ſame was Marcaſite, & of no riches or value: notwithſtãding diuers, truſting more to their owne ſence, then to my opinion, kept of the ſaid Marcaſite, & haue tried therof ſince my returne in diuers places. In Guiana it ſelfe I neuer ſaw Marcaſite, but al the rocks, mouͦtains, al ſtones in ỷ plaines, woods, & by the riuers ſide are in effect throughſhining, and ſeem maruelous rich, which being tried to be no Marcaſite, are the true ſignes of rich minerals, but are no other then El madre del oro (as the Spaniards terme them) which is the mother of gold, or as it is ſaid by others the ſcum of gold: of diuers ſorts of theſe many of my company brought alſo into Englãd, euery one taking ỷ faireſt for the beſt, which is not general. For mine own part, I did not coũtermand any mans deſire, or opinion, & I could haue aforded them litle if I ſhould haue denied them the pleaſing of their owne fancies therein: but I was reſolued that gold muſt be foũd either in graines ſeparate frõ the ſtone (as it is in moſt of the riuers in Guiana) or els in a kind of hard ſtone, which we call The white ſpar, of which I ſaw diuers hils, & in ſundry places, but had neither time nor men, nor inſtruments fit for labour. Neere vnto one of the riuers I found of the ſaid White ſparre or flint a very great ledge or banke, which I endeuoured to breake by al the meanes I could, becauſe there appeared on the outſide ſome ſmal graines of gold, but finding no meane to worke the ſame vpon the vpper part, ſeeking the ſides and circuit of the ſaid rocke, I found a clift in the ſame from whence with daggers, and with the head of an axe, we got out ſome ſmal quantitie therof, of which kind of white ſtone (wherin gold ingendred) we ſaw diuers hils and rocks in euery part of Guiana, wherein we traueiled. Of this there haue bin made many trials, and in London it was firſt aſſaid by M. Weſtwood a refiner dwelling in Woodſtreet, and it held after the rate of 12000. or 13000. pounds a tunne. Another ſort was afterward tried by M. Bulmar & M. Dimock Aſſay-maſter, & it held after the rate of 23000 li. a tunne. There was ſome of it againe tried by M. Palmer comptroller of the Mint, and M. Dimock in goldſmiths hal, & it held after 26900. li. a tun. There was alſo at the ſame time, & by the ſame perſons a trial made of the duſt of the ſaid mine which held 8. li. 6. ounces weight of gold in the 100: there was likewiſe at the ſame time a triall of an image of copper made in Guiana, which held a third part of gold, beſides diuers trials made in the coũtrey, & by others in Lõdon. But becauſe there came ill with the good, & belike the ſaid Alderman was not preſented with the beſt, it hath pleaſed him therefore to ſcandall all the reſt, and to deface the enterprize as much as in him lieth. It hath alſo bene concluded by diuers, that if there had bin any ſuch oare in Guiana, and the ſame diſcouered, that I would haue brought home a greater quantitie thereof: firſt I was not bound to ſatisfie any man of the quantitie, but ſuch onely as aduentured, if any ſtore had bin returned thereof: but it is very true that had al their mountaines bene of maſſie gold, it was impoſſible for vs to haue made any longer ſtay to haue wrought the ſame: and whoſoeuer hath ſeene with what ſtrength of ſtone the beſt gold oare is inuironed, hee will not thinke it eaſie to be had out in heapes, and eſpecially by vs, who had neither men, inſtruments, nor time (as it is ſaid before) to performe the ſame. There were on this diſcouery no leſſe then 100. perſons, who can all witneſſe, that when we paſt any branch of the riuer to view the land within, and ſtaied from our boats but 6. houres, wee were driuen to wade to the eyes, at our returne: and if wee attempted the ſame, the day following it was impoſſible either to ford it, or to ſwim it, both by reaſon of the ſwiftneſſe, and alſo for that the borders were ſo peſtred with faſt woods, as neither boat nor man could find place, either to land or to imbarke: for in Iune, Iuly, Auguſt and September, it is impoſſible to nauigate any of thoſe riuers: for ſuch is the fury of the current, and there are ſo many trees and woods ouerflowne, as if any boat but touch vpon any tree or ſtake, it is impoſſible to ſaue any one perſon therein: and yet we departed the land it ranne with ſuch ſwiftnes, as wee draue downe moſt commonly againſt the wind, little leſſe then 100. miles a day: Beſides our veſſels were no other then whirries, one little barge, a ſmall cockboat, and a bad Galiota, which we framed in haſt for that purpoſe at Trinidad, and thoſe little boats had 9. or 10. men a piece, with all their victuals, and armes, It is further true, that we were about 400. miles from our ſhips, and had bene a moneth from them, which alſo we left weakly manned in an open road, and had promiſed our returne in 15. dayes. Others haue deuiſed that the ſame oare was had from Barbary, and that we caried it with vs into Guiana: ſurely the ſingularitie of that deuice I doe not well comprehend: for mine owne part, I am not ſo much in loue with theſe long voyages, as to deuiſe, therby to cozen my ſelfe, to lie hard, to fare worſe, to be ſubiected to perils, to diſeaſes, to ill ſauors, to be parched & withered, and withall to ſuſtaine the care & labour of ſuch an enterprize, except the ſame had more comfort, then the fetching of Marcaſite in Guiana, or buying of gold oare in Barbary. But I hope the better ſort wil iudge me by themſelues, & that the way of deceit is not the way of honor or good opinion: I haue herein conſumed much time, & many crownes, & I had no other reſpect or deſire then to ſerue her Maieſtie and my country thereby. If the Spaniſh nation had bene of like beliefe to theſe detracters, we ſhould litle haue feared or doubted their attempts, wherewith we now are daily threatned. But if we now cõſider of the actions both of Charles the 5. who had the maidenhead of Peru, and the abundant treaſures of Atabalipa, together with the affaires of the Spaniſh king now liuing, what territories he hath purchaſed, what he hath added to the acts of his predeceſſors, how many kingdoms he hath indangered, how many armies, gariſons, & nauies he hath and doth mainteine, the great loſſes which he hath repaired, as in 88. aboue 100. saile of great ſhips with their artillery, & that no yere is leſſe vnfortunate but that many veſſels, treaſures, and people are deuoured, and yet notwithſtanding he beginneth againe like a ſtorme to threaten ſhipwrack to vs all: we ſhall find that theſe abilities riſe not frõ the trades of ſacks, and Siuil oringes, nor from ought els that either Spaine, Portugal, or any of his other prouinces produce: it is his Indian gold that indangereth and diſturbeth all the nations of Europe, it purchaſeth intelligence, creepeth into counſels, and ſetteth bound loyaltie at libertie, in the greateſt Monarchies of Europe. If the Spaniſh king can keepe vs from forren enterprizes, & from the impeachment of his trades, either by offer of inuaſion, or by beſieging vs in Britaine, Ireland, or elſewhere, hee hath then brought the worke of our peril in great forwardnes. Thoſe princes which abound in treaſure haue great aduantages ouer the reſt, if they once conſtraine them to a defenſiue war, where they are driuen once a yere or oftner to caſt lots for their own garmẽts, and frõ ſuch ſhal all trades, & entercourſe be taken away, to the general loſſe and impoueriſhment of the kingdom and common weale ſo reduced: beſides when our men are conſtrained to fight, it hath not the like hope, as when they are preſt & incouraged by the deſire of ſpoile & riches. Farther, it is to be douted how thoſe that in time of victory ſeeme to affect their neighbor nations, wil remaine after the firſt view of miſfortunes, or il ſucceſſe; to truſt alſo to the doubtfulnes of a battel, is but a fearefull & vncertaine aduenture, ſeeing therein fortune is as likely to preuaile,as vertue. It ſhall not be neceſſary to alleage all that might bee ſaid, and therefore I will thus conclude, that whatſoeuer kingdome ſhalbe inforced to defend it ſelfe may be compared to a body dangerouſly diſeaſed, which for a ſeaſon may be preſerued with vulgar medicines,but in a ſhort time,and by litle and litle, the ſame muſt needs fall to the ground,& be diſſolued. I haue therefore laboured all my life,both according to my ſmal power,& perſwaſion, to aduance al thoſe attempts,that might either promiſe return of profit to our ſelues,or at leaſt be a let and impeachment to the quiet courſe and plentifull trades of the Spaniſh nation,who in my weake iudgement by ſuch a warre were as eaſily indangered & brought frō his powerfulnes,as any prince of Europe, if it be conſidered from how many kingdomes and nations his reuenues are gathered,& thoſe ſo weake in their owne beings, and ſo far ſeuered from mutual ſuccour.But becauſe ſuch a preparation and reſolution is not to be hoped for in haſt,& that the time which our enemies embrace,cannot be had againe to aduātage,I wil hope that theſe prouinces,and that Empire now by me diſcouered ſhal ſuffice to inable her Maieſtie & the whole kingdome,with no leſſe quantities of treaſure,then the king of Spaine hath in all the Indies Eaſt and Weſt,which he poſſeſſeth,which if the ſame be conſidered and followed,ere the Spaniards enforce the ſame,and if her Maieſtie wil vndertake it, I wil be contented to loſe her highneſſe fauour & good opinion for euer,and my life withall,if the ſame be not found rather to exceed, then to equal whatſoeuer is in this diſcourſe promiſed or declared. I wil now referre the Reader to the following diſcourſe,with the hope that the perillous and chargeable labours and indeuors of ſuch as thereby ſeeke the profit and honour of her Maieſtie, and the Engliſh nation, ſhall by men of qualitie and vertue receiue ſuch conſtruction, and good acceptance,as themſelues would looke to be rewarded withall in the like. W. R.

¶ The diſcouerie of Guiana.

ON thurſday the 6.of February in the yere 1595.we departed England,and the Sunday following had ſight of the North cape of Spaine,the winde for the moſt part continuing proſperous:we paſſed in ſight of the Burlings,& the Rocke,and ſo onwards for the Canaries,and fel with Fuerte ventura the 17 of the ſame moneth,where we ſpent two or three dayes,and relieued our companies with ſome freſh meat. From thence we coaſted by the Grand Canaria,& ſo to Tenerif,and ſtayed there for the Lions whelpe your Lordſhips ſhip, and for Captaine Amyas Preſton and the reſt. But when after 7.or 8.dayes wee found them not, we departed and directed our courſe for Trinidad with mine owne ſhip,and a ſmall barke of captaine Croſſes onely(for we had before loſt ſight of a ſmal Galego on the coaſt of Spaine,which came with vs from Plimmouth:) we arriued at Trinidad the 22.of March, caſting ancker at point Curiapan, which the Spaniards call punta de Gallo,which is ſituate in 8.degrees or there abouts:we abode there 4.or 5.dayes,& in all that time we came not to the ſpeach of any Indian or Spaniard: on the coaſt we ſaw a fire,as we ſailed frō the point Carao towards Curiapan,but for feare of the Spaniards none durſt come to ſpeake with vs. I my ſelfe coaſted it in my barge cloſe aboord the ſhore and landed in euery Coue,the better to know the yland,while the ſhips kept the chanell. From Curiapan after a few dayes we turned vp Northeaſt to recouer that place which the Spaniards call Puerto de los Eſpannoles, and the inhabitants Conquerabia,and as before (reuictualing my barge) I left the ſhips and kept by the ſhore, the better to come to ſpeach with ſome of the inhabitants, and alſo to vnderſtand the riuers, watering places,& ports of the yland, which (as it is rudely done) my purpoſe is to ſend your Lordſhip after a few dayes. From Curiapan I came to a port and ſeat of Indians called Parico, where we found a freſh water riuer, but ſaw no people. From thence I rowed to another port, called by the naturals Piche, and by the Spaniards Tierra de Brea: In the way betweene both were diuers little brookes of freſh water and one ſalt riuer that had ſtore of oiſters vpon the branches of the trees,and were very ſalt and well taſted. All their oiſters grow vpon thoſe boughs and ſprayes,and not on the ground: the like is commonly ſeene in other places of the Weſt Indies, and elſe where. This tree is deſcribed by Andrew Theuet in his French Antarctique,and the forme figured in the booke as a plant very ſtrange, and by Plinie in his 12.booke of his naturall hiſtorie. But in this yland,as alſo in Guiana there are very many of them.

Tierra de Brea.

At this point called Tierra de Brea or Piche there is that abundance of ſtone pitch, that all the ſhips of the world may be therewith loden from thence, and we made trial of it in trimming our ſhippes to be moſt excellent good, and melteth not with the Sunne as the pitch of Norway, and therefore for ſhippes trading the South parts very profitable. From thence wee went to the mountaine foote called Annaperima, and ſo paſſing the riuer Carone on which the Spaniſh Citie was ſeated, we met with our ſhips at Puerto de los Eſpannoles or Conquerabia.

This yland of Trinidad hath the forme of a ſheephooke, and is but narrow, the North part is very mountainous, the ſoile is very excellent and will beare ſuger, ginger, or any other commoditie that the Indies yeeld. It hath ſtore of deare, wilde porks, fruits, fiſh and foule: it hath alſo for bread ſufficient maiz, caſſaui, and of thoſe rootes and fruites which are common euery where in the Weſt Indies. It hath diuers beaſtes which the Indies haue not: the Spaniards confeſſed that they found graines of golde in ſome of the riuers, but they hauing a purpoſe to enter Guiana (the Magazin of all rich mettals) cared not to ſpend time in the ſearch thereof any further. This yland is called by the people thereof Cairi, and in it are diuers nations: thoſe about Parico are called Iaio, thoſe at Punta de Carao are of the Arwacas, and betweene Carao and Curiapan they are called Saluajos, betwene Carao and Punta de Galera are the Nepoios, and thoſe about the Spaniſh citie terme themſelues Carinepagotes: Of the reſt of the nations, and of other ports and riuers I leaue to ſpeake here, being impertinent to my purpoſe, and meane to deſcribe them as they are ſituate in the particular plot and deſcription of the yland, three parts whereof I coaſted with my barge, that I might the better deſcribe it.

The death of Captaine Whiddon.

Meeting with the ſhips at Puerto de los Eſpannoles, we found at the landing place a company of Spaniards who kept a guard at the deſcent, and they offering a ſigne of peace, I ſent captaine Whiddon to ſpeake with them, whom afterward to my great griefe I left buried in the ſaid yland after my returne from Guiana, being a man moſt honeſt and valiant. The Spaniards ſeemed to be deſirous to trade with vs, and to enter into termes of peace, more for doubt of their owne ſtrength then for ought elſe, and in the ende vpon pledge, ſome of them came abord: the ſame euening there ſtale alſo abord vs in a ſmall Canoa two Indians, the one of them being a Caſique or Lord of the people called Cantyman, who had the yeere before bene with Captaine Whiddon, and was of his acquaintance. By this Cantyman, wee vnderſtood what ſtrength the Spaniards had, howe farre it was to their Citie, and of Don Antonio de Berreo the gouernour, who was ſaid to be ſlaine in his ſecond attempt of Guiana, but was not.

While we remained at Puerto de los Eſpannoles ſome Spaniards came abord vs to buy linnen of the company, and ſuch other things as they wanted, and alſo to view our ſhips and company, all which I entertained kindly and feaſted after our maner: by meanes whereof I learned of one and another as much of the eſtate of Guiana as I could, or as they knew, for thoſe poore ſouldiers hauing bene many yeeres without wine, a few draughts made them merrie, in which mood they vaunted of Guiana and of the riches thereof, and all what they knewe of the wayes and paſſages, my ſelfe ſeeming to purpoſe nothing leſſe then the enterance or diſcouerie thereof, but bred in them an opinion that I was bound onely for the reliefe of thoſe Engliſh which I had planted in Virginia, whereof the bruite was come among them; which I had performed in my returne, if extremitie of weather had not forſt me from the ſaid coaſt.

8. Engliſhmen betrayed by Antony Berreo.

I found occaſions of ſtaying in this place for two cauſes: the one was to be reuenged of Berreo, who the yere before 1594. had betraied eight of Captaine Whiddons men, and tooke them while he departed from them to ſeeke the Edward Bonauenture, which arriued at Trinidad the day before from the Eaſt Indies: in whoſe abſence Berreo ſent a Canoa abord the pinneſſe onely with Indians and dogs inuiting the company to goe with them into the woods to kill a deare, who like wiſe men in the abſence of their Captaine followed the Indians, but were no ſooner one harquebuze ſhot from the ſhore, but Berreos ſouldiers lying in ambuſh had them al, notwithſtanding that he had giuen his word to Captaine Whiddon that they ſhould take water and wood ſafely: the other cauſe of my ſtay was, for that by diſcourſe with the Spaniards I dayly learned more and more of Guiana, of the riuers and paſſages, and of the enterpriſe of Berreo, by what meanes or fault he failed, and how he meant to proſecute the ſame.

While wee thus ſpent the time I was aſſured by another Caſique of the North ſide of the yland, that Berreo had ſent to Margarita and Cumana for ſouldiers, meaning to haue giuen mee a caſſado at parting, if it had bene poſſible. For although he had giuen order through all the yland that no Indian ſhould come abord to trade with me vpon paine of hanging & quartering, (hauing executed two of them for the ſame, which I afterwards founde) yet euery night there came ſome with moſt lamentable complaints of his crueltie, how he had deuided the yland and giuen to euery ſouldier a part, that hee made the ancient Caſiques which were Lords of the countrey to be their ſlaues, that he kept them in chaines, and dropped their naked bodies with burning bacon, and ſuch other torments, which I found afterwards to be true: for in the city after I entred the ſame, there were 5. of yͤ lords or litle kings (which they cal Caſiques in the Weſt Indies) in one chaine almoſt dead of famine, and waſted with torments: theſe are called in their owne language Acarewana, and now of late ſince Engliſh, French and Spaniſh are come among them, they call themſelues Capitaines, becauſe they perceiue that the chiefeſt of euery ſhip is called by that name. Thoſe fiue Capitaines in the chaine were called Wannawanare, Carroaori, Maquarima, Tarroopanama, and Aterima. So as both to be reuenged of the former wrong, as alſo conſidering that to enter Guiana by ſmall boats, to depart 400. or 500. miles from my ſhips, and to leaue a gariſon in my backe interreſted in the ſame enterprize, who alſo dayly expected ſupplies out of Spaine, I ſhould haue ſauoured very much of the aſſe: and therefore taking a time of moſt aduantage I ſet vpon the Corps du guard in the euening, and hauing put them to the ſword, ſent Captaine Calfield onwards with 60. ſouldiers, and my ſelfe followed with 40. more and ſo tooke their new City which they called S. Ioſeph by breake of day: they abode not any fight after a fewe ſhot, and all being diſmiſſed but onely Berreo and his companion, I brought them with me abord, and at the inſtance of the Indians I ſet their new citie of S. Ioſeph on fire.

The Citie of S. Ioſeph taken. Antony Berreo taken priſoner.

The ſame day arriued captaine George Gifford with your Lordſhips ſhip, and captaine Keymis whom I loſt on the coaſt of Spaine, with the Galego, and in them diuers gentlemen and others, which to our little armie was a great comfort and ſupply.

We then haſted away towards our purpoſed diſcouery, and firſt I called all the Captaines of the yland together that were enemies to the Spaniards; for there were ſome which Berreo had brought out of other countreys, and planted there to eate out and waſt thoſe that were naturall of the place, and by my Indian interpreter, which I caried out of England, I made them vnderſtand that I was the ſeruant of a Queene, who was the great Caſique of the North, and a virgine, and had more Caſiqui vnder her then there were trees in that yland: that ſhee was an enemie to the Caſtellani in reſpect of their tyrannie and oppreſſion, and that ſhe deliuered all ſuch nations about her, as were by them oppreſſed, and hauing freed all the coaſt of the Northren world from their ſeruitude, had ſent mee to free them alſo, and withall to defend the countrey of Guiana from their inuaſion and conqueſt. I ſhewed them her Maieſties picture which they ſo admired and honoured, as it had bene eaſie to haue brought them idolatrous thereof.

The like and a more large diſcourſe I made to the reſt of the nations both in my paſſing to Guiana, and to thoſe of the borders, ſo as in that part of the world her Maieſtie is very famous and admirable, whom they now call Ezrabeta Caſſipuna Aquerewana, which is as much as Elizabeth, the great princeſſe or greateſt commander. This done we left Puerto de los Eſpannoles, and returned to Curiapan, and hauing Berreo my priſoner I gathered from him as much of Guiana as hee knew.

This Berreo is a gentleman wel deſcended, and had long ſerued the Spaniſh king in Millain, Naples, the Low countreis and elſewhere, very valiant and liberall, and a gentleman of great aſſuredneſ, and of a great heart: I vſed him according to his eſtate and worth in all things I could, according to the ſmall meanes I had.

I ſent Captaine Whiddon the yeere before to get what knowledge he could of Guiana, and the end of my iourney at this time was to diſcouer and enter the ſame, but my intelligence was farre from trueth, for the countrey is ſituate aboue 600. Engliſh miles further from the Sea, then I was made beleeue it had bin, which afterward vnderſtanding to be true by Berreo, I kept it from the knowledge of my company, who elſe would neuer haue bene brought to attempt the ſame: of which 600. miles I paſſed 400. leauing my ſhips ſo farre from mee at ancker in the Sea, which was more of deſire to performe that diſcouery, then of reaſon, eſpecially hauing ſuch poore and weake veſſels to tranſport our ſelues in; for in the bottom of an old Galego which I cauſed to be faſhioned like a galley, and in one barge, two whirries, and a ſhipboat of the Lions whelpe, we caried 100. perſons and their victuals for a moneth in the ſame, being al driuen to lie in the raine and weather, in the open aire, in the burning Sunne, and vpon the hard bords, and to dreſſe our meat, and to cary all maner of furniture in them, wherewith they were ſo peſtered and vnſauory, that what with victuals being moſt fiſh, with the wette clothes of ſo many men thruſt together, and the heat of the Sunne, I will vndertake there was neuer any priſon in England, that could bee found more vnſauorie and lothſome, eſpecially to my ſelfe, who had for many yeeres before bene dieted and cared for in a ſort farre more differing.

Sir W. Ralegh paſſed 400. miles toward Guiana.

If Captaine Preſton had not bene perſwaded that he ſhould haue come too late to Trinidad to haue found vs there (for the moneth was expired which I promiſed to tary for him there ere hee coulde recouer the coaſt of Spaine) but that it had pleaſed God hee might haue ioyned with vs, and that we had entred the countrey but ſome ten dayes ſooner ere the Riuers were ouerflowen, wee had aduentured either to haue gone to the great Citie of Manoa, or at leaſt taken ſo many of the other Cities and townes neerer at hand, as would haue made a royall returne: but it pleaſed not God ſo much to fauour mee at this time: if it ſhall be my lot to proſecute the ſame, I ſhall willingly ſpend my life therein, and if any elſe ſhalbe enabled thereunto, and conquere the ſame, I aſſure him thus much, he ſhall perfourme more then euer was done in Mexico by Cortez, or in Peru by Piçarro, whereof the one conquered the Empire of Mutezuma, the other of Guaſcar, and Atabalipa, and whatſoeuer prince ſhall poſſeſſe it, that Prince ſhall be Lord of more golde, and of a more beautifull Empire, and of more Cities and people, then either the King of Spaine, or the great Turke.

But becauſe there may ariſe many doubts, and how this Empire of Guiana is become ſo populous, and adorned with ſo many great Cities, townes, temples and treaſures, I thought good to make it knowen, that the Emperour now reigning is deſcended from thoſe magnificent princes of Peru, of whoſe large territories, of whoſe policies, conqueſts, edifices, and riches Pedro de Cieça, Franciſco Lopez, and others haue written large diſcourſes: for when Franciſco Piçarro, Diego Almagro and others conquered the ſaid Empire of Peru, and had put to death Atabalipa ſonne to Guaynacapa, which Atabalipa had formerly cauſed his eldeſt brother Guaſcar to bee ſlaine, one of the yonger ſonnes of Guaynacapa fled out of Peru, and tooke with him many thouſands of thoſe ſouldiers of the Empire called Orejones, and with thoſe and many others which followed him, hee vanquiſhed all that tract and valley of America which is ſituate betweene the great riuer of Amazones, and Baraquan, otherwiſe called Orenoque and Marannon.

The ſtatelines of Manoa.

Fran. Lopez de Gomara hiſt. gen. cap. 120.

The Empire of Guiana is directly Eaſt from Peru towards the Sea, and lieth vnder the Equinoctial line, and it hath more abundance of golde then any part of Peru, and as many or moe great Cities then euer Peru had when it flouriſhed moſt: it is gouerned by the ſame lawes, and the Emperour and people obſerue the ſame religion, and the ſame forme and policies in gouernment as were vſed in Peru, not differing in any part: and I haue bene aſſured by ſuch of the Spaniards as haue ſeene Manoa the Imperial Citie of Guiana, which the Spaniards call El Dorado, that for the greatneſſe, for the riches, and for the excellent ſeat, it farre exceedeth any of the world, at leaſt of ſo much of the world as is knowen to the Spaniſh nation: it is founded vpon a lake of ſalt water of 200. leagues long like vnto Mare Caſpium. And if we compare it to that of Peru, & but read the report of Franciſco Lopez and others, it will ſeeme more then credible: and becauſe we may iudge of the one by the other, I thought good to inſert part of the 120. Chapter of Lopez in his generall hiſtorie of the Indies, wherein he deſcribeth the Court and magnificence of Guaynacapa, anceſtour to the Emperour of Guiana, whoſe very wordes are theſe. Todo el ſeruicio de ſu caſa, meſa, y cozina era de oro, y de plata, y quando menos de plata, y cobre por mas rezio. Tenia en ſu recamara eſtatuas huecas de oro, que parecian gigantes, y las figuras al propio, y tamãno de quantos animales, aues, arboles, y yeruas produze la tierra, y de quantos peces cria la mar y aguas de ſus reynos. Tenia aſſi meſmo ſogas, coſtales, ceſtas, y troxes de oro y plata, rimeros de palos de oro, que parecieſſen lenna raiada para quemar. En fin no auia coſa en ſu tierra, que no la tuuieſſe de oro contrahecha: y aun dizen, que tenian los Ingas vn vergel en vna Iſla cerca de la Puna, donde ſe yuan a holgar, quando querian mar, que tenia la ortaliza, las flores, y arboles de oro y plata, inuencion y grandeza haſta entonces nunca viſta. Allende de todo eſto tenia infinitiſſima cantidad de plata, y oro por labrar en el Cuzco, que ſe perdio por la muerte de Guaſcar, ca los Indios lo eſcondieron, viendo que los Eſpannoles ſe lo tomauan, y embiauan a Eſpanna. That is, All the veſſels of his houſe, table and kitchin were of gold and ſiluer, and the meaneſt of ſiluer and copper for ſtrength and hardneſſe of metall. He had in his wardrobe hollow ſtatues of gold which ſeemed giants, and the figures in proportion and bigneſſe of all the beaſts, birds, trees and hearbes, that the earth bringeth foorth: and of all the fiſhes that the ſea or waters of his kingdome breedeth. He had alſo ropes, budgets, cheſtes and troughs of golde and ſiluer, heapes of billets of gold, that ſeemed wood marked out to burne. Finally, there was nothing in his countrey, whereof he had not the counterfait in gold: Yea and they ſay, The Ingas had a garden of pleaſure in an yland neere Puna, where they went to recreat themſelues, when they would take the aire of the Sea, which had all kinde of garden-hearbs, flowers and trees of golde and ſiluer, an inuention, and magnificence till then neuer ſeene. Beſides all this, he had an infinite quantitie of ſiluer and golde vnwrought in Cuzco which was loſt by the death of Guaſcar, for the Indians hid it, ſeeing that the Spaniards tooke it, and ſent it into Spaine.

And in the 117. chapter Franciſco Piçarro cauſed the gold and ſiluer of Atabalipa to be weyed after he had taken it, which Lopez ſetteth downe in theſe wordes following. Hallaron cinquenta y dos mil marcos de buena plata, y vn millon y trezientos y veinte y ſeys mil, y quinientos peſos de oro, Which is: They found fiftie and two thouſand markes of good ſiluer, and one million, and three hundred twenty and ſixe thouſand and fiue hundred pezos of golde.

Now although theſe reports may ſeeme ſtrange, yet if we conſider the many millions which are dayly brought out of Peru into Spaine, wee may eaſily beleeue the ſame: for we finde that by the abundant treaſure of that countrey the Spaniſh king vexeth all the princes of Europe, and is become, in a few yeeres, from a poore king of Caſtile, the greateſt monarch of this part of the world, and likely euery day to increaſe, if other princes forſlow the good occaſions offered, and ſuffer him to adde this empire to the reſt, which by farre exceedeth all the reſt: if his golde now indanger vs, hee will then be vnreſiſtable. Such of the Spanyards as afterward endeuoured the conqueſt thereof (whereof there haue bene many, as ſhall be declared hereafter) thought that this Inga (of whom this emperour now liuing is deſcended) tooke his way by the riuer of Amazones, by that branch which is called Papamene: for by that way followed Orellana (by the cōmandement of Gonzalo Piçarro, in the yere 1542) whoſe name the riuer alſo beareth this day, which is alſo by others called Marannon, although Andrew Theuet doeth affirme that betweene Marannon and Amazones there are 120 leagues: but ſure it is that thoſe riuers haue one head and beginning, and the Marannon, which Theuet deſcribeth, is but a branch of Amazones or Orellana, of which I will ſpeake more in another place. It was attempted by Ordas; but it is now little leſſe then 70 yeres ſince that Diego Ordas, a knight of the order of Saint Iago attempted the ſame: and it was in the yeere 1542 that Orellana diſcouered the riuer of Amazones; but the firſt that euer ſaw Manoa was Iuan Martinez maſter of the munition to Ordas. At a port called Morequito in Guiana there lieth at this day a great anker of Ordas his ſhip; and this port is ſome 300 miles within the land, vpon the great riuer of Orenoque.

Iuan Martinez the firſt that euer ſaw Manoa.

I reſted at this port foure dayes: twenty dayes after I left the ſhips at Curiapan. The relation of this Martinez (who was the firſt that diſcouered Manoa) his ſucceſſe and ende are to bee ſeene in the Chancery of Saint Iuan de puerto rico, whereof Berreo had a copy, which appeared to be the greateſt incouragement aſwell to Berreo as to others that formerly attempted the diſcouery and conqueſt. Orellana after he failed of the diſcouery of Guiana by the ſayd riuer of Amazones, paſſed into Spaine, and there obteined a patent of the king for the inuaſion and conqueſt, but died by ſea about the Iſlands, and his fleet ſeuered by tempeſt, the action for that time proceeded not. Diego Ordas followed the enterpriſe, and departed Spaine with 600 ſouldiers, and 30 horſe, who arriuing on the coaſt of Guiana, was ſlaine in a mutiny, with the moſt part of ſuch as fauoured him, as alſo of the rebellious part, inſomuch as his ſhips periſhed, and few or none returned, neither was it certeinly knowen what became of the ſayd Ordas, vntill Berreo found the anker of his ſhip in the riuer of Orenoque; but it was ſuppoſed, and ſo it is written by Lopez, that he periſhed on the ſeas, and of other writers diuerſly conceiued and reported. And hereof it came that Martines entred ſo farre within the land, and arriued at that city of Inga the emperour; for it chanced that while Ordas with his army reſted at the port of Morequito (who was either the firſt or ſecond that attempted Guiana) by ſome negligence, the whole ſtore of powder prouided for the ſeruice was ſet on fire; and Martinez hauing the chiefe charge, was condemned by the Generall Ordas to be executed foorthwith: Martinez being much fauoured by the ſouldiers, had all the meanes poſſible procured for his life; but it could not be obteined in other ſort then this: That he ſhould be ſet into a canoa alone without any victuall, onely with his armes, and ſo turned looſe into the great riuer: but it pleaſed God that the canoa was caried downe the ſtreame, and that certeine of the Guianians mette it the ſame euening; and hauing not at any time ſeene any Chriſtian, nor any man of that colour, they caried Martinez into the land to be woondred at, and ſo from towne to towne, vntill he came to the great city of Manoa, the ſeat and reſidence of Inga the emperour. The emperour after he had beheld him, knew him to be a Chriſtian (for it was not long before that his brethren Guaſcar and Atabalipa were vanquiſhed by the Spanyards in Peru) and cauſed him to be lodged in his palace, and well enterteined. Hee liued ſeuen moneths in Manoa, but was not ſuffered to wander into the countrey any where. He was alſo brought thither all the way blindfold, led by the Indians, vntill he came to the entrance of Manoa it ſelfe, and was fourteene or fifteene dayes in the paſſage. He auowed at his death that he entred the city at Noon, and then they vncouered his face, and that he trauelled all that day till night thorow the city, and the next day from Sun riſing to Sun ſetting yer he came to the palace of Inga. After that Martinez had liued ſeuen moneths in Manoa, and began to vnderſtand the language of the countrey, Inga aſked him whether he deſired to returne into his owne countrey, or would willingly abide with him. But Martinez not deſirous to ſtay, obteined the fauour of Inga to depart: with whom he ſent diuers Guianians to conduct him to the riuer of Orenoque, all loden with as much golde as they could cary, which he gaue to Martinez at his departure: but when he was arriued Diego de Ordas went foorth with 600 ſouldiers 1531.

Fran. Lopez hiſt. gen. de las Ind. cap. 87.

The great city of Manoa or El Dorado.

neere the riuers ſide, the borderers which are called Orenoqueponi robbed him and his Guianians of all the treaſure (the borderers being at that time at warres, which Inga had not conquered) ſaue onely of two great bottels of gourds, which were filled with beads of golde curiouſly wrought, which thoſe Orenoqueponi thought had bene no other thing then his drinke or meat, or graine for food, with which Martinez had liberty to paſſe: and ſo in canoas hee fell downe from the riuer of Orenoque to Trinidad, and from thence to Margarita, and alſo to Saint Iuan de puerto rico, where remaining a long time for paſſage into Spaine, he died. In the time of his extreme ſickneſſe, and when he was without hope of life, receiuing the Sacrament at the hands of his Confeſſor, he deliuered theſe things, with the relation of his trauels, and alſo called for his calabaças or gourds of the golde beads which he gaue to the church and friers to be prayed for. This Martinez was he that Chriſtened the city of Manoa by the name of El Dorado, and as Berreo informed mee, vpon this occaſion: Thoſe Guianians, and alſo the borderers, and all other in that tract which I haue ſeene, are maruellous great drunkards; in which vice, I thinke no nation can compare with them: and at the times of their ſolemne feaſts, when the emperour carowſeth with his captaines, tributaries, and gouernours, the maner is thus: All thoſe that pledge him are firſt ſtripped naked, and their bodies anointed all ouer with a kind of white balſamum (by them called curca) of which there is great plenty, and yet very deare amongſt them, and it is of all other the moſt precious, whereof wee haue had good experience: when they are anointed all ouer, certeine ſeruants of the emperour, hauing prepared golde made into fine powder, blow it thorow hollow canes vpon their naked bodies, vntill they be all ſhining from the foot to the head: and in this ſort they ſit drinking by twenties, and hundreds, and continue in drunkenneſſe ſometimes ſixe or ſeuen dayes together. The ſame is alſo confirmed by a letter written into Spaine, which was intercepted, which M. Robert Duddeley tolde me he had ſeene. Vpon this ſight, and for the abundance of golde which he ſaw in the city, the images of golde in their temples, the plates, armours, and ſhields of gold which they vſe in the warres, he called it El Dorado. After the death of Ordas and Martinez, and after Orellana, who was imployed by Gonzalo Piçarro, one Pedro de Oſua a knight of Nauarre attempted Guiana, taking his way from Peru, and built his brigandines vpon a riuer called Oia, which riſeth to the Southward of Quito, and is very great. This riuer falleth into Amazones, by which Oſua with his companies deſcended, and came out of that prouince which is called Mutylonez: and it ſeemeth to mee that this empire is reſerued for her Maieſty and the Engliſh nation, by reaſon of the hard ſucceſſe which all theſe and other Spanyards found in attempting the ſame, whereof I will ſpeake briefly, though impertinent in ſome ſort to my purpoſe. This Pedro de Oſua had among his troups a Biſcain, called Agiri, a man meanly borne, who bare no other office then a ſergeant or alferez: but after certeine moneths, when the ſouldiers were grieued with trauels, and conſumed with famine, and that no entrance could be found by the branches or body of Amazones, this Agiri raiſed a mutiny, of which hee made himſelfe the head, and ſo preuailed, as he put Oſua to the ſword, and all his followers, taking on him the whole charge and commandement, with a purpoſe not onely to make himſelfe emperour of Guiana, but alſo of Peru, & of all that ſide of the Weſt Indies: he had of his party ſeuen hundred ſouldiers, and of thoſe many promiſed to draw in other captaines & companies, to deliuer vp townes and forts in Peru: but neither finding by yͤ ſaid riuer any paſſage into Guiana, nor any poſſibility to returne towards Peru by the ſame Amazones, by reaſon that yͤ deſcent of the riuer made ſo great a current, he was inforced to diſemboque at the mouth of the ſayd Amazones, which can not be leſſe then a thouſand leagues from the place where they imbarked: from thence he coaſted the land till he arriued at Margarita to the North of Mompatar, which is at this day called Puerto de Tyranno, for that he there ſlew Don Iuan de villa Andreda, gouernour of Margarita, who was father to Don Iuan Sarmiento, gouernor of Margarita when ſir Iohn Burgh landed there, and attempted the Iſland. Agiri put to the ſword all other in the Iſland that refuſed to be of his party, and tooke with him certeine Simerones, and other deſperate companions. From thence he went to Cumana, and there ſlew the gouernour, and dealt in all as at Margarita: hee ſpoiled all the coaſt of Caracas, and the prouince of Venezuela, and of Rio de la hacha; and as I remember, it was the ſame yere that ſir Iohn Hawkins ſailed to Saint Iuan de Vllua in the Ieſus of Lubeck: for himſelfe tolde me that he met with ſuch a one vpon the coaſt that rebelled, and had ſailed downe all the riuer of Amazones. Agiri from thence landed about Sancta Marta, and ſacked it alſo, putting to death ſo many as refuſed to be his followers, purpoſing to inuade Nueuo reyno de Granada, and to ſacke Pamplon, Merida, Lagrita, Tunxa, and the reſt of the cities of Nueuo reyno, and from thence againe to enter Peru: but in a fight in the ſayd Nueuo reyno he was ouerthrowen, and finding no way to eſcape, he firſt put to the ſword his owne children, foretelling them that they ſhould not to liue to be defamed or vpbraided by the Spanyards after his death, who would haue termed them the children of a traitour or tyrant; and that ſithence hee could not make them princes, hee would yet deliuer them from ſhame and reproch. Theſe were the ends and tragedies of Ordas, Martinez, Orellana; Ozua, and Agiri.

Alſo ſoone after Ordas followed Ieronimo Ortal de Saragoſa with 130 ſouldiers, who failing his entrance by ſea, was caſt with the current on the coaſt of Paria, & peopled about S. Miguel de Neueri. It was then attempted by Don Pedro de Silua, a Portugues of the family of Ruigomes de Silua, and by the fauour which Ruigomes had with the king, he was ſet out, but he alſo ſhot wide of the marke; for being departed from Spaine with his fleet, he entered by Marannon and Amazones, where by the nations of the riuer, and by the Amazones hee was vtterly ouerthrowen, and himſelfe and all his armie defeated, onely ſeuen eſcaped, and of thoſe but two returned.

Don Pedro de Silua.

After him came Pedro Hernandez de Serpa, and landed at Cumaná in the Weſt Indies, taking his iourney by land towards Orenoque, which may be ſome 120 leagues: but yer he came to the borders of the ſayd riuer, hee was ſet vpon by a nation of the Indians called Wikiri, and ouerthrowen in ſuch ſort, that of 300 ſouldiers, horſemen, many Indians, and Negros, there returned but 18. Others affirme, that he was defeated in the very entrance of Guiana, at the firſt ciuill towne of the empire called Macureguarai. Captaine Preſton in taking S. Iago de Leon (which was by him and his companies very reſolutely performed, being a great towne, and farre within the land) held a gentleman priſoner, who died in his ſhip, that was one of the company of Hernandez de Serpa, and ſaued among thoſe that eſcaped, who witneſſed what opinion is held among the Spanyards thereabouts of the great riches of Guiana, and El Dorado the city of Inga. Another Spanyard was brought aboord me by captaine Preſton, who told me in the hearing of himſelfe and diuers other gentlemen, that he met with Berreos campe-maſter at Caracas, when he came from the borders of Guiana, and that he ſaw with him forty of moſt pure plates of golde curiouſly wrought, and ſwords of Guiana decked and inlayed with gold, feathers garniſhed with golde, and diuers rarities which he caried to the Spaniſh king.

Pedro Hernandez de Serpa.

After Hernandez de Serpa, it was vndertaken by the Adelantado, Don Gonzales Ximenes de Caſada, who was one of the chiefeſt in the conqueſt of Nueuo reino, whoſe daughter and heire Don Antonio de Berreo maried. Gonzales ſought the paſſege alſo by the riuer called Papamene, which riſeth by Quito in Peru, & runneth Southeaſt 100 leagues, and then falleth into Amazones, but he alſo failing the entrance, returned with the loſſe of much labour and coſt. I tooke one captaine George a Spanyard that followed Gonzales in this enterpriſe. Gonzales gaue his daughter to Berreo, taking his oth & honour to follow the enterpriſe to the laſt of his ſubſtance and life, who ſince, as he hath ſworne to me, hath ſpent 300000 ducats in the ſame, & yet neuer could enter ſo far into the land as my ſelfe with that poore troupe or rather a handfull of men, being in all about 100 gentlemen, ſouldiers, rowers, boat-keepers, boyes, & of all ſorts: neither could any of the forepaſſed vndertakers, nor Berreo himſelfe, diſcouer the countrey, till now lately by conference with an ancient king called Carapana, he got the true light thereof: for Berreo came about 1500 miles yer he vnderſtood ought, or could finde any paſſage or entrance into any part thereof, yet he had experience of al theſe forenamed, and diuers others, and was perſwaded of their errors and miſtakings. Berreo ſought it by the riuer Caſſamar, which falleth into a great riuer called Pato: Pato falleth into Meta, and Meta into Baraquan, which is alſo called Orenoque.

Don Gonzales Ximenes de Caſada.

Antonio Berreo.

He tooke his iourney from Nueuo reyno de Granada where he dwelt, hauing the inheritance of Gonzales Ximenes in thoſe parts: he was followed with 700 horſe, he draue with him 1000 head of cattell, he had alſo many women, Indians, and ſlaues. How all theſe riuers croſſe and encounter, how the countrey lieth and is bordered, the paſſage of Ximenes and Berreo, mine owne diſcouery, and the way that I entred, with all the reſt of the nations and riuers, your lordſhip ſhall receiue in a large Chart or Map, which I haue not yet finiſhed, and which I ſhall moſt humbly pray your lordſhip to ſecret, and not to ſuffer it to paſſe your owne hands; for by a draught thereof all may be preuented by other nations: for I know it is this very yeere ſought by the French, although by the way that they now take, I feare it not much. It was alſo tolde me yer I departed England, that Villiers the admirall was in preparation for the planting of Amazones, to which riuer the French haue made diuers voyages, and returned much golde, and other rarities. I ſpake with a captaine of a French ſhip that came from thence, his ſhip riding in Falmouth the ſame yere that my ſhips came firſt from Virginia.

A new & rich trade of the French to the riuer of Amazones.

There was another this yeere in Helford that alſo came from thence, and had bene foureteene moneths at an anker in Amazones, which were both very rich. Although, as I am perſwaded, The ſeat of the Amazones.

Guiana cannot be entred that way, yet no doubt the trade of gold from thence paſſeth by branches of riuers into the riuer of Amazones, and ſo it doth on euery hand far from the countrey it ſelfe; for thoſe Indians of Trinidad haue plates of golde from Guiana, and thoſe canibals of Dominica which dwell in the Iſlands by which our ſhips paſſe yerely to the Weſt Indies, alſo the Indians of Paria, thoſe Indians called Tucaris, Chochi, Apotomios, Cumanagotos, and all thoſe other nations inhabiting nere about the mountaines that run from Paria thorow the prouince of Veneſuela, and in Maracapana, and the canibals of Guanipa, the Indians called Aſſawai, Coaca, Aiai, and the reſt (all which ſhall be deſcribed in my deſcription as they are ſituate) haue plates of golde of Guiana. And vpon the riuer of Amazones, Theuet writeth that the people weare croiſſants of golde, for of that forme the Guianians moſt commonly make them: ſo as from Dominica to Amazones, which is aboue 250 leagues, all the chiefe Indians in all parts weare of thoſe plates of Guiana. Undoubtedly thoſe that trade Amazones returne much golde, which (as is aforeſayd) commeth by trade from Guiana, by ſome branch of a riuer that falleth from the countrey into Amazones, and either it is by the riuer which paſſeth by the nations called Tiſnados, or by Carepuna. I made inquiry amongſt the moſt ancient and beſt trauelled of the Orenoqueponi, and I had knowledge of all the riuers betweene Orenoque & Amazones, and was very deſirous to vnderſtand the truth of thoſe warlike women, becauſe of ſome it is beleeued, of others not. And though I digreſſe from my purpoſe, yet I will ſet downe that which hath bene deliuered me for trueth of thoſe women, & I ſpake with a caſique or lord of people, that told me he had bene in the riuer, and beyond it alſo. The nations of theſe women are on the South ſide of the riuer in the prouinces of Topago, and their chiefeſt ſtrengths and retracts are in the Iſlands ſituate on the South ſide of the entrance ſome 60 leagues within the mouth of the ſayd riuer. The memories of the like women are very ancient aſwell in Africa as in Aſia: In Africa thoſe that had Meduſa for queene: others in Scithia nere the riuers of Tanais and Thermadon: we finde alſo that Lampedo & Martheſia were queenes of the Amazones: in many hiſtories they are verified to haue bene, and in diuers ages and prouinces: but they which are not far from Guiana doe accompany with men but once in a yere, and for the time of one moneth, which I gather by their relation, to be in April: and that time all kings of the borders aſſemble, and queenes of the Amazones; and after the queenes haue choſen, the reſt caſt lots for their Ualentines. This one moneth, they feaſt, dance, and drinke of their wines in abundance; and the Moone being done, they all depart to their owne prouinces. If they conceiue, and be deliuered of a ſonne, they returne him to the father; if of a daughter they nouriſh it, and reteine it: and as many as haue daughters ſend vnto the begetters a preſent; all being deſirous to increaſe their owne ſex and kind: but that they cut off the right dug of the breſt, I doe not finde to be true. It was farther told me, that if in theſe warres they tooke any priſoners that they vſed to accompany with thoſe alſo at what time ſoeuer, but in the end for certeine they put them to death: for they are ſayd to be very cruell and bloodthirſty, eſpecially to ſuch as offer to inuade their territories. Theſe Amazones haue likewiſe great ſtore of theſe plates of golde, which they recouer by exchange chiefly for a kinde of greene ſtones, which the Spanyards call Piedras hijadas, & we vſe for ſpleene ſtones: and for the diſeaſe of the ſtone we alſo eſteeme them. Of theſe I ſaw diuers in Guiana: and commonly euery king or caſique hath one, which their wiues for the moſt part weare; and they eſteeme them as great iewels.

But to returne to the enterpriſe of Bereo, who (as I haue ſayd) departed from Nueuo reyno with 700 horſe beſides the prouiſions aboue rehearſed, he deſcended by the riuer called Caſſanar, which riſeth in Nueuo reyno out of the mountaines by the city of Tuuia, from which mountaine alſo ſpringeth Pato; both which fall into the great riuer of Meta: and Meta riſeth from a mountaine toyning to Pamplon in the ſame Nueuo reyno de Granada. Theſe, as alſo Guaiare, which iſſueth out of the mountaines by Timana, fall all into Baraquan, and are but of his heads; for at their comming together they loſe their names; and Baraquan farther downe is alſo rebaptized by the name of Orenoque. On the other ſide of the city and hilles of Timana riſeth Rio grande, which falleth in the ſea by Sancta Marta. By Caſſonar firſt, and ſo into Meta, Berreo paſſed, keeping his horſemen on the banks, where the countrey ſerued them for to march, and where otherwiſe, he was driuen to imbarke them in boats which he builded for the purpoſe, and ſo came with the current downe the riuer of Meta, and ſo into Baraquan. After he entred that great & mighty riuer, he began dayly to loſe of his companies both men and horſe; for it is in many places violently ſwift, and hath forcible eddies, many ſands, and diuers Iſlands ſharpe pointed with rocks: but after one whole yeere, iourneying for the moſt part by riuer, and the reſt by land, he grew dayly to fewer numbers; for both by ſickneſſe, and by encountring with the people of thoſe regions, thorow which he trauelled, his companies were much waſted, eſpecially by diuers encounters with the Amapaians: and in all this time hee neuer could learne of any paſſage into Guiana, nor any newes or fame thereof, vntill he came to a further border of the ſayd Amapaia, eight dayes iourney from the riuer Caroli, which was the furtheſt riuer that he entred. Among thoſe of Amapaia, Guiana was famous, but few of theſe people accoſted Berreo, or would trade with him the firſt three moneths of the ſix, which he ſoiourned there. This Amapaia is alſo maruellous rich in golde (as both Berreo confeſſed and thoſe of Guiana with whom I had moſt conference) and is ſituate vpon Orenoque alſo. In this countrey Berreo loſt 60 of his beſt ſouldiers, and moſt of all his horſe that remained in his former yeeres trauell: but in the end, after diuers encounters with thoſe nations, they grew to peace; and they preſented Berreo with tenne images of fine golde among diuers other plates and croiſſants, which, as he ſware to me & diuers other gentlemen, were ſo curiouſly wrought, as he had not ſeene the like either in Italy, Spaine, or the Low-countreys: & he was reſolued, that when they came to the hands of the Spaniſh king, to whom he had ſent them by his campmaſter, they would appeare very admirable, eſpecially being wrought by ſuch a nation as had no yron inſtruments at all, nor any of thoſe helps which our goldſmiths haue to worke withall. The particular name of the people in Amapaia which gaue him theſe pieces, are called Anebas, and the riuer of Orenoque at that place is aboue 12 Engliſh miles broad, which may be from his out fall into the ſea 700 or 80 miles.

This prouince of Amapaia is a very low and a mariſh ground nere the riuer; and by reaſon of the red water which iſſueth out in ſmall branches thorow the fenny and boggy ground, there breed diuers poiſonfull wormes and ſerpents; and the Spanyards not ſuſpecting, nor in any ſort foreknowing the danger, were infected with a grieuous kinde of fluxe by drinking thereof; and euen the very horſes poiſoned therwith: inſomuch as at the end of the 6 moneths, that they abode there, of all their troups, there were not left aboue 120 ſouldiers, & neither horſe nor cattell: for Berreo hoped to haue found Guiana by 1000 miles nerer then it fel out to be in the end: by meanes whereof they ſuſteined much want, and much hunger, oppreſſed with grieuous diſeaſes, and all the miſeries that could be imagined. I demanded of thoſe in Guiana that had trauelled Amapaia, how they liued with that tawny or red water when they trauelled thither: and they tolde me that after the Sun was neere the middle of the ſkie, they vſed to fill their pots and pitchers with that water, but either before that time, or towards the ſetting of the Sun it was dangerous to drinke of, and in the night ſtrong poiſon. I learned alſo of diuers other riuers of that nature among them, which were alſo (while the Sun was in the Meridian) very ſafe to drinke, and in the morning, euening, and night woonderfull dangerous and infectiue. From this prouince Berreo haſted away aſſoone as the Spring and beginning of Summer appeared, and ſought his entrance on the borders of Orenoque on the South ſide; but there ran a ledge of ſo high and impaſſable mountaines, as he was not able by any meanes to march ouer them, continuing from the Eaſt ſea into which Orenoque falleth, euen to Quito in Peru: neither had he meanes to cary victuall or munition ouer thoſe craggie, high, and faſt hilles, being all woody, & thoſe ſo thicke and ſpiny, & ſo full of prickles, thornes, and briers, as it is impoſſible to creepe thorow them: hee had alſo neither friendſhip among the people, nor any interpreter to perſwade or treat with them: and more, to his diſaduantage, the caſiques and kings of Amapaia had giuen knowledge of his purpoſe to the Guianians, and that he ſought to ſacke and conquer the empire, for the hope of their ſo great abundance and quantities of golde: he paſſed by the mouthes of many great riuers, which fell into Orenoque both from the North and South, which I forbeare to name for tediouſneſſe, and becauſe they are more pleaſing in deſcribing then reading.

Many great riuers falling into Orenoque.

Berreo affirmed that there fell an hundred riuers into Orenoque from the North and South, whereof the leaſt was as big as Rio grande, that paſſed betweene Popayan and Nueuo reyno de Granada (Rio grande being eſteemed one of the renowmed riuers in all the Weſt Indies, and numbred among the great riuers of the world:) but he knew not the names of any of theſe, but Caroli onely; neither from what nations they deſcended, neither to what prouinces they led; for he had no meanes to diſcourſe with the inhabitants at any time: neither was he curious in theſe things, being vtterly vnlearned, and not knowing the Eaſt from the Weſt. But of all theſe I got ſome knowledge, and of many more, partly by mine owne trauell, and the reſt by conference: of ſome one I learned one, of others the reſt, hauing with me an Indian that ſpake many languages, and that of Guiana naturally. I ſought out all the aged men, and ſuch as were greateſt trauellers, and by the one and the other I came to vnderſtand the ſituations, the riuers, the kingdomes from the Eaſt ſea to the borders of Peru, and from Orenoque Southward as farre as Amazones or Marannon, and the religions of Maria Tamball, & of all the kings of prouinces, and captaines of townes and villages, how they ſtood in tearmes of peace or warre, and which were friends or enemies the one with the other, without which there can be neither entrance nor conqueſt in thoſe parts, nor elſwhere: for by the diſſention betweene Guaſcar and Atabalipa, Piçarro conquered Peru, and by the hatred that the Tlaxcallians bare to Mutezuma, Cortez was victorious ouer Mexico; without which both the one and the other had failed of their enterpriſe, and of the great honour and riches which they atteined vnto.

The prouince of Emeria inhabited by gentle Indians.

Carapana.

Now Berreo began to grow into diſpaire, and looked for no other ſucceſſe then his predeceſſor in this enterpriſe, vntill ſuch time as hee arriued at the prouince of Emeria towards the Eaſt ſea and mouth of the riuer, where he found a nation of people very fauourable, and the countrey full of all maner of victuall. The king of this land is called Carapana, a man very wiſe, ſubtill, and of great experience, being little leſſe then an hundred yeeres olde: in his youth he was ſent by his father into the Iſland of Trinidad, by reaſon of ciuill warre among themſelues, and was bred at a village in that iſland, called Parico: at that place in his youth hee had ſeene many Chriſtians, both French and Spaniſh, and went diuers times with the Indians of Trinidad to Margarita and Cumaná in the Weſt Indies (for both thoſe places haue euer beene relieued with victuall from Trinidad) by reaſon whereof he grew of more vnderſtanding, and noted the difference of the nations, comparing the ſtrength and armes of his countrey with thoſe of the Chriſtians, and euer after temporized ſo, as whoſoeuer els did amiſſe, or was waſted by contention, Carapana kept himſelfe and his countrey in quiet & plenty: he alſo held peace with the Caribes or Canibals his neighbours, and had free trade with all nations, whoſoeuer els had warre.

Berreo ſoiourned and reſted his weake troupe in the towne of Carapana ſixe weeks, and from him learned the way and paſſage to Guiana, and the riches and magnificence thereof; but being then vtterly diſable to proceed, he determined to try his fortune another yere, when he had renewed his prouiſions, and regathered more force, which hee hoped for aſwell out of Spaine as from Nueuo reyno, where hee had left his ſonne Don Antonio Ximenes to ſecond him vpon the firſt notice giuen of his entrance, and ſo for the preſent imbarked himſelfe in canoas, and by the branches of Orenoque arriued at Trinidad, hauing from Carapana ſufficient pilots to conduct him. From Trinidad he coaſted Paria, and ſo recouered Margarita: and hauing made relation to Don Iuan Sermiento the gouernour, of his proceeding, and perſwaded him of the riches of Guiana, he obteined from thence fifty ſouldiers, promiſing preſently to returne to Carapana, and ſo into Guiana. But Berreo meant nothing leſſe at that time; for he wanted many prouiſions neceſſary for ſuch an enterpriſe, and therefore departed from Margarita, ſeated himſelfe in Trinidad, and from thence ſent his camp-maſter, and his ſergeant-maior backe to the borders to diſcouer the neereſt paſſage into the empire, as alſo to treat with the borderers, and to draw them to his party and loue; without which, he knew he could neither paſſe ſafely, nor in any ſort be relieued with victuall or ought els. Carapana directed his company to a king called Morequito, aſſuring them that no man could deliuer ſo much of Guiana as Morequito could, and that his dwelling was but fiue dayes iourney from Macureguarai, the firſt ciuill towne of Guiana.

Morequito.

Vides the gouernour of Cumana competitor with Berreo in the conqueſt of Guiana.

Now your lordſhip ſhall vnderſtand, that this Morequito, one of the greateſt lords or kings of the borders of Guiana, had two or three yeeres before bene at Cumaná and at Margarita, in the Weſt Indies, with great ſtore of plates of golde, which he caried to exchange for ſuch other things as he wanted in his owne countrey, and was dayly feaſted, & preſented by the gouernours of thoſe places, and held amongſt them ſome two moneths, in which time one Vides gouernour of Cumaná wanne him to be his conductour into Guiana, being allured by thoſe croiſſants and images of golde which hee brought with him to trade, as alſo by the ancient fame and magnificence of El Dorado: whereupon Vides ſent into Spaine for a patent to diſcouer and conquer Guiana, not knowing of the precedence of Berreos patent, which, as Berreo affirmeth, was ſigned before that of Vides: ſo as when Vides vnderſtood of Berreo, and that he had made entrance into that territory, and foregone his deſire and hope, it was verily thought that Vides practiſed with Morequito to hinder and diſturbe Berreo in all he could, and not to ſuffer him to enter thorow his ſignorie, nor any of his companies; neither to victuall, nor guide them in any ſort; for Vides gouernour of Cumaná, and Berreo, were become mortall enemies, aſwell for that Berreo had gotten Trinidad into his patent with Guiana, as alſo in that he was by Berreo preuented in the iourney of Guiana it ſelfe: howſoeuer it was, I know not, but Morequito for a time diſſembled his diſpoſition, ſuffered Spanyards, and a frier (which Berreo had ſent to diſcouer Manoa) to trauell thorow his countrey, gaue them a guide for Macureguaray, the firſt towne of ciuill and apparelled people, from whence they had other guides to bring them to Manoa the great city of Inga: and being furniſhed with thoſe things which they had learned of Carapana were of moſt price in Guiana, went onward, and in eleuen dayes arriued at Manoa, as Berreo affirmeth for certeine: although Macureguaray.

Ten Spanyards arriue at Manoa.

I

could not be aſſured thereof by the lord which now gouerneth the prouince of Morequito, for he tolde me that they got all the golde they had, in other townes on this ſide Manoa, there being many very great and rich, and (as he ſayd) built like the townes of Chriſtians, with many roomes.

When theſe ten Spaniards were returned, and ready to put out of the border of Aromaia, the people of Morequito ſet vpon them, and ſlew them all but one that ſwam the riuer, and tooke from them to the value of forty thouſand pezos of golde: and one of them onely liued to bring the newes to Berreo, that both his nine ſouldiers and holy father were benighted in the ſaid prouince. I my ſelfe ſpake with the captaines of Morequito that ſlew them, and was at the place where it was executed. Berreo inraged herewithall, ſent all the ſtrength he could make into Aromaia, to be reuenged of him, his people, and countrey. But Morequito ſuſpecting the ſame, fled ouer Orenoque, and thorow the territories of the Saima, and Wikiri, recouered Cumaná, where hee thought himſelfe very ſafe, with Vides the gouernour. But Berreo ſending for him in the kings name, and his meſſengers finding him in the houſe of one Faſhardo on the ſudden yer he was ſuſpected, ſo as he could not then be conueyed away, Vides durſt not deny him, aſwell to auoid the ſuſpition of the practiſe, as alſo for that an holy father was ſlaine by him and his people. Morequito offered Faſhardo the weight of three quintals in golde, to let him eſcape: but the poore Guianian, betrayed on all ſides, was deliuered to the campe-maſter of Berreo, and was preſently executed.

Aromaia.

Saima and Wikiri.

Morequito executed.

After the death of this Morequito, the ſouldiers of Berreo ſpoiled his territorie, and tooke diuers priſoners, among others they tooke the vncle of Morequito, called Topiawari, who is now king of Aromaia (whoſe ſonne I brought with me into England) and is a man of great vnderſtanding and policy: he is aboue an hundred yeeres olde, and yet of a very able body. The Spaniards ledde him in a chaine ſeuenteene dayes, and made him their guide from place to place betweene his countrey & Emeria, the prouince of Carapana aforeſayd, and he was at laſt redeemed for an hundred plates of golde, and diuers ſtones called Piedras Hijadas, or Spleene-ſtones. Now Berreo for executing of Morequito, and other cruelties, ſpoiles, and ſlaughters done in Aromaia, hath loſt the loue of the Orenoqueponi, and of all the borderers, and dare not ſend any of his ſouldiers any further into the land then to Carapana, which he called the port of Guiana: but from thence by the helpe of Carapana he had trade further into the countrey, and alwayes appointed ten Spaniards to reſide in Carapanas towne, by whoſe fauour, and by being conducted by his people, thoſe ten ſearched the countrey thereabouts, aſwell for mines, as for other trades and commodities.

The towne of Carapana to the port of Guiana.

They alſo haue gotten a nephew of Morequito, whom they haue Chriſtened, and named Don Iuan, of whom they haue great hope, endeuouring by all meanes to eſtabliſh him in the ſayd prouince. Among many other trades, thoſe Spaniards vſed canoas to paſſe to the riuers of Barema, Pawroma, & Diſſequebe, which are on the South ſide of the mouth of Orenoque, and there buy women and children from the Canibals, which are of that barbarous nature, as they will for three or foure hatchets ſell the ſonnes and daughters of their owne brethren and ſiſters, and for ſomewhat more, euen their owne daughters. Hereof the Spaniards make great profit: for buying a maid of twelue or thirteene yeres for three or foure hatchets, they ſell them againe at Margarita in the Weſt Indies for fifty and an hundred pezos, which is ſo many crownes.

Some fewe Spaniards are now ſeated in Diſſequebe.

The maſter of my ſhippe, Iohn Dowglas, tooke one of the canoas which came laden from thence with people to be ſolde, and the moſt of them eſcaped; yet of thoſe he brought, there was one as well fauoured, and as well ſhaped as euer I ſaw any in England, and afterward I ſaw many of them, which but for their tawnie colour may be compared to any of Europe. They alſo trade in thoſe riuers for bread of Caſſaui, of which they buy an hundred pound weight for a knife, and ſell it at Margarita for ten pezos. They alſo recouer great ſtore of Cotton, Braſill wood, and thoſe beds which they call Hamacas or Braſill beds, wherein in hot countreyes all the Spaniards vſe to lie commonly, and in no other, neither did we our ſelues while we were there. By meanes of which trades, for ranſome of diuers of the Guianians, and for exchange of hatchets and kniues, Berreo recouered ſome ſtore of golde plates, eagles of golde, and images of men and diuers birdes, and diſpatched his campe-maſter for Spaine, with all that hee had gathered, therewith to leuie ſouldiers, and by the ſhew thereof to draw others to the loue of the enterpriſe. And hauing ſent diuers images aſwell of men as beaſts, birds & fiſhes, ſo curiouſly wrought in gold, he doubted not but to perſwade the king to yeeld to him ſome further helpe, eſpecially for that this land hath neuer beene ſacked, the mines neuer wrought, and in the Indies their works were well ſpent, and the golde drawen out with great labour and charge. He alſo diſpatched meſſengers to his ſonne in Nueuoreyno to leuie all the forces he could, & to come downe the riuer Orenoque to Emeria, the prouince of Carapana, to meet him: he had alſo ſent to Saint Iago de Leon on the coaſt of the Caracas, to buy horſes and mules.

After I had thus learned of his proceedings paſt and purpoſed, I told him that I had reſolued to ſee Guiana, and that it was the end of my iourney, and the cauſe of my comming to Trinidad, as it was indeed, (and for that purpoſe I ſent Iacob Whiddon the yeere before to get intelligence with whom Berreo himſelfe had ſpeech at that time, and remembred how inquiſitiue Iacob Whiddon was of his proceedings, and of the countrey of Guiana) Berreo was ſtricken into a great melancholy and ſadneſſe, and vſed all the arguments he could to diſſwade me, and alſo aſſured the gentlemen of my company that it would be labour loſt, and that they ſhould ſuffer many miſeries if they proceeded. And firſt he deliuered that I could not enter any of the riuers with any barke or pinneſſe, or hardly with any ſhips boat, it was ſo low, ſandy, and full of flats, and that his companies were dayly grounded in their canoas, which drew but twelue inches water. Hee further ſayde, that none of the countrey would come to ſpeake with vs, but would all flie; and if we followed them to their dwellings, they would burne their owne townes: and beſides that, the way was long, the Winter at hand, and that the riuers beginning once to ſwell, it was impoſſible to ſtem the current, and that we could not in thoſe ſmall boats by any means cary victuall for halfe the time, and that (which indeed moſt diſcouraged my company) the kings and lords of all the borders of Guiana had decreed that none of them ſhould trade with any Chriſtians for golde, becauſe the ſame would be their owne ouerthrow, and that for the loue of gold the Chriſtians meant to conquer and diſpoſſeſſe them of all together.

Many and the moſt of theſe I found to be true, but yet I reſoluing to make triall of all whatſoeuer happened, directed captaine George Gifford my vice-admirall to take the Lions whelpe, and captaine Calfield his barke to turne to the Eaſtward, againſt the mouth of a riuer called Capuri, whoſe entrance I had before ſent captaine Whiddon, and Iohn Dowglas the maſter, to diſcouer, who found ſome nine foot water or better vpon the flood, and fiue at low water, to whom I had giuen inſtructions that they ſhould anker at the edge of the ſhoald, and vpon the beſt of the flood to thruſt ouer, which ſhoald Iohn Dowglas bwoyed and beckoned for them before: but they laboured in vaine; for neither could they turne it vp altogether ſo farre to the Eaſt, neither did the flood continue ſo long, but the water fell yer they could haue paſſed the ſands; as wee after found by a ſecond experience: ſo as now wee muſt either giue ouer our enterpriſe, or leauing our ſhips at aduenture foure hundred mile behinde vs, muſt run vp in our ſhips boats, one barge, and two wheries. But being doubtfull how to cary victuals for ſo long a time in ſuch bables, or any ſtrength of men, eſpecially for that Berreo aſſured vs that his ſonne muſt be by that time come downe with many ſouldiers, I ſent away one King, maſter of the Lions whelpe, with his ſhipboat, to trie another branch of a riuer in the bottome of the bay of Guanipa, which was called Amana, to prooue if there were water to be found for either of the ſmall ſhips to enter. But when he came to the mouth of Amana, he found it as the reſt, but ſtayed not to diſcouer it thorowly, becauſe he was aſſured by an Indian, his guide, that the Canibals of Guanipa would aſſaile them with many canoas, and that they ſhot poiſoned arrowes; ſo as if he haſted not backe, they ſhould all be loſt.

The riuer of Capuri.

In the meane time, fearing the worſt, I cauſed all the carpenters we had, to cut downe a Galego boat, which we meant to caſt off, and to fit her with banks to row on, and in all things to prepare her the beſt they could, ſo as ſhe might be brought to draw but fiue foot, for ſo much we had on the barre of Capuri at low water. And doubting of Kings returne, I ſent Iohn Dowglas againe in my long barge, aſwell to relieue him, as alſo to make a perfect ſearch in the bottome of that bay: for it hath bene held for infallible, that whatſoeuer ſhip or boat ſhall fall therein, can neuer diſemboque againe, by reaſon of the violent current which ſetteth into the ſayde bay, as alſo for that the brize and Eaſterly winde bloweth directly into the ſame. Of which opinion I haue heard Iohn Hampton of Plymmouth, one of the greateſt experience of England, and diuers other beſides that haue traded to Trinidad.

Iohn Hampton captaine of the Minion vnder ſir Iohn Hawkins in his voyage to S. Iuan de Vllua.

I ſent with Iohn Dowglas an olde caſique of Trinidad for a pilot, who tolde vs that we could not returne againe by the bay or gulfe, but that he knew a by-branch which ran within the land to the Eaſtward, and that he thought by it we might fall into Capuri, and ſo returne in foure dayes. Iohn Dowglas ſearched thoſe riuers, and found foure goodly entrances, whereof the leaſt was as bigge as the Thames at Wolwich; but in the bay thitherward it was ſhoald, and but ſixe foot water: ſo as we were now without hope of any ſhip or barke to paſſe ouer, and therefore reſolued to go on with the boats, and the bottome of the Galego, in which we thruſt 60 men. In the Lions whelps boat & whery we caried 20, Captaine Calfield in his whery caried ten more, and in my barge other tenne, which made vp a hundred: we had no other meanes but to cary victuall for a moneth in the ſame, and alſo to lodge therein as we could, and to boile and dreſſe our meat. Captaine Gifford had with him maſter Edward Porter, captaine Eynos, and eight more in his whery, with all their victuall, weapons, and prouiſions. Captaine Calfield had with him my couſin Butſhead Gorges, and eight more. In the galley, of gentlemen and officers my ſelfe had captaine Thin, my couſin Iohn Greenuile, my nephew Iohn Gilbert, captaine Whiddon, captaine Keymis, Edward Handcocke, captaine Clarke, lieutenant Hewes, Thomas Vpton, captaine Facy, Ierome Ferrar, Anthony Welles, William Connocke, and aboue fifty more. We could not learne of Berreo any other way to enter but in branches, ſo farre to wind-ward, as it was impoſſible for vs to recouer: for wee had as much ſea to croſſe ouer in our wheries, as betweene Douer and Calice, and in a great billow, the winde and current being both very ſtrong, ſo as we were driuen to goe in thoſe ſmall boats directly before the winde into the bottome of the bay of Guanipa, and from thence to enter the mouth of ſome one of thoſe riuers which Iohn Dowglas had laſt diſcouered, and had with vs for pilot an Indian of Barema, a riuer to the South of Orenoque, betweene that and Amazones, whoſe canoas we had formerly taken as hee was going from the ſayd Barema, laden with Caſſaui-bread, to ſell at Margarita. This Arwacan promiſed to bring me into the great riuer of Orenoque, but indeed of that which he entred he was vtterly ignorant, for he had not ſeene it in twelue yeeres before; at which time he was very yoong, and of no iudgement: and if God had not ſent vs another helpe, we might haue wandred a whole yere in that labyrinth of riuers, yer wee had found any way, either out or in, eſpecially after wee were paſt ebbing and flowing, which was in foure dayes: for I know all the earth doeth not yeelde the like confluence of ſtreames and branches, the one croſſing the other ſo many times, and all ſo faire and large, and ſo like one to another, as no man can tell which to take: and if wee went by the Sunne or Compaſſe, hoping thereby to goe directly one way or other, yet that way wee were alſo caried in a circle amongſt multitudes of Iſlands, and euery Iſland ſo bordered with high trees, as no man coulde ſee any further then the bredth of the riuer, or length of the breach. But this it chanced, that entering into a riuer, (which becauſe it had no name, wee called the riuer of the Red croſſe, our ſelues being the firſt Chriſtians that euer came therein) the two and twentieth of May, as wee were rowing vp the ſame, wee eſpied a ſmall canoa with three Indians, which (by the ſwiftneſſe of my barge, rowing with eight oares) I ouertooke yer they could croſſe the riuer, the reſt of the people on the banks ſhadowed vnder the thicke wood, gazed on with a doubtfull conceit what might befall thoſe three which we had taken. But when they perceiued that we offered them no violence, neither entred their canoa with any of ours, nor tooke out of the canoa any of theirs, they then beganne to ſhew themſelues on the banks ſide, and offered to traffique with vs for ſuch things as they had. And as wee drew neere, they all ſtayed, and we came with our barge to the mouth of a little creeke which came from their towne into the great riuer.

The riuer of the Red croſſe.

As we abode there a while, our Indian pilot, called Ferdinando, would needs goe aſhore to their village, to fetch ſome fruits, and to drinke of their artificiall wines, and alſo to ſee the place, and know the lord of it againſt another time, and tooke with him a brother of his, which hee had with him in the iourney: when they came to the village of theſe people, the lord of the Iſland offered to lay hands on them, purpoſing to haue ſlaine them both, yeelding for reaſon that this Indian of ours had brought a ſtrange nation into their territory, to ſpoile and deſtroy them. But the pilot being quicke, and of a diſpoſed body, ſlipt their fingers, and ran into the woods, and his brother being the better footman of the two, recouered the creekes mouth, where we ſtayed in our barge, crying out that his brother was ſlaine: with that we ſet hands on one of them that was next vs, a very olde man, and brought him into the barge, aſſuring him that if we had not our pilot againe, we would preſently cut off his head. This olde man being reſolued that he ſhould pay the loſſe of the other, cried out to thoſe in the woods to ſaue Ferdinando our pilot; but they followed him notwithſtanding, and hunted after him vpon the foot with the Deere-dogges, and with ſo maine a crie, that all the woods eckoed with the ſhout they made: but at the laſt this poore chaſed Indian recouered the riuer ſide, and got vpon a tree, and as we were coaſting, leaped downe and ſwamme to the barge halfe dead with feare. But our good happe was, that we kept the other olde Indian which we handfaſted to redeeme our pilot withall; for being naturall of thoſe riuers, we aſſured our ſelues hee knew the way better then any ſtranger could. And indeed, but for this chance, I thinke we had neuer found the way either to Guiana, or backe to our ſhips: for Ferdinando after a few dayes knew nothing at all, nor which way to turne, yea and many times the old man himſelfe was in great doubt which riuer to take. Thoſe people which dwell in theſe broken iſlands and drowned lands, are generally called Tiuitiuas; there are of them two ſorts, the one called Ciawani, and the other Waraweete.

Two nations of the Tiuitiuas, called Ciawani, and Waraweete.

A deſcription of the mightie riuer of Orenoque or Baraquan.

The great riuer of Orenoque or Baraquan hath nine branches which fall out on the North ſide of his owne maine mouth: on the South ſide it hath ſeuen other fallings into the ſea, ſo it diſemboqueth by ſixteene armes in all, betweene Ilands and broken ground, but the Ilands are very great, many of them as bigge as the Iſle of Wight, and bigger, and many leſſe. From the firſt branch on the North to the laſt of the South, it is at leaſt 100 leagues, ſo as the riuers mouth is 300 miles wide at his entrance into the ſea, which I take to be farre bigger then that of Amazones. All thoſe that inhabit in the mouth of this riuer vpon the ſeuerall North branches, are theſe Tiuitiuas, of which there are two chiefe lords which haue continuall warres one with the other. The Ilands which lie on the right hand, are called Pallamos, and the land on the left, Horotomaka, and the riuer by which Iohn Dowglas returned within the land from Amana to Capuri, they call Macuri.

What maner of people the Tiuitiuas are.

Theſe Tiuitiuas are a very goodly people and very valiant, and haue the moſt manly ſpeech and moſt deliberate that euer I heard, of what nation ſoeuer. In the Summer they haue houſes on the ground, as in other places: in the Winter they dwell vpon the trees, where they build very artificiall townes and villages, as it is written in the Spaniſh ſtory of the Weſt Indies, that thoſe people do in the low lands nere the gulfe of Vraba: for betweene May & September the riuer of Orenoque riſeth thirty foot vpright, and then are thoſe ilands ouerflowen twenty foot high aboue the leuell of the ground, ſauing ſome few raiſed grounds in the middle of them: and for this cauſe they are inforced to liue in this maner. They neuer eat of any thing that is ſet or ſowen: and as at home they vſe neither planting nor other manurance, ſo when they come abroad, they refuſe to feed of ought, but of that which nature without labour bringeth forth. They vſe the tops of Palmitos for bread, and kill deere, fiſh, and porks, for the reſt of their ſuſtenance. They haue alſo many ſorts of fruits that grow in the woods, and great variety of birds and fowle.

And if to ſpeake of them were not tedious, and vulgar, ſurely we ſaw in thoſe paſſages of very rare colours and formes, not elſewere to be found, for as much as I haue either ſeene or read. Of theſe people thoſe that dwell vpon the branches of Orenoque, called Capuri and Macureo, are for the moſt part carpenters of canoas, for they make the moſt and faireſt canoas, and ſel them into Guiana for golde, and into Trinidad for tabacco, in the exceſſiue taking whereof, they exceed all nations; and notwithſtanding the moiſtneſſe of the aire in which they liue, the hardneſſe of their diet, and the great labours they ſuffer to hunt, fiſh and fowle for their liuing; in all my life, either in the Indies or in Europe, did I neuer behold a more goodly or better fauoured people or a more manly. They were woont to make warre vpon all nations, and eſpecially on the Canibals, ſo as none durſt without a good ſtrength trade by thoſe riuers: but of late they are at peace with their neighbours, all holding the Spaniards for a common enemy. When their commanders die, they vſe great lamentation, and when they thinke the fleſh of their bodies is putrified, and fallen from the bones, then they take vp the carcaſe againe, and hang it in the caciques houſe that died, and decke his ſcull with feathers of all colours, and hang all his golde plates about the bones of his armes, thighs, and legs. Thoſe nations which are called Arwacas, which dwell on the South of Orenoque, (of which place and nation our Indian pilot was) are diſperſed in many other places, and doe vſe to beat the bones of their lords into powder, and their wiues and friends drinke it all in their ſeuerall ſorts of drinks.

The Arwacas on the South ſide of Orenoque.

The port of the Ciawani.

After we departed from the port of theſe Ciawani, wee paſſed vp the riuer with the flood, and ankered the ebbe, and in this ſort we went onward. The third day that we entred the riuer, our galley came on ground, and ſtucke ſo faſt, as we thought that euen there our diſcouery had ended, and that we muſt haue left foureſcore and ten of our men to haue inhabited like rooks vpon trees with thoſe nations: but the next morning, after we had caſt out all her ballaſt, with tugging and halling to and fro, we got her aflote, and went on. At foure dayes end wee fell into as goodly a riuer as euer I beheld, which was called The great Amana, which ranne more directly without windings and turnings then the other: but ſoone after the flood of the ſea left vs; and being inforced either by maine ſtrength to row againſt a violent current, or to returne as wiſe as we went out, we had then no ſhift but to perſwade the companies that it was but two or three dayes worke, and therefore deſired them to take paines, euery gentleman & others taking their turnes to row, and to ſpell one the other at the houres end. Euery day we paſſed by goodly branches of riuers, ſome falling from the Weſt, others frõ the Eaſt into Amana, but thoſe I leaue to the deſcription in the Cart of diſcouery, where euery one ſhalbe named with his riſing and deſcent. When three dayes more were ouergone, our companies began to deſpaire, the weather being extreame hote, the riuer bordered with very high trees, that kept away the aire, and the current againſt vs euery day ſtronger then other: but we euermore commanded our pilots to promiſe an ende the next day, and vſed it ſo long, as we were driuen to aſſure them from foure reaches of the riuer to three, and ſo to two, and ſo to the next reach: but ſo long we laboured, that many dayes were ſpent, and wee driuen to drawe our ſelues to harder allowance, our bread euen at the laſt, and no drinke at all; and our men and our ſelues ſo wearied and ſcorched, and doubtfull withall, whether wee ſhould euer performe it or no, the heat increaſing as we drew towards the line; for wee were now in fiue degrees.

They are in fiue degrees.

The further we went on (our victuall decreaſing and the aire breeding great faintneſſe) wee grew weaker and weaker, when wee had moſt need of ſtrength and abilitie; for hourely the riuer ranne more violently then other againſt vs, and the barge, wheries, and ſhippes boat of captaine Gifford and captaine Calfield, had ſpent all their prouiſions; ſo as we were brought into deſpaire and diſcomfort, had wee not perſwaded all the company that it was but onely one dayes worke more to atteine the land where wee ſhould be relieued of all wee wanted, and if we returned, that wee were ſure to ſtarue by the way, and that the world would alſo laugh vs to ſcorne. On the banks of theſe riuers were diuers ſorts of fruits good to eat, flowers and trees of ſuch variety, as were ſufficient to make tenne volumes of herbals: we relieued our ſelues many times with the fruits of the countrey, and ſometimes with fowle and fiſh. Wee ſaw birds of all colours, ſome carnation, ſome crimſon, orenge-tawny, purple, watchet, and of all other ſorts both ſimple and mixt, and it was vnto vs a great good paſſing of the time to beholde them, beſides the reliefe we found by killing ſome ſtore of them with our fowling pieces; without which, hauing little or no bread, and leſſe drinke, but onely the thicke and troubled water of the riuer, we had beene in a very hard caſe.

Our olde pilot of the Ciawani (whom, as I ſayd before, wee tooke to redeeme Ferdinando) tolde vs, that if we would enter a branch of a riuer on the right hand with our barge and wheries, and leaue the galley at anker the while in the great riuer, he would bring vs to a towne of the Arwacas, where we ſhould finde ſtore of bread, hennes, fiſh, and of the countrey wine; and perſwaded vs, that departing from the galley at noone, we might returne yer night. I was very glad to heare this ſpeech, and preſently tooke my barke, with eight muſketiers, captaine Giffords whery, with himſelfe and foure muſketiers, and captaine Calfield with his whery, and as many; and ſo we entred the mouth of this riuer: and becauſe we were perſwaded that it was ſo nere, we tooke no victuall with vs at all. When we had rowed three houres, we maruelled we ſaw no ſigne of any dwelling, and aſked the pilot where the towne was: he tolde vs a little further. After three houres more, the Sun being almoſt ſet, we began to ſuſpect that he led vs that way to betray vs; for hee confeſſed that thoſe Spanyards which fled from Trinidad, and alſo thoſe that remained with Carapana in Emeria, were ioyned together in ſome village vpon that riuer. But when it grew towards night; and wee demanded where the place was: hee tolde vs but foure reaches more. When we had rowed foure and foure, we ſaw no ſigne; and our poore water-men, euen heart-broken, and tired, were ready to giue vp the ghoſt: for wee had now come from the galley neere forty miles.

At the laſt we determined to hang the pilot; and if wee had well knowen the way backe againe by night, hee had ſurely gone; but our owne neceſſities pleaded ſufficiently for his ſafety: for it was as darke as pitch, and the riuer began ſo to narrow it ſelfe, and the trees to hang ouer from ſide to ſide, as wee were driuen with arming ſwords to cut a paſſage thorow thoſe branches that couered the water. Wee were very deſirous to finde this towne, hoping of a feaſt, becauſe wee made but a ſhort breakefaſt aboord the galley in the morning, and it was now eight a clocke at night, and our ſtomacks began to gnawe apace: but whether it was beſt to returne or goe on, we beganne to doubt, ſuſpecting treaſon in the pilot more and more: but the poore olde Indian euer aſſured vs that it was but a little further, but this one turning and that turning: and at the laſt about one a clocke after midnight wee ſaw a light; and rowing towards it, wee heard the dogges of the village. When we landed wee found few people; for the lord of that place was gone with diuers canoas aboue foure hundred miles off, vpon a iourney towardes the head of Orenoque to trade for golde, and to buy women of the Canibals, who afterward vnfortunately paſſed by vs as wee rode at an anker in the port of Morequito in the darke of the night, and yet came ſo neere vs, as his canoas grated againſt our barges: he left one of his company at the port of Morequito, by whom wee vnderſtood that hee had brought thirty yoong women, diuers plates of golde, and had great ſtore of fine pieces of cotton cloth, and cotton beds. In his houſe we had good ſtore of bread, fiſh, hennes, and Indian drinke, and ſo reſted that night, and in the morning after we had traded with ſuch of his people as came downe, we returned towards our gally, and brought with vs ſome quantity of bread, fiſh, and hennes.

A moſt beautifull countrey.

The riuer of Lagartos, or Crocodiles.

Two canoas taken.

Three Spanyards eſcaped.

On both ſides of this riuer, we paſſed the moſt beautifull countrey that euer mine eyes beheld: and whereas all that we had ſeene before was nothing but woods, prickles, buſhes, and thornes, here we beheld plaines of twenty miles in length, the graſſe ſhort and greene, and in diuers parts groues of trees by themſelues, as if they had beene by all the arte and labour in the world ſo made of purpoſe: and ſtill as we rowed, the deere came downe feeding by the waters ſide, as if they had beene vſed to a keepers call. Upon this riuer there were great ſtore of fowle, and of many ſorts: we ſaw in it diuers ſorts of ſtrange fiſhes, and of maruellous bignes: but for lagartos it exceeded, for there were thouſands of thoſe vgly ſerpents; and the people call it for the abundance of them, The riuer of Lagartos, in their language. I had a Negro a very proper yoong fellow, who leaping out of the galley to ſwim in the mouth of this riuer, was in all our ſights taken and deuoured with one of thoſe lagartos. In the meane while our companies in the gally thought we had bene all loſt, (for wee promiſed to returne before night) and ſent the Lions whelps ſhippes boat with captaine Whiddon to follow vs vp the riuer; but the next day, after we had rowed vp and downe ſome foureſcore miles, we returned, and went on our way, vp the great riuer; and when we were euen at the laſt caſt for want of victuals, captaine Gifford being before the galley and the reſt of the boats, ſeeking out ſome place to land vpon the banks to make fire, eſpied foure canoas comming downe the riuer; & with no ſmall ioy cauſed his men to trie the vttermoſt of their ſtrengths, and after a while two of the foure gaue ouer, and ranne themſelues aſhore, euery man betaking himſelfe to the faſtneſſe of the woods, the two other leſſer got away, while he landed to lay holde on theſe; and ſo turned into ſome by-creeke, we knew not whither. Thoſe canoas that were taken, were loaden with bread, and were bound for Margarita in the Weſt Indies, which thoſe Indians (called Arwacas) purpoſed to cary thither for exchange: but in the leſſer there were three Spanyards, who hauing heard of the defeat of their gouernour in Trinidad, and that we purpoſed to enter Guiana, came away in thoſe canaos; one of them was a cauallero, as the captaine of the Arwacas after tolde vs, another a ſouldier, and the third a refiner.

The Spaniſh golde finers baſket & other things taken.

The richeſt mines defended with the white ſpar.

In the meane time, nothing on the earth could haue bene more welcome to vs, next vnto gold, then the great ſtore of very excellent bread which we found in theſe canoas; for now our men cried, Let vs goe on, we care not how farre. After that captaine Gifford had brought the two canoas to the galley, I tooke my barge, and went to the banks ſide with a dozen ſhot, where the canoas firſt ranne themſelues aſhore, and landed there, ſending out captaine Gifford, and captaine Thyn on one hand, and captaine Calfield on the other, to follow thoſe that were fled into the woods: and as I was creeping thorow the buſhes, I ſawe an Indian baſket hidden, which was the refiners baſket; for I found in it his quick-ſiluer, ſalt-peter, and diuers things for the triall of metals, and alſo the duſt of ſuch ore as he had refined, but in thoſe canoas which eſcaped there was a good quantity of ore and gold. I then landed more men, and offered fiue hundred pound to what ſouldier ſoeuer could take one of thoſe three Spanyards that we thought were landed. But our labours were in vaine in that behalfe; for they put themſelues into one of the ſmall canoas: and ſo while the greater canoas were in taking, they eſcaped. But ſeeking after the Spanyards, we found the Arwacas hidden in the woods, which were pilots for the Spanyards, and rowed their canoas; of which I kept the chiefeſt for a pilot, and caried him with me to Guiana, by whom I vnderſtood where and in what countreyes the Spanyards had laboured for golde, though I made not the ſame knowen to all: for when the ſprings began to breake, and the riuers to raiſe themſelues ſo ſuddenly, as by no meanes wee could abide the digging of any mine, eſpecially for that the richeſt are defended with rocks of hard ſtones, which wee call the White ſpar, and that it required both time, men, and inſtruments fit for ſuch a worke, I thought it beſt not to houer thereabouts, leaſt if the ſame had beene perceiued by the company, there would haue beene by this time many barks and ſhippes ſet out, and perchance other nations would alſo haue gotten of ours for pilots; ſo as both our ſelues might haue beene preuented, and all our care taken for good vſage of the people bene vtterly loſt, by thoſe that onely reſpect preſent profit, and ſuch violence or inſolence offered, as the nations which are borderers would haue changed their deſire of our loue and defence into hatred and violence. And for any longer ſtay to haue brought a more quantity (which I heare hath beene often obiected) whoſoeuer had ſeene or prooued the fury of that riuer after it beganne to ariſe, and had bene a moneth and odde dayes, as we were, from hearing ought from our ſhippes, leauing them meanly manned 400 miles off, would perchance haue turned ſomewhat ſooner then we did, if all the mountaines had bene golde, or rich ſtones. And to ſay the truth, all the branches and ſmall riuers which fell into Orenoque were raiſed with ſuch ſpeed, as if we waded them ouer the ſhooes in the morning outward, we were couered to the ſhoulders homeward the very ſame day: and to ſtay to digge out gold with our nailes, had bene Opus laboris but not Ingenij: ſuch a quantitie as would haue ſerued our turnes we could not haue had, but a diſcouery of the Mines to our infinite diſaduantage wee had made, and that could haue bene the beſt profite of farther ſearch or ſtay: for thoſe Mines are not eaſily broken, nor opened in haſt, and I could haue returned a good quantitie of gold ready caſt, if I had not ſhot at another marke, then preſent profit.

This Arwacan Pilot with the reſt, feared that wee would haue eaten them, or otherwiſe haue put them to ſome cruel death (for the Spaniards, to the end that none of the people in the paſſage towards Guiana or in Guiana it ſelfe might come to ſpeach with vs, perſwaded all the nations, that we were men-eaters, and Canibals) but when the poore men and women had ſeene vs, and that wee gaue them meate, and to euery one ſomething or other, which was rare and ſtrange to them, they beganne to conceiue the deceit and purpoſe of the Spaniards, who indeed (as they confeſſed) tooke from them both their wiues and daughters dayly, and vſed them for the ſatiſfying of their owne luſts, eſpecially ſuch as they tooke in this maner by ſtrength. But I proteſt before the Maieſtie of the liuing God, that I neither know nor beleeue, that any of our company one or other, by violence or otherwiſe, euer knew any of their women, and yet we ſaw many hundreds, and had many in our power, and of thoſe very yong, and excellently fauoured, which came among vs without deceit, ſtarke naked.

The Spaniards diuelish lies.

Nothing got vs more loue amongſt them then this vſage: for I ſuffered not any man to take from any of the nations ſo much as a Pina, or a Potato roote, without giuing them contentment, nor any man ſo much as to offer to touch any of their wiues or daughters: which courſe ſo contrary to the Spaniards (who tyrannize ouer them in all things) drewe them to admire her Maieſtie, whoſe commaundement I tolde them it was, and alſo wonderfully to honour our nation.

But I confeſſe it was a very impatient worke to keepe the meaner ſort from ſpoyle and ſtealing, when wee came to their houſes: which becauſe in all I coulde not preuent, I cauſed my Indian interpreter at euery place when wee departed, to knowe of the loſſe or wrong done, and if ought were ſtolen or taken by violence, either the ſame was reſtored, and the partie puniſhed in their ſight, or elſe was payed for to their vttermoſt demand.

A notable courſe of iuſtice.

They alſo much wondered at vs, after they heard that we had ſlaine the Spaniards at Trinidad, for they were before reſolued, that no nation of Chriſtians durſt abide their preſence, and they wondered more when I had made them know of the great ouerthrow that her Maieſties armie and Fleete had giuen them of late yeeres in their owne Countreys.

After we had taken in this ſupply of bread, with diuers baſkets of rootes which were excellent meate, I gaue one of the Canoas to the Arwacas, which belonged to the Spaniards that were eſcaped, and when I had diſmiſſed all but the Captaine (who by the Spaniards was chriſtened Martin) I ſent backe in the ſame Canoa the olde Ciawan, and Ferdinando my firſt Pilot, and gaue them both ſuch things as they deſired, with ſufficient victuall to cary them backe, and by them wrote a letter to the ſhips, which they promiſed to deliuer, and performed it, and then I went on, with my newe hired Pilot Martin the Arwacan: but the next or ſecond day after, wee came aground againe with our Galley, and were like to caſt her away, with all our victuall and prouiſion, and ſo lay on the ſand one whole night and were farre more in deſpaire at this time to free her then before, becauſe wee had no tide of flood to helpe vs, and therefore feared that all our hopes would haue ended in miſhaps: but we faſtened an ancker vpon the lande, and with maine ſtrength drewe her off: and ſo the fifteenth day wee diſcouered afarre off the mountaines of Guiana to our great ioy, and towards the euening had a ſlent of a Northerly winde that blewe very ſtrong, which brought vs in ſight of the great Riuer Orenoque; out of which this Riuer diſcended wherein wee were: wee deſcried afarre off three other Canoas as farre as wee could diſcerne them, after whom wee haſtened with our barge and wherries, but two of them paſſed out of ſight, and the thirde entered vp the great Riuer, on the right hande to the Weſtward, and there ſtayed out of ſight, thinking that wee meant to take the way Eaſtward towards the prouince of Carapana, for that way the Spaniards keepe, not daring to goe vpwards to Guiana, the people in thoſe parts being all their enemies, and thoſe in the Canoas thought vs to haue bene thoſe Spaniards that were fled from Trinidad, and had eſcaped killing: and when wee came ſo farre downe as the opening of that branch into which they ſlipped, being neere them with our barge and wherries, wee made after them, and ere they coulde land, came within call, and by our interpreter tolde them what wee were, wherewith they came backe willingly abord vs: and of ſuch fiſh and Tortugas egges as they had gathered, they gaue vs, and promiſed in the morning to bring the Lord of that part with them, and to do vs all other ſeruices they could.

Two branches of the riuer Orenoque.

That night we came to an ancker at the parting of the three goodly Riuers (the one was the Riuer of Amana by which we came from the North, and ranne athwart towards the South, the other two were of Orenoque which croſſed from the West and ranne to the Sea towardes the Eaſt) and landed vpon a faire ſand, where wee found thouſands of Tortugas egges, which are very wholeſome meate, and greatly reſtoring, ſo as our men were nowe well filled and highly contented both with the fare, and neereneſſe of the land of Guiana which appeared in ſight.

Toparimaca.

In the morning there came downe according to promiſe the Lord of that border called Toparimaca, with ſome thirtie or fourtie followers, and brought vs diuers ſorts of fruites, and of his wine, bread, fiſh, and fleſh, whom wee alſo feaſted as wee could, at leaſt wee dranke good Spaniſh wine (whereof wee had a ſmall quantitie in bottles) which aboue all things they loue. I conferred with this Toparimaca of the next way to Guiana, who conducted our galley and boates to his owne port, and caried vs from thence ſome mile and a halfe to his Towne, where ſome of our Captaines karouſed of his wine till they were reaſonable pleaſant, for it is very ſtrong with pepper, and the iuice of diuers hearbes, and fruites digeſted and purged, they keepe it in great earthen pots of tenne or twelue galons very cleane and ſweete, and are themſelues at their meetings and feaſtes the greateſt karouſers and drunkards of the world: when wee came to his towne wee found two Caſiques, whereof one was a ſtranger that had bene vp the Riuer in trade, and his boates, people, and wife incamped at the port where wee anckered, and the other was of that countrey a follower of Toparimaca: they lay each of them in a cotten Hamaca, which wee call braſill beds, and two women attending them with ſixe cuppes and a little ladle to fill them, out of an earthen pitcher of wine, and ſo they dranke each of them three of thoſe cups at a time one to the other, and in this ſort they drinke drunke at their feaſtes and meetings.

That Caſique that was a ſtranger had his wife ſtaying at the port where wee anckered, and in all my life I haue ſeldome ſeene a better fauoured woman: Shee was of good ſtature, with blacke eyes, fat of body, of an excellent countenance, her haire almoſt as long as her ſelfe, tied vp againe in pretie knots, and it ſeemed ſhee ſtood not in that awe of her huſband, as the reſt, for ſhee ſpake and diſcourſed, and dranke among the gentlemen and Captaines, and was very pleaſant, knowing her owne comelineſſe, and taking great pride therein. I haue ſeene a Lady in England ſo like to her, as but for the difference of colour, I would haue ſworne might haue bene the ſame.

The great breadth of the riuer Orenoque.

The ſeat of this Towne of Toparimaca was very pleaſant, ſtanding on a little hill, in an excellent proſpect, with goodly gardens a mile compaſſe round aboute it, and two very faire and large ponds of excellent fiſh adioyning. This towne is called Arowocai: the people are of the nation called Nepoios, and are followers of Carapana. In that place I ſawe very aged people, that wee might perceiue all their ſinewes and veines without any fleſh, and but euen as a caſe couered onely with ſkinne. The Lord of this place gaue me an old man for Pilot, who was of great experience and trauelle, and knew the Riuer moſt perfectly both by day and night: and it ſhall bee requiſite for any man that paſſeth it, to haue ſuch a Pilot, for it is foure, fiue, and ſixe miles ouer in many places, and twentie miles in other places, with wonderfull eddies, and ſtrong currents, many great ylands, and diuers ſholds, and many dangerous rockes, and beſides vpon any increaſe of winde ſo great a billowe, as wee were ſometimes in great perill of drowning in the galley, for the ſmall boates durſt not come from the ſhoare, but when it was very faire.

They enter the riuer Orenoque, which runneth Eaſt and Weſt.

The yle of Aſſapana.

The yland of Iwana.

The next day we haſted thence, and hauing an Eaſterly winde to helpe vs, we ſpared our armes from rowing: for after wee entred Orenoque, the Riuer lieth for the moſt part Eaſt and Weſt, euen from the Sea vnto Quito in Peru. This Riuer is nauigable with barkes, litle leſſe then a thouſand miles, & from the place where we entred, it may be ſailed vp in ſmall pinneſſes to many of the beſt parts of Nueuo reyno de Granada, and of Popayan: and from no place may the cities of theſe parts of the Indies be ſo eaſily taken and inuaded as from hence. All that day wee ſailed vp a branch of that Riuer, hauing on the left hand a great yland which they call Aſſapana which may conteine ſome fiue and twentie miles in length, and ſixe miles in breadth, the great body of the Riuer running on the other ſide of this yland. Beyond that middle branch there is alſo another yland in the Riuer called Iwana, which is twiſe as bigge as the yle of Wight, and beyond it, and betweene it and the maine of Guiana, runneth a thirde branch of Orenoque called Arraroopana: all three are goodly branches, and all nauigable for great ſhips. I iudge the riuer in this place to be at leaſt thirty miles brode, reckoning the ylands which deuide the branches in it, for afterwards I ſought alſo both the other branches.

After wee reached to the head of the yland, called Aſſapana, a little to the Weſtward on the right hand there opened a riuer which came from the North, called Europa, and fel into the great Riuer, and beyond it on the ſame ſide, wee anckered for that night, by another yland ſixe miles long, and two miles broade, which they call Ocaywita: From hence in the morning wee landed two Guianians, which wee found in the Towne of Toparimaca, that came with vs, who went to giue notice of our comming to the Lord of that countrey called Putyma, a follower of Topiawari, chiefe Lord of Aromaia, who ſucceeded Morequito, whom (as you haue heard before) Berreo put to death: but his towne being farre within the land, he came not vnto vs that day, ſo as we ankered againe that night neere the bankes of another yland, of bigneſſe much like the other, which they call Putapayma, ouer againſt which yland, on the maine lande, was a very high mountaine called Oecope: we coueted to ancker rather by theſe ylands in the Riuer, then by the maine, becauſe of the Tortugas egges, which our people found on them in great abundance, and alſo becauſe the ground ſerued better for vs to caſt our nets for fiſh, the maine bankes being for the moſt part ſtonie and high, and the rocks of a blew metalline colour, like vnto the beſt ſteele-ore, which I aſſuredly take it to be: of the ſame blew ſtone are alſo diuers great mountaines, which border this riuer in many places.

The next morning towards nine of the clocke, wee weighed ancker, and the brize increaſing, we ſailed alwayes Weſt vp the riuer, and after a while opening the land on the right ſide, the countrey appeared to bee champaine, and the bankes ſhewed very perfect red. I therefore ſent two of the little barges with Captaine Gifford, and with him Captaine Thyn, Captaine Caifield, my coſen Greenuile, my nephew Iohn Gilbert, Captaine Eynus, Maſter Edward Porter, and my coſen Butſhead Gorges, with ſome fewe ſouldiers, to march ouer the bankes of that red land, and to diſcouer what maner of countrey it was on the other ſide, who at their returne found it all a plaine leuell, as farre as they went or could diſcerne, from the higheſt tree they could get vpon: And my old Pilot, a man of great trauell, brother to the Caſique Toparimica tolde mee, that thoſe were called the plaines of the Sayma, and that the ſame leuell reached to Cumaná, and Caracas in the Weſt Indies, which are a hundreth and twentie leagues to the North, and that there inhabited foure principall nations. The firſt were the Sayma, the next Aſſawai, the thirde and greateſt the Wikiri, by whom Pedro Hernandez de Serpa before mentioned was ouerthrowen, as hee paſſed with three hundred horſe from Cumaná towards Orenoque, in his enterprize of Guiana: the fourth are called Aroras, and are as blacke as Negros, but haue ſmooth haire, and theſe are very valiant, or rather deſperate people, and haue the moſt ſtrong poyſon on their arrowes, and moſt dangerous of all nations, of which poyſon I will ſpeake ſomewhat being a digreſſion not vnneceſſary.

The plaines of Sayma ſtretching to Cumaná, and the Caracas.

Aroras a blacke people vſing venemous arrowes.

There was nothing whereof I was more curious, then to finde out the true remedies of theſe poyſoned arrowes: for beſides the mortalitie of the wound they make, the partie ſhotte indureth the moſt inſufferable torment in the world, and abideth a moſt vgly and lamentable death, ſometimes dying ſtarke mad, ſometimes their bowels breaking out of their bellies: which are preſently diſcoloured as blacke as pitch, and ſo vnſauory, as no man can endure to cure, or to attend them. And it is more ſtrange to know, that in all this time there was neuer Spaniard either by gift or torment that could atteine to the true knowledge of the cure, although they haue martyred and put to inuented torture I know not how many of them. But euery one of theſe Indians know it not, no not one among thouſands, but their ſoothſayers and prieſtes, who doe conceale it, and onely teach it but from the father to the ſonne.

Thoſe medicines which are vulgar, and ſerue for the ordinarie poyſon, are made of the iuice of a roote called Tupara: the ſame alſo quencheth marueilouſly the heate of burning feauers, and healeth inward wounds, and broken veines, that bleed within the body. But I was more beholding to the Guianians then any other: for Anthonio de Berreo tolde mee that hee could neuer attaine to the knowledge thereof, and yet they taught mee the beſt way of healing as well thereof, as of all other poyſons. Some of the Spaniards haue bene cured in ordinary wounds, of the common poyſoned arrowes with the iuice of garlike: but this is a generall rule for all men that ſhall hereafter trauel the Indies where poiſoned arrowes are vſed, that they muſt abſtaine from drinke, for if they take any licour into their body, as they ſhall bee marueilouſly prouoked thereunto by drought, I ſay, if they drinke before the wound bee dreſſed, or ſoone vpon it, there is no way with them but preſent death.

The iuice of garlike good againſt ordinary poyſon. Speedy drinking to be auoyded of ſuch as are wounded with poyſoned arrowes.

And ſo I will returne againe to our iourney which for this thirde day we finiſhed, and caſt ancker againe neere the continent or the left hand betweene two mountaines, the one called Aroami, and the other Aio: I made no ſtay here but till midnight, for I feared hourely leaſt any raine ſhould fall, and then it had bene impoſſible to haue gone any further vp, notwithſtanding that there is euery day a very ſtrong brize, and Eaſterly winde, I deferred the ſearch of the countrey on Guiana-ſide, till my returne downe the riuer.

The yle of Manoripano.

The next day we ſailed by a great yland in the middle of the riuer called Manoripano, and as wee walked a while on the yland, while the Galley got a head of vs, there came for vs from the maine a ſmall Canoa with ſeuen or eight Guianians, to inuite vs to ancker at their port, but I deferred till my returne; It was that Caſique to whom thoſe Nepoios went, which came with vs from the towne of Toparimaca: and ſo the fift day we reached as high vp as the prouince of Aromaia the countrey of Morequito whom Berreo executed, and ankered to the Weſt of an yland called Murrecotima, tenne miles long and fiue broad: and that night the Caſique Aramiary, (to whoſe towne we made our long and hungry voyage out of the riuer of Amana) paſſed by vs.

The prouince of Aromaia.
The yle of Murrecotima.

The next day wee arriued at the port of Morequito, and anckered there, ſending away one of our Pilots to ſeeke the king of Aromaia, vncle to Morequito ſlaine by Berreo as aforeſaid. The next day following before noone hee came to vs on foote from his houſe, which was foureteene Engliſh miles (himſelfe being a hundreth and tenne yeeres olde) and returned on foote the ſame day, and with him many of the borderers, with many women and children, that came to wonder at our nation, and to bring vs downe victuall, which they did in great plentie, as veniſon, porke, hennes, chickens, foule, fiſh, with diuers ſorts of excellent fruites and rootes, and great abundance of Pinas, the princes of fruites, that grow vnder the Sunne, eſpecially thoſe of Guiana. They brought vs alſo ſtore of bread, and of their wine, and a ſort of Paraquitos, no bigger then wrennes, and of all other ſorts both ſmall and great: one of them gaue mee a beaſt called by the Spaniards Armadilla, which they call Caſſacam, which ſeemeth to be all barred ouer with ſmal plates ſomewhat like to a Rinoceros, with a white horne growing in his hinder parts, as bigge a great hunting horne, which they vſe to winde in ſtead of a trumpet. Monardus writeth that a little of the powder of that horne put into the eare, cureth deafeneſſe.

After this olde King had reſted a while in a little tent, that I cauſed to bee ſet vp, I beganne by my interpreter to diſcourſe with him of the death of Morequito his predeceſſour, and afterward of the Spaniards, and ere I went any farther I made him knowe the cauſe of my comming thither, whoſe ſeruant I was, and that the Queenes pleaſure was, I ſhould vndertake the voyage for their defence, and to deliuer them from the tyrannie of the Spaniards, dilating at large, (as I had done before to thoſe of Trinidad) her Maieſties greatneſſe, her iuſtice, her charitie to all oppreſſed nations, with as many of the reſt of her beauties and vertues, as either I could expreſſe, or they conceiue: all which being with great admiration attentiuely heard, and marueilouſly admired, I beganne to ſound the olde man as touching Guiana, and the ſtate thereof, what ſort of common wealth it was, how gouerned, of what ſtrength and policie, howe farre it extended, and what nations were friendes or enemies adioyning, and finally of the diſtance and way to enter the ſame: hee tolde mee that himſelfe and his people with all thoſe downe the Riuer towards the Sea, as farre as Emeria, the prouince of Carapana, were of Guiana, but that they called themſelues Orenoqueponi, and that all the nations betweene the riuer and thoſe mountaines in ſight called Wacarima, were of the ſame caſt and appellation: and that on the other ſide of thoſe mountaines of Wacarima there was a large plaine (which after I diſcouered in my returne) called the valley of Amariocapana, in all that valley the people were alſo of the ancient Guianians.

The valley of Amariocapana.

I aſked what nations thoſe were which inhabited on the farther ſide of thoſe mountaines, beyond the valley of Amariocapana: hee anſwered with a great ſigh (as a man which had inward feeling of the loſſe of his Countrey and libertie, eſpecially for that his eldeſt ſonne was ſleine in a battell on that ſide of the mountaines, whom hee moſt entirely loued) that hee remembred in his fathers life time when hee was very olde, and himſelfe a yong man, that there came downe into that large valley of Guiana, a nation from ſo farre off as the Sunne ſlept, (for ſuch were his owne wordes) with ſo great a multitude as they coulde not bee numbred nor reſiſted, and that they wore large coates, and hattes of crimſon colour, which colour hee expreſſed, by ſhewing a piece of red wood, wherewith my tent was ſupported, and that they were called Orejones, and Epuremei, thoſe that had ſlaine and rooted out ſo many of the ancient people, as there were leaues in the wood vpon all the trees, and had nowe made themſelues Lords of all, euen to that mountaine foote called Curaa, ſauing onely of two nations, the one called Awarawaqueri, and the other Caſſipagotos, and that in the laſt battell fought betweene the Epuremei, and the Iwarawaqueri, his eldeſt ſonne was choſen to carry to the aide of the Iwarawaqueri, a great troupe of the Orenoqueponi, and was there ſlaine with all his people and friendes, and that hee had now remayning but one ſonne: and farther tolde mee that thoſe Epuremei had built a great Towne called Orejones are the gentlemen of Peru. Lop de Gomar. Hiſt. gen, cap. 119.

The towne of Macareguarai.

Macureguarai at the ſaid mountaine foote, at the beginning of the great plaines of Guiana, which haue no ende: and that their houſes haue many roomes, one ouer the other, and that therein the great King of the Orcjones and Epuremei kept three thouſande men to defend the borders againſt them, and withall dayly to inuade and ſlay them: but that of late yeeres ſince the Chriſtians offered to inuade his territories, and thoſe frontiers, they were all at peace, and traded one with another, ſauing onely the Iwarawaqueri, and thoſe other nations vpon the head of the riuer of Caroli, called Caſſipagotos, which we afterwards diſcouered, each one holding the Spaniard for a common enemie.

After hee had anſwered thus farre, he deſired leaue to depart, ſaying that hee had farre to goe, that hee was olde, and weake, and was euery day called for by death, which was alſo his owne phraſe: I deſired him to reſt with vs that night, but I could not intreate him, but hee tolde mee that at my returne from the countrey aboue, hee would againe come to vs, and in the meane time prouide for vs the beſt he could, of all that his countrey yeelded: the ſame night hee returned to Orocotona his owne towne, ſo as hee went that day eight and twentie miles, the weather being very hot, the countrey being ſituate betweene foure and fiue degrees of the Equinoctial.

Orotona betweene 4. and 5. degrees of Northerly latitude.

This Topiawari is helde for the prowdeſt, and wiſeſt of all the Orenoqueponi, and ſo hee behaued himſelfe towardes mee in all his anſweres at my returne, as I marueiled to finde a man of that grauitie and iudgement, and of ſo good diſcourſe, that had no helpe of learning nor breede.

The next morning we alſo left the port, and ſailed Weſtward vp to the Riuer, to view the famous Riuer called Caroli, as well becauſe it was marueilous of it ſelfe, as alſo for that I vnderſtode it ledde to the ſtrongeſt nations of all the frontiers, that were enemies to the Epuremei, which are ſubiects to Inga, Emperour of Guiana, and Manoa, and that night we anckered at another yland called Caiama, of ſome fiue or ſixe miles in length, and the next day arriued at the mouth of Caroli. When we were ſhort of it as lowe or further downe as the port of Morequito wee heard the great rore and fall of the Riuer, but when wee came to enter with our barge and whirries thinking to haue gone vp ſome fourtie miles to the nations of the Caſſipagotos, wee were not able with a barge of eight oares to row one ſtones caſt in an houre, and yet the Riuer is as broad as the Thames at Wolwich, and wee tried both ſides, and the middle, and euery part of the Riuer, ſo as we incamped vpon the bankes adioyning, and ſent off our Orenequepone (which came with vs from Morequito) to giue knowledge to the nations vpon the Riuer of our being there, and that wee deſired to ſee the Lordes of Canuria, which dwelt within the prouince vpon that Riuer, making them know that we were enemies to the Spaniards, (for it was on this Riuer ſide that Morequito ſlewe the Frier, and thoſe nine Spaniards which came from Manoa, the Citie of Inga, and tooke from them fourtie thouſande pezos of golde) ſo as the next day there came downe a Lord or Caſique called Wanuretona with many people with him, and brought all ſtore of prouiſions to entertaine vs, as the reſt had done. And as I had before made my comming knowen to Topiawari, ſo did I acquaint this Caſique therewith, and howe I was ſent by her Maieſtie for the purpoſe aforeſaide, and gathered alſo what I could of him touching the eſtate of Guiana, and I founde that thoſe alſo of Caroli were not onely enemies to the Spaniards, but moſt of all to the Epuremei, which abound in golde, and by this Wanuretona, I had knowledge that on the head of this Riuer were three mighty nations, which were ſeated on a great lake, from whence this Riuer deſcended, & were called Caſſipagotos, Eparagotos, and Arawagotos, and that all thoſe either againſt the Spaniards, or the Epuremei would ioyne with vs, and that if wee entred the land ouer the mountaines of Curaa, we ſhould ſatiſfie our ſelues with gold and all other good things: he told vs farther of a nation called Iwarawaqueri before ſpoken off, that held dayly warre with the Epuremei that inhabited Macureguarai the firſt ciuill towne of Guiana, of the ſubiects of Inga the Emperour.

Caſſipagotos, Eparagotos, and Arawagotos three mighty nations ſeated on a lake at the head of the riuer Caroli.

Vpon this riuer one Captaine George, that I tooke with Berreo tolde mee there was a great ſiluer Mine, and that it was neere the banckes of the ſaide riuer. But by this time as well Orenoque, Caroli, as all the reſt of the riuers were riſen foure or fiue foote in height, ſo as it was not poſſible by the ſtrength of any men, or with any boat whatſoeuer to rowe into the Riuer againſt the ſtreame. I therefore ſent Captaine Thyn, Captaine Greenuile, my nephew Iohn Gylbert, my coſen Butſhead Gorges, Captaine Clarke, and ſome thirtie ſhotte more to coaſt the Riuer by land, and to goe to a towne ſome twentie miles ouer the valley called Amnatapoi, and they found guides there, to goe farther towards the mountaine foote to another great towne called Capurepana, belonging to a Caſique called Haharacoa (that was a nephew to olde Topiawari King of Arromaia our chiefeſt friend) becauſe this towne and prouince of Capurepana adioyned to Ma-cureguarai, which was a frontier towne of the Empire: and the meane while my ſelfe with Captaine Gifford, Captaine Calfield, Edward Hancocke, and ſome halfe a doſen ſhotte marched ouer land to viewe the ſtrange ouerfals of the riuer of Caroli which rored ſo farre off, and alſo to ſee the plaines adioyning, and the reſt of the prouince of Canuri: I ſent alſo Captaine Whiddon, William Connocke, and ſome eight ſhotte with them, to ſee if they coulde finde any Minerall ſtone alongſt the riuer ſide. When we were come to the tops of the firſt hilles of the plaines adioyning to the riuer, we behelde that wonderfull breach of waters, which ranne downe Caroli: and might from that mountaine ſee the riuer howe it ranne in three parts, aboue twentie miles off, and there appeared ſome tenne or twelue ouerfals in ſight, euery one as high ouer the other as a Church-tower, which fell with that fury, that the rebound of water made it ſeeme, as if it had bene all couered ouer with a great ſhower of raine: and in ſome places wee tooke it at the firſt for a ſmoke that had riſen ouer ſome great towne. For mine owne part I was well perſwaded from thence to haue returned, being a very ill footeman, but the reſt were all ſo deſirous to goe neere the ſaide ſtrange thunder of waters, as they drew me on by little and little, till wee came into the next valley where we might better diſcerne the ſame. I neuer ſaw a more beautifull countrey, nor more liuely proſpects, hils ſo raiſed here and there ouer the valleys, the riuer winding into diuers branches, the plaines adioyning without buſh or ſtubble, all faire greene graſſe, the ground of hard ſand eaſie to march on, either for horſe or foote, the deere croſſing in euery path, the birdes towards the euening ſinging on euery tree with a thouſand ſeuerall tunes, cranes and herons of white, crimſon, and carnation pearching in the riuers ſide, the aire freſh with a gentle Eaſterly winde, and euery ſtone that we ſtouped to take vp, promiſed either golde or ſiluer by his complexion. Your Lordſhip ſhall ſee of many ſorts, and I hope ſome of them cannot bee bettered vnder the Sunne, and yet we had no meanes but with our daggers and fingers to teare them out here and there, the rockes being moſt hard of that minerall Sparre aforeſaide, which is like a flint, and is altogether as hard or harder, and beſides the veines lye a fathome or two deepe in the rockes. But we wanted all things requiſite ſaue onely our deſires and good will to haue performed more if it had pleaſed God. To be ſhort, when both our companies returned, each of them brought alſo ſeuerall ſorts of ſtones that appeared very faire, but were ſuch as they found looſe on the ground, and were for the moſt part but coloured, and had not any golde fixed in them, yet ſuch as had no iudgement or experience kept al that gliſtered, and would not be perſwaded but it was rich becauſe of the luſtre, and brought of thoſe, and of Marqueſite with all, from Trinidad, and haue deliuered of thoſe ſtones to be tried in many places, and haue thereby bred an opinion that all the reſt is of the ſame: yet ſome of theſe ſtones I ſhewed afterward to a Spaniard of the Caracas, who tolde mee that it was El Madre del oro, that is the mother of gold, and that the Mine was farther in the ground.

But it ſhall be found a weake policie in me, either to betray my ſelfe, or my countrey with imaginations, neither am I ſo farre in loue with that lodging, watching, care, perill, diſeaſes, ill ſauours, bad fare, and many other miſchiefes that accompany theſe voyages, as to woo my ſelfe againe into any of them, were I not aſſured that the Sunne couereth not ſo much riches in any part of the earth. Captaine Whiddon, and our Chirurgion Nicholas Millechap brought mee a kinde of ſtones like Saphires, what they may proue I know not. I ſhewed them to ſome of the Orenoqueponi, and they promiſed to bring mee to a mountaine, that had of them very large pieces growing Diamond wiſe: whether it be Chriſtall of the mountaine, Briſtol-Diamond, or Saphire I doe not yet know, but I hope the beſt, ſure I am that the place is as likely as thoſe from whence all the rich ſtones are brought, and in the ſame height or very neere.

Caſſipa a great lake.

On the left hand of this riuer Caroli are ſeated thoſe nations which are called Iwarawakeri before remembred, which are enemies to the Epuremei: and on the head of it adioyning to the great lake Caſſipa, are ſituate thoſe other nations which alſo reſiſt Inga, and the Epuremei, called Caſſepagotos, Eparegotos, and Arrawagotos. I farther vnderſtood that this lake of Caſsipa is ſo large, as it is aboue one dayes iourney for one of their Canoas to croſſe, which may bee ſome fourtie miles, and that thereinto fall diuers riuers, and that great ſtore of graines of gold are found in the Summer time when the lake falleth by the banckes, in thoſe branches.

The riuer of Arui.

The riuers of Atoica and Caora.

Ewaipanoma a ſtrange headleſſe nation.

There is alſo another goodly riuer beyond Caroli which is called Arui, which alſo runneth thorow the lake Caſsipa, and falleth into Orenoque farther Weſt, making all that land betweene Caroli and Arui an yland, which is likewiſe a moſt beautifull countrey. Next vnto Arui there are two riuers Atoica and Caora, and on that branch which is called Caora, are a nation of people, whoſe heads appeare not aboue their ſhoulders; which though it may be thought a meere fable, yet for mine owne part I am reſolued it is true, becauſe euery childe in the prouinces of Arromaia and Canuri affirme the ſame: they are called Ewaipanoma: they are reported to haue their eyes in their ſhoulders, and their mouthes in the middle of their breaſts, and that a long traine of haire groweth backward betweene their ſhoulders. The ſonne of Topiawari, which I brought with me into England told me that they are the moſt mighty men of all the land, and vſe bowes, arrowes, and clubbes thrice as big as any of Guiana, or of the Orenoqueponi, and that one of the Iwarawakeri tooke a priſoner of them the yeere before our arriuall there, and brought him into the borders of Aromaia his fathers countrey. And farther when I ſeemed to doubt of it, hee told me that it was no wonder among them, but that they were as great a nation, and as common as any other in all the prouinces, and had of late yeeres ſlaine many hundreds of his fathers people, and of other nations their neighbours, but it was not my chance to heare of them till I was come away, and if I had but ſpoken one worde of it while I was there, I might haue brought one of them with mee to put the matter out of doubt. Such a nation was written of by Mandeuile, whoſe reports were holden for fables many yeeres, and yet ſince the Eaſt Indies were diſcouered, we find his relations true of ſuch things as heretofore were held incredible: whether it be true or no, the matter is not great, neither can there bee any profit in the imagination; for mine owne part I ſaw them not, but I am reſolued that ſo many people did not all combine, or forethinke to make the report.

When I came to Cumana in the Weſt Indies afterwards by chance I ſpake with a Spaniard dwelling not farre from thence, a man of great trauell, and after hee knew that I had bene in Guiana, and ſo farre directly Weſt as Caroli, the firſt queſtion hee aſked me was, whether I had ſeene any of the Ewaipanoma, which are thoſe without heads: who being eſteemed a moſt honeſt man of his word, and in all things elſe, tolde mee that hee had ſeene many of them: I may not name him, becauſe it may be for his diſaduantage, but hee is well knowen to Monſieur Mucherons ſonne of London, and to Peter Mucheron merchant of the Flemiſh ſhippe that was there in trade, who alſo heard what he auowed to be true of thoſe people.

The fourth riuer to the Weſt of Caroli is Caſnero which falleth into Orenoque on this ſide of Amapaia, and that riuer is greater then Danubius, or any of Europe: it riſeth on the South of Guiana from the mountaines which deuide Guiana from Amazones, and I thinke it to bee nauigable many hundreth miles: but wee had no time, meanes, nor ſeaſon of the yeere, to ſearch thoſe riuers for the cauſes aforeſayd, the Winter being come vpon vs, although the Winter and Summer as touching colde and heate differ not, neither doe the trees euer ſenſibly loſe their leaues, but haue alwayes fruit either ripe or greene, and moſt of them both bloſſome, leaues, ripe fruite, and greene at one time: but their Winter onely conſiſteth of terrible raines, and ouerflowing of the riuers, with many great ſtormes and guſtes, thunder and lightnings, of which we had our fill, ere we returned.

The riuer of Caſnere.

The Winter of Guiana.

On the North ſide, the firſt riuer that falleth into Orenoque is Cari, beyond it on the ſame ſide is the riuer of Limo, betweene theſe two is a great nation of Canibals, and their chiefe towne beareth the name of the riuer, and is called Acamacari: at this towne is a continuall market of women for three or foure hatchets a piece, they are bought by the Arwacas, and by them ſold into the Weſt Indies. To the Weſt of Limo is the riuer Pao, beyond it Caturi, beyond that Voari and Capuri which falleth out of the great riuer of Meta, by which Berreo deſcended from Nueuo reyno de Granada. To the Weſtward of Capuri is the prouince of Amapaia, where Berreo wintered, and had ſo many of his people poyſoned with the tawny water of the marſhes of the Anebas. Aboue Amapaia toward Nueuo reyno fall in Meta, Pato, and Caſſanar. To the Weſt of thoſe towards the prouinces of the Aſhaguas and Catetios are the riuers of Beta, Dawney, and Vbarro, and toward the frontier of Peru are the prouinces of Thomebamba, and Caxamalca. Adioyning to Quito in the North ſide of Peru are the riuers of Guiacar and Goauar: and on the other ſide of the ſayd mountaynes the riuer of Papamene which deſcendeth into Marannon or Amazones paſſing thorough the prouince Mutylones where Don Pedro de Oſua who was ſlaine by the traytour Agiri before rehearſed, built his brigandines, when he ſought Guiana by the way of Amazones.

Meta, Pato, Caſſanar.

Papamene.

Betweene Dawney and Beta lyeth a famous Iſland in Orenoque now called Baraquan (for aboue Meta it is not knowen by the name of Orenoque) which is called Athule, beyond which, ſhips of burden cannot paſſe by reaſon of a moſt forcible ouerfall, and current of waters: but in the eddy al ſmaller veſſels may be drawen euen to Peru it ſelfe: But to ſpeake of more of theſe riuers without the deſcription were but tedious, and therefore I will leaue the reſt to the deſcription. This riuer of Orenoque is nauigable for ſhips little leſſe then 1000 miles, and for leſſer veſſels neere 2000. By it (as aforeſayd) Peru, Nueuo reyno, and Popaian, may be inuaded: it alſo leadeth to the great empire of Inga, & to the prouinces of Amapaia, and Anebas which abound

The Iſle of Baraquan.

Orenoque a mighty riuer by which Peru, Nueuo reyno, & Popaian may be inuaded.

Canuri.

They returne

in gold: his branches of Coſnero, Manta, Caora deſcended from the middle land & valley, which lieth betweene the eaſter prouince of Peru and Guiana; and it falles into the ſea betweene Marannon and Trinidad in two degrees and a halfe: all which your Honours ſhall better perceiue in the general deſcription of Guiana, Peru, Nueuo reyno, the kingdome of Popayan, and Roidas, with the prouince of Veneçuela, to the bay of Vraba, behind Cartagena Weſtward: and to Amazones Southward. While we lay at ankor on the coaſt of Canuri, and had taken knowledge of all the nations vpon the head and branches of this riuer, and had found out ſo many ſeueral people, which were enemies to the Epuremei, and the new conquerours: I thought it time loſt to linger any longer in that place, eſpecially for that the fury of Orenoque began dayly to threaten vs with dangers in our returne: for no halfe day paſſed, but the riuer began to rage and ouerflowe very fearefully, and the raines came downe in terrible ſhowers, and guſtes in great abundance: and withall, our men began to crie out for want of ſhift, for no man had place to beſtowe any other apparell then that which he ware on his backe, and that was throughly waſht on his body for the moſt part tenne times in one day: and we had now bene wel neere a moneth, euery day paſſing to the Weſtward farther and farther from our ſhippes. Wee therefore turned towards the Eaſt, and ſpent the reſt of the time in diſcouering the riuer towards the ſea, which we had not viewed, and which was moſt materiall.

The laſt conferēce of ſir Walter Ralegh with Topiawari, whoſe ſonne he brought into England.

Counſell to be followed in other conqueſts

Macureguarai yͤ firſt towne of Guiana, and of rich and apparelled people.

The next day following we left the mouth of Caroli, and arriued againe at the port of Morequito where we were before: for paſſing downe the ſtreame we went without labour, and againſt the winde, little leſſe then a hundreth miles a day. Aſſoone as I came to ankor, I ſent away one for olde Topiawari, with whom I much deſired to haue further conference, and alſo to deale with him for ſome one of his countrey, to bring with vs into England, as well to learne the language, as to conferre withall by the way, the time being nowe ſpent of any longer ſtay there. Within three houres after my meſſenger came to him, he arriued alſo, and with him ſuch a rabble of all ſorts of people, and euery one loden with ſomewhat, as if it had beene a great market or faire in England: and our hungry companies cluſtered thicke and threefold among their baſkets, euery one laying hand on what he liked. After he had reſted a while in my tent, I ſhut out all but our ſelues, and my interpreter, and told him that I knew that both the Epuremei and the Spaniards were enemies to him, his countrey and nations: that the one had conquered Guiana already, and the other ſought to regaine the ſame from them both: and therefore I deſired him to inſtruct me what he could, both of the paſſage into the golden parts of Guiana, and to the ciuill townes and apparelled people of Inga. Hee gaue mee an anſwere to this effect: firſt that hee could not perceiue that I meant to goe onward towards the citie of Manoa, for neither the time of the yeere ſerued, neither could hee perceiue any ſufficient numbers for ſuch an enterprize: and if I did, I was ſure with all my company to bee buried there, for the Emperour was of that ſtrength, as that many times ſo many men more were too fewe: beſides hee gaue mee this good counſell and aduiſed mee to holde it in minde (as for himſelfe hee knewe, hee could not liue till my returne) that I ſhould not offer by any meanes hereafter to inuade the ſtrong parts of Guiana without the helpe of all thoſe nations which were alſo their enemies: for that it was impoſſible without thoſe, either to bee conducted, to be victualled, or to haue ought caried with vs, our people not being able to indure the march in ſo great heate, and trauell, vnleſſe the borderers gaue them helpe, to carie with them both their meate and furniture: For hee remembred that in the plaines of Macureguarai three hundreth Spaniards were ouerthrowen, who were tired out, and had none of the borderers to their friendes: but meeting their enemies as they paſſed the frontier, were enuironed on all ſides, and the people ſetting the long drie graſſe on fire, ſmoothered them, ſo as they had no breath to fight, nor could diſcerne their enemies for the great ſmoke. He told me farther that 4 daies iourney from his towne was Macureguarai, and that thoſe were the next and neereſt of the ſubiects of Inga, and of the Epuremei, and the firſt towne of apparelled and rich people, and that all thoſe plates of gold which were ſcattered among the borderers and caried to other nations farre and neere, came from the ſayd Macureguarai and were there made, but that thoſe of the land within were farre finer, and were faſhioned after the images of men, beaſtes, birds, and fiſhes. I aſked him whether hee thought that thoſe companies that I had there with me, were ſufficient to take that towne or no: He told me that he thought they were. I then aſked him, whether he would aſſiſt me with guides, and ſome companies of his people to ioyne with vs: He anſwered that he would go himſelfe with al the borderers, if the riuers did remaine foordable, vpon this condition that I would leaue with him til my returne againe fifty ſouldiers, which hee vndertooke to victuall: I anſwered that I had not aboue fiftie good men in all there, the reſt were labourers and rowers, & that I had no prouiſion to leaue with them of powder, ſhot, apparell, or ought elſe, and that without thoſe things neceſſary for their defence, they ſhould bee in danger of the Spaniards in my abſence, who I knewe would vſe the ſame meaſure towards mine, that I offered them at Trinidad: And although vpon the motion Captaine Calfeild, Captaine Greenuile, my nephew Iohn Gilbert and diuers others were deſirous to ſtay, yet I was reſolued that they muſt needes haue periſhed, for Berreo expected daylie a ſupply out of Spaine, and looked alſo hourely for his ſonne to come downe from Nueuo reyno de Granada, with many horſe and foote, and had alſo in Valencia in the Caracas, two hundreth horſe ready to march, and I could not haue ſpared aboue fortie, and had not any ſtore at all of powder, leade, or match to haue left with them, nor any other prouiſion, either ſpade, pickeaxe, or ought elſe to haue fortified withall.

When I had giuen him reaſon that I could not at this time leaue him ſuch a companie, he then deſired mee to forbeare him and his countrey for that time, for he aſſured mee that I ſhould bee no ſooner three dayes from the coaſt, but thoſe Epuremei would inuade him, and deſtroy all the remaine of his people and friendes, if hee ſhould any way either guide vs or aſſiſt vs againſt them.

He further alleaged, that the Spaniards ſought his death, and as they had already murthered his Nephew Morequito lord of that prouince, ſo they had him ſeuenteene dayes in a chaine before hee was king of the countrey, and ledde him like a dog from place to place, vntill hee had payde an hundreth plates of golde, and diuers chaines of Spleen-ſtones for his ranſome: and nowe ſince he became owner of that prouince, that they had many times layd waite to take him, and that they would bee nowe more vehement, when they ſhould vnderſtand of his conference with the Engliſh, and becauſe, ſayd hee, they would the better diſplant me, if they cannot lay handes on mee, they haue gotten a Nephew of mine called Eparacano, whom they haue Chriſtened Don Iuan, and his ſonne Don Pedro, whom they haue alſo apparelled and armed, by whom they ſeeke to make a partie againſt me in mine owne countrey: hee alſo had taken to wife one Louiana of a ſtrong familie, which are borderers and neighbours, and my ſelfe now being olde and in the handes of death am not able to trauell nor to ſhifte, as when I was of yoonger yeeres: hee therefore prayed vs to deferre it till the next yeere, when he would vndertake to draw in all the borderers to ſerue vs, and then alſo it would bee more ſeaſonable to trauell, for at this time of the yeere, wee ſhould not bee able to paſſe any riuer, the waters were and would bee ſo growen ere our returne.

He farther told me, that I could not deſire ſo much to inuade Macureguari, and the reſt of Guiana, but that the borderers would be more vehement then I, for he yeelded for a chiefe cauſe that in the warres with the Epuremei, they were ſpoyled of their women, and that their wiues and daughters were taken from them, ſo as for their owne parts they deſired nothing of the golde or treaſure, for their labours, but onely to recouer women from the Epuremei: for hee farther complayned very ſadly (as it had beene a matter of great conſequence) that whereas they were wont to haue tenne or twelue wiues, they were now inforced to content themſelues with three or foure, and that the lords of the Epuremei had fifty or a hundreth: And in truth they war more for women then either for gold or dominion: For the lords of countreys deſire many children of their owne bodies, to increaſe their races and kinreds, for in thoſe conſiſt their greateſt truſt and ſtrength. Diuers of his followers afterwards deſired mee to make haſte againe, that they might ſacke the Epuremei, and I asked them of what? They anſwered, of their women for vs, and their gold for you: for the hope of thoſe many of women they more deſire the war, then either for gold, or for the recouery of their ancient territories. For what betweene the ſubiects of Inga, and the Spaniards, thoſe frontiers are growen thinne of people, and alſo great numbers are fled to other nations farther off for feare of the Spaniards.

After I receiued this anſwere of the old man, we fell into conſideration, whether it had bene of better aduice to haue entred Macureguarai, and to haue begun a warre vpon Inga at this time, yea or no, if the time of the yeere, and all things elſe had ſorted. For mine owne part (as we were not able to march it for the riuers, neither had any ſuch ſtrength as was requiſite, and durſt not abide the comming of the Winter, or to tarie any longer from our ſhips) I though it were euill counſell to haue attempted it at that time, although the deſire of gold will anſwere many obiections: but it would haue bin in mine opinion an vtter ouerthrow to the enterprize, if the ſame ſhould be hereafter by her Maieſty attẽpted: for then (whereas now they haue heard we were enemies to the Spaniards & were ſent by her Maieſty to relieue them) they would as good cheap haue ioyned with the Spaniards at our returne, as to haue yeelded vnto vs, whẽ they had proued that we came both for one errant, and that both ſought but to ſacke & ſpoile them, but as yet our deſire of gold, or our purpoſe of inuaſion is not knowen to them of the empire: and it is likely that if her Maieſtie vndertake the enterprize, they will rather ſubmit themſelues to her obedience then to the Spaniards, of whoſe cruelty both themſelues and the borderers haue already taſted: and therefore till I had knowen her Maieſties pleaſure, I would rather haue loſt the ſacke of one or two townes (although they might haue beene very profitable) then to haue defaced or indangered the future hope of ſo many millions, & the great good, & rich trade which England may be poſſeſſed of thereby. I am aſſured nowe that they will all die euen to the laſt man againſt the Spaniards in hope of our ſuccour and returne: whereas otherwiſe if I had either layd handes on the borderers, or ranſommed the lords, as Berreo did, or inuaded the ſubiects of Inga, I know all had beene loſt for hereafter.

Francis Sparrow.

The lake of Manoa.

After that I had reſolued Topiawari lord of Aromaia, that I could not at this time leaue with him the companies he deſired, and that I was contented to forbeare the enterprize againſt the Epuremei till the next yeare, he freely gaue me his onely ſonne to take with me into England, and hoped, that though hee himſelfe had but a ſhort time to liue, yet that by our meanes his ſonne ſhould be eſtabliſhed after his death: and I left with him one Francis Sparrow, a ſeruant of captaine Gifford, (who was deſirous to tarie, and could deſcribe a countrey with his pen) and a boy of mine called Hugh Goodwin, to learne the language. I after aſked the maner how the Epuremei wrought thoſe plates of golde, and howe they could melt it out of the ſtone; hee tolde mee that the moſt of the golde which they made in plates and images, was not ſeuered from the ſtone, but that on the lake of Manoa, and in a multitude of other riuers they gathered it in graines of perfect gold and in peeces as bigge as ſmall ſtones, and that they put it to a part of copper, otherwiſe they could not worke it, and that they vſed a great earthen pot with holes round about it, and when they had mingled the gold and copper together, they faſtened canes to the holes, and ſo with the breath of men they increaſed the fire till the metall ran, & then they caſt it into moulds of ſtone and clay, and ſo make thoſe plates and images. I haue ſent your Honors of two ſortes ſuch as I could by chance recouer, more to ſhewe the maner of them, then for the value: For I did not in any ſort make my deſire of gold knowen, becauſe I had neither time, nor power to haue a greater quantity. I gaue among them manie more peeces of gold, then I receiued, of the new money of 20 ſhillings with her Maieſties picture to weare, with promiſe that they would become her ſeruants thenceforth.

Moſt rich gold ore.

I haue alſo ſent your Honours of the ore, whereof I know ſome is as rich as the earth yeeldeth any, of which I know there is ſufficient, if nothing elſe were to bee hoped for. But beſides that we were not able to tarrie and ſearch the hils, ſo we had neither pioners, barres, ſledges, nor wedges of yron to breake the ground, without which there is no working in mines: but wee ſaw all the hilles with ſtones of the colour of gold and ſiluer, and we tried them to be no Marqueſite, and therefore ſuch as the Spaniards call El madre del oro, or, The mother of gold, which is an vndoubted aſſurance of the generall abundance; and my ſelfe ſaw the outſide of many mines of the Sparre, which I know to be the ſame that all couet in this world, and of thoſe, more then I will ſpeake of.

The lake of Caſſipa.

Guiana on the Southſide.

Hauing learned what I could in Canuri and Aromaia, and receiued a faithfull promiſe of the principalleſt of thoſe prouinces to become ſeruants to her Maieſtie, and to reſiſt the Speniards, if they made any attempt in our abſence, and that they would draw in the nations about the lake of Caſſipa, and thoſe Iwarawaqueri, I then parted from olde Topiawari, and receiued his ſonne for a pledge betweene vs, and left with him two of ours as aforeſayd. To Francis Sparrowe I gaue inſtructions to trauell to Marcureguarai, with ſuch merchandizes as I left with them, thereby to learne the place, and if it were poſſible, to goe on to the great citie of Manoa: which being done, we weyed ankor, and coaſted the riuer on Guiana ſide, becauſe wee came vpon the North ſide, by the launes of the Saima and Wikiri.

Mana.

There came with vs from Aromaia a Caſſique called Putijma, that commanded the prouince of Warapana, (which Putijma ſlewe the nine Spaniards vpon Caroli before ſpoken of) who deſired vs to reſt in the Porte of his countrey, promiſing to bring vs vnto a mountaine adioyning to his towne that had ſtones of the colour of golde, which hee perfourmed. And after wee had reſted there one night, I went my ſelfe in the morning with moſt of the Gentlemen of my company, ouer land towards the ſaid mountaine, marching by a riuers ſide called Mana, leauing on the right hand a towne called Tuteritona, ſtanding in the Prouince of Tarracoa, of the which Wariaaremagoto is principall. Beyond it lieth another towne towards the South, in the valley of Amariocapana, which beareth the name of the ſayd valley, whoſe plaines ſtretch themſelues ſome ſixtie miles in length, Eaſt and Weſt, as faire ground, and as beautifull fields, as any man hath euer ſeene, with diuers copſies ſcattered here and there by the riuers ſide, and all as full of deere as any forreſt or parke in England, and in euerie lake and riuer the like abundance of fiſh and foule, of which Irraparragota is lord.

Oiana.

From the riuer of Mana, we croſt another riuer in the ſaid beautiful valley called Oiana, & reſted our ſelues by a cleere lake, which lay in the middle of the ſaid Oiana, and one of our guides kindling vs fire with two ſtickes, wee ſtayed a while to drie our ſhirts, which with the heate hong very wette and heauie on our ſholders. Afterwards wee ſought the ford to paſſe ouer towards the mountaine called Iconuri, where Putijma foretold vs of the mine. In this lake we ſaw one of the great fiſhes, as big as a wine pipe, which they call Manati, being moſt excellent and holſome meate. But after I perceiued, that to paſſe the ſaid riuer would require halfe a dayes march more, I was not able my ſelfe to indure it, and therefore I ſent Captaine Keymis with ſixe ſhot to goe on, and gaue him order not to returne to the port of Putijma, which is called Chiparepare, but to take leiſure, and to march downe the ſayd valley, as farre as a riuer called Cumaca, where I promiſed to meete him againe, Putijma himſelfe promiſing alſo to bee his guide: and as they marched, they left the townes of Emparepana, and Capurepana, on the right hand, and marched from Putijmas houſe, downe the ſayd valley of Amariocapana, and wee returning the ſame day to the riuers ſide, ſaw by the way many rockes, like vnto gold ore, and on the left hand, a round mountaine which conſiſted of minerall ſtone.

Great fiſhes called Manati moſt excellent meate.

From hence we rowed downe the ſtreame, coaſting the prouince of Parino: As for the branches of riuers which I ouerpaſſe in this diſcourſe, thoſe ſhall be better expreſſed in the deſcription with the mountaines of Aio, Ara, and the reſt, which are ſituate in the prouinces of Parino and Carricurrina. When we were come as farre down as the land called Ariacoa, (where Orenoque deuideth it ſelfe into three great branches, each of them being moſt goodly riuers) I ſent away captaine Henrie Thin, and captaine Greeneuile with the galley, the neereſt way, and tooke with mee captaine Gifford, captaine Calfield, Edward Porter, and captaine Eynos with mine owne barge, and the two wherries, and went downe that branch of Orenoque, which is called Cararoopana, which leadeth towards Emeria the prouince of Carapana, and towards the Eaſt ſea, as well to finde out captaine Keymis, whome I had ſent ouer land, as alſo acquaint my ſelfe with Carapana, who is one of the greateſt of all the lords of the Orenoqueponi: and when I came to the riuer of Cumaca (to which Putijma promiſed to conduct captaine Keymis) I left captaine Eynos and maſter Porter in the ſayd riuer to expect his comming, & the reſt of vs rowed downe the ſtreame towards Emeria.

Emeria.

In this branch called Cararoopana were alſo many goodly Iſlands, ſome of ſixe miles long, ſome of ten, and ſome of twenty. When it grew towards ſunne-ſet, we entred a branch of a riuer that fell into Orenoque called Winicapora: where I was enformed of the mountaine of Chriſtall, to which in trueth for the length of the way, and the euill ſeaſon of the yeere, I was not able to march, nor abide any longer vpon the iourney: wee ſaw it afarre off and it appeared like a white Curch-tower of an exceeding height. There falleth ouer it a mighty riuer which toucheth no part of the ſide of the mountaine, but ruſheth ouer the toppe of it, and falleth to the ground with ſo terrible a noyſe and clamor, as if a thouſand great bels were knockt one againſt another. I thinke there is not in the world ſo ſtrange an ouer-fall, nor ſo wonderfull to behold: Berreo told mee that there were Diamonds and other precious ſtones on it, and that they ſhined very farre off: but what it hath I know not, neither durſt he or any of his men aſcend to the top of the ſayd mountaine, thoſe people adioyning being his enemies (as they were) and the way to it ſo impaſſable.

Winicapora.

A mighty cataract or ouer-fall of water.

Diamonds & other precious ſtones.

Vpon this riuer of Winicapora wee reſted a while, and from thence marched into the countrey to a town called after the name of the riuer, whereof the captaine was one Timitwara, who alſo offered to conduct mee to the top of the ſayd mountaine called Wacarima: But when wee came in firſt to the houſe of the ſayd Timitwara, being vpon one of their ſayd feaſt dayes, we found them all as drunke as beggers, and the pots walking from one to another without reſt: we that were weary, and hote with marching, were glad of the plenty though a ſmall quantitie ſatiſfied vs, their drinke being very ſtrong and headie, and ſo reſted our ſelues a while; after wee had fedde, we drew our ſelues backe to our boats, vpon the riuer and there came to vs all the lordes of the countrey, with all ſuch kinde of victuall as the place yeelded, and with their delicate wine of Pinas, and with abundance of hens, and other prouiſions, and of thoſe ſtones which wee call Spleeneſtones.

Wacarima.

Wee vnderſtood by the chiefetaines of Winicapora, that their lord Carapana was departed from Emeria which was now in ſight, & that he was fled to Cairamo, adioyning to the mountains of Guiana, ouer the valley called Amariocapana, being perſwaded by thoſe tenne Spaniards which lay at his houſe, that we would deſtroy him, and his countrey.

But after theſe Caſsiques of Winicapora & Saporatona his followers perceiued our purpoſe, and ſaw that we came as enemies to the Spaniards onely, and had not ſo much as harmed any of thoſe nations, no though we found them to be of the Spaniards owne ſeruants, they aſſured vs that Carapana would be as ready to ſerue vs, as any of the lords of the prouinces, which we had paſſed; and that he durſt doe no other till this day but entertaine the Spaniards, his countrey lying ſo directly in their way, and next of all other to any entrance that ſhould be made in Guiana on that ſide.

And they farther aſſured vs, that it was not for feare of our comming that he was remooued, but to be acquited of the Spaniards or any other that ſhould come hereafter. For the prouince of Cairoma is ſituate at the mountaine foote, which deuideth the plaines of Guiana from the countreys of the Orenoqueponi: by meanes whereof if any ſhould come in our abſence into his townes, hee would ſlip ouer the mountaines into the plaines of Guiana among the Epuremei, where the Spaniards durſt not follow him without great force.

But in mine opinion, or rather I aſſure my ſelfe, that Carapana (being a notable wiſe and ſubtil fellow, a man of one hundred yeeres of age, and therefore of great experience) is remooued, to looke on, and if he finde that we returne ſtrong he will be ours, if not, hee will excuſe his departure to the Spaniards, and ſay it was for feare of our comming.

Wee therefore thought it bootleſſe to rowe ſo farre downe the ſtreame, or to ſeeke any farther of this olde fox: and therefore from the riuer of Waricapana (which lieth at the entrance of Emeria) we returned againe, and left to the Eaſtward thoſe foure riuers which fall from the mountaines of Emeria into Orenoque, which are Waracayari, Coirama, Akaniri, and Iparoma: below thoſe foure are alſo theſe branches and mouthes of Orenoque, which fall into the Eaſt ſea, whereof the firſt is Araturi, the next Amacura, the third Barima, the fourth Wana, the fift Morooca, the ſixt Paroma, the laſt Wijmi: beyond them there fall out of the land betweene Orenoque and Amazones 14 riuers which I forbeare to name, inhabited by the Arwacas and Canibals.

It is now time to returne towards the North, and wee found it a weariſome way backe from the borders of Emeria, to recouer vp againe to the head of the riuer Carerupana, by which we deſcended, and where we parted from the galley, which I directed to take the next way to the port of Toparimaca, by which we entred firſt.

All the night it was ſtormie and darke, and full of thunder and great ſhowers, ſo as wee were driuen to keepe cloſe by the bankes in our ſmall boats, being all heartily afraid both of the billow and terrible curent of the riuer. By the next morning we recouered the mouth of the riuer of Cumaca, where we left captaine Eynus and Edward Porter to attend the comming of captaine Keymis ouer land: but when wee entred the ſame, they had heard no newes of his arriuall, which bred in vs a great doubt what might become of him: I rowed vp a league or two farther into the riuer, ſhooting off pieces all the way, that hee might know of our being there. And the next morning wee heard them anſwere vs alſo with a piece: wee tooke them aboord vs, and tooke our leaue of Putima their guide, who of all others moſt lamented our departure, and offered to ſend his ſonne with vs into England, if we could haue ſtayed till he had ſent backe to his towne: but our hearts were cold to behold the great rage and increaſe of Orenoque, and therefore departed, and turned toward the Weſt, till we had recouered the parting of the three branches aforeſayd, that we might put downe the ſtreame after the galley.

The next day we landed on the Iſland of Aſſapano (which deuideth the riuer from that branch by which we ſent downe to Emeria) and there feaſted our ſelues with that beaſt which is called Armadilla preſented vnto vs before at Winicapora, and the day following we recouered the galley at ankor at the port of Toparimaca, & the ſame euening departed with very foule weather and terrible thunder, and ſhowers, for the Winter was come on very farre: the beſt was, we went no leſſe then 100 miles a day, downe the riuer: but by the way we entred, it was impoſſible to returne, for that the riuer of Amana, being in the bottome of the bay of Guanipa, cannot be ſayled backe by any meanes, both the brize and current of the ſea were ſo forcible: and therefore wee followed a branch of Orenoque called Capuri, which entred into the ſea Eaſtward of our ſhips, to the end we might beare with them before the wind, and it was not without neede, for we had by that way as much to croſſe of the maine ſea after we came to the riuers mouth, as betweene Grauelyn and Douer, in ſuch boats as your Hon. hath heard.

The port of Toparimaca.

To ſpeake of what paſt homeward were tedious, either to deſcribe or name any of the riuers, Iſlands, or villages of the Tiuitiuas which dwell on trees: we will leaue all thoſe to the generall mappe: and to be ſhort, when we were arriued at the ſea ſide, then grew our greateſt doubt, and the bittereſt of all our iourney forepaſſed, for I proteſt before God, that we were in a moſt deſperate eſtate: for the ſame night which we ankored in the mouth of the riuer of Capuri, where it falleth into the ſea, there aroſe a mightie ſtorme, and the riuers mouth was at leaſt a league broad, ſo as we ranne before night cloſe vnder the land with our ſmall boates, and brought the Galley as neere as we could, but ſhe had as much a doe to liue as could be, and there wanted little of her ſinking, and all thoſe in her: for mine owne part I confeſſe, I was very doubtfull which way to take, either to goe ouer in the peſtred Galley, there being but ſixe foote water ouer the ſandes, for two leagues together, and that alſo in the channell, and ſhe drew fiue: or to aduenture in ſo great a billow, and in ſo doubtfull weather, to croſſe the ſeas in my barge. The longer we tarried the worſe it was, and therefore I tooke Captaine Gifford, Captaine Calfeild, and my coſen Greeneuile into my barge; and after it cleared vp, about midnight we put our ſelues to Gods keeping, and thruſt out into the ſea, leauing the Galley at anker, who durſt not aduenture but by day-light: And ſo being all very ſober, and melancholy, one faintly chearing another to ſhewe courage, it pleaſed God that the next day about nine of the clocke, wee deſcried the Ilande of Trinidad, and ſtearing for the neereſt part of it, wee kept the ſhore till wee came to Curiapan, where wee founde our ſhippes at ankor, then which there was neuer to vs a more ioyfull ſight.

Now that it hath pleaſed God to ſende vs ſafe to our ſhippes, it is time to leaue Guiana to the Sunne, whom they worſhippe, and ſteare away towardes the North: I will therefore in a fewe wordes finiſh the diſcouery thereof. Of the ſeuerall nations which we found vpon this diſcouery I will once againe make repetition, and howe they are affected. At our firſt enterance into Amana, which is one of the outlets of Orenoque, we left on the right hand of vs in the bottome of the bay, lying directly againſt Trinidad, a nation of inhumaine Canibals, which inhabite the riuers of Guanipa and Berbeeſe; in the ſame bay there is alſo a third riuer which is called Areo, which riſeth on Paria ſide towards Cumaná, and that riuer is inhabited with the Wikiri, whoſe chiefe towne vpon the ſayd riuer is Sayma; In this bay there are no more riuers, but theſe three before rehearſed, and the foure branches of Amana, all which in the Winter thruſt ſo great abundance of water into the ſea, as the ſame is taken vp freſh, two or three leagues from the land. In the paſſages towardes Guiana (that is, in all thoſe landes which the eight branches of Orenoque faſhion into Ilands) there are but one ſort of people called Tiuitiuas, but of two caſtes as they tearme them, the one called Ciawani, the other Waraweeti, and thoſe warre one with another.

A rehearſall & deſcription of all the nations and riuers found in this diſcouerie.

On the hithermoſt part of Orenoque, as at Toparimaca, and Winicapora, thoſe are of a nation called Nepoios, and are of the followers of Carapana, Lord of Emeria. Betweene Winicapora and the port of Morequito which ſtandeth in Aromaia, and all thoſe in the valley of Amariocapana are called Orenoqueponi, and did obey Morequito, and are now followers of Topiawari. Vpon the riuer of Caroli, are the Canuri, which are gouerned by a woman (who is inheritrix of that Prouince) who came farre off to ſee our Nation, and aſked me diuerſe queſtions of her Maieſtie, being much delighted with the diſcourſe of her Maieſties greatneſſe, and wondering at ſuch reports as we truely made of her Highneſſe many vertues. And vpon the head of Caroli, and on the lake of Caſſipa, are the three ſtrong Nations of the Caſſipagotos. Right South into the land are the Capurepani, and Emparepani, and beyond thoſe adioyning to Macureguarai (the firſt citie of Inga) are the Iwarawakeri: all theſe are profeſſed enemies to the Spaniards, and to the rich Epuremei alſo. To the Weſt of Caroli are diuerſe nations of Canibals, and of thoſe Ewaipanoma without heads. Directly Weſt are the Amapaias and Anebas, which are alſo marueilous rich in gold. The reſt towards Peru we will omit. On the North of Orenoque, betweene it and the Weſt Indies are the Wikiri, Saymi, and the reſt before ſpoken of, all mortall enemies to the Spaniardes. On the South ſide of the maine mouth of Orenoque, are the Arwacas; and beyond them the Canibals and to the South of them the Amazones.

To make mention of the ſeuerall beaſts, birds, fiſhes, fruits, flowers, gummes, ſweet woods, and of their ſeuerall religions and cuſtomes, would for the firſt require as many volumes as thoſe of Geſnerus, and for the reſt another bundle of Decades. The religion of the Epuremei is the ſame which the Ingas, Emperours of Peru vſed, which may be read in Cieça, and other Spaniſh ſtories, how they beleeue the immortalitie of the ſoule, worſhip the Sunne, and burie with them aliue their beſt beloued wiues and treaſure, as they likewiſe doe in Pegu in the Eaſt Indies, and other places. The Orenoqueponi bury not their wiues with them, but their iewels, hoping to inioy them againe. The Arwacas dry the bones of their Lords, and their wiues and friends drinke them in powder. In the graues of the Peruuians the Spaniards found their greateſt abundance of treaſure: the like alſo is to be found among theſe people in euery Prouince. They haue all many wiues, and the Lords-fiue fould to the common ſort: their wiues neuer eate with their huſbands, nor among the men, but ſerue their huſbands at meales, and afterwardes feede by themſelues. Thoſe that are paſt their younger yeeres, make all their bread and drinke, and worke their cotten beds, and doe all elſe of ſeruice and labour, for the men doe nothing but hunt, fiſh, play, and drinke, when they are out of the warres.

Great riches.

I will enter no further into diſcouſe of their maners, lawes and cuſtomes: and becauſe I haue not my ſelfe ſeene the cities of Inga, I cannot auow on my credit what I haue heard, although it be very likely, that the Emperour Inga hath built and erected as magnificent pallaces in Guiana, as his anceſtors did in Peru, which were for their riches and rareneſſe moſt maruellous and exceeding all in Europe, and I thinke of the world, China excepted, which alſo the Spaniards (which I had) aſſured me to be true, as alſo the Nations of the borderers, who being but Saluages to thoſe of the in-land, doe cauſe much treaſure to be buried with them: for I was enformed of one of the Caſſiques of the valley of Amariocapana which had buried with him a little before our arriuall, a chaire of golde moſt curiouſly wrought, which was made either in Macureguaray adioyning, or in Manoa: but if we ſhould haue grieued them in their religion at the firſt, before they had bene taught better, and haue digged vp their graues, we had loſt them all: and therefore I helde my firſt reſolution, that her Maieſtie ſhould either accept or refuſe the enterpriſe, ere any thing ſhould be done that might in any ſort hinder the ſame. And if Peru had ſo many heapes of golde, whereof thoſe Ingas were Princes, and that they delighted ſo much therin; no doubt but this which now liueth and reigneth in Manoa, hath the ſame honour, and I am aſſured hath more abundance of golde, within his territorie, then all Peru and the Weſt Indies.

Exceeding cõmendation of the riuer of Orenoque.

For the reſt, which my ſelfe haue ſeene, I will promiſe theſe things that follow, which I know to be true. Thoſe that are deſirous to diſcouer and to ſee many nations, may be ſatiſfied within this riuer, which bringeth foorth ſo many armes and branches leading to ſeuerall countries, and prouinces, aboue 2000 miles Eaſt and Weſt, and 800 miles South and North, and of theſe, the moſt eyther rich in golde, or in other marchandizes. The common ſouldier ſhall here fight for golde, and pay himſelfe in ſteede of pence, with plates of halfe a foote broad, whereas he breaketh his bones in other warres for prouant and penury. Thoſe commanders and chieftaines that ſhoot at honour and abundance, ſhall finde there more rich and beautifull cities, more temples adorned with golden images, more ſepulchres filled with treaſure, then either Cortez found in Mexico, or Piçarro in Peru: and the ſhining glorie of this conqueſt will eclipſe all thoſe ſo farre extended beames of the Spaniſh nation. There is no countrey which yeeldeth more pleaſure to the inhabitants, either for thoſe common delights of hunting, hawking, fiſhing, fowling, or the reſt, then Guiana doth. It hath ſo many plaines, cleere riuers, abundance of Pheſants, Partriges, Quailes, Railes, Cranes, Herons, and all other fowle: Deere of all ſorts, Porkes, Hares, Lions, Tygers, Leopards, and diuers other ſortes of beaſtes, either for chaſe, or food. It hath a kind of beaſt called Cama, or Anta, as bigge as an Engliſh beefe, and in great plentie.

The holſomeneſſe of the countrey.

To ſpeake of the ſeuerall ſorts of euery kind, I feare would be troubleſome to the Reader, and therefore I will omit them, and conclude that both for health, good ayre, pleaſure, and riches I am reſolued it cannot bee equalled by any region either in the Eaſt or Weſt. Moreouer the countrey is ſo healthfull, as of an hundred perſons & more (which lay without ſhift moſt ſluttiſhly, and were euery day almoſt melted with heate in rowing and marching, and ſuddenly wet againe with great ſhowers, and did eate of all ſorts of corrupt fruits, and made meales of freſh fiſh without ſeaſoning, of Tortugas, of Lagartos or Crocodiles, and of all ſorts good and bad, without either order or meaſure, and beſides lodged in the open aire euery night) we loſt not any one, nor had one ill diſpoſed to my knowledge, nor found any Calentura, or other of thoſe peſtilent diſeaſes which dwell in all hot regions, and ſo neere the Equinoctiall line.

Gold.

Braſil wood.
Excellent dyes.

Cotton, ſilke, Balſamum, gummes, and pepper.

Where there is ſtore of gold, it is in effect needleſſe to remember other commodities for trade: but it hath towards the South part of the riuer, great quantities of Braſil-wood, and diuerſe berries that die a moſt perfect crimſon and carnation: And for painting, all France, Italy, or the Eaſt Indies yeelde none ſuch: For the more the ſkin is waſhed, the fairer the colour appeareth, and with which, euen thoſe browne and tawnie women ſpot themſelues, and colour their cheekes. All places yeeld abundance of cotton, of ſilke, of balſamum, and of thoſe kindes moſt excellent, and neuer knowen in Europe, of all ſortes of gummes, of Indian pepper: and what elſe the countries may afford within the land we knowe not, neither had we time to abide the triall, and ſearch. The ſoile beſides is ſo excellent and ſo full of riuers, as it will carrie ſugar, ginger, and all thoſe other commodities, which the Weſt Indies haue.

The ſhort, eaſie, and commodious nauigation to Guiana.

The nauigation is ſhort, for it may be ſayled with an ordinarie winde in ſixe weekes, and in the like time backe againe, and by the way neither lee ſhore, enemies coaſt, rockes, nor ſandes, all which in the voyages to the Weſt Indies, and all other places we are ſubiect vnto, as the chanell of Bahama, comming from the Weſt Indies, cannot well be paſſed in the Winter, & when it is at the beſt, it is a perilous and a fearefull place. The reſt of the Indies for calmes, and diſeaſes very troubleſome, and the ſea about the Bermudas a helliſh ſea for thunder, lightning, and ſtormes.

This very yeere *there were ſeuenteene ſayle of Spaniſh ſhips loſt in the chanell of Bahama, and the great Philip like to haue ſunke at the Bermudas was put backe to Saint Iuan de Puerto rico. And ſo it falleth out in that Nauigation euery yeere for the moſt part, which in this voyage are not to be feared: for the time of yeere to leaue England is beſt in Iuly, and the Summer in Guiana is in October, Nouember, December, Ianuarie, Februarie, and March, and then the ſhips may depart thence in Aprill, and ſo returne againe into England in Iune, ſo as they ſhall neuer be ſubiect to Winter-weather, either comming, going, or ſtaying there: which for my part, I take to be one of the greateſt comforts and incouragements that can be thought on, hauing (as I haue done) taſted in this voyage by the Weſt Indies ſo many calmes, ſo much heat, ſuch outragious guſtes, foule weather, and contrarie windes.

To conclude, Guiana is a countrey that hath yet her maydenhead, neuer ſackt, turned, nor wrought, the face of the earth hath not bene torne, nor the vertue and ſalt of the ſoyle ſpent by manurance, the graues haue not bene opened for golde, the mines not broken with ſledges, nor their Images puld downe out of their temples. It hath neuer bene entered by any armie of ſtrength, and neuer conquered or poſſeſſed by any chriſtian Prince. It is beſides ſo defenſible, that if two forts be builded in one of the Prouinces which I haue ſeene, the flood ſetteth in ſo neere the banke, where the channell alſo lyeth, that no ſhip can paſſe vp but within a Pikes length of the artillerie, firſt of the one, and afterwards of the other: Which two Forts will be a ſufficient guarde both to the Empire of Inga, and to an hundred other ſeueral kingdomes, lying within the ſaid riuer, euen to the citie of Quito in Peru.

There is therefore great difference betweene the eaſineſſe of the conqueſt of Guiana, and the defence of it being conquered, and the Weſt or Eaſt Indies: Guiana hath but one entrance by the ſea (if it hath that) for any veſſels of burden: ſo as whoſoeuer ſhall firſt poſſeſſe it, it ſhall be found vnacceſſible for any enemie, except he come in Wherries, Barges, or Canoas, or elſe in flat bottomed boates, and if he doe offer to enter it in that manner, the woods are ſo thicke two hundred miles together vpon the riuers of ſuch entrance, as a mouſe cannot ſit in a boat vnhit from the banke. By lande it is more impoſſible to approch, for it hath the ſtrongeſt ſituation of any region vnder the ſunne, and is ſo enuironed with impaſſable mountaines on euery ſide, as it is impoſſible to victuall any company in the paſſage: which hath bene well prooued by the Spaniſh nation, who ſince the conqueſt of Peru haue neuer left fiue yeeres free from attempting this Empire, or diſcouering ſome way into it, and yet of three and twentie ſeuerall Gentlemen, Knights, and Noblemen, there was neuer any that knewe which way to leade an army by land, or to conduct ſhippes by ſea, any thing neere the ſaide countrie. Orellana, of whom the riuer of Amazones taketh name, was the firſt, and Don Antonio de Berreo (whom we diſplanted) the laſt: and I doubt much, whether he himſelfe or any of his yet know the beſt way into the ſayde Empire. It can therefore hardly be regained, if any ſtrength be formerly ſet downe, but in one or two places, and but two or three crumſters or gallies built, and furniſhed vpon the riuer within: The Weſt Indies haue many portes, watering places, and landings, and nearer then three hundred miles to Guiana, no man can harbour a ſhippe, except he know one onely place, which is not learned in haſte, and which I will vndertake there is not any one of my companies that knoweth, whoſoeuer hearkened moſt after it.

Beſides by keeping one good Fort, or building one towne of ſtrength, the whole Empire is guarded, and whatſoeuer companies ſhall be afterwardes planted within the land, although in twentie ſeuerall Prouinces, thoſe ſhall be able all to reunite themſelues vpon any occaſion eyther by the way of one riuer, or be able to march by land without either wood, bogge, or mountaine: whereas in the Weſt Indies there are fewe townes or Prouinces that can ſuccour or relieue one the other, eyther by land or ſea: By land the countries are either deſert, mountaynous, or ſtrong enemies: by ſea, if any man inuade to the Eaſtward, thoſe to the Weſt cannot in many moneths turne againſt the brize and Eaſtern wind, beſides the Spaniards are therein ſo diſperſed, as they are no where ſtrong, but in Nueua Eſpanna onely: the ſharpe mountaines, the thornes, and poyſoned prickles, the ſandie and deepe wayes in the valleys, the ſmothering heate and aire, and want of water in other places are their onely and beſt defence, which (becauſe thoſe nations that inuade them are not victualled or prouided to ſtay, neither haue any place to friend adioyning) doe ſerue them in ſteede of good armes and great multitudes.

The Weſt Indies were firſt offered her Maieſties grandfather by Columbus a ſtranger, in whom there might be doubt of deceipt, and beſides it was then thought incredible that there were ſuch and ſo many lands & regions neuer written of before. This Empire is made knowen to her Maieſtie by her owne vaſſall, and by him that oweth to her more duetie then an ordinary ſubiect, ſo that it ſhall ill ſort with the many graces and benefites which I haue receiued to abuſe her Highneſſe, either with fables or imaginations. The countrey is alreadie diſcouered, many nations wonne to her Maieſties loue and obedience, and thoſe Spaniardes which haue lateſt and longeſt laboured about the conqueſt, beaten out, diſcouraged and diſgraced, which among theſe nations were thought inuincible. Her Maieſtie may in this enterprize employ all thoſe ſouldiers and gentlemen that are younger brethren, and all captaines and chieftaines that want employment, and the charge will be onely the firſt ſetting out in victualling and arming them: for after the firſt or ſecond yeere I doubt not but to ſee in London a Contractation houſe of more receipt for Guiana, then there is now in Siuill for the Weſt Indies.

And I am reſolued that if there were but a ſmall army a foote in Guiana, marching towards Manoa the chiefe citie of Inga, he would yeeld to her Maieſtie by compoſition ſo many hundred thouſand pounds yeerely, as ſhould both defend all enemies abroad, and defray all expences at home, and that he would beſides pay a garriſon of three or foure thouſand ſouldiers very royally to defend him againſt other nations: For he cannot but knowe, how his predeceſſors, yea how his owne great vncles Guaſcar and Atabalipa ſonnes to Guainacapa Emperour of Peru, were (while they contended for the Empire) beaten out by the Spaniards, and that both of late yeres and euer ſince the ſaid conqueſt, the Spaniards haue ſought the paſſages and entrey of his countrey: and of their cruelties vſed to the borderers he cannot be ignorant. In which reſpects no doubt but he will be brought to tribute with great gladneſſe, if not, he hath neither ſhot nor yron weapon in all his Empire, and therefore may eaſily be conquered.

And I farther remember that Berreo confeſſed to me and others (which I proteſt before the Maieſtie of God to be true) that there was found among propheſies in Peru (at ſuch time as the Empire was reduced to the Spaniſh obedience) in their chiefeſt temples, amongſt diuers others which foreſhewed the loſſe of the ſaid Empire, that from Inglatierra thoſe Ingas ſhould be againe in time to come reſtored, and deliuered from the ſeruitude of the ſaid Conquerours. And I hope, as we with theſe few hands haue diſplanted the firſt garriſon, and driuen them out of the ſaid countrey, ſo her Maieſtie will giue order for the reſt, and either defend it, and hold it as tributary, or conquere and keepe it as Empreſſe of the ſame. For whatſoeuer Prince ſhall poſſeſſe it, ſhall be greateſt, and if the king of Spaine enioy it, he will become vnreſiſtable. Her Maieſtie hereby ſhall confirme and ſtrengthen the opinions of all nations, as touching her great and princely actions. And where the South border of Guiana reacheth to the Dominion and Empire of the Amazones, thoſe women ſhall hereby heare the name of a virgin, which is not onely able to defend her owne territories and her neighbours, but alſo to inuade and conquer ſo great Empires and ſo farre remoued.

To ſpeake more at this time, I feare would be but troubleſome: I truſt in God, this being true, will ſuffice, and that he which is King of all Kings and Lord of Lords, will put it into her heart which is Ladie of Ladies to poſſeſſe it, if not, I will iudge thoſe men worthy to be kings thereof, that by her grace and leaue will vndertake it of themſelues.

An abſtract taken out of certaine Spaniards letters concerning Guiana and the countries lying vpon the great riuer Orenoque: with certaine reports alſo touching the ſame.

An aduertiſement to the Reader.

THoſe letters out of which the abſtracts following are taken, were ſurpriſed at ſea as they were paſſing for Spaine in the yeere 1594. by Captaine George Popham: who the next yeere, and the ſame that Sir Walter Ralegh diſcouered Guiana, as he was in a voyage for the Weſt Indies, learned alſo the reports annexed. All which, at his returne, being two moneths after Sir Walter, as alſo ſo long after the writing of the former diſcourſe, hearing alſo of his diſcouerie: he made knowen and deliuered to ſome of her Maieſties moſt honourable priuie Councell & others. The which ſeeing they confirme in ſome part the ſubſtance, I meane, the riches of that countrey: it hath bene thought fit that they ſhould be thereunto adioyned. Wherein the Reader is to be aduertiſed, that although the Spaniards ſeeme to glorie much of their formall poſſeſſion taken before Morequito the Lord of Aromaya, and others thereabouts, which throughly vnderſtood them not at that time, whatſoeuer the Spaniards otherwiſe pretend: yet, according to the former diſcourſe, and as alſo it is related by Cayworaco, the ſonne of Topiawary now chiefe Lord of the ſaid Aromaya, who was brought into England by Sir Walter Ralegh, and was preſent at the ſame poſſeſſion and diſcouerie of the Spaniards mentioned in theſe letters; it appeareth that after they were gone out of their countrey, the Indians then hauing farther conſideration of the matter, and more then coniecture of their intent, hauing knowen and heard of their former cruelties vpon their borderers and others of the Indians elſewhere: At their next comming, there being ten of them ſent and imployed for a farther diſcouery, they were prouided to receiue and entertaine them in an other maner of ſort then they had done before; that is to ſay, they ſlew them and buried them in the countrey ſo much ſought. They gaue them by that meanes a full and complete poſſeſſion, the which before they had but begunne. And ſo they are minded to doe, to as many Spaniards as come after. Other poſſeſſion they haue had none ſince. Neither doe the Indians meane, as they proteſt, to giue them any other. One other thing to be remembred is that in theſe letters the Spaniards ſeeme to call Guiana and other countries neere it, bordering vpon the riuer of Orenoque, by the name of Nueuo Dorado, becauſe of the great plentie of golde there in moſt places to be found. Alluding alſo to the name of El Dorado which was giuen by Martinez to the great citie of Manoa, as is in the former treatiſe ſpecified. This is all I thought good to aduertiſe. As for ſome other matters, I leaue them to the conſideration and iudgement of the indifferent Reader.

W. R.

Letters taken at ſea by Captaine George Popham. 1594.

Alonſo his letter from the Gran Canaria to his brother being commander of S. Lucar, concerning El Dorado.

There haue bene certaine letters receiued here of late, of a land newly diſcouered called Nueuo Dorado, from the ſonnes of certaine inhabitants of this citie, who were in the diſcouery: they write of wonderfull riches to be found in the ſaid Dorado, and that golde there is in great abundance: the courſe to fall with it is fiftie leagues to the windeward of Margarita.

Alonſos letter from thence to certaine Marchantes of Sant Lucar concerning El Dorado.

Sirs, we haue no newes worth the writing, ſauing of a diſcouery lately made by the Spaniardes in a new land called Nueuo Dorado, which is two dayes ſayling to the windward of Margarita: there is golde in ſuch abundance, as the like hath not bene heard of. Wee haue it for certaine in letters written from thence by ſome that were in the diſcouerie, vnto their parents here in this citie. I purpoſe (God willing) to beſtow tenne or twelue dayes in ſearch of the ſaid Dorado, as I paſſe in my voyage towards Carthagena, hoping there to make ſome good ſale of our commodities. I haue ſent you therewith part of the information of the ſaid diſcouerie, that was ſent to his Maieſtie.

Part of the Copie that was ſent to his Maieſtie, of the diſcouery of Nueuo Dorado.

In the riuer of Pato otherwiſe called Orenoque, in the principall part thereof called Wariſmero, the 23 of April 1593 Domingo de vera maſter of the campe, and Generall for Antonio de Berreo Gouernour and Captaine generall for our lord the king, betwixt the riuers of Pato and Papamene alias Orenoque, and Marannon, and of the Iland of Trinidad, in preſence of me Rodrigo de Carança Regiſter for the ſea, commanded all the ſouldiers to be drawen together and put in order of battaile, the Captaines and ſouldiers, and Maſter of the campe ſtanding in the middeſt of them, ſaid vnto them: Sirs, Souldiers, and Captaines, you vnderſtand long ſince that our Generall Antonio de Berreo, with the trauell of eleuen yeeres, and expence of more then an hundred thouſand pezos of golde, diſcouered the royall Prouinces of Guiana and Dorado: of the which he tooke poſſeſſion to gouerne the ſame, but through want of his peoples health, and neceſſarie munition, he iſſued out at the Iland Magarita, and from thence peopled Trinidad. But now they haue ſent me to learne out and diſcouer the wayes moſt eaſily to enter, and to people the ſaid Prouinces, and where the campes and armies may beſt enter the ſame. By reaſon whereof I intend ſo to doe in the name of his Maieſtie, and the ſaide gouernour Antonio de Berreo, and in token thereof I require you Francis Carillo, that you aide mee to aduance this croſſe that lieth here on the ground, which they ſet on end towardes the Eaſt, and the ſaid Maſter of the campe, the captaines and ſouldiers kneeled downe, and did due reuerence vnto the ſaide croſſe, and thereupon the maſter of the campe tooke a bowle of water and dranke it off, and tooke more and threw abroad on the ground: he alſo drewe out his ſworde and cut the graſſe off the ground, and the boughes off the trees ſaying, I take this poſſeſſion in the name of the king Don Philip our maſter, and of his Gouernour Antonio de Berreo: and becauſe ſome make queſtion of this poſſeſſion, to them I anſwere, that in theſe our actions was preſent the Caſſique or principall Don Antonio, otherwiſe called Morequito, whoſe land this was, who yeelded conſent to the ſaid poſſeſſion, was glad thereof, and gaue his obedience to our lord the king, and in his name to the ſaid Gouernour Antonio de Berreo. And the ſaid maſter of the campe kneeled downe being in his libertie, and all the Captaines and ſouldiers ſaid, that the poſſeſſion was well taken, and that they would defend it with their liues, vpon whoſoeuer would ſay the contrary. And the ſaid maſter of the campe hauing his ſword drawen in his hand ſaide vnto me: Regiſter, that art here preſent, giue me an inſtrument or teſtimoniall to confirme me in this poſſeſſion, which I haue taken of this land, for the Gouernour Antonio de Berreo, and if it be needefull I will take it a newe. And I require you all that are preſent to witneſſe the ſame, and do further declare that I will goe on, taking the poſſeſſion of all theſe landes whereſoeuer I ſhall enter. Signed thus.

Domingo de vera, and vnderneath, Before me Rodrigo de Carança, Regiſter of the armie.

AND in proſecution of the ſaid poſſeſſion, and the diſcouerie of the way and Prouinces, the 27 of April of the ſaid yeere, the maſter of the campe entred by little and little with all the campe and men of warre, more then two leagues into the in-land, and came to a towne of a principall, and conferring with him did let him vnderſtand by meanes of Antonio Biſante the Interpretor, that his Maieſtie and Antonio de Berreo had ſent him to take the ſaid poſſeſſion. And the ſaid frier Francis Carillo by the Interpretor, deliuered him certain things of our holy Catholique faith, to all which he anſwered, that they vnderſtood him well and would become Chriſtians, and that with a very good will they ſhould aduance the croſſe, in what part or place of the towne it pleaſed them, for he was for the Gouernour Antonio de Berreo, who was his maſter. Thereupon the ſaid maſter of the campe tooke a great croſſe, and ſet it on end towarde the Eaſt, and requeſted the whole campe to witneſſe it, and Domingo de vera firmed it thus.

It is well and firmely done: And vnderneath. Before me
Rodrigo Carança, Regiſter of the armie.

THe firſt of May they proſecuted the ſaid poſſeſſion and diſcouerie to the towne on Carapana. From thence the ſaid Maſter of the campe paſſed to the towne of Toroco whoſe principall is called Topiawary being fiue leagues farther within the land then the firſt Nation, and well inhabited. And to this principall by meane of the Interpretor they gaue to vnderſtand that his Maieſtie and the ſaid Corrigidor commanded them to take the poſſeſſion of that lande, and that they ſhould yeelde their obedience to his Maieſtie, and to his Corrigidor, and to the maſter of the campe in his name, and that in token therof he would place a croſſe in the middle of his towne. Whereunto the ſaid Caſſique anſwered they ſhould aduance it with a very good will, and that he remained in the obedience of our lord the king, and of the ſaid Gouernour Antonio de Berreo whoſe vaſſall he would be.

The fourth of May we came to a Prouince aboue fiue leagues thence, of all ſides inhabited with much people, the principall of this people came and met vs in peaceable maner: and he is called Reuato, he brought vs to a very large houſe where he entertained vs well, and gaue vs vs much Golde, and the interpreter aſking him from whence that golde was, he anſwered, From a Prouince not paſſing a dayes iourney off, where there are ſo many Indians as would ſhadowe the ſunne, and ſo much Golde as all yonder plaine will not conteine it. In which Countrey (when they enter into the Borracheras or their drunken feaſts) they take of the ſaid Golde in duſt and anoynt themſelues all ouer therewith to make the brauer ſhew; and to the end the Golde may couer them, they anoynt their bodies with ſtamped herbes of a gluwy ſubſtance: & they haue warre with thoſe Indians. They promiſed vs that if we would goe vnto them, they would ayde vs; but they were ſuch infinite numbers, as no doubt they would kill vs. And being aſked how they gat yͤ ſame Gold, they told vs they went to a certaine Downe or playne, and pulled or digged vp the graſſe by the roote: which done, they tooke of the earth, putting it in great buckets, which they caried to waſh at the riuer, and that which came in powder they kept for their Borracheras or drunken feaſts: and that which was in peeces they wrought into Eagles.

The eight of May wee went from thence, and marched about fiue leagues: at the foote of a Hill wee found a principall called Arataco with three thouſand Indians, men and women all in peace and with much victuall, as Hennes and Veniſon in great abundance, and many ſortes of wine. Hee intreated vs to goe to his houſe, and to reſt that night in his Towne, being of fiue hundred houſes. The interpreter aſked whence hee had thoſe Hennes: he ſayde they were brought from a mountaine not paſſing a quarter of a league thence, where were many Indians, yea ſo many as graſſe on the ground, and that theſe men had the points of their ſhoulders higher then the Crownes of their heads, and had ſo many Hennes as was wonderfull; and if wee would haue any, wee ſhould ſend them Iewes harpes, for they would giue for euery one two Hennes. Wee tooke an Indian, and gaue him fiue hundred Harpes; the Hennes were ſo many that hee brought vs, as were not to be numbred. Wee ſayde wee would goe thither; they tolde vs they were now in their Borracheras or drunken feaſts, and would kill vs. Wee aſked the Indian that brought the Hennes, if it were true; hee ſayde it was moſt true. Wee aſked him how they made their Borracheras or drunken feaſts; hee ſayde, they had many Eagles of golde hanging on their breaſts, and Pearles in their eares, and that they daunced being all couered with Golde. The Indian ſayde vnto vs, if wee would ſee them, wee ſhould giue him ſome Hatchets, and he would bring vs of thoſe Eagles. The Maſter of the Campe gaue him one Hatchet (hee would giue him no more becauſe they ſhould not vnderſtand we went to ſeeke golde) he brought vs an Eagle that weighed 27. pounds of good Golde. The Maſter of the Campe tooke it, and ſhewed it to the ſouldiers, and then threw it from him, making ſhewe not to regard it. About midnight came an Indian and ſayd vnto him, Giue mee a Pickeaxe, and I will tell thee what the Indians with the high ſhoulders meane to doe. The Interpreter tolde the Maſter of the Campe, who commanded one to be giuen him: hee then tolde vs, thoſe Indians were comming to kill vs for our marchandize. Hereupon the Maſter of the Campe cauſed his company to bee ſet in order, and beganne to march. The eleuenth day of May wee went about ſeuen leagues from thence to a Prouince, where wee found a great company of Indians apparelled: they tolde vs that if wee came to fight, they would fill vp thoſe Plaines with Indians to fight with vs; but if wee came in peace, wee ſhould enter and bee well entertained of them, becauſe they had a great deſire to ſee Chriſtians: and there they tolde vs of all the riches that was. I doe not heere ſet it downe, becauſe there is no place for it, but it ſhall appeare by the information that goeth to his Maieſtie: for if it ſhould heere bee ſet downe, foure leaues of paper would not containe it.

Indians with high ſhoulders.

The Letter of George Burien Britton from the ſayde Canaries vnto his couſin a French man dwelling in S. Lucar, concerning El Dorado.

Sir, and my very good couſin, there came of late certaine Letters from a new diſcouered countrey not farre from Trinidad, which they write, hath Golde in great abundance: the newes ſeemeth to bee very certaine, becauſe it paſſeth for good amongſt the beſt of this Citie. Part of the information of the Diſcouery that went to his Maieſtie, goeth incloſed in Alonſos letters; it is a thing worth the ſeeing.

The report of Domingo Martinez of Iamaica concerning El Dorado.

He ſayth that in 1593. being at Carthagena, there was a generall report of a late diſcouery called Nueuo Dorado, and that a litle before his comming thither, there came a Frigat from the ſaid Dorado, bringing in it the portrature of a Giant all of Gold, of weight 47. kintals, which the Indians there held for their Idoll. But now admitting of Chriſtianitie and obedience to the King of Spaine, they ſent their ſayd Idol vnto him in token they were become Chriſtians, and held him for their King. The company comming in the ſaid Frigat, reported Golde to be there in moſt abundance, Diamonds of ineſtimable value, with great ſtore of pearle.

The report of a French man called Bountillier of Sherbrouke, concerning Trinidad and Dorado.

Paracoa.

HE ſaith that beeing at Trinidad in 1591. he had of an Indian there a peece of Golde of a quarter of a pound in exchange of a knife; the ſayde Indian tolde him hee had it at the head of that riuer which commeth to Paracoa in Trinidad: and that within the Riuer of Orenoque, it was in great abundance. Alſo in 1593. beeing taken by the Spanyardes, and brought priſoner into the Iland of Madera (the place for his priſon) there came in this meane time a Barke of fortie Tunnes from a new Diſcouery, with two millions of Golde; the company whereof reported Golde in that place to bee in great abundance, and called it El Nueuo Dorado. This Frenchman paſſed from Spaine in the Barke, and hauing a cabben neere a gentleman, one of the Diſcouerers that came from that place in the ſayde Barke, had diuers times conference with him, and amongſt other things, of the great abundance of Golde in the ſayd Dorado, being as they ſayd within the riuer of Orenoque.

Reportes of certaine Marchants of Rio de Hacha, concerning El Nueuo Dorado.

THey ſayd (aduancing the kings great treaſure in the Indies) that Nueuo Reyno yeelded very many Golde mines, and wonderfull rich; but lately was diſcouered a certaine Prouince ſo rich in Golde, as the report thereof may ſeeme incredible, it is there in ſuch abundance, and is called El Nueuo Dorado: Antonio de Berreo made the ſaid diſcouerie.

The report of a Spanyard, Captaine with Berreo in the diſcouerie of El Nueuo Dorado.

THat the information ſent to the King was in euery poynt truely ſayde, that the riuer Orenoque hath ſeuen mouths, or outlets into the ſea, called Las Siete bocas de dragon, that the ſayd riuer runneth farre into the land, in many places very broad, and that Anth. de Berreo lay at Trinidad, making head to goe to conquere and people the ſayd Dorado.

A Relation of the ſecond Voyage to Guiana, performed and written in the yeere 1596. by Laurence Keymis Gent.

TO THE APPROVED, RIGHT VALOROVS, AND worthy Knight, Sir Walter Ralegh, Lord warden of the Stanneries, Captaine of her Maieſties Guard, and her Highneſſe Lieutenant generall of the Countie of Cornewall.

Pericles.

I Haue here briefly ſet downe the effect of this your ſecond Diſcouerie without any enlargement of made wordes: for in this argument, ſingle ſpeech beſt beſeemeth a ſimple trueth. Where the affinitie of the matter with your perſon, leadeth mee to write of your ſelfe, vnto your ſelfe, that ſmall libertie which I haue therein vſed, ſhall, I doubt not, without offence or ſiniſter conſtruction, be giuen to the cauſe in hand: which, whether it ſuffer not detriment, by attributing leſſe then of right belongeth; the iudgement bee theirs, that vprightly and indifferently ſhall weigh the conſequents of their euill purpoſe, who in ſeeking to detract from the Author of theſe Diſcoueries, doe ſo much as in thē lieth, wound, deface, & tread vnder foot the thing it ſelfe. But this is no nouelty, nor proper only to theſe our dayes. For long ſince it hath bin ſaid, Laudes eo vſque ſunt tolerabiles, donec ea dicuntur, quæ auditores ſe quoque facere poſſe exiſtimant: ſi maiora proferantur, inuident, non credunt. The feruent zeale & loyalty of your minde in labour with this birth of ſo honorable expectation, as it hath deſerued a recompence farre different, ſo needeth it not my poore ſuffrage to endeare the toyle, care and danger that you haue willingly vndergone for the good and aduancement of our weale publique. The praiſe-worthineſſe thereof doeth approue it ſelfe,and is better read in your liuing doings, then in my dead vnregarded papers. All that I can wiſh, is that my life were a ſufficient pledge, to iuſtifie, how much more eaſie, and more materiall, the courſe for Guiana would bee then others, which requiring greater charge, yeelde not ſo large benefit, and are ſubiect to more doubtfull euents. If vnto their wiſdomes who ſit in place and authority,it ſhall appeare otherwiſe,and that in following of other attempts there is leſſe difficultie,certainer profit,and needfuller offence vnto the enemie: the coſt and trauaile which you haue beſtowed, ſhall not, I hope,be altogether loſt, if vnto your Honour I can proue how, and where the amends is to be had,maugre the force and preuention of all Spaniards.

Your Lordſhips to be commanded in all ſeruice,

LAVRENCE KEYMIS.

To the Fauourers of the Voyage for Guiana.

IN things earneſtly deſired,though neuer ſo likely,we are ſtill ſuſpicious: thinking it more credite to our common wiſedome, to diſcredite moſt noble and profitable indeuours with diſtruſt, then touch to our valours and ſafeties,to lie wilfully idle. So that howſoeuer an action well and iudicially attempted, bee eſteemed halfe performed; yet is this my iealous conceite concerning Guiana,that nothing is begun,before all be ended. In this regarde (gentle Reader) I haue preſumed to burthen thine eares with the weake plea of a good cauſe, and in ſtead of opening it throughly to thy prudent conſideration,to note only mine owne vnſatisfied affection: hoping that becauſe I doe name Guiana vnto thee, thou wilt vouchſafe hoc nomine, to vaile and couer all other my defects in the deſert of a good meaning. In publiſhing this Treatiſe,my labor principally tendeth to this end; to remoue all fig-leaues from our vnbeliefe, that either it may haue cauſe to ſhake off the colourable pretences of ignorance: or if we will not be perſwaded; that our ſelfe-will may reſt inexcuſable. They that ſhall apply, and conſtrue this my doing,to ſerue the Spaniard his turne ſo wel as our owne; in ſo much as it may ſeeme to inſtruct,warne, and arme him: for their ſatisfaction herein,they muſt not be ignorant,that his eyes, in ſeeing our ſhipping there, doe as effectually informe him, that many of our hearts are toward that place,as if it ſhould be credibly aduertiſed by ſome corrupt hireling, that we thinke,write,and diſcourſe of nothing els.Neither can I imagine,that to conceale our knowledge herein(which to conceale may perhaps proue,& be hereafter taken for worſe thē paricide) would be of better purpoſe,then to hoodwinke our ſelues,as who would ſay, No man ſhall ſee vs. Beſides, if the action were wholy to bee effected at her Maieſties charge; then might it at her Highneſſe pleaſure be ſhadowed with ſome other drift,and neuer be diſcouered,vntill it were acted. But ſince it craueth the approbation and purſes of many Aduenturers, who cannot be ſo prodigall both of their poſſeſſions and liues, as voluntarily to run themſelues out of breath, in purſuing they know not what: great reaſon it is,that where aſſiſtance is to be asked,due cauſes be yeelded to perſwade & induce them vnto it. The Spaniard is not ſo ſimple, vnſetled, & vncertaine in his determinations,as to build them on our breath,or to make our papers his Bulwarks; nor ſo ſlow as to expect a precedent of our forwardnes. His proceedings are ſufficiently ſtrengthened with the trauailes,reports,& ſubſtantial proofes of his own men,that haue aboue 60.yeres beaten round about this buſh. And to ſay a trueth,the expedition that he hath vſed in ſending ſo many ſhips in February laſt to people this country,& diſappoint vs; as it doth conſequently ſhew,that he findeth his chiefeſt force and ſinewes to conſiſt in golde: ſo doeth he thereby plainly to our faces exprobrate our remiſneſſe & long deliberations,that in 12.moneths ſpace haue done,or ſought to doe nothing worthy the ancient fame & reputation of our Engliſh nation, intereſſed in ſo weighty buſineſſe. * His late prouiſion of a new ſupply of whole families to the number of 600. perſons, bound for Guiana,but that it pleaſed God, that by meanes of that right honourable ſeruice moſt reſolutely performed in the ſea-fight,and ſacking of Cadiz, the ſhips wherein they ſhould haue bin conueyed, were conuerted into aſhes: what might it ſignifie? Certes,as it doth euidently proue,that El Dorado hath vndoubted credit & account in their iudgemēts: ſo pointeth it at vs,whilſt we only to entertain idle time,ſit liſtening for Guiana newes,& inſtantly forget it,as if it were nought els,but a pleaſing dreame of a goldē fancy.

* In Iune 1596

If we with our ſelues ſhall expoſtulate, how this commeth to paſſe, that the aduantage wholy reſting on our ſide, in reſpect that Berreo was this laſt yere beaten out, the countrey throughly diſcouered, & the Inhabitants made deſirous of her ſacred Maieſties happy gouernment; they notwithſtanding by entring before vs, haue now gotten ẏ ſtart of vs: what may we thinke? Shal wee iudge that their natiue countrey is leſſe deare, or more weariſome vnto them, then ours is vnto vs? Their Peruleri, who going bare & empty out of Spaine, do againe within 3. or 4. yeres returne from Peru, rich and in good eſtate, doe apparantly diſproue all ſuch conceits of them. Shall wee ſay that they haue more ſpare men to be imployed in ſuch actions? It is no ſecret to know the contrary. Are they ſubiect to penury? In all parts of Chriſtendom, where money is not ſcant, all other things are plentifull. Or is their land not able to ſuſtain their numbers of people? They buy many ſlaues to follow their husbandry, & themſelues diſdaining baſe idlenes & beggery, do all honour military profeſſion, highly eſteeming it in their mercenaries and ſtrangers. Is it then want of ability, in thoſe that are willing, lacke of incouragement, or defaulc of ſpeedy order and direction for thoſe that doe voluntarily offer themſelues, their ſubſtance, & beſt indeuour to further this cauſe; that maketh vs to be thus coated of the Spaniard? The firſt is no queſtion. The later needeth no anſwere. The profit then by their example to be gathered, is, not to looſe opportunitie by delay, or to ſeeme feareful and diſmayed, where there is no cauſe of doubt. For as yet their poſt-haſte doeth no way preiudice our aduiſed leiſure in ſetting forward, ſince their preparations of Negros to worke in the mynes, their horſes, cattell, and other neceſſaries may (by the fauour of God) at our firſt comming, both ſtore vs ẇ quantities of gold oare, and eaſe vs of much trouble, paines, and trauaile. If we ſhould ſuppoſe our ſelues now to liue in the dayes of King Henry the ſeuenth of famous memory, and the ſtrange report of a Weſt Indies, or new world abounding with great treaſure ſhould entice vs to beleeue it: perhaps it might be imputed for ſome blame to the grauity of wiſe men, lightly to bee carried with the perſwaſion and hope of a new ſound Utopia, by ſuch a one as Columbus was, being an alien, and many wayes ſubiect to ſuſpition. But ſince the penance of that incredulity lieth euen now heauy on our ſhoulders; the example forethreatning, I know not what repentance: and that we haue the perſonal triall of ſo honourable and ſufficient a Reporter, our own Countriman; let it be farre from vs to condemne our ſelues in that, which ſo worthily we reproue in our predeceſſors; and to let our idle knowledge content it ſelfe with naked contemplation, like a barren wombe in a Monaſtery. We cannot denie that the chiefe commendation of vertue doth conſiſt in action: we truely ſay, that Otium is anima viua ſepultura: we beleeue, that perfect wiſedome in this mobility of all humaine affaires, refuſeth not with any price to purchaſe ſafetie: and we iuſtly do acknowledge that the Caſtilians from barelegged mountainers haue atteined to their greatneſſe by labour & induſtrie. To ſleepe then, becauſe it coſteth nothing; to imbrace the preſent time, becauſe it flattereth vs with deceitfull contentment; and to kiſſe ſecurity, ſaying, What euill happeneth vnto vs? is the plaine high way to a fearefull downfall: from which the Lord in his mercy deliuer vs, and giue vs an vnderſtanding heart, in time to ſee, and to ſeeke that, which belongeth vnto our peace.

De Guiana carmen Epicum.

WHat worke of honour and eternall name,
For all the world t'enuie and vs t'atchieue,
Filles me with furie, and giues armed hands
To my hearts peace, that els would gladly turne
My limmes and euery ſenſe into my thoughts
Rapt with the thirſted action of my mind?
O Clio, Honors Muſe, ſing in my voyce,
Tell the attempt, and prophecie th'exploit
Of his Elsza-conſecrated ſworde,
That in this peacefull charme of Englands ſleepe,
Opens moſt tenderly her aged throte,
Offring to powre freſh youth through all her vaines,
That fleſh of braſſe and ribs of ſteeele retaines.

Riches, and Conqueſt, and Renowme I ſing,
Riches with honour, Conqueſt without blood,

Enough to ſeat the Monarchie of earth,
Like to Ioues Eagle on Elizas hand.
Guiana, whoſe rich feete are mines of golde,
Whoſe forehead knockes againſt the roofe of Starres,
Stands on her tip-toes at faire England looking,
Kiſsing her hand, bowing her mightie breaſt,
And euery ſigne of all ſubmiſsion making,
To be her ſiſter, and the daughter both
Of our moſt ſacred Maide: whoſe barrenneſſe
Is the true fruite of vertue, that may get,
Beare and bring forth anew in all perfection,
What heretofore ſauage corruption held
In barbarous Chaos; and in this affaire
Become her father, mother, and her heire.

Then moſt admired Soueraigne, let your breath
Goe foorth vpon the waters, and create
A golden world in this our yron age,
And be the proſperous forewind to a Fleete,
That ſeconding your laſt, may goe before it
In all ſucceſſe of profite and renowme:
Doubt not but your election was diuine,
(Aſwell by Fate as your high iudgement ordred)
To raiſe him with choiſe Bounties, that could adde
Height to his height; and like a liberall vine,
Not onely beare his vertuous fruite aloft,
Free from the Preſſe of ſquint-eyd Enuies feete,
But decke his gracious Proppe with golden bunches,
And ſhroude it with broad leaues of Rule oregrowne
From all blacke tempeſts of inuaſion.

Thoſe Conqueſts that like generall earthquakes ſhooke
The ſolid world, and made it fall before them,
Built all their braue attempts on weaker grounds,
And leſſe perſwaſiue likelihoods then this;
Nor was there euer princely Fount ſo long
Powr'd forth a ſea of Rule with ſo free courſe,
And ſuch aſcending Maieſtie as you:
Then be not like a rough and violent wind,
That in the morning rends the Forreſts downe,
Shoues vp the ſeas to heauen, makes earth to tremble,
And toombes his waſtfull brauery in the Euen:
But as a riuer from a mountaine running,
The further he extends, the greater growes,
And by his thriftie race ſtrengthens his ſtreame,
Euen to ioyne battell with th'imperious ſea
Diſdayning his repulſe, and in deſpight
Of his proud furie, mixeth with his maine,
Taking on him his titles and commandes:
So let thy ſoueraigne Empire be encreaſt,
And with Iberian Neptune part the ſtake,
Whoſe Trident he the triple world would make.

You then that would be wiſe in Wiſdomes ſpight,
Directing with diſcredite of direction,
And hunt for honour, hunting him to death.
With whom before you will inherite gold,

You will looſe golde, for which you looſe your ſoules;
You that chuſe nought for right, but certaintie,
And feare that valour will get onely blowes,
Placing your faith in Incredulitie.
Sit till you ſee a wonder, Vertue rich:
Till Honour hauing golde, rob golde of honour,
Till as men hate deſert that getteth nought,
They loath all getting that deſerues not ought;
And vſe you gold-made men as dregges of men;
And till your poyſoned ſoules, like Spiders lurking
In ſluttiſh chinckes, in myſtes of Cobwebs hide
Your foggie bodies, and your dunghill pride.

O Incredulitie, the wit of Fooles,
That ſlouenly will ſpit on all things faire,
The Cowards caſtle, and the Sluggards cradle
How eaſie t'is to be an Infidel?

But you Patrician Spirites that refine
Your fleſh to fire, and iſſue like a flame
On braue indeuours, knowing that in them
The tract of heauen in morne-like glory opens,
That know you cannot be the Kings of earth,
(Claiming the Rights of your creation)
And let the Mynes of earth be Kings of you;
That are ſo farre from doubting likely drifts,
That in things hardeſt y'are moſt confident:
You that know death liues, where power liues vnuſde,
Ioying to ſhine in waues that burie you,
And ſo make way for life euen through your graues;
That will not be content like horſe to hold
A thread-bare beaten way to home affaires:
But where the ſea in enuie of your reigne,
Cloſeth her wombe, as faſt as t'is diſcloſde,
That ſhe like Auarice might ſwallow all,
And let none find right paſſage through her rage:
There your wiſe ſoules as ſwift as Eurus lead
Your Bodies through, to profit and renowne,
And ſkorne to let your bodies choke your ſoules,
In the rude breath and priſoned life of beaſtes:
You that herein renounce the courſe of earth,
And lift your eyes for guidance to the ſtarres,
That liue not for your ſelues, but to poſſeſſe
Your honour'd countrey of a generall ſtore;
In pitie of the ſpoyle rude ſelfe-loue makes,
Of them whoſe liues and yours one ayre doth feede,
One ſoile doeth nouriſh, and one ſtrength combine;
You that are bleſt with ſence of all things noble,
In this attempt your compleat woorthes redouble.

But how is Nature at her heart corrupted,
(I meane euen in her moſt ennobled birth)
How in exceſſe of Sence is Sence bereft her!
That her moſt lightening-like effects of luſt
Wound through her fleſh, her ſoule, her fleſh vnwounded;
And ſhe muſt neede incitements to her good,
Euen from that part ſhe hurtes! O how moſt like
Art thou (heroike Autor of this Act)

To this wrong'd ſoule of Nature, that ſuſtainſt
Paine, charge, and perill for thy countreys good,
And ſhe much like a bodie numb'd with ſurfeits,
Feeles not thy gentle applications
For the health, vſe, and honour of her powers!
Yet ſhall my verſe through all her eaſe-lockt eares
Trumpet the Nobleſſe of thy high intent:
And if it cannot into act proceed,
The fault and bitter penance of the fault
Make red ſome others eyes with penitence,
For thine are cleare; and what more nimble ſpirits,
Apter to byte at ſuch vnhooked baytes,
Gaine by our loſſe; that muſt we needs confeſſe
Thy princely valure would haue purchaſt vs.
Which ſhall be fame eternall to thy name,
Though thy contentment in thy graue deſires,
Of our aduancement, faile deſeru'd effect.
O how I feare thy glory which I loue,
Leaſt it ſhould dearely grow by our decreaſe.
Natures that ſticke in golden-graueld ſprings,
In mucke-pits cannot ſcape their ſwallowings.

But we ſhall foorth I know; Golde is our Fate,
Which all our actes doth faſhion and create.

Then in the Theſpiads bright Propheticke Fount,
Me thinkes I ſee our Liege riſe from her throne,
Her eares and thoughts in ſteepe amaze erected,
At the moſt rare endeuour of her power.
And now ſhe bleſſeth with her woonted Graces
Th'induſtrious Knight, the ſoule of this exploit,
Diſmiſſing him to conuoy of his ſtarres.
And now for loue and honour of his woorth,
Our twiſe-borne Nobles bring him Bridegroome-like,
That is eſpouſde for vertue to his loue
With feaſts and muſicke, rauiſhing the aire,
To his Argolian Fleet, where round about
His bating Colours Engliſh valure ſwarmes
In haſte, as if Guianian Orenoque
With his Fell waters fell vpon our ſhore.
And now a wind as forward as their ſpirits,
Sets their glad feet on ſmooth Guianas breaſt,
Where (as if ech man were an Orpheus)
A world of Sauages fall tame before them,
Storing their theft-free treaſuries with golde,
And there doth plentie crowne their wealthie fields,
There Learning eates no more his thriftleſſe bookes,
Nor Valure Eſtridge-like his yron armes.
There Beautie is no ſtrumpet for her wants,
Nor Gallique humours putrifie her blood:
But all our Youth take Hymens lights in hand,
And fill eche roofe with honor'd progenie.
There makes Societie Adamantine chaines,
And ioyns their hearts with wealth, whom wealth diſioin'd.
There healthfull Recreations ſtrow their meades,
And make their manſions daunce with neighbourhood,
That here were drown'd in churliſh Auarice.
And there do Pallaces and temples riſe

Out of the earth, and kiſſe th'enamored skies,
Where new Britannia humblie kneeles to heauen,
The world to her, and, both at her bleſt feet,
In whom the Circles of all Empire meete.

The ſecond voyage to Guiana.

They fall with the Canary Iſles.

Cape Verde.

Munday the 26. of January, in the yeere of our Lord 1596. we departed from Portland road, in the Darling of London, hauing in company the Diſcouerer, a ſmall pinneſſe, whom we loſt at ſea, in foule weather, the Thurſday next following. Friday the 13. of February, wee fell with the Canarie Iſlands, where we expected our pinneſſe, according to our appoyntment, ſeuen or eight dayes. Here we tooke two boats, the one a paſſenger, we bulged, the other wee towed at our ſhippe ſterne, ſteering Southſouthweſt for the Iſlands of Cape Verde. Therehence we ſet ſaile the 28. of Februarie, keeping a Weſtſouthweſt courſe. In this paſſage wee found very ſmooth ſeas, faire weather, and ſteddie winds, blowing ordinarily betweene the Eaſt and Northeaſt poynts. Neere 30. leagues from theſe Iſlands, wee came into a growne ſea, the ſwollen waters making a ſtrange noiſe & hurtling together, as if it might be two ſtrong currents encountring ech other. The 12. of March wee ſounded, and had ſandie ground in 47. fathome. At midnight in twelue fathom wee came to an anker, the ground ſandie oze. Sunday the 14. towards night, about ſome ſixe leagues from the ſhore, wee deſcried a low land in the bottome of a Bay. From the 9. of March vntill this time, we kept for the moſt part a Southſouthweſt courſe. The water in this place is ſmooth, but muddie, and the colour red or tawny. From the Weſtermoſt moſt of the Cape Verde-Iſlands vnto this Bay I doe eſtimate the diſtance to be neere 550 leagues. It ſeemed to moſt of our ſea-men, to be the very banke of a ſhoald vpon a lee-ſhore: the rather becauſe without it, in the cleane greene ſea wee had but 7. fathome depth: but after by proofe finding that there is no ſudden alteration in any part of the coaſt, and that the ſea is ſmootheſt neere the land, we alwayes at night ſought to anker in three or foure fathome. And doubtleſſe as the hand of God is woonderfull in all his workes: ſo herein his mercifull prouidence is moſt admirable, that vpon a lee-ſhore ſubiect vnto a perpetuall Eaſterly gale, neither much winde can endanger ſhipping, by reaſon that the foule heauie water is not capable of vehement motion, and the ſoft light oaze, if they touch, cannot bruiſe them: nor is there any ieopardie in beeing wind-bound, or imbayed: for the moſt forcible windes make the greateſt flood-tides, whereby the freſhets when they take their ordinarie courſe of ebbe, doe grow ſtrong and ſwift, ſetting directly off to ſea againſt the wind. Wee by turning went cleere of all Bayes: howbeit in this caſe, as alſo in the riuers, the vſe of a droue ſayle ſeemeth a good and readie helpe. The firſt place wherein wee ankered, was in the mouth of Arrowari, a faire and great riuer. It ſtandeth in one degree and fourtie minutes: for we fell ſo farre to the Southwardes by your lordſhips direction. The barre without hath at the leaſt three fathome, at the ſhoaldeſt place, when it is lowe ebbe. The depth within is eight and tenne fathome. The water alwayes brackiſh. We found not any inhabitants in this place neere the ſea coaſt. I omit here to recite the names of the nations that are borderers, their townes, Captaines and commodities that their countreys doe yeelde, as alſo the ſoundings, tydes, and how the coaſt lyeth &c. thinking it fitteſt to reduce theſe diſioyned and ſcattered remembrances to one place. As wee paſſed we alwayes kept the ſhore within viewe and ſtopped the floods, ſtill ankering at night in three or foure fathome. When we came to the North headland of this Bay (which wee named Cape Cecyl) we ſawe two high mountaines like two Iſlands, but they ioyne with the mayne. In this tract lying Northnorthweſt neere 60. leagues, there fall into the ſea theſe ſeuerall great riuers, Arrowari, Iwaripoco, Maipari, Coanawini, Caipurogh. Wee ankered in two fathome not farre from theſe hilles, and filled all our caske with freſh water by the ſhippe ſide, for in the ſea thirtie miles from the mouth of any riuer it is freſh and good. This ſecond Bay extendeth it ſelfe aboue thirtie leagues to the Weſtward, and containeth within it theſe riuers Arcooa, Wiapoco, Wanari, Caparwacka, Cawo, Caian, Wia, Macuria, Cawroor, Curaſſawini. Here leauing the ſhip at anker, I tooke into the boate Iohn Prouoſt, my Indian Interpreter, Iohn Linſey, and eight or nine others, intending to ſearch ſome of theſe riuers, and to ſeeke ſpeech with the Indians. In Wiapoco, at the foote of the Eaſtermoſt mountaine, where the riuer falleth into the ſea, wee found twentie or thirtie houſes, but not inhabited. Wee ſtayed there but one night. Wanari we ouerpaſſed, becauſe the entrance is rockie and not deepe. In Caperwacka we ſailed ſome fourtie miles, but could ſee no Indian. At one of their portes vnder the ſide of a hill, wee tooke in ſo much Braſill wood as our boate could carrie. Amongſt other trees we cut downe one for an example, which I do verily beleeue to be the ſame ſort of ſinamon, which is found in the ſtreights of Magellan. From Caperwacka wee paſſed to Cawo, and there met with a Canoa, wherein were two Indians. It was long time before wee could procure them to come neere vs, for they doubted leaſt wee were Spaniſh. When my interpreter had perſwaded them the contrarie, and that wee came from England, they without farther ſpeech or delay, brought vs to Wareo their Captaine, who entertained vs moſt friendly, and then at large declared vnto vs, that hee was lately chaſed by the Spaniards from Moruga, one of the neighbour riuers to Raleana, or Orenoque: and that hauing burnt his owne houſes, and deſtroyed his fruites and gardens, hee had left his countrey and townes to bee poſſeſſed by the Arwaccas, who are a vagabound nation of Indians, which finding no certaine place of abode of their owne, doe for the moſt part ſerue and follow the Spanyards. Hee ſhewed me that he was of the nation of the Iaos, who are a mightie people, and of a late time were Lords of all the ſea coaſt ſo farre as Trinidad, which they likewiſe poſſeſſed. Howbeit, that with a generall conſent, when the Spanyards firſt began to borrow ſome of their wiues, they all agreed to change their habitation, and doe now liue vnited for the moſt part towards the riuer of Amazones. But the eſpeciall cauſe of his preſent remooue was, becauſe two or three yeeres paſt, twentie Spaniards came to his towne, and ſought to take his beſt wife from him: but before they carried her away, hee at time and place of aduantage killed halfe of them: the reſt fledde, moſt of them ſore hurt. Now in this caſe hee thought it beſt to dwell farre ynough from them. Your Indian pilot Ferdinando, who conducted you by Amana, and now abideth neere the head of Deſſekebe, is one of this mans ſubiects: By whom (as it may ſeeme) hee hath taken good notice of our princeſſe and countrey. For hee deſcended more particularly to inquire what forces were come with vs, aſſuring me of the Spaniards beeing in Trinidad, and that the Indians our friendes betwixt hope and feare, haue earneſtly expected our returne from England theſe foure or fiue moneths. When I had anſwered him, that at our departure we left no Spaniards aliue to annoy them; that we now came only to diſcouer, and trade with them; and that if her Maieſtie ſhould haue ſent a power of men, where no enemie was to reſiſt, the Indians might perhaps imagine, that wee came rather to inuade, then to defend them: He replied, that this courſe very wel ſorted with the report which they had heard of our Princeſſe iuſtice, rare graces, and vertues: the fame of whoſe power in beeing able to vanquiſh the Spaniards, and ſingular goodneſſe in vndertaking to ſuccour and defend the afflicted Indians, was now ſo generall, that the nations farre and neere were all agreed to ioyne with vs, and by all meanes poſſible to aſſiſt vs in expelling and rooting out the Spaniards from all parts of the land: and that we were deceiued, if wee thought this countrey not large ynough to receiue vs, without moleſtation or intruſion vpon the Indians, who wanted not choiſe of dwelling places, if they forſooke one to liue in another: but ſtoode in neede of our preſence at all times to ayde them, and maintaine their libertie, which to them is deerer then land or liuing. He then farther deſired, that he with his people might haue our fauour againſt the Arwaccas, who not being content to enioy their groundes and houſes, had taken from them many of their wiues and children, the beſt of whoſe fortune was, if they liued, to liue in perpetuall ſlauerie vnder the Spaniards. Wee put him in good hope and comfort thereof. And hee to deſerue ſome part of this friendſhip, commended vnto vs an elderly man to be our Pilote in bringing vs to Raleana. When we were ready to depart, he demanded whether we wanted any Vrapo, which is the wood, that is vſually carried from theſe parts to Trinidad in Canoas, and is there ſold to the French for trade: he offered, if we would bring our ſhip neere his port, to put in her lading thereof. But becauſe moſt of our caſke was not preſt-bound, and in making ſtowage-way to remooue it, would haue bene the loſſe of our Sider and other drinke; I therefore referred the taking of any quantity to fitter opportunitie: thinking it ſufficient at this time, to haue only my boats lading thereof: which afterwards in extremitie of foule weather, before we could get aboord our ſhip, wee were inforced in a darke night to heaue all ouerboord: thinking our ſelues happy, to haue recouered thither at ſeuen dayes ende, with ſafetie of life onely. All which time wee could no where ſet foote on ſhore, but reſted day and night wet and weatherbeaten in our couertleſſe boate, which was ſometimes ready to ſinke vnder vs. For wee had in this place without compariſon more raine, wind, and guſtes, then elſe where at any time. To bee briefe, my men became weake and ſicke, and if wee had ſtayed any longer time out, I doubt whether the greateſt part of vs had euer come aboord againe. I afterwards vnderſtood by my Indian pilot, that this weather is for moſt part of the yeere vſuall, neere the Iſland Oncaiarie, which lyeth North from the riuer Capurwacka ſome ſixe leagues into the ſea: and that they hold opinion how this Iland is kept by ſome euil ſpirit: for they verily beleeue, that to ſleepe in the day time neere it (except it be after much drinke) is preſent death. The only ſeaſon wherein little raine doth fal there, is (as I gathered by their ſpeech, they diuiding al times by their Moones) at our Winter Solſtice. The mother-wind of this coaſt is for the moſt part to the Northward of the Eaſt, except when the Sunne is on this ſide of the Equinoctiall, for then it often veares Southerly, but moſt in the night. This our guid is of the Iaos, who doe al marke themſelues, thereby to bee knowen from other nations after this maner. With the tooth of a ſmall beaſt like a Rat, they race ſome their faces, ſome their bodies, after diuers formes, as if it were with the ſcratch of a pin, the print of which raſure can neuer bee done away againe during life. When he had ſometime conuerſed with our Indians, that went from England with vs, hee became willing to ſee our countrey. His ſufficiencie, truſtineſſe, and knowledge is ſuch, that if the pretended voyage for Guiana doe take place, you ſhall (I doubt not) find him many wayes able to ſteed your Lordſhip in your deſignes and purpoſes. For beſides his preciſe knowledge of all the coaſt, and of the Indian townes and dwellings, he ſpeaketh all their languages, was bred in Guiana, is a ſworne brother to Putima, who ſlewe the Spaniards in their returne from Manoa, can direct vs to many golde mines, and in nothing will vndertake more, then hee aſſuredly will performe.

How the nation of the Iaos marke themſelues, to be knowen from other people.

To the Weſtward this Bay hath many good roads vnder ſmall Iſlands, whereof the greateſt named Gowateri, is inhabited by the Shebaios: and beſides the plenty of foule, fiſh, fruits, wilde porks and deere, which are there to be had, where Caiane falles into the ſea, (for it ſtandeth in the mouthes of Wia and Caiane) it yeeldes ſafe and good harbour in foure and fiue fathome for ſhips of great burthen. On all that coaſt we found not any like it: wee therefore honoured this place by the name of Port Howard. The road vnder Triangle Iſlands, which are the Weſtermoſt from from the reſt and ſtand in fiue degrees, which haue alſo ſtore of fiſh, foule, deere, and Iwanas, is good, but not comparable with this other, where in all windes and weather, ſhippes, though they be many, may all ride ſecurely. The hils and high lands are limits to this bay on ech ſide: for to the Eaſtward beyond it appeare none at all, and to the Weſtward of mount Hobbeigh very few. Where the mountaines faile, there Braſill wood is no farther to bee ſought for: but in all parts cotton, pepper, ſilke, and Balſamum trees doe grow in abundance. The rootes of the herbe Wiapaſſa are here moſt plentifull: I finde them in taſte nothing different from good ginger, and in operation very medicinable againſt the flire and headach. Theſe riuers, as alſo others neerer Raleana, doe all fall out of the plaines of this empire ouer rocks, as the riuer Caroli doeth into Raleana: and in moſt places within the vtmoſt hedge of woods, the land within is plaine, voyd of trees, and beareth ſhort graſſe like Arromaiaries countrey.

Next adioyning vnto theſe, are the riuers Cunauamma, Vracco, Mawari, Mawarparo, Amonna, Marawini, Oncowi, Wiawiami, Aramatappo, Camaiwini, Shurinama, Shurama, Cupanamma, Inana, Guritini, Winitwari, Berbice, Wapari, Maicaiwini, Mahawaica, Wappari, Lemdrare, Deſſekebe, Caopui, Pawrooma, Moruga, Waini, Barima, Amacur, Aratoori, Raleana. From Cape Cecyl to Raleana, the coaſt trendeth two hundred leagues next hand Weſt-northweſt. In this varietie of goodly riuers, Amonna amongſt the reſt powreth himſelfe into the ſea in a large and deepe chanell: his ſwifneſſe ſuffereth no barre, nor refuſeth any ſhipping of what burthen ſoeuer they be: within his mouth for good and hopefull reſpectes is port Burley placed. The inhabitants that dwell Eaſtward, doe neuer paſſe lower then Berbice to trade. Aboue Curitini in the woods they gather great quantities of hony. Farther to the Eaſtward then Deſſekebe, no Spaniard euer trauelled. In which reſpect, and that no ſea-card that I haue ſeene at any time, doth in any ſort neere a truth, deſcribe this coaſt: I thought the libertie of impoſing Engliſh names to certaine places of note, of right to belong vnto our labours; the rather becauſe occaſion thereby offereth it ſelfe gratefully to acknowledge the honour due vnto them that haue beene, and I hope will ſtill continue fauourers of this enterprize. The Indians to ſhew the worthineſſe of Deſſekebe (for it is very large and full of Iſlands in the mouth) doe call it the brother of Orenoque. It lyeth Southerly into the land, and from the mouth of it vnto the head, they paſſe in twentie dayes: then taking their prouiſion they carrie it on their ſhoulders one dayes iourney: afterwards they returne for their Canoas, and beare them likewiſe to the ſide of a lake, which the Iaos call Roponowini, the Charibes, Parime: which is of ſuch bigneſſe, that they know no difference betweene it & the maine ſea. There be infinite numbers of Canoas in this lake, and (as I ſuppoſe) it is no other then that, whereon Manoa ſtandeth: In this riuer, which we now call Deuoritia, the Spaniards doe intend to build them a towne. In Moruga it was, that they hunted Wareo and his people, about halfe a yere ſince. Arromaiarie, who wan ſo great credit by ouerthrowing the Tiuitiuas of Amana, and making free the paſſage of that riuer (but now againe liueth in diſgrace, by reaſon that the Charibes of Guanipa haue killed moſt of his followers, and burnt his townes) was preſent with them, and tooke away many of the women of that place. Arracurri, another Indian of the nation of the Arwaccas inhabiting in Barima, was likewiſe preſent, and conducted the Spaniards to all the Indian dwellings. They were not of Anthonie de Berreo his companie, that followed this chaſe, but were the Spaniards of Margarita, and the Caraccas, with whom * Santiago forſaking his gouernour Berreo, ioyned himſelfe. For which fact he now lyeth in fetters at Trinidad, euery day expecting ſentence of death. The occaſion hereof grew as followeth.

Deſſekebe called The brother of Orenoque.

The great lake whereon Manoa or El Dorado ſtandeth.

In September.

This Spaniard vnderſtandeth the Guianan language, and is reputed a very ſufficient man.

When Berreo, hauing loſt his men, was left with Faſſhardo at Cumana all alone, as forlorne, and neuer likely to compaſſe his intended conqueſt of Guiana: the gouernours of the Caraccas and Margarita conſulting together, ſent with all ſpeede into Spaine, to aduertiſe their king, that Berreo was vtterly vnable to folow this enterpriſe, that he had giuen it ouer, and did now ſoiorne in his old dayes at Faſſhardo his houſe, minding nothing elſe but his ſolace, and recreation. They farther declared, of how great importance this matter was: and that an Engliſh gentleman of ſuch reckoning, as they named your lordſhip to be, hauing bene in Guiana, and vnderſtanding ſo much of the ſtate thereof, and the nations thereunto adioyning, as Topiawarie, being both olde and wiſe, could informe you of, who alſo in confirmation of friendſhip, had giuen you his onely ſonne, to whome the inheritance of the countrey did belong after him: there was no other likelihood, but that you, who aduentured ſo farre, and in ſuch ſort as you did, onely to ſee, and knowe a certainty, would leaue nothing vnattempted to poſſeſſe ſo rich a countrey, and without all doubt would returne preſently. That meane time, you had left this aged Sire aliue, to bee a blocke in their way, to whom after his deceaſe, this enterpriſe by patent did belong, and to bee a weake aduerſarie againſt your ſelfe, whom at all times you knew eaſily how to diſtreſſe: and that therefore it might be behoouefull for his maieſtie to reuoke Berreo his grant, and to vſe their ſeruice, who were readie and willing without any delay to vndertake the charge. Theſe newes being at large amplified and deliuered to the king: Domingo de Vera, Berreo his Camp-maſter, who was ſent into Spaine, fiue moneths before your arriuall at Trinidad, with a ſufficient quantitie of gold gotten out of Guiana, to leuie and furniſh 500. men, hauing gotten knowledge of this practiſe, ſo ſolicited this cauſe in Berreo his behalfe, that preſent order was giuen for the victualling and manning of tenne ſhips to be ſent to Berreo: and farther, this gold bore ſuch waight, that the king commanded other 18. of his ſhips to ſtop at Trinidad, and not to follow their other directions, before they ſaw that place ſecured from enemies.

Berreo ſuppoſing that theſe gouernours in ſending with ſuch ſpeede into Spaine, meant him no good: to approue his care and conſtancie, and that he neuer would yeelde vnder the burthen of his aduerſe fortune; giuing no time or breath to his aduerſaries nor himſelfe; returned forthwith to Carapana his port, onely with fifteene men, being the ſcattered remnant of thoſe whom you lately diſpoſſeſſed of Trinidad. Theſe gouernours followed him, and aſſuring themſelues of preſent imployment from their king, preoccupating the time of their directions to bee returned from Spaine, entered Guiana with their men, with full determination to murther Berreo, and to diſpatch all his company. They indeed killed two or three, but Berreo fledde towardes Caroli, where hee ſtayed hoping for ſuccour from his ſonne Antonie de Ximenes, to come downe the riuer from Nueuo Reyno de Granada. The Margaritanes with their accomplices buſied themſelues, ſome in ſearching the countrey, others in purueying of victuals out of the riuers that doe lie Eaſtward, of which number theſe were, that entred into Moruga with twentie Canoas. Santiago paſſed vp into Topiawaries countrey, and there tooke Francis Sparrowe ſir George Gifford his man priſoner, who with plentie of gold ranſomed his life, and is now abiding in Cumana. This done, they all returned to Trinadad, and beganne to builde their towne there, when vnhappily to their ſmall comfort the eight and twentie ſayles arriued, and tooke Santiago priſoner. The other Actors in this Enterlude vaniſhed, and in Canoas recouered Margarita and Cumana againe. Eighteene of the ſaid ſhips leauing all things in good order, departed from Trinadad to follow their others directions: ten doe yet remaine fortifying at Conquerabia, and expecting our comming.

Francis Sparrow taken priſoner.

This particular relation I had from an Indian, ſeruant to Berreo, that could ſpeake Spaniſh, whom I tooke in the riuer. He is of the nation of the Iaos, and from a child bred vp with Berreo. I gaue him trade to buy him a Canoa to returne into his countrey, and ſo left him glad, that hee had met with vs.

Now the Indians of Moruga being chaſed from their dwellings, doe ſeeke by all meanes poſſible to accord all the nations in one, ſo to inuade the Arwaccas who were guides to the Spaniards, in ſhewing their townes, and betraying them. For they are fully perſwaded, that by driuing theſe Arwaccas, who ſerue the Spaniards (for a great part of this nation doth alſo hate, or not know them) out of their territories, and Trinidad, the Spaniards for want of bread, will bee inforced to ſeeke habitation farther off, or at the leaſt in time conſume and be waſted.

They anker within Raleana, or Orenoque.

The 6. day of Aprill we came to an anker within the mouth of the riuer Raleana, hauing ſpent twentie and three dayes in diſcouerie vpon this coaſt. The chanell of this riuer hath ſixe or ſeuen fathome depth, nine or ten miles off at ſea, the barre lyeth farther out, and at low water hath not full two fathome. It highes not aboue fiue foote, except at a ſpring tyde. Wee ankered in ten fathome the firſt night: the next morning twelue Canoas came vnto vs, furniſhed and prouided of victuals after their maner for the warres. Their Captaines names were Anwara, and Aparwa. Theſe Caſſiques, when the Spaniards made the laſt inrode in thoſe parts, were in the in land amongſt the Iwarewakeri their neighbours, by which occaſion hauing loſt ſome of their wiues (for notwithſtanding their profeſſion of Chriſtianitie, ſome of theſe Spaniards keepe ten or twelue women, thinking themſelues wel and ſurely bleſſed, howſoeuer they liue, if their towne and houſes be religiouſly croſſed) they kept together 30. Canoas, hoping at our comming, which they had now long expected to recouer this loſſe vpon them and the Arwaccas, who in their abſence had done this wrong. They ſhewed me this their purpoſe, & required to be ioyned in league of frindſhip with vs againſt our enemies. When of them I had learned ſo much of the preſent eſtate of the countrey, as they did know: they demanded whether we had brought no more forces with vs, but onely one ſhip: I anſwered them as before I did the others, that wee now came only to trade, not knowing vntil this preſent that any Spaniards were in Guiana; that vpon our returne our whole fleete will haſten to ſet forwardes, and that in the meane time, wee would now viſite our friendes, and helpe them ſo farre as wee could in any thing that wee ſhould finde needefull preſently to bee done. After long diſcourſe (for their chiefe man ſtayed with mee all night) when hee had cauſed mee to ſpit in my right hand, with many other ceremonies which they vſe in confirming friendſhippe, hee went to the ſhoare, and one of his Canoas hee ſent to bring forwardes the other twentie: one other hee cauſed to goe vp the riuer before vs, to bring intelligence. Then calling together the chiefe of his companie, they made ſmall fyers, and ſitting in their Hamacas, or Indian beddes, each one ſorted himſelfe with his companion, recounting amongſt themſelues the worthieſt deedes, and deaths of their Anceſtours, execrating their enemies moſt deſpitefully, and magnifying their friendes with all titles of prayſes and honour, that may bee deuiſed. Thus they ſitte talking, and taking Tabacco ſome two houres, and vntill their pipes bee all ſpent (for by them they meaſure the time of this their ſolemne conference) no man muſt interrupt, or diſturbe them in any ſort: for this is their religion, and prayers, which they now celebrated, keeping a preciſe faſt one whole day, in honour of the great Princes of the North, their Patroneſſe and defender. Their Canoas being made ready, they accompanyed vs, and in their way ſhewed vs, where the ſhoaldes of the riuer doe lye. By this Captaine I learned that Muchikeri is the name of the Countrey where Macureguerai the firſt towne of the Empire of Guiana, that lyeth towardes Raleana, is ſeated in a fayre and exceeding large plaine, belowe the high mountaines, that beare Northweſterly from it, that it is but three dayes iourney diſtant from Carapana his Porte, and that Manoa is but ſixe dayes farther. That they themſelues doe paſſe in three dayes into the Countrey of the Iwarewakeri by the Riuer Amacur, which though it bee not the directeſt, yet it is the readieſt way to Macureguerai, for that which leadeth to Carapana his dwelling, is in ſome places dificult, and mountainous. That a nation of clothed people, called Caſſanari, doe dwell not farre from the place, where the Riuer doeth firſt take the name of Orenoque, and that farre within, they border vpon a Sea of ſalt water, named Parime. That a great Riuer, called Macurwini, paſſeth through their Countrey into Orenoque. That Manoa ſtandeth twentie dayes iourney from the mouth Wiapoco: ſixteene dayes from Barima, thirteene dayes from Amacur, and tenne dayes from Aratoori. That the beſt way vnto it, is not by Macureguerai. That of all others the Charibes that dwell high vp in Orenoque, knowe moſt of the inlande, and of thoſe nations, and they ſpeake no other language, then ſuch as Iohn your Interpreter doeth well vnderſtand. Hee certified mee of the headleſſe men, and that their mouthes in their breaſtes are exceeding wide. The name of their nation in the Charibes language is Chiparemai, and the Guianians call them Ewiapanomos. What I haue heard of a ſorte of people more monſtrous, I omit to mention, becauſe it is no matter of difficultie to get one of them, and the report otherwiſe will appeare fabulous. Laſtly hee tolde mee of an inland Riuer, named Cawrooma, adioyning to Aratoori, and that the Quepyn mountaines, where Carapana dwelleth, are hardly acceſſible. That the Amapagotos haue images of gold of incredible bigneſſe, and great ſtore of vnmanned horſes of the Caracas breed: and they dwell fiue dayes iourney vp the Riuer about Caroli. Wee with our fleete of Canoas were now not farre from Carapanas Port, when our intelligencer returned and informed vs that tenne Spaniardes were lately gone with much trade to Barima, where theſe Indians dwelt, to buy Caſſaui bread; and that within one day two other Canoas of Spaniards were appointed to come by the Riuer Amana, to Carapana his Port.

They haue eminent heads like dogs, and liue all the day time in the ſea, they ſpeake the Charibes language.

Upon this occaſion they tooke counſell, and in the ende deſired to returne to their houſes, leaſt the Spaniardes finding them from home, and imagining that they did purpoſely abſent themſelues, ſhoulde take away their wiues and ſpoyle their dwellings. They farther reſolued if it were poſſible to cut them off: which afterwardes they did performe. For when they were diſperſed in their houſes ſeeking Caſſaui, ſuddenly at one time, in all places they were aſſaulted, and not one of them eſcaped. Carapana, whoſe hand was in laying this plot, ſent vs this newes, as wee returned downe the Riuer. The two other Canoas that came from Trinidad by Amana, notwithſtanding that wee kept a league before the ſhippe with our boates, ſawe the ſhippe before wee had ſight of them, and preſently with all ſpeede went to Berreo to aduertize him of our comming. Hee foorthwith diſpatched two or three meſſengers to Trinidad. One of his Canoas mette with our ſpie, whome the Indians of Barima had left to goe with vs: they rifled him of his victuals, gaue him kniues, and diſmiſſed him.

A ſudden aſſalt of the Spaniards by the Indians.

In eight dayes ſayling ſtill before a winde, wee arriued at Topiawaries Porte, in all which time no Indian that wee knewe came aboord vs. For the time of our returne promiſed at your Lordſhippes departure from thence being expired; they in diſpaire ſeuered themſelues amongſt the other nations. Here the Spaniardes haue ſeated their Rancheria of ſome twentie or thirtie houſes. The high rockie Iſland, that lyeth in the middeſt of the Riuer, againſt the mouth of Caroli, is their Forte or refuge, when they miſdoubt ſafetie in their Towne, or hauing notice of any practiſe againſt them: but now leauing both Towne and Iſland, they ioyned themſelues altogether, and retiring to the mouth of the Riuer Caroli, placed there a ſecret ambuſh, to defend the paſſage to thoſe mines, from whence your Oare and white ſtones were taken the laſt yeere: Wee all not without griefe to ſee our ſelues thus defeated, and our hungry hopes made voyde, were witneſſes of this their remooue. As we road at an ancor within musket ſhot of their Towne, an Indian came vnto vs with leane cheekes, thinne haire, and a ſquint eye, to informe vs that they were very ſtrong, that Berreo his ſonne was with him, that they had but two ſmall Pinniſſes at Trinidad, which they dayly looked for to come vp the Riuer, and laſtly, to view our ſhippe well, and our prouiſion, but eſpecially to learne whether Gualtero, Topiawarie his ſonne were with vs.

This Informers very countenance gaue him to bee ſuſpected, and therefore partlie by threatning, partlie by promiſe of rewarde wee wonne him to confeſſe the trueth. Which hee did, aſſuring vs that Berreo had not full fiftie fiue men with him, whereof twentie came lately from Trinidad, twentie from Nueuo Reyno, and the reſt hee brought with him about ſixe moneths ſince, when hee fledde from Carapana his Porte, and was driuen with his ſmall companie to keepe the aforeſaide Iſland neere Caroli. And that though nowe his number is thus increaſed, yet dareth hee not aduenture at any time to leaue the faſt woodes, and to goe but halfe a league from his holde into the plaines. That ſome fewe of the Arwaccas are abiding with him. That hee dayly looketh for his ſonne from Nueuo Reyno, for his Campe-maſter from Trinidad, and for horſes from the Caraccas. That Topiawarie is dead: the Indians of that coaſt all fledde, and diſperſed, excepting the ſonne of one Curmatoi, and another woman of account, whome the Spaniardes holde priſoners, for conſenting to the death of their nine men, and the holy Fryer in Morekito his time. This Curmatoi is fledde towardes Guanipa, and is a man of ſpeciall note amongſt the Indians. That Iwiakanarie Gualtero his neere kinſman, hath helde the Countrey to his vſe, by his fathers appointment, euer ſince your being in the Riuer. That there are tenne ſhips, and many Spaniardes at Trinidad. That the Indians our friendes did feare, leaſt you with your company were all ſlaine, and your ſhippes ſunke at Cumaná (for ſo the Spaniardes noyſed it amongſt them,) that ſome of Gualtero his friendes with Putijma, were in the mountaines not farre from the hill Aio. And that Berreo had ſent for ſixe peeces of ordinance, which he meant to plant, where they might beſt command the Riuer.

The common lyes of the Spaniardes.

When wee had ſtayed here two dayes, conſidering that where no hope was left of doing good, to abide there in harmes way doing nothing, would be bootleſſe: I reſolued to ſeeke Putijma in the mountaines; and turning downe the Riuer with the force of the ſtreame ſome twentie miles in ſixe houres: the next morning with ten ſhot I went aſhoare, intending if the Indians ſhould thinke themſelues too weake, with our helpe to diſplant the Spaniardes: to ſet ſome of them on worke, for hatchets and kniues to returne vs golde graines, and white ſtones from ſuch places, as they ſhould be directed vnto. When wee came to the place of their vſuall abode; wee ſawe that they lately had bene there, but could ſpeake with none of them. It may be that feare (which is eaſie of beliefe) perſwaded them that we were Spaniards. Gilbert my Pilot here offered to bring vs either to the myne of white ſtones neere Winicapora, or elſe to a gold myne, which Putijma had ſhewed him, being but one dayes iourney ouerland, from the place where we now ſtayed at an ancor. I ſawe farre off the mountaine adioyning to this gold myne, and hauing meaſured their pathes neere the ſame place this laſt yeere, could not iudge it to bee fifteene miles from vs. I doe well remember howe comming that way with Putijma the yeere before, he pointed to this ſame mountaine making ſignes to haue me goe with him thither. I vnderſtood his ſignes and marked the place, but miſtooke his meaning, imagining that he would haue ſhewed mee the ouerfall of the Riuer Curwara from the mountaines. My Indian ſhewed me in what ſort without digging they gather the gold in the ſand of a ſmall riuer, named Macawini, that ſpringeth and falleth from the rockes, where this myne is. And farther tolde me, that hee was with Putijma, at what time Morekito was to be executed by the Spaniardes, and that then the chiefe of Morekito his friends were in conſultation, to ſhewe this myne vnto them if ſo they might redeeme their Captaines life: but vpon better aduiſe, ſuppoſing them in this caſe to bee implacable, and that this might prooue a meanes to looſe not onely their king, but their Countrey alſo: they haue to this day concealed it from them, being of all others the richeſt, and moſt plentifull. The aged ſort to keepe this from common knowledge, haue deuiſed a fable of a dangerous Dragon that haunteth this place and deuoureth all that come neere it. But our Indian, if when we returne, we doe bring ſtore of ſtrong wine (which they loue beyond meaſure) with it will vndertake ſo to charme this Dragon, that he ſhall doe vs no harme.

I, that for this ende came from home, and in this iourney had taken much more paines to leſſe purpoſe, would very gladly from this mountaine haue taken ſo good a proofe to witnes my being in the Countrey: but withall conſidering that not one Indian of our knowne friends came vnto vs: that Don Iuan the couſin of Gualtero, who liueth here a reuolt from the Spaniard, was now in election to bee chiefe commander of all the Indian forces in theſe partes, cannot in pollicie, for Gualtero his ſake, whoſe inheritance hee ſought to vſurpe, bee a faſt friend vnto vs: that the Spaniardes abiding in Winicapora (for there were tenne) might well before wee could doe any thing, and returne, cauſe ſome others of Berreo his men to ioyne with them, in the way to intercept vs: and forethinking withall, that there being no meanes, but our ſelues, to make knowne our diſcouerie, if wee returned not; in our miſfortune the hope of following this voyage would bee buried: but beſides all this, and the reſpect of ſuch ſpyals, as the Spaniardes kept to obſcure our dooings, foreknowing that if the enemie ſhould by our lingring, ſtop our paſſage, which in one or two places of aduantage, fewe of them might eaſilie doe: it would bee a queſtion howe with our ſhippe to get out of the Riuer, except firſt wee could remooue them: I thought it beſt (all other poſſibilities ſet apart) to ſeeke in time to bee free from the hazard of the aforeſaid euill paſſages.

Whileſt wee were ſearching at the ſhoare for the Indians, my Barge tooke a Canoa, with three men in her: the one a ſeruant to Berreo, (as before is mentioned) the other two marchauts of Caſſaui. They had a letter ſent from the Gouernour to bee conueied to Trinidad, which I receiued. There was alſo a great hatchet, and twentie kniues, wherewith this Indian ſeruant ſhould buy a Canoa, and hire Indians to cary her vp the Riuer towardes Nueuo Reyno. This Canoa forſooth with foure other were to bee ſent to bring downe Berreo his ſonne with all his forces, which nowe haue bene, I thinke, full three yeeres in preparing. If fiue ſuch boates bee ſufficient to conuoy him, his men and all their prouiſion: it may ſeeme, hee commeth with no great ſtrength.

The ſmall forces of Ximenez.

This ſeruant, as hee was a man of eſpeciall truſt, and neere Berreo: ſo appeared hee to haue ſome inſight is his proceedings. He ſhewed mee that the Indians, who with theſe kniues ſhould be hired, were to paſſe vp ſo high, as where ſome of the Caſſanari doe dwell in ſmall villages. That Berreo his purpoſe was, when they came thither to leaue them there, and make them officers ouer the other Indians: and in their places ſome of the Caſſanari ſhould returne, who likewiſe ſhould be made Iuſtices and Conſtables ouer them of Guiana: that from Trinidad he meant to remoue moſt of the olde inhabitants, that would be tractable; and interpoſe them amongſt the Caſſanarians of Guiana, and the Guianians of the Caſſanari. That the Arwaccas ſhould wholly poſſeſſe Trinidad, and the riuer ſide of Raleana. That they already were prouided of threeſcore Negros, to worke the mynes in theſe places. And that by this meanes Berreo hoped to keepe theſe ſeuerall nations in mutual enmitie each againſt other, all to ſerue his turne, and neuer to become ſtrong, or likely to ioyne themſelues againſt him. He farther ſhewed me, that Topiawary, ſoone after our departure from the riuer, fledde into the mountaines, carying Hugh Godwyn with him, and leauing a Subſtitute in his Countrey, as aforeſayde: and that the next newes they heard of him was, that hee was dead, and the Engliſh boy eaten by a Tyger. That the Spaniardes beleeue neither the one nor the other. That about the ende of Iune, when the Riuer ſhall bee impaſſable, the tenne ſhippes ſhall depart from Trinidad. And that Berreo euer ſince his comming to Guiana, hath ſpent his time altogether in purueying of victuals, whereof there is ſuch ſcarſitie, by reaſon that the Indians forſaking their houſes, haue not this halfe yeere planted any of their grounds, ſo that the Spaniards are inforced to ſeeke their bread farre off, and content themſelues to liue with litle.

This tranſplanting of Indians is worthy of conſideration.

In ſayling vp the Riuer, wee paſſed by Toparimacko his Port, which in one place is very ſhoalde, the chanell lying cloſe aboord the ſhoare. Wee returned therefore another way by the maine riuer on the South ſide: this branch wee found large, deepe, and without danger. When wee were come neere Carapana his Port, hee ſent fiue or ſixe ſeuerall Canoas, promiſing this day and the next, that hee would come and ſpeake with vs. Thus wee lingred ſixe or ſeuen dayes, but hee came not. In the ende hee ſent one of his aged followers, to certifie vs, that hee was ſicke, olde, and weake: that the wayes neere his dwelling are not eaſie: and that therefore he deſired vs to holde him excuſed for not comming. This olde man dilated vnto vs, that Carapana in hope of our returne, hath euer ſince your Lordſhippes being in that Countrey, kept the mountaines, where the Spaniardes can hardly any way inforce him; that they haue taken from him and his people many of their wiues, becauſe they refuſed to furniſh them weekely with a certaine proportion of bread and victuals: that Don Iuan otherwiſe called Eparacano hath the commandement of all his ſubiects, excepting onely a choiſe guarde of men ſufficient to keepe the place hee nowe dwelleth in. That it repenteth him of his ambition, euer to haue ſought by the Spaniardes meanes, to haue inlarged his Countreys and people. For true it is that from the beginning hee was a Lorde of no other then ordinarie power amongſt them, vntill hee had entered into friendſhippe with Berreo: for then the Indians on all ſides left ſome their habitations, and manie their commanders to become his ſubiectes, that they might haue the priuiledge to trade with the Spaniardes for hatchets and kniues, which are iewels of great price amongſt them: that hee nowe ſawe no other choiſe, but that the Indians muſt, if they will doe well, without farther diſſembling of their neceſſitie, either entertaine vs their friendes, or elſe giue place to the Spaniardes their enemies. For the plentie of golde that is in this Countrey, beeing nowe knowen and diſcouered, there is no poſſibilitie for them to keepe it: on the one ſide they coulde feele no greater miſerie, nor feare more extremitie, then they were ſure to finde, if the Spaniardes preuayled, who perforce doe take all things from them, vſing them as their ſlaues, to runne, to rowe, to bee their guides, to cary their burthens, and that which is worſt of all, to bee content, for ſafetie of their liues, to leaue their women, if a Spaniard chance but to ſet his eye on any of them to fancie her: on the otherſide they could hope for, nor deſire no better ſtate and vſage, then her Maieſties gracious gouernment, and Princely vertues doe promiſe, and aſſure vnto them. For, ſayde he, the other yeere, when wee fledde into the mountaines, and meaſured your doings by the Spaniards in like caſe, we made no other account, but that your Commander being able, as hee was, would doubtleſſe haue perſecuted vs to the vttermoſt, as the onely maintainers and ſupporters of your enemies, and would at the leaſt, if hee could not reach vs, take our Townes, and make vs ranſome our wiues and children: wee found it farre otherwiſe, and that none of your well gouerned companie durſt offer any of vs wrong or violence, no not by ſtealth, when vnknowne they might haue done it. We then beleeuing it to bee true, that your grand Captaine reported of his Princeſſe, tooke this for a good proofe of her royall commandement and wiſedome, that had framed her ſubiectes to ſuch obedience, and of your happineſſe, that inioyed the benefite thereof: that Carapana weighing the good and friendly courſe of our proceedings, doeth humbly craue of her Maieſtie for himſelfe and his people, that with the reſt of the Indians, which wholly depende on her Princely regarde towardes them, hee alſo may inioy her fauourable protection: that hee doeth this, not as a man left vnto himſelfe and forſaken by the Spaniardes, but as one that knoweth their iniuſtice, hateth their cruelties, and taketh it for his beſt choiſe, vtterly to diſclaime their friendſhippe. It may bee pertinent (as ſurely it is a thing worth the noting) to conſider howe this preſident of your moderation and good order, which to vs ſeemeth a matter but of ſmall, and ordinarie reſpect, hath both alienated their heartes altogether from the Spaniard, and ſtirred vp in them true loue and admiration thereof. For as gouernement is the onely bond of common ſocietie: ſo to men lawleſſe, that each one to another are, Omnes hoc iure moleſti, quo fortes: To men, I ſay, that liue in dayly tumultes, feares, doubtes, ſuſpitions, barbarous cruelties, neuer ſleeping ſecure, but alwayes either drunke, or practiſing one anothers death: to ſuch men as theſe bee, who wanting diſcipline, iuſtice and good order to confirme them in a quiet and peaceable courſe of liuing, knowing not where to finde it: the ſence and ſweeteneſſe thereof is as the dewe of Hermon: it is as the Harmonie of a well tuned Inſtrument: to bee briefe, it carieth in it ſelfe not onely a due and worthy commendation; but is auayleable without ſtroke ſtriking to gaine a kingdome. For the Indians in all partes within and neere Guiana, doe offer their ſeruice, and promiſe to prouide victuall, and what elſe their countrey yeeldeth, deſiring onely that ſome force of men may remaine with them, to deliuer them from oppreſſion and tyrannie. And nowe by generall conſent (though hatchets and kniues bee the onely things of requeſt and vſefull vnto them) they haue agreed by no meanes to trade with the Spaniard for any thing.

Farther this old man ſhewed mee, whence moſt of their golde commeth, which is formed in ſo many faſhions: whence their Spleene-ſtones, & others of al ſorts are to be had in plentie: where golde is to bee gathered in the ſandes of their riuers: from what partes the Spaniards, both by trade, & otherwiſe, haue returned much gold. This he vttered with Carapana his conſent (I doubt not) hoping thereby to induce vs to returne againe. For contrarie to their lawe of ſecrecie, which in this caſe they doe all generally obſerue, ſharply puniſhing the breakers thereof, as enemies vnto their natiue Countrey: I found this man no whit ſcrupulous, but very free and liberall of ſpeech in all things.

And becauſe we might knowe, that wee ſhould not want handes or helpe, in this or any other our enterpriſes, if perhaps wee ſhould finde cauſe to paſſe vp to the head of this Riuer: hee declared that the Spaniardes haue no Indians to truſt vnto but ſome of the Arwaccas, which ſince they were not many, could bee but of ſmall force: That the Charibes of Guanipa, the Ciawannas amongſt the Tiuitiuas, the Shebaios, Iaos, Amaipagotos, Caſſipagotos, Purpagotos, Samipagotos, Serowos, Etaiguinams, Caſſamari, with the reſt of the nations farre and neere, were all ready, on what ſide ſoeuer the Spaniards ſhall ſtirre, to fight againſt them: that the Pariagotos, through whoſe countrey they muſt firſt paſſe, are alone ſufficient to encounter them, ſuch is the ſtrength of their countrey, and the valure of the men. The Indians holde opinion, that they are notable ſorcerers, and inuulnerable. In the mountaines where they dwell, white ſtones are found of ſuch hardneſſe, that by no arte or meanes they can bee pierced; they imagine that theſe Pariagotos become inuulneralbe, by eating theſe ſtones. The fable omitted, happily they may prooue good Diamonds.

Then he ſhewed howe the Iwarewakeri haue nouriſhed graſſe in all places, where paſſage is, theſe three yeeres, and that it is at this preſent ſo high, as ſome of the trees; which they meane to burne, ſo ſoone as the Spaniard ſhall bee within danger thereof. Laſtly, hee ſhewed mee that Wariarimagoto the Emperours chiefe Captaine for thoſe partes, hath gathered together many thouſandes of the Epuremei, to keepe the borders of the Empire; and that hee lay now on the South ſide of the mountaines, ſome one dayes iourney or little more from the Spaniard. To be ſhort, hee certified mee, that they all were reſolued not to ſeeke vpon them (for indeede they feare their ſhot) but to defend their owne, and to expect our comming. In the meane time they take opportunities, when they finde any of them ſtraggling or deuided from their ſtrength, by litle and litle to leſſen their number.

Wariarimagoto one of the Emperour of Guiana his chiefe Captaines vp in armes againſt the Spaniardes.

The place where wee were at ancor was but one dayes iourney from Carapana: I therefore made motion to this Captaine to ſtay with two or three of his company aboord the ſhippe, and to cauſe his men to bring mee with my Interpreter to Carapana his dwelling: hee anſwered mee that it were not good ſo to doe, leaſt perhaps ſome Spie might informe the Spaniardes therof, whereby danger would growe to Carapana. For they haue many times vſed many meanes to reconcile him vnto them: but hee from time to time hath dalyed with them, neither profeſſing himſelfe their enemie, nor in ought ſhewing them any friendſhippe. Nowe (ſayde hee) if the Spaniardes ſhall by any meanes come to knowledge, that you haue conferred together, they will take this occaſion to perſecute him with all extremitie, as their open enemie, whom they now neglect, or at the leaſt feare not, as being an harmeleſſe old man. And for this cauſe only hath Carapana forborne to come vnto you.

By this I perceiued, that to ſtay longer for him (though gladly I could haue bene content to ſpend one ſeuenights more to ſpeake with him) would bee purpoſeleſſe. Wherefore hauing aſſured ſo many of the Indians as at any time came vnto vs, of our ſpeedie returne, promiſing them plentie of kniues, beades, and hatchets, if they would reſerue their Caſſaui, and prouide ſtore of their pieces of golde for vs: I deſired this Captaine to bee a meanes that our friends of Trinidad might vnderſtand of our being in the Riuer and that wee meant to relieue them ſo ſoone, as conueniently might bee. Hee promiſed in Carapana his behalfe, that this ſhould not bee forgotten. One of the Captaines of the Cyawannas, who doe now dwell in the Riuer Arawawo, neere Trinidad, vndertooke alſo without fayle to aſcertaine them thereof. I was the more carefull herein, becauſe ſo many ſhips being heere, I doubted leaſt they would take order that no Indian ſhould ſpeake with vs. For ſo indeede it fell out.

This Captaine of the Cyawannas came likewiſe to ioyne with vs, and had prouided fifteene Canoas for that purpoſe. Their dwelling was lately in Macureo, where the Spaniardes one night ſtealing on them, killed twentie of their men, and burnt their houſes, becauſe they refuſed to trade with them for certaine images of golde made with many heades which they had gotten out of Guiana. I ſent a preſent of Yron to Carapana, and then ſet ſayle.

In turning downe the riuer wee ſpent eight dayes. In many places where the chanell lyeth wee found twentie fathome depth: where it is ſholdeſt, wee had two fathome and a halfe, and that but in one or two places. Of the worthineſſe of this Riuer, becauſe I cannot ſay ynough, I will ſpeake nothing. Wee haue preſumed to call it by the name of Raleana, becauſe your ſelfe was the firſt of our nation that euer entred the ſame, and I thinke it nothing inferiour to Amazones, which is beſt knowen by the name of Orellana, the firſt diſcouerer thereof. By turning onely, without helpe of oares to paſſe ſo long away in ſo ſhort a time, againſt the winde, may ſufficiently prooue, that the chanell is very large, good, and likely to ſecond our hopes in all that wee can deſire. Without the mouth of this Riuer, our Pinneſſe, the Diſcouerer, whome wee loſt neere the coaſt of England, came vnto vs. Shee fell with this land ſomewhat to the Southwarde of Cape Cecyl, and had ſpent three weekes and odde dayes in ranging alongſt the coaſt, when ſhee mette with vs. William Downe the Maſter informed mee that they entred, and ſearched theſe foure riuers. In Wiapoco they ſayled ſo farre, vntill the rockes ſtopped their paſſage. In Caiane they went vp one dayes iourney. In Cunanama they found many inhabitantes. Curitini was the laſt Riuer they had beene in. Whence, hauing no other meanes to finde Raleana, they were inforced to borrow a Pilot againſt his will: whom afterwardes I would haue returned with reward to his contentment; but he would not.

A good caueat.

Our Engliſh that to ſteale the firſt bleſſing of an vntraded place, will perhaps ſecretly haſten thither, may bee beholding to mee for this caueat, if they take notice thereof. They may bee aſſured, that this people, as they no way ſought our harme, but vſed our men with all kindneſſe: ſo are they impatient of ſuch a wrong, as to haue any of their people perforce taken from them, and will doubtleſſe ſeeke reuenge. The example of the like practiſe vpon the coaſt of Guinie, in the yeere 1566, and againe at Dominica, where Alderman Wats his ſhippe hardly eſcaped being taken, may ſerue for our warning in like caſe to looke for no good, before they bee ſatiſfied for this iniury.

The iſle of Tabago.

When wee had taken aboorde vs ſuch victuals as were in the Pinneſſe: wee ſet fire in her, (for her Rudder could ſerue her to no longer vſe) and ſtopping the floodes, plyed to windwarde with the ebbe neere the ſhoare, vntill wee were ſixteene leagues to the Eaſtwarde of the Riuers mouth, and then ſtanding off to Sea, wee fell in twentie foure houres ſayling with Punta de Galera the Northeaſtermoſt part of Trinidad. But hauing Tabaco-iſland in ſight, wee firſt went thither. This Iſland is plentifull of all things, and a very good ſoyle. It is not nowe inhabited, becauſe the Charibes of Dominica are euill neighbours vnto it. They of Trinidad haue a meaning and purpoſe to flie thither, when no longer they can keepe Trinidad. Their onely doubt is, that when they are ſeated there, the Spaniard will ſeeke to poſſeſſe it alſo. The Gouernour of Margarita went lately in a Pinneſſe to viewe this Iſland. Gilbert my Pilot who ſometime liued there, noteth it for the beſt and fruitfulleſt ground that hee knoweth.

Moſt dangerous Canibals.

Thence wee returned to Punta de Galera and ancored in tenne fathome vnder the North ſide of the Iſland ſome fiue or ſixe miles from the ſayde point. The flood-tyde ſtriketh alongſt the the coaſt to the Eaſtward very ſtrongly. Wee diſcharged a peece of ordinance, and afterwards went to the ſhoore in our boat: but no Indian came vnto vs. I would haue ſent Iohn of Trinidad to procure ſome of them to ſpeake with vs: but he was altogether vnwilling, alleaging that their dwellings were farre within the mountaines, and that hee knewe no part of that ſide of the Iſland. From this place we ſet ſayle for Santa Lucia, but fell with Granata, which wee found not inhabited. Saint Vincent we hardly recouered, by turning vnder the lee of the iſland. The Tabaco of this place is good: but the Indians being Canibals, promiſing vs ſtore, and delaying vs from day to day, ſought onely opportunitie to betray, take, and eate vs, as lately they had deuoured the whole companie of a French ſhippe. This their treacherie being by one of their ſlaues reuealed, from thenceforth they did all forbeare ,to come vnto vs. To ſit downe on their lowe ſtooles, when they by offering ſuch eaſe, will ſeeme to ſhewe curteſie, abodeth death to ſtrangers, that ſhall truſt them. At Matalino or Martinino we found not any inhabitants. Laſtly, wee came to Dominica, where we could get no good Tabaco. But hauing intelligence of a Spaniſh ſhippe, that was taking in of freſh water, at the Northweſt ſide of the Iſland, wee wayed ancor to ſeeke him. Hee diſcrying vs, ſtole away by night. The Indians of this place haue determined to remoone, and ioyne with them of Guanipa, againſt the Spaniardes, who lately diſpeopled one of their Iſlands, and at our being there one of their Canoas returned from Guanipa, and certified vs, that the tenne Spaniſh ſhippes at Trinidad doe ride, ſome of them at Conquerabia, the reſt at the ſmall Iſlands neere the diſemboging place. Herehence we ſteered North and by Eaſt, taking the directeſt courſe to ſhorten our way homewards.

Thus haue I emptied your purſe, ſpending my time and trauell in following your lordſhips directions for the full diſcouerie of this coaſt, and the riuers thereof. Concerning the not making of a voyage for your priuate profite, I pretend nothing. Sorie I am, that where I ſought no excuſe, by the Spaniardes being there I found my defect remedileſſe. And for mine owne part, I doe proteſt, that if the conſideration of the publique good that may enſue, had not ouerpoyſed all other hopes and deſires: I would rather haue aduentured by ſuch ſmall and weake meanes as I had, to doe well with danger, then to returne onely with ſafetie. Nowe although in a cauſe not doubtfull, my allegation is no way needefull: yet becauſe the weightineſſe thereof, and the expectation of others, ſeemeth of due and right to claime ſomething to bee ſayde by mee, whome your eſpeciall truſt and fauour hath credited and graced with this employment: Pardon it (I beſeech your honour) if, where my lampe had oyle, it borrow light alſo; and my ſpeach, which is altogether vnſauorie, ſeaſon it ſelfe with ſome of the leauen of your owne diſcourſe touching this diſcouerie. The particular relation of ſome certaine things I haue reſerued, as properly belonging to your ſelfe, who onely, as knowing moſt, can make beſt vſe thereof. So much in generall is here touched, as (I hope) may ſerue to refreſh the memorie of this worthie enterpriſe in thoſe whome it may concerne, and teſtifie your care and expence in following the ſame: that in a ſecond age, when in time trueth ſhall haue credite, and men wondering at the riches, and ſtrength of this place (which nature it ſelfe hath maruelouſly fortified, as her chiefe treaſure-houſe) ſhall mourne and ſigh to holde idle cicles, whileſt others reape and gather in this harueſt, it bee not ſayde, that Sir Walter Ralegh was of all men liuing in his dayes, moſt induſtrious in ſeeking, moſt fortunate in attaining to the fulneſſe of an ineſtimable publique good: if, knowing that for enuie and priuate reſpectes, his labours were leſſened, his informations miſtruſted, his proffers not regarded, and the due honour of his deſerts imparted to others; If (I ſay) ſeeing, knowing and bearing all this, hee with patience had perſiſted in ſo good a way in doing his Princeſſe, and countrey ſeruice; and had but perfected his firſt diſcouerie by ſending a ſhippe or two for that purpoſe: for then ſurely all lets and doubts being remooued, and ſo large a kingdome, ſo exceeding rich, ſo plentiful of all things, as this by his diſcourſe appeared to bee, being offered: no deuiſes and vaine ſurmiſes could haue taken place, no illuſions could haue preuailed: it had bene blindneſſe and deafeneſſe in thoſe, that being neere her Maieſtie doe ſpend their dayes in ſeruing the common weale, not to ſee, and knowe in ſo weightie a matter: it had beene malicious obſtinacie, impotencie of minde, and more then treaſon to the common wealth, the matter ſtanding onely vpon acceptance, to ſeeke either to foreſlowe ſo fit an occaſion, or forſake ſo generall a bleſſing. This (if) is nowe cut off through a ſingular and incomparable temper, in ouercomming euill with good.

This your ſeconde diſcouerie hath not onely founde a free and open entrance into Raleana, which the Naturals call Orenoque: but moreouer yeeldeth choyſe of fourtie ſeuerall great riuers (the leſſer I do not reckon) being for the moſt part with ſmall veſſels nauigable for our marchants & others, that do now finde little profit in ſetting forth for repriſall, to exerciſe trade in. To ſuch as ſhall be willing to aduenture in ſearch of them, I could propoſe ſome hope of gold mines, and certaine aſſurance of peeces of made golde, of Spleene-ſtones, Kidney-ſtones, and others of better eſtimate. But becauſe our beleefe ſeemeth to bee mated in theſe greater matters, and a certaintie of ſmaller profits is the readieſt inducement to quicken our weake hopes; I not going ſo farre as mine owne eyes might warrant mee, doe onely promiſe in the aforeſayd riuers Braſil-wood, honey, cotton, Balſamum, and drugs to helpe to defray charges: and further, becauſe without a beginning there can bee no continuance of theſe benefites vnto our countrey to any that ſhall be the firſt vndertakers hereof, I am gladly content to giue ſuch light and knowledge, as by conference with the Indians I haue attained vnto.

My ſelfe, and the remaine of my fewe yeeres, I haue bequeathed wholly to Raleana, and all my thoughts liue onely in that action. The proſecuting whereof is in it ſelfe iuſt, profitable, and neceſſarie. Iuſt, becauſe it is intended for the defence of harmeleſſe people, who fearing thralldome and oppreſſion, deſire to protect themſelues and their countrey vnder her Maieſties tuition: Profitable, as may bee gathered not onely by many Spaniſh letters intercepted, but alſo by the proofes mentioned in the diſcourſe of the firſt diſcouerie, and ſince that, by the Indians owne voluntarie relations: and laſtly, by the prouiſion that the Spaniards doe make to acquite vs thereof. Neceſſarie it is, as being the onely helpe to put a bitte in the mouth of the vnbrideled Spaniard; the onely way to enter into his treaſurie of Nueuo Reyno, and Peru; the onely meanes to animate the wronged Indians, with our aſſiſtance to ſeeke reuenge for the extreme murthers and cruelties, which they haue endured, and to ruinate his naked cities in all thoſe parts of the Inland, whoſe foundations haue beene layd in the blood of their parents and anceſters.

The forces that the Spaniard hath already ſent to Trinidad, to fortifie there, and keepe the paſſage of this riuer, are an euident argument that the king feareth and doubteth the ſequele of this diſcouerie. For can it bee a ſmall matter? Or hath hee ſo waſte imployment for his men and ſhipping, that vpon no ground, hee would ſend eight and twentie ſhippes, to keepe vs onely from Tabacco? For what els that good is can Trinidad yeelde vs? No doubtleſſe, if the returne of Berreo his Campe-maſter with tenne of theſe ſhippes bee compared with precedent aduertiſements concerning him: it will appeare more then probable, that the Guiana-golde waged theſe men and ſhipping: and that they are nowe more carefull to obtaine this place, then to keepe others, which they haue already gotten, which note, except in matters of extraordinarie account, is not incident to their policie and proceedings. Againe, it cannot bee thought that either it was ſenſeleſſe madneſſe in the gouernours of Margarita, and the Caracas, to bring their ſtates and liues in queſtion, by ſeeking, contrarie to their kings order, to enter Guiana,, and kill Berreo with his followers: or elſe the abundance of pearle in Magarita, and the golde mines in the Caracas, ſeeming matters of ſmall account: Guiana onely was in their iudgement, rich, plentifull, and able of it ſelfe to redeeme their treſpaſſe and offence, howe great ſoeuer it ſhould bee.

The ſundry attemptes and ouerthrowes of the Spaniardes being men of power, and honourable place, in labouring threeſcore and three yeeres and vpwardes, to inlarge the kingdome of Spaine with this mightie and great empire, doe plainely ſhewe, that they long time ſought a path, where in one moneth a high way was found: that the loſſe of their liues witneſſeth their deſires, and the worthineſſe of the thing, where to vs the eaſineſſe of obteining diſcrediteth the greatnes of the attempt: and that if now at the laſt they doe preuaile, they muſt holde by tyrannie that which they get by the ſword; where then our returne nothing by the Indians is more wiſhed for, nothing expected more earneſtly.

Thoſe obiections, which haue beene made by many ſeeming wiſe, and the impediments likely to ariſe, as they haue ſuppoſed, are beſt anſwered by the vnreproued witneſſe of thoſe mens actions. Some haue termed theſe diſcoueries fables, and fantaſies, as if there had beene no ſuch land or territorie: others allowing both of the place, and that ſuch a kingdome or countrey is diſcouered, make concluſion, that if it had beene ſo rich as wee haue ſuppoſed, that no doubt the king of Spaine would by this time haue poſſeſſed it. But if they conſider that the Spaniſh nation hath already conquered the two empires of Mexico and Peru, with ſo many other kingdoms and prouinces: wee may very well anſwere, that his power is not infinite, and that hee hath done well for the time. And yet it is manifeſt, that this very empire hath beene by all thoſe ſeuerall Spaniardes (the catalogue of whoſe names is by it ſelfe hereunto annexed) at ſundry times vndertaken, and neuer perfourmed. Howbeit, the world hath reaſon to admire their conſtancie, and their great labours, and wee may well bluſh at our owne idle, deſpairefull, and loytering diſpoſitions, that can finde abilitie in another barren, and ſterued nation, to poſſeſſe ſo much of the worlde, and can doe nothing but frame arguments againſt our ſelues, as vnfit and powerleſſe to poſſeſſe one prouince already diſcouered, and of which our nation hath aſſurance of the peoples loue, and that all the Chieftaines and principals haue vowed their obedience to her Maieſtie; the nauigation being withall ſo ſhort, dangerleſſe, and free from infectious ſickeneſſe. If doubt of perils might moderate the mindes of our men once mooued with ſteadfaſt hope, that golde ſhall bee the reward of their trauels: it may eaſily bee perceiued, that all thoſe lets and hinderances that can any way bee alleaged, or wreſted ſo much, as but to touch vs, doe deepely and neerely concerne the Spaniſh king, and in a maner violently withold him from that, which hee notwithſtanding carrieth with ſucceſſe, whileſt wee out of ſeaſon do affect the bare ſtile, to be named men ſtayed and circumſpect in our proceedings. It is reported, that Calanus the Indian threw downe before Alexander the great, a drie ſeare peece of leather, & then put his foot on one of the endes of it: the leather being trode downe at that ſide, roſe on all parts elſe. By this the wiſe man did ſhewe vnto him a figure and ſimilitude of his kingdome, which being exceeding large, muſt of neceſſitie in all other parts, excepting the place of the kings reſidence, be alwayes full of ſtirs, tumults and inſurrections. The end afterwards confirmed, that this empire conſiſting of ſundry nations, could not keepe it ſelfe from diſſolution. No potentate liuing hath, or can haue ſo faithfull and incorrupt counſellers, as bee the examples and hiſtories of forepaſſed times and ages. Wee may therefore bee bolde to thinke that the Gouernours of the Spaniſh affaires ſhould minde it, that their kings luſtfull deſire, and ambitious thoughts to eſtabliſh ouer all Europe one lawe, one Lord, one religion, are built and erected on a dangerous vngrounded reſolution: Conſidering that many of the neighbour kingdomes being of equall force in men, or greater then hee can make, are ſetled in a long continued eſtate, are entire within themſelues, and hate to heare the voyce of a ſtranger. It is not vnlikely that they in this caſe ſhould lay before their king the fatall deſtinies of many worthies, that haue beene conſtrained for wante of ſufficient numbers of their naturall ſubiects, after many yeeres ſpent in the warres, to retire to their owne countreys, and haue beene glad peaceably to holde their owne Signiories at home, reſigning all that vnto others, which they haue gotten abroad by hard aduenture, and much effuſion of blood. The King of Spaine cannot but diſcerne, that his ſpacious empires and kingdomes being ſo many, and ſo farre diuided one from another, are like the members of a monſtrous bodie, tyed together with cables onely. For take away the traffique of vnneceſſarie commodities tranſported out of Spaine: thoſe huge countreys of the Indies hauing no common linke of affinitie, lawe, language, or religion, and being of themſelues able to maintaine themſelues without forreine commerce, are not ſo ſimple, as not to knowe their owne ſtrength, and to finde, that they doe rather poſſeſſe Spaniardes, then that they are poſſeſſed by them. Hee cannot bee ignorant that Spaine it ſelfe is on all ſides enuironed with many puiſſant enemies, mightie and great princes, who knowing it to bee rich without men, confident without reaſon, proud and aduenturous without meanes ſufficient; may happily confederate to chaſtiſe him, as an inſolent intruder, and diſturber of all quietneſſe; and going no further then Spaine it ſelfe, may euen there ſhake the foundation of his long contriued deuiſes, and in one acte redeeme the time, controll his aſpiring humor, and breake the bandes in ſunder that import ſeruitude, and ſubuerſion to all the dominions of Chriſtendome. Againe, his counſell may well informe him, that to diſpeople and diſable himſelfe at home, in hope to obtaine Guiana, being a countrey ſtrong of it ſelfe, and defended with infinite multitudes of Indian enemies, being rich, and by the inhabitants offered vnto the Engliſh: his contempt towardes vs would ſeeme ſo intollerable and deſpightfull, as might bee ſufficient to prouoke vs, though otherwiſe wee had no ſuch inclination; if hee vnprouided of able helpes to effect it, ſhould reſt himſelfe on a careleſſe preſumption, that wee cannot, wee dare not, wee will not ſtirre in a matter that promiſeth vs ſo great benefite, and may ſo highly offend him. Hee may bee perſwaded, that to leaue no other ſuccour or ſafetie to his nakedneſſe, but the olde ſtale practiſe of ſpreading rumours, and giuing out falſe intelligences of preparations to inuade England, thereby to keepe vs at home; or els of hyring and ſuborning ſome Machauellian vnder hande by ſecret conueyance, to ſtop the courſe of our proceedings; or laſtly, of procuring ſome wilde outlaw to diſquiet our tranquillitie; is but a poore, weake, and vncertaine ſtay to vpholde his eſtate by. And yet ſetting ſuch like driftes aſide: what can bee imagined likely to hinder vs from preuailing in Guiana, rather then him, whoſe diſaduantage is to bee encombred with the ſelfe ſame, and manifolde more impediments, then can any way bee ſuppoſed, with good cauſe to impeach, or diuorce vs frõ ſo profitable an attempt? All this notwithſtanding, if the Spaniſh king not being able to diſſemble his deſire, or beare the loſſe of this one kingdome; putting himſelfe out of his ſtrength at home, and expoſing his people to the hazard of all caſualties abroad, bee reſolued, whatſoeuer ſhall happen, not to relinquiſh Guiana, but to keepe this one yron more in the fire, on no other aſſurance, but a peremptorie diſdaine of preuention: If hee appeare ſo eagerly bent for Guiana, as if it were enacted for a lawe amongſt themſelues, Viis & modis to thruſt for it, and not to heare, conceiue, or beleeue any thing, that may diſſwade or deterre from the conqueſt thereof: it then appertaineth vnto vs, not to inforce thoſe obiections againſt our ſelues, which hee with leſſe reaſon reiecteth as friuolous; ſince by howe much the more earneſt hee is in following this purpoſe, by ſo much the leſſe cauſe haue wee to bee diuerted from it. To ſuch as ſhall bee willing further to wade in this argument; for breuities ſake, I doe propoſe onely this bare aſſertion: that England and Guiana conioyned, are ſtronger, and more eaſily defended, then if England alone ſhould repoſe her ſelfe on her owne force, and powerfulneſſe. The reaſons that might bee inferred to prooue this neede no rationall diſcourſe: they are all intimated in the onely example of Spaine it ſelfe; which without the Indies is but a purſe without money, or a painted ſheath without a dagger. In ſumme: it ſeemeth vnto me, that whereas the difficultie of performing this enterpriſe hath bene produced for a diſcouragement: it were a dull conceite of ſtrange weakenes in our ſelues, to diſtruſt our own power ſo much, or at leaſt, our owne hearts and courages; as valewing the Spaniſh nation to be omnipotent; or yeelding that the poore Portugal hath that maſtering ſpirit and conquering induſtrie, aboue vs; as to bee able to ſeate himſelfe amongſt the many mightie princes of the Eaſt Indies, to frontire China, to holde in ſubiection The Philippinas, Zeilan, Calecut, Goa, Ormus, Mozambique, and the reſt; the nauigation being ſo tedious and full of perill: to ſuffer our ſelues to bee put backe for worthleſſe cyphers, out of place, without account. All which Regions being nowe alſo by the late conqueſt of Portugall, entituled to the Spaniſh king: to whom the Colonies of thoſe parts doe yet generally refuſe to ſweare fealtie and allegiance: and the care depending on him, not onely in gouerning them in the Eaſt, ſo farre off; but alſo of ordering and ſtrengthening of thoſe diſunited, ſcattered, & ill guarded empires and prouinces in the Weſt: It might very well bee alleaged to the ſayde Spaniſh king, that it were more wiſedome for him to aſſure and fortifie ſome part of thoſe already gotten, then to begin the conqueſt of Guiana, ſo farre ſeparate from the reſt of his Indies: in which hee hath had ſo many miſfortunes, and againſt whom the naturall people are ſo impetuouſly bent, and oppoſed: were it not, that it exceedeth all the reſt in abundance of gold, and other riches. The caſe then ſo ſtanding, is it not meere wretchedneſſe in vs, to ſpend our time, breake our ſleepe, and waſte our braines, in contriuing a cauilling falſe title to defraude a neighbour of halfe an acre of lande: whereas here whole ſhires of fruitfull rich grounds, lying now waſte for want of people, do proſtitute themſelues vnto vs, like a faire and beautifull woman, in the pride and floure of deſired yeeres?

If wee doe but conſider, howe vnhappily Berreo his affaires, with his aſſiſtants, haue of late yeeres, in our owne knowledge ſucceeded: who can ſay, if the hand of the Almighty be not againſt them, and that hee hath a worke in this place, in ſtead of Papiſtrie, to make the ſincere light of his Goſpell to ſhine on this people? The effecting whereof ſhall bee a royall crowne of euerlaſting remembrance to all other bleſſings, that from the beginning the Lorde hath plentifully powred on our dread Soueraigne, in an eminent and ſupreme degree of all perfection. If the Caſtilians, pretending a religious care of planting Chriſtianitie in thoſe partes, haue in their doings preached nought els but auarice, rapine, blood, death, and deſtruction to thoſe naked, & ſheeplike creatures of God; erecting ſtatues and trophees of victorie vnto themſelues, in the ſlaughters of millions of innocents: doeth not the crie of the poore ſuccourleſſe aſcend vnto the heauens? Hath God forgotten to bee gracious to the workemanſhip of his owne hands? Or ſhall not his iudgements in a day of viſitation by the miniſterie of his choſen ſeruant, come on theſe bloodthirſtie butchers, like raine into a fleece of wooll? Aliquando manifeſta; aliquando occulta; ſemper iuſta ſunt Dei iudicia.

Her Maieſtie.

To leaue this digreſſion, It is fit onely for a prince to begin, and ende this worke: the maintenance and ordering thereof requireth ſoueraigne power, authoritie and commaundement. The riuer of Raleana giueth open and free paſſage, any prouiſion that the Spaniard can make to the contrary notwithſtanding, (for once yeerely the landes neere the riuer be all drowned) to conuey men, horſe, munition, and victuall for any power of men, that ſhall be ſent thither.

I doe ſpeake it on my ſoules health, as the beſt teſtimonie, that I can in any cauſe yeelde to auerre a trueth, that hauing nowe the ſecond time beene in this countrey, and with the helpes of time and leiſure well aduiſed my ſelfe vpon all circumſtances to bee thought on; I can diſcerne no ſufficient impediment to the contrary, but that with a competent number of men, her Maieſtie may to her and her ſucceſſours enioy this rich and great empire: and hauing once planted there, may for euer (by the fauour of God) holde and keepe it, Contra Iudæos & Gentes. Subiects, I doubt not, may through her Maieſties gracious ſufferance, ioyning their ſtrength together, inuade, ſpoyle, and ouerrunne it, returning with golde and great riches. But what good of perpetuitie can followe thereof? Or who can hope that they will take any other courſe then ſuch, as tendeth to a priuate and preſent benefite; conſidering that an Empire once obtained, is of congruitie, howe, and whereſoeuer the charge ſhall growe, to bee annexed vnto the crowne? The riches of this place are not fit for any priuate eſtate: no queſtion, they will rather prooue ſufficient to croſſe and couteruaile the Spaniard his proceedings in all partes of Chriſtendome, where his money maketh way to his ambition.

If the neceſſitie of following this enterpriſe doth nothing vrge vs, becauſe in ſome caſe better a miſchiefe, then an inconuenience: let the conueniencie thereof ſomewat mooue vs, in reſpect both of ſo many Gentlemen, ſouldiers, and younger brothers, who, if for want of employment they doe not die like cloyed cattell in ranke eaſefulneſſe; are enforced for maintenance ſake, ſometimes to take ſhamefull and vnlawfull courſes: and in reſpect of ſo many handycraftſmen hauing able bodies, that doe liue in cleanneſſe of teeth and pouertie. To ſacrifice the children of Belial vnto the common weale, is not to defile the lande with blood, becauſe the lawe of God doeth not pro-hibite it, and the execution of iuſtice requireth it to bee ſo: but yet if the waterboughes, that ſucke and feede on the iuice, and nouriſhment that the fruitefull branches ſhould liue by, are to bee cut downe from the tree, and not regarded: luckie and proſperous bee that right hande, that ſhall plant and poſſeſſe a ſoyle, where they may fructifie, increaſe, and growe to good: thriſe honourable and bleſſed bee the memorie of ſo charitable a deede, from one generation to another.

To conclude, your lordſhip hath payd for the diſcouerie and ſearch, both in your owne perſon, and ſince by mee. You haue framed it, and moulded it readie for her Maieſtie, to ſet on her ſeale. If either enuie or ignorance, or other deuiſe fruſtrate the reſt, the good which ſhall growe to our enemies, and the loſſe which will come to her Maieſtie and this kingdome, will after a fewe yeeres ſhewe it ſelfe. Wee haue more people, more ſhippes, and better meanes, and yet doe nothing. The Spaniſh king hath had ſo ſweete a taſte of the riches thereof, as notwithſtanding that hee is lorde of ſo many empires and kingdomes already, notwithſtanding his enterpriſes of France and Flanders, notwithſtanding that hee attended this yeere a home inuaſion: yet hee ſent twentie eight ſaile to Trinidad, whereof tenne were for that place and Guiana, and had ſome other ſhippes ready at Cadiz, if the ſame had not beene by my Lordes her Maieſties Generals and your lordſhip ſet on fire.

In one worde; The time ſerueth, the like occaſion ſeldome happeneth in many ages, the former repeated conſiderations doe all ioyntly together importune vs, nowe, or neuer to make our ſelues rich, our poſteritie happie, our Prince euery way ſtronger then our enemies, and to eſtabliſh our Countrey in a ſtate flouriſhing and peaceable. O let not then ſuch an indignitie reſt on vs, as to depraue ſo notable an enterpriſe with falſe rumors, and vaine ſuppoſitions, to ſleepe in ſo ſerious a matter, and renouncing the honour, ſtrength, wealth, and ſoueraigntie of ſo famous a conqueſt, to leaue all vnto the Spaniard.

6 The firſt mountaines ẏ appeare within lande, doe lie on the Eaſt ſide of this riuer. From the mouth thereof, the inhabitants doe paſſe with their canoas in 20. dayes to the ſalte lake, where Manoa ſtandeth. Here follow the names of thoſe worthie Spaniards that haue ſought to diſcouer and conquer Guiana: Extracted out of the writings of Iuan de Caſtellanos clerigo, who compiled the booke intituled, Primera parte de las Elegias de varones illuſtres de Indias.

The riuer of Amana, by which Sir Walter Ralegh firſt entred, called by Diego de Ordas Viapari: and by Barth. de Caſas Iuia-Pari.

The enterpriſe of Guiana was vndertaken by Diego de Ordas of the kingdome of Leon, in the yeere 1531. Hee was one of the captaines of Cortes in the conqueſt of Mexico. This Ordas made his entrance by the riuer of Amana, by which wee entred, and ſpent fiftie dayes before hee came to the riuer of Orenoque, which we paſt in fifteene. Hee named the riuer by which hee entred, Viapari; which name it ſtill retaineth in the Spaniſh deſcriptions. It lyeth South from Trinidad ſome fiue leagues. He tranſported out of Spaine a thouſand ſouldiers. He dyed afterwards at ſea in returning for Spaine.

2 Iuan Corteſo arriued at the riuer of Amazones or Orellana with three hundred men: Hee marched vp into the countrey. But neither hee nor any of his companie did returne againe.

3 Gaſpar de Sylua, with his two brothers, departed from Teneriff, accompanied with two hundred men to aſſiſt Diego de Ordas. They ſought El Dorado by the riuer of Amazones: but ſtaying there a ſhort time, they fell downe to Trinidad, where they all three were buried.

4 Iuan Gonſales ſet ſaile from Trinidad to diſcouer Guiana. He repoſed himſelfe more on the faith of his guides, then on his ſmall number of men. Hee by triall founde the confines of Guiana, ſo farre as hee entred, to bee populous, plentifull of victuall, and rich in golde. Vpon ſuch proofes as hee brought with him, to make good his report, many others aduentured to follow his ſteps.

5. 6 Philip de Vren, & after him Pedro de Limpias, who both ſucceſſiuely commanded the Almaines, were leaders in this action. Limpias was ſlaine by an Indian Caſique named Porima.

7 Ieronimo de Ortal vndertooke it by the way of Maracapana. After great trauell and his ſubſtance all ſpent, he dyed on the ſudden at S. Domingo.

8. 9 Ximenes, brother of Don Ximenes de Queſida the Adelantado, and Pedro de Orſua were both at ſundry times in the ſame conqueſt.

10 Father Iala, a Frier, taking with him onely one companion, and ſome Indian guides paſſed into the prouinces of Guiana. Hee returned with good intelligence, and brought with him Eagles, idols, and other iewels of golde, An. 1560. Hee aſſayed the ſecond time to paſſe in like maner, but was ſlaine by the Indians.

11 Hernandez de Serpa alſo vndertooke it. The Indians of Cumanawgoto killed him, and defeated his armie.

12 Afterwardes, Diego de Vargas, and his ſonne Don Iuan followed this enterpriſe, and at their firſt ſetting out, were ſlaine by the Indians.

13 Caceres vndertooke this diſcouery from Nueuo Reyno de Granada. Hee came no neerer to it then Matachines, which borders vpon the ſayd kingdome of Granada. Hee reſted there and peopled that place.

14 It was alſo attempted by Alonço de Herera, at two ſeuerall times. Hee endured great miſerie, but neuer entred one league into the countrey. Hee ſought it by Viapari or Amana, and was at laſt ſlaine by a nation of Indians called Xaguas.

15 It was alſo vndertaken by Antonio Sedenno, with whom Herrera and Auguſtine Delgado ioyned in the conqueſt of Trinidad, againſt Bawcunar a famous king of that place. He paſſed by Maracapana in the yeere 1536 to diſcouer El Dorado with 500 choſen men. In this iourney hee got much gold, and tooke many Indian priſoners, whom hee manacled in irons; and many of them dyed as they were led in the way. The Tigers being fleſhed on thoſe dead carkeiſſes, aſſaulted the Spaniards, who with much trouble hardly defended themſelues from them. Sedenno was buried within the precinct of the empire neere the head of the riuer Tinados. Moſt of his people periſhed likewiſe.

16 Auguſtine Delgado ſearched the countrey to the Southward of Cumanawgoto with 53. footemen, and three horſemen. The warres that were then betweene the Indians of the vale, and thoſe of the mountaines, ſerued well for his purpoſe. By which occaſion he found meanes to paſſe ſo farre, vntill he came to an Indian Caſique, named Garamental, who entertained him with all kindneſſe, and gaue him for a preſent ſome rich iewels of golde, ſixe ſeemely pages, tenne young ſlaues, and three nymphes very beautifull, which bare the names of three prouinces from whence they were ſent to Garamental chiefe commander of all that countrey. Their names were Guanba, Gotoguane, and Maiarare. Theſe prouinces are of an excellent temperature, very healthfull, and haue an admirable influence in producing faire women. The Spaniards afterwardes to requite the manifold curteſies that they receiued in that countrey, tooke and carried away, beſides all the golde that they could get, all the Indians that they could lay holde on: they conueyed them in yrons to Cubagua, and sould them for ſlaues. Delgado afterwards was ſhot in the eye by an Indian: of which hurt he died.

17 Diego de Loſada ſucceeded in his brothers place. Hee had many more men; who in the ende waſted themſelues in mutinies: thoſe that liued returned to Cubagua.

18 Reynoſo vndertooke this iourney: but hauing endured exceeding troubles, in the diſcomfort of his minde, he gaue it ouer, and was buried in Hiſpaniola.

19 Pedro de Orſua, in the yeere 1560. ſought it with 400. Spaniards by the riuer of Orellana. Hee imbarqued his men in the countrey of the Motijones. As they paſſed downe the riuer, they found Synamom trees. His men murthered him, and afterward the ſayde rebels beheaded lady Anes his wife, who forſooke not her lord in all his trauels vnto death.

20 Frier Francis Monteſino was in the prouince of Marecupana with 100. ſouldiers bound for Guiana, whē Lopez Aguirri the tyrant made inſurrection in all thoſe parts of the Indies. What became of this intended iourney is not expreſſed.

In this diſcouerie of Guiana, you may reade both of Orellana, who diſcouered the riuer of Amazones An. 1542. and of Berreo, with others that haue trode this maze, and loſt themſelues in ſeeking to finde this countrey.

An aduertiſement to the Reader.

IN this Breuiarie, the names onely are compriſed of ſuch, as being led with the generall fame of Guiana, haue indeuoured to diſcouer and poſſeſſe it. The whole hiſtories are long and cannot ſuddenly be tranſlated or engliſhed at large, as we in theſe Elegies finde them. It may perhaps ſeeme ſtrange and incredible, that ſo many caualleros ſhould all faile in this one attempt, ſince in many parts of the Indies, far ſmaller numbers in ſhorter time haue performed as great matters, and ſubdued mighty kingdomes: I haue therefore thought it good here to alleage thoſe reaſons, which by circumſtance may bee gathered to haue beene chiefe impediments to the Spaniard in this intended ſearch and conqueſt.

The firſt may bee the remoteneſſe or diſtance of their places of Rendeuous, from El Dorado: which appeare to be foure, Nueuo Reyno, the mouth of Amazones or Orellana, Cubagua or the coaſt of the Caracas, and Trinidad.

1 From Moiobamba, where Orellana hath his head-ſpring, to his mouth, the Spaniards account it 2000. leagues. Raleana riſeth neere the ſaid mountaines in Moiobamba, & tributeth his waters to the ſea, not farre from the other: Guiana is enuironed with theſe 2 freſhwater-ſeas, where their diſtance is greateſt from their riſings, and is beſides guarded with impaſſable mountaines which incloſe and defend it on all parts, excepting Topiawaries countrey. It is no maruel then, if the vigor, heart, & life of thoſe Spaniards, who ſought it frō Nueuo Reyno, were allayed & ſpent, before they came neere to it, in thoſe long, deſolate & vncomfortable wayes.

2 From Cubagua to ſeeke it by ſea in veſſels of any burthen, is a worke of far greater labour, then to ſaile directly from Spaine. And to paſſe ouer land is a matter of great difficultie, by reaſon that the Indian nations inhabiting betweene the coaſt of The Caracas and Guiana, being wearied and harried with the daily incurſions of the Spaniards, haue now turned their abuſed patience into furie, refuſing to ſuffer any forces of men to be led through their countreys. For the Spaniards trauelling in thoſe parts, when they found not gold anſwerable to their expectation, ouerlaid them with cruelties, tyrannie, and thraldome: forbearing neither men, women, friends, nor foes. Which maner of dealing, though in ſome part it ſatiſfied their deſire of preſent profit; yet hath it otherwiſe done them much harme, in hardening and driuing thoſe nations to deſperate reſolutions.

3 From the mouth of Orellana to ſeeke entrance with any number of men, & to bore a hole through the mountaines is all one. Neither finde wee, that any ſeeking it that way, haue at any time boaſted of their gaines or pleaſurable iourneys.

4 From Trinidad, as the courſe is ſhorteſt, ſo doeth it promiſe beſt likelyhood of ſucceſſe. Howbeit, impoſſible it is with any veſſell of ordinarie burthen by that way to recouer the riuer of Raleana.

The ſecond. The Spaniards haue bene ſo farre from helping and furthering one another, or admitting partners or coadiutors in the Guiana-cauſe, that amongſt ſo many attemptes, from the beginning to the laſt, I cannot find any one, when they were otherwiſe likelieſt to preuaile, free from diſcords, mutinies, and cruell murthers amongſt themſelues.

Thirdly. The Spaniardes in this place haue miſt that aduantage, which elſewhere hath ſteeded themſelues in all their conqueſtes: namely, the diſſentions and mutuall warres of the Indians. Which of what force it is, may be gathered by the example Arauco in Chili. For the Indians of that one prouince conteining in circuit not aboue 20. leagues, haue maintained warres aboue theſe 30. yeeres againſt all the Sparniards, and in deſpight of them haue kept their owne countrey, oftentimes diſcomfiting their enemies in many ſet battels, burning and deſtroying ſome of their ſtrongeſt townes. The chiefe reaſon whereof I take to bee, becauſe no Indian nation was enemie vnto them. And howſoeuer the Spaniards vaunt of their redoubted exployts in the Indies: yet doe their owne writings in effect teſtifie, that without the ayde of the Indians diuided among themſelues, Mexico, Peru, and the reſt, had neuer beene Spaniſh.

Laſty. I can impute it to no cauſe ſo rightly, as immediatly to the diuine prouidence: for by him princes raigne. And in my beleefe (except we will looke to bee warned by miracle from heauen) wee neede no further aſſurances, then wee already haue to perſwade our ſelues, that it hath pleaſed God of his infinite goodneſſe, in his will and purpoſe to appoint and reſerue this empire for vs.

The third voyage ſet forth by ſir VValter Ralegh to Guiana, with a pinneſſe called The Watte, in the yeere 1596. Written by M. Thomas Maſham a gentleman of the companie.

VPon Thurſday the 14. of October 1596. we ſet ſaile from Limehouſe vpon the riuer of Thames, and through much contrarietie of winds and other accidents, we made it the 27. of December, before we could get out of Waimouth. The 25. of Ianuarie in the morning we came to the North ſide of the Iſland of Grand Canaria, where we hoped to haue gotten a boate to ſerue vs vpon the coaſt of Guiana, but the winde was ſo great, that we could not lanch our ſhalope: ſo we paſt along by the roade and the towne, and at length ſaw a boate lying on ſhoare, which being too bigge for vs, wee ripped vp, and wooded our ſelues with her. That day wee deſcryed a ſaile, which at length wee found to be a flieboate of Dartmouth, of 200. tunnes, bound to the Iſland of Mayo for ſalte. Wee fell in conſort with her, and that night ſtoode for the Southermoſt part of the Iſland there to water, where wee ſtayed all the next day, and watered at the Southſouthweſt part thereof. That night wee weyed and ſtoode away together Southſoutheaſt, and South and by Eaſt, purpoſing by their perſwaſion to goe for the riuer Doro. The 28. of Ianuarie wee made the furthermoſt part of Barbarie; and this morning we met with M. Beniamin Wood with his fleete of 3 ſailes bound for the ſtraights of Magellan & China, to wit, The Beare, The Whelpe, and The Beniamin: who told vs that there was no good to be done in the riuer Doro. Whereupon we ſtood along with them for Cape Blanco, vnto which we came vpon Sunday night next following. And vpon Munday morning the firſt of Februarie, we ſaw two ſhips in a ſandie bay: ſo wee ſtirred in with them, which were Frenchmen bound for the Weſt Indies, and put all into the bay, where wee refreſhed our ſelues with fiſh, in which there was infinite ſtore, and ſtayed there vntill Thurſday the 5. at which time wee ſtood vp with the Cape againe, where rode the Frenchman and his pinneſſe, who put foorth right afore vs, and another Frenchman and his carauel well manned: So all we 5. Engliſh came to an anker by them, where after kinde greeting with many ſhots out of euery ſhip both Engliſh and French, all our captaines were inuited to a feaſt aboord the French admirall: where after great cheere and kinde entertainment, it was concluded on all handes to take the Iſle of Fogo, if God would giue vs leaue.

M. Beniamin Wood bound for The South ſea. Cape Blanco.

The Iſland of Sal.

The ſame day we all weyed and ſtoode along for the Iſle of Sal, vnto which we came the 8. of Februarie, and ankered altogether at a bay in the Weſt part thereof: in which Iſland wee had good ſtore of goates and freſh fiſh. There is no man dwelling vpon the Iſland that we could ſee. Wee could finde no freſh water vpon it, but one ſtanding puddle of bad water: it hath foure great mountaines vpon the 4. corners of it. Here the Frenchmen (as it ſeemeth being ouercome with drinke, hauing bene aboord our Generall at a feaſt) being on ſhoare, one of the gentlemen of their companie was ſlaine, and their chiefe captaine ſorely wounded: by reaſon whereof, and of the ſetting together of a pinneſſe which they were about, the French admiral and the carauel ſtayed behind. So wee in the Watte, and the other 6. ſhips weyed the 10. of Februarie, and ſtood away for the iſle of Maio.

Mayo. This night the other two French ſhippes that came from Sal with vs (as it ſeemeth of purpoſe, becauſe their conſorts were not with them) loſt vs. The next morning wee ſawe Maio. So wee and the flieboate of Dartmouth compaſſed the Northermoſt part of the Iſland, and maſter Beniamin Wood in the China-fleete, the Southermoſt, and came all to an anker together at the Southweſt part thereof: where rode ſixe ſayles of Flemmings lading ſalte; who had brought their horſes and cartes, and wheele-barrowes, and plankes for their barrowes to runne vpon. Here is abundance of ſalte in this Iſland made by Gods hande without mans labour. Theſe tolde vs that there were thirtie ſayles more, which fell to leeward of Fogo, who, as I heard ſince, beat it vp with much adoe, & came thither alſo for ſalte. This trade may bee very beneficiall to England, conſidering the dearneſſe of ſalte. Of goates on this Iſland there is ſuch ſtore, as is incredible, but to thoſe that haue ſeene them: and it is a wonder howe they liue one by the other, the ground being ſtonie and barren. It is thought that there are dwelling in it ſome twentie Mountainiers, which got one of the Flemmings men ſtragling, and God knoweth what they did with him: for they ſawe him no more. This Iſland is ſomewhat lowe and round, hauing no great mountaines vpon it.

36 ſalies of Flemmings at Maio for ſalt.

Here ended our determination concerning the inuading of Fogo. And here wee left the flieboat of Dartmouth lading ſalte, and the China-fleete to refreſh themſelues with goates: who as I haue heard ſince had at the village (from whence the Mountainiers were fledde into the furtheſt partes of the Iſland and rocks) great ſtore of dryed goates which they carried along with them: which were like to bee a great helpe vnto them in their long voyage. So vpon Saturday the 12 of Februarie at night wee ſet ſaile and ſtood for the coaſt of Wiana, which wee were bound for.

Upon Sunday the twentieth of Februarie wee came into the maine current that ſetteth from the Cape of Buena Eſperança along the coaſt of Braſil, and ſo toward the Weſt Indies, for the moſt part ſetting away Northweſt.

The Tueſday night following, whereas before our courſe was Weſtſouthweſt, wee ſtoode away Weſt and by South: by reaſon whereof, and of the current that ſet vs to the Northward, wee were the next day by noone twentie minutes further to the Northward then the day before. So that then wee lay away Southweſt, becauſe wee were loath to fall to the Northward of our place intended: which if wee ſhould bee put to leeward of, there was ſmall hope left to recouer it.

By Thurſday wee were within out degree ½ of the Equinoctiall line: therefore this day wee halled away Weſt and by South, and Weſt among. This night wee ſounded, but had no ground at 90 fathoms.

The next day in the morning the colour of the water began to change, and to bee more white, ſo wee made another ſound and had ground at thirtie fathoms, but ſaw no lande, and in the afternoone wee halled away Weſtnorthweſt, Northweſt, and NorthnorthWeſt. In the night wee ſounded diuers times, and had twelue, ten, and nine fathoms water.

All Saturday wee had a thick red water, and had ſeuen and eight fathoms both day and night, and vpon Sunday morning by day being the ſeuen and twentieth of Februarie, wee made the lande which appeared lowe, and trended neereſt as wee fell with it, South and by Eaſt, North and by Weſt about two degrees ½ toward the North. Right on head of vs was a Cape or headland, ſo that had wee beene ſhot a little further into the bay, the winde being more Northerly, wee ſhould hardly haue doubled it off. For with much adoe making many boords, and ſtopping euery tyde, it was the Tueſday following before wee cleered our ſelues of the bay, and recouered the Cape. Nowe the lande trended Northweſt and by North, and Southeaſt and by South. And ſtill wee were faine to anker euery tyde ſometimes in foure fathoms, and ſometimes in three, as farre as wee could ſee land. So about night wee ſawe Cape Cecill: and after ſome two houres came to an anker. Betweene theſe two Capes the lande lyeth lowe and euen.

Cape Cecil in 3 degrees and a halfe.

Upon Wedneſday morning, hauing the winde large at Eaſtnortheaſt, wee layd it away vpon a board into the bay of Wiapoucou and came to an anker in the riuers mouth in two fathoms: ouer the barre there is little water, as 6 and 7 foote, and leſſe in many places. And this riuer of Wiapoucou ſtandeth almoſt in 4 degrees to the Northward of the line.

The riuer of Wiapoucou almoſt in 4 degrees North.

The next morning wee weyed, and ſtanding in with our pinneſſe by night, wee got ſome eight leagues vp the riuer. This day ſometimes wee had but 5 foote water and drew 7 foot, but being ſoft oaze we went cleere: and a little before wee came to anker, wee were on ground vpon a rocke, but with ſome trouble and labour wee got off and had no hurt.

Upon Friday the 4 of March towards night wee came to the falles. The next day M. Leonard Berrie our captaine, the Maſter, my ſelfe and ſome 5 more, went through the woods, and ſpent all the day in ſearching the head of the falles, but could not finde it: for though wee paſſed by many, yet were there more ſtill one aboue the other. So that finding no Indians in this riuer to buy victuals of, neither any kind of thing that might intice vs to come to ſo ſhort allowence, as we muſt haue done, if wee had ſpent any long time here, finding it ouer hard to paſſe the falles, wee fell downe the riuer againe, and by Friday the 11 of March wee cleered our ſelues of the riuer and bay. This riuer from the mouth to the falles is ſome 16 leagues, in many places a mile ouer, but for the moſt part halfe a mile. There are many Iſlands in it: as are alſo in moſt of the riuers vpon the coaſt. This night wee ankered againſt Cawo in two fathoms; whereinto wee thought to haue put with our pinneſſe: but found the water ſo ſhoald, and the ſea ſo growen, that neither with our ſhippe nor ſhallope wee durſt goe in.

The 7 Ilands.

On Saturday by noone wee came to anker vnder one of the 7 Iſlands: vpon which going on ſhoare wee found neither man nor beaſt, but great ſtore of yellow plumbes which are good to eate.

Aramatto a great towne.

The Caribes of Wias tractable people.

Chiana a riuer and bay.

The Careres.

Maware.

Vpon Sunday after dinner our Maſter William Dowle and 6 more went off with our boat to a towne called Aramatto; where they found many inhabitants, and brought victuals and ſome Tabacco with them, and one Indian named Caprima, who lying aboord all night, the next day being Munday the 14 of March went with our Captaine into Wias, and there traded with the Caribes for ſuch things as they had. And afterward they of Aramatto came off with their canoas to vs, and wee went on ſhoare to them: and from thence our Captaine ſent a canoa with ſeuen men, which had euery one of them a knife to goe backe to the riuer of Cawo, and to tell Ritimo captaine of that place, that becauſe wee coulde not come to him, wee would ſtay at Chiana for him, whither wee intreated him to come to vs. So vpon Thurſday the 17 wee ſtoode in for Chiana, and came to an anker without in the bay in 3 fathoms that night: and had the Caribes comming continually to vs with their canoas, which brought vs great ſtore of victuals and ſome Tabacco, ſhewing themſelues very kinde and louing, and came all from their townes, and dwelt on ſhoare by vs vntill Ritimo came: at whoſe comming they returned all vp to their townes againe, which was vpon the Sunday following. All this day we feaſted him and his traine, and the next day we traffiqued with them for ſuch things as they brought, which was principally tabacco.

After that they had made knowen their mindes of the deſire that they had to haue the Engliſh come and kill the Spaniards, and to dwell in Orenoque and in the countrey, they departed with their 3 canoas the next day. And wee with the helpe of the Caribes of Chiana, hauing by their meanes from the ſhoare watered, becauſe the riuers mouth was ſalte, departed out of the bay the Thurſday following, & paſſing by Macerea, Couroura, and Manamanora, by reaſon of ſhoalds, rockes, and great windes, being a lee ſhoare; and for want of a good ſhalope, wee came to an anker the next day being good Friday in fiue fathoms neere The Triangle Iſlands called The Careres. And vpon Saturday ſtanding to the Weſtward, wee ſtopped againſt the towne of Maware, which is a little to the Weſtward of the towne Comanamo: from whence and from the other townes in that bay, which are ſome 6 or 7, wee had canoas come off to vs as before with ſuch things as they had themſelues in vſe, with parrots, monkeys, and cotton-wooll, and flaxe. From whence wee departed vpon Munday following the 28 of March 1597.

Marawinne a riuer.

Marrac a towne.

Quiparia a towne of the Caribes.

And paſſing by the riuers of Euracco and Amano, which openeth but a ſmall riuer, and is ſhoald off, wee came to Marawinne the next day: And finding a chanell of three, foure, and fiue fathoms, wee ſtood into the riuer: and the ſame day came to an anker ſome 2 leagues in againſt the mouth of Cooſhepwinne, which riuer goeth into Amano. Into which, (vnderſtanding that there were Arwaccawes dwelling) this night we ſent our boat and came to a towne called Marrac one league in: And finding the people ſomething pleaſant, hauing drunke much that day, being as it ſeemed a feſtiuall day with them, yet were they very fearefull and ready to run away at the firſt ſight of vs, hauing ſeldome ſeene any Chriſtian before. But aſſoone as Henry our Indian interpreter had tolde them what wee were, and our intent, they came to vs and vſed vs kindely, and brought vs victuals and other things. And the next day their captaine Mawewiron came out into Marawinne, with diuers canoas, & traded with vs, and wee went in againe to them on ſhore, who made very much of vs, and carried vs from houſe to houſe, and made vs eate and drinke in euery houſe which wee came in. And the next day following being the laſt of March, hauing the captaine of Marrack with vs, wee weyed and ſtoode into the riuer, and about two of the clocke in the afternoone came to an anker ſome eight leagues within the riuer, a little ſhort of a towne called Quiparia, the people whereof are Caribes: who, when they ſawe vs come toward their towne with our boate, began all to runne into the woods, vntill the captaine of Marrac which was with vs in the boate, leaped ouerboord and ſwamme on ſhoare vnto them, and told them that wee were Engliſhmen, and came in friendſhip to trade with them.

Vpon whoſe report they came before night ſixe or ſeuen canoas aboord vs, yet very fearefull, becauſe there was neuer either ſhippe or Chriſtian ſeene in that riuer before. The firſt of Aprill, wee weighed againe, and ſtood in to the next towne called Macirria: where comming to anker, there came a canoa from Amano to vs, with great ſtore of victuals, which canoa wee bought: and becauſe wee mette with ſome ſholds, we were loath to goe any farther with our Pinneſſe: ſo there wee mored her, and the next day at three of the clocke in the afternoone, eleuen of vs (Maſter Monax hauing the gouernment of the action, by the Captaines appointment) with Mawerirou, Henry, and William of Cawo, in the canoa which we bought, went into the riuer farther to ſearch it ſo farre as wee could, and that night gatte ſome fiue leagues from our ſhippe. And betweene two villages, Awodwaier and Mapeributto, we tooke vp our lodging in the woods. The third of Aprill, betimes in the morning, we tooke our courſe ſtill vnto the riuer, and in the afternoone came to one houſe where wee found many Indians, where wee hired another canoa and foure Indians, into the which I went, and one more of our men, and this night gat twelue leagues farther, and as before, lodged among the wilde beaſtes.

Macirria a towne.

On Munday the fourth of Aprill, wee came to the falles of this riuer about two in the afternoone; and hauing ſhotte vp ſome of the rockes, wee went on ſhore vpon an iſland, and there conferred of our farther proceeding. And inquiring of the Indians that wee hired for our Pilots of the laſt houſe, whether the falles were paſſable or not: their firſt anſwere was, that they had nothing to eate: but wee being loath to looſe ſo much labour, and the ſight of that vpper rich countrey, which wee deſired, told them that they ſhould haue victuals of vs (though God knoweth wee had none for our ſelues) who ſeeing vs ſo importunate, ſayde farther, that the rockes would kill the canaos: which they ſayde becauſe indeed they had no victuals: which by ſome was taken for ſufficent to proceede no farther, and ſo wee left off, and onely ſtayed ſome two houres vpon the iſland, and with the ſwiftneſſe of the current, fell that night downe 10 leagues againe. Though I for mine owne part offered in that ſmall canoa that I was in, being ſo leake, that my ſelfe did nothing but laue out the water, to lead them the way, and if they ſawe any danger to mee, they might chuſe whether they would come into it or not themſelues.

A rich countrey.

For ſeeing the countrey aboue was rich as wee were informed, that their bowes were handled with golde, (being men of an extraordinarie ſtature for talnes) wee ſhould haue taken the more paines, and haue fared the harder, vntill wee had gotten vp in the countrey which wee ſawe with our eyes: for though wee had not victuals in any ſort to cary vs vp, yet the woods doe yeld fruites and the palmito trees afforde meate, whereby wee might haue made ſhift to liue, vntill wee had come to the inhabitants, by whome we might both bee refreſhed with victuals, and alſo haue reaped that, which might haue done vs good as long as wee had liued.

Bowes handled with golde.

But to returne to the reſt of our voyage: the day after wee went from the falles wee came to our ſhippe, which was the fifth of Aprill 1597. On Wedneſday wee fell with our Pinneſſe to Quiparia againe: where we brought her on ground right before the t[illegible], and trimmed her with the pitch of the countrey: and vntill wee had done, kept a corps du guard, night and day on ſhore, which was vpon Saturday following the ninth of Aprill. All the while we were there we had an houſe of the Caribes, and were kindely vſed of them, and had victuals, and euery thing we needed of them.

Pitch to trim ſhippes.

And ſo taking our leaue on Tueſday being the twelfth of Aprill, wee came to the mouth of Cuſſe-winne, where the Arwaccas of Marrac and of the riuer had prouided and brought to vs ſuch infinite ſtore of potatoes, and Guiney-wheate, that the ſtewarde ſayd wee had no ſtowage for them; and ſo they were turned backe, and wee by that meanes came to ſhorter allowance homeward bound, then (if there had bene any good care) wee needed to haue done.

The riuer of Cuſſe-winne.

On Fryday the fifteenth of Aprill, wee put forth of Marawinne, which is ſome foure leagues ouer, and within one league and an halfe for the moſt part broad; full of iſlands, and diuers ſmall riuers running into it: and it is betweene forty and fifty leagues, from the mouth to the falles, and lyeth for the moſt part South Southweſt vp, altering ſome 3 poynts, being almoſt ſtreight. And ſtanding along to the Weſtward, this night we tryed with our mayne coarſe and bonnet. On Saturday night we came to an anker, in three fathomes againſt Sewramo. On Sunday morning we thought to haue gone into Cuppanamo: but ſending off our boat & finding vncertaine ſounding, ſometime 3 fathomes and preſently 9 foote, we ſtood along to Coritine and came into it vpon the Munday being the 18 of Aprill: and the next night wee came to anker againſt Warrawalle in 10 fathoms. On Wedneſday the Indians of the towne hauing hunted a Doe, ſhee tooke ſoyle & came neer our ſhip, and putting off with our boat we tooke her, being like vnto our deere in England, not altogether ſo fat, but very good fleſh and great bodied. In this riuer we met a Barke called Marawinne.

Sewramo.

Coritine riuer.

The great lake Perima.

They bring their ſhippes vp to the Mawranamo.

called the Iohn of London captaine Leigh being in her. And being both fallen downe within ſome fiue leagues of the mouth of the riuer, vpon intelligence that one Marracon, (whom wee brought along with vs) gaue vs, namely that the riuer Deſekebe, in which he dwelt (and wherein there were ſome three hundred Spaniards, which for the moſt part now are deſtroyed and dead) doeth lead ſo farre into the countrey, that it commeth within a dayes iourney of the lake called Perima, whereupon Manoa is ſuppoſed to ſtand; and that this riuer of Coritine doeth meete with Deſekebe vp in the land: by meanes whereof wee make account to goe vp into the countrey, and to haue diſcouered a paſſage vnto that rich citie. So hauing concluded both ſhippes, we ſtood vp into the riuer againe, and comming to Warawalle the 24 of Aprill there our ſhippes roade vntill we went vp to Mawranamo to ſpeake with Marracon, to know the trueth of theſe things: whom when we had found, he verified al that before he had ſpoken: Maſter Monax being the man that of Leonard of Cawe tooke all the intelligence: who being brought vp with Antonie Berreo could ſome Spaniſh and Marracons language alſo. And beſides wee our ſelues by ſignes, and drawing the two riuers on the ground, and the meeting of them aloft, did perceiue as much. Now comming downe with our boates the ſixe and twentieth of Aprill we went vp with our ſhips to Mawranama, where wee mored them, and taking ſome twentie out of both, vpon Thurſday the eight and twentieth in the afternoone with two ſhallops and two Canaos, in one of which Henry the Indian was and ſome twentie Indians more, wee went vp the riuer; and by night getting ſome three leagues farther wee lodged in the woods, and the next morning wee with our boate and the two Canoas went into a ſmall riuer called Tapuere, to a towne called called Macharibi, thinking to haue had Caſaui and other victuals, which they were altogether vnprouided of, by reaſon that they make no more ready then ſerueth themſelues from hand to mouth, liuing in this towne for the moſt part by fiſh. By meanes of going into this riuer, though wee rowed very hard it was noone before wee ouertooke the bigger ſhallop wherein both the Captaines were. This night we came to a towne called Vaperon, where wee ſtayed all Saturday and the night following, for Caſaui: whereof they baked good ſtore for vs being but a fewe left in the towne. For not a moneth before wee came thither, the Waccawaes that dwell aboue the falles came downe to the towne, and ſlewe ſome tenne of them, and many of the reſt fled away, ſo that wee found moſt of the houſes emptie. Vpon Sunday morning being May day, wee went from this place, and by night gotte ſome twelue leagues beyond, and being paſt all townes wee lodged as before in the woods, and the next day came to the falles of the riuer; vp ſome of which falles we ſhotte with our boates, and going vpon a rocke there came ſome nine canoas vp the riuer to vs, and would haue gone vp with vs to kill the Waccawayans, becauſe they had killed ſome of them, as before is ſaid. Whereupon the Captaines and Maſter Monax tooke aduiſe: and becauſe nowe they had learned, as they ſayde, that fiue dayes iourney farther there was a fall not paſſable, and that by this meanes they ſhould make the Wacchaway[illegible]s their enemies, which would turne to our great hurt, when Sir Walter Ralegh ſhould come thither, hauing occaſion to vſe this riuer, where wee were informed was good ſtore of golde, they reſolued to returne, though I yeeled diuers reaſons to the contrary. So vpon Tueſday night, we came backe to Vaperon, where we lodged.

And vpon Wedneſday the fourth of May, wee came to our ſhippes: where it was reported that the Spaniardes were gonne out of Deſekebe, which was not ſo: but as it ſeemed in policie by them giuen out to make our men that wee left in our ſhippes more careleſſe, that they might the eaſier haue ſurpriſed them in our abſence. The next night wee had newes brought vs to Mawranamo, where we yet roade, that there were tenne canoas of Spaniardes in the mouth of Coritine; and fearing leſt they had intended to come to vs in the night, we fitted all our gunnes and muskets, and kept good watch to preuent them of their purpoſe; who, as it was afterwarde tolde vs, went along the coaſt to buy bread and other victuals for them in Orenoque, Marowgo and Deſekebe. Vpon Fryday the ſixth of May we weighed and made downe the riuer, and vpon Sunday the eighth we gat cleare of it.

This riuer is much like vnto Marawynne in bredth, and about fiftie leagues from the mouth to the firſt falles, full of Iſlandes as the other: in which three riuers, Mano, Tapuere, and Tabuebbi, otherwiſe Tapuellibi: with ſixe Townes, Warrawalle, Mawranamo, Maapuere, Maccharibi, Yohóron, and Vapéron. And ſo clering our ſelues of this coaſt, wee tooke our courſe to the Iſlands of the Weſt Indies.

Now I thinke it not amiſſe to ſpeak ſomething of this countrey. And firſt touching the climate; though it ſtand within the Tropick, and ſomething neere to the Equinoctial, ſo that the Sunne is twiſe a yeere ouer their heads & neuer far from them, yet is it temperate ynough in thoſe partes.

For beſides that wee loſt not a man vpon the coaſt, one that was ſicke before hee came there, was nothing ſicker for being there, but came home ſafe, thanks be to God. And for mine owne part, I was neuer better in body in all my life, and in like ſort fared it with the reſt of the company: for indeed it is not ſo extreame hote as many imagine. The people in all the lower parts of the countrey goe naked, both men and women, being of ſeuerall languages, very tractable, and ingenious, and very louing and kinde to Engliſhmen generally; as by experience we found, and vpon our owne knowledge doe report. In the vpper countreys they goe apparelled, being, as it ſeemeth, of a more ciuill diſpoſition, hauing great ſtore of golde, as we are certeinely informed by the lower Indians, of whom we had ſome golde, which they brought and bought in the high countrey of Wiana, being able to buy no more, becauſe they wanted the things which now wee haue left among them. They keepe no order of marriage: but haue as many wiues as they can buy, or win by force of their enemies, which principally is the cauſe of all their warres. For bread there is infinite ſtore of caſaui, which is as good bread as a man need to eate, and better then we can carry thither. We ſpent not a bit of our owne all the while we were vpon the coaſt. It is made of a root ſo called; which they take and ſcrape, and cruſh all the iuyce out, being poiſon; and when it is drie it is as fine floure as our white meale maketh: which dry as it is, without any moiſture, they ſtrew vpon a round ſtone, hauing a ſtill fire vnder it, and ſo it congealeth to a cake; and when it commeth new off, it eateth like to our new white bread. Beſides there is great ſtore of Guiny-Wheat (whereof they make paſſing good drinke) which after it is once ſowed, if you cut off the eare, on the ſame ſtalke groweth another.

Great ſtore of golde in Wiana.

Paſſing good drinke made of maiz.

For victuals, wee either did not, or at leaſt needed not to haue ſpent any of our owne: for there is great ſtore of as good fiſh in the riuers, as any is in the world. Great ſtore of fowle, of diuers ſorts. Tortoiſe-fleſh plentifull, and Tortoiſes egges innumerable. Deere, ſwine, conies, hares, cockes and hennes, with potatoes more them wee could ſpend. Beſides, all kinde of fruits, at all times of the yeere: and the rareſt fruits of the world, the pine, the plantan, with infinite other variable and pleaſant, growing to their handes, without planting or dreſſing. For commodities, though wee had but ſmall time to ſearch, becauſe wee ſpent ſo much time in ſearching the riuers: yet wee haue brought examples of ſome, which the countrey yeeldeth in great plenty: as a kinde of long hempe like vnto ſteele hempe, fine cotton wooll, which the trees yeeld great ſtore of; and wherewith the women make a fine thread, which will make excellent good fuſtians or ſtockings. Great ſtore of pitch, diuers ſorts of ſweet gummes, & Weſt Indian pepper, balſamum, parrots and monkies. Beſides diuers other commodities, which in good time may be found out to the benefit of our countrey, and profit of the aduenturers, who as yet hauing ventured much, haue gained litle.

The commodities of Wiana.

Now leauing the riuer of Coritine, paſſing by Saint Vincent, Santa Lucia, and Matalina, we came to Dominica vpon the Friday following, being the the thirteenth of May, hauing loſt the barke that came out with vs the Wedneſday before. Vpon Sunday morning, the fifteenth of May, we came to Guadalupe, where wee watered at the Souther part of the Iſland, and hauing done by night, we ſet ſaile, and ſtood away to the Northward, but were becalmed all night, and vntill tenne of the clocke on Munday night: at which time hauing a faire gale at Eaſt, and after at Southeaſt, wee paſſed along in the ſight of Monſerate, Antigua, and Barbuda. Vpon the ninth of Iune, being Thurſday, we made the Iſlands of Flores and Coruo: and the eight and twentieth of Iune we made the Liſart, and that night came all ſafe to Plymmouth, bleſſed be God.

They loſt captaine Leigh in yͤ Iohn of London.

Betweene the Iſle of Barbuda in the Weſt Indies and England we had three mighty ſtormes, many calmes, and ſome contrary windes. And vpon the foureteenth of Iune 1597, there being diuers whales playing about our pinneſſe, one of them croſſed our ſtemme, and going vnder, rubbed her backe againſt our keele: but by none of all theſe we ſuſteined any loſſe. Thanks be to him that gouerneth all things.

CERTAINE BRIEFE TESTIMONIES CONcerning the mightie Riuer of Amazones or Orellana, and of the moſt wonderfull downefall or cataract of waters at the head thereof, named by the Spaniards El Pongo: together with ſome mention of the rich and ſtately Empire of Dorado, called by Sir Walter Ralegh and the natural Inhabitants Guiana, and of the golden countrey of Paytity neere adioyning, with other memorable matters: Taken out of Ioſephus de Acoſta his naturall and morall Hiſtorie of the Weſt Indies.

The firſt Teſtimonie out of Ioſephus de Acoſta, lib.2. cap 6.

BUt when we intreat of Riuers, that which ſome men call the riuer of Amazones, others Marannon, others the riuer of Orellana, doeth iuſtly put to ſilence all the reſt, whereunto our Spaniards haue gone and ſayled. And I ſtand in doubt, whether I may cal it a riuer or a ſea. This riuer runneth from the mountaines of Piru, from which it gathereth infinite ſtore of waters, of raine, and riuers, which runneth along, gathering it ſelfe together, and paſſing through the great fieldes and plaines of Paytiti, of Dorado, and of the Amazones, and falleth at length into the Ocean ſea, and entreth into it almoſt ouer againſt the Iſles of Margarita and Trinidad. But it groweth ſo broad, eſpecially towardes the mouth, that it maketh in the middeſt many and great Iſles: and that which ſeemeth incredible, ſayling in the middle chanel of the riuer, men can ſee nothing but the ſkie and the riuer, although men ſay that there are hilles neere the bankes thereof, which can not be kenned, through the greatneſſe of the Riuer. Wee vnderſtood by very good meanes the wonderfull bredth and largeneſſe of this Riuer, which iuſtly may bee called the Emperour of Riuers, to wit by a brother of our companie, which being a boy was there, & ſayled it wholy through, being perſonally preſent in all the ſucceſſes of that ſtrange enterance, which Pedro de Orſua made, and in the mutinies and perilous conſpiracies of that wicked Diego de Aguirre, out of all which troubles and dangers the Lord deliuered him, to make him one of our ſocietie.

AMong all the riuers not onely of the Weſt Indies but alſo of the whole world, the chief is the Riuer of Marannon or of the Amazones, whereof I haue ſpoken in the ſecond booke. The Spaniards haue diuers times ſayled along this riuer, with determination to diſcouer countries, which, according to report, are of great riches, eſpecially that which they call Dorado, and Paytiti. The Adelantado or admirall Iuan de Salinas made a very notable entrance, although to ſmall profite. It hath a ſalt or fall of water which they call El Pongo, which is one of the moſt dangerous places in the world: for being reſtrained betweene two exceeding hie deuided mountaines, it maketh a fall of terrible depth, where the water with the great deſcent maketh ſuch whirlepooles that it ſeemeth impoſſible but that it ſhould ſinke it ſelf there into the ground. For all this the boldnes of men hath attempted to paſſe the ſaid El Pongo for the greedines to come to that ſo famous renowmed Dorado. They ſuffered themſelues to bee caryed from aloft, being throwne downe headlong with the furie of the riuer, and ſitting faſt in their Canoas or boats in which they ſayled, although they were ouerturned in the fal, and they and their Canoas ſuncke downe to the bottome, yet they roſe vp againe aboue the water, and at length with their hands and force gat out of the whirlepooles. The whole army in a maner eſcaped, ſauing a very fewe which were drowned: and which I moſt maruel at, they handled the matter ſo well, that they loſt not their victuals and powder which they caryed with them. In their returne (for after great trauels and dangers they returned that way againe) they clymed vp ouer one of thoſe aforeſaide exceeding high mountaines, creeping vp vpon their handes and feete.

El Pongo.

Captaine Pedro de Orſua made another enterance by the ſelfe ſame riuer, and after hee was ſlaine by a mutinie of his people, other captaines followed the diſcouerie, by the arme that falleth into the North Sea. One of our companie told me (who while he was a ſecular man was in al that expedition) that they entred vp the Riuer almoſt an hundred leagues with the tydes, and that when the freſh water and the ſalt meeteth, which is either almoſt vnder or very neere the Equinoctial line, the riuer is 70 leagues broad, a thing incredible, and which exceedeth the bredth of Mediterran ſea. Howbeit other in their deſcriptions make it not paſt 25 or 30 leagues broad at the mouth.

The third Teſtimonie out of Ioſephus de Acoſta, lib. 3. cap 25.

IN that part of America, whereof the coaſts be throughly knowen, the greater part of the Inland is not knowen, which is that which falleth betweene Piru and Braſil, and there are diuers opinions of ſome, which ſay, that it is all ſunken land full of lakes and bogges, and of others, which affirme that there are great and floriſhing kingdomes there, and there they place the Countrey of Paytity, and Dorado, and great Emperours, and ſay, that there are wonderfull things there. I heard of one of our companie my ſelfe, a man of credite, that hee had ſeene great townes, and high wayes as broad and as much beaten, as the wayes betweene Salamanca and Validolid: and this was when the great entrance or diſcouerie was made by the great riuer of the Amazones or Marannon by Pedro de Orſua, and afterwardes by others that ſucceded him: and they ſuppoſing that Dorado which they ſought, was farther vp in the countrey, did not inhabite there, and afterward returned without diſcouering Dorado (which they neuer found) and without that great prouince which they left.

A ſhort deſcription of the riuer of Marannon or Amazones, and the Countries thereabout, as alſo of the ſea of Freſh-water, taken out of an ancient Diſcourſe of all the Portes, Creekes, and Hauens of the Weſt Indies, Written by Martin Fernandez de Encça, and dedicated to Charles the Emperour, Anno 1518.

MArannon lyeth in ſeuen degrees and an halfe Northward of the Equinoctial, it is a great riuer, and hath more then fifteene leagues in bredth eight leagues within the land. It hath many iſlands, and in this riuer within the land fortie leagues there is neere to the ſayde riuer a mountaine, whereupon growe trees of Incenſe, the trees be of a good height & the boughs thereof be like to Plum-trees, and the Incenſe doeth hang at them, as the yce doeth at the tiles of a houſe in the winter ſeaſon when it doeth freeze. In this riuer were taken foure Indians in a ſmal boat, called in the Indian language a Canoa, that came downe by the riuer, and there were taken from them two ſtones of Emeralds, the one of them being as great as a mans hand. They ſayd that ſo many dayes iourney going vpward by the riuer, they found a rocke of that ſtone. Likewiſe there were taken from them two loaues made of floure, which were like to cakes of Sope, and it ſeemed that they were kneaded with the licour of Balſamum. All this coaſt from the Cape of S. Auſtine vnto Marannon is a cleare coaſt & deep, but neer to the riuer are certaine ſholds towardes the Eaſt part. And by the Weſt part the riuer is deepe, and it hath a good entrie. From this riuer Marannon, vnto the riuer which is called The ſea of freſh water, are 25 leagues: this riuer hath 40 leagues of bredth at the mouth, and carieth ſuch abundance of water that it entreth more then 20 leagues into the Sea, and mingleth not it ſelfe with the ſalt water: this bredth goeth 25 leagues within the land, and after it is deuided into partes, the one going towards the Southeaſt, and the other towards the Southweſt. That which goeth towards the Southeaſt is very deepe and of much water, and hath a chanel halfa league of bredth, that a Carack may goe vp through it: & the tydes be ſo ſwift, that the ſhips haue need of good cables. The riuer of this port is very good, and there haue bene ſome that haue entred 50 leagues within it, & haue ſeene no mountaines. The Indians of this countrey haue their lips made full of ſmall holes in 4 parts & through thoſe holes be put ſmall rings, and likewiſe at their eares: & if any man aſke of thē where they had their gold, they anſwere, that going vp by the riuer ſo many dayes iourney, they found certaine mountaines that had much of it, and from thoſe mountaines they brought it when they would haue it, but they made no great account of it, for they neither buy nor ſell, and amongſt them is nothing but change. In this countrey they eate bread of rootes, and Maiz, and they eate certaine rootes which they call Aies and Batatas, but the Batatas bee better then the other rootes, and being rawe they haue a ſmell of Cheſtnuts: they are to be eaten roſted. Theſe Indians doe make wine of the fruit of Date-trees, which fruit is yellow in colour, and is as great as a little Doues egge, and being in ſeaſon is good to be eaten, and of it proceedeth good wine, and is preſerued for a long time. Theſe kinde of people do make their houſes with vpper roomes, and they ſleepe in them, as alſo al their habitation is in the vpper roomes, and that which is belowe, they leaue open: and alſo they vſe certaine mantels of cotten wooll, and theſe they tie at the endes with ropes, and the one ende of of the rope they make faſt to one part of the houſe, and the other ende to the other part of the houſe: and in theſe they lye, which bee their beddes, and theſe kinde of beds bee vſed in all India, and there is not in any part of India any chambers that the people do vſe to lodge in aloft from the ground, nor they make any hie roomes, but only in this part of India: & in al other places they make their houſes without any loftes or chambers, and they couer their houſes with the leaues of date-trees, and of graſſe. And from this freſh water-ſea vnto Paria, the coaſt lyeth Weſt Northweſt, and is ſo ful of ſholds that the ſhips cannot come neer to the land. There are frõ this riuer to Paria 250 leagues. In this freſh water ſea, the tydes do ebbe & flow as much as they do in Britayne, and it ſtandeth in 6 degrees and a halfe. Paria ſtandeth on the other ſide of the Equinoctial toward the North, in ſeuen degrees: In Paria the ſea floweth but little, and from Paria towards the Weſt, the ſea doth not flow. From the entry of the gulfe of Paria vnto the Cape that lyeth towards the Weſt, are 35 leagues, and frõ thence the coaſt turneth towardes the Northeaſt other 35 leagues, & from thence the coaſt turneth toward the Weſt. Before this gulfe ſtandeth the Iſland of Trinidad, and towards the Weſt doeth appeare the gulfe of Paria like to halfe a round circle, after the faſhion of a Diameter, and at the end of this circle is the entery in of Paria, & at this entery there is betweene the land and the Iſland 8 leagues, and on the other ſide there is but litle ſpace betweene the Iland and the land, but it is deepe, and hath a good entry: this Iland of Trinidad hath in length 25 leagues, and as many in bredth, and ſtandeth in eight degrees, and is inhabited of many people, and as yet not vnder ſubiection. Here the Indians do vſe to ſhoote with bowes, and arrowes which are of a fathome in length, made of reeds, which grow in that Countrey, and at the ende of them is artificially ioyned a piece of wood very ſtrong, vnto the which piece of wood at the end of it, they put a bone of a fiſh, in place of an arrow head: theſe kinde of bones bee harder then Diamonds, and euery one of them be three or foure fingers long, & they are taken out of a fiſh that hath three of theſe bones, one vpon the backe, another vnder euery wing: but that which groweth vpon the backe is the ſtrongeſt and the greateſt. In this Iſland the people ſaith that there groweth golde: and in this Iſland and in Paria growe reedes ſo great, that they make ſtaues of them and cary of them into Spaine. Likewiſe there bee Popiniayes very great and gentle, and ſome of them haue their foreheads yellow, and this ſort do quickly learne to ſpeak, and ſpeak much. There be likewiſe in the gulfe of Paria pearles, although not many, but very good and great.

CERTAINE VOYAGES NAVIGATIONS AND Traffiques both ancient and of late, to diuers places vpon the coaſt of Braſil: together with a Ruttier for all that coaſt, and two intercepted letters which reueale many ſecrets of the ſtate of that Countery: the reſt of our Voyages to Braſil which haue bene either intended or performed to the Riuer of Plate, the ſtreight of Magellan, the South ſea, or farther that way, being reſerued for the generall heades next inſuing.

A briefe relatiõ of two ſundry voyages made by the worſhipful M. William Haukins of Plimmouth, father to Sir Iohn Haukins knight, late Treaſurer of her Maieſties Nauie, in the yeere 1530 and 1532.

Olde M. William Haukins of Plimmouth, a man for his wiſedome, valure, experience, and ſkill in ſea cauſes much eſteemed, and beloued of K. Henry the 8, and being one of the principall Sea-captaines in the Weſt parts of England in his time, not contented with the ſhort voyages commonly then made onely to the knowne coaſts of Europe, armed out a tall and goodly ſhippe of his owne of the burthen of 250 tunnes, called the Paule of Plimmouth, wherwith he made three long and famous voyages vnto the coaſt of Braſil, a thing in thoſe dayes very rare, eſpecially to our Nation. In the courſe of which voyages he touched at the riuer of Seſtos vpon the coaſt of Guinea, where hee traffiqued with the Negros, and tooke of them Elephants teeth, and other commodities which that place yeeldeth: and ſo arriuing on the coaſt of Braſil, he vſed there ſuch diſcretion, and behaued himſelf ſo wiſely with thoſe ſauage people, that he grew into great familiarity and friendſhip with them. Inſomuch that in his ſecond voyage, one of the ſauage kings of the countrey of Braſil, was contented to take ſhip with him, and to be tranſported hither into England: whereunto M. Haukins agreed, leauing behinde in the Countrey as a pledge for his ſafetie and returne againe, one Martin Cockeram of Plimmouth. This Braſilian king being arriued, was brought vp to London and preſented to K. Henry the 8. lying as then at White-hall: at the ſight of whom the King and all the Nobilitie did not a litle maruaile, and not without cauſe: for in his cheekes were holes made according to their ſauage maner, and therein ſmall bones were planted, ſtanding an inch out from the ſaid holes, which in his owne Countrey was reputed for a great brauerie. He had alſo another hole in his nether lip, wherin was ſet a precious ſtone about the bignes of a peaſe: All his apparel, behauiour, and geſture, were very ſtrange to the beholders.

The ſecond voyage of M. William Haukins to Braſil. A king of Braſil brought into England.

Hauing remained here the ſpace almoſt of a whole yeere, and the king with his ſight fully ſatiſfied, M. Hawkins according to his promiſe and appointment, purpoſed to conuey him againe into his countrey: but it fell out in the way, that by change of aire and alteration of diet, the ſaid Sauage king died at ſea, which was feared would turne to the loſſe of the life of Martin Cockeram his pledge. Neuertheleſſe, the Sauages being fully perſwaded of the honeſt dealing of our men with their prince, reſtored againe the ſaid pledge, without any harme to him, or any man of the company: which pledge of theirs they brought home againe into England, with their ſhip fraighted, and furniſhed with the commodities of the countrey. Which Martin Cockeram, by the witneſſe of Sir Iohn Hawkins, being an officer in the towne of Plimmouth, was liuing within theſe fewe yeeres.

An ancient voyage of M. Robert Reniger and M. Thomas Borey to Braſil in the yeere of our Lord 1540.

I Haue bene certainly informed by M. Anthony Garrard an ancient and worſhipfull marchant of the citie of London, that this commodious and gainefull voyage to Braſil was ordinarily and vſually frequented by M. Robert Reniger, M. Thomas Borey, and diuers other ſubſtantial and wealthie marchants of Southampton, about 60. yeeres paſt, that is to ſay in the yeere 1540.

A voyage of one Pudſey to Baya in Braſil anno 1542.

ALſo the worſhipfull M. Edward Cotton of Southhampton Eſquire gaue mee more particularly to vnderſtand, how that one Pudſey of Southampton, a man of good ſkill and reſolution in marine cauſes, made a voyage in like maner 62. yeeres agoe to Baya de todos los Santos the principall towne of all Braſil, and the ſeate of the Portugal vice-roy and of the biſhop, and that he built a fort not farre diſtant from that place, in the foreſaid yeere 1542.

A fort built in Braſil by the Engliſh.

A letter written to M. Richard Staper by Iohn VVhithal from Santos in Braſil, the 26. of Iune 1578.

WOrſhipfull ſir, and welbeloued friend M. Staper, I haue me moſt heartily commended vnto you, wiſhing your health euen as mine owne.

Theſe few words may bee to let you vnderſtand, that whereas I wrote vnto you not many dayes paſt by the way of Liſbon, howe that I determined to bee with you very ſhortly, it is in this countrey offered mee to marry, and to take my choice of three or foure: ſo that I am about three dayes agoe conſorted with an Italian gentleman to marry with his daughter within theſe foure dayes. This my friend and father in law Signor Ioſſo Dore is borne in the citie of Genua in Italy: his kindred is well knowen amongſt the Italians in London: alſo hee hath but onely this childe which is his daughter, which hee hath thought better beſtowed vpon mee then on any Portugal in all the countrey, and doeth giue with her in marriage to me part of an Ingenio which he hath, that doeth make euery yeere a thouſand roues of ſugar. This my mariage will be worth to me two thouſand duckets, little more or leſſe. Alſo Signor Ioſſo Dore my father in lawe doeth intende to put into my handes the whole Ingenio with ſixtie or ſeuentie ſlaues, and thereof to make me factor for vs both. I giue my liuing Lord thankes for placing me in ſuch honour and plentifulneſſe of all things.

Alſo certaine dayes paſt I talked with the Prouedor and the Captaine, and they haue certified me, that they haue diſcouered certaine Mines of ſiluer and gold, and looke euery day for Maſters to come to open the ſaid Mines: which when they be opened will inrich this countrey very much. This place is called S. Vincent, and is diſtant from you two thouſand leagues, and in 24. degrees of latitude on the South ſide of the Equinoctial line, & almoſt vnder the Tropike of Capricorne. A countrey it is very healthfull without ſickneſſe.

Mines of gold and ſiluer newly diſcouered at S. Vincent.

Moreouer, I haue talked with the Captaine and Prouedor, and my father in law, who rule all this countrey, for to haue a ſhip with goods to come from London hither, which haue promiſed mee to giue mee licence, ſaying that nowe I am free denizen of this countrey. To cauſe a ſhip to come hither with ſuch commodities as would ſerue this countrey, would come to great gaines, God ſending in ſafety the profite and gaines. In ſuch wares and commodities as you may ſhip hither from London is for euery one commoditie deliuered here three for one, and then after the proceed may be imployed in white ſugar at foure hundred reis the roue.

The voyage to S. Vincent worth three for one outward only.

I meane alſo to haue a friend in London to ſende mee a ſhip of 60. or 70. tunnes, little more or leſſe, with ſuch commodities as I ſhall giue aduiſe for. This voyage is as good as any Peru-voyage. If you and Maſter Osborne will deale here, I will deale with you before any other, becauſe of our old friendly friendſhip in time paſt. If you haue any ſtomacke thereto, in the Name of God do you eſpie out a fine barke of ſeuentie or eightie tunnes, and ſend her hither with a Portugal Pilot to this port of S. Vincent in Braſil, bordering vpon the borders of Peru.

Alſo I herewith write vnto you in what forme and maner you ſhall furniſh this voyage both in commodities and otherwiſe.

In what maner a voyage to S. Vincent with a ſhip of 70. or 80. tunnes is to made.

Firſt you muſt lade in the ſaid ſhip certaine Hampſhire and Deuonſhire karſies: for the which you muſt let her depart from London in October, and to touch in the Canaries, and there to make ſale of the ſaide karſies, and with the proceed thereof to lade fifteene tunnes of wines that be perfect and good, and ſixe dozen of Cordouan ſkinnes of theſe colours, to wit, orenge tawnie, yellow, red, and very fine black. I thinke you ſhall not finde ſuch colours there. Therefore you muſt cauſe them that ſhall go vpon this voyage, to take ſaffron with them, to cauſe the ſame ſkinnes to bee put into the ſaide colours. Alſo I thinke you ſhall finde oyles there. Three hogſheads of ſweete oyle for this voyage are very neceſſary, or a hundred & fiftie iarres of oyle. Alſo in London you may lade in the ſaid ſhip theſe parcels of commodities or wares, as followeth:

In primis, Foure peeces of hollands of middle ſort.
Item, One peece of fine holland.
Foure hundred elles of oſenbriges very fine.
Foure dozen of ſizzors of all ſorts.
Sixteene kintals of pitch of the Canaries.
Twentie dozen of great kniues which be made in fardles, of a low price.
Foure dozen of a ſmall ſort.
Sixe peeces of bayes of the loweſt ſort.
One very fine peece of bayes.
Foure hundred elles of Mancheſter-cottons, moſt blacke, greene, ſome yellow.
Eight or tenne dozen of hats, the one halfe trimmed with taffata, the other plaine, with the bands of Cypreſſe.
Sixe dozen of courſe ſhirts.
Three dozen of doublets of canuas.
Three dozen of doublets of ſtitched canuas.
One peece of fine Millan-fuſtian barred.
Sixe dozen of locks for doores and cheſts.
Sixe thouſand of all maner of fiſh hooks.
Foure dozen reames of paper.
Two dozen of glaſſes of diuers ſorts.
Two dozen of Venice glaſſes, the one halfe great, the other middle ſort.
Two dozen of mantles of frize, of the loweſt price that can be.
Three dozen of frize gownes.
Foure hundred pound of tinne of the vſe of Portugall, moſt ſmal diſhes and trenchers.
Foure pound of ſilke of all colours.
Twentie pound of ſpices, cloues, cinamom, pepper, and ſaffron.
Two kintals of white ſope.
Three pound of threed, white, blacke, and blew.
Three pound of fine white threed.
Item, halfe a dozen of Northerne karſies of diuers colours.
Foure ſorting clothes, blew, red, yellow, and green.
Sixe Northerne dozens of diuers colours.
One fine blew cloth of eight pound.
One fine ſtamell of tenne or twelue pound.
One fine ſheeps coloured cloth of twelue pound.
One fine blacke karſie. } { One fine ſtamell karſie.
Sixe yards of blacke veluet.
Three barrels of nailes for cheſts.
Two barrels of nailes for ſhips and barks.
Sixe kintals of Occom.
Two dozen of veluet girdles without hangers.

Foure yards of taffata red, blacke, and blew, with ſome greene.
Two dozen of leather girdles.
Sixe dozen of axes, hatchets, and ſmall billes to cut wood.
Foure maſes of gitterne ſtrings.
Foure hundred or fiue hundred elles of ſome linnen cloth that is of a low price to make ſhirts and ſheets.
Foure tunne of yron.

These be ſuch ſort of wares as I would you ſhould ſend. If you meane to deale, or ſend any ſhip hither, haue you no doubt, but by the helpe of God I ſhall put all things in good order according to your contentment and profit: for my father in lawe with the Captaine and Prouedor doe rule this countrey.

My father in law & I ſhal (God willing) make a good quantitie of ſugar euery yeere, which ſugar we intend to ſhip for London from henceforth, if we can get ſuch a truſtie & good friend as you to deale with vs in this matter. I pray you preſently after the receit of this my letter to write mee anſwere thereof, & ſend your letter to M. Holder to Lisbone, & he wil conuey it to me out of hand.

Beſides the premiſſes ſend ſixe yards of ſkarlet, parchment lace of diuers colours.
Sixe yards of crimoſin veluet.
Sixe yards of crimoſin ſatten.
Twelue yards of fine puke blacke.

Here in this countrey in ſtead of Iohn Whithall they haue called me Iohn Leitoan: ſo that they haue vſed this name ſo long time, that at this preſent there is no remedie but it muſt remaine ſo. When you write vnto me, let the ſuperſcription be vnto Iohn Leitoan.

Iohn Leitoan.

Thus I commit you with all yours to the holy Ghoſt for euer.

If you ſend this ſhip, I would haue you giue order that ſhe touch in no part of the coaſt of Guinie nor any other coaſt, but to come directly hither to the port of S. Vincent, and from the Canaries let her be diſpatched in my name, to wit, Iohn Leitoan.

Alſo a dozen of ſhirts for my wearing let be ſent, if you ſend the ſhip.
Item, ſixe or eight pieces of ſayes for mantles for women, which is the moſt neceſſary thing that can be ſent.

By your aſſured friend Iohn Whithall.

A copie of the letters of the Aduenturers for Braſill ſent to Iohn Whithall dwelling in Santos, by the Minion of London. Anno 1580. the 24. of October in London.

MAſter Whithall, as vnacquainted wee commend vs vnto you, &c. vnderſtanding by your friends, M. Iohn Bird, M. Robert Walkaden, and your brother Iames Whithall of certaine letters that they haue receiued of yours frō Santos, which wee haue ſeene and read, wherein from time to time you doe require, and deſire them to ſend a good ſhip to Santos, with ſuch wares and commodities as you did write for, whereby you did not onely promiſe that they ſhould haue good intertainment, but alſo ſhould ſell the ſaide commodities to make three of one outward at the leaſt in euery thing, and that for to relade their ſhip backe, they ſhould haue of the beſt, fineſt, & whiteſt drie ſugars 32. pound of our weight for a ducket at the moſt. The premiſes conſidered, with the great credit that they and we doe giue to your writing & promiſe, haue cauſed vs, whoſe names be hereunder written, to ioyne our ſelues in company together, & to be at great charges purpoſely to ſend this good ſhip the Minion of London, not onely with ſuch marchandizes as you wrote for, but alſo with as many other things as we thought might any wayes pleaſure you, or profit the country. And we craue of you, that we and our factors may haue ſo much credite of you, as we haue in you and of your letters, which is to beleeue vs that we haue taken this voyage vpon vs, with no other minde or purpoſe, then to deale faithfully and truely in the trade by ſea and land, ſo as you ſhall not onely haue cauſe to reioyce, and deſerue thanks for our comming, but alſo you wil procure the magiſtrates there to be bound, as they vſe in Galicia, that we may be preſerued and defended from all repriſals and imbargments of princes or ſubiects for any cauſes or matters whatſoeuer, whereby wee may bee incouraged by them, giuing vs this ſecuritie of good intertainment, to continue the trade yeerely henceforth: and for our parts we promiſe vpon our credits and fidelities, to commit no outrage at the ſea nor land, nor ſuffer any to be done in our company that we may let, but rather to defend and protect all other ſuch peaceable marchants as we are, with their ſhips and goods.

And to the ende that you and others ſhall know that wee meane as we ſay, we haue giuen order to our factours to giue you good hoſtages for your aſſurance of our good fidelities: and further we haue ſent a teſtimoniall of our owne true meaning in writing vnder the ſeales of this honourable Citie of London, which we wil not diſcredite by our behauiours for all the treaſure that you haue: and ſo we haue written to your magiſtrates of your port, and others in Spaniſh, the copy whereof we ſend you herewith encloſed in Engliſh. And if the time ſhould fal out ſo contrary to our expectations, that there ſhould not be fine white ſugar ſufficient to lade our ſaid ſhip in due time at Santos, then we pray you direct our factours where they may goe with the ſhippe in ſafetie to ſupply their want, and helpe them to a good ſure Pilot for that purpoſe, and write your letters to your friends where the beſt ſugar is made in their fauors, and helpe our factours to haue a teſtimoniall from Santos, that they and you traded together friendly, and ſo departed in good and perfect amitie, and ſhew them that the iuſt cauſe of our comming is to trade as marchants peaceably, and not as Pirats to commit any offence to one or other.

Alſo we pray you, if there be any ſtore of ware, or ſalt-peeter, whereby the price there may yeeld vs as much profit as the white ſugars at a ducket the roue, or any other commodity of like profite, then to procure that we may lade it without danger of lawe, be it oare of golde or ſiluer or whatſoeuer elſe.

Wee haue ſent you copper cauldrons for your Ingenios, with iron and all other neceſſaries for your purpoſe, and artificers to ſet the ſame: and as wee haue at your requeſt bene at great charges in ſending theſe men, ſo we pray you let vs haue lawful fauour in like courteſie to further all our cauſes. And if any of our Mariners or paſſengers in any reſpect of diſpleaſure againſt their company, or in hope of preferment of mariage or otherwiſe would procure to tary and dwell there, and leaue his charge and office, that then you will bee a meane to the Iuſtice that ſuch fugitiues ſhould bee ſent abord the ſhip as priſoners: for as you know, without our men wee cannot bring home our ſhip.

Wee haue giuen order to our factours to vſe your counſell and helpe in their affaires, and to gratifie you for the ſame as to your courteſie and faithfull friendſhip ſhall appertaine to your good liking: and in the meane time for a token of our good willes towards you, we haue ſent you a field-bed of walnut tree, with the canopy, vaiens, curtaines, and gilt knops. And if there be any commoditie elſe that may pleaſure you or your friends, wee haue giuen order that they ſhall haue the refuſing of it before any other, giuing for it as it is worth.

And thus to conclude, promiſing to performe all the foreſaide things on our parts in euery condition, we commit you to God, who euer preſerue you with all his bleſſings.

Your louing friends

M. Stephen Hare was Captaine in this voyage.

Certaine notes of the voyage to Braſill with the Minion of London, aforeſaid, in the yere 1580. written by Thomas Grigs Purſer of the ſaid ſhip.

The thirde day of Nouember in the yeere abouesaid we departed in the Minion of London from Harwich, from which time no great thing worth the knowledge or regard of others happened vntil the 22. of December the next moneth, which day for our owne learning & vſe wee obſerued the ſetting of the Sunne, which was Weſt ſouthweſt, we then being vnder the line Equinoctiall, where we found the aire very temperate, and the winde for the moſt part Southeaſt and Eaſt ſoutheaſt. The ſame day we alſo obſerued the riſing of the moone, being one day after the full, which roſe at Eaſt northeaſt.

The yle of S. Sebaſtian.

The firſt land that wee fell with vpon the coaſt of Braſill was the yland of S. Sebaſtian, where we arriued the 14. day of Ianuary in the yeere 1581.

The 16. day Thomas Babington, and others in our pinneſſe, went a ſhoare to Guaybea, where they met with Iohn Whithall his father and mother in lawe, who hauing receiued letters from thence to be deliuered at Santos, came abord, and then we weyed and ſet ſaile, and the 28. day wee arriued at the yland of Santa Catelina, neere the entrance of Santos.

The yle of S. Catelina.

Our courſe from S. Sebaſtian was Southweſt and by Weſt, and betwixt the Southweſt and by Weſt, and Weſt ſouthweſt.

This yland of Santa Catelina ſeemeth at the firſt to be a part of the yland of Girybia. Wee ankered at nine fathome blacke oſie ground.

Vpon the yland there grow many Palmito-trees, but no freſh water is there to be found.

The third day of February we arriued before the towne of Santos, and were there well receiued and intertained of the Captaine, the kings officers, and all the people.

They arriue at Santos.

The fourth day we tooke into our ſhip a beefe aliue, which ſerued for the victualling of the ſhip, and the refreſhing of our men, and to make vs the merrier at Shrouetide.

The eight day we deliuered to M. Iohn Whithall a bedſtead with the appurtenances, which were ſent to him from our marchants of London.

The 18. day the captaine of Santos came aboord our ſhip, by whom we had knowledge of foure great French ſhips of warre, that had bene at the riuer of Ienero, which there tooke three Canoas, but were driuen from thence by their caſtles & forts, and were looked for here at Santos. Whereupon the Captaine requeſted vs to lend them ſome armour and artillery, and we lent them twentie caliuers, and two barrels of powder.

The 19. day our ſkiffe which we had ſent to Alcatrarzas, and had bene away ſixe dayes, came againe, and brought good ſtore of great and good fiſh, and tolde vs that there was good ſtore of fiſh to be taken there by the hooke, and as much wood as we would haue of the Palmito-tree.

The yle of Alcatrarzas or Pelicanes.

The 20. day at night Nicholas Gale, one of our company, fell ouer our ſhippes ſide, and was drowned in the port of Santos before the towne, where our ſhip rode at anker.

The 22. day two of the Canoas which the Frenchmen tooke in the riuer of Ienero, returned to Santos, and reported that the foure French ſhips were paſt to the ſouthwards, as they thought, for the Straights of Magellan, and ſo into the South ſea.

The 23. day the aforeſaide Nicholas Gale, who fell ouerbord two dayes before, was found againe, and taken vp three miles from our ſhip, and our company went to his buriall in the Church at Santos.

This day the Captaine and Iuſtices of Santos wiſhed vs to tary in their road till the laſt of April, for they had ſent a barke of Santos to Baya at the kings charges, to know whether we ſhould haue trade there or no, and this barke could not returne before that time.

About this time there arriued at Fernambuck a ſhippe from Portugall, which brought newes that the Iſlands, Indies, and Portugall it ſelfe was moleſted and troubled by the Spaniards, and that the Portugales had both Engliſh and Frenchmen to Lisbone to defend them againſt Spaine.

The 25. day wee ſent two of our men, namely Thomas Michael and Simon Thorne to Baya in a barke that went thither from Santos.

The two and twentie day of Aprill our Maſter and Thomas Babington hauing ſome talke and conference with the Padres of Santos, they (our men being ready to go to the Riuer of Ienero) tolde them, that they were ſorry for our baniſhment from the Church, and that the Miniſtrador had written from Rio de Ienero, that foraſmuch as theſe twentie yeres or more the Engliſh nation had denied the Church of Rome and her proceedings, therefore the Miniſtrador commanded that none of vs ſhould come to their Church: the Padres willed vs herein to haue patience, and to take it in good part, and promiſed to ſtand our friends in their word and writing, both to the Miniſtrador and to the biſhop at Baya, and further requeſted all our Engliſh company to haue no ill opinion of them.

The 28. of April we laded ſugars into our ſhip.

Their lading of ſugars.

The 21. of May we tooke in freſh victuals from Santos.

The 10. day of Iune wee gratified one Ioſto Thorno, dwelling in Santos, with ſome of our Engliſh victuals, and intertained him in good ſort in our ſhip, and this day wee were promiſed to haue a Pilot at Santos to cary vs to Baya.

The 11. day we went to fiſh, to make prouiſion for our ſhip and men, and from that time till the eighteenth day wee fet water, and cut wood for our fire, and trimmed our ſhip of the harmes and leakes which the wormes had made in her while wee ridde at the yland of S. Sebaſtian, and in the meane time we departed from before the towne of Santos. Our Maſter ſent his ſkiffe from the barre of Santos, thinking to haue brought Thomas Babington and William Euet with the Pilot, which wee had tarried for three dayes: and as the ſkiffe was going, William Euet being by the Riuers ſide, called to our pinneſſe, and ſent a letter to our * Maſter, which Thomas Babington had written, wherein were no newes, but that the Miniſtrador was arriued at Santos from the Riuer of Ienero, and would ſpeake with our Maſter, but he willed that whatſoeuer Thomas Babington did write, no credit ſhould be giuen to it. And further he wiſhed vs preſently to depart for Sant Sebaſtian, and there to diſpatch our buſineſſe, and then to ſende backe for Babington and himſelfe himſelfe to Guaybea, where he (if he were well) would giue his attendance to come abord.

Their departure from Santos.

As we rid two leagues a ſea-bord the barre of Santos, wee broke a cable in the open ſea, which happened the 15. day of this moneth.

We arriued at S. Sebaſtian the 15. day, and there ſhifted our balaſt, and had in ſtones, and halled our ſhip a ground to ſtop our leakes, & caried our caſke a ſhoare to be hooped for water, which indeed might better haue bene done in Santos, before the Miniſtrador came thither: yet we finiſhed all things pertaining to our ſhip, by the 22. of this moneth, at S. Sebaſtian.

The firſt day of Iuly Thomas Babington came abord with William Euet, in our pinneſſe, and the reſt of our men that went for them: but there was no Pilot brought according to promiſe to cary vs to Baya.

The things that we obſerued and noted in the time of our being at Santos, were theſe.

All ſuch wares and marchandizes as owe no cuſtome in Braſill, their vſe is, to ſet a price vpon the ſame, how they ſhalbe ſold: which is done by the magiſtrates of the towne, according to the ordinances of their king.

But for all ſuch marchandizes as do owe cuſtome there, the marchants are to ſell them according as they may, to the greateſt profit and aduantage that they can.

Some part of Peru but 12. dayes iourney from Santos.

Concerning the prouince of Peru, wee learned that one part of it by land & water is but twelue dayes iourney from the towne of Santos, and from thence it may be about foure or fiue dayes iourney by water to the maine riuer of Plate.

From the head of the riuer of Plate, and from their chiefe townes there, they doe trade and trafique by land into Peru by waggons, and horſes or mules.

The ſaide riuer of Plate is ſo full of ſands and dangers, and the freſh ſo fierce ſometimes, that no ſhipping dares to deale with it, ſmall barks to their knowledge may go vp it, and not els.

The Portugales forbidden to vſe their mines.

The Portugales here cannot bee ſuffered to vſe their Mines of treaſure in theſe parts, vpon paine of death, the contrary being commanded by the king and the Vice-roy, who is as their king in place of authoritie.

About twentie leagues from Santos there is a certaine kinde of wilde Sauages, lying in the mountaines, which are in friendſhip with the Portugales, and they haue continuall warres with certaine other Sauages that dwell towards the borders of Peru, which is diſtant from Santos about 400. or 500. leagues. Thoſe Sauages of Peru haue ſtore of gold and ſiluer, but they know not the vſe of it.

Looke what Sauages of their enemies they take, they ſell them to the Portugales for kniues, combes, axes or hatchets, and other trifles: they will ſell one for a pennie-knife to a Portugal, and after two yeeres they are worth twentie or thirtie duckets to the Portugal.

This people haue alſo continuall warres with the Spaniards: and this was tolde vs by one of thoſe Sauages, which hath dwelt among the Portugales theſe ſeuen yeeres, with his maſter called Sennor Manoel Veloſo. And this fellowe would willingly haue come with vs for England.

The yle of Alcatrarzas or Pelicanes, dangerous for rocks.

There are certaine rockes that lie off betweene the yle of Alcatrarzas and S. Sebaſtian, about two leagues, which are to be taken heed of, which a farre off in faire weather ſhewe like the ſailes of ſhips.

There are other rocks that lie off S. Catelina alſo fiue leagues to the Eaſt and by South into the ſea off the yland.

At our comming vp to Santos we found foure fadom and a halfe water in the ſhalloweſt place, and the like we found within a league after we were departed from S. Catelina, litle more or leſſe, but after you haue runne in the depth of foure fadome and a halfe, about a mile or leſſe, then you ſhall haue it deeper againe more and more.

Before the towne of Santos we rode in eight and tenne fadome water.

A letter of Francis Suares to his brother Diego Suares dwelling in Lisbon, written from the riuer of Ienero in Braſill in Iune 1596. concerning the exceeding rich trade newly begunne betweene that place and Peru, by the way of the riuer of Plate, with ſmall barks of 30. and 40. tunnes.

SIr, we ſet ſaile from Lisbon the fourth of April 1596. and arriued here in this riuer of Ienero the twentie ſeuenth of Iune next enſuing. And the ſame day the Viſitadores did viſit our ſhip with great ioy, thinking that thoſe commodities which wee brought with vs, had bene for the marchants of this countrey: but it prooued to the contrary.

The pilot brought with him in the ſayd ſhippe two pipes of wine which were taken from him, and ſolde by the Iuſtice for foure and twenty reals euery gallon. But I ſolde mine for two and thirty and ſixe and thirty reals the gallon. If I had brought any great ſtore of wine, I ſhould haue made a great gaine of it: for I ſhould haue gotten eight reals for one.

Wine ſolde at an exceſſiue rate.

The next day in the morning wee went all on ſhore, and gaue God thanks for our proſperous voyage, and good ſucceſſe which he had ſent vs. And becauſe the gouernour of this countrey was gone from this Towne to another houſe of his, three leagues vp into the riuer beyond the place where we rode at anker, I deſired the captaine of our ſhippe after dinner, that we might take the ſhippe boat, and goe to the place where the gouernour did lie. And ſo going vp the riuer, we met with a canoa which was comming downe the riuer, and going aboord our ſhippe; which canoa was laden with freſh victuals, and in the ſame was one Portugall, which met vs, and tolde vs that the gouernour of that captaineſhippe had ſent vs a preſent, which we receiued very thankefully, and ſent it aboord. And we went vp the riuer, to the place where the gouernour did dwell; and comming to the place where we landed, hard by the the riuers ſide, the gouernour came thither and receiued vs very courteouſly. So we remained at his houſe two dayes, talking of many matters of Portugall: then we departed from him, and came downe the riuer.

Three dayes after, I hired a ware-houſe by my ſelfe, and landed my commodities. And now I am ſelling them as faſt as I can; and ſell them very well, and to great profit: for I haue ſolde all our hats. I would I had brought forty or fifty dozen, by reaſon of the great vtterance of them vp into Peru, and into the new kingdome of Granada, by the way of the riuer of Plate. For here is paſſage euery three or foure moneths with barks of thirty and forty tunnes a piece, which are laden with ſugars, rice, taffataes, hats, and other kindes of commodities of this countrey, which are caried vp the ſayd riuer of Plate in the ſayd barks, and thence are conueyed vp into Peru. And theſe barks are but tenne or twelue dayes going vp the ſayd riuer to Peru. And within foure and fiue moneths after, the ſayd barkes come downe this riuer againe laden with reals of plate, and bring downe from thoſe places no other commodities but treaſure. It is a woonderfull thing to beholde the great gaine and profit which is gotten in this riuer and in this countrey. I am aſhamed to write it, fearing that I ſhall not be beleeued. For the imployment of one hundred ducats in Spaine, being brought hither, will yeeld twelue hundred and fifteene hundred ducats profit. This trade hath beene vſed but within this yeere. For wee can goe vp to the mines of Potoſi, which are the beſt and the richeſt mines in all Peru. If the merchants of Spaine and Portugall did know this trade, they would not ſend nor venture ſo much merchandiſe to Cartagena as they doe. For vp this riuer is a great deale the neerer way, and the eaſier to go to Peru. For the Peruleros or merchants of Peru, which dwell there, come downe to this harbour and riuer of Ienero, and bring with them fifteene thouſand and twentie thouſand ducats in reals of plate and gold, and imploy it heere in this riuer in commodities: and when heere are no commodities to be had for money in this place, then theſe merchants of Peru are conſtrained to go to Baia and Fernambuc, and there to imploy their money. I would I had brought good ſtore of ſilks, and not theſe kinde of commodities which I did bring. For heere is more profit to be had a great deale then in the voyage of Angola. For heere with fiue hundred ducats in fiue moneths ſpace a man may get ſixe thouſand ducats, And this is no fable, but moſt true, and a great deale more then I can expreſſe. For a rapier which doeth coſt in Spaine foure and twenty and ſixe and twenty reals, is ſolde heere for forty and fifty ducats: a bridle for a horſe is ſolde for fifteene ducats: a locke of a doore and the key is ſolde for ten ducats: a pound of beniamin is ſolde for fifteene ducats: a yard of veluet is ſolde for twenty and fiue and twenty ducats: taffataes are ſolde for ſixe and ſeuen ducats the vare: an ownce of muske is ſolde for forty ducats. and all kinde of commodities after this rate. So one thouſand ducats of Spaniſh commodities will gaine tenne thouſand ducats. Thus I hope in God to make more profit and gaine this voyage, then in two voyages to Angola: for I haue ſolde moſt of my hats for two duckets and a halfe and for three ducats. The reſt I will cary to Angola, to helpe to ſell the reſt of my commodities, which I cannot ſell in this riuer. And I haue ſolde an hundred cubits of broad cloth for fiue hundred and fiue hundred and fifty and ſixe hundred reys the cubit. If I would haue ſolde all my cloth for ready money tolde downe for foure hundred and fifty and fiue hundred reyes, the merchants would haue bought it all of me: but I would ſell no more, becauſe I meant to exchange it in Angola for Negros. Howbeit with ready money in hand in Angola a man ſhall buy better Negros, and better cheape. The captaine of our ſhip ſolde all his cloth for ready money for foure hundred & fifty reys the cubit, and thought that he had made a good market: but he hath deceiued himſelfe. I ſolde ſix broad clothes for fiue hundred and fifty reys the cubit: and I was offered thirty thouſand reys for a cloth. Vineger is ſolde for two and thirty, and ſixe and thirty, and forty reals a iarre, by reaſon there is great ſtore of limmons and orenges in the countrey: but in Angola it is more woorth. Oliues are ſolde for halfe a reall a piece: wherefore I hope to ſell the hogſhead for twenty thouſand reys. In taffataes and veluets there will be gotten two hundred and fifty and three hundred for one hundred. If I had brought great ſtore, I could haue ſolde it all at this rate. I haue already gotten good ſtore of reals of plate: for it is tolde mee that money is a good commodity in Angola. But I muſt imploy ſome in meale, which is in the grinding. All the reſt of my money I will ſend you by billes of exchange, and ſome part I will imploy in ſugars: for I haue ſent order to Baia for that purpoſe. For from this place there is no ſhipping that doth go that way. So theſe letters I do ſend by the way of Fernambuc, and haue directed them to my couſin: for I do determine to ſettle my ſelfe here in this countrey. There is come downe from Peru, by this riuer of Plate, a merchant called Alonſo Ramires, and he hath brought downe with him ten or twelue thouſand ducats in reals of plate, and is come downe to this place to build him a ſhip to returne into Spaine: and there is come in his company a biſhop. And thus Ieſus Chriſt ſend you long health.

Your louing brother Francis Suares.

The well gouerned and proſperous voyage of M. Iames Lancaſter, begun with three ſhips and a galley-frigat from London in October 1594, and intended for Fernambuck, the port-towne of Olinda in Braſil. In which voyage (beſides the taking of nine and twenty ſhips and frigats) he ſurprized the ſayd port-towne, being ſtrongly fortified and manned; and held poſſeſſion thereof thirty dayes together (notwithſtanding many bolde aſſaults of the enemy both by land and water) and alſo prouidently defeated their dangerous and almoſt ineuitable fire-works. Heere he found the cargazon or freight of a rich Eaſt Indian carack; which together with great abundance of ſugars, Braſil-wood, and cotton he brought from thence; lading therewith fifteene ſailes of tall ſhips and barks.

IN September 1594 the worſhipfull M. Iohn Wats, alderman, M. Paul Banning, alderman, & others of worſhip in the city of London, victualled three good ſhips; to wit, The Conſent, of the burthen of 240 tunnes or thereabout, The Salomon, of 170 tunnes, and The Virgin, of 60 tunnes: and appointed for commanders in this voyage, M. Iames Lancaſter of London, gentleman, admirall of the fleet, M. Edmund Barker of London, viceadmirall, and M. Iohn Audely of Poplar neere London, rereadmirall, hauing in their ſayd ſhips to the number of 275 men and boyes.

Being fully furniſhed with all needfull prouiſion, wee departed from Blackwall in October following, keeping our owne coaſt, vntill we came into the Weſt countrey, where we met with ſuch guſts and ſtormes, that the Salomon ſpending her maſt at the Range of Dartmouth, put into harbour; but by the earneſt care and induſtry of the generall and others hauing charge, ſhe was ſhortly againe prouided. Which done, hauing a pleaſant gale for our purpoſe, we put foorth from Dartmouth the laſt of Nouember following. But contrary to our expectation, not fifty leagues from our owne coaſt, we loſt the Salomon and the Virgin, by a ſtorme of contrary winde that fell vpon vs: yet being alone, in hope to meet them about the Canaries or Cape Blank, we kept on our courſe to the Canaries, but could heare no tidings of our conſorts; which greatly grieued vs.

Thence we went, bearing for the iſle of Tenerif, where in the morning early we had ſight of a ſaile, which being becalmed vnder the ſhore, was towing with their boat ahead, hauing one other at her ſterne. For this ſaile we manned our boat, appointing our men wel for fight, if need ſhould require. The Spaniards ſeeing our boat come, entred theirs, and leauing the ſhip, ſought to ſaue themſelues by flight: but our men purſued them ſo faſt, that they boorded them, and brought them with their ſhippe to our Generall. This ſhip was laden with 80 tunnes of Canary-wine, which came not vnto vs before it was welcome. We kept and manned it, plying that day, and the next night thereabout. The very next morning we had ſight of one other; to whome in like maner wee ſent our boat: but their gunner made a ſhot at her, and ſtrooke off a propper yoong mans arme; yet we inforced her to yeeld, and found 40 tunnes of wine in her. The Spaniards hauing their free paſſage, and an acquitance for the deliuery of their wines, were all ſet on ſhore vpon Tenerif, making a quicke returne of their long voyage intended into the Weſt Indies.

Another prize with 40 tuns of wine taken.

Hence we departed toward Cape Blank; and before wee came thither, we met againe with the Virgin our rereadmirall, whoſe men tolde vs for very trueth, that the Salomon was returned for England; inforced ſo to doe, by ſpending her maſt the ſecond time. Which when our men vnderſtood ſtood, they were all in a maze, not knowing what to doe, and ſaying among themſelues that their force was but ſmall when all our ſtrength were together, and now we had loſt the one halfe of our ſtrength, we were not able to performe the voyage: and therefore ſome of them came to the captain, aſking him what he would now do, ſeeing the Salomon was loſt, the one halfe of our ſtrength, giuing him counſell to beare vp for the Weſt Indies, and proue there to make his voyage, becauſe his firſt plat for want of ſtrength was cleane ouerthrown. The captaine hearing this new nouelty, as not vnacquainted with the variable pretenſes of mariners, made them this anſwere: Sirs, I made knowen to you all at my comming out of England what I pretended, and that I meant to go for Fernambuck, and although at the preſent we want one of our ſhips, yet (God willing) I meane to go forward, not doubting but to meet her at the appointed places, which are either at Cape Blank or the iſlands of Cape Verde: for I am aſſured that M. Barker the captaine is ſo reſolute to performe this voyage, that his maſt being repaired, he will not faile to meet vs, & it were no wiſdome for vs to diuert our courſe, till we haue ſought him at thoſe places where our appointed meeting is: for the diuerting of courſes is the ouerthrow of moſt of our actions. And I hope you will be all contented herewith: for to go any other courſe then I haue determined, (by Gods helpe) I will not be drawen vnto. With theſe reaſons and many others ſhewed, they reſted all ſatiſfied: and at our comming to Cape Blank (God be praiſed) we met with the Salomon with no ſmall ioy to vs all; and there ſhe had taken of Spaniards and Portugals 24 ſaile of ſhips and carauels, fiſher-men, and had taken out of them ſuch neceſſaries as ſhe had need of. Of theſe ſhips our captaine tooke foure along with him, with another that he had taken himſelfe, meaning to imploy them as occaſion ſhould ſerue. At this place he vnderſtood of one of the pilots of thoſe ſhips, that one of the caracks that came out of the Eaſt Indies, was caſt away in the rode of Fernambuc, and that all her goods were layd vpon the Arraçiſe which is the lower towne. Of theſe newes we were all glad, and reioyced much; for our hopes were very good, ſeeing ſuch a booty before vs.

Foure & twenty ſailes of ſhips & of carauels taken by the Salomon.

Of this good company and happy ſucceſſe we were all ioyful, and had great hope of the bleſſing of God in performance of our intended voyage, and ſo after ſome parle & making frolike for ioy of our meeting one with the other (praiſing God for all) we plied for Maio: where comming to anker, our generall & the reſt of the captaines went aſhore to view the place where we might in beſt ſafety ſet our gally-frigat together; which frame wee brought from England of purpoſe to land men in the country of Braſil. Here we diſcharged our great prize of wine, and ſet her on fire: but before our comming thither, you ſhall vnderſtand we had ſight of foure ſailes, which was captaine Venner in his ſhip the Peregrine, and a proper Biſkaine which he tooke at Cape Blank, the Welcome of Plymmouth & her pinneſſe: all which ſtood with vs. But they ſeeing our flags, not expecting ſuch good fellowes as we, did beare from vs all they might; which our people tooke very vnkindly, that being all friends, they would neither enquire, nor tell vs any newes of our friends, but without making any ſhew of kindnes would ſo depart. As before I haue ſaid, the choice being made for the place to build the gally-frigat, aſhore it was brought, where the carpenters applied their worke, ſtill cheered vnto it by the generals good gifts beſtowed among them, and kind vſage of the reſt of the commanders, not without great care of the captaine for the ſafety of them all, by keeping good watch: yet one negligent fellow, which had no knowledge of the country, ſtraying from his company, was by the Portugals taken, & very kindly vſed, and brought againe vnto vs: for which good the generall rewarded them well with gifts very acceptable, which they tooke as kindly. While wee were thus buſily imployed about the foreſayd galley, we deſcried at ſea foure ſailes, which we had good hope would haue prooued Indies men, or ſome to haue brought vs what wee looked for: but they proued captaine Venner with his fleet, as aforeſayd, who, ſeeing vs at anker, ankered alſo; where ſpending ſome time, and being acquainted with our generals determination for landing, conſorted with vs, & their bils, according to the maner of the ſea, were made and ſigned on either part, we to haue three parts, & he the fourth, of all that ſhould be taken, wherby our ſtrength was increaſed, to all our comforts. Three weeks or thereabouts we ſtayd in this place before the gally was finiſhed; which done, putting men into her, and fitting her with oares, hauing fourteene banks on a ſide, a maſt and ſaile, the commandement of her was committed vnto M. Wats, an honeſt ſkilfull mariner.

A gally-frigat caried out of England in pieces.

The gally-frigat ſet vp.

From thence we put againe to ſea, and went for the ile Braua, where we watered: which done, we made no long ſtay after, but bent our courſe as directly as we could for the place, making our firſt fall with the land to the Southward of Cape S. Auguſtine; from whence wee plied ſtill to our deſired port of Fernambuck, and did ſo much, that about midnight we came before the harbour; where ſome plied vp and downe, holding that the beſt policy, to forbeare the entring till day might giue them light, the harborow being hard, and therefore the more perillous. Our ſhips being being in ſafety well arriued, God was praiſed: and the generall in his boat went from ſhip to ſhip, willing them to make ready ſuch men as they could ſpare, with muſkets, pikes, billes, bowes arrowes, and what weapons they had to follow him. Himſelfe, with 80 men from his owne ſhip, imbarked himſelfe in the gally, which caried in her prow a good ſacar, and two murdering pieces.

Our admiral ſpent all the night in giuing directions to euery ſhip to haue their men ready ſhipped in their boats, for he intended to enter the harborow at the breake of day, & to leaue his ſhips without, till he had gotten the fort and the towne: for he would not aduenture the ſhips in, till the harborow was gotten. Alſo he prouided fiue ſhips, which he brought from Cape Blank, and put men in them as many as could conueniently ſaile them, and no more, giuing them charge to enter the harborow with his boats: for at the entrance of the harborow rode three great Holland ſhips, which our admirall doubted would impeach his going in; and therefore he gaue order to the men of theſe fiue ſmall ſhips, which were not aboue 60 tunnes a piece, if the Hollanders did offer any reſiſtance, to run aboord of them, & to ſet their owne ſhips on fire, and ſcape in their boats, which they had for the ſame purpoſe, that by this meanes they might not impeach our entrance. But when the morning was come, we were fallen aboue halfe a mile downe to the Northward, below the harborow, which was a great inconuenience vnto vs: ſo that before wee could get vp againe, the ebbe was come vpon vs, and thereby we were forced to houer before the harborow till two of the clocke in the afternoone, in the ſight of all the towne. In this meane time, our ſhips rode before the fort without the harborow, about a demy-coluering ſhot off: in the which time paſſed many ſhot betweene the fort and the ſhips, and eſpecially betweene the admirals ſhip and them: but no great harme was done on either part. All this while our admirall kept the men ready houering in the gally & the boats. The Hollanders that rode in the mouth of the harborow, ſeeing our reſolution, layd out haulſers, and wound themſelues out of the way of vs. Our admiral was very ioyfull, & gaue great incouragement to all his men: for, to paſſe theſe three great Hollanders, he held it the greateſt danger of all. About 12 of the clocke the gouerner of the towne ſent a Portugall aboord the admirals ſhip, to know what he would haue, and wherefore he came. He returned him this anſwere: That he wanted the caracks goods; and for them he came, and them he would haue, and that he ſhould ſhortly ſee. In this proceſſe of time, the townes-men and inhabitants which ſaw ſo much ſhipping, & perceiued vs to be enemies, gathered themſelues together, three or foure enſignes of men, eſteemed to the number of ſome ſix hundred at the leaſt. Theſe came to the fort or plat-forme lying ouer againſt the entry of the harborow, and there attended our landing: but before our admirall ſet forward with his boats, he gaue expreſſe order to all that had charge of gouerning the boats or galley, to run them with ſuch violence againſt the ſhore, that they ſhould be all caſt away without recouery, and not one man to ſtay in them, whereby our men might haue no maner of retreat to truſt vnto, but onely to God and their weapons.

Now was the time come of the flood, being about two of the clocke in the afternoone, when our admirall ſet forward, and entered the harborow with the ſmall galley, and all the reſt of the boats following him, the Hollanders that rode in the mouth of the harborow, nothing impeached him: but now the fort began to play with their ordinance vpon the galley and the boats; and one of their ſhot tooke away a great piece of our enſigne out of the galley. But our ſaile being ſet, it was no time for vs to make any ſtay, but with all the force we could we ranne the galley vpon the ſhore right vnder the fort, within a coits caſt of it, with ſuch violence, that we brake her backe; and ſhe ſuncke preſently: for there where we landed, went a breach of the ſea, which preſently caſt her away. The boats comming after did the like. At our arriuall, thoſe in the fort had laden all their ordinance, being ſeuen pieces of braſſe, to diſcharge them vpon vs at our landing; which indeed they did: for our admirall leaping into the water, all the reſt following him, off came theſe pieces of ordinance: but almighty God be praiſed, they in the fort, with feare to ſee vs land in their faces, had piked their ordinance ſo ſteepe downewards with their mouthes, that they ſhot all their ſhot in the ſand, although, as I ſayd before, it was not aboue a coits caſt at the moſt betweene the place wee landed and the face of the fort: ſo that they onely ſhot off one of our mens armes, without doing any more hurt; which was to vs a great bleſſing of God: for if thoſe ordinances had bene well leuelled, a great number of vs had loſt our liues at that inſtant. Our admirall ſeeing this, cried out, incouraging his men, Upon them, vpon them; all (by Gods helpe) is ours: and they therewith ran to the fort with all violence. Thoſe foure enſignes of men that were ſet to defend our landing, ſeeing this reſolution, began to go backe, and retire into certeine buſhes that were by the ſame fort; and being followed, fledde thorowe a certeine oaze which was drie, being then but the beginning of the tide: and ſo abandoned the fort, and left it with their ordinance to vs. This day of our arriuall was their Good-friday, when by cuſtome they vſually whippe themſelues:

ſelues: but God ſent vs now for a generall ſcourge to them all, whereby that labour among them might be well ſpared. The fort being taken with all their ordinance, the admirall waued to the ſhips, willing them to wey and come in; which they did with all ſpeed, himſelfe taking order in leauing certeine men in keeping the ſayd fort, and placed the ordinance toward the high towne, from whence hee ſuſpected the greateſt danger; and putting his men in order, marched toward the low towne, which was about ſome foureteene ſcore from the fort: in which towne lay all their merchandize and other goods. Approching to the towne, he entered the ſame, the people imbarking themſelues in carauels & boats, with all the expedition they could. The baſe towne, of aboue an hundred houſes, being thus taken, we found in it great ſtore of merchandizes of all ſorts: as Braſil-wood, ſugars, Calico-cloth, pepper, cynamon, cloues, maſe, nutmegs, with diuers other good things, to the great comfort of vs all. The admirall went vp and downe the towne, and placed at the South end of the ſame captaine Venner and his company, himſelfe and his company in the midſt of the towne, and captaine Barker and captaine Addy at the other end of the towne, giuing great charge, that no man vpon paine of great puniſhment and loſſe of his ſhares, ſhould breake vp or enter into any ware-houſe, without order and direction from the admirall. And this commandement was as well kept as euer any was kept, where ſo great ſpoile and booty was found: for it was not knowen in all the time of our being there, that any diſorder was committed, or any lodge or ware-houſe broken open, or any ſpoile was made, or pillaging of any thing; which is a note much to be obſerued in ſuch an action: for common mariners and ſouldiers are much giuen to pillaging and ſpoiling, making greater account of the ſame then of their ſhares.

Order being put in all things, we kept a very ſure watch this firſt night, and the morning being come, our admirall and captaine Venner, with the reſt of the captaines, went about the towne, and gaue order for the fortifying of it with all expedition: ſo that within two dayes it was ſurrounded with poſts & planks, all that part of the towne next the maine land, at leaſt nine foot high; for (God be thanked) we found prouiſion in the towne, ſufficient ſtore for it. Now it is to be vnderſtood, that this towne is enuironed on the one part by the ſea, and on the backſide by a riuer that runneth behinde it; ſo that to come to it by land, you muſt enter it by a ſmall narrow paſſage not aboue forty paces ouer at an high water. At this paſſage we built a fort, and planted in it fiue pieces of ordinance, which we tooke out of the firſt fort we wan at our comming in to the harborow. Now we hauing the towne in poſſeſſion, our admirall ſent for the Hollanders by his chyrurgian, which had bene brought vp in that countrey, a man knowing their conditions, and ſober and diſcreet of his owne cariage. At his firſt comming aboord of them, they ſeemed to ſtand vpon their owne guard and defence, for they were three great and ſtrong ſhips: but he vſed himſelfe ſo, that they at the laſt willed him to come into the greateſt of their ſhips, which was about 450 tunnes. Then he declared to them our intent of comming thither, and that they ſhould be there as ſure from any ſhew of violence or iniury offered them, as if they were in their owne houſes, and if they ſhould thinke ſo good, his admirall would fraight thē for England, if they would be content with fraight reaſonable, and as they ſhould agree, and it ſhould be at their owne choiſe whether to go or not, he would not force them, vnleſſe it were to their benefit and good liking. Although this people were ſomewhat ſtubburne at the firſt, as that nation is in theſe cauſes, yet being ſatiſfied with good words and good dealing they came aland, & after conference had with the admirall, they were ſo ſatiſfied, that they went thorow with a fraight; and then we ioyned with them, & they with vs, and they ſerued vs as truely & as faithfully as our owne people did, both at watch and ward, by ſea and all other ſeruices. Within two dayes after our comming in, about midnight, a great number of Portugals and Indians with them, came downe vpon vs with a very great cry and noiſe; but God be thanked, we were ready for them: for our admirall ſuppoſing ſome ſuch aſſault, had prouided all our muſkets with haile-ſhot, which did ſo gaule both the Indians and the Portugals, that they made them preſently retreat. And this is to be noted, that there was both the horſe and his rider ſlaine both with one of theſe ſhot. Our men followed them ſome fiue or ſixe ſcore, but no further. We loſt in this conflict but onely one man, but had diuers hurt. What was loſt of their part, we could not tell, for they had before day, after our retreat, caried away all their dead. Within three or foure dayes after our comming in appeared before the harborow 3 ſhips & 2 pinneſſes, the pinneſſes being ſomewhat nere, diſcried our flags, and one of them came in, which was a French pinneſſe, declaring all the reſt to be French bottoms; which our admirall willed ſhould come in: and ſo they did. Theſe were Frenchmen of war, and came thither for purchaſe. The captaines came aland, and were welcomed; amongſt whom was one captaine Iohn Noyer of Diepe, that the yere before had taken in our admirall at the iland of Mona in the Weſt Indies, where his ſhip was caſt away, comming out of the Eaſt Indies. To this man our admirall offered great kindnes, and performed it, & was not vngratefull for his former benefit ſhewed vnto him. This captaine deſired of our admirall to beſtow vpon him his ſhips lading of Fernambuc-wood, which he granted him and alſo his pinneſſe, and more, gaue him a carauel of about 50 tuns, & bid him lade her with wood alſo; which with other benefits he gratefully receiued. To the other two captaines he granted their ladings of wood, the one captaine being of Diepe, the other of Rochel. The captain of Diepe confeſſed that he met Abraham Cocke certein moneths before, & being diſtreſſed for want of water, gaue him ſome, & went with him to a watering place where he had water enough, and ſo departed frō him, ſaying that his men were very weake. The comming in of theſe ſhips did much ſtrengthen vs; for our admiral appointed both theſe French and the Flemings to keepe watch vpon the riuer by night with their boats, euery boat hauing in her 12 men at the leaſt, and the boats well prouided. This was for feare of fired ſhips or barks to come downe, which our admirall had great care vnto, and cauſed our ſhips to ride by cables and haulſers, at all aduantages to ſhun them, if by that meanes they ſhould attempt to put vs out of the harborow; giuing commandement to vs that watched in the towne, that what fires ſoeuer we ſhould eſpy or ſee, not one man to ſtart from his watch or quarter, vnleſſe we were by himſelfe commanded to the contrary. Now this order put in all things, and hauing viewed all the goods in the towne, and thinking our ſelues ſufficiently fortified, we began to vnlade our ſhips, which came as full laden in as they went foorth, but not with ſo good merchandize. And this order was taken about the vnlading of them, and alſo the lading of goods out of the towne: our men were diuided into halues, and the one halfe wrought one day, and the other halfe the other day; alwayes thoſe that wrought not kept the watch with their furniture in their hands and about them, and none ſtept far off or wandred from his colours, and thoſe that wrought had all their weapons in good order ſet & placed by them, ſo that at an inſtant euery one knew where to go to his furniture: and this was very carefully looked vnto.

Abraham Cocke going for the riuer of Plate, met withall.

The third day after our comming in, came down from the higher towne, which might be about foure miles off vpon a hill, three or foure of the principall gentlemen of the countrey, and ſayd that from the biſhop, themſelues, & the reſt, they would haue ſome conference with our admirall. This newes being brought to the admirall, he hung downe his head for a ſmall ſeaſon; and when he had muzed a while, he anſwered, I muſt go aboord of the Flemings vpon buſines that importeth me, and therefore let them ſtay if they will: and ſo he went & ſate there with the Flemings from nine of the clocke till two at the afternoone. In this ſpace diuers meſſengers went to the admirall, to come away; for theſe gentlemen ſtayd. To whom he gaue this anſwere: Are they not gone yet? And about two of the clocke he came aland, and then they tolde him they were departed. Many of the better ſort of our men marueiled, and thought much, becauſe he would not vouchſafe to come and haue conference with ſuch men of accuunt as they ſeemed to be. But the admiral made them this anſwere, Sirs, I haue bene brought vp among this people, I haue liued among them as a gentleman, ſerued with them as a ſouldier, and liued among them as a merchant, ſo that I ſhould haue ſome vnderſtanding of their demeanors and nature; and I know when they cannot preuaile with the ſword by force, then they deale with their deceiueable tongues; for faith and trueth they haue none, neither will vſe any, vnleſſe it be to their owne aduantage. And this I giue you warning, that if you giue them parle, they will betray vs; and for my part, of all nations in the world, it would grieue me moſt to be ouertaken by this nation & the Spaniards: and I am glad it was my fortune to pay them with one of their owne fetches, for I warrant you they vnderſtand me better then you thinke they do. And with this I pray you be ſatisfied; I hope it is for all our goods: for what ſhall we gaine by parle, when (by the helpe of God) we haue gotten already that we came for, ſhould we venture that we haue gottē with our ſwords, to ſee if they can take it from vs by words and policy? there were no wiſedome in ſo doing. You know what it hath coſt vs, and how many men lie wounded that be not yet hole of this other nights hurts: and therefore from henceforth I giue this commiſſion, that if any be taken, he be ſent away with this order, although he come as a friend, that if either he or any other approch vs from henceforth, he ſhalbe hanged out of hand: and other courſe then this I will not take with them. Which courſe was followed; for within 3 or 4 dayes after it was performed by two taken in the night: and after that we were neuer troubled with ſpies; and although diuers ſlaues came running from their men to vs, by which we vnderſtood much of their working & pretences, yet the admirall would enterteine few of them.

In this meane time that we began to worke, the Portugals with the country people were not idle, for ſeeing vs ſo buſie, about ſixe nights after our comming in, they priuily in the night caſt vp a trench in the ſands about a ſacar ſhot from our ſhips, minding there to plant ordinance, which would haue offended our ſhips greatly; & they would not haue bene able to haue rode there to take in their lading, which now began to go aboord of them. The admirall hearing this, about 3 of the clocke in the after noone marſhalled our men, and he and all the reſt of the captaines marched toward them. The Portugals & Indians perceiuing our comming, began to withdraw themſelues within the trench, meaning (as it ſhould appeare) to fight it out there: but we made no ſtand, neither did it behoue vs, but preſently approched the trenches with our muſkets & pikes, afore their trenches were thorowly finiſhed: ſo that by Gods helpe we entered thē. And the Portugals & Indians left the place, & left vnto vs 4 good peeces of braſſe ordinance, with powder and ſhot & diuers other neceſſaries, and among the reſt 5 ſmal carts of that countrey, which to vs were more worth then al the reſt we tooke, for the lading of our goods from the towne to the waters ſide: for without them we could not haue told what to haue done, much of our goods being ſo heauie, that without carts we were not able to weyld them: all theſe things we brought away & deſtroyed al thoſe platforms that they had made, and then we had reſt with them for certaine dayes, in which we went forward, deuiding our marchandize with captaine Venner according to our conſort, and went daily lading them abord, euery ſhips company according as their turnes fell out, but only the three dutch ſhips: for the goods being put into their boats their owne companies laded themſelues. And this farther good chance or bleſſing of God we had to helpe vs, that aſſoone as we had taken our cartes, the next morning came in a ſhip with ſome 60 Negros, 10 Portugall women, and 40 Portugals: the women and the Negros we turned out of the towne, but the Portugals our Admirall kept to draw the carts when they were laden, which to vs was a very great eaſe. For the countrey is very hote and ill for our nation to take any great trauell in.

In this towne there is no freſh water to be had, and therefore we were euery 5 or 6 dayes compelled to paſſe ouer the riuer into the maine land to get freſh water, which after the firſt or ſecond time the Portugals kept and would haue defended our watering, ſo that we were driuen to water of force, and at ſeuerall times ſome of our men were hurt, and onely two or three ſlaine, and with this danger we were forced to get our water.

And as they moleſted vs in our watering, ſo they ſlepe not in other deuiſes, but put in practiſe to burne our ſhips or remoue them out of the harbour. For within ſome 20 dayes after our comming in, they had prepared 5 Carauels and filled them with ſuch things as would beſt take fire and burne: theſe they brought within a mile or little more of our ſhips, and there ſet them on fire, for neerer they could not well come becauſe of our watch of boates, for, as is aboue ſaid, the Admirall had alwaies 6 boates that kept watch aboue halfe a mile from the ſhips for feare of ſuch exploytes as theſe, which was the cauſe they could not fire them ſo neere the ſhips as they would haue done. But theſe fired Carauels had the tide with them, and alſo the little winde that blewe was in their fauour; which cauſed them to come downe the ſtreame the faſter: which our boats perceiuing made to them with as much expedition as conueniently they could, but the tide and wind both ſeruing them, they approched toward the ſhips with great expedition. Our men in the towne began to be in ſome feare of them, yet no man mooued or ſtarted frō his quarter more then if there had bene nothing to doe. Alſo the maſters and ſuch as were aboord, were ſomewhat amaſed to ſee 5 ſo great fires to be comming downe among their ſhips, but they prepared for to cleere them of it, as well as they could, being prouided afore hand & iudging that ſome ſuch ſtratagems would be there vſed, the riuer being very fit therefore. But (God be thanked) who was alwaies with vs & our beſt defence in this voyage; by whoſe aſſiſtance we performed this ſo great an attempt with ſo ſmall forces. Our companie in the boats ſo played the men when they ſaw the fires come neere our ſhips, that caſting grapnels with yron chaines on them, as euery boat had one for that purpoſe, ſome they towed aground, and ſome they brought to a bitter or anker, where they rode till all their force was burned out, & ſo we were deliuered by Gods helpe from this fearefull danger. Within ſome 6 nights after this, which might be about the 26 day after our comming in & abode there, about 11 of the clocke at night, came driuing downe other 3 great raftes burning with the hugeſt fires that I haue ſeene. Theſe were exceeding dangerous, for when our men approched thē, thinking to clap their grapnels vpon them, as they had done vpon the Carauels the night before, they were preuented: for there ſtooke out of the rafts many poles which kept them from the body of the rafts, that they could not come to throw their grapnels into thē: & yet they had this inconuenience worſe then al the reſt which moſt troubled vs. There ſtooke out among the poles certaine hollow trunks filled with ſuch prouiſion of fire-workes that they ceaſed not ſtill (as the fire came downe to thoſe trunks to ſet thē on fire) to ſpout out ſuch ſparkles, that our boats hauing powder in them for our mens vſe, durſt not for feare of fyring thēſelues with their owne powder come neere thoſe ſparkles of the raftes, but ſeeing them to driue neerer & neerer our ſhips, they wet certain clothes and laid vpon their flaſkes and bandelers and ſo ventured vpon them, & with their grapnels tooke holde of them, and ſo towed them on ground, where they ſtooke faſt & were not burnt out the next day in the morning. Diuerſe logs and timbers came driuing along by our ſhips, and burning, but with our boats we eaſily defended them. And thus (God be prayſed) we eſcaped the ſecond fires. A third firing was prepared, as a Negro gaue vs to vnderſtand, but this we preuented by our departure. For this third firing were very great preparations; and we were credibly informed of certaintie, that this firing ſhould be ſuch as we ſhould neuer be able to preuent, and aſſuredly theſe fires be dangerous things and not to be preuented vpon the ſudden, vnleſſe it be afore prepared for and foreſeene. For when it commeth vpon the ſudden and vnlooked for, and vnprouided for, it bringeth men into a great amazement and at their wits ende. And therefore let all men riding in riuers in their enemies countrey be ſure to looke to be prouided before hand, for againſt fire there is no reſiſtance without preparation.

Alſo it is a practiſe in theſe hot countreys, where there be ſuch expert ſwimmers, to cut the cables of ſhips: and one night it was practiſed to cut the Admirals cable, and yet the boate rode by the cable with two men in her to watch all the night, and the bwoy onely was cut, but not the cable: but after that night, ſeeing then our good watch, they neuer after attempted it.

While all theſe things paſſed, our ſhips (God be thanked) thorow the induſtry of our gouernours, and diligent labour of our men, began to be wholly laden, and all the beſt marchandize conueyed aboord our ſhips, ſo that our Admirall ment to depart that night, which was the 31 day after our entrance, or elſe on the next day at the fartheſt, and ſo warning was giuen to all men to make themſelues readie. Our Admiral being aboord his ſhip yͤ ſame morning, eſpyed in the ſands right againſt the place where the ſhips rode, that there was a ſmall banke of ſand newly caſt vp, vnder which he perceiued now and then ſome people to be: preſently he tooke his boat and went to the towne and called all the Captaines together, declaring that the enemies were about ſome pretence right againſt the ſhips, conſulting whether it were beſt to ſally out & ſee what they were doing, or depart that euening according to the former determination. The Admirall was of opinion to depart that night, ſaying it was but folly to ſeeke warres ſince we had no neede to doe it: other affirmed, it were good to ſee what they did, leaſt the winde might be contrarie and the ſhips not get out, and ſo our enemies may build vpon vs to our great diſaduantage. Well, ſaid the Admiral, the matter is not great, for there can be no danger in this ſally, for where they worke it is within Falkon-ſhot of the ſhips, and if any power ſhould come againſt you, the ſhips may play vpon them with 40 peeces of ordinance at the leaſt, ſo that a bird cannot paſſe there but ſhe muſt be ſlaine. I am ſomewhat vnwilling you ſhould go, for I haue not bene well theſe two dayes, and I am not ſtrong to march vpon thoſe heauie ſands: they anſwered all at once, you ſhall not neede to trouble your ſelfe for this ſeruice, for you ſee it is nothing and of no danger, being ſo neere the ſhips, doubt you not we will accompliſh this ſeruice well ynough, and returne againe within this houre. The Admirall anſwered: the danger cannot be great, but yet you ſhall goe out ſtrong for feare of the worſt. And ſo the Admirall marſhalled them 275 men French and Engliſh, which were vnder the conduct of Edmund Barker, captaine Barker of Plimmouth, Viceadmirall to captaine Venner, captaine Addy, and the three French captaines all going out together, and they were to march vpon a narrow peece of ground to the place whether they were ſent vnto: in the brodeſt place betwixt the ſea and the water on the other ſide, it is not aboue a ſtones caſt, for it is a bank of ſand lying betweene the riuer & the ſea, ſo they needed not to feare any comming on their backs or on their ſides, and before them could no man come, but he muſt paſſe by all the ſhips which no company of men were able to do without preſent death. The Admirall commanded them at their departure to go no further then the place he ſent them to, and ſo he himſelfe went aboord the ſhips and made readie all the ordinance for feare of the worſt, not knowing what might inſue, although he ſaw no danger might follow. Thus we marched quietly till we came to the place we were ſent vnto, being right ouer againſt the ſhips: out of which place came ſome dozen ſhot, which ſeeing vs come, diſcharged and ran their wayes with ſuch as were working within the ſaid platforme. So that we came into it and perceiued they had begunne to lay plankes to plant ordinance vpon. Our Admiral commanded, if there were any ſuch thing, to burne the plankes & returne in againe, which we might haue done without hurting of any mans finger: but our leaders were not content to haue performed the ſeruice committed them in charge, but would needes expreſly & againſt their order march on further to fight with certaine Enſignes almoſt a mile off, cleane out of the reach of the ordinance of all our ſhips, & where lay the ſtrength of the whole countrey. When our men began to draw neere thoſe Enſigns of men, the Enſignes ſeemed to retire with great ſpeed, which our men followed with ſuch great haſt that ſome outrunning other ſome, our order was broken, and thoſe enſignes retyred thēſelues into the force of the whole countrey, ſo that our formoſt men were in the midſt of their enemies yer they were aware, which were ſlaine yer the reſt could come to ſuccour them. The enemies incouraged by this, came alſo vpon the reſt, which preſently began to retire, & the enemies followed them til they came within the reach of the ordinance of our ſhips, where they were beaten off and left their purſuit. In this conflict were ſlaine captain Barker captaine of the Salomon, captaine Cotton ẏ Admirals Lieutenant, captaine Iohn Noyer a french captaine of Diepe, and another french captaine of Rochel, with M. Iohn Barker & other to the number of 35: for theſe were the formoſt and hotteſt in the purſuit of the Enſignes aforeſaid, and by their forwardnes came all to periſh. At our returne into the towne the Admiral came to vs much bewayling the death of ſo many good men as were loſt, wondering what we ment to paſſe the expreſſe order that was giuen vs. With this loſſe our men were much danted, but our Admirall began againe to encourage them, declaring that the fortune of the warres was ſometimes to win and ſometimes to looſe. And therewithall he wiſhed euery man to prepare & make himſelfe readie: for that night (God willing) he would depart. For all our ſhips were readie and laden, and he would not ſtay any further fortune. The euening being come, the ſhips began to wey & go forth of the harbour, and God be thanked of his goodneſſe toward vs who ſent vs a faire wind to go foorth withall, ſo that by 11 of the clocke in the night we were all forth in ſafety. The enemies perceiuing our departing, planted a peece or two of ordinance, and ſhot at vs in the night, but did vs no harme. We were at our comming foorth 15 ſailes, that is, 3 ſailes of Hollanders, the one of 450 tunnes, the other of 350 tunnes, and the third of 300 tunnes, foure ſailes of french & one ſhip which the Admiral gaue the french Captain, 3 ſailes of Captain Venners fleet of Plimmouth, and 4 ſailes of our Admirals fleete, all theſe were laden with marchandizes, and that of good worth. We ſtayed in this harbour to paſſe all this buſineſſe but onely 31 dayes, and in this time we were occupied with ſkirmiſhes and attempts of the enemie 11. times; in all which ſkirmiſhes we had the better, onely this laſt excepted. To God be the honour and praiſe of all, &c. The whole fleete being out in ſafety, the next day in the morning the Admirall gaue order to the whole fleete to ſaile toward Peraniew a harbour lying ſome 40 leagues to the Northward of Fernambucke, and there to take in freſh water and to refreſh themſelues: and to make prouiſion for refreſhing, our Admirall had ſent thither ſome 6 daies before two French men in a ſmal pinneſſe, which Frenchmen he had prouided from Diepe before his comming out of England for that purpoſe. For both theſe two ſpake the Indians language very perfectly: for at this port of Peraniew and an other called Potaju ſome 6 leagues to the Northward the Frenchmen haue had trade for braſil-wood, and haue laden from thence by the Indians meanes, who haue fet it for them ſome 20 leagues into the country vpon their backs, 3 or 4 ſhips euery yere. Thus we all ſailed toward Peraniew, at which place we arriued in the night, ſo that we were forced to lie off & on with a ſtiffe gale of wind, in which we loſt the moſt part of our fleete, & they not knowing this coaſt put off to the ſea, and ſo went directly for England. Our Admirall and ſome 4 ſaile more with him put into the harborow of Peraniew, and there watered and refreſhed himſelfe very well, with hens, conies, hares and potatos, with other things, which the two Frenchmen had partly prouided before his comming: this is a very good harborow where ſhips may ride and refreſh very well. But, as I am giuen to vnderſtand ſince our comming from thence, the Portugals haue attempted the place and doe inhabite it, and haue put the french from their accuſtomed trade. Here hauing watered and refreſhed our ſelues, we put to the ſea, plying after the reſt of our fleete which were gone before, which we neuer heard of till our arriuall in England at The downes in the moneth of Iuly, where we vnderſtood the reſt of our conſorts to be paſſed vp for London; Captaine Venner & his fleete to be at Plimmouth, and the French ſhips to be ſafe arriued at Diepe, which to vs was very great comfort. At our ſetting ſayle from The downes, according as the cuſtome is, finding the Queenes ſhips there, we ſaluted them with certaine ordinance. The Gunner being careleſſe, as they are many times of their powder, in diſcharging certain pieces in ẏ gunner roome, ſet a barrel of powder on fire, which tooke fire in ẏ gunner roome, blew vp the Admirals caben, ſlew the gunner with 2 others outright, & hurt 20 more, of which 4 or 5 died. This powder made ſuch a ſmoke in the ſhip with the fire that burnt in the gunner roome among all the fire workes, that no man at the firſt wiſt what to doe: but recalling backe their feare, they began to caſt water into the gunner roome in ſuch abundance (for the Queenes ſhips now & alſo the other ſhips that were in our company came preſently to our helpe) that (God be praiſed) we put out the fire & ſaued all, & no great harme was done to the goods. By this may be ſeene that there is no ſure ſafety of things in this world. For now we made account to be out of all danger, where behold a greater came vpon vs, then we ſuffered all the whole voyage. But the almightie be prayſed for euer, which deliuered vs out of this and many other in this voyage. Our fire being well put out, and we taking in freſh men (God be prayſed) we came to Blacke-wall in ſafety.

Peranjeu 40. leagues northward of Fernambuck.

Peranjeu a very good harbour.

A ſpeciall letter written from Feliciano Cieça de Carualſho the Gouernour of Paraiua in the moſt Northerne part of Braſil, 1597. to Philip the ſecond king of Spaine, anſwering his deſire touching the conqueſt of Rio Grande, with the relation of the beſieging of the caſtle of Cabodelo by the Frenchmen, and of the diſcouerie of a rich ſiluer mine and diuerſe other important matters.

The king of Spaines reſolution to proceed in the diſcouerie & conqueſt of Rio Grande.

I Receiued your Maieſties letter bearing date the ninth of Nouember 1596. whereby I vnderſtande that your Maieſtie doth determine to procede in the diſcouerie and conqueſt of Rio Grande, according to the relation which was ſent your Maieſtie by Don Franciſco de Souſa, Gouernour generall of this Realme of Braſilia: together with a copie of a letter, which your Maieſtie ſent vnto vs, bearing date the two and twentieth of March 1596. Moreouer I receiued another letter from your Maieſtie bearing date the 15 of March 1597. Both which letters were to one effect. It may pleaſe your Maieſtie to vnderſtand that there are diuerſe Gentlemen in theſe countreys of as good abilitie as my ſelfe, which ſeeke to liue at home onely for their eaſe and pleaſure, and are not wont to hazard nor venture their bodies, liues, and goods ſo often times in your Maieſties ſeruice as I haue done and commonly doe; and can keepe their goods and riches, and not ſpend nor waſt them as I haue done, and dayly doe ſo wilfully: yet neuertheleſſe being ſpent in your Maieſties ſeruice, I am very glad thereof. For I and they are allwayes readie at your Maieſties commandement.

The Captaineſhip of Paraiua ſtandeth in ſixe degr. 45 minu. of Southerly latitude.

And as concerning your Maieſties commandement in commanding me that I ſhould put to my helping hand in the conqueſt of Rio Grande: although this Captaineſhip of Paraiua and countrey where I doe gouerne doth want abilitie for that purpoſe, yet neuertheleſſe your Maieſtie ſhall allwayes finde me readie to doe your Maieſtie the beſt ſeruice I can: for it is very well knowen how forward I haue bene allwayes and am in this conqueſt, and ſtill doe put to my helping hand, as partly your Maieſtie doth vnderſtand by a letter which I wrote to your Maieſty by my ſonne, bearing date the 19 of March 1596 wherein your Maieſtie may vnderſtand what good ſeruice I haue alreadie done therein, and allwayes will be readie to my power to doe the like in furthering of the ſaid enterpriſe.

The caſtle of Cabodelo beſieged by the French.

It may pleaſe your Maieſtie to vnderſtand that the third of Iuly there was brought vnto me a Frenchman a priſoner, who preſented himſelfe vnto me. And I examining of him, he tolde me that he came running away from certaine French ſhips men of warre, which came vpon this coaſt: and he tolde me that he had ſerued your Maieſtie in the warres of France. Likewiſe he told me that he left me ſeuen great ſhips Frenchmen of warre riding at an anker in Rio Grande, and that there were 13 french ſhips of warre more, which had giuen battery to the Caſtle of Cabodelo, and landed 350 ſoldiers all in white armour, and the battery continued from Friday vntill the Munday following both by ſea and land, and great ſtore of Frenchmen were ſlaine, and two Captaines of the French. On our ſide the Captaine of the caſtle was ſlaine, and other two Portugals hurt: other harme they had none. There were but twentie Portugals in the caſtle, and fiue pieces of ordinance. They ment to haue kept the caſtle, and to haue traded with the Indian people. So ſeeing they could not take the caſtle, they hoyſed ſayles, and went from thence to Rio Grande: and being altogether they are in number 20 ſaile at an anker in Rio Grande. And ſome of them determine after they be new trimmed and dreſt, and haue taken in freſh victuals, and ſtayed there vntill Eaſter, then to depart from thence to the Honduras, and ſo to burne and ſpoyle ſome townes thereabout.

The garison of Fernambuck.

I certified Manuel Maſcarenhas of theſe informations by my letters, requeſting him to ſend me with all expedition thoſe ſouldiers which were in garriſon in Fernambuck to ayde me, and to defende this Captaineſhip from the enemie. But the Friers of The Couent would not conſent thereunto, nor ſuffer them to be ſent vnto me. So I was forced to make ſhift with thoſe ſouldiers only which I had in my gouernment and tooke them with me, and marched to the place where the enemies were entrenched, and vpon Whitſunday in the euening about three of the clocke, hauing in my company a Negro of the countrey of Petiguar, which was our guide, he brought vs where the enemies campe was; and preſently I did aſſault them, and ſlew great ſtore of them, burning the villages and countrey of thoſe rebels, which did ioine with the Frenchmen, and tooke many of them priſoners. So they told me that there were ten great french ſhips of warre which were at an anker in Rio Grande.

The countrey of Periguar rebelleth againſt the Portugals

A rich ſiluer mine found at Copaoba within ſixe dayes iourney of Paraiua.

Likewiſe I was informed, that there is a frenchman called Daurmigas, which hath diſcouered and found great ſtore of ſiluer in a place called Copaoba. The ſiluer hath bene tried and melted, it is very good and fine ſiluer, and there is great quantitie. The man which told me of this hath beene in the mine, and hath ſeene it tried and melted. And I haue bene my ſelfe once in the place: it is but 6 dayes iourney from this Captaineſhip.

Furthermore this Frenchman told me that one Monſieur Miſa a french Captaine, and a kinſman of the gouernour and Viceadmirall of Diepe in Normandie, had one of his armes ſtrooken off at the ſiege of the caſtle of Cabodelo; who is departed from Rio Grande, with determination to come backe hither againe the next yeere in the moneth of Ianuarie following, and to inhabite in this countrey of Paraiba, which is 20 leagues from Fernambuck, becauſe of the great ſtore of ſiluer, which they haue alreadie found here.

Moreouer I am enformed that a noble man of France called The earle of Villa Dorca doth intend to come vpon this coaſt with a great fleete from Rochel. It were good that your Maieſtie would ſend into France to knowe the certaintie thereof.

The Frenchman likewiſe told me that all the Canibals of Petiguar haue ioyned themſelues in companie with certaine Frenchmen, which were caſt away in two ſhips vpon this coaſt. The one of theſe ſhips which were caſt away was one Riſoles, and the other ſhip was this mans. And thoſe Frenchmen which came vpon this coaſt did ioyne themſelues with thoſe Canibals which did rebell, and did diuide themſelues into two ſquadrons. So I ſent preſently to Manuel Maſcarenhas that he ſhould ſend me aide and munition. But he ſent me word againe, that he had none to ſpare, and that he did purpoſe with all ſpeede to goe himſelfe to Rio Grande; and that he was not able to furniſh himſelfe ſo well as he could wiſh, nor to bring his ſouldiers into the field, for lacke of ſhot, powder, and other munition, which he did want.

All the Canibals of Petiguar ioyne with the Frenchmen againſt the Portugals.

Hereupon once more the 29 of Iuly I with my ſouldiers marched to the enemies campe, and there ioyning battell with the Indian rebels, which were ioyned with the Frenchmen that were their leaders, I did ſet vpon them, and ſlew great ſtore of them, and tooke fourteene of them priſoners. They doe report the very ſame newes, which the other Frenchmen did tell me as touching the ſhips which were in the harbour of Rio Grande; and how their pretence was to haue come and haue taken vs, and ſpoyled the countrey.

But now being put to flight and hauing receiued the ouerthrow, they can get no victuals to victuall their ſhippes: which hath bene the cauſe that they are mightily hindered in their intent, and dare not come any more to attempt vs. And the Indians are ſo diſmayed, that in haſte they will haue no more helpe nor aide of the Frenchmen. So by theſe meanes of neceſſitie the Indians muſt ſubmit themſelues vnto vs, conſidering they are quite ſpoyled and ouerthrowen for a long time. Likewiſe they haue enformed me touching the ſiluer mines which are found, that it is moſt true. For thoſe french ſhippes which were in Rio Grande haue laden great ſtore of the oare. Wherefore I certified Manuel de Maſcarenhas of the Frenchmens newes, and howe euery thing did ſtand; wiſhing him to make readie foure ſhips and three hundred ſouldiers, and ſo to take the harbour of Rio Grande, being now cleered and voyde of the enemie: and to ſearch out the ſituation of the place, and where were beſt to fortifie and to build ſome fortes for the defence of this riuer, where neede ſhall require. Hereunto Maſcarenhas ſent me word, that when he went himſelfe, and found it true which hath beene reported touching the ſiluer mines, that then he would ſend both men and ſhips. Therefore your Maieſtie muſt giue order, that the reſt of the Gouernours ſhall ayde and aſſiſt me in theſe warres: otherwiſe of my ſelfe I am not able to doe more then I haue alreadie done in defending of this countrey againſt our enemies which are many.

French ſhips laden with great ſtore of ſiluer oare.

It may pleaſe your Maieſtie to be aduertiſed, that from time to time I haue written vnto Don Franciſco de Souſa Gouernor general of this realme, who is in Baia, as concerning theſe Frenchmen of warre: but he will not anſwere me to any purpoſe, becauſe I do write vnto him for ſuch things as I doe want, which are ſhot, powder, men, and munition requiſite for your Maieſties ſeruice & ſafegard of this captaineſhip. For here are neither ſhot, powder, nor any thing els to defend vs from our enemies; nor any that wil put to their helping hands for the defence of this countrey, & the ſeruice of your Maieſtie. And therfore it were needfull that your Maieſty ſhould commit the charge and gouernment into the hands of Diego Sierua, with expreſſe charge that all the captaines & commanders vpon paine of death obey him and be readie at all times to aide and aſſiſt him in your ſeruice. Otherwiſe this countrey cannot be kept and maintained, hauing ſo great warres continually as we haue, and are troubled withall. For this Diego Sierua is a very good ſouldier, and hath good experience; and is fit to gouerne this countrey. Your Highneſſe is alſo to ſend him Commiſſion with expreſſe cõmandement to follow theſe wars; otherwiſe this countrey cannot be kept, but daily they will rebell. For here are none that will ſerue your Maieſtie ſo iuſtly as he will do: who wil haue a great care in any thing which ſhal cõcerne your Maieſtes ſeruice touching the eſtate of this countrey. For the Gouernour Souſa doth ſpend your Maieſties treaſure in building his owne Ingenios or ſugar-milles.

The conqueſt of Rio Grande.

Two Forts to be builded at Cabodelo.

The countrey of Paraiua in danger dayly to be loſt.

The warres of Petiguar.

A new captain appointed in Cabodelo.

And thoſe Captaines which your Maieſtie intendeth to ſend hither muſt bring with them ſhot, powder, and all kind of weapons, furniture, and munition for the defence and ſafegarde of this countrey, and for the conqueſt of Rio Grande. For there is no kind of munition in al this countrey to be had, if occaſion ſhould ſerue. It were alſo good that your Maieſtie ſhould ſend order for the building of a couple of Forts or Caſtles at Cabodelo, for they be very needefull for the defence of the enemie, which dayly doth warre againſt this Captaineſhip. For that man which ſhall gouerne this countrey, if he be no more fortunate then I haue bene hitherto, ſhall not miſſe one time or another, but he ſhall looſe all the countrey. If Don Franciſco de Souſa had ſent mee thoſe two hundred and fiftie ſouldiers which I did ſend for, which were in gariſon in the caſtle of Arrecife, which doe nothing but ſpend your Maieſties victuals and treaſure, and had not ſent them to Baiha, where there was no neede, theſe warres of Petiguar had bene ended long agone, and had ſaued your Maieſty a great deale of charges which you had ſpent in folowing of this conqueſt of Rio Grande. I haue choſen one Captaine Iohn de Macas Cardoſo to be Gouernour of Cabodelo, who is a very ſufficient man.

A great controuerſie touching the gouernment of the Indian townes.

Furthermore, it may pleaſe your Maieſtie to vnderſtand, that the chiefeſt Friers of this Monaſterie of S. Antonie haue complained on me to the lord Gouernour generall, and haue cauſed great ſtrife and debate betweene him and me touching the gouernment and rule of theſe Indian townes. For the Friers would command and gouerne both the Indians and their townes as well in Eccleſiaſticall as Temporall cauſes, as touching the puniſhment of the bodies of ſuch as are offenders. But I haue reſiſted them in your Maieſties name, and haue alleaged, that none but your Maieſtie muſt rule and gouerne them and their countrey, and that the townes appertaine to your Maieſtie, and not vnto the Friers. But the Gouernour hath written a letter vnto me, ſignifying that he hath pronounced a ſentence againſt me in the Friers behalfe, which is this. The King our maſter hath ſent a decree and certaine ſtatutes touching the good gouernment and orders to be executed and kept in thoſe Indian townes: and that vpon ſight hereof I ſhall preſently baniſh all the Mamalukes and white men which dwell in any of thoſe Indian townes with all ſpeede, and that none of them from hence forward ſhall enter into the ſaid villages, without commandement and conſent of the ſaid Friers. So this ſentence was preſented vnto me by the Reuerend father Cuſtodio, Prior of Sant Anton of Braſil, with a further poſtſcript of the Gouernour importing theſe words: I doe likewiſe charge and commaund you the Gouernour of Paraiua, that preſently vpon ſight hereof you ſhall reſtore thoſe villages and houſes which you haue burned and deſtroyed in the laſt warres, and likewiſe the towne of S. Auguſtine, and that you ſhall build them againe at your owne proper coſt and charges: for the Friers alleage that theſe townes were giuen them, by a decree ſent them from Pope Pius Quintus, that the ſaid Friers ſhould gouerne and rule them.

The towne of S. Auguſtine.

On the other ſide I haue pronounced another ſentence againſt the ſaid Friers in your Maieſties name, and for your Maieſtie, alleaging that thoſe townes, villages, and ſubiects appertaine and belong vnto your Maieſtie, and that in temporall cauſes I am to puniſh thoſe offenders, which ſhall rebell againſt your Maieſtie: and as touching eccleſiaſtical cauſes that the Vicar of this Cathedrall church ſhall rule, gouerne and inſtruct them in the Chriſtian religion. So we both haue appealed vnto your Maieſtie herein, and your Maieſtie may peruſe all our writings, and then determine that which ſhall be beſt and moſt profitable for your Maieſties ſeruice and enlargement of your crowne. For through theſe broyles the inhabitants of this Pariaua forſake their houſes & dwelling places, and ſo doe ſome of the Friers, becauſe they cannot be ſuffered to rule & gouerne.

Alſo the Indians haue complayned againſt me, becauſe I haue burned their villages in this laſt rebellion. Wherefore if your Maieſtie doe not ſend ſome order for this countrey and ſee into theſe caſes, it will breed great diſſention and rebellion among vs, and we ſhall be readie to cut one anothers throat before it be long.

Thus I thought good, according to my humble bounden dutie, and for the ſeruice of your Maieſtie and quietneſſe of this realme, to certifie your Maieſtie the truth of the whole matter; hoping in ſhort time that your Maieſtie will ſend ſome good order to qualifie theſe broyles: for there is great hatred and malice among vs. Ieſus Chriſt preſerue and keepe the royall perſon of your Maieſtie with long health, as it pleaſeth him. From the Captaineſhip of Paraiua this preſent 20 of Auguſt. 1597.

Feliciano Cieça de Carualſho.

The Sunne being in	Scorpio Sagittarius Capricorne	the tide hath his courſe Southeaſt.
The Sunne being in	Aquarius Piſces Aries	no current.

A ruttier or courſe to be kept for him that will ſayle from Cabo Verde to the coaſt of Braſil, and all along the coaſt of Braſil vnto the riuer of Plate; and namely firſt from Cabo Verde to Fernambuck.

THe ſhip that goeth from Cabo Verde to Braſil, muſt goe Southſoutheaſt: and when ſhe is within 5 or 6 degrees of the Equinoctial ſhe muſt go Southeaſt and by South. And if ſhe haue the ternados, that is thundrings and lightnings, then thou muſt go altogether South, or that way and by that boord that doth profit thee moſt. And take this for aduiſe, that hauing the general winds, if the wind be at South or Southeaſt, then go Southweſt, or weſtſouthweſt. And if the winde be South, then goe Southweſt, and by this way but little, for it is not a way for thy profit, becauſe the more thou goeſt this way, the more will be thy trouble, becauſe thou mayeſt not come neerer the coaſte of Guinea then 60 or 70 leagues vnto the ſholde called Os baixos de Santa Anna. And being this diſtance from the ſame, thou ſhalt caſt about the other way towards Braſil, and the wind will be large.

He that will ſayle to Braſil, muſt not come within 60 or 70 leagues of the coaſt of Guinea.

Thou ſhalt vnderſtand that the ſhip that keepeth this courſe to Fernambuck, and goeth in October or after, and chanceth to goe to windward of the Iſle of Fernando de Loronha, when thou commeſt to 8 degrees, or 8 and $\frac{1}{2}$,* then thou ſhalt go Weſt and beare with the land. Thou muſt take this for a warning, that if going Weſt in 8 degrees thou ſee land, then looke to the Northward, and thou ſhalt ſee certaine white cliffes. Then I aduiſe thee that thou goe well to the Southward. And this is to bee vnderſtoode from October forward, for then the time is moſt ſubiect to Northeaſt and Eaſtnortheaſt winds. And if thou find thy ſelfe in the ſayd height aboue mentioned, and ſeeſt cliffes, and ſeeſt a Cape to the Southward, and ſeeſt no more land to the South, then make accompt that thou art at Capiguoari: and from thence to Fernambuck thou haſt ſixe leagues, and haſt a good port.

*Of Southerly latitude.

Thou ſhalt take this for a warning, that if in 8 degrees and a halfe thou ſee land lying all flat, thou mayeſt goe neerer it, and be bold till thou come in tenne or twelue fadomes: And then thou ſhalt ſee a great groſſe land along the ſea-coaſt which is called Capitagua: And being Eaſt and Weſt with this land, and, as I haue ſayd, in tenne or twelue fadomes water; and the time being from October to Februarie, then thou needeſt not to feare any thing: but looke to the South and thou ſhalt ſee the cape of S. Auguſtine: and looke to the North and thou ſhalt ſee a point, and to the Southeaſt a point called Punta de Olinda, where Aponiquay ſtandeth. And the land from the cape to the poynt called Punta de Olinda lieth North and South.

I aduiſe thee that if thou be Eaſt and Weſt with the cape of Saint Auguſtine, thou ſhalt ſee within the land an high hill, hauing as it were a ſaddle vpon it like to a camel: And thou ſhalt ſee to the Southwards three hilles along the ſea, and then preſently thou ſhalt ſee the coaſte to lie Northeaſt and Southweſt.

The height of yͤ cape of S. Auguſtine, of Olinda, & Fernambuck.

Thou ſhalt vnderſtand that from this cape of Saint Auguſtine, to the towne of Olinda, thou haſt nine leagues to the North. And this cape ſtandeth in eight degrees and two third parts, and Olinda ſtandeth in eight degrees and a quarter, and Fernambuck ſtandeth in eight degrees. And this courſe is to be vnderſtood to be obſerued and kept, if thou depart from Lisbon in October or Nouember.

In what height they ſhall ſeeke land that depart frõ Lisbon in February or March.

Take this aduiſe, that if thou depart in February or March from Lisbone, then thou ſhalt goe to beare with the land in nine degrees, becauſe that from March forwards raigne moſt commonly Southeaſt and Southweſt windes. And if by this height and courſe thou bring thy ſelfe nigh to the ſhore, feare not to bring thy ſhip into 18 or 20 fadomes, for all the coaſt is cleane: and there are no more dangers, but ſuch as the ſea doth breake vpon.

How to know the cape of S. Auguſtine.

And if after thy fall with the land thou haue occaſion to goe to the Northward, and ſo going ſeeſt certaine ſholdes, doubt not to come for the North, and thou ſhalt ſee the cape of Saint Auguſtine, which lyeth as it were ſloaping to the ſeaward, and hath as it were a Whales head, and hath vpon it a round hill, with many hilles round about it. And if thou come along the ſea coaſt much about the depth aboue mentioned, thou ſhalt ſee a little Iſland called Saint Alexio: And from this Iſland to the cape of Saint Auguſtine are foure leagues, and it ſtandeth in eight degrees and three quarters.

Iſla de Santo Alexio.

The courſe that a man muſt keepe to the bay called A Bahia de Todos os Santos, that is to ſay, The bay of all Saints, which lieth on the foreſayd coaſt of Braſil.

The height of Bahia de Todos os Santos in 13 degrees and one third part.

IF thou goe for Bahia de Todos os Santos, thou muſt keepe the courſe which I haue already ſet downe, and ſhalt obſerue the time from March forwards, as alſo from October forwards. Thou ſhalt vnderſtand that the Bahia de Todos os Santos ſtandeth in 13 degrees and ⅓: and if thou goe in October or after October, then goe to fall with the land in 12 degrees or 12 and a halfe.

The ſituation of the Iſle of Tapaon.

And take this for a warning, that when thou ſeeſt a white land, and long bankes of white ſand, which ſhew much like linnen cloth when it is in whiting, then thou muſt go along from the North to the South vntill this white land doe end: and thou needeſt not to feare to goe along the coaſt, for there are no ſholds. Before thou be cleane paſt the white land or white ſands, thou ſhalt haue ſight of an Iſland that ſtandeth along the bay, I ſay on the Northſide of the bay, which is called Tapaon: and here the land lieth Weſt and by South.

When thou art ſo farre ſhot as Tapaon, thou ſhalt ſee a certaine great tree which is round, and ſtandeth neere the ſea vpon the very point of the entrance into Bahia on the Northſide.

When a man may beare in with Bahia.

And marke well that if thou looke to the Southward, and ſeeſt no white grounds ſuch as I wrote of before, but that they be all behind thee to the Northward: then when thou ſeeſt none to the Southward, thou mayeſt bee bold to beare in with Bahia. And if when thou goeſt into Bahia to the Northweſt, and ſeeſt the ſea to breake, feare nothing: for it is the breach of a certaine banke, whereon thou ſhalt haue alwayes 5 or 6 fadomes water: and this be ſure of.

The diſtance of O morro de San Paulo frõ Bahia.

Thou ſhalt vnderſtand that if thou come for this place from March to the end of April, I would wiſh thee not to fall to the Southward of 13 degrees and a halfe. And falling with the land, and not ſeeing the white ſands, thou ſhalt ſtriue to goe to the Northward. And ſeeing the land in 13 degrees and a halfe, thou ſhalt haue ſight of an hill along the ſea: And if thou be nigh the land, and cannot make it certaine what land it is: thou ſhalt marke if it bee a round high hill along the ſea, that it is O morro de San Paulo, or, The hill of Saint Paul: and it lieth blacke and bare on the top. And from thence to Bahia is tenne leagues.

Rio de Tinſare a very good riuer.

A dangerous bay in 13 degrees and a halfe.

And here along this hill on the Northweſt ſide there is a great riuer called Tinſare: and it is a very good riuer. And in the entrance of Bahia there are ſixe or ſeuen fadomes water in the chanell. And I aduiſe thee that being in the height of 13 degrees and a halfe, thou come not neere the land, for it hath a bay very dangerous.

And if thou goe from Bahia to Fernambuck, then I aduiſe thee that thou take good heede of the coaſt on the Northeaſt and Southweſt, and thou ſhalt goe Eaſt, if the winde will ſuffer thee to goe Eaſt: and ſo goe thirtie or fortie leagues off to the ſea.

I aduiſe thee thet thou beare not in with the land of Fernambuck, but in the height of 9 or 10 degrees, becauſe that in 11 degrees thou ſhalt fall with the bay called A Enſeada de Vazabaris. Alſo if thou come from Portugal and falleſt with the land in eleuen degrees, beare not in with it, neither come neere it, for thou mayeſt hurt thy ſelfe in ſo doing: but thou ſhalt ſhunne it, and goe to the Southward. For if thou lie to the North thou ſhalt bring thy ſelfe into ſome trouble.

The height of the bay called A Enſeada de Vazabaris.

This Bay of All Saints ſtandeth in thirteene degrees. And from thence to Fernambuck thou haſt a hundreth leagues: and the coaſt lyeth Northeaſt and Southweſt. And from thence to Rio das Ilhas, that is, the riuer of the Iſlands the coaſt runneth Northeaſt and Southweſt, I meane taking a quarter of the North and South.

Baia de todos Santos in 13 degrees.

The courſe for Baia das Ilhas, that is, The bay of the Iſlands, which lie on the ſayd coaſt of Braſil, & the marks for the finding of them.

If thou goe for Baia das Ilhas thou muſt looke for it in fifteene degrees lacking a quarter.

Baia das Ilhas lieth in 15 degrees lacking a quarter.

If thou be minded as I ſayd to goe for theſe Iſles, if it bee from March forward, thou ſhalt fall with the land in 15 degrees and a halfe, and though it be in 15 degrees and $\frac{2}{3}$, it is all the better.

And if thou haue ſight of certaine high hilles, that ſeeme to reach to the ſkie, theſe hilles are called As Serras Raiemores. Then hauing ſight of theſe hilles, thou ſhalt goe along the coaſt; and feare nothing, for there are no ſholdes along to the North. And when thou ſeeſt the Iſlands, thou mayeſt make accompt they be theſe which thou ſeekeſt, for there are no other on al this coaſt, and thou ſhalt ſee a round hil along the ſea. Thou ſhalt vnderſtand that on the North ſide of this hill is the going in of the riuer. But if it chance that thou finde thy ſelfe in a time that will not ſuffer thee to goe in, then goe along the Iſlands giuing them a breoth off. And thou mayeſt well come to an ankor hard aboord them, for all is cleane ground. And thou ſhalt finde eight or nine fadomes, and from thence thou mayeſt goe into the riuer hard aboord the ſhore. And if it chance that thou goe from the North to the South all along the great Iſland, thou muſt keepe thy ſelfe from the land: and when thou haſt brought it Eaſtnortheaſt, then thou mayeſt ankor two cables length from the ſhore: for all is cleane ground.

A round hil.

If thou chance to arriue on this coaſt in the time of the Northeaſt windes, thou ſhalt ſeeke to fall with the land in foureteene degrees. And if thou ſee a lowe land, thou mayeſt make accompt it is the land called Ciemana, and then thou ſhalt ſee Mangues: And alſo thou ſhalt come along this coaſt to the South: and when thou ſeeſt an ende of the low land, then thou ſhalt finde an high land along the ſea like the other that I haue made mention of before, that is, all ſandie along the ſea coaſt.

In what height a man muſt fall with this place in time of the Northeaſt winds.

Ciemana.

Mangues.

And thou muſt vnderſtand, that where the high land beginneth, there is a little riuer called Rio das Contas, but enter not into it: it hath for a marke to be knowen by as it were a white mouth. And from thence to the Iſlands thou haſt nine leagues. And at the ende of this high land to the Southward of it thou ſhalt find a great bay within the land, & then thou ſhalt looke to the Weſtſouthweſt, and ſhalt ſee another high land, which lieth as it were in the middeſt of the bay, and thou ſhalt there ſee certaine white houſes which are the Ingenios or houſes wherein they make ſugar of Lucas Giraldo. From thence thou ſhalt ſee the Iſles being ſo farre ſhotte as Rio de Contas. And thou ſhalt ſee within the land a round hill which is like Monte de laude, and it hath another copple on the South ſide.

The white ſugar houſes of Lucas Giraldo.

The courſe to ſayle to Porto Seguro, that is to ſay, The ſafe hauen, lying on the foreſayd coaſt of Braſil, & the markes to know the ſame by.

If thou goe for Porto Seguro and goeſt in the time of the Southeaſt windes, which is from March forwards, I aduiſe thee that thou fall not in more degrees then ſixteen and a halfe, becauſe of the ſholdes called Os baixos dos Abrolhos, which are very dangerous, and ſtretch very farre into the ſea. And alſo going Weſt from them, that thou keepe thy lead going and be often ſounding. And if thou chance to ſee the land, and an high hill and long withall, much like to The pike, it is the hill that is called Monte Paſqual. And from thence thou muſt goe to the North, and when thou haſt brought it Southweſt of thee, then thou mayeſt beare with the land, but with great care to looke about thee.

To auoide Os baixos dos Abrolhos.

Monte Paſqual.

Marke when thou ſeeſt the land and commeſt to ſee a red cliffe, then looke to the Southward, and thou ſhalt ſee a great ſmooth coaſt along the ſea, and then on the North ſide thou ſhalt deſcrie Porto Seguro. And going along the coaſt thou ſhalt ſee the towne of Porto Seguro ſtanding vpon the toppe of an hill; which hill is a white rocke: and on the North ſide of the ſayd rocke there is a very hie land. I aduiſe thee that when thou art Eaſt and Weſt with the ſayd land, I meane with this rocke, that then thou looke to the Northward, and thou ſhalt ſee certaine rocks lying two leagues off into the ſea, whereon the ſea doth breake, and to the Southward of them thou mayeſt come to an ankor againſt the towne, and haſt a good place to ride in thirteen fadomes in ſight of the towne.

The place of comming to an ankor before Porto Seguro, which ſtandeth in 16 deg. & one third.

And if it be thy chance to arriue in the time of the Northeaſt winds, and commeſt in the height of fifteene degrees and two third parts, and ſeeſt not certaine hilles, then thou muſt goe along the coaſt being in 16 degrees, and vnder the firſt hie land that thou ſhalt deſcrie, thou ſhalt ſee certaine ſandie bayes along the ſea coaſt: And if thou haue ſight of a riuer in this height, put not thy ſelfe into it, neither beare with the land, for it hath many ſholdes. And off them lie certaine ſunken grounds, called Os Baixos de Santo Antonio. And from hence to the Southward lyeth Porto Seguro.

16 degrees.

A dangerous riuer in 16 degrees.

Baixos de Santo Antonio.

I aduiſe thee that going along the coaſt to the Southward, and ſeeing ſuch ſholdes, and the ſea to breake vpon them, as the other which I laſt ſpake of, thou ſhalt runne along them a ſea boord of them: and when thou art at the end of them, then the towne will beare Weſt of thee: and then thou mayeſt goe to thine ankoring place as is aboueſayd, giuing theſe ſholds a good birth.

The courſe to the hauen named Baia do Spirito Santo, that is to ſay, The bay of the holy Ghoſt, lying on the ſayd coaſt of Braſil, and the markes thereof.

Thou ſhalt vnderſtand that the ſhip that goeth for Spirito Santo, when it hath doubled the ſholdes called Os Baixos dos Abrolhos, and hath brought it ſelfe in 20 or 19 degrees and a halfe, then it may hall with the land in 18 or 19 degrees and a halfe, and in twentie. And the ſayd ſhippe muſt goe in this height, becauſe on this coaſt there are no Monçoins.

Monzoins are certaine ſet winds with which the tides ſet.

Rio dos Reyes magos.

If thou chance to come in the height of 19 degrees, and ſeeſt lowe land to the Northweſt off thee, then thou art on the North ſide of Spirito Santo, and thou mayeſt make accompt that it is the land lying ouer Criquare, and ouer the riuer called Rio dolce, that is the riuer of ſweete or freſh water. If thou come along the land thou ſhalt find certaine high hilles: but truſt not the firſt that thou ſeeſt only. For beſides the reſt thou ſhalt ſee a round hie hill which is at the capes end, which is called la Sierra de meſtre Aluaro. Take heede that going for this land thou looke to the North and thou ſhalt ſee a riuer called Rio dos Reyes Magos: that is, The riuer of the three kings. And comming to the Southward thou ſhalt ſee preſently the mouth of the bay to open. At the end of this hill on the South ſide, thou haſt a point of a rocke, which is called A punta do Tubaron. And on the South ſide of the bay it hath two or three blacke hie hilles, and in the middeſt of the bay thou ſhalt goe in weſtward.

I aduiſe thee that in going in thou take heede of a ſholde which lieth in the mouth of the bay: thou muſt leaue it to the Southward of thee, and then plie to double a certaine Iſland which lieth within, and thou muſt leaue it to the Northward of thee: and when it beareth on the North or Northeaſt, thou mayeſt come to an ankor: for all is cleane ground.

A Sierra de Guariparim in 20 degrees.

A Sierra de Pero Cam.

And if thou chance to come by this courſe, and falleſt in 20 degrees, and ſeeſt many hilles, and one among the reſt very high and craggie: it is called A Sierra de Guariparim, that is, the hill of Guaraparim, and ſeeſt another hill on the North ſide, which is called A Sierra de Pero Cam: both theſe lie on the South ſide of Spirito Santo. And from theſe hils thou ſhalt ſee a little hill named Guaipel. And when thou ſeeſt theſe hilles, thou ſhalt ſee three little Iſlands together, lying to the Southward: And then from theſe thou ſhalt ſee another rockie, bare, and round Iſland: and to the land off this Iſland thou ſhalt ſee a great bay. If thou wilt thou mayeſt ankor here ſafely. And if thou wilt go in, thou ſhalt bring thy ſelfe Eaſt and Weſt with the hill, and ſo thou mayeſt go in. And thou ſhalt leaue a lowe land to the North of thee, which is called A Ilha de Repouſo, that is, the Iſle of reſt: and this Iſle lieth along the coaſt: and thou mayeſt be bold to ride betwixt it and the maine, giuing it a breadth off.

A Ilha de Repouſo.

Spirito Santo ſtandeth in 20 degrees.

From theſe three Iſlands to Spirito Santo are 12 leagues: and running Northwards to come to Spirito Santo, thou ſhalt ſee another Iſland, and ſhalt go a ſeaboord of it, and by & by the mouth of the bay will open toward thee. And this bay ſtandeth in 20 degrees.

The courſe from the bay de Spirito Santo to the bay of S. Vincent, and the markes thereof. Alſo the courſe from Saint Vincent to the riuer of Plate.

SAiling from Spirito Santo for Saint Vincent, thou mayeſt goe along the coaſt, keeping ſeuen or eight leagues off, and muſt goe to ſeeke Cabo Frio, that is, The cold cape. And as thou commeſt toward Cabo Frio, thou haſt a very great bay called Bahia de Saluador, that is, The bay of our Sauiour. And from thence thou haſt twelue leagues to Cabo Frio.

Baia de Saluador 12 leagues North from Cabo frio.

Two ſmall Iſlands.

And before thou commeſt to Cabo Frio, thou haſt two ſmall Iſlands. Thou mayeſt go ſafely either a ſea boord of them, or elſe betweene them. Thou ſhalt vnderſtand that Cabo Frio hath as it were an Iſland in the midſt of the face or ſhew thereof, that doth cut off the cape. Thou mayeſt ride ſafely on the Weſt ſide thereof; for all is cleane ground.

Vnderſtand that Cabo Frio ſtandeth in 23 degrees: and from it to Rio de Ienero are twelue leagues. And this riuer of Ienero hath in the mouth thereof 3 or 4 Iſlands. And if thou wilt go into this riuer de Ienero, thou mayeſt well goe in betweene two Iſlands which ſtand in the entrance of the riuer on the South ſide: neere vnto this riuer there is a great hill ſeeming to bee a man with long haire.

The ſituation of an hill like a man with long haire by Ienero.

And take this for aduiſe, that if thou be in the height of this riuer, thou ſhalt ſee certaine high hilles within the land, which be like vnto organs. And when thou ſeeſt theſe organs, then make accompt thou art right againſt the riuer: and comming neere the land thou ſhalt ſee a certaine Iſland very round, which lieth to the Southward, and is hie and bare in the top. Thou muſt know that the mouth of this riuer ſtandeth in 23 degrees and one third part. And from this riuer to Angra, that is to ſay, The open hauen, thou haſt 15 leagues. Goe not neere the land there, except neceſſitie compell thee.

The organs, certaine high hilles.

Angra.

I aduiſe thee, that from this riuer that I ſpake of, I meane from the entrance thereof, thou muſt goe Weſtſouthweſt, and Southweſt, and Weſt and by South. And thou ſhalt ſee a great Iſland called Iſla de San Sebaſtiano, and to the Southward thereof another ſmall Iſland very high, called the Iſland of Alcatrarzas, that is to ſay, The Iſland of Pellicanes: but come not neere it, for it hath dangerous ſhoalds. And from hence thou mayeſt go Weſt, and ſo thou ſhalt fall right with the mouth of Saint Vincent, and thou ſhalt ſee an Iſland. And if thou meane to goe into Saint Vincent thou muſt leaue this Iſland to the Weſtward. And vnderſtand that Saint Vincent lieth in foure and twentie degrees. And when thou art in the mouth of this bay, or art neere the mouth of it, then thou ſhalt ſee many other Iſlands, and one among the reſt to the ſeaward. And hauing theſe ſights, thou haſt the beſt markes that bee for theſe Iſlands, that I haue told thee of: and this Iſland lieth Northweſt and Southeaſt with the mouth of S. Vincent.

FRom S. Vincent to Cananca thou haſt 40 leagues: and the coaſt lieth Northeaſt and by Eaſt, and Southweſt and by Weſt. From Cananea to the riuer of Saint Franciſco are fifteene leagues, and the coaſt lieth Northeaſt and Southweſt. There is a little Iſland, which hath as it were two bayes, and a good rode, and is in 26 degrees and a quarter, and towards the maine it is hie and craggie.

Cananea.

Rio de San Franciſco.

From San Franciſco to Boca de Ouerniron are 26 leagues, and the coaſt lieth North & South. Alſo thou muſt marke that the riuer of San Franciſco hath a great entrance, and 3 ſmall Iſlands, and to ſeaward it hath a good road; and the maine is high and craggie.

Boca de Ouerniron.

From this Boca de Ouerniron to Ilha de Aruoredo thou haſt no great markes be obſerued: but this Boca is a very great bay, and this bay is deepe within the Iſland, and is a good road, and hath many Iſlands, and ſtandeth in 28 degrees. And to the North of this Iſland vnder the point there is a good road: and there is no other road hereabout but this, and it is vnder the Iſland.

Ilha de Aruoredo.

From hence thou ſhalt haue ſight of the Iſle called Santa Catharina, which is a great Iſland about eight or nine leagues long, and lieth North and South. And hard by euen with this Iland is Porto de Patos, which ſtandeth in 29 degrees. And from Porto de Patos to Porto de Don Roderigo are ten or eleuen leagues: and the coaſt lieth North and South. And from Porto de Don Roderigo to Laguna are 5 leagues. And this is a good harbour for all winds, except the Northeaſt wind.

leagues into the ſea, where ſhips may ride well. And from the riuer of Martin de Souſa to Rio de San Pedro are 52 leagues, and the coaſt lieth Northeaſt and Southweſt.

Rio de S. Pedro.

From this riuer of San Pedro there lieth a point of ſand a good league off and more, and it lyeth on the Southweſt ſide of the port. And frõ thence to Cabo de Santa Maria are 42 leagues: and the coaſt lieth Northeaſt and Southweſt, and all is lowe land.

Cabo de Santa Maria.

Alſo on the Southeaſt ſide of Cabo de Santa Maria there lyeth an Iſle two leagues off into the ſea, and it hath a good harborough betwixt it and the mayne. And note that the mayne is lowe land.

The cape of Santa Maria ſtandeth in 35 degrees, and at the point thereof it hath an Iland a league into the ſea.

Hereafter followeth a Ruttier from the ſayd riuer of Plate to the Streight of Magelane.

THe cape of Santa Maria is in 35 degrees. Frõ thence to the Cape de Santo Antonio, which is on the other ſide of the riuer, are 30 leagues Northnortheaſt, & Southſouthweſt. And this is the broadeſt place of the riuer. And this cape is in 36 degrees and a halfe, and it is a blacke groſſe land. And thou muſt marke that 25 leagues a ſeaboord the mouth of the riuer there lie certaine ſands, which be called Baixos de los Caſtellanos.

Baixos de los Caſtellanos.

He that falleth with the cape of Santa Maria muſt take good heede to go Southeaſt vntill hee be in 36 degrees, and from thence Southſoutheaſt vntill 36 degrees and a halfe, giuing the ſayd sholds de los Caſtellanos a breadth: and alſo taking heede of the flats of the cape. And when hee findeth 40 or 45 fadomes, and ruſſet ſand, then he muſt goe Southweſt and by South, vntill he be in 40 degrees: where hee ſhall find great ſtore of weedes, which come from the coaſt, and a man may go 20 leagues from the ſhore in this ſounding.

Cabo de Arenas Gordas.

From the Cape de Santo Antonio to the Cape de Arenas Gordas are eight & forty leagues, and the coaſt lieth Northeaſt and Southweſt, and by Eaſt, and by Weſt: and in the firſt eighteene leagues is the riuer called Rio de Santa Anna, which hath at the entrance certaine flats and ſholds, giue them a good breadth, and come not nigh them by much, but keepe thy ſelfe in forty fadomes to goe ſurely.

Rio de S. Anna.

Cape de S. André

From the cape de Arenas Gordas to the cape of Sant André are one and thirty leagues: it lieth Northeaſt and by Eaſt, and Southweſt by Weſt: I meane when thou art in the middeſt with an equall diſtance from them both. And between both the capes are many bayes and riuers, but all full of ſandie ſholdes.

Baia Anegada.

From the cape of Sant Andres to the bay called Anegada, that is, The ſunken bay, are 30 leagues Eaſtnortheaſt, and Weſtſouthweſt. It ſtandeth in 40 degrees, rather leſſe then more.

Punta de Tierra llana.

From the bay called Baia Anegada to The point of the plaine land are 25 leagues Northnortheaſt, and Southſouthweſt. This point lieth in 41 degrees and a halfe. And from this point to Baia ſin fondo, that is to ſay, The bottomleſſe bay, are 35 leagues Eaſtnortheaſt, and Weſtſouthweſt. This bay ſtandeth in 42 degrees and a halfe, rather leſſe then more.

Baia ſin fondo.

Cabo redondo. Puerto de los leones.

And from Baia ſin fondo to Cabo Redondo, & Puerto de los leones, are 37 leagues Northnortheaſt and Southſouthweſt, ſomewhat to the North and South. And if thou meane to go out from thence with a compaſſe about after the maner of a halfe circle or an arch, ſo thou mayeſt paſſe through the Baia ſin fondo along the ſhore: for there is water enough.

Note that from the riuer of Plate to this place is neuer a good harbour for great ſhipping.

Puerto de los leones in 44 degrees & better. Take good heede of theſe little rocks.

From this place to Puerto de los leones the coaſt is cleane, and a man may come nigh vnto the land: And it is a lowe land with white cliffes. This harbour is in 44 degrees. And as a man goeth thither, after hee bee in 43 degrees or more, hee muſt haue a care to looke out for certaine ſmall rockes which lie neere the land, and lie North of the harbour.

Cabo de Matas.

From this harbour to Cabo de Matas, or The cape of ſhrubs, are 30 leagues North & South, halfe a point to the Eaſt and to the Weſt: and betwixt them there is a great bay very long: And to the Northweſt 18 leagues from Cabo redondo is a riuer lying Eaſt and Weſt: and it is called Rio de Camarones, or, The riuer of ſhrimps. You ſhall know when you fall with this riuer, by ſeeing many white ſpots vpon the water, and they are ſmall ſhrimps.

Rio de Camarones.

Cabo redondo in 45 degrees & a halfe large.

From this riuer to Cabo redondo the coaſt lieth Northweſt and by North, and Southeaſt and by South. This cape is in 45 degrees and a halfe large.

From this ſayd cape to Cabo Blanco and Barancas Blancas that is to ſay, to The white cape and white cliffes are 32 leagues lying North and by Eaſt and South and by Weſt: and they ſtand in 47 degrees.

Cabo Blanco and Barancas Blancas in 47 degrees.

From this Cape the coaſt lyeth towards the North ſide Northweſt about 3 leagues all full of white cliffes ſteepe vp: and the laſt cliffe is the biggeſt both in length and height, and ſheweth to be the ſaile of a ſhip when it is vnder ſaile. Theſe white cliffes are 6 in number. And this Cape hath in the face thereof a certaine round land that ſheweth to bee an Iſland afarre off: and it hath certaine poynts of rockes hard by it. And two cables length from the land is 25 fathomes water. Aboue theſe white cliffes the land is plaine and euen: and it hath certaine woods. There is much people in the countrey: of whom I wiſh thee to take good heed.

People to be taken heed of.

From this Cape the land lyeth North and South; which is the firſt fall of the Cape: and in the face thereof it hath a poynt of rocks, which ſhewe themſelues. And on the South ſide of this Cape is a good harbour and road, and there is a Bay in the middeſt.

A good harbour.

From Cabo Blanco to Puerto de San Iulian are 37 leagues, and the coaſt lyeth North and by Eaſt and South and by Weſt. This harbour of S. Iulian hath in the entrance certaine high hilles, which afarre off ſeeme to be towers. On the South part of the entrance the chanell is deepeſt in the middeſt: and thou muſt borrow nerer the North ſide then to the South. Within the harbour are two Iſlands: thou muſt come to an anker hard to them. This hauen lyeth in 49 degrees. And betweene Cabo Blanco and this harbour are The Iſlands of Aſcenſion, and they be eight.

The port of Saint Iulian.

Ilhas de Aſcenſaom.

From this ſaid harbour to the hill of S. Yues are 35 leagues: the coaſt lyeth Northeaſt & Southweſt: it is a low land and euen and hath onely one hill, and it is a plaine from one part to the other, and hath certaine cliffes to ſeaward, and to the Southward; and to the South ſide it hath certaine little copples: it ſtandeth in 50 degrees large.

Morro de Santo Yues, in 50 degrees large.

From the hill of S. Yues to Rio de Cruz are 8 leagues, Northeaſt and Southweſt: and on the North ſide of the riuer it hath a very high land, and in the toppe it is plaine and lyeth two leagues broad, layd out along North and South, and the downefall on both ſides hath as it were ſaddles. This Cape hath many poynts of rockes lying 4 leagues into the ſea: and when thou haſt ſight of this land, it is good for thee to keepe from it a good bredth off. And going from thence thou mayeſt runne in ſight of the land in 25 fathoms.

Rio de Cruz

From Rio de Cruz to Rio de Galegos are 25 leagues, Northeaſt and Southweſt: and it ſtandeth in 52 degrees and $\frac{1}{6}$ of a degree. It hath a certaine high land: and in the higheſt of the ſayd land it is plaine, and to the Northeaſt it is a pike vp, and hath certaine white cliffes: and on the toppe and ſomething downewarde it is blacke: at the foote of this high land to the Eaſtward thereof it hath certaine ſteps like a lather: and to the ſea it hath a ſharpe poynt that lyeth into this Cape almoſt halfe a league. To the Southward of this Cape where the lather is, there is a little Bay, which is the entrance of Rio de Galegos, it ebbeth and floweth here 12 fathomes. A man muſt haue a great care how he goeth in here for the cauſe aboueſaid: but he muſt keepe himſelfe out and not anker in it.

Rio de Galegos and the markes thereof.

In the mouth of Rio de Galegos it ebbeth and floweth 12 fathomes.

From Rio de Galegos to the Streits of Magelan the coaſt lyeth Northnorthweſt & Southſoutheaſt 8 leagues vnto Cabo de la virgin Maria, which is the entrance into the Streit: and 4 leagues before a man come to this Cape there are white cliffes with certaine blacke ſpots in them; and they be cauſed with the falling downe of the water. Here is water inough, and thou mayeſt come to an anker hard aboord the ſhore, and haſt a good defence for a Southweſt wind. And the Cape it ſelfe is the higeſt land of all, and is like to Cape Saint Vincent in Spaine: and it hath on the Eaſt ſide a ledge of rockes, and a poynt of ſand, with diuers ſands which ſhewe themſelues at a lowe water: thou muſt take great heede heere and giue them a good bredth halfe a league or a quarter of a league off, vntil thou bring the Cape Weſtnorthweſt, and then thou mayeſt ſtirre away Southweſt. And when thou commeſt to the lower land and into tenne or twelue fathoms, then art thou ouer againſt la Purificacion. And halfe a league within the land the citie of Nombre de Ieſus was builded, Eaſt and Weſt with the ſayd Cape right againſt a cliffe, which commeth from the ſayd Cape, and goeth within the Streits. This Cape ſtandeth in 52 degrees iuſt.

Cabo de la virgin Maria.

Ciudad de Nombre de Ieſus called by M. Candiſh Port Famine, becauſe he found al the Spaniards famiſhed, and the towne it ſelfe vtterly abandoned, and ruined. Where Nombre de Ieſus ſtood.

And this is to be taken for a warning, that he that commeth neere this Cape, and paſſeth by it as I haue ſaid with the wind at Northeaſt, or any other wind off the ſea inclining to the Southeaſt, muſt not come to anker, but preſently be ſure to paſſe by; becauſe in Sommer this place is much ſubiect to Southweſt winds, which blow right in: and they put a man from his tackle, & make him to looſe his voyage. And from March forwards there blow fauourable winds from the ſea to goe from this Cape to enter into the Streits, from this ſaid Cape the Streits go in to the Northweſt 14 leagues; and the chanell wareth narrower and narrower vnto the firſt Streit which runneth

Southweſt winds raigne much here in Sommer.

From March forward the winds are fauourable for the Streits.

Cabo de San Gregorio a good roadſtead for any winds from the Northweſt to the Southweſt.

Eaſtnortheaſt, and Weſtſouthweſt. And comming out of the mouth thereof a man muſt keepe himſelfe a poynt to the Northward, becauſe there be rocks and ſhoalds. And if you ſee beds of weeds, take heed of them, and keepe off from them: and after you be paſt this Streight you muſt ſtirre Weſtſouthweſt 8 leagues vnto Cabo de San Gregorio, which is a high white cliffe, and is a good road for any wind from the Northweſt to the Southweſt. But men muſt beware and not truſt the Indians of this Cape: for they be ſubtill and will betray a man.

The Indians about Cape de San Gregorio in the Streits are very trecherous.

The ſecond Streit called Nueſtra Sennora de Gracia.

From this Cape beginneth the ſecond Streit which is called Nueſtra Sennora de Gracia, and lyeth Eaſtnortheaſt and Weſtſouthweſt 3 leagues. And comming out of this Streit thou ſhalt ſee 3 little Iſlands, lying Weſt off this Streit: thou mayeſt go betweene them, for there is no danger: prouided alwayes that thou keepe well off from the bayes on both ſides, leſt thou bee imbayed. And from theſe Iſlands thou muſt keepe forwards in the chanell Weſtſouthweſt two leagues: and then the coaſt lyeth North and South vnto 53 degrees and a halfe, vnto a place called Punta de Santa Anna: and to the Northweſt thereof in a corner or nooke (which is one of the rincones or nookes) was the towne builded called La Ciudad del Don Philippe. Thou muſt come to an anker to the Northward thereof, after thou art paſt the caſtle and a great tree.

TWO VOYAGES OF CERTAINE ENGLISHmen to the riuer of Plate ſituate in 35 degrees of Southerly latitude: together with an exact Ruttier and deſcription thereof, and of all the maine branches, ſo farre as they are nauigable with ſmall barkes. By which riuer the Spaniards of late yeeres haue frequented an exceeding rich trade to and from Peru, and the mines of Potoſſi, as alſo to Chili, and other places.

A report of a voyage of two Engliſhmen in the company of Sebaſtian Cabota, intented for the Malucos by the Streights of Magellan, but perfourmed onely to the riuer of Plate in April 1527. Taken out of the information of M. Robert Thorne to Doctor Ley Ambaſſadour for King Henry the eight, to Charles the Emperour, touching the diſcouery of the Malucos by the North.

This was the fleete wherein Cabot diſcouered the riuer of Plate, 1526.

Two Engliſhmen went with Cabot in this diſcouery.

IN a flote of three ſhips and a carauell that went from this citie of Siuil armed by the merchants of it, which departed in Aprill laſt paſt, I and my partner haue one thouſand foure hundred duckets that wee employed in the ſayd fleete, principally for that two Engliſhmen, friendes of mine, which are ſomewhat learned in Coſmographie, ſhould goe in the ſame ſhips, to bring me certaine relation of the ſituation of the countrey, and to be expert in the nauigation of thoſe ſeas, and there to haue informations of many other things, and aduiſe that I deſire to know eſpecially. Seeing in thoſe quarters are ſhips and mariners of that countrey, and cardes by which they saile, though much vnlike ours: that they ſhould procure to haue the ſayd cards, and learne how they vnderſtand them, and eſpecially to know what nauigation they haue for thoſe Iſlands Northwards, and Northeaſtward.

The Iſlands of the Malucos.

The New found Ilands diſcouered by the Engliſh.

For if from the ſaid Iſlands the ſea doth extend without interpoſition of land to ſaile from the North point to the Northeaſt point one thouſand ſeuen hundred or one thouſand eight hundred leagues, they ſhould come to The new found Iſlands that we diſcouered, & ſo we ſhould be neerer to the ſaid Spicerie by almoſt 200 leagues then the Emperour, or the king of Portugall are.

An extract out of the diſcourſe of one Lopez Vaz a Portugal, touching the fight of M. Fenton with the Spaniſh ſhips, with a report of the proceeding of M. Iohn Drake after his departing from him to the riuer of Plate.

VPon the relation of Pedro Sarmiento concerning the ſtreits of Magellan, that they might be fortified, and for that the king heard, that there were ſhips in England preparing for the ſame ſtreits, he commanded Diego Flores de Valdes a noble man of Spaine, to paſſe thither with 23 ſhips, and 3500 men to ſtoppe the paſſage of the Engliſhmen.

There went in this fleete the gouernour of Chili, with 500 olde ſouldiers that came out of Flanders: but this was the vnhappieſt fleet of ſhips that euer went out of Spaine: for before they came from the coaſt of Spaine a ſtorme tooke them, and caſt away fiue of the fleete, and in them aboue 800 men, and the reſt came into Cadiz. But the king ſent them word that they ſhould proceede: and ſo there went out on the voyage 16 of the ſhippes, for two more of their fleete were much ſpoyled by the ſtorme which they had.

Fiue ſhips of this fleete caſt away on the coaſt of Spaine.

In theſe ſixteene ſhippes, Pedro Sarmiento was ſent to bee gouernour in the ſtraites, and had aſſigned vnto him 500 men to ſtay there with him, and hee carried with him all kinde of Artificers to make him forts, and other neceſſaries, with great ſtore of ordinance and other munition.

This fleete becauſe it was late, did winter on the coaſt of Braſil, in the riuer of Ienero: and from thence they went when the winter was paſt, and about the height of 42 degrees they had a ſudden ſtorme, ſo that Diego Flores beat it vp and downe 22 dayes, in which time hee loſt one of the beſt ſhips he had, which had in her 300 men, and 20 women, that went to inhabit the Streits: and in this ſhip alſo was moſt part of the munition which ſhould haue bene left in the Streits, ſo in the end the ſtorme grew to bee ſo great, that the ſhips were not able to endure it any longer, but were put backe vnto an Iſland, called Santa Catelina: and there he found a barke wherein were ſome fryers going for the riuer of Plate: which friers told him of two great Engliſh ſhips, and a pinneſſe, which had taken them, but tooke nothing from them, nor did them any harme, but onely asked them for the king of Spaines ſhips.

This fleete wintred in the riuer of Ienero.

M. Fenton tooke theſe fryers.

Hereupon Diego Flores, knowing that theſe Engliſh ſhips would goe for the Streits, determined to goe thither, although it was in the moneth of Februarie, and chooſing 10 ſhips of the 15 that were left, hee left two ſhips which were not in caſe to goe to ſea at the Iſland, and into the other three ſhips which were old, and ſhaken with the ſtorme hee put all the women, and ſicke men in all the fleete, and ſent them to the riuer of Ienero, and he with the other 10 returned againe for the Streits.

The three ſhips in which the ſicke men and women were, went to Braſil, and there they found within the port of S. Vincent the two ſhips before mentioned.

They woulde haue had the Engliſh men to haue gone out of the harbour, and thereupon they fell to fight, and becauſe that theſe three ſhips were weake with the ſtorme, and the men that they had were the worſt in all the fleete, the Engliſhmen eaſily put them to the worſt, and ſunke one of them, and might haue ſunke another, if the Engliſhmen would: but they minded not the deſtruction of any man: for that is the greateſt vertue that can be in a man, that when hee may doe hurt, yet he will not doe it. So the Engliſhmen went from this port to Spirito Santo, where they had victuals for their merchandiſe, and ſo they went backe for England, without doing of any harme in the Countrey.

A fight betwixt one 2 Engliſh ſhips & three Spaniſh ſhips.

They victual at Spirito Santo.

The cauſe why theſe Engliſh ſhippes vnder the conduct of M. Fenton went not to the ſtreits, I know nat: but ſome ſay that they were put backe by foule weather: other ſome ſay that it was for feare of the kings ſhips.

But the pinneſſe of theſe two ſhips went from them, in which was Captaine Iohn Drake: the cauſe why they parted I know not, but the pinneſſe came into the riuer of Plate, and within fiue leagues of Seale Iſland, not farre from the place where the Earle of Cumberlands ſhippes did take in freſh water, ſhee was caſt away vpon a ledge of rockes: but the men were ſaued in their boat, which were in number 18, who went aſhore on the North ſide, and went a dayes iourney into the land, and met with the Sauages, which are no men-eaters, but take all the Chriſtians that they can, and make them ſlaues.

Iohn Drake proceedeth on to the riuer of Plate.

But the Engliſhmen fought with them, and the Sauages ſlew 5 of them, and tooke 13 aliue, which were with the Sauages about 15 moneths. But the Maſter of the pinneſſe, whoſe name was Richard Faireweather being not willing to indure the miſery that hee was in, and hauing knowledge that there was a towne of Chriſtians on the other ſide of the riuer, he in a night called Iohn Drake, and another yong man which was with them, and tooke a very little Canoa, which had but two oares, & ſo paſſed to the other ſide of the riuer, which is about 19 leagues broade, and were three dayes before they could get ouer without meat: and comming to land, they hit vpon an high way that went towards the Chriſtians: and ſeeing the footing of horſes, they followed it, and at laſt came to an houſe where there was corne ſowed, and there they met with Indians ſeruants vnto the Spaniards, which gaue them meate, and clothes to couer them, for they were all naked, and one of the Indians went to the towne, and told them of the Engliſhmen: ſo the Captaine ſent foure horſemen, who brought them to the towne behind them.

Richard Faireweather remayneth in the riuer of Plate.

This Captaine clothed them, and prouided lodging for them, and Iohn Drake dieted at the Captaines table, and they were all very well intreated, the Captaine purpoſing to ſend them for Spaine. But the Viceroy of Peru hauing newes hereof, ſent for them, and ſo Iohn Drake was ſent to him, but the other two were kept there, becauſe they were married in the countrey, ſo that I know no more of their affaires.

Upon this comming of the Engliſhmen, there were prepared 50 horſemen to goe ouer the riuer to ſeeke the reſt of the Engliſhmen, and alſo certaine Spaniards that were among the ſauage people, but I am not certaine, whether they went forward or not.

A ruttier which declareth the ſituation of the coaſt of Braſil from the Iſle of Santa Catelina vnto the mouth of the riuer of Plata, and all along vp within the ſayd riuer, and what armes and mouthes it hath to enter into it, as farre as it is nauigable with ſmall barks.

The Iſle of Santa Catelina. Rio Grande.

FRom the Iſle of Santa Catelina, (which is in 28 degrees of Southerly latitude) vnto Rio Grande is fortie leagues. This riuer by another name is called Ygai. The Iſland of Santa Catelina is ſixe leagues in length: it hath two ſmall Iſlands on the North ſide betweene the maine land and it: and on the South ſide it hath a ſhoald of rockes, which lyeth hidden very neere vnto the poynt of the Iſle. You are to paſſe betweene the firme land and the poynt of the Iſle.

Puerto de Biaza, or Laguna.

From Santa Catelina to the hauen of Biaça, which by another name is called la Laguna, are twelue leagues: it is a good hauen within: but you muſt ſtay the full ſea to enter into it, becauſe it hath ſhoaldes in the mouth, and it may be knowen by a ſmall Iſland which lyeth a league into the ſea which is called La Iſla de Reparo, that is, The Iſland of ſuccour or defence, and you muſt ride there to ſearch the chanell.

Iſla de reparo.

Rio Grande.

From this harbour vnto the riuer before named there is no hauen for a ſhip to harbour it ſelfe. And Rio Grande hath many ſhoalds in the mouth thereof. It is a riuer that none but very ſmall ſhippes can enter into. And this riuer diuideth the countrey of the people called Carios from other nations which are called Guauaes. And from this riuer vnto the entrance of the mouth of the riuer of Plate it is al a plaine land, and very low: you muſt ſaile all along two or three leagues into the ſea from the ſhore, vntill you come to certaine Iſlands which lye twelue leagues from the mouth of the riuer of Plate.

Certaine Iſlands 12. leagues diſtant from the mouth of the riuer of Plate, which are 3 in number.

From Rio Grande vnto theſe Iſlands are 68 leagues. And from theſe Iſlands vnto the Cape of Saint Marie the coaſt runneth Northeaſt and Southweſt, ſomewhat inclining a poynt to the South. The Iſlands are three, and may be knowen as you come from the ſea by two poynts, which ſhew like the eares of a conie: you may ride betweene them and the maine.

The Cape of S. Marie. An Iſland a league an halfe from Cape Saint Marie.

From Rio Grande to the Cape of Saint Marie are 80 leagues: and the Cape may be knowne by one Iſland which lyeth from it a league and an halfe into the ſea. You may ſayle betweene the maine and that Iſland, becauſe there is aboue 8 or 9 fathoms water. The Cape of Saint Mary ſtandeth in 35 degrees of Southerly latitude.

Iſla de Lobos. The way to enter into the riuer of Plate. Rio de Solis 10 leagues within the Cape. Los tres Mogotes 3 leagues. Saint Grauiel 8 leagues.

The Cape of Santa Maria vpon the poynt thereof hath a little hill which ſtandeth ouer againſt the Iſle of Seales. From this coaſt of Santa Maria you muſt coaſt along the land alway on the North ſhore, and along the ſame are certaine Bayes. From the Cape vnto the riuer of Solis are tenne leagues, the coaſt runneth Eaſt and Weſt. There ſtandeth an Iſland ouer againſt the mouth thereof. From this riuer of Solis vnto Los tres Mogotes which are on the maine land is three leagues. And from Los Mogotes vnto the Iſles of Saint Grauiel are other 8 or 9 leagues more: all this diſtance runneth Eaſt and Weſt. Theſe are fiue ſmall Iſlands: to ride here you muſt keepe ſomewhat neere the maine within an harquebuze ſhot halfe a league before you come at the Iſlands, and ſtraightway you ſhall ſee a croſſe ✠ ſtanding on the ſaid land, and there is an harbour for ſome winds.

Rio de S. Iuan 3 leagues.

From Saint Grauiel vnto the riuer of Sant Iuan going along the ſame coaſt, I ſay on the North ſhore, are three leagues: it is very well knowen by the broken cliffe which it hath, which is a white hill. The entrance into this riuer is very dangerous; becauſe it is ſhallow, and none but very ſmall ſhippes can enter into the ſame: the entrance thereof is on the Weſt ſide very neere the land, great Carackes may ride within the harbour. From this riuer vnto the Iſle of Martin Garçia are three leagues: it is one Iſland alone, and you muſt ſayle along the coaſt on the North ſhore: and after you be come vnto the Iſland, I ſay, ouer againſt the ſame, you ſhall haue three fathoms water, and on the Weſt ſide it hath a little creeke where you may ride.

The Iſle of Martin Garzia 3. leagues.

Rio de Buenos Aëres on the ſouth ſide of the riuer of Plate.

He that deſireth to croſſe ouer the riuer of Plate vnto the riuer de Buenos Aëres from the Iſles of Saint Grauiel, muſt ſhape his courſe Southweſt: and the cut ouer is ſixteene leagues and vpon his arriuall on the South ſhore of the riuer, hee muſt ſeeke a chanell of three fathomes water, and ſtraite he muſt goe along the coaſt vntill hee come to a broken cliffe and a poynt like vnto the firme land, which is diſtant from this chanell three or foure leagues: and when thou ſeeſt this broken cliffe, keepe thee a league from it. Here vpon this riuer of Buenos Aëres was the firſt Colonie that Don Pedro de Mendoça planted. This riuer lieth very much hidden: becauſe it is not ſeene, it is very ſhallow at a low ſea, wherefore you muſt come in with the firſt of the flood.

The firſt Spaniſh colonie was planted in the riuer of Buenos Aëres.

From the Iſle of Martin Garçia vnto certaine ſmall Iſlands which are called the Iſles of Saint Lazarus is two leagues, theſe are ſhoalds: and to goe thither you muſt goe hard aboord the maine, for there goeth the chanell: all this is to be paſſed on the North ſhore, and with ſmall barkes, and with good heede.

The Iſles of San Lazaro.

From the Iſle of Martin Garçia to the mouthes of the riuer are eight leagues in paſſing along on this ſide to ſeeke one of the mouthes of the riuer Parana, as it is hereafter deſcribed. But you had need firſt to harbour in a bay, which is in the very cliffe or Barranca, and you muſt ſtay for the full ſea. And if you fall into the mouth of the riuer which is called Vruay, you muſt leaue it on the right hand, I ſay on the North ſide. And foorthwith leauing the ſaid mouth forward toward the Weſt, you may enter into the firſt mouth although it ſeeme narrow; or rather you may enter into any of the mouthes: for all of them meete together in Parana, which is the maine riuer.

Rio Vruay.

Parana is the great riuer.

And hee that deſireth to goe from the Iſle of Martin Garçia to the riuer of Palmas, which is the beſt of all theſe armes, or mouthes to ſpeake more properly, is to ſhape his courſe to the Weſt, and comming ouer to the other ſhore, and ſayling along the coaſt Northnorthweſt hee ſhall diſcouer the mouth of this riuer of Palmas: and hee muſt enter hard by Los Iuncales, which lye on the South ſide: and afterward within is very deepe ſounding. All theſe mouthes of this riuer which are 5, are full of ſholds towards the Eaſt about the ſpace of two leagues. And if the courſe of the water were not ſwift there, you could not enter into them, as I haue already ſayd, and you muſt paſſe all along with much heede and foreſight.

Rio de las Palmas.

And if perauenture you haue paſſed Cape Saint Marie and are come ouer to Cape Blanco, conſider it, that it is ſo euen and ſmooth a land, that you can ſcarcely diſcerne it a league from the maine, vnleſſe it be a very cleare day: and after this ſort the coaſt lieth low vnto the riuer de Buenos Aëres. And from thence the coaſt lyeth ſomewhat high vnto the entrance of the riuer de Palmas: all the coaſt runneth as I ſayd before. And all along this coaſt are naughty people, which eate thoſe which they kill, and many Tygers.

Cape Blanco on the South ſide of the mouth of the riuer of Plate a very low and euen land.
Man-eaters vpon the ſouth ſhore.

From the Iſle of Martin Garçia vnto Sant Saluador is nine or tenne leagues. This is an Iſland which ſtandeth two leagues within the firſt mouth: where Sebaſtian Cabota tooke poſſeſſion. And this countrey is very well peopled by a people called Carios; and you muſt beware of all theſe people: for they are your deadly enemies. The moſt Southerly mouth of Parana called Rio de Palmas is ſixteene leagues long, and it hath many turnings, and many palme or date-trees growing neere it, whereupon it is called The riuer of palme trees: and forthwith it entreth into the riuer Parana, as ſoone as theſe ſixteene leagues are finiſhed. All the other armes containe likewiſe ſixteene leagues in length, ſauing one ſmall or narrowe arme, which is called The riuer de los Beguaes: for this containeth fortie leagues in length. From this you muſt enter vp the mouth of the riuer of Palmas vnto Santo Spirito, the way is fiftie leagues: you are to paſſe ſtill along the cliffes. As you enter on the left hand which is on the Weſt ſhore vp this riuer there are many Iſles, lakes and ſmall riuers, and many Indians which are your enemies.

16. Leagues.

Santo Spirito 50 leagues from Rio de Palmas.

From Santo Spirito vnto a people which are called Los Tenbuis is fifteene leagues. This is by the narrow arme whereby they paſſe into the riuer Parana: it is the more becauſe it is the longer way. From the Tenbuis by this narrow arme vpward vnto the Quiloacas, which is another nation, are twentie leagues; and all vp this riuer is great ſtore of people.

Los Tenbuis a people.
15. Leagues.
The Quiloacas 20. leagues.

From the Quiloacas, to a place where the Spaniards now haue builded a towne, are fifteene leagues. From this towne vnto the people called Los Mequaretas is twentie leagues. Here are many ſholds which continue thirtie leagues. All theſe thirtie leagues are ſunken landes: where are many Iſles, flats, and nations, which are our enemies.

This towne perhaps may be the towne of Santa Anna, 15. leagues.
The Mequaretas a people.
20 leagues.

From the Mequaretas vnto the people called Mepenes are theſe thirtie leagues. And from hence begin the coaſts of the firme land vnto the mouth of the riuer Paraguai; ſauing that there are eight leagues more of ſunken ground.

The Mepenes 30 leagues.
8. Leagues.

From the Mepenes vnto the mouth of the riuer of Paraguai are thirtie leagues: it is a riuer that cannot be miſtaken although it hath many armes and Iſlands and dangers, it hath a marke two leagues beneath the mouth on the Eaſt ſide, to wit, an high land, where are 7 points, which we call the 7 currents: and immediatly aboue theſe currents there is an Iſland as you paſſe vp the riuer ouer againſt the poynt aforeſaid ſtandeth the mouth of Paraguai. This mouth is very plaine to be found, in ſeeking whereof a man cannot be deceiued. From this mouth the riuer of Parana is diuided, which is a very great riuer: and it goeth vnto the towne of Piquiri, which is an hundred and ſeuentie leagues: and it runneth all this ſpace North and South, and in the way are many flats and ſhoalds; and great ſtore of people, which are a bad nation, although they bee diuided. From the place where theſe two riuers are diuided, that is to ſay, from the mouth of Paraguai are ſixtie leagues vnto the citie of Aſſumption. This is a good riuer, and better to ſayle then all the reſt of the riuers, which are in this countrey. And from this towne to Los Xaraes are 200. leagues, very well inhabited with people of diuers nations, which ſerue the Spanyards.

THE TWO FAMOVS VOYAGES HAPPILY perfourmed round about the world, by Sir Francis Drake, and M. Thomas Candiſh Eſquire, together with the reſt of our Engliſh voyages intended for the South Sea, the kingdomes of Chili, Peru, the backe ſide of Nueua Eſpanna, the Malucos, the Philippinas, the mightie Empire of China, though not ſo happily perſfourmed as the two former: Whereunto are annexed certaine rare obſeruations touching the preſent ſtate of China, and the kingdome of Coray, lately inuaded by Quabacondono the laſt Monarch of the 66. princedomes of Iapan.

The famous voyage of Sir Francis Drake into the South ſea, and therehence about the whole Globe of the earth, begun in the yeere of our Lord, 1577.

THe 15. day of Nouember, in the yeere of our Lord 1577. M. Francis Drake, with a fleete of fiue ſhips and barkes, and to the number of 164. men, gentlemen and ſailers, departed from Plimmouth, giuing out his pretended voyage for Alexandria: but the wind falling contrary, hee was forced the next morning to put into Falmouth hauen in Cornewall, where ſuch and ſo terrible a tempeſt tooke vs, as few men haue ſeene the like, and was in deed ſo vehement, that all our ſhips were like to haue gone to wracke: but it pleaſed God to preſerue vs from that extremitie, and to afflict vs onely for that preſent with theſe two particulars: The maſt of our Admirall which was the Pellican, was cut ouer boord for the ſafegard of the ſhip, and the Marigold was driuen aſhore, and ſomewhat bruiſed: for the repairing of which damages wee returned againe to Plimmouth, and hauing recouered thoſe harmes, and brought the ſhips againe to good ſtate, we ſet forth the ſecond time from Plimmouth, and ſet ſaile the 13. day of December following.

The Iſle of Mogador on the coaſt of Barbarie.

The 25. day of the ſame moneth we fell with the Cape Cantin, vpon the coaſt of Barbarie, and coaſting along, the 27. day we found an Iſland called Mogador, lying one mile diſtant from the maine, betweene which Iſland and the maine, we found a very good and ſafe harbour for our ſhips to ride in, as alſo very good entrance, and voyde of any danger.

On this Iſland our Generall erected a pinneſſe, whereof he brought out of England with him foure already framed. While theſe things were in doing, there came to the waters ſide ſome of the inhabitants of the countrey, ſhewing foorth their flags of truce, which being ſeene of our Generall, hee ſent his ſhips boate to the ſhore, to know what they would: they being willing to come aboord our men left there one man of our company for a pledge, and brought two of theirs aboord, our ſhip, which by ſignes ſhewed our General, that the next day they would bring ſome prouiſion, as ſheepe, capons and hennes, and ſuch like: whereupon our Generall beſtowed amongſt them ſome linnen cloth and ſhooes, and a iaueling, which they very ioyfully receiued, and departed for that time.

The next morning they failed not to come againe to the waters ſide, and our Generall againe ſetting out our boate, one of our men leaping ouer raſhly aſhore, and offering friendly to imbrace them, they ſet violent hands on him, offering a dagger to his throte if hee had made any reſiſtance, and ſo laying him on a horſe, caried him away: ſo that a man cannot be too circumſpect and warie of himſelfe among ſuch miſcreants.

Our pinneſſe being finiſhed, wee departed from this place the 30. and laſt day of December, and coaſting along the ſhore, wee did deſcrie, not contrary to our expectation, certaine Canters which were Spaniſh fiſhermen, to whom we gaue chaſe and tooke three of them, and proceeding further we met with 3. Carauels and tooke them alſo.

The 17. day of Ianuary we arriued at Cape Blanco, where we found a ſhip riding at anchor, within the Cape, and but two ſimple Mariners in her, which ſhip we tooke and caried her further into the harbour, where we remained 4. dayes, and in that ſpace our General muſtered, and trayned his men on land in warlike maner, to make them fit for all occaſions.

Ianuarie.

In this place we tooke of the Fiſhermen ſuch neceſſaries as wee wanted, and they could yeeld vs, and leauing heere one of our litle barkes called the Benedict, wee tooke with vs one of theirs which they called Canters, being of the burden of 40. tunnes or thereabouts.

All theſe things being finiſhed, wee departed this harbour the 22. of Ianuarie, carying along with vs one of the Portugall Carauels which was bound to the Iſlands of Cape Verde for ſalt, whereof good ſtore is made in one of thoſe Iſlands.

The maſter or Pilot of that Carauel did aduertiſe our Generall that vpon one of thoſe Iſlands called Mayo, there was great ſtore of dryed Cabritos, which a few inhabitants there dwelling did yeerely make ready for ſuch of the kings Ships as did there touch, beeing bound for his countrey of Braſile or elſewhere. Wee fell with this Iſland the 27. of Ianuary, but the Inhabitants would in no caſe traffique with vs, being thereof forbidden by the kings Edict: yet the next day our Generall ſent to view the Iſland, and the likelihoodes that might be there of prouiſion of victuals, about threeſcore and two men vnder the conduct and gouernment of Maſter Winter and Maſter Doughtie, and marching towards the chiefe place of habitation in this Iſland (as by the Portugall wee were informed) hauing trauailed to the mountaines the ſpace of three miles, and arriuing there ſomewhat before the day breake, we arreſted our ſelues to ſee day before vs, which appearing, we found the inhabitants to be fled: but the place, by reaſon that it was manured, wee found to be more fruitfull then the other part, eſpecially the valleys among the hils.

The Iſle of Mayo.

Here we gaue our ſelues a litle refreſhing, as by very ripe and ſweete grapes, which the fruitfulneſſe of the earth at that ſeaſon of the yeere yeelded vs: and that ſeaſon being with vs the depth of Winter, it may ſeeme ſtrange that thoſe fruites were then there growing: but the reaſon thereof is this, becauſe they being betweene the Tropike and the Equinoctiall, the Sunne paſſeth twiſe in the yeere through their Zenith ouer their heads, by meanes whereof they haue two Summers, & being ſo neere the heate of the line, they neuer loſe the heate of the Sunne ſo much, but the fruites haue their increaſe and continuance in the midſt of Winter. The Iſland is wonderfully ſtored with goates and wilde hennes, and it hath ſalt alſo without labour, ſaue onely that the people gather it into heapes, which continually in great quantitie is increaſed vpon the ſands by the flowing of the ſea, and the receiuing heate of the Sunne kerning the ſame, ſo that of the increaſe thereof they keepe a continuall traffique with their neighbours.

* Ripe grapes in Winter.

Amongſt other things we found here a kind of fruit called Cocos, which becauſe it is not commonly knowen with vs in England, I thought good to make ſome deſcription of it.

The tree beareth no leaues nor branches, but at the very top the fruit groweth in cluſters, hard at the top of the ſtemme of the tree, as big euery ſeuerall fruite as a mans head: but hauing taken off the vttermoſt barke, which you ſhall find to bee very full of ſtrings or ſinowes, as I may terme them, you ſhall come to a hard ſhell which may holde of quantitie in liquor a pint commonly, or ſome a quart, and ſome leſſe: within that ſhell of the thickneſſe of halfe an inch good, you ſhall haue a kinde of hard ſubſtance and very white, no leſſe good and ſweete then almonds: within that againe a certaine cleare liquor, which being drunke, you ſhall not onely finde it very delicate and ſweete, but moſt comfortable and cordiall.

The deſcription of the tree that beareth Cocos.

After wee had ſatiſfied our ſelues with ſome of theſe fruites, wee marched further into the Iland, and ſaw great ſtore of * Cabritos aliue, which were ſo chaſed by the inhabitants, that wee could doe no good towards our prouiſion, but they had layde out as it were to ſtoppe our mouthes withall, certaine olde dryed Cabritos, which being but ill, and ſmall and few, wee made no account of.

* Or goates.

Being returned to our ſhips, our Generall departed hence the 31. of this moneth, and ſayled by the Iſland of S. Iago, but farre enough from the danger of the inhabitants, who ſhot and diſcharged at vs three peeces, but they all fell ſhort of vs, and did vs no harme. The Iſland is fayre and large, and as it ſeemeth, rich and fruitfull, and inhabited by the Portugals, but the mountaines and high places of the Iſland are ſayd to be poſſeſſed by the Moores, who hauing bin ſlaues to the Portugals, to eaſe themſelues, made eſcape to the deſert places of the Iſland, where they abide with great ſtrength.

The Iſle of S. Iago.

Being

A prize, and Nuno da Silua a Portugall Pilot taken.

Being before this Iſland, we eſpied two ſhips vnder ſayle, to the one of which wee gaue chaſe, and in the end boorded her with a ſhip-boat without reſiſtance, which we found to be a good prize, and ſhe yeelded vnto vs good ſtore of wine: which prize our General committed to the cuſtodie of Maſter Doughtie, and reteining the Pilot, ſent the reſt away with his Pinneſſe, giuing them a Butte of wine and ſome victuals, and their wearing clothes, and ſo they departed.

The Iſle of Fogo.

The ſame night wee came with the Iſland called by the Portugals, Ilha del fogo, that is, the burning Iſland: in the Northſide whereof is a conſuming fire, the matter is ſayde to be of Sulphure, but notwithſtanding it is like to bee a commodious Iſland, becauſe the Portugals haue built, and doe inhabite there.

Upon the South ſide thereof lyeth a moſt pleaſant and ſweete Iſland, the trees whereof are alwayes greene and faire to looke vpon, in reſpect whereof they call it Ilha Braua, that is, the braue Iſland. From the bankes thereof into the ſea doe run in many places reaſonable ſtreames of freſh waters eaſie to be come by, but there was no conuenient roade for our ſhips: for ſuch was the depth, that no ground could bee had for anchoring, and it is reported, that ground was neuer found in that place, ſo that the tops of Fogo burne not ſo high in the ayre, but the rootes of Braua are quenched as low in the ſea.

Being departed from theſe Iſlands, we drew towards the line, where wee were becalmed the ſpace of 3. weekes, but yet ſubiect to diuers great ſtormes, terrible lightnings and much thunder: but with this miſerie we had the commoditie of great ſtore of fiſh, as Dolphins, Bonitos, and flying fiſhes, whereof ſome fell into our ſhippes, wherehence they could not riſe againe for want of moiſture, for when their wings are drie, they cannot flie.

April. 33. Degrees.

From the firſt day of our departure from the Iſlands of Cape Verde, wee ſayled 54. dayes without ſight of land, and the firſt land that we fell with was the coaſt of Braſil, which we ſaw the fift of April in yͤ height of 33. degrees towards the pole Antarctike, and being diſcouered at ſea by the inhabitants of the countrey, they made vpon the coaſt great fires for a ſacrifice (as we learned) to the deuils, about which they vſe coniurations, making heapes of ſande and other ceremonies, that when any ſhip ſhall goe about to ſtay vpon their coaſt, not onely ſands may be gathered together in ſhoalds in euery place, but alſo that ſtormes and tempeſts may ariſe, to the caſting away of ſhips and men, whereof (as it is reported) there haue bene diuers experiments.

The Cape of Ioy.

The ſeuenth day in a mightie great ſtorme both of lightning, rayne and thunder, wee loſt the Canter which we called the Chriſtopher: but the eleuenth day after, by our Generals great care in diſperſing his ſhips, we found her againe, and the place where we met, our Generall called the Cape of Ioy, where euery ſhip tooke in ſome water. Heere we found a good temperature and ſweete ayre, a very faire and pleaſant countrey with an exceeding fruitfull ſoyle, where were great ſtore of large and mightie Deere, but we came not to the ſight of any people: but traueiling further into the countrey, we perceiued the footing of people in the clay-ground, ſhewing that they were men of great ſtature. Being returned to our ſhips, we wayed anchor, and ranne ſomewhat further, and harboured our ſelues betweene a rocke and the maine, where by meanes of the rocke that brake the force of the ſea, we rid very ſafe, and vpon this rocke we killed for our prouiſion certaine ſea-wolues, commonly called with vs Seales.

Their entrãce into the riuer of Plate.

From hence we went our courſe to 36. degrees, and entred the great riuer of Plate, and ranne into 54. and 53. fadomes and a halfe of freſh water, where wee filled our water by the ſhips ſide: but our Generall finding here no good harborough, as he thought he ſhould, bare out againe to ſea the 27. of April, and in bearing out we loſt ſight of our Flieboate wherein maſter Doughtie was, but we ſayling along, found a fayre and reaſonable good Bay wherein were many, and the ſame profitable Iſlands, one whereof had ſo many Seales, as would at the leaſt haue laden all our Shippes, and the reſt of the Iſlands are as it were laden with foules which is wonderfull to ſee, and they of diuers ſortes. It is a place very plentifull of victuals, and hath in it no want of freſh water.

Abundance of Seales.

Our Generall after certaine dayes of his abode in this place, being on ſhore in an Iſland, the people of the countrey ſhewed themſelues vnto him, leaping and dauncing, and entred into traffique with him, but they would not receiue any thing at any mans hands, but the ſame muſt bee caſt vpon the ground. They are of cleane, comely, and ſtrong bodies, ſwift on foote, and ſeeme to be very actiue.

May.

The eighteenth day of May our Generall thought it needfull to haue a care of ſuch Ships as were abſent, and therefore indeuouring to ſeeke the Flieboate wherein maſter Doughtie was, we eſpied her againe the next day: and whereas certaine of our ſhips were ſent to diſcouer the coaſt and to ſearch an harbour, the Marygold and the Canter being imployed in that buſineſſe, came vnto vs and gaue vs vnderſtanding of a ſafe harbour that they had found, where with all our ſhips bare, and entred it, where we watered and made new prouiſion of victuals, as by Seales, whereof we ſlew to the number of 200. or 300. in the ſpace of an houre.

Here our Generall in the Admirall rid cloſe aboord the Flie-boate, and tooke out of her all the prouiſion of victuals and what els was in her, and halling her to the Lande, ſet fire to her, and ſo burnt her to ſaue the iron worke: which being a doing, there came downe of the countrey certaine of the people naked, ſauing only about their waſte the ſkinne of ſome beaſt with the furre or haire on, and ſomething alſo wreathed on their heads: their faces were painted with diuers colours, and ſome of them had on their heads the ſimilitude of hornes, euery man his bow which was an ell in length, and a couple of arrowes. They were very agill people and quicke to deliuer, and ſeemed not to be ignorant in the feates of warres, as by their order of ranging a few men, might appeare. Theſe people would not of a long time receiue any thing at our handes; yet at length our Generall being aſhore, and they dauncing after their accuſtomed maner about him, and hee once turning his backe towards them, one leapt ſuddenly to him, and tooke his cap with his golde band off his head, and ran a litle diſtance from him and ſhared it with his fellow, the cap to the one, and the band to the other.

The Flie-boate caſt off and burnt.

The people of the countrey.

Hauing diſpatched all our buſineſſe in this place, wee departed and ſet ſayle, and immediatly vpon our ſetting foorth we loſt our Canter which was abſent three or foure dayes: but when our Generall had her againe, he tooke out the neceſſaries, and ſo gaue her ouer neere to the Cape of Good hope.

The cape of Good hope.

The next day after being the twentieth of Iune, wee harboured our ſelues againe in a very good harborough, called by Magellan Port S.Iulian, where we found a gibbet ſtanding vpon the maine, which we ſuppoſed to be the place where Magellan did execution vpon ſome of his diſobedient and rebellious company.

Iune.

Port S.Iulian.

The two and twentieth day our Generall went aſhore to the maine, and in his companie, Iohn Thomas, and Robert Winterhie, Oliuer the Maſter gunner, Iohn Brewer, Thomas Hood, and Thomas Drake, and entring on land, they preſently met with two or three of the countrey people, and Robert Winterhie hauing in his hands a bowe and arrowes, went about to make a ſhoote of pleaſure, and in his draught his bowſtring brake, which the rude Sauages taking as a token of warre, began to bend the force of their bowes againſt our company, and droue them to their ſhifts very narrowly.

In this Port our Generall began to enquire diligently of the actions of M.Thomas Doughtie, and found them not to be ſuch as he looked for, but tending rather to contention or mutinie, or ſome other diſorder, whereby (without redreſſe) the ſucceſſe of the voyage might greatly haue bene hazarded: whereupon the company was called together and made acquainted with the particulars of the cauſe, which were found partly by maſter Doughties owne confeſſion, and partly by the euidence of the fact, to be true: which when our Generall ſaw, although his priuate affection to M.Doughtie (as hee then in the preſence of vs all ſacredly proteſted) was great, yet the care he had of the ſtate of the voyage, of the expectation of her Maieſtie, and of the honour of his countrey did more touch him, (as indeede it ought) then the priuate reſpect of one man: ſo that the cauſe being throughly heard, and all things done in good order as neere as might be to the courſe of our lawes in England, it was concluded that M.Doughtie ſhould receiue puniſhment according to the qualitie of the offence: and he ſeeing no remedie but patience for himſelfe, deſired before his death to receiue the Communion, which he did at the hands of M.Fletcher our Miniſter, and our Generall himſelfe accompanied him in that holy action: which being done, and the place of execution made ready, hee hauing embraced our Generall and taken his leaue of all the companie, with prayer for the Queenes maieſtie and our realme, in quiet ſort laid his head to the blocke, where he ended his life. This being done, our Generall made diuers ſpeaches to the whole company, perſwading vs to vnitie, obedience, loue, and regard of our voyage; and for the better confirmation thereof, willed euery man the next Sunday following to prepare himſelfe to receiue the Communion, as Chriſtian brethren and friends ought to doe, which was done in very reuerent ſort, and ſo with good contentment euery man went about his buſineſſe.

M. Thomas Doughtie executed.

The 17. day of Auguſt we departed the port of S.Iulian, & the 20. day we fell with the ſtreight or freat of Magellan going into the South ſea, at the Cape or headland whereof we found the body of a dead man, whoſe fleſh was cleane conſumed.

Auguſt.

The ſtreight of Magellan.

The 21. day we entred The ſtreight, which we found to haue many turnings, and as it were ſhuttings vp, as if there were no paſſage at all, by meanes whereof we had the wind often againſt vs, ſo that ſome of the fleete recouering a Cape or point of land, others ſhould be forced to turne backe againe, and to come to an anchor where they could.

In this ſtreight there be many faire harbors, with ſtore of freſh water, but yet they lacke their beſt commoditie: for the water is there of ſuch depth, that no man ſhal find ground to anchor in, except it bee in ſome narow riuer or corner, or betweene ſome rocks, ſo that if any extreme blaſts or contrary winds do come (whereunto the place is much ſubiect) it carieth with it no ſmall danger.

The land on both ſides is very huge & mountainous, the lower mountains whereof, although they be monſtrous and wonderfull to looke vpon for their height, yet there are others which in height exceede them in a ſtrange maner, reaching themſelues aboue their fellowes ſo high, that betweene them did appeare three regions of cloudes.

Theſe mountaines are couered with ſnow: at both the Southerly and Eaſterly partes of the ſtreight there are Iſlands, among which the ſea hath his indraught into the ſtreights, euen as it hath in the maine entrance of the freat.

This ſtreight is extreme cold, with froſt and ſnow continually; the trees ſeeme to ſtoope with the burden of the weather, and yet are greene continually, and many good and ſweete herbes doe very plentifully grow and increaſe vnder them.

The bredth of the ſtreights of Magellan.

The bredth of the ſtreight is in ſome place a league, in ſome other places 2. leagues, and three leagues, and in ſome other 4. leagues, but the naroweſt place hath a league ouer.

Abundance of foule in the ſtreight.

The 24. of Auguſt we arriued at an Iſland in the ſtreights, where we found great ſtore of foule which could not flie, of the bigneſſe of geeſe, whereof we killed in leſſe then one day 3000. and victualled our ſelues throughly therewith.

September.

The 6. day of September we entred the South ſea at the Cape or head ſhore.

The ſeuenth day wee were driuen by a great ſtorme from the entring into the South ſea two hundred leagues and odde in longitude, and one degree to the Southward of the Streight: in which height, and ſo many leagues to the Weſtward, the fifteenth day of September fell out the Eclipſe of the Moone at the houre of ſixe of the clocke at night: but neither did the Eclipticall conflict of the Moone impayre our ſtate, nor her clearing againe amend vs a whit, but the accuſtomed Eclipſe of the Sea continued in his force, wee being darkened more then the Moone ſeuen fold.

57. Degrees and a terce of Southerly latitude. Botero writeth that another hath found this place all Iſlands.

From the Bay (which we called The Bay of ſeuering of friends) wee were driuen backe to the Southward of the ſtreights in 57. degrees and a terce: in which height we came to an anker among the Iſlands, hauing there freſh and very good water, with herbes of ſingular vertue. Not farre from hence we entred another Bay, where wee found people both men and women in their Canoas, naked, and ranging from one Iſland to another to ſeeke their meat, who entred traffique with vs for ſuch things as they had.

We returning hence Northward againe, found the 3. of October three Iſlands, in one of which was ſuch plentie of birdes as is ſcant credible to report.

M. Winter ſeparated and returned.

The 8. day of October we loſt ſight of one of our Conſorts wherein M. Winter was, who as then we ſuppoſed was put by a ſtorme into the ſtreights againe, which at our returne home wee found to be true, and he not periſhed, as ſome of our company feared.

The trending of the coaſt of Chili.

Thus being come into the height of The ſtreights againe, we ran, ſuppoſing the coaſt of Chili to lie as the generall Maps haue deſcribed it, namely Northweſt, which we found to lie and trend to the Northeaſt and Eaſtwards, whereby it appeareth that this part of Chili hath not bene truely hitherto diſcouered, or at the leaſt not truely reported for the ſpace of 12. degrees at the leaſt, being ſet downe either of purpoſe to deceiue, or of ignorant coniecture.

The Iſle la Mocha in 38. degrees and 30. minutes.

We continuing our courſe, fell the 29. of Nouember with an Iſland called la Mocha, where we caſt anchor, and our Generall hoyſing out our boate, went with ten of our company to ſhore, where wee found people, whom the cruell and extreme dealings of the Spaniards haue forced for their owne ſafetie and libertie to flee from the maine, and to fortifie themſelues in this Iſland. We being on land, the people came downe to vs to the water ſide with ſhew of great courteſie, bringing to vs potatoes, rootes, and two very fat ſheepe, which our Generall receiued and gaue them other things for them, and had promiſe to haue water there: but the next day repayring againe to the ſhore, and ſending two men aland with barrels to fill water, the people taking them for Spaniards (to whom they vſe to ſhew no fauour if they take them) layde violent hands on them, and as we thinke, ſlew them.

Our Generall ſeeing this, ſtayed here no longer, but wayed anchor, and ſet ſayle towards the coaſt of Chili, and drawing towards it, we mette neere to the ſhore an Indian in a Canoa, who thinking vs to haue bene Spaniards, came to vs and tolde vs, that at a place called S. Iago, there was a great Spaniſh ſhip laden from the kingdome of Peru: for which good newes our Generall gaue him diuers trifles, whereof he was glad, and went along with vs and brought vs to the place, which is called the port of Valparizo.

The port of Valparizo in 33. degrees 40. minutes.

When we came thither, we found indeede the ſhip riding at anker, hauing in her eight Spaniards and three Negros, who thinking vs to haue bene Spaniards and their friends, welcommed vs with a drumme, and made ready a Bottija of wine of Chili to drinke to vs: but as ſoone as we were entred, one of our company called Thomas Moone began to lay about him, and ſtrooke one of the Spanyards, and ſayd vnto him, Abaxo Perro, that is in Engliſh, Goe downe dogge. One of theſe Spaniards ſeeing perſons of that quality in thoſe ſeas, all to croſſed, and bleſſed himſelfe: but to be ſhort, wee ſtowed them vnder hatches all ſaue one Spaniard, who ſuddenly and deſperately leapt ouer boord into the ſea, and ſwamme aſhore to the towne of S. Iago, to giue them warning of our arriuall.

Wine of Chili.

The towne of S. Iago taken.

They of the towne being not aboue 9. houſholds, preſently fled away and abandoned the towne. Our Generall manned his boate, and the Spaniſh ſhips boate, and went to the Towne, and being come to it, we rifled it, and came to a ſmall chappell which wee entred, and found therein a ſiluer chalice, two cruets, and one altar-cloth, the ſpoyle whereof our Generall gaue to M. Fletcher his miniſter.

We found alſo in this towne a warehouſe ſtored with wine of Chili, and many boords of Cedar-wood, all which wine we brought away with vs, and certaine of the boords to burne for firewood: and ſo being come aboord, wee departed the Hauen, hauing firſt ſet all the Spaniards on land, ſauing one Iohn Griego a Greeke borne, whom our Generall caried with him for his Pilot to bring him into the hauen of Lima.

Wine of Chili.

John Griego a Pilot taken.

When we were at ſea, our Generall rifled the ſhip, and found in her good ſtore of the wine of Chili, and 25000. pezoes of very pure and fine gold of Baldiuia, amounting in value to 37000. ducats of Spaniſh money, and aboue. So going on our courſe, wee arriued next at a place called Coquimbo, where our Generall ſent 14. of his men on land to fetch water: but they were eſpied by the Spaniards, who came with 300. horſemen and 200. footemen, and ſlewe one of our men with a piece, the reſt came aboord in ſafetie, and the Spaniards departed: wee went on ſhore againe, and buried our man, and the Spaniards came downe againe with a flag of truce, but we ſet ſayle and would not truſt them.

Gold of Baldiuia.

Coquimbo in 29. degrees 30 minutes.

From hence we went to a certaine port called Tarapaça, where being landed, we found by the Sea ſide a Spaniard lying aſleepe, who had lying by him 13. barres of ſiluer, which weighed 4000. ducats Spaniſh; we tooke the ſiluer, and left the man.

Tarapaça.

Not farre from hence going on land for freſh water, we met with a Spaniard and an Indian boy driuing 8, Llamas or ſheepe of Peru which are as big as aſſes; euery of which ſheepe had on his backe 2. bags of leather, each bagge conteining 50. li. weight of fine ſiluer: ſo that bringing both the ſheepe and their burthen to the ſhips, we found in all the bags 800. weight of ſiluer.

Here hence we ſailed to a place called Arica, and being entred the port, we found there three ſmall barkes which we rifled, and found in one of them 57 wedges of ſiluer, each of them weighing about 20 pound weight, and euery of theſe wedges were of the faſhion and bigneſſe of a brickbat. In all theſe 3. barkes we found not one perſon: for they miſtruſting no ſtrangers, were all gone aland to the Towne, which conſiſteth of about twentie houſes, which we would haue ranſacked if our company had bene better and more in number. But our Generall contented with the ſpoyle of the ſhips, left the Towne and put off againe to ſea and ſet ſayle for Lima, and by the way met with a ſmall barke, which he boorded, and found in her good ſtore of linnen cloth, whereof taking ſome quantitie, he let her goe.

Arica in 18. deg 30. min.

To Lima we came the 13. day of February, and being entred the hauen, we found there about twelue ſayle of ſhips lying faſt moored at an anker, hauing all their ſayles caried on ſhore; for the maſters and marchants were here moſt ſecure, hauing neuer bene aſſaulted by enemies, and at this time feared the approch of none ſuch as we were. Our generall rifled theſe ſhips, and found in one of them a cheſt full of royals of plate, and good ſtore of ſilkes and linnen cloth, and tooke the cheſt into his owne ſhip, and good ſtore of the ſilkes and linnen. In which ſhip hee had newes of another ſhip called the Cacafuego which was gone towards Paita, and that the ſame ſhippe was laden with treaſure: whereupon we ſtaied no longer here, but cutting all the cables of the ſhippes in the hauen, we let them driue whither they would, either to ſea or to the ſhore, and with all ſpeede we followed the Cacafuego toward Paita, thinking there to haue found her; but before wee arriued there, ſhe was gone from thence towards Panama, whom our Generall ſtill purſued, and by the way met with a barke laden with ropes and tackle for ſhips, which hee boorded and ſearched, and found in her 80. li. weight of golde, and a crucifixe of gold with goodly great Emeraulds ſet in it which he tooke, and ſome of the cordage alſo for his owne ſhip.

Lima in 11. deg. 50. minutes.

From hence we departed, ſtill following the Cacafuego, and our Generall promiſed our company, that whoſoeuer could firſt deſcrie her, ſhould haue his chaine of gold for his good newes. It fortuned that Iohn Drake going vp into the top, deſcried her about three of the clocke, and about ſixe of the clocke we came to her and boorded her, and ſhotte at her three peeces of ordinance, and ſtrake downe her Miſen, and being entered, we found in her great riches, as iewels and precious ſtones, thirteene cheſts full of royals of plate, foure ſcore pound weight of golde, and ſixe and twentie tunne of ſiluer. The place where we tooke this prize, was called Cape de San Franciſco, about 150. leagues from Panama.

The rich ſhip called the Cacafuego taken.

Cape de San Franciſco in 1. degree to the North.

The Pilots name of this Shippe was Franciſco, and amongſt other plate that our Generall found in this ſhip, he found two very faire guilt bowles of ſiluer, which were the Pilots: to whom our Generall ſayd: Senior Pilot, you haue here two ſiluer cups, but I muſt needes haue one of them: which the Pilot becauſe hee could not otherwiſe chuſe, yeelded vnto, and gaue the other to the ſteward of our Generals ſhips.

When this Pilot departed from vs, his boy ſayde thus vnto our Generall: Captaine, our ſhip ſhall be called no more the Cacafuego, but the Cacaplata, and your ſhippe ſhall bee called the Cacafuego: which pretie ſpeach of the Pilots boy miniſtred matter of laughter to vs, both then and long after.

China ſilks, and Porcellan.

When our Generall had done what hee would with this Cacafuego, hee caſt her off, and wee went on our courſe ſtill towards the Weſt, and not long after met with a ſhip laden with linnen cloth and fine China-diſhes of white earth, and great ſtore of China-ſilks, of all which things wee tooke as we liſted.

The owner himſelfe of this ſhip was in her, who was a Spaniſh Gentleman, from whom our Generall tooke a Fawlcon of golde, with a great Emeraud in the breaſt thereof, and the Pilot of the ſhip he tooke alſo with him, and ſo caſt the ſhip off.

Guatulco.

This Pilot brought vs to the hauen of Guatulco, the towne whereof, as he told vs, had but 17. Spaniards in it. Aſſoone as we were entred this hauen, wee landed, and went preſently to the towne, and to the Towne-houſe, where we found a Iudge ſitting in iudgement, being aſſociate with three other officers, vpon three Negros that had conſpired the burning of the Towne: both which Iudges & priſoners we tooke, and brought them a ſhipboord, and cauſed the chiefe Iudge to write his letter to the Towne, to command all the Towneſmen to auoid, that we might ſafely water there. Which being done, and they departed, we ranſaked the Towne, and in one houſe we found a pot of the quantitie of a buſhell, full of reals of plate, which we brought to our ſhip.

And here one Thomas Moone one of our company, tooke a Spaniſh Gentleman as hee was flying out of the towne, and ſearching him, he found a chaine of golde about him, and other iewels, which he tooke, and ſo let him goe.

The Portugal Pilot ſet on land.
The Iſland of Canno.

At this place our General among other Spaniards, ſet aſhore his Portugall Pilote, which hee tooke at the Iſlands of Cape Verde, out of a ſhip of S. Mary port of Portugall: and hauing ſet them aſhore, we departed hence, and ſailed to the Iſland of Canno, where our Generall landed, and brought to ſhore his owne ſhip, and diſcharged her, mended, and graued her, and furniſhed our ſhip with water and wood ſufficiently.

A ſhip with a gouernour for the Iſlands of Philippinas.

And while wee were here, we eſpied a ſhippe, and ſet ſaile after her, and tooke her, and found in her two Pilots, and a Spaniſh Gouernour, going for the Iſlands of the Philippinas: wee ſearched the ſhippe, and tooke ſome of her marchandizes, and ſo let her goe. Our Generall at this place and time, thinking himſelfe both in reſpect of his priuate iniuries receiued from the Spaniards, as alſo of their contempts and indignities offered to our countrey and Prince in generall, ſufficiently ſatiſfied, and reuenged: and ſuppoſing that her Maieſtie at his returne would reſt contented with this ſeruice, purpoſed to continue no longer vpon the Spaniſh coaſts, but began to conſider and to conſult of the beſt way for his Countrey.

He thought it not good to returne by the Streights, for two ſpeciall cauſes: the one, leſt the Spaniards ſhould there waite, and attend for him in great number and ſtrength, whoſe hands, hee being left but one ſhip, could not poſſibly eſcape. The other cauſe was the dangerous ſituation of the mouth of the ſtreights in the South ſea, where continuall ſtormes reigning and bluſtering, as he found by experience, beſides the ſhoalds and ſands vpon the coaſt, he thought it not a good courſe to aduenture that way: he reſolued therefore to auoyde theſe hazards, to goe forward to the Iſlandes of the Malucos, and therehence to ſaile the courſe of the Portugals by the Cape of Buena Eſperança.

Vpon this reſolution, hee beganne to thinke of his beſt way to the Malucos, and finding himſelfe ſelfe where he now was becalmed, he ſaw that of neceſſitie hee muſt be forced to take a Spaniſh courſe, namely to ſayle ſomewhat Northerly to get a winde. Wee therefore ſet ſaile, and ſayled 600. leagues at the leaſt for a good winde, and thus much we ſailed from the 16, of April, till the 3. of June.

June.

Sir Francis Drake ſayled on the backſide of America to 43. degrees of Northerly latitude.

The 5. day of June, being in 43. degrees towards the pole Arctike, we found the ayre ſo colde, that our men being grieuouſly pinched with the ſame, complained of the extremitie thereof, and the further we went, the more the colde increaſed vpon vs. Whereupon we thought it beſt for that time to ſeeke the land, and did ſo, finding it not mountainous, but low plaine land, till wee came within 38. degrees towards the line. In which height it pleaſed God to ſend vs into a faire and good Baye, with a good winde to enter the ſame.

38. Degrees.

A deſcription of the people and Countrey of Noua Albion.

In this Baye wee anchored, and the people of the Countrey hauing their houſes cloſe by the waters ſide, ſhewed themſelues vnto vs, and ſent a preſent to our Generall.

When they came vnto vs, they greatly wondred at the things that wee brought, but our Generall (according to his naturall and accuſtomed humanitie) courteouſly intreated them, and liberally beſtowed on them neceſſary things to couer their nakedneſſe, whereupon they ſuppoſed vs to be gods, and would not be perſwaded to the contrary: the preſents which they ſent to our Generall, were feathers, and calles of net-worke.

Their houſes are digged round about with earth, and haue from the vttermoſt brimmes of the circle, clifts of wood ſet vpon them, ioyning cloſe together at the toppe like a ſpire ſteeple, which by reaſon of that cloſeneſſe are very warme.

Their bed is the ground with ruſhes ſtrowed on it, and lying about the houſe, haue the fire in the midſt. The men go naked, the women take bulruſhes, and kembe them after the manner of hempe, and thereof make their looſe garments, which being knit about their middles, hang downe about their hippes, hauing alſo about their ſhoulders a ſkinne of Deere, with the haire vpon it. Theſe women are very obedient and ſeruiceable to their huſbands.

After they were departed from vs, they came and viſited vs the ſecond time, and brought with them feathers and bags of Tabacco for preſents: And when they came to the top of the hill (at the bottome whereof we had pitched our tents) they ſtaied themſelues: where one appointed for ſpeaker wearied himſelfe with making a long oration, which done, they left their bowes vpon the hill, and came downe with their preſents.

A long oration.

In the meane time the women remaining on the hill, tormented themſelues lamentably, tearing their fleſh from their cheekes, whereby we perceiued that they were about a ſacrifice. In the meane time our Generall with his company went to prayer, and to reading of the Scriptures, at which exerciſe they were attentiue, & ſeemed greatly to be affected with it: but when they were come vnto vs, they reſtored againe vnto vs thoſe things which before we beſtowed vpon them.

The newes of our being there being ſpread through the Countrey, the people that inhabited round about came downe, and amongſt them the King himſelfe, a man of a goodly ſtature, & comely perſonage, with many other tall and warlike men: before whoſe comming were ſent two Ambaſſadors to our Generall, to ſignifie that their King was comming, in doing of which meſſage, their ſpeach was continued about halfe an houre. This ended, they by ſignes requeſted our Generall to ſend ſome thing by their hand to their king, as a token that his comming might be in peace: wherein our Generall hauing ſatiſfied them, they returned with glad tidings to their King, who marched to vs with a princely maieſtie, the people crying continually after their manner, and as they drew neere vnto vs, ſo did they ſtriue to behaue themſelues in their actions with comelineſſe.

In the fore-front was a man of a goodly perſonage, who bare the ſcepter or mace before the King, whereupon hanged two crownes, a leſſe and a bigger, with three chaines of a maruellous length: the crownes were made of knit worke wrought artificially with fethers of diuers colours: the chaines were made of a bonie ſubſtance, and few be the perſons among them that are admitted to weare them: and of that number alſo the perſons are ſtinted, as ſome ten, ſome 12. &c. Next vnto him which bare the ſcepter, was the King himſelfe, with his Guard about his perſon, clad with Conie ſkins, & other ſkins: after them followed the naked cõmon ſort of people, euery one hauing his face painted, ſome with white, ſome with blacke, and other colours, & hauing in their hands one thing or another for a preſent, not ſo much as their children, but they alſo brought their preſents.

Chaines like thoſe of Canada.

In the meane time our Generall gathered his men together, and marched within his fenced place, making againſt their approching, a very warre-like ſhew. They being trooped together in their order, and a generall ſalutation being made, there was preſently a generall ſilence. Then he that bare the ſcepter before the King, being informed by another, whom they aſſigned to that office, with a manly and loftie voyce proclaymed that which the other ſpake to him in ſecrete, continuing halfe an houre: which ended, and a generall Amen as it were giuen, the King with the whole number of men and women (the children excepted) came downe without any weapon, who deſcending to the foote of the hill, ſet themſelues in order.

In comming towards our bulwarks and tents, the ſcepter-bearer began a ſong, obſeruing his meaſures in a daunce, and that with a ſtately countenance, whom the King with his Guarde, and euery degree of perſons following, did in like maner ſing and daunce, ſauing onely the women, which daunced & kept ſilence. The General permitted them to enter within our bulwarke, where they continued their ſong and daunce a reaſonable time. When they had ſatiſfied themſelues, they made ſignes to our General to ſit downe, to whom the King, and diuers others made ſeuerall orations, or rather ſupplications, that hee would take their prouince and kingdome into his hand, and become their King, making ſignes that they would reſigne vnto him their right and title of the whole land, and become his ſubiects. In which, to perſwade vs the better, the King and the reſt, with one conſent, and with great reuerence, ioyfully ſinging a ſong, did ſet the crowne vpon his head, inriched his necke with all their chaines, and offred vnto him many other things, honouring him by the name of Hioh, adding thereunto as it ſeemed, a ſigne of triumph: which thing our Generall thought not meete to reiect, becauſe he knew not what honour and profit it might be to our Countrey. Wherefore in the name, and to the vſe of her Maieſtie he tooke the ſcepter, crowne, and dignitie of the ſaid Countrey into his hands, wiſhing that the riches & treaſure thereof might ſo conueniently be tranſported to the inriching of her kingdom at home, as it aboundeth in yͤ ſame.

The King reſignes his crowne and kingdome to Sir Francis Drake.

The common ſorte of people leauing the King and his Guarde with our Generall, ſcattered themſelues together with their ſacrifices among our people, taking a diligent viewe of euery perſon: and ſuch as pleaſed their fancie, (which were the yongeſt) they incloſing them about offred their ſacrifices vnto them with lamentable weeping, ſcratching, and tearing the fleſh from their faces with their nailes, whereof iſſued abundance of blood. But wee vſed ſignes to them of diſliking this, and ſtayed their hands from force, and directed them vpwards to the liuing God, whom onely they ought to worſhip. They ſhewed vnto vs their wounds, and craued helpe of them at our hands, whereupon we gaue them lotions, plaiſters, and oyntments agreeing to the ſtate of their griefes, beſeeching God to cure their diſeaſes. Euery third day they brought their ſacrifices vnto vs, vntill they vnderſtood our meaning, that we had no pleaſure in them: yet they could not be long abſent from vs, but dayly frequented our company to the houre of our departure, which departure ſeemed ſo greeuous vnto them, that their ioy was turned into ſorow. They intreated vs, that being abſent we would remember them, and by ſtealth prouided a ſacrifice, which we miſliked.

The like they did in Hochelaga.

Great herdes of Deere.

Our neceſſarie buſineſſe being ended, our Generall with his company trauailed vp into the Countrey to their villages, where we found herdes of Deere by 1000. in a company, being moſt large, and fat of body.

Abundance of ſtrange conies.

We found the whole Countrey to bee a warren of a ſtrange kinde of Connies, their bodies in bigneſſe as be the Barbary Connies, their heads as the heads of ours, the feete of a Want, and the taile of a Rat being of great length: vnder her chinne is on either ſide a bag, into the which ſhe gathereth her meate, when ſhe hath filled her bellie abroad. The people eate their bodies, and make great accompt of their ſkinnes, for their Kings coate was made of them.

Noua Albion.

Our Generall called this Countrey Noua Albion, and that for two cauſes: the one in reſpect of the white bankes and cliffes, which lie towards the ſea: and the other, becauſe it might haue ſome affinitie with our Countrey in name, which ſometime was ſo called.

Golde and ſiluer in the earth of Noua Albion.

There is no part of earth heere to bee taken vp, wherein there is not ſome probable ſhew of gold or ſiluer.

At our departure hence our Generall ſet vp a monument of our being there, as alſo of her Maieſties right and title to the ſame, namely a plate, nailed vpon a faire great poſte, whereupon was ingrauen her Maieſties name, the day and yeere of our arriuall there, with the free giuing vp of the prouince and people into her Maieſties hands, together with her highneſſe picture and armes, in a peece of ſixe pence of current Engliſh money vnder the plate, whereunder was alſo written the name of our Generall.

It ſeemeth that the Spaniards hitherto had neuer bene in this part of the Countrey, neither did euer diſcouer the land by many degrees, to the Southwards of this place.

Their departure.
October.
Certaine Iſlands in 8. degrees.
Strange Canoas, like thoſe of Iaua.

After we had ſet ſaile from hence, wee continued without ſight of land till the 13. day of October following, which day in the morning wee fell with certaine Iſlands 8. degrees to the Northward of the line, from which Iſlands came a great number of Canoas, hauing in ſome of them 4. in ſome 6. and in ſome alſo 14. men, bringing with them cocos, and other fruites. Their Canoas were hollow within, and cut with great arte and cunning, being very ſmooth within and without, and bearing a glaſſe as if it were a horne daintily burniſhed, hauing a prowe, and a ſterne of one ſort, yeelding inward circle-wiſe, being of a great height, and full of certaine white ſhels for a brauerie, and on each ſide of them lie out two peeces of timber about a yard and a halfe long, more or leſſe, according to the ſmalneſſe, or bigneſſe of the boate.

This people haue the nether part of their eares cut into a round circle, hanging downe very lowe vpon their cheekes, whereon they hang things of a reaſonable weight. The nailes of their hands are an ynche long, their teeth are as blacke as pitch, and they renew them often, by eating of an herbe with a kinde of powder, which they alwayes carrie about them in a cane for the ſame purpoſe.

Leauing this Iſland the night after we fell with it, the 18. of October, we lighted vpon diuers others, ſome whereof made a great ſhew of Inhabitants.

Iſlands.

Wee continued our courſe by the Iſlands of Tagulada, Zelon, and Zewarra, being friends to the Portugals, the firſt whereof hath growing in it great ſtore of Cinnamom.

The 14. of Nouember we fell with the Iſlands of Maluco, which day at night (hauing directed our courſe to runne with Tydore) in coaſting along the Iſland of Mutyr, belonging to the King of Ternate, his Deputie or Vice-king ſeeing vs at ſea, came with his Canoa to vs without all feare, and came aboord, and after ſome conference with our Generall, willed him in any wiſe to runne in with Ternate, and not with Tydore, aſſuring him that the King would bee glad of his comming, and would be ready to doe what he would require, for which purpoſe he himſelfe would that night be with the King, and tell him the newes, with whom if he once dealt, hee ſhould finde that as he was a King, ſo his word ſhould ſtand: adding further, that if he went to Tydore before he came to Ternate, the King would haue nothing to doe with vs, becauſe hee held the Portugall as his enemie: whereupon our General reſolued to runne with Ternate, where the next morning early we came to anchor, at which time our Generall ſent a meſſenger to the king with a veluet cloke for a preſent, and token of his comming to be in peace, and that he required nothing but traffique and exchange of marchandize, whereof he had good ſtore; in ſuch things as he wanted.

Nouember.

The Iſle of Ternate.

In the meane time the Vice-king had bene with the king according to his promiſe, ſignifying vnto him what good things he might receiue from vs by traffique: whereby the King was mooued with great liking towards vs, and ſent to our Generall with ſpeciall meſſage, that hee ſhould haue what things he needed, and would require with peace and friendſhip, and moreouer that hee would yeeld himſelfe, and the right of his Iſland to bee at the pleaſure and commandement of ſo famous a Prince as we ſerued. In token whereof he ſent to our Generall a ſignet, and within ſhort time after came in his owne perſon, with boates, and Canoas to our ſhip, to bring her into a better and ſafer roade then ſhe was in at that preſent.

The king of Ternate offreth himſelfe and his kingdome to the ſeruice of the Queene of England.

In the meane time, our Generals meſſenger beeing come to the Court, was met by certaine noble perſonages with great ſolemnitie, and brought to the King, at whoſe hands hee was moſt friendly and graciouſly intertained.

The King purpoſing to come to our ſhip, ſent before 4. great and large Canoas, in euery one whereof were certaine of his greateſt ſtates that were about him, attired in white lawne of cloth of Calicut, hauing ouer their heads from the one ende of the Canoa to the other, a couering of thinne perfumed mats, borne vp with a frame made of reedes for the ſame vſe, vnder which euery one did ſit in his order according to his dignitie, to keepe him from the heate of the Sunne, diuers of whom beeing of good age and grauitie, did make an ancient and fatherly ſhew. There were alſo diuers yong and comely men attired in white, as were the others: the reſt were ſouldiers, which ſtood in comely order round about on both ſides, without whom ſate the rowers in certaine galleries, which being three on a ſide all along the Canoas, did lie off from the ſide thereof three or foure yardes, one being orderly builded lower then another, in euery of which galleries were the number of 4. ſcore rowers.

The great and ſtrange Canoas of the King of Ternate.

Theſe Canoas were furniſhed with warlike munition, euery man for the moſt part hauing his ſword and target, with his dagger, beſide other weapons, as launces, caliuers, darts, bowes and arrowes: alſo euery Canoa had a ſmall caſt baſe mounted at the leaſt one full yarde vpon a ſtocke ſet vpright.

Thus comming neere our ſhippe, in order they rowed about vs, one after another, and paſſing by, did their homage with great ſolemnitie, the great perſonages beginning wͭ great grauitie and fatherly countenances, ſignifying that yͤ king had ſent them to conduct our ſhip into a better roade.

Soone after the King himſelfe repaired, accompanied with 6. graue and ancient perſons, who did their obeiſance with marueilous humilitie. The king was a man of tall ſtature, and ſeemed to be much delighted with the ſound of our muſicke, to whom as alſo to his nobilitie, our Generall gaue preſents, wherewith they were paſſing well contented.

Sagu a kinde of meale.

At length the King craued leaue of our Generall to depart, promiſing the next day to come aboord, and in the meane time to ſend vs ſuch victuals, as were neceſſarie for our prouiſion: ſo that the ſame night we receiued of them meale, which they call Sagu, made of the tops of certaine trees, taſting in the mouth like ſowre curds, but melteth like ſugar, whereof they make certaine cakes, which may be kept the ſpace of ten yeeres, and yet then good to be eaten. We had of them ſtore of rice, hennes, vnperfect and liquid ſugar, ſugar canes, and a fruite which they call Figo, with ſtore of cloues.

A caſtle in Ternate.

The King hauing promiſed to come aboord, brake his promiſe, but ſent his brother to make his excuſe, and to intreate our Generall to come on ſhoare, offring himſelfe pawne aboord for his ſafe returne. Whereunto our Generall conſented not, vpon miſlike conceiued of the breach of his promiſe, the whole company alſo vtterly refuſing it. But to ſatiſfie him, our General ſent certaine of his Gentlemen to the Court, to accompany the Kings brother, reſeruing the Vice-king for their ſafe returne. They were receiued of another brother of the kings, and other ſtates, and were conducted with great honour to the Caſtle. The place that they were brought vnto, was a large and faire houſe, where were at the leaſt 1000. perſons aſſembled.

Romanes and Turks Ligiers in Ternate.

The maieſtie of the King.

The King being yet abſent, there ſate in their places 60. graue perſonages, all which were ſaid to be of the kings Counſel. There were beſides 4. graue perſons, apparelled all in red, downe to the ground, and attired on their heads like the Turkes, and theſe were ſaid to be Romanes, and Ligiers there to keepe continual traffike with the people of Ternate. There were alſo 2. Turks Ligiers in this place, and one Italian. The king at laſt came in guarded with 12. launces couered ouer with a rich canopy, with emboſſed gold. Our men accompanied with one of their Captaines called Moro, riſing to meete him, he graciouſly did welcome, and intertaine them. He was attired after the maner of the Countrey, but more ſumptuouſly then the reſt. From his waſte downe to the ground, was all cloth of golde, and the ſame very rich: his legges were bare, but on his feete were a paire of ſhooes, made of Cordouan ſkinne. In the attire of his head were finely wreathed hooped rings of gold, and about his necke he had a chaine of perfect golde, the linkes whereof were great, and one folde double. On his fingers hee had ſixe very faire iewels, and ſitting in his chaire of eſtate, at his right hand ſtood a page with a fanne in his hand, breathing and gathering the ayre to the King. The fanne was in length two foote, and in bredth one foote, ſet with 8. ſaphyres, richly imbrodered, and knit to a ſtaffe 3. foote in length, by the which the Page did hold, and mooue it. Our Gentlemen hauing deliuered their meſſage, and receiued order accordingly, were licenſed to depart, being ſafely conducted backe againe by one of the kings Counſell.

Ternate the chiefeſt of the Maluco-iſles.

This Iſland is the chiefeſt of all the Iſlands of Maluco, and the King hereof is King of 70. Iſlands beſides. The king with his people are Moores in religion, obſeruing certaine new Moones, with faſtings: during which faſts, they neither eat nor drinke in the day, but in the night.

A litle Iſland to the Southward of Celebes.

Fiery wormes.

Bats.

Crauiſhes.

After that our Gentlemen were returned, and that we had heere by the fauour of the king receiued all neceſſary things that the place could yeeld vs: our General conſidering the great diſtance, and how farre he was yet off from his Countrey, thought it not beſt here to linger the time any longer, but waying his anchors, ſet out of the Iſland, and ſayled to a certaine litle Iſland to the Southwards of Celebes, where we graued our ſhip, and continued there in that and other buſineſſes 26. dayes. This Iſland is throughly growen with wood of a large and high growth, very ſtraight and without boughes, ſaue onely in the head or top, whoſe leaues are not much differing from our broome in England. Amongſt theſe trees night by night, through the whole land, did ſhew themſelues an infinite ſwarme of fiery wormes flying in the ayre, whoſe bodies beeing no bigger then our common Engliſh flies, make ſuch a ſhew and light, as if euery twigge or tree had bene a burning candle. In this place breedeth alſo wonderfull ſtore of Bats, as bigge as large hennes: of Crayfiſhes alſo heere wanted no plentie, and they of exceeding bigneſſe, one whereof was ſufficient for 4. hungry ſtomacks at a dinner, beeing alſo very good, and reſtoring meate, whereof we had experience: and they digge themſelues holes in the earth like Conies.

Ianuarie in anno 1579.

When wee had ended our buſineſſe here, we waied, and ſet ſaile to runne for the Malucos: but hauing at that time a bad winde, and being amongſt the Iſlands, with much difficultie wee recouered to the Northward of the Iſland of Celebes, where by reaſon of contrary winds not able to continue our courſe to runne Weſtwards, we were inforced to alter the ſame to the Southward againe, finding that courſe alſo to be very hard and dangerous for vs, by reaſon of infinite ſhoalds which lie off, and among the Iſlands: whereof wee had too much triall to the hazard and danger of our ſhippe and liues. For of all other dayes vpon the 9. of Ianuarie, in the yeere 1579. wee ranne ſuddenly vpon a rocke, where we ſtucke faſt from 8. of the clocke at night, til 4. of the clocke in the afternoone the next day, being indeede out of all hope to eſcape the danger: but our Generall as hee had alwayes hitherto ſhewed himſelfe couragious, and of a good confidence in the mercie and protection of God: ſo now he continued in the ſame, and leſt he ſhould ſeeme to periſh wilfully, both he, and we did our beſt indeuour to ſaue our ſelues, which it pleaſed God ſo to bleſſe, that in the ende we cleared our ſelues moſt happily of the danger.

Their danger vpon a rocke.

We lighted our ſhip vpon the rockes of 3. tunne of cloues, 8. peeces of ordinance, and certaine meale and beanes: and then the winde (as it were in a moment by the ſpeciall grace of God) changing from the ſtarreboord to the larboord of the ſhip, we hoiſed our ſailes, and the happy gale droue our ſhip off the rocke into the ſea againe, to the no litle comfort of all our hearts, for which we gaue God ſuch prayſe and thanks, as ſo great a benefite required.

Cloues.

The helpe of a current in the deliuerie.

The 8. of Februarie following, wee fell with the fruitfull Iſland of Barateue, hauing in the meane time ſuffered many dangers by windes and ſhoalds. The people of this Iſland are comely in body and ſtature, and of a ciuill behauiour, iuſt in dealing, and courteous to ſtrangers, whereof we had the experience ſundry wayes, they being moſt glad of our preſence, and very ready to releeue our wants in thoſe things which their Countrey did yeelde. The men goe naked, ſauing their heads and priuities, euery man hauing ſomething or other hanging at their eares. Their women are couered from the middle downe to the foote, wearing a great number of bracelets vpon their armes, for ſome had 8. vpon each arme, being made ſome of bone, ſome of horne, and ſome of braſſe, the lighteſt whereof by our eſtimation waied two ounces apeece.

Februarie. Barateue Iſland.

With this people linnen-cloth is good marchandize, and of good requeſt, whereof they make rols for their heads, and girdles to weare about them.

Linnen-cloth good marchandize.

Their Iſland is both rich and fruitfull: rich in golde, ſiluer, copper, and ſulphur, wherein they ſeeme ſkilfull and expert, not onely to trie the ſame, but in working it alſo artificially into any forme and faſhion that pleaſeth them.

Their fruits be diuers and plentiful, as nutmegs, ginger, long pepper, lemmons, cucumbers, cocos, figu, ſagu, with diuers other ſorts: and among all the reſt, wee had one fruite, in bigneſſe, forme, and huſke, like a Bay berry, hard of ſubſtance, and pleaſant of taſte, which being ſodden, becommeth ſoft, and is a moſt good and wholſome victuall, whereof we tooke reaſonable ſtore, as we did alſo of the other fruits and ſpices: ſo that to confeſſe a trueth, ſince the time that we firſt ſet out of our owne Countrey of England, we happened vpon no place (Ternate onely excepted) wherein we found more comforts and better meanes of refreſhing.

Nutmegs and long Peper growing in Barateue.

Commendation of the Iſland of Barateue.

At our departure from Barateue, we ſet our courſe for Iaua maior, where arriuing, we found great courteſie, and honourable entertainment. This Iſland is gouerned by 5. Kings, whom they call Raiah: as Raiah Donaw, and Raiah Mang Bange, and Raiah Cabuccapollo, which liue as hauing one ſpirite, and one minde.

Iaua maior.

Of theſe fiue we had foure a ſhipboord at once, and two or three often. They are wonderfully delighted in coloured clothes, as red and greene: their vpper parts of their bodies are naked, ſaue their heads, whereupon they weare a Turkiſh roll, as do the Maluccians: from the middle downward they weare a pintado of ſilke, trailing vpon the ground, in colour as they beſt like.

Red & greene clothes much eſteemed.

The Maluccians hate that their women ſhould bee ſeene of ſtrangers: but theſe offer them of high courteſie, yea the kings themſelues.

The manners of the people of Iaua.

The people are of goodly ſtature, and warlike, well prouided of ſwords and targets, with daggers, all being of their owne worke, and moſt artificially done, both in tempering their mettall, as alſo in the forme, whereof we bought reaſonable ſtore.

They haue an houſe in euery village for their common aſſembly: euery day they meete twiſe, men, women, and children, bringing with them ſuch victuals as they thinke good, ſome fruites, ſome rice boiled, ſome hennes roaſted, ſome ſagu, hauing a table made 3. foote from the ground, whereon they ſet their meate, that euery perſon ſitting at the table may eate, one reioycing in the company of another.

They boile their rice in an earthen pot, made in forme of a ſugar loafe, being ful of holes, as our pots which we water our gardens withall, and it is open at the great ende, wherein they put their rice drie, without any moiſture. In the meane time they haue ready another great earthen pot, ſet faſt in a fornace, boiling full of water, whereinto they put their pot with rice, by ſuch meaſure, that they ſwelling become ſoft at the firſt, and by their ſwelling ſtopping the holes of the pot, admit no more water to enter, but the more they are boiled, the harder and more firme ſubſtance they become, ſo that in the end they are a firme & good bread, of the which with oyle, butter, ſugar, and other ſpices, they make diuers ſorts of meates very pleaſant of taſte, and nouriſhing to nature.

A ſtrange faſhion of boyling rice.

The French pocks. The French pocks is here very common to all, and they helpe themſelues, ſitting naked from ten to two in the Sunne, whereby the venemous humour is drawen out. Not long before our departure, they tolde vs, that not farre off there were ſuch great Ships as ours, wiſhing vs to beware: vpon this our Captaine would ſtay no longer.

From Iaua Maior we ſailed for the cape of Good Hope, which was the firſt land we fell withall: neither did we touch with it, or any other land, vntill we came to Sierra Leona, vpon the coaſt of Guinea: notwithſtanding we ranne hard aboord the Cape, finding the report of the Portugals to be moſt falſe, who affirme, that it is the moſt dangerous Cape of the world, neuer without intolerable ſtormes and preſent danger to trauailers, which come neere the ſame. The Cape of Buena Eſperanza not ſo dangerous as the Portugals haue giuen out

This Cape is a moſt ſtately thing, and the faireſt Cape we ſaw in the whole circumference of the earth, and we paſſed by it the 18. of Iune.

Sierra Leona. Oiſter-trees. From thence we continued our courſe to Sierra Leona, on the coaſt of Guinea, where we arriued the 22. of Iuly, and found neceſſarie prouiſions, great ſtore of Elephants, Oiſters vpon trees of one kinde, ſpawning and increaſing infinitely, the Oiſter ſuffering no budde to grow. We departed thence the 24. day.

We arriued in England the third of Nouember, 1580, being the third yeere of our departure.

The relation of a Voyage made by a Pilot called Nuno da Silua for the Vice-roy of new Spaine, the 20. of May, in the yere of our Lord 1579. in the citie of Mexico, from whence it was ſent to the Vice-roy of the Portugall-Indies: wherein is ſet downe the courſe and actions paſſed in the Voyage of Sir Francis Drake that tooke the aforeſayd Nuno da Silua at S. Iago one of the Iſlands of Cabo Verde, and caried him along with him through the Sreights of Magellan, to the Hauen of Guatulco in new Spaine, where he let him goe againe.

NVno da Silua borne in Porto, a Citizen and inhabitant of Guaia, ſaith, that hee departed out of his houſe in the beginning of Nouember in the yeere of our Lorde 1577. taking his courſe to Cabo Verde, or The greene Cape, where he anchored with his Shippe cloſe by the Hauen of the Iſland of Sant Iago, one of the Iſlandes of Cabo Verde aforeſayde, beeing the nineteenth of January in the yeere of our Lord 1578. And lying there, there came ſixe ſhips, which ſeemed to be Engliſhmen, whereof the Admirall boorded his ſhip, and by force with his men tooke him out of his ſhip, bringing him in the boate aboord the Admirals ſhippe, leauing ſome of his beſt men aboord his ſhip: and although the fortreſſe of the Iſland ſhot foure or fiue times at them, yet they hurt not the Engliſhmen: who hauing done, ſet ſaile from thence to the Iſland of Braua, taking with them the ſhip of the ſayd Nuno da Silua: being there, they filled certaine veſſels with freſh water: from thence holding their courſe inward to ſea, hauing firſt with a boat ſet the men of Nuno da Siluas ſhip on land, onely keeping Nuno da Silua in his ſhip, as alſo his ſhip with the wines that were therein. And Nuno da Silua ſaith, the cauſe why they kept him on boord was, becauſe they knew him to bee a pilot for the coaſt of Braſilia, that hee might bring them to ſuch places in thoſe countreys as had freſh water.

Ianuarie

Being put off from the Iſland of Braua, they helde their courſe to the land of Braſilia, which they deſcried vpon the firſt of Aprill, vnder the height of thirtie degrees: and without landing or taking in freſh water, they helde on their courſe to Rio de la Plata, that is, The riuer of ſiluer, lying vnder fiue and thirtie degrees, little more or leſſe: where they went on land, and prouided themſelues of freſh water.

Rio de Plata.

From thence they helde on their courſe till they came vnder nine and thirtie degrees, where they ankered: and beeing there, they left two of their ſixe ſhippes behinde them, and ſailed but foure in companie (that of Nuno da Silua being one) till they came to the Bay called Baya de las Iſlas, that is, The Bay of the Ilands, lying vnder nine and fortie degrees, where it is ſayde, that Magellan lay and wintered there with his ſhippe, when hee firſt diſcouered the Streight, which now holdeth his name. Into this Bay the twentieth of Iune they entred, and there ankered ſo cloſe to the land, that they might ſend to it with a harquebuſe ſhot: and there they ſawe the land to bee inhabited with Indians, that were apparelled with ſkinnes, with their legges from the knees downeward, and their armes from the elbowes downeward naked, all the reſt of their bodies beeing clothed, with bowes and arrowes in their handes, being ſubtill, great, and well formed people, and ſtrong and high of ſtature: where ſixe of the Engliſhmen went on land to fetch freſh water, and before they lept on land, foure of the Indians came vnto their boate, to whome the Engliſhmen gaue bread and wine: and when the Indians had well eaten and drunke, they departed thence: and going ſomewhat farre from them, one of the Indians cryed to them, and ſayde: Magallanes, Eſta hé minha Terra, that is, Magallanes, this is my countrey: and becauſe the Engliſhmen followed them, it ſeemed the Indians fledde vpward into the land, and beeing ſomewhat farre off, they turned backe againe, and with their arrowes ſlewe two of the Engliſh ſhippers, one being an Engliſhman, the other a Netherlander: the reſt came backe againe and ſaued themſelues in the boate, wherewith they preſently put off from the ſhore. Here they ſtayed till the ſeuenteenth of Auguſt, vpon the which day they ſet ſaile, running along by the coaſt about a league and a halfe from the land, (for there it is all faire and good ground, at twentie, and fiue and twentie fathome deepe) and were about foure or fiue dayes before they came to the mouth or entrie of the Streight: but becauſe the wind was contrary, they ſtayed till the 24 of Auguſt before they entred.

Bay de las Iſlas.

The entrie or mouth of the Streight is about a league broad, on both ſides being bare and flatte land: on the North ſide they ſawe Indians making great fires, but on the South ſide they ſaw no people ſtirring. The foure and twentieth day aforeſayd, they beganne to enter into the Streight, with an Eaſtnortheaſt wind. This Streight may bee about an hundred and tenne leagues long, and in bredth a league. About the entry of the Streight, and halfe way into it, it runneth right foorth without any windings or turnings: and from thence about eight or tenne leagues towards the ende, it hath ſome boutes and windings, among the which there is one ſo great a hooke or headland, that it ſeemed to runne into the other land: and there it is leſſe then a league broad from one land to the other: and from thence forward it runneth ſtraight out againe: And although you finde ſome crookings, yet they are nothing to ſpeake of. The iſſue of the Streight lieth Weſtward, and about eight or tenne leagues before you come to the ende, then the Streight beginneth to bee broader, and it is all high land to the ende thereof, after you are eight leagues within the Streight, for the firſt eight leagues after you enter is low flat land, as I ſayd before: and in the entrie of the Streight you find the ſtreame to runne from the South ſea to the North ſea.

The deſcription of The ſtreit of Magellan.

And after they began to ſaile in with the Eaſtnortheaſt wind, being entred they paſſed along without any let or hinderance either of wind or weather: and becauſe the high land on both ſides lay couered with ſnow, and that all the Streight is faire and cleare, they helde their courſe a harquebuſe-ſhot in length from off the North ſide, hauing nine and tenne fathome depth, with good ground, as I ſaid before, where (if neede require) a man may anker: the hilles on both ſides being full of trees, ſome of the hilles and trees reaching downe to the ſea ſide in ſome places hauing plaine and euen land: and there they ſawe not any great riuers, but ſome ſmall riuers that iſſued out of the riffes and breaches of the land: and in the countrey where the great Cape or crooking is, on the South ſide they ſaw certaine Indian fiſhermen in their Canoas or ſkiffs, being ſuch as they ſaw firſt on the North ſide, but more people they ſaw not on the South ſide.

Being out of the Streight on the other ſide, vpon the ſixt of September of the aforeſaid yeere, they held their courſe Northweſt for the ſpace of three dayes, and the third day they had a Northeaſt wind, that by force draue them Weſtſouthweſt, which courſe they held for the ſpace of ten or twelue dayes with few ſailes vp: and becauſe the wind began to be very great, they tooke in all their ſailes, and lay driuing till the laſt of September.

This was the Elizabeth M. Iohn Winters ſhip.

The 24 day of the ſame moneth hauing loſt the ſight of one of their ſhippes which was about an hundred tunne, then againe they hoiſed ſaile becauſe the winde came better, holding their courſe Northeaſt for the ſpace of ſeuen dayes, and at the ende of the ſayde ſeuen dayes, they had the ſight of certayne Iſlands, which they made towards for to anker by them, but the weather would not permit them: and being there, the wind fell Northweſt: whereupon they ſailed Weſtſouthweſt.

The next day they loſt the ſight of another ſhip of their company, for it was very foule weather, ſo that in the ende the Admirals ſhippe was left alone, for the ſhip of Nuno da Silua was left in the Bay where they wintered before they entred into the Streights: and with this foule weather they ranne till they were vnder ſeuen and fiftie degrees, where they entred into a hauen of an Iſland, and ankered about the length of the ſhot of a great piece from the land, at twentie fathome deepe, where they ſtayed three or foure dayes, and the wind comming Southward, they weyed anker, holding their courſe Northward for the ſpace of two daies, and then they eſpied a ſmall vnhabited Iſland, where being arriued, they ſtroke ſailes, and hoiſed out their boate, and there they tooke many birds and Seales.

They were driuen vnto 57. degrees of ſoutherly latitude.

The Iſle of Mocha in 38. deg. 30. min.

The next day they ſet ſaile againe, holding their courſe Northnortheaſt, and North, to another Iſland lying fiue or ſixe leagues from the firme land, on the North ſide of the Streight, where they ankered about a quarter of a league from the land, in twelue fathome water. This Iſland is ſmall and lowe land, and full of Indians, the Iſland being altogether poſſeſſed and inhabited by them, where they hoyſed out their boate, wherein the Admirall and twelue Engliſh men entred, going to fetch freſh water, and to ſeeke for victuals: and being landed vpon the Iſland, the Indians in exchange of other things, brought two Spaniſh ſheepe, and a little Maiz or rootes whereof they make bread, and becauſe it was late, they returned againe vnto their ſhip, without doing any other thing for that day.

The next day the ſaid Captaine with the aforeſaid twelue men being harquebuſiers, rowed to land againe, and ſet two of their company on ſhore with their veſſels to fetch freſh water, and by the place where they ſhould fill their water there lay certaine Indians ſecretly hidden, that fell vpon the two Engliſhmen and tooke them: which they in the boat perceiuing, went out to helpe them, but they were ſo aſſailed with ſtones & arrowes, that all or the moſt part of them were hurt, the Captaine himſelfe being wounded with an arrow on the face, and with another arrow in the head, whereby they were conſtrained to turne backe againe, without once hurting any of the Indians, and yet they came ſo neere the boate, that they tooke foure of their oares from them. This done, they ſet ſaile againe, running along the coaſt with a South winde, ſailing ſo for the ſpace of ſixe dayes, paſſing by the hauen called Sant Iago, and put into another hauen, and there they tooke an Indian that lay fiſhing in a Canoa, giuing him linnen and butchers chopping kniues, with other trifles, and not long after there came another Indian aboord their ſhippe called Felippe, and he ſpake Spaniſh, he gaue the Engliſh Captaine notice of a certaine ſhippe that lay in the hauen of Sant Iago, which they had left ſixe leagues behind them: with that intelligence the Indian being their guide, the next day they ſet ſaile and went to the aforeſayd hauen of S. Iago, and entring therein, they tooke the ſaid ſhippe, wherein they found a thouſand ſeuen hundred and 70 Botijas or Spaniſh pots full of wine, and other things: which hauing done, they lept on land, where they tooke certaine ſackes with meale, with whatſoeuer they could find; they tooke likewiſe the ornaments and the reliques out of the Church, wherewith they departed from thence, taking the aforeſayd ſhippe, with two men (that they found in her) with them, and ſo departed from that hauen, which lyeth vnder 32 degrees and a halfe, running along vp the coaſt till they came vnder one and thirtie, and thirtie degrees: which was the place where they had appointed to meete, and there to ſtay for ech other, if by tempeſt or foule weather they chanced to be ſeparated, and ſo looſe eche others company.

And comming vnder thirtie degrees, they found a very good hauen, whereinto they entred, and ankered at ſixe fathome deepe, the ſhot of a great peece from the land, which was right ouer againſt a riuer, where they tooke in ſixe pipes of freſh water: and to defend them that fetched the water, they ſet twelue men vpon the land, and being buſied in filling of their water, they eſpied a company of men comming towards them, whereof halfe of them were Spaniards, being about two hundred and fifty horſemen, and as many footemen, but they had no ſooner eſpied them, but they preſently entred into the boat, and eſcaped away, looſing but one man.

The ſame night they ſet ſaile againe with both their ſhips, running along the coaſt about ten leagues farther, where they tooke in ſome freſh water, but becauſe they perceiued certaine horſemen, they departed without lading any more water.

From thence they followed on their courſe along the coaſt for the ſpace of 30 leagues, where they entred into a deſert or vnhabited hauen: yet they went not on land, for euery day they ſaw people vpon the ſhore, & there they made out a ſmal pinneſſe, the peeces whereof they brought ready framed out of England, and hauing prepared it, they launched it into the water, wherein the Captaine with fifteene men entred with the chiefe boateſman called Iohn the Greeke, (being Maſter of the ſhip which they had taken in the hauen of S. Iago,) wherewith they went to ſee if they could find the two ſhippes that they had loſt by ſtormie weather, as I ſayd before: and likewiſe thinking to goe on land to fill certaine veſſels with freſh water, they durſt not venture, for they ſaw people on all ſides of the ſhore: ſo that in the ende they returned againe without hearing of the other ſhips: being there, they tooke all the ordinance out of their ſhip, and new dreſſed and rigged her: which done, they put a ſmall peece of ordinance into the pinneſſe, wherewith they ſet ſaile againe, following on their courſe.

Hauing ſailed thirteene dayes, they came to an Iſland lying about the ſhotte of a baſe from the land, where they ankered, and there they found foure Indian fiſhermen in two Canoas, who told them that on the firme land they might haue freſh water, but they vnderſtanding that there was not much, and that it was ſomewhat within the land, would not ſpend any time about it, but ſet ſaile againe, leauing the fiſhermen with their Canoas; following on their courſe along by the ſhore.

The next day being ſomewhat further, they eſpied certaine Indian fiſhermen that were vpon the land in their houſes, which the Engliſh captaine perceiuing, preſently entred into his pinneſſe, and rowed on land, where he tooke three of the ſaid fiſhermen, taking with him halfe of the fiſh that lay packed vpon the ſhore ready to be laden, with the which Indians and booty, they came on boord againe.

The next day following, they ſaw a barke laden with fiſh, that belonged to the Spaniards, with foure Indians in it. This barke with the Indians and the fiſh they tooke, and bound the Spaniſh ſhip to their ſterne, and ſo drewe it after them, leauing the ſaid Indians within it, who by night vnbound the barke, and ſecretly made away with barke and fiſh, and were no more ſeene. The next day the Captaine went into the pinneſſe, and becauſe he ſaw certaine houſes vpon the ſhore, he made thither, and being on land, he found two men in them, one whereof he tooke, leauing the other behind, and there he found three thouſand pezos of ſiluer, (euery pezo being the value of a ryall of eight,) and ſeuen Indian ſheepe, and hennes, & tooke al whatſoeuer they found: wherewith they departed from thence, following on their courſe. And two dayes after they came to the hauen called Arica, where they found two ſhips, the one laden with goods and Spaniſh wares, out of the which they tooke only two hundred Botijas, or Spaniſh pots with wine, and out of the other ſeuen and thirty barres of ſiluer, which are peeces of ten or twelue pound eche barre, and thinking to leape on ſhore (with two barks that they found in the ſaid hauen, with about ſeuen and thirty harquebuſes and bowes) they perceiued on the land certaine horſemen comming towards them, whereupon they left off their pretence, and tooke with them a Negro that they found in the barks, with whom they returned aboord.

Aric

The next day in the morning they burnt the ſhip, that was laden with the Spaniſh wares, and tooke the other with them, paſſing forward with it on their courſe, the Captaine ſailing along the ſhore with his pinneſſe, and the ſhip keeping about a league from him to ſeaward, to ſeeke for a ſhip whereof they had intelligence: and hauing in that maner ſailed about fiue and forty leagues, they found the ſhip that lay at anker in a hauen, who about two houres before had bene aduertiſed of an Engliſh pirate or ſea-rouer, and had diſcharged eight hundred barres of ſiluer out of her, and hidden it on the land, which ſiluer belonged to the king of Spaine, of the which ſiluer the Engliſhmen had receiued ſome intelligence, but they durſt not go on land, becauſe there were many Indians and Spaniards that ſtood to gard it, and they found nothing in the ſhip but three pipes of water: the ſhip they tooke with them, and being about a league in the ſea, they hoyſed vp all her ſailes and let her driue, doing the like with the ſhip that they had taken in Arica, as alſo the other of Sant Iago, which likewiſe they let driue, following on their courſe with their owne ſhip, and the pinneſſe.

Calao de Lima. Being ſeuen or eight leagues from the hauen of Calao de Lyma, they eſpied three ſhips, and boording one of them, they tooke three men out of her, and ſo held on their courſe towards Calao de Lyma, where they entred, being about two or three houres within night, ſailing in betweene all the ſhips that lay there, being ſeuenteene in number: and being among the ſhips, they aſked for the ſhip that had laden the ſiluer, but when anſwere was made them, that the ſiluer was layd on land, they cut the cables of the ſhips, and the maſts of two of the greateſt ſhips, and ſo left them. At the ſame time there arriued a ſhip from Panama laden with wares and merchandiſe of Spaine, that ankered cloſe by the Engliſh ſhip, which was, while the Engliſh Captaine ſought in the other ſhips for the ſiluer. Aſſoone as the ſhip of Panama had ankered, there came a boat from the ſhore to ſearch it: but becauſe it was in the night, they let it alone till morning, and comming to the Engliſh ſhip, they aſked what ſhip it was: whereupon one of the Spaniſh priſoners (by the Engliſh Captaines commandement) anſwered and ſaid it was the ſhip of Michael Angelo, that came from Chili: which they of the boat hearing, ſent a man on boord, who climing vp, light vpon one of the great peeces, wherewith he was afraid, and preſently ſlept backe againe into the boat (becauſe the ſhippes that lay there, and that ſailed in thoſe countreys, vſed to carry no great ſhot) and therewith they were abaſhed, and made from it: which the ſhip of Panama hearing, that was newly come in, ſhee iudged it to be a rouer, and therewith cutting her cables, ſhee put to ſea, which the Engliſhmen perceiuing, ſhipped certaine men in their pinneſſe, and followed her: and being hard by her, they badde her ſtrike, which they of the ſhip refuſed to doe, and with a harquebuſe ſhot killed one of the Engliſhmen, wherewith they turned againe into their ſhippe, and preſently ſet ſaile, following after the ſhip, which not long after they ouertooke: which they of the ſhippe perceiuing, hoyſed out their boate, and leaping into it, rowed to the land, leauing the ſhippe with all the goods, which the Engliſhmen preſently tooke, and with her ſayled on their courſe.

The next day they ſaw a boat with ſailes making towards them, whereby they preſently miſtruſted it to be a ſpie, and not long after they perceiued two great ſhips comming towards them, which made the Engliſh thinke they came to fight with them, whereupon they let the ſhippe of Panama driue, therein leauing Iohn the Greeke, with the two men that they had taken the ſame day that they entred into the Calao de Lyma, as I ſayde before, and preſently hoyſed all their ſailes, and ſailed forward, not once ſetting eye againe vpon the aforeſayde ſhips, for they made towards the ſhip of Panama, which the Engliſhmen let driue. From thence they ſailed againe along the coaſt, following on their courſe: and hauing ſailed certaine dayes, they met a frigate that went towards Lyma, laden with wares and merchandiſes of the countrey, from whence the Engliſhmen tooke a lampe and a fountaine of ſiluer, and aſked the pilote being a Spaniard, if they met not with a ſhip, that they vnderſtood ſhould be laden with ſiluer, but the one pilote ſaide he met her not, and the other ſaid he ſaw her about three dayes before. This frigat came not to the ſhip, but to the pinneſſe, wherein the Captaine ſailed, for the pinneſſe ranne cloſe by the ſhore, and the ſhip kept a league and a halfe from the lande: whereupon they let the frigate goe, following on their courſe.

Payta. Two dayes after they came to the hauen called Payta, where they found a ſhip laden with Spaniſh wares, which the pinneſſe boorded, and tooke without any reſiſtance: for aſſoone as the Spaniards perceiued the Engliſhmen, they preſently made to land with their boate, and two of them lept into the ſea, none ſtaying in the ſhippe, but the Maſter, Pilote, and ſome Negros, out of the which ſhippe the Engliſhmen tooke the pilote, and all the bread, hennes, and a hogge, and ſo ſailed forward with the ſhip: but being about two harquebuſe ſhot to ſeaward, they let it goe againe, not taking any thing out of it, and aſking after the ſhip which they ſought for, they told them that about two dayes before ſhe departed from that place, wherewith they followed on their courſe, and before night they met with a ſhip of Panama, which they preſently boorded, but tooke nothing from her but onely a Negro, and ſo left it, holding on their courſe.

The next day being the firſt of Februarie, they met another ſhip that sailed to Panama, laden with fiſh and other victuals, and fortie barres of ſiluer, and ſome gold, but I know not how much, which they tooke, and ſent the paſſengers (with two friers that were in her) in a boate to land.

The next day they hanged a man of the ſhip, becauſe hee would not confeſſe two plates of golde that he had taken, which after they found about him: which done, they let the ſhip driue, following on their courſe.

The firſt of March towards noone, they eſpied the ſhip laden with ſiluer, being about foure leagues to ſeaward from them: and becauſe the Engliſh ſhip was ſomewhat heauie before, whereby it ſailed not as they would haue it, they tooke a company of Botijas or Spaniſh pots for oyle, and filling them with water, hung them by ropes at the ſterne of the ſhip to make her ſayle the better: and the ſhippe that ſayled towardes Panama made towards the Engliſh ſhippe to know what ſhee was, thinking it to bee one of the ſhippes that vſed to ſaile along the coaſtes, and to traffique in the countrey: and beeing hard by her, the Engliſh Captaine badde them ſtrike, but the other refuſing to doe it, with a great peece hee ſhotte her maſt ouerboord, and hauing wounded the Maſter with an arrowe, the ſhippe preſently yeelded, which they tooke, and ſayled with her further into the ſea, all that night and the next day and night, making all the way they could.

A prettie deuice to make their ſhip saile more ſwiftly.

The third day being out of ſight of the land, they beganne to ſearch the ſhip, and to lade the goods out of her into their ſhip, which was a thouſand three hundred barres or peeces of ſiuer, and foureteene cheſtes with ryals of eight, and with gold: but what quantitie it was I know not, onely the paſſengers ſayd that there was great ſtore, and that three hundred barres of the ſiluer belonged to the king, the reſt belonged to certaine merchants. That done, they let the ſhip with the men ſaile on their courſe, putting the three pilots in her that they brought with them, ſo that as then they had none but their owne men aboord, being the ſixt of March, and from thence they held their courſe towards the land of Nicaragua.

Nicaragua.

The thirteenth of March, either the day before or after, in the morning they deſcried land, not being very high, being a ſmall Iſland two leagues from the firme land, and there they found a ſmall Bay, wherein they ankered at fiue fathome deepe cloſe by the land, and there they ſtayed till the twentie day. Vpon the which day there paſſed a Frigate cloſe by the Iſland, which with their pinneſſe they followed, and taking her, brought her to the Engliſh ſhip, which frigat was laden with Salſaperilla, and Botijas or pots with butter and hony, and with other things. The Engliſh Captaine went on boord, and caſt the Salſaperilla on the land, leauing all the reſt of the wares in the frigate, and then he put all his peeces into the frigate, that ſo he might lay his ſhip on ſhore, to new calke and trimme her, which continued till the three and twentie or foure and twentie of March. Which done, and hauing made prouiſion of wood and freſh water, they held on their courſe along by the coaſt, ſayling Weſtward, taking the ſayd frigate and her men with them, and hauing ſailed two dayes, they tooke their men out of her, and ſet them in the pinneſſe, among the which were foure ſailers, that meant to ſayle to Panama, and from thence to China, whereof one they tooke, with the letters and patents that hee had about him, among the which were the letters of the king of Spaine, ſent to the gouernour of the Philippinas, as alſo the ſea-cards wherewith they ſhould make their voyage, and direct themſelues in their courſe.

And ſo ſailing vntill the ſixt of Aprill, about euening they diſcouered a ſhippe that held two leagues to ſeaward from the land: and before the next day in the morning they were hard by her, and ſuddenly fell vpon her while her men ſlept, and preſently made the men enter into their ſhip, among the which was one Don Franciſco Xarate. Which done, they followed on their courſe with the ſayd ſhip, out of the which they tooke certaine packes and other wares, but I know not what it was. They likewiſe tooke a Negro out of it, and three dayes after they both let the ſhip and men goe whether they woulde, ſetting therein the two ſaylers that ſhould goe for China, which they had taken in the frigate, keeping onely one ſailer to ſhewe them where they ſhould find freſh water, to the which ende they tooke the emptie veſſels with them to fill with water, and ſo kept on their courſe to the hauen of Guatulco, where they put in, being vpon Munday the thirteenth of Aprill, and hauing ankered, they ſtayed there till the ſixe and twentie of Aprill: and about three or foure houres within the night, they ſet ſayle, holding their courſe Weſtward, and an houre or two before they let Nuno da Silua goe, putting him into another ſhip, that lay in the hauen of Guatulco.

From thence forward the Engliſhmen paſſed on their voyage, to the Iſlands of Malucos, and from thence they paſſed by the Cape de Buena Eſperança, and ſo to England, as it is well knowen, ſo that this is onely the deſcription of the voyage that they made, while the ſaid pilote Nuno da Silua was with them.

Hereafter followeth the copie of a letter written by ſir Francis Drake (being in the South ſea of New Spaine, in his ſhip called The Pellican or the golden Hinde with the ſhip of Sant John de Anton, which hee had taken) to his companions in the other ſhippes that were of his company, and by foule weather ſeparated from him, as I ſaid before: The contents whereof were theſe:

Maſter Winter, if it pleaſeth God that you ſhould chance to meete with this ſhip of Sant Iohn de Anton, I pray you vſe him well, according to my word and promiſe giuen vnto them; and if you want any thing that is in this ſhip of Sant Iohn de Anton, I pray you pay them double the value for it, which I will ſatisfie againe, and command your men not to doe her any hurt: and what compoſition or agreement we haue made, at my returne into England I will by Gods helpe perfourme, although I am in doubt that this letter will neuer come to your hands: notwithſtanding I am the man I haue promiſed to be: Beſeeching God, the Sauiour of all the world, to haue vs in his keeping, to whom onely I giue all honour praiſe and glory. What I haue written, is not only to you M. Winter, but alſo to M. Thomas, M. Charles, M. Caube, and M. Anthonie, with all our other good friendes, whom I commit to the tuition of him that with his blood redeemed vs, and am in good hope, that we ſhal be in no more trouble, but that he will helpe vs in aduerſitie, deſiring you for the Paſſion of Chriſt, if you fall into any danger, that you will not deſpaire of Gods mercy, for hee will defend you and preſerue you from all danger, and bring vs to our deſired hauen, to whom bee all honour, glory, and praiſe for euer and euer. Amen. Your ſorowfull Captaine, whoſe heart is heauy for you: Francis Drake.

The voyage of M. Iohn VVinter into the South ſea by the Streight of Magellan, in conſort with M. Francis Drake, begun in the yeere 1577. By which Streight alſo he returned ſafely into England the ſecond of Iune 1579. contrary to the falſe reports of the Spaniards which gaue out, that the ſaid paſſage was not repaſſeable: Written by Edward Cliffe Mariner,

IN the yeere of our Lord 1577. the 19. of September there went out of the riuer of Thamis ouer the lands ende one good and newe ſhip called the Elizabeth, of 80 tunnes in burthen: in company whereof went alſo a ſmall pinneſſe being 12 tunnes in burthen called the Benedict. The ſayd ſhip with her pinneſſe arriued at Plimmouth: in which hauen were three ſhips more, one called the Pellican in burthen 120. tunnes, being Admirall of the fleete: a barke called the Marigold in burthen thirty tunnes, with a flieboat of 50 tunnes. Theſe ſhips had in them 164 men, and were victualled and furniſhed with all kind of neceſſary prouiſion to make a voyage into the South ſea. Wee ſet ſayle the 15 of Nouember, but were put into Falmouth by contrary winds: and afterward were conſtrained to put backe againe to Plimmouth to repaire the great hurt which diuers of our fleete had ſuſtained in that tempeſt: and at length the 13 of December wee ſet forward from thence vpon our voyage.

Then ſet forward from Plimmouth the 13. of December.

The fiue and twentie of December we had ſight of Cape Cantin: this Cape lyeth in the latitude of 32. degrees and 30. minutes vpon the coaſt of Barbarie, neere to a towne called Aſaphi. The land all along this coaſt is hie and great mountaines. Sayling from the ſayd Cape South-ſouthweſt about 18 leagues, wee found a little Iſland called Mogador an Engliſh mile diſtant from the maine, we ſent our boat to ſound the depth, and at the returne thereof we vnderſtood by our men that the hauen was without danger, hauing fiue fathomes of water faſt by the rocks entring in vpon the poynt of the Iſland: wherefore wee entred in with our whole fleete the 27 of December. The Moores that were on the maine ſeeing our ſhips ride there, came from the mountaines to beholde vs: whom our Generall M. Francis Drake eſpying, ſhewed to them a white flagge in token of friendſhip, and ſent his boat to ſhore with one of our men, which not long before had bene captiue in the countrey, and partly vnderſtoode their language, to talke with them. When the boate came to ſhore, the ſayd man went on land to them: to whom they ſhewed many tokens of friendſhip, caſting vp their eyes to heauen, and after looking downe vpon the ground, as though they had ſworne by heauen and earth, promiſing peace. That done two of them came aboord to our Generall, and our man ſtayed on ſhore for a pledge.

Mogador an Iſland on the coaſt of Barbary.

Theſe two Moores, after they had made good cheere, and receiued certaine gifts of our Generall went to ſhore againe, and our man came aboord alſo. But the craftie ſlaues hauing deuiſed to betray vs, came the next day along the ſea ſide with certain camels as though they had brought ſome merchandize to traffique with vs: to whom our General ſent certaine of our men in the boat to learne what they had brought, giuing charge that none of them ſhould goe on land. But the boate being neere the ſhore one of our men more haſtie then wiſe lept to ſhore; whom the Moores immediatly tooke by force, and ſetting him on horſebacke caried him away into the mountaines, ſo that we ſaw him no more after that time. In the meane time wee ſet vp a Pinneſſe in the iſland, whereof wee brought 4 looſe out of England: which being finiſhed, the laſt of December wee weighed, and came out of the North part of the iſland, the ſame way that wee came in: for the South chanel is dangerous, hauing but 8 foote at low water, and is full of rockes. This iſland ſtandeth in 31 degrees ½ of latitude, being one league in circuite, not inhabited; and hath infinite number of doues vpon it.

Foure looſe Pinneſſes brought out of England.

Mogador in 31 degrees and an halfe.

At Sea wee met with a contrary winde, ſo that wee beate off and on, till the 4 of Ianuarie 1578, at which time a more fauourable winde began to blowe at Northeaſt, and then wee ſet our courſe Southſouthweſt, till on the 7 of Ianuarie wee came as high as Cape de Guer, which ſtandeth in 30 degrees of latitude. Here our new Pinneſſe tooke 3 Spaniſh fiſher-boates, called Cantars. From thence wee ran Southweſt and Southſouthweſt, carying the ſayd Cantars along with vs, till the 10 of the ſayd moneth, at which time wee found our ſelues in 27 degrees 4 min. being 10 leagues Weſtſouthweſt from Cape Bojador, which lieth on the maine land of Africa. From thence we ran South and by Weſt, vntill the 13 day at noone, at which time wee had ſight of Rio del Oro, where our Pinneſſe tooke a Portugall carauel. The 15, the Marigold took a carauel about Cape de las Barbas. And thence we ran along the coaſt being low ſandie land, till wee arriued at Cape Blanco. This Cape ſheweth it ſelfe like the corner of a wall vpright from the water, to them which come from the Northwardes: where the North pole is eleuated 20 degrees 30 min. And the Crociers being the guards of the South pole, be raiſed 9 degrees 30 min. The ſaid Crociers be 4 ſtarres, repreſenting the forme of a croſſe, and be 30 degrees in latitude from the South pole: and the loweſt ſtarre of the ſayd Crociers is to be taken, when it is directly vnder the vppermoſt; and being ſo taken as many degrees as it wanteth of 30, ſo many you are to the Northwards of the the Equinoctial: and as many degrees as be more then 30, ſo many degrees you are to the Southwards of the Equinoctial. And if you finde it to be iuſt 30 then you be directly vnder the line.

Cape Blanco in 20 degrees. 30. min.

Within the ſayd Cape Blanco wee tooke one ſhip more, all the men being fled away, ſaue two. We brought this ſhip with all the reſt which wee had taken before, into our harbour, 5 leagues within the Cape, where we waſhed and trimmed our ſhips, and went to ſea againe the 22 of Ianuarie, leauing all the Spaniards there with their ſhips, ſauing one Cantar, for which our Generall gaue them the Benedict. In which courſe wee ran continually to the Southweſt, vntill the 26 day, when wee found the North pole rayſed 15 degrees 15 min. hauing the winde Northeaſt or Eaſtnortheaſt, which is common on that coaſt. For it doeth blow for the moſt part continually from the ſhore: and we kept the ſayd courſe, vntill wee came neere the iſland Bonauiſta, within 2 leagues off the ſhore; ſo that wee haled off againe Northweſt, the ſpace of one houre, and then ran Southweſt againe, till day light the 27 of Ianuarie: from which time wee ran Southſouthweſt, vntill 3 of the clocke in the afternoone, at which time we approched neere the iſland of Mayo, being high and hilly land, ſauing that the North part of the iſland ſtretcheth out it ſelfe, a league into the ſea very lowe. Wee came to anker vnder the Weſt part of this iſland the 28 day of Ianuarie, and ſtayed there vntill the 30 of the ſame. During which time, our General appointed M. Iohn Winter and M. Thomas Doughtie, to goe ouer to the Eaſt part of the iſland with 70 men, to get ſome freſh victuals. And as wee marched through the iſland, about the middeſt thereof, we found one houſe hauing a garden belonging to it, in which wee found ripe grapes, alſo ripe gourds, and melons, in the moſt dead time of our Winter. Wee found alſo a tree which beareth the fruite Cocos, which is bigger then a mans head, hauing within the vtter coate, which is about 3 inches thicke, a certaine nut as bigge as two fiſts, and hath within a white ſubſtance, cleauing faſt to the ſhell, which is halfe an inche thick, very pleaſant to taſte, and within that a certaine hollowneſſe or voyde place, wherein is contained a pure and pleaſant water in taſte, and as ſome thinke, marueilous comfortable. As we paſſed through this iſland the inhabitants fledde into the mountaines, ſo that we could haue no talke with them.

But we vnderſtood by the Portugals which came with vs, that they were but ſeruants to thoſe of S. Iago, to keepe their cattell and goates, which bee very plentifull in this iſland: but we found them ſo wilde, that we could take none ſauing ſome yong kiddes; wherefore wee returned backe againe to our ſhippes. The Portugals had ſalted their Welles neere to the ſea, ſo that we could not water.

Then our Generall commanded euery man aboord: afterward we weighed, and ranne ouer to Sant Iago the ſame night, being 10 leagues diſtant from thence: which ſeemed to bee a friutefull iſland and well peopled. For wee ſawe 3 townes on the ſhore: two of which ſhot at vs, as we paſſed along. Our General made a ſhot at one of them againe. And ſayling along the ſhore, at the South part of the iſland, wee tooke a Portugal ſhippe laden with wine and other commodities, This iſland hath 15 degrees in latitude.

The iſle of Fogo.

Braua.

Nonnez de Silua.

From hence wee ran Southſouthweſt to the iſle of Fogo, ſo called, becauſe it caſteth continually flames of fire and ſmoake out of the top thereof, all the whole iſland being one high mountaine. Two leagues Weſt from the iſle of Fogo, is another iſland called Braua, where the ſea is aboue 120 fathoms deepe neere to the ſhore, ſo that we could not anker for the depth of the ſea, by reaſon whereof we were conſtrained to depart without water. Here the Generall diſcharged the Portugals, giuing vnto them our Pinneſſe which we built at Mogador: with wine, breade, and fiſh, and ſo diſmiſſed them the firſt of Februarie, taking one of there companie along with him, called Nonnez de Silua. The 2 of February wee ſet off from Braua, and directed our courſe Southſoutheaſt, running ſo vntill the 9 of February, being within 4 degrees of the Equinoctial: at which time, wee had the ayre troubled with thunder and lightning, notwithſtanding calme with extreme heate, and diuers times great ſhowers of raine.

Flying fiſhes.

Continuall raine at certaine ſeaſons neere the Equinoctial.

The 17 day wee were right vnder the line, which is the moſt feruent place of the burnt Zone: where in the middeſt of February we ſuſteined ſuch heat, with often thunder and lightnings, that wee did ſweate for the moſt part continually, as though wee had bene in a ſtoue, or hote-houſe. Here we ſaw flying fiſhes in great abundance, ſome a foote long, ſome leſſe. Their fynnes wherewith they flye be as long as their bodies. They be greatly purſued by the Dolphine and Bonitoes, whom as ſoone as the flying fiſhes eſpie, immediatly they mount out of the ſea in great numbers, and fly as long as their fynnes continue moyſt: and when they bee dry, they fall downe into the ſea againe. And here is to bee noted, that after we came within 4 degrees of the Equinoctial, vntill we were ſo much paſt it, no day did paſſe without great ſtore of raine.

Land in 31 degrees. 30 min. to the South of the Equinoctial.

From hence wee directed our courſe towards the Southſouthweſt vntill the 5 of Aprill: at which time, wee had a very ſweet ſmell from the land. The ſame day at noone wee ſounded, and found the ſea to be 32 fathomes deepe, the ground being ſoft oaze: and ſhortly after we had but 28 fathomes, being 31 degrees and 30 min. beyond the Equinoctial, towarde the South pole: and wee had ſight of the land about 3 of the clocke in the afternoone the ſame day. This land is very lowe neere the ſea; and hie mountaines vp within the countrie.

Cape Sant Marie at the mouth of the Riuer of Plate.

From hence we ran towardes the Southſouthweſt, vntill the 14 of Aprill; when wee found a little iſland, lying neere the maine land of Cape Sant Marie, by which is the enterance into the riuer of Plate, being in 35 degrees of Southerly latitude. Frō this iſland wee ran 7 or 8 leagues along the maine, where we came to an anker vnder a Cape, which our General called Cape Ioy. Here euery ſhip tooke in freſh water. Then we departed, and ran about 15 leagues towards the Weſtſouthweſt, where we found a deepe bay. In the bottome of this bay is a long rocke, not far from the maine: which rocke ſo breaketh the force of the ſea, that ſhippes may ride commodiouſly vnder the ſame for Southerly windes. Hither came all our fleete to anker, the 19 of Aprill, and roade there vntill the 20 day at night. Here wee killed ſome ſeales. And from thence wee ran about 20 leagues, where we found the water very much troubled and freſh, and wee ran in ſo farre that we had but 3 fathomes water. Here wee tooke in freſh water, and ranne ouer to the Southward, and fell with the land which lyeth on the South part of the riuer of Plate, the 27 day. This land lyeth Southſouthweſt and Northnortheaſt, and is ſhold 3 or 4 leagues into the ſea. Here our fly-boat loſt our companie in the night.

Cape of Hope in 47 degrees.

From hence we ran toward the Southweſt, hauing much foule weather and contrary windes, vntill the 12 of May: and then wee ſounded and had 28 fathomes, with blacke ſande and ſmall ſtones, and had ſight of the land the ſame morning about 10 of the clocke. This land is 47 degrees in latitude. Our Generall named this land, Cape Hope. We came to anker there, about 3 leagues from the ſhore the ſame night. The next morning our General, went to the maine in a boate: by meanes whereof hee had bene in great danger, if the Marigold had not weighed, and ran in with the ſhore, and ſo tooke vp the boate and men: for there aroſe ſuch foule weather, with a thicke myſt and a Southeaſt winde, that they were not able to recouer their ſhippes againe which rode without: which were forced to weigh and runne to ſea. The Prize weighed the 13 at night, and ran to the Southwards: the other ſtayed vntill the 14 in the morning and then ran to ſea, not being able to ride.

In the meane time while the Marigold rode vnder the ſhore, our Generall with certaine of his men went on land, where they ſawe two naked men, ſauing that they had a certaine ſkinne wrapt about their ſhoulders and rowles vpon their heades. To whom our General ſhewed a white cloth, in ſigne of friendſhip, who with certaine geſtures of their bodies and handes, ſhewed the like to him againe, ſpeaking likewiſe and making a noyſe, which our men could not vnderſtand, but they would in no caſe come neere our men. Our Generall went the next day to the ſame place againe: but hee had no ſight of the foreſaid men or any other. Howbeit hee found certaine foules, as Oſtriches, and other ſea foules, which the ſayd men had newly killed, and laid them on an heape together, as though they had done that for our men of purpoſe. There was alſo a certaine bagge, with litle ſtones of diuers colours, which together with the victuals our General brought aboord, and then weighed, and came to ſea the 15 of the ſayd moneth: where all the reſt of the fleet mette with him, ſaue the Prize, and the fly-boat. The 16 day wee ran into a bay to the Southwardes of Cape Hope, where we roade al that night. The next morning our Generall weighed, & ran without the cape to the Northwardes, & ſent the Elizabeth towards the South to looke for the Prize: leauing the Marigold and the Canter to ſearch if in the bay they could finde any fit harbor for our ſhips. The ſame day being the 14 of May, our General met with the fly-boat (which loſt vs the 27 of April) and brought her into ſaide bay. The 18 in the morning we had word from the ſhips, that they had found a ſafe harbour and we weighed and ran in, the ſame day being Whitſunday. The Elizabeth weighed & put forth again to ſea, the 20 day, to looke for the Prize, and not finding her came in the next day. In the meane time our General diſcharged the fly-boat, and ran her vpon the maine, where we broke her vp for fire-wood. In the meane while there came about 30 of the countrey people downe to the ſea ſide: and when they were within 100 paſes of our men, they ſet themſelues in array very orderly caſting their companie into the forme of a ring, euery man hauing his bow and arrowes: who (when they had pight a ſtaffe on the ground, with certeine glaſſes, beads, and other trifles) returned backe. Then the countrey people came and tooke them and afterward approched neerer to our men, ſhewing themſelues very pleaſant, inſomuch that M. Winter daunced with them. They were exceedingly delighted with the ſound of the trumpet, and vialles. They be of a meane ſtature, well limmed, and of a duſkiſh, tawnie, or browne colour. Some of them hauing their faces ſpotted with diuers colours, as red, white, and blacke. Their apparel is a certaine ſkinne (wherein they wrap themſelues) not reaching ſo low as to couer their priuy members, all the reſt of their bodies be naked, ſauing that they weare certaine roules vpon their heads, whoſe ends hang ouer their ſhoulders. Euery one beareth his bow, being an ell in length, and arrowes made of reeds, hauing heads, framed very ſtrangly & cunningly of a flint ſtone. They be much giuen to mirth and iollity, and are very ſly, and ready to ſteale any thing that comes within their reach: for one of them ſnatched our Generals cap from his head (as he ſtouped) being of ſkarlet with a golden band: yet he would ſuffer no man to hurt any of them. They eate rawe fleſh, for we found ſeales bones, the raw fleſh whereof they had gnawen with their teeth like dogs. In this bay we watered, and victualed with ſeales: for there is ſuch plentie that we ſlew aboue 200 in the ſpace of one houre vpon a litle iſland.

Oſtriches and ſea foules.

The deſcription of certaine Sauages.

The 3 of June we departed from thence, and being at ſea we were put backe againe to Cape Hope, where we diſcharged our Canter and let her float in the ſea. Afterward wee ran to the 50 degree of the South pole, where wee met with the winde Southerly, and ſo turned backe againe to the Northward. And as we ran along the ſhore, we met with our Prize the 19 of June, which we loſt the 13 of May. The day following we found a harbour, into the which we entred with all our fleet the ſame day. This port is 49 degrees and an halfe in latitude, and I ſuppoſe it to be the ſame which Magellan named Port S. Iulian: for we found a gybbet on an hil, whereupon they were executed that did conſpire againſt Magellan, and certaine bones alſo of their dead bodies. The 22 of this moneth our Generall going to ſhore vpon the maine with 7 or 8 of his men, met with 3 of the Patagons hauing bowes and arrowes, who came neere to our mē making them ſignes to depart. Whereupon a gentleman being there preſent, and hauing a bowe and arrowes, made a ſhot to the end to ſhew them the force our bowes, with the which ſhot his ſtring broke: whereupon the Patagons preſumed to encounter them, directing their arrowes firſt at our M. Gunner, who had a caliuer ready bent to ſhot at them but it would not take fire: and as he leuelled his peece one of them ſhot him through the breſt, and out at the backe, wherewith he fell downe ſtarke dead. Alſo the gentleman that ſhot the arrow was ſo wounded that hee dyed the 2 day after and with the other was buryed in a litle iſland lying in the ſaid port. Our men left the ſlaine man on ſhore till night, and then fetched him in a boat. In the meane time the Patagons had ſtript him of all his clothes, and viewed his body laying his clothes vnder his head, and ſo left him vntouched, ſauing that they had ſtucke the Engliſh arrow in his left eye. Theſe men be of no ſuch ſtature as the Spaniardes report, being but of the height of Engliſh men: for I haue ſeene men in England taller then I could ſee any of them. But peraduenture the Spaniard did not thinke that any Engliſh men would haue come thither ſo ſoone to haue diſproued them in this & diuers others of their notorious lies: wherefore they preſumed more boldly to abuſe the world. The laſt of Iune M. Thomas Doughty was brought to his anſwere, was accuſed, and conuicted of certaine articles, and by M. Drake condemned. He was beheaded the 2 of Iuly 1578, whoſe body was buried in the ſaid iland, neer to them which were ſlaine. We wintered in this port 2 moneths, during which time we had ſuch weather as is commonly in England in the depth of winter, or rather colder. After we had trimmed vp our ſhips, and made prouiſion of fewell and freſh water, we departed thence with 3 ſhips the 17 of Auguſt about noone. And the 20 of the ſaid moneth we ſeazed Cape Victorie, by the which Cape is the way into the South ſea, called The ſtreights of Magellan, the firſt diſcouerer thereof. Wee found the mouth of the ſtreights to be 52 degrees ⅓ Southward of Equinoctial. In this ſtreight, we found the ſea to haue no ſuch current as ſome do imagine, (following the courſe of the primum mobile from Eaſt to Weſt) but to eb and flow as ordinarily as vpō other coaſts, riſing 5 fathoms vpright. The flood riſeth out of the Eaſt ocean, and ſtretcheth it ſelfe ſo far into the ſtreights, that it meeteth the flood of the South ſea neere about the midſt of the ſtreights, where it bendeth like an elbow, tending to the Weſt-north-weſt into the South Sea, whereas the Eaſt part from the mouth of the ſtreights to this elbow lyeth South-weſt and by Weſt, or South-weſt to 53 degrees and ⅓. 30 leagues within the ſtreights there be 3 ilands. To the greateſt our general gaue the name of Elizabeth: to the 2 Bartholomew, becauſe we found it on S. Bartholomews day: the 3 he named S. Georges iſland. Here we ſtaied one day & victualled our ſelues with a kinde of foule which is plentifull in that iſle, and whoſe fleſh is not farre vnlike a fat gooſe here in England: they haue no wings, but ſhort pineons which ſerue their turne in ſwimming. Their colour is ſomewhat blacke mixt with white ſpots vnder their belly, and about their necke. They walke ſo vpright, that a farre off a man would take them to be litle children. If a man aproch any thing neere them, they run into holes in the ground (which be not very deepe) whereof the iſland is full. So that to take them, we had ſtaues with hookes faſt to the ends, wherewith ſome of our men pulled them out, and others being ready with cudgels did knocke them on the head, for they bite ſo cruellie with their crooked bils, that none of vs was able to handle them aliue. The land on both parts is very high: but eſpecially toward the South ſea, monſtrous high hils and craggy rocks do exalt themſelues, whoſe tops be all hoary with ſnowe, in the moneths of Auguſt, September, and October. Notwithſtanding the lower partes of the hilles are repleniſhed and beautified with impenetrable thicke woods of ſtrange and vnknowen trees, flouriſhing all the yere long. Here we made prouiſion of fewel and freſh water, and paſſed by Cape Deſeado into the South ſea the 6 of September. And running along towards the North-weſt about 70 leagues, the winde turned directly againſt vs, with great extremitie of foule weather, as raine, haile, ſnow, and thicke fogs which continued ſo more thē 3 weeks, that we could beare no ſaile, at which time we were driuen 57 degr. to the ſouth pole. The 15 of September the moone was there ecclipſed & began to be darkned preſently after the ſetting of the ſunne, about 6 of the clocke at night, being then Equinoctial vernal in that countrey. The ſaid ecclipſe happened the 16 day in the morning before one of the clocke in England, which is about ſixe houres difference, agreeing to one quarter of the world, from the Meridian of England towards the Weſt. The laſt of September being a very foule night and the ſeas ſore growne, we loſt the Marigold, the Generals ſhippe and the Elizabeth running to the Eaſt-ward to get the ſhore, whereof we had ſight, the 7 of October, falling into a very dangerous bay full of rocks: and there we loſt company of M. Drake the ſame night. The next day very hardly eſcaping the danger of the rocks, we put into the ſtreights againe, where we ankered in an open bay for the ſpace of 2 dayes, and made great fiers on the ſhore, to the end that if M. Drake ſhould come into the ſtreights, hee might finde vs. After wee went into a ſound, where we ſtayed for the ſpace of 3 weekes, and named it The port of Health, for the moſt part of our men being very ſicke with long watching, wet, cold and euill diet did here (God be thanked) wonderfully recouer their health in ſhort ſpace. Here we had very great muſcles (ſome being 20 inches long) very pleaſant meate, and many of them full of ſeed-pearles.

The voyage giuen ouer.

We came out of this harbour the firſt of Nouember, giuing ouer our voiage by M. Winters compulſion (full ſore againſt the mariners minds) who alleged, he ſtood in diſpaire, as well to haue winds to ſerue his turne for Peru, as alſo of M. Drakes ſafetie. So we came backe againe through the ſtreights to S. Georges Iſland, where we tooke of the foules before named, and after departed.

They returned out of The ſtreight the 11 of Nouember, hauing entred into The ſouth ſea the 6 of September.

And thus wee paſſed by Cape Victorie out of the ſtreights the 11 of Nouember, directing our courſe to the North-eaſt, till the laſt of this moneth. What time wee arriued at an iſland which lyeth at the mouth of the riuer of Plate. Vpon this iſland there is ſuch an infinite number of ſeales, as may ſeeme incredible to any man that hath not bene there, ſome of them being 16 foote long, not fearing the preſence of men: for the moſt of our men were vpon the iſland, for the ſpace of 15 dayes to ſet vp a Pinneſſe, during which time the ſeales would come and ſlepe by them, and rather reſiſt our men, then giue place, vnleſſe mortall blowes forced them to yeelde.

When our Pinneſſe was built, we went to another iſland, where wee did water, and afterward departed the firſt of Januarie 1579, and ran towards the North till the 20 of the ſaid moneth, and then we arriued at an iſland which lieth on the coaſt of Braſil, neere to a towne called ſant Vincent inhabited by the Portugals. The ſayd towne lyeth 24 degrees Southwarde, almoſt vnder the Tropicke of Capricone. Here, by reaſon of fowle weather we loſt our Pinneſſe, and 8 men in her, and neuer ſaw them ſince. Here alſo our ſhip was in great danger, by the meanes of a ſtrong current, which had almoſt caſt vs vpon the ſhore before wee were aware, inſomuch that we were conſtrained to anker in the open ſea, and brake our cable and loſt an anker, and preſently let fal another anker; in weighing whereof our men were ſore ſpoiled. For the capſtan ranne about ſo violently with the riſing of the ſhippe in the ſea, that it threwe the men from the barres, and brake out the braines of one man: one other had his legge broken, and diuers others were ſore hurt. At laſt wee gote vp our anker and ſet ſayle, and ran into a place called Tanay, where we roade vnder an iſland and tooke in wood and water.

And while we ſtayed here, there came 3 Portugals aboord vs in a canoa, to knowe what wee would haue, or of what countrey we were. To whom our Captaine made anſwere: that we were Engliſhmen, and had brought commodities for their countrey, if they would trafficke with vs: whereat they greatly marueiled. For they ſaide that they neuer heard of any Engliſh ſhip to haue bene in that countrey before; and ſo they went to land againe, hauing one of our men with them to ſpeake with the Gouernour of the towne, and we kept one of them for a pledge. Shortly after there came another canoa aboord vs with one Portugal and al the reſt naked men of the countrey: of whom wee had two ſmall Oxen, one yong Hogge, with certaine hennes: alſo Pome-cytrons, limons, oranges, and other fruites of the countrey. For the which our Captaine gaue to them, linnen cloth, combes, kniues, and other trifles. In the meane time the Gouernour of the towne, ſent word that we ſhould haue nothing, vnleſſe we would bring our ſhippe into the hauen. Whereunto our Captaine would in no caſe conſent: for all their practiſe was to haue gotten vs within their danger, neuertheles we came ſomewhat neere the towne with our ſhip, as though wee would haue gone in; but we neuer meant it.

Here we tooke in our man; and ſet the Portugal pledge on land. After that we went to an iland called the iſle of Sant Sebaſtian; where wee tooke fiſh. Here the Portugals had betrayed vs, if a Braſillian one of their ſlaues had not bene. For he ſtole from them, & ſhewed vnto vs by ſignes, that the Portugals were comming with their canoas to take vs, as it fell out in deed: for the next morning they ſhewed themſelues with 12 or 16 canoas, ſome of them hauing 40 men in them. The ſame night two of our men ran away with our boat to the Portugals. And thus wee came away from thence toward our owne countrey the 17 of March: and had ſight of the Cape of ſant Auguſtine, lying in 8 degrees to the Southward of the line. After that we had ſight of an iſland lying within 3 degrees of the Equinoctial, called the iſle of Fernando de Loronha. We croſſed the Equinoctial the 13 of April, and had ſight of the North ſtarre the 19 of the ſayd moneth.

The 1, 2, 3, 4, and 5 of May, wee ſayled through the ſea of Weedes, about the ſpace of 100 leagues, being vnder the Tropicke of Cancer. From whence wee kept our courſe towards the North-eaſt, vntill wee had the pole rayſed 47 degrees. The 22 of May we ranne Eaſtnortheaſt.

The 29 we ſounded and had 70 fathomes with white oaze; hauing the North pole rayſed 51 degrees. The 30 of May wee had ſight of S. Iues on the North ſide of Corne-wall, and the 2 of June 1579 we arriued at Ilfoord-combe in Deuon-ſhire.

And thus after our manifold troubles and great dangers in hauing paſſed The ſtreights of Magellan into the South Sea with our Generall M. Francis Drake, and hauing bene driuen with him downe to the Southerly latitude of 57 degrees, and afterward paſſing backe by the ſame ſtreights againe, it pleaſed God to bring vs ſafe into our owne natiue countrey to enioy the preſence of our deare friendes and kinſefolkes, to whom bee prayſe, honour, and glory, for euer and euer. Amen.

EDVVARD CLIFFE,

Mariner.

Inſtructions giuen by the right honourable the Lordes of the Counſell, to M. Edward Fenton Eſquire, for the order to be obſerued in the voyage recommended to him for the Eaſt Indies and Cathay. Aprill 9. 1582.

First you ſhall enter as Captaine Generall, into the charge and gouernment of theſe ſhippes, viz. the Beare Gallion, the Edward Bonauenture, the Barke Francis, and the ſmall Frigate or Pinneſſe.

2 Item you ſhall appoint for the furniſhing of the veſſels in the whole, to the number of 200 able perſons, accompting in that number the Gentlemen and their men, the Miniſters, Chirurgians, Factors, &c. which ſayd number is no way to be exceeded, whereof as many as may be, to be ſea-men; and ſhal diſtribute them into euery veſſel, as by aduiſe here before your going ſhal be thought meete: Prouided that you ſhall not receiue vnder your charge and gouernement, any diſordered or mutinous perſon, but that vpon knowledge had, you ſhall remooue him before your departure hence, or by the way as ſoone as you can conueniently auoide him, and receiue better in his place.

3 Item, for the more and better circumſpect execution, and determination in any waightie cauſes incident in this voyage, we will that you ſhall take vnto you for aſſiſtants, Captaine Hawkins, captain Ward, M. Nicholas Parker, M. Maddox, M. Walker, M. Euans, Randolph Shaw, Matthew Talboys, with whom you ſhall conſult and conferre in all cauſes, matters, and actions of importance, not prouided for in theſe inſtructions touching this ſeruice now in hand. And in all ſuch matters, ſo handled, argued, and debated, wee thinke that conuenient alwayes to be executed, which you ſhall thinke meeteſt with the aſſent alſo of any 4 of them, the matter hauing bene debated, and ſo aſſented vnto, in the preſence of your ſaid aſſiſtants. And in caſe that ſuch conference and debating the opinions of the aforeſaid Aſſiſtants be found in effect any way to differ, then it is thought meete, that all ſuch matters ſo argued vpon, ſhall reſt to bee put in execution in ſuch ſort as you ſhal thinke moſt meeteſt, hauing the aſſent of any 4 of them, as aforeſaid. And if any of theſe Aſſiſtants ſhal die, then the number of the one halfe of the Suruiuours to ioyne with the General captaine for conſent in all things aforeſaid.

4 Of all which your aſſemblies and conſultations, for the matters aforeſaid, we thinke it very conuenient, that a particular and true note ſhould be kept, for which cauſe we appoint maſter Maddox miniſter, and if he ſhould deceaſe, then the Generall with halfe the Aſſiſtants Suruiuours, to name one to keepe a booke of all ſuch matters as ſhall bee brought in conſultation, and of all ſuch reaſons as ſhall be propounded by any perſon, either on the one ſide, or on the other: what was reſolued on, and by whoſe conſent, who diſſented there from, and for what cauſes. In which book he ſhall in the beginning of the note of euery ſuch aſſembly, ſet downe particularly the day, and the place, if it may be, the names of the perſons then preſent, and vpon what occaſion the ſayd conſultation was appointed or holden, and ſhall haue to euery acte, the handes of the General, and of all, or ſo many of the ſaid Aſſiſtants as will ſubſcribe: which booke the ſaid maſter Maddox, or the other vpon his deceaſe appointed in his place ſhall keepe ſecrete, and in good order to bee exhibited vnto vs, at your returne home.

5 Item, if there happen any perſon or perſons imployed in this ſeruice, of what calling or condition, hee or they ſhall be, ſhould conſpire, or attempt priuatly or publikely, any treaſon, mutinie, or other diſcord, either touching the taking away of your owne life, or any other of authoritie vnder you, whereby her Maieſties ſeruice in this voiage might bee ouerthrowne, or impugned: we will therefore, that vpon iuſt proofe made of any ſuch treaſon, mutinie, or any other diſcord attempted as aforeſaid, the ſame ſhalbe puniſhed by you, or your Lieuetenant according to the qualitie and enormitie of the fact. Prouided alwayes, and it ſhall not bee lawfull neither for you, nor for your Lieuetenant to procede to the puniſhment of any perſon by loſſe of life or lim, vnleſſe the partie ſhall be iudged to haue deſerued it by the reſt of your Aſſiſtants, as is before expreſſed, or at the leaſt by foure of them. And that which ſhall concerne life to be by the verdict of twelue men of the company employed in this voyage, to be impanelled for that purpoſe, with the obſeruation of the forme of our countrey lawes in that behalfe, as neere as you may. Prouided, if it ſhall not appeare, that the forbearing of the execution by death, ſhall miniſter cauſe to increaſe the facte of the offender, then it were better to conuince the partie of his facte, by the othes of 12 indifferent perſons, and to commit him to hard impriſonment, vntill the returne. And aſwell of the factes committed by any, as alſo of the proofe thereof, and of the opinions of you, and your Aſſiſtants, and the maner of the puniſhment, the Regiſter ſhall make a particular and true note, in the booke of your conſultation, as is before appointed.

6 Item, you ſhall not remooue Captaine William Hawkins your lieutenant, maſter Captaine Luke Ward your viceadmiral, or captaine of the Edward Bonauenture, nor captaine Carlile from his charge by land, whom we will not to refuſe any ſuch ſeruice as ſhall be appointed to him by the Generall and the councill, nor any captaine of other veſſels from their charges, but vpon iuſt cauſe duely prooued, and by conſent of your Aſſiſtants, or of foure of them at the leaſt.

M. Carliſle vpon occaſion was not in this voyage.

7 Item, for the ſucceſſion of the Generall, gouernour of this whole voyage, if it ſhould pleaſe God to take him away, it is thought meete that there ſhould bee the names of ſuch Gentlemen ſecretly ſet downe to ſucceede in his place one after the other, which are ſeuerally written in parchment, included in bals of waxe, ſealed with her Maieſties ſignet, put into two coffers locked with three ſeuerall locks, whereof one key is to bee in the cuſtodie of captaine Luke Ward, the other of William Hawkins, the third of maſter Maddox the Miniſter, and the ſame two coffers to bee put into two ſeuerall ſhippes, videlicet, the one coffer in the Gallion, in the cuſtodie of the Generall, the other in the Edward Bonauenture in the cuſtodie of the Viceadmirall: the ſame two coffers vpon any ſuch caſualtie of the Generals death by conſent of the Aſſiſtants which ſhall ouerliue, to bee opened, and the partie therein named to ſucceede in the place, who ſhall thereupon take vpon him the charge in the ſaid voiage according to theſe inſtructions, in ſuch ſort as if they had bene ſpecially directed vnto him, and the reſt of the companie ſo to take and repute him in euery reſpect, as they will anſwer to the contrary. But if it ſhall ſo fall out, (as we hope it will) that there ſhall bee no ſuch neede, but that the Generall doe continue ſtill, then ſhall you at your returne deliuer backe the ſayd coffers and bals of waxe ſealed in ſuch ſort as they be, without opening them, vnleſſe it be in the caſe aforeſayd.

8 You ſhall make a iuſt and true inuentorie in euery ſhip and veſſell appointed for this voyage of all the tackle, munition, and furniture belonging to them at their ſetting foorth hence, and of all the prouiſions whatſoeuer, and one copie thereof vnder your hand, and vnder the hands of your Viceadmirall and lieutenant, to be deliuered to the Earle of Leiceſter, and the other to the gouernour of the companie for them before your departure hence, and the like to bee done at your returne home of all things then remaining in the ſayd ſhips and veſſels, with a true certificate how and by what meanes any parcell of the ſame ſhall haue bene ſpent or loſt.

The gouernour of this companie.

9 Item, you ſhall vſe all diligence poſſible to depart from Southampton with your ſayd ſhips and veſſels before the laſt of this preſent moneth of Aprill, and ſo goe on your courſe by Cape de buena Eſperança, not paſſing by the ſtreight of Magellan either going or returning, except vpon great occaſion incident, that ſhall bee thought otherwiſe good to you, by the aduiſe and conſent of your ſayd Aſſiſtants, or foure of them at the leaſt.

They are inioyned to go by the Cape of Buena Eſperanza.

10 Item, you ſhall not paſſe to the Northeaſtward of the 40 degree of latitude at the moſt, but ſhall take your right courſe to the Iles of the Malucos for the better diſcouery of the Northweſt paſſage, if without hinderance of your trade, & within the ſame degree you can get any knowledge touching that paſſage, whereof you ſhall do wel to be inquiſitiue, as occaſion in this ſort may ſerue.

11 Item, you ſhall haue ſpeciall regard after your departure from the coaſt of England, ſo to order your courſe, as that your ſhips and veſſels loſe not one another, but keepe companie together both outward and homeward. And leſt if they happen to ſeuer the one from the other by tempeſt or otherwiſe, it ſhall not bee amiſſe that you appoint to the Captaines and Maſters certaine places, wherein you will ſtay certaine dayes. And euery ſhip paſſing aforehand, and not knowing what is become of the other ſhips, to leaue vpon euery Promontorie or Cape a token to ſtand in ſight, with a writing lapped in leade to declare the day of their paſſage. And if any wilfulneſſe or negligence in this behalfe ſhall appeare in any perſon or perſons that ſhall haue charge of any of the ſhips or veſſels aforeſayd, or if they or any of them ſhall doe otherwiſe then to them appertaineth, you ſhall puniſh ſuch offenders ſharpely to the example of others.

12 Item, we do ſtraightly enioine you, and conſequently all the reſt imployed in this voyage in any wiſe, and as you and they will anſwere the contrary at your comming home by the lawes of this realme, that neither going, tarrying abroad, nor returning, you doe ſpoyle or take any thing from any of the Queenes Maieſties friends or allies, or any Chriſtians, without paying iuſtly for the ſame, nor that you vſe any maner of violence or force againſt any ſuch, except in your owne defence, if you ſhall be ſet vpon, or otherwiſe be forced for your owne ſafegard to do it.

13 Item, wee will that you deale altogether in this voyage like good and honeſt merchants, traffiquing and exchanging ware for ware, with all courteſie to the nations you ſhall deale with, as well Ethniks as others, and for that cauſe you ſhall inſtruct all thoſe that ſhall goe with you, that whenſoeuer you or any of you ſhall happen to come in any place to conference with the people of thoſe parts, that in all your doings and theirs, you and they ſo behaue your ſelues towards the ſayd people, as may rather procure their friendſhip and good liking toward you by courteſie, then to moue them to offence or miſliking, and eſpecially you ſhall haue great care of the performance of your word and promiſe to them.

Strange people to be brought home.

14 Item wee will, that by the aduiſe of your Aſſiſtants, in places where you and they ſhall thinke moſt fit, you ſettle if you can a beginning of a further trade to bee had hereafter: and from ſuch places doe bring ouer with you ſome fewe men and women if you may, and doe alſo leaue ſome one or two, or more, as to you and your Aſſiſtants ſhall ſeeme conuenient of our nation with them for pledges, and to learne the tongue and ſecrets of the countreys, hauing diligent care that in deliuering and taking of hoſtages, you deliuer not perſonages of more value then you receiue, but rather deliuer meane perſons vnder colour of men of value, as the Infidels do for the moſt part vſe. Prouided that you ſtay not longer to make continuance of further trade, then ſhall be expedient for good exchange of the wares preſently carried with you.

15 Item you ſhall haue care, and giue generall warning, that no perſon of what calling ſoeuer hee be, ſhall take vp, or keepe to himſelfe or his priuate vſe, any ſtone, pearle, golde, ſiluer, or other matter of commoditie to be had or found in places where you ſhall come, but hee the ſaid perſon ſo ſeaſed of ſuch ſtone, pearle, golde, ſiluer, or other matter of commoditie, ſhall with all ſpeede, or ſo ſoone as he can, detect the ſame, and make deliuerie thereof to your ſelfe, or you Viceadmirall, or Lieutenant, and the Factor appointed for this voyage, vpon paine of forfeiture of all the recompenſe he is to haue for his ſeruice in this voyage by ſhare or otherwiſe: and further to receiue ſuch puniſhment, as to you & your Aſſiſtants, or the more part of them ſhal ſeeme good, and otherwiſe to be puniſhed here at his returne, if according to the qualitie of his offence it ſhalbe thought needfull.

16 Item, if the Captaines, Marchants or any other, ſhall haue any apparell, iewels, chaines, armour, or any other thing whatſoeuer, which may bee deſired in countreys where they ſhall traffique, that it ſhall not bee lawfull for them or any of them to traffique, or ſell any thing thereof for their priuate accompt: but the ſame ſhall bee prized by the moſt part of thoſe that ſhall bee in commiſſion in the places where the ſame may be ſo required, rated at ſuch value, as it may bee reaſonably worth in England, and then ſolde to the profite of the whole voyage, and to goe as in aduenture for thoſe to whom it doeth appertaine.

17 Item you your ſelfe ſhall in the Gallion keepe one booke, and the Factors appointed for the ſame ſhippe another, wherein ſhall bee a iuſt accompt kept, aſwell of the marchandiſe carried hence, as of thoſe you ſhall bring home. And aſwell at your ſetting foorth, as from time to time, as exchange ſhalbe made, you ſhall ſet your hand to their booke, and they theirs to yours, and the like order ſhal you ſee that the Captaine and the Factors in the Edward Bonauenture ſhall vſe in their ſhip, and the other Captaines and Factors in each other veſſell.

18 Item you ſhall giue ſtraight order to reſtraine, that none ſhall make any charts or deſcriptions of the ſayd voyage, but ſuch as ſhall bee deputed by you the Generall, which ſayd charts and deſcriptions, wee thinke meete that you the Generall ſhall take into your hands at your returne to this our coaſt of England, leauing with them no copie, and to preſent them vnto vs at your returne: the like to be done if they finde any charts or maps in thoſe countreys.

19 Item you ſhall at your returne ſo direct your courſe, that all the ſhips vnder your gouernment may come home together, and arriue here in the riuer of Thames, if it may conueniently be. And whereſoeuer in this Realme you, or any of the ſhippes ſhall arriue, you ſhall giue ſpeciall and ſtraight order, that no perſon of what condition ſoeuer he be, ſhall vnlade, or bring on land, or forth of the veſſels in which he came, any part or parcel of marchandize, or matter of commoditie brought in any of the ſayd veſſels, vntill we being certified of your or their arriuall, ſhall giue further order and direction therein, vnder the penalties and forfeitures expreſſed in the fifteenth article, againſt ſuch as ſhall retaine any thing to their priuate vſe, as in the ſayd article is further expreſſed.

20 Item, to the intent that all ſuch perſons as ſhall go with you in this voyage, may better vnderſtand what they ought to do, and what to auoid, wee thinke it requiſite, that aſwell out of theſe, as otherwiſe with the aduiſe of your Aſſiſtants and Maſters of the ſhips, you ſhall cauſe ſome conuenient order to bee ſet downe in writing for their better gouernment both at ſea and land, if they ſhall happen to goe on lande any where: and the ſame to bee openly read and made knowen vnto them, to the intent they may vnderſtand how to behaue themſelues, and vpon any fault committed, not to haue any excuſe to pretend ignorance, and ſo to auoid ſuch puniſhment as it is requiſite to haue miniſtred for the keeping of them in good order.

21 And to the end God may bleſſe this voyage with happie and proſperous ſucceſſe, you ſhall haue an eſpeciall care to ſee that reuerence and reſpect bee had to the Miniſters appointed to accompanie you in this voyage, as appertaineth to their place and calling, and to ſee ſuch good order as by them ſhall be ſet downe for reformation of life and maners, duely obeyed and perfourmed, by cauſing the tranſgreſſours and contemners of the ſame to be ſeuerely puniſhed, and the Miniſters to remooue ſometime from one veſſell to another.

22 Prouided alwayes, that the whole direction and gouernment of the people, life and limme excepted, as in the fift article, and the courſe of this voyage, ſhall bee wholly at your diſpoſition, except in the courſe by the Streight of Magellan, either outward or homeward, and in your paſſage by the Northward of 40 degrees in latitude, wherein you ſhall follow directions ſet downe in the nine and ten articles, as alſo in the diſplacing of the Captaine of the Edward Bonauenture, and other captaines, wherin you ſhall followe the order appointed in the ſixt article: Prouided that wee meane not by this article to derogate any thing from the authoritie of your aſſiſtants eſtabliſhed in the third article, or in any other article of theſe inſtructions.

23 Item, in all occaſions and enterpriſes that may fall out to bee vpon the lande, wee will that Captaine Carlile ſhall haue the generall and chiefe charge thereof.

24 And finally wee require you and euery of you to haue a due regard to the obſeruation and accompliſhment of theſe our inſtructions, and of all ſuch other things, as may any kind of way tend to the furtherance and benefite of this ſeruice committed to your charge.

M. Carlile vpon occaſion was not in this voyage.

The voyage intended towards China, wherein M. Edward Fenton was appointed Generall: Written by M. Luke Ward his Viceadmiral, and Captaine of the Edward Bonauenture, begun Anno Dom. 1582.

The ſecond of April I departed with the Edward Bonauenture from Blackwall, and the 19 of the ſame arriued in Nettle roade at Hampton, where I found riding the Gallion Leiceſter: and ſo remaining there till the firſt of May, wee ſet ſaile thence in the forenoone, being of vs in the whole fleete foure ſaile.

1 The Gallion Leiceſter of 400 tunnes Admirall, whereof was Generall Captaine Edward Fenton, and William Hawkins the yonger lieutenant Generall in her, and Chriſtopher Hall, Maſter.

2 The Edward Bonauenture of 300 tunnes Viceadmirall, whereof was Captaine Luke Ward, and Thomas Perrie Maſter.

3 The Francis of fortie tunnes, whereof was Captaine Iohn Drake, and William Markam Maſter.

4 The Elizabeth of fiftie tunnes, whereof was Captaine Thomas Skeuington and Ralph Crane Maſter.

We ſpent by meanes partly of buſineſſe, and partly of contrary windes, the moneth of May vpon the coaſt, and then leauing the land wee put off to ſea, and proceeded on our voyage intended by the grace of God for China: vntill the moneth of Auguſt following, nothing fell out much worthy the knowledge of the worlde, which is not common to all nauigants, but about the beginning of Auguſt aforeſayd, being ſomewhat neere the coaſt of Guinie, vpon the ſhooting off a peece and the putting out of a flag in the Admiral, I went on boord, and M. Walker, M. Shaw, M. Geffreis, our Maſter & Pilot with me, where the generall counſel was aſſembled to conſider of two points, viz.

The firſt, whether it were neceſſarie to water preſently or not, which was thought very needful of all men, and ſo concluded.

The ſecond, where the beſt and apteſt place was to water in, which was thought of the greater number to be at Sierra leona on the coaſt of Guinie, which was alſo concluded, and by the Maſter and Pilots agreed to goe hence Southeaſt, which determined, wee returned aboord.

The 3 day wee went Southeaſt and Eaſtſoutheaſt, till ſixe a clocke at night that wee ſawe the lande of Guinie, which bare Northeaſt of vs about 12 leagues off, which ſeene, wee ſounded, and had no ground: then went I and our Maſter and Pilot aboord the Admirall, and after many debatements concluded to run in Northeaſt by Eaſt, and at eleuen at night wee came aboord againe, and went all night Northeaſt by Eaſt.

The 4 at eight a clocke in the forenoone wee were within 2 leagues of the lande, which bare off vs Northeaſt, which roſe like a hill full of woods, and on each ſide low land: wee being perſwaded by our pilots that it was the entrance into Sierra leona, went in Northeaſt vntill wee were within an halfe league of the ſhoar, and had brought the South point Southeaſt by Eaſt off vs. At eleuen a clocke finding it a bay and not Sierra leona, wee brought our tacks aboord, and ſtoode along Weſt by North and Weſt larboord tacked.

In this time our Admirals pinneſſe rowed in, and went on land vpon the South ſide of the bay, and the Elizabeths boate with her. They found houſes of boughes, and in one of the houſes the tongue of a beaſt, and a bullocks tongue freſh killed; alſo a lake with plentie of freſh water, and freſh-water-fiſh in it hard by the ſea ſide: they found drie pomegranates, and peaſe like nuts, with other vnknowen fruites vnder the trees. The Elizabeth ranne in, and brought the South point South by Weſt of her, and ankered within Faulcon ſhot of the ſhore in ſeuen fathom oaze, where they tooke fiſh with hookes, while hee ſtayed for the boates.

The 4 all the afternoone wee ran along the coaſt (which lyeth Northweſt and by North, and Southeaſt by South) Weſt, and within a point one way or the other, ſeeing the lande vnder our lee three or foure leagues off, and all night likewiſe.

They arriue in the riuer of Sierra leona.

The 9 at three a clock in the morning our Admiral ſhot off a peece, and at foure wee weyed and went hence Northeaſt. At fiue in the morning wee ſaw the land along, and the Iſland which wee ſaw the night before, and diuers other Iſlands about it, & ſo ran in Northeaſt vntil we had brought our ſelues thwart of the riuer, and then ran in Eaſt about ſixe at night, being a league within the riuer. Our Admirall ſhot off a peece, and there wee ankered in eight fathem ſand. Being at anker, I manned our boate and would haue gone aboord the Admirall, but could not, the flood was bent ſo ſtrong, and ſhe rode halfe a mile beneath vs in the tyde, but we had no tyde.

The 10 in the morning at fiue a clocke I ſent our ſkiffe with our pilot in her to find a roade, and a watring place: in the meane time at ſixe a clocke we ſet ſaile with our ſhip, and being calme wee towed with our boat vntill ten, and then ankered a mile ſhort of the watering place. After dinner I went on land with my ſkiffe to finde timber to fiſh our maſte, and ſearching along the ſhoare we found a good watring place: and further ſeeking in the wood, which all the countrey is full of, and of diuers ſorts, wee found Limmon trees full of fruits: alſo trees growing by the water ſide with the ſtalkes hung full of oyſters and great periwinkles, and crabs amongſt them: wee found drie pomegranates with many other fruits vnknowen to vs. In the meane time our Admirall and the Edward with the barkes, hauing a gale at Weſt, ſet ſaile, and ran vp and ankered in the rode before the accuſtomed watering place.

Trees hung with oyſters.

The 22 day certaine Portugals which had bene with vs before, came down and brought ſome other Portugals and Negros with them in a ſhippe-boate, wherein they brought vs 80 mewes of rice, 500 and odde weight of Elephants teeth, and a Negro boy, which boy they gaue the Generall, and the rice and teeth for the Elizabeth, which wee ſolde them, with all her tackle and ſailes, hauing neede of the rice, becauſe our meale which wee brought out of England was decayed and naught, whereof wee had into the Edward 30 buſhels, which is a mewe and a halfe: the Francis had 5 buſhels, and the Gallion had the reſt. And wee had 200 weight of Elephants teeth, and the Gallion 300 and a halfe, and ſixe pound. During this time we ſent our ſkiffe with the Admiralls pinneſſe vp the riuer to meete with a Gundall, which the Portugals had ſent for freſh victuals for vs: who not finding her, returned at night: All this day I with M. Walker remained aboord with the Admirall, and after their dinner and ſupper wee ended our buſineſſe, and returned aboord, hauing had many good ſpeaches with the Portugals.

Their trafique here with the Portugals.

The 26 day being Sunday, Captaine Hawkins, M. Maddox, M. Hall, M. Banniſter, Captaine Drake, M. Euans, M. Hoode, and others came aboord and heard the Sermon, and dined with me: after dinner wee went on ſhoare to the lower point where we followed the footing of an Elephant, but ſaw him not, and ſo ſpent the time to and fro till ſupper time, and then came aboord, and ſupped together, which done, each man departed to his abode.

This night I was very ſicke, (and ſo were all they that were on ſhoare with mee,) with eating of a fruite of the countrey, which wee found on trees, like nuts: whereof ſome did eate foure, ſome fiue, ſome ſixe, and more, but wee vomitted and ſcoured vpon it without reaſon.

Sickeneſſe by eating ſome fruite in Guinea.

The 27 day in the afternoone the olde Greeke Franciſco came aboord to me, with requeſt that hee might haue the Francis boate to goe vp for his owne boate which was not come downe, with whom I talked of this Countrey and Countrey-people, vntill fiue of the clocke at night that the flood was come, and then I went aboorde to the Admirall, and got his conſent, and ſent themſelues in her: viz. Ferdinando the Portugall Maſter, and his Negro: In the meane time I ſent foure of my men to watch in the Elizabeth all night.

The 28 day in the morning at foure a clocke I ſent my ſkiffe with the Admirals pinneſſe down to the Weſt point to fiſh, who came aboorde againe at one in the afternoone, and brought as much fiſh as all our companies could eate.

During the time that our boates were a fiſhing, came downe the riuer a canoa and the Portugals former boate, with hennes, orenges, plantans, which they preſented the Generall and mee with: and alſo the reſt of the rice due to vs for the payment of the Elizabeth. For the partitions whereof I went aboord the Admirall, where I dined. After dinner M. Euans began to barter away certaine of the ſhips commodities with the Negros, without acquainting the Generall or any other vntill hee had done, whereof grewe more wordes then profite, as by the bookes of marchandiſe appeareth. Which done I came aboord, and had two of the Portugals to ſupper with mee. About two of the clocke in the morning we had a Ternado, and much raine.

M. Euans one of our marchants.

The 29 about 4 a clocke in the morning, I in my ſkiffe, and Captaine Parker in his pinneſſe, went downe to the Weſt point, and there wee landed with 11 men in all well furniſhed, and ſearched the woods, plaines and plaſhes, after an Elephant, finding the haunt, footing, and ſoyle of many newly done, yet wee ſaw none of them. Wee ſaw hogs, goates or fawnes, and diuers ſorts of fowles very wilde: and hauing trauailed about 2 leagues, about noone wee returned to the point, where wee landed, and met our boates which had beene at ſea, and taken plentie of good fiſh: there wee refreſhed our ſelues with ſuch victuals as wee had, and came aboord our ſeuerall ſhips, where I found the Portugals and Negros, who had dined, and after ſupped aboord with mee.

They ſearch the countrey.

The 2 of September we ſet ſaile at ſixe of the clock in the morning, & went out Weſt betweene 7 and 10 fathom, with a prettie gale at Eaſt til 8, then it waxed calme, wee being ſhot out of the harbour a league and a halfe. It continued calme this day till one in the afternoone, and then it blewe vp at Weſtſouthweſt a good gale, ſo wee ſtood off Northnorthweſt, and Northweſt til 5 in the afternoone, then wee ankered in 12 fathom, being 6 leagues off the point Weſt by North.

The 3 day about eight a clocke in the forenoone, the Generall came aboord to mee, complaining that his maine croſſe-trees were broken, and therefore determined to goe into Sierra leona againe when the winde blewe: at 12 at noone wee ſet ſaile, and went in Eaſtſoutheaſt, and Southeaſt, and Southſoutheaſt, being carried to the Northward with the flood. And at 7 at night wee ankered in eight fathom three leagues off the entrance, Weſtnorthweſt.

They returne to Sierra leona againe.

The 12 day came downe the riuer a boate with three other Portugals, with whom the Generall bargained, to let them haue 3 barrels of ſalt for 5 barrels of rice, and after that rate to exchange for 40 barrels, which hee acquainted mee with: afterwards I dined among the Portugals with him: after dinner I went on ſhoare to the ouen, and to the carpenters. After I had bene on ſhoare and ſeene the worke there, I returned aboord, & there ſupped with mee the Generall, M. Maddox, Captaine Hawkins, and ſeuen Portugals: after ſupper each man returned to his place.

Traffique with 3 other Portugals, viz.
1 Lewis Henriques a dweller here aboue 20 yeeres.
2 Matthew Fernandos Captaine.
3 Pedro Vaz pilot.

The 13 in the afternoone, the Portugals came againe aboord me, and brake their faſt with me: after I ſent by them vp the riuer in my ſkiffe 12 barrels of ſalt, and gaue them a bottell of wine for one of the ſauage Queenes.

The 15 after dinner, the Maſter, M. Walker, and I, accompanied with 12 other trauelled ouer a great deale of ground to finde ſome cattell, but found none: and comming home thorow the Oyſter bay, I found of my company and of the Admirals together roſting of oyſters: and going from them, Thomas Ruſſell one of my companie ſawe a ſtrange fiſh named Vtelif, which had fought with a crocodile, and being hurt came neere the ſhoare, where hee waded in, and by the taile drew him a lande, and there ſlewe him, and ſent the Generall the hinder halfe of him: the head-part I kept, in whoſe noſe is a bone of two foot long like a ſword, with three and twentie pricks of a ſide, ſharpe and ſtrange: The bodie wee did eate, and it was like a Sharke.

They enter vp to ſearch the countrey.

A ſwordfiſh killed.

The 30 and laſt day of September the Francis cooke came aboord about ſeuen a clocke in the forenoone from fiſhing with my net, and brought among other fiſh, a Sea calfe (as wee called it) with haire and lympits, and barnacles vpon him, being ſeuen foote long, foure foote nine inches about: which to ſee I ſent for the Generall, and ſuch as pleaſed to come ſee it out of the Admirall, who came and brought with him M. Maddox, Captaine Hawkins, Captaine Parker, and moſt part of his companie, who hauing viewed the beaſt, which was ougly being aliue, it being flayed, opened, and dreſſed, prooued an excellent, faire, and good meate, broyled, roſted, ſodde and baked, and ſufficed all our companies for that day.

A ſtrange fiſh taken.

The firſt day of October in the morning, wee tooke in to make vp our full complement of rice twentie barrels for the twelue barrels of ſalt, deliuered the Portugall Lewis Henriques before.

The 2 day about ſixe a clocke in the morning, wee ſet ſaile hauing little winde: the Captaine with the Maſter, and other of their companie of the Portugals came aboord me, complaining that the carſey by them receiued for the foure Negros of the Generall, was not ſufficient for their payment, whereupon I gaue them ſcarlet caps, and other things to their content, who finding themſelues well pleaſed, departed away in the Gundall, and we hauing little winde, got downe thwart of the fiſhing bay, and there came to anker about nine a clocke the ſame forenoone.

The third day about two a clocke in the morning wee ſet ſaile, and went hence Southweſt by Weſt till two in the afternoone then being little wind: at fiue wee ankered ſixe leagues Eaſtſoutheaſt of the Southermoſt part of the land in fifteene fathom, and there wee rode till eight a clocke at night, and ſet ſaile with a ſtiffe gale at Northeaſt, which ſometime blewe, and ſometime was little winde, and ſo continued all night.

The firſt day of Nouember in the forenoone, wee tooke in our maine ſaile to mend it: in the meane time, the Admirall came vp by vs, and deſiring mee with my Maſter, and M. Blackcoller to come aboord to him about certaine conference. Hee ſent his boate for vs, where by him was propounded, whether it were beſt for vs to ſtand on with the coaſt of Braſil as wee did, or elſe to ſtand about ſtarboord tacked to the Eaſtwards: whereupon diuers of their charts and reckonings were ſhewed: by ſome it appeared, wee were a hundred and fifteene leagues, by ſome a hundred and fiftie leagues, by ſome a hundred and fortie leagues, and ſome a great deale further ſhort of Braſil, next hand Northeaſt of vs: but all agreed to bee within twentie minutes of the line, ſome to the North, ſome to the South of the line.

After many debatements, it was agreed by moſt conſent to ſtand on for the coaſt of Braſil, except the wind changed, and there to doe, as weather ſhould compell vs. In this conſultation, wee had ſpeaches of courſes and places of meeting, if by miſfortune wee ſhould bee ſeparated, wherein was no full order concluded, but that we ſhould ſpeake euery night with the Admirall, if wee conueniently might, and ſo to appoint our courſe from time to time, if wee loſt companie, to ſtay fifteene dayes in the riuer of Plate, and from thence to go for the ſtreights, and there to ride, and water, and trimme our ſhips.

The 12 in the afternoone M. Maddox, M. Hall, M. Banniſter, and others came aboord to viſite M. Walker. After a time of abode with him, they returned to the gallion all againe, except M. Maddox who remained with M. Walker here aboord.

This night M. Maddox and I, beheld many conſtellations in the firmament, and ſet downe certaine newe ſtarres raiſed to the Southwards All day and night wee went South, and South by Eaſt among.

19 degrees of Southerly latitude.

The ſeuenteenth day in the afternoone wee ſhot off three peeces of ordinance in honour of our Queenes Maieſtie. This day after dinner came maſter Maddox, and Captaine Drake with others to take their leaue of maſter Walker, as I with all my company had done before, ſuppoſing him paſt hope of recouerie. At foure of the clocke, finding our ſelues in nineteene degrees to the Southwards of the line, and cleare of the ſhoalds called by vs Powles, wee went hence South-ſouthweſt all night following.

The 18 day being Sunday, after dinner the Generall, M. Maddox, Captaine Parker, and many other came aboord, and viſited M. Walker: which done, they dranke, and departed aboord againe. All this day and night, we went our courſe Southweſt by South, with a franke gale.

Cold euenings.

The 19 day about noone, the Sun was in our Zenith, being declined to the Southwards 21 degrees, and 33 minutes, where wee found the aire freſh and temperate, as in England in Iune when a freſh gale of winde doeth blow in the heate of the day, but the euening, the night, and the morning are more freſh and colder here, then it is in England either in Iune or Iulie.

Diuers Iſlands.

The latitude of 27 degrees, 50 minutes.

The firſt of December, about ſixe of the clocke in the morning, wee ſawe lande on the coaſt of Braſil, in the height of 28 degrees or there abouts, which bare Northweſt, and was eight leagues from vs very high land. Wee ſtood in with it, being much winde, and comming neere, found diuers Iſlands: and ſeeing the Francis would not come roome nor run ahead vs, wee ſtood in with the ſhore, and ſounded in 30 fathom oaze three leagues off the lande, bearing from the Weſtnorthweſt to the Northnorthweſt of vs, and ſo ſtoode ſtill till it ſhoalded orderly into ſeuen fathom, within a mile of a headland: then perceiuing a breach ouer our bowe, and no hope of a good harbour, in that place, wee bare vp roome, and our Admirall after vs, whom wee haled: then hee tolde vs hee would ſeeke harbour to leewards, requiring me to go ahead. Then ſeeing the barke was aſterne, I hoiſed out my ſkiffe, and ſet her maſte and ſaile, taking her ging, and Tobias one of my Maſters mates with mee, and ranne before the ſhippe, ſounding in 15 fathom faire ſand, leauing a ledge of rockes aſea-boord of vs: ſo the ſhips and the barke looffed vp vnder a headland, and ankered in eight fathom, halfe a mile off the lande, hauing brought the headland which lyeth in 27 degrees 50 minutes Southſoutheaſt off them, and the North land Northeaſt off them.

I ſtoode on with the ſkiffe, hoping to finde a better harbour to leeward three leagues, but it prooued not ſo: wherefore I returned, and in my way aboord I met with a rocke in the ſea, where we landed, and killed good ſtore of fowle, and after I went aboord the Admirall, where I preſented him with fowle, and returned aboord to ſupper.

In this time our boates had beene aland, and found water, ballaſte, and two decayed houſes, as they told me, and our men aboord hooked freſh-fiſh. This night wee rode quietly.

The ſecond, being Sunday, our maſters moared our ſhips further into the bay. We brought the South point Southeaſt off vs, and the North land Northeaſt: and ſo rid.

2 day.

After dinner captaine Parker, with my boat, and company, went a land, and there placed pipes, and made three wels. In the meane time, I accompanied with M. Hawkins, M. Maddox, M. Cotton, and diuers of mine owne people, landed farther within the bay, and found two riuers of freſh water, and a good fiſhing place. Preſently I ſent aboord for my net, with which at one draught we drew 600 great mullets, and 5 great baſſes; the like draught was neuer ſeene with ſo ſmall a net: with which we went aboord, giuing to the admirall 240, to the Francis 80, and the reſt our company ſpent, and gaue almighty God thanks for his great goodneſſe.

Wels made by our men.

An exceeding great draught of fiſh.

All this while was captaine Parker and others gone into the land, and fired the woods; which burned extremely.

The woods ſe on fire by ou men.

The third day in the morning our carpenter calked without boord, and the maſter and others tooke vp all the merchandize in the ſteerne ſheets to the keele, and there put downe a boats loding of ſtone: and ſeeing the merchandize well conditioned, ſtowed the ſame againe. In the meane time, my ſelfe, and others in our boats, ſcraped off the wormes, and waſhed the rudder, and part of one ſide of our ſhip.

After dinner, the maſter, pilot, and I, went aſhore, and obſerued the Sunne at noone, which being paſt, with our net we drew plenty of diuers ſorts of fiſhes, and went from that bay to the watering place: from thence, aboord the generall, which had taken phyſicke, and gaue them and the Francis fiſh for their companies, and ſo went aboord, where our company had romaged afore-maſt; ſo that this afternoone we tooke in two boats more lading of ſtones afore maſt.

The ſixt day in the morning, before ſixe of the clocke, we ſaw a ſaile which went towards the Southwards, the admirall not hauing knowledge thereof. I went aboord, and certified him; who appointed me to goe and bring her in, and to take captaine Parker and ſome of the gallions men into the Francis, and the admirals ſkiffe with vs: ſo we gaue her chaſe, and tooke her ſixe leagues to the leewards of the place we rode in. Then not being able to fetch the rode againe, we ankered in the ſea. I intending to come away in the pinneſſe, and leaue the Francis, and the prize together, being ready to depart, the winde blew at South a ſtout gale, and raine; ſo that about ſixe of the clocke, we ankered in the rode, where our ſhips rid.

A ſaile ſeene and taken.

After we had taken them, and that captaine Parker and I were aboord, we had much talke with them before they came to the ſhips; and being ankered there, the chiefe men were caried aboord the general, which was a gentleman, named Don Franciſco de Torre Vedra, nephew to the gouernour of the riuer of Plate, named Don Iohn de Torre Vedra.

We found and Engliſhman, named Richard Carter borne in Limehouſe, who had bene out of England foure and twenty yeres, and hath bene nere twelue yeres dwelling in the riuer of Plate, at a towne named Aſcenſion, three hundred leagues vp in the riuer, whither they were now determined to go & inhabit, hauing two women, and two yong children, ſeuen friers, the reſt boyes, and ſailers, to the number of one and twenty perſons.

Richard Carte an Engliſhma taken in the prize.

The number of 21 in the prize.

The olde frier was had in great reuerence among the reſt: inſomuch that they called him the Holy father. He was abiding in no place; but as viſitour he went viſiting from monaſtery to monaſtery.

The ſubſtance of all the ſpeeches was, that the Spaniſh fleet was before the ſtreights of Magellan, as they thought; for they were departed ſixe weeks paſt from the riuer of Ienero, where they had beene ſeuen moneths to refreſh and Winter, and that theſe were not of that company, but came out of Spaine the 26 of May 1582 in a barke of foureſcore tun, and foureſcore perſons, of purpoſe for the riuer of Plate. The friers being eighteene in number, could not agree, and their barke was a ground at Spirito ſanto, like to be loſt: therefore the old frier bought this ſmall barke of 46 tun, at a port named Spirito ſanto, in Braſill; and ſo diuided themſelues: and comming from thence, loſt company at ſea: but they thought they were before at the riuer of Plate. After his ſpeeches, I went and appointed (by the generals order) men to remaine aboord the prize with captaine Parker, and brought one of the Portugals ſailes away with me, and came aboord, where I found that our men had filled water all day.

The 7 day in the morning the generall ſent for me; where he ſhewed me and M. Maddox certeine articles which the friers and mariners Spaniards were examined of; which tended altogether to the knowledge of the Spaniſh fleets intent, and of the meanes whereby we might be diſcouered by the way of the riuer of Plate by land to Peru. In this time came the reſt: after whoſe comming it was debated, whether it were beſt to take the boat & people with vs or not. Which was not determined; but referred till further examination.

Then was it determined to paſſe by the ſtreights, not withſtanding the Spaniards were there, but not to ſet vp forge, nor to build pinneſſe, but water, and ſo thorow.

The Spaniſh barke diſmiſſed.

The eight day afore noone M. Walker and I went aboord the admirall to dinner, where was determined to diſcharge the Spaniſh barke, named Our lady of pity, and all the men, except Richard Carter the Engliſh man, and Iohn Pinto a Portugall, which dwelled at the riuer of Plate. After dinner, the generall appointed mee and captaine Hawkins to ſee them all ſet aboord their ſhip, and to receiue from them certeine neceſſaries, which willingly they imparted with vs, and to leaue them ſatisfied. Which done, I returned aboord.

The 9 day, being Sunday, in the morning, I ſent M. Shaw and M. Geffries aboord the admirall, to peruſe the Spaniards letters; wherein they found the eſtate of the fleet which was in the ſtreights of Magellan, as by the note thereof appeareth.

Spaniſh preſents.

About ten of the clocke the generall, M. Maddox, captaine Hawkins, and captaine Parker, came aboord of me. The generall began to reprooue my quarter maſter for grudging of victuall for the Francis. Which was anſwered: and he well ſatiſfied. Then ſent I for the olde frier and Don Franciſco; who all dined with me: and after dinner, the Spaniards hauing receiued the canoa, which was ſuncke, aland, and ſtones to ballaſt them, which my boat caried them, and all other things to their liking and content, they departed from me. The generall alſo departed, and his company, who being gone, I diuided the ſugar and ginger among my people, which the Spaniards gaue vs: and after ſpent the day in ordinary buſineſſe.

The 10 day in the morning, our ſkiffe went a fiſhing, whereof we eat as much to ſupper as ſerued the company: the reſt we ſalted for ſtore, and to proue if they would take ſalt or not.

Things found in the iſland.

The 11 day, betimes in the morning, our ſkiffe went againe to fiſh, and tooke great plentie. About ſeuen of the clocke I went aland, taking with me the maſter, and others of our beſt men, to the number of 22 perſons, & trauelled to the place where our people before had found many great iars of earth, and decayed habitations of the Indians, and trees, being dead and withered, of ſweet wood. From that place we ſaw ouer the tops of a narrow wood, a faire plaine, which at the requeſt of the maſter and the reſt, I went with them to ſee. We paſſed thorow a thicke and perillous wood, before we came to the ſuppoſed plaine: and when we came to it, we found the loweſt part thereof higher then any of our heads, and ſo moſſy vnder foot, that we ſlipped to the knees many ſteps, which ſo wearied vs, that for my part, I was very ſicke, and ſo haſted aboord, leauing the maſter with 15 men, which cut a tree of ſweet wood, and brought many pieces thereof aboord.

About 3 afternoone, M. Walker and many of our men being aſhore, the winde came faire, and we layed out a warpe to the Northeaſt, and began to winde ahead. After we layed out another warpe with a bend, and wound to the plat, and ſo rid by it with one anker all night.

They leaue the harbour in 27 degrees and 30 min.

The 12 day about fiue a clocke in the morning, we ſet ſaile, and as we ran out betwixt the ledge of rocks and the maine, in eight fadom water, as we were catting our anker, the cattrope, ſtopper, and all brake; ſo that we were glad to let ſlip all the cable, and caſt off our boat and ſkiffe to wey the ſame. After we had ſtood out a good way, the admirall was vnder ſaile: then caſt we about and went roome with the admirall which weaued vs, who ſent in his pinneſſe and the Francis to helpe out our boats; ſo by the helpe of the admirals pinneſſe, with her ſaile, we had our boat the ſooner, and about 12 a clocke at noone had taken in the anker, cable, our long boat, ſkiffe, & all, and put out all our ſailes bearing after the admirall, which went hence South by eaſt. About ſixe a clocke at night, being thicke weather, we loſt ſight of the land, being foure leagues off or thereabout. All night it was but little winde: yet went we our courſe South by weſt.

The 13 day about ſeuen afore noon, the wind blew at Southſoutheaſt, & was very foggy; with which gale we ſtood in larboord tacked Weſt, till ten a clocke the ſame forenoone. Then had we ſight of the land ahead, all along (for it waxed cleere weather) it ſheweth a farre off like white cliffes, but is all ſandy hilles, and bayes along the ſea ſide. At one a clocke after noone we were in 16 fadome water, and within halfe a league of the ſhore, where we ſaw ſeuerall fires made by the Indians to giue warning to the other people within the land, as we ſuppoſed. Then we caſt about, and ſtood off Southeaſt by eaſt till midnight, that the winde came large: then went we our courſe South by weſt till next morning.

The 14 day we went our courſe South by weſt, hauing ſight of the land at ſixe a clocke in the morning about ſeuen leagues off: and ſo went till ſixe at night, that wee ſaw land againe ſeuen leagues off Weſt, and the winde ſhifted to the South. Then we caſt about, and ſtood off Eaſtſoutheaſt at ſeuen at night for a while: then came vp the winde at Northweſt, and blew agood.

The 15 day in the morning, the admirall was ahead, as farre as we could almoſt ſee her, by whoſe default I know not; and being little winde, we could not get to her till foure of the clocke after noone : then we hayled her, and ſtood in betweene the Southſouthweſt and the Southweſt till ſixe at night, that the winde was variable, and foule weather. Then we caſt about, and ſounded in 23 fadome ſoft oaze, and ſtood off a while Northeaſt; and preſently caſt about againe, and went South by Eaſt larboord tacked, and Southſoutheaſt among all night : finding at foure in the morning 15 fadome ſand.

The 20 day, about ten a clocke afore noone, we went aboord the admirall; viz. M. Walker, the maſter, the pilot, the two merchants, and my ſelfe, being directed ſo to doe by the Generall. Upon our comming the generall was going to dinner, where wee alſo dined with him. Hauing dined, the generall called vs his aſſiſtants into his cabbin, and there deliuered to vs in writing two demands, to be by vs conſidered vpon, and he to haue our opinions therein.

The effects of the demands were theſe.

1 Whether it was beſt for vs to aduenture our ſelues to paſſe the ſtreights of Magellan or not; conſidering the force of the enemy, which we knew to be there before vs : and alſo that our determination was there to ſet vp our pinneſſe, make yron hoops, carene our ſhips, and do all our neceſſary buſineſſes for the full accompliſhment of our voyage.

2 If that courſe were not thought beſt, which way were meeteſt for vs to take.

To the firſt we were of opinion, that it were good to heare the opinions of captaine Hawkins, captaine Drake, and the two pilots, which had paſſed the ſtreights, and knew the harbours, and likeſt places to be fortified, and inhabited or not, who were called, & the three maſters with them. Their opinions were as diuers as their names; & as much differed, as before this time they were wont vſually to doe : onely they all agreed in this one point, that it was impoſſible for vs to paſſe the ſtreights without ſeeing, and incountring with the ſhips, although the fortification of the land did not annoy vs : which being long and thorowly debated, and their opinions with the three maſters demanded, which accorded not ſcant any one with other, they were diſmiſſed.

Then the generall receiued the opinions of vs his aſſiſtants, beginning with the yoongeſt in authority firſt : which when he had heard them all ouer, and being ſet downe in writing vnder our hands, he tooke deliberation till after ſupper to giue his determination.

When we had all ſupped, then he ſent for vs downe into his cabbin, and deliuered in writing his determination, (which was) to victuall, and furniſh our ſelues on this coaſt, before he proceeded any further; and named two places, The riuer of Plate, or S. Vincent, to be choſen.

For the better deciphering of the riuer of Plate, & the commodities thereof, was called before vs, Richard Carter, which doth dwell there; who could not aſſure vs of any wine, except we could ſtay foure moneths for it : but other victuals plenty. The riuer is ſhoale and dangerous, the road ſeuen leagues from any towne, or place of commodity : which conſidered, with the trechery that might from thence be vſed, into the ſtreights by ſea, and into Peru by land, we all concluded to go to S. Vincent, which place is inhabited with Portugals, and where in honeſt ſort we might conueniently haue all our buſineſſe done.

Richard Carter the Engliſh man taken in the prize, caried along with them.

With this reſolution we tooke our leaues about eight a clocke at night, & being come aboord, preſently bare vp, and went roome, hauing all the day before beat vp the winde larboord-tacked Eaſtſoutheaſt till at night : after it was a little winde all night, we went North next hand.

They returne in the latitude of 33.

The 21 day, after ſeruice, I declared vnto my company the intent of our returne to the port of S. Vincent, wherewith they were well ſatiſfied, being before doubtfull that we ſhould not proceed, but returne without performance of our voyage. It continued calme all day till ſix at night, then we went Northweſt by weſt till eight at night, and then we caſt about, and ſtood off Eaſtſoutheaſt, and Eaſt by ſouth all night with a good gale.

The 22 day in the morning we miſſed the Francis, which by all preſumption went roome in the beginning of the night.

Iohn Drake in yͤ Francis went to the riuer of Plate, wherein his ſhip was caſt away, but the men gat to land, and liued 15 moneths among the Sauages.

The 25 day, being Chriſtmaſſe day, it was little winde in the forenoone till ten a clocke; then it blew a freſh gale, with which wee went our courſe Northnortheaſt. In the afternoone it was leſſe wind : yet went we our courſe North by eaſt, and Northnortheaſt, and North, and North by weſt, till midnight. Then being in ſhoaled water, wee caſt about, and lay Southſoutheaſt, and Southeaſt by ſouth, an houre; and ſeeing our admirall came not after vs, we caſt about backe againe, and preſently met him : ſo we went both together next hand Southſoutheaſt all the reſt of the night. This afternoone we ſaw the ſkim of fiſhes ſo thicke in the ſea, that it ſeemed a water troubled with trampling of horſes; which was thicke, and ſlimy : for we had taken vp ſome of it.

Infinite number of fiſh.

The 17 day of Ianuary, about ſeuen a clocke, the maſter, M. Blaccoller, and I went in our ſkiffe, and rowed, and ſounded round about an ile, and found 16 fadoms within a ſtones caſt hard aboord the ſhore, and faire ground : after we landed, and found nothing but woods and buſhes, and

A ſmall iſland which our mē called Faulcon iſle.

and ſtrange wormes: we ſaw a faulcon, and one other ſmall bird, and therefore named it Faulcon ile: it is a mile about, with a rocke on the Eaſt ſide, which lieth cloſe to it, and it is in ſight without danger. After we came aboord, and dined; at two a clocke we ſet ſaile with winde Southeaſt, and ran in Northeaſt a while, till the winde ſcanted: then we went in Northnortheaſt, till we were in ſeuen fadome and a halfe of water, within a league of ſhore: then we caſt about, and ſtood off Southſoutheaſt all night, till ſixe a clocke the next morning.

The 18 day about three a clocke, afore day, we ſaw our admirall againe, and kept her compapany till day.

Citron iſle.

The 19 day, being within a league of the Citron ile, about eight a clocke afore noone, we went aboord the general, viz. M. Walker, the maſter, the pilot, and my ſelfe, reioycing of our good meeting, who tolde me of their euill road, where they loſt an anker, a cable, and a haulſer, and how the day before, their pinneſſe was aſhore on the ſame iland, and found fowle, and water there, whither now they had ſent their boat and pinneſſe for more water, where I know they had ſmall ſtore.

I alſo taking captaine Parker, the maſter, and M. Wilks with me, went aſhore, and trauelled to the top of the ile, which is wooded, and high graſſe, but euill water, and little on it, but yoong fowle plenty, and dangerous comming to them. By this time (I hauing ſet the iſles, and headlands about in ſight with a compaſſe) came a ſmall gale at Southſoutheaſt; then our admirall ſhot off a piece for the boats, and hence I went, and dined aboord with him, and came after aboord, and went in Northnortheaſt and Northeaſt till morning: at which time wee were within a league of the iſle, entring before S. Vincent, but knew not how much water was vpon the barre to go out.

Their arriuall at S. Vincent.

Three canoas of Portugals & Indians.

The 20 day in the morning, being calme, the generals pinneſſe came in to the ſhore, with intent to ſound the entrance, but ſeeing three canoas, with ech at the leaſt twenty men, whereof the greater part were naked Indians, which rowed, the reſt Portugals, they returned aboord again. The canoas came with a flag of truce within, calling of our ſhip, and we ſhewed them the like, aſking what we were, and of what nation: at length one Portugall went aboord the admirall, by whom the generall ſent a letter to the gouernour, crauing a pilot to bring in our ſhip of courteſie, and to haue traffique. About noone, hauing the winde at South, we bare in Northweſt, and ſo to the Northeaſt, as the chanell trended: but comming into ſeuen fadome water, we ankered, vntill our boats had ſounded the barre. During which time, I went aboord the admirall, to conferre with him about our proceedings.

After I had ſtayed a while aboord the admirall, the generall came aboord with me, where we publiſhed vnto all my company very good rules for their behauiour and profit, to their great ſatiſfaction: after he went downe into my cabbin, where with all his aſſiſtants he conferred of diuers particulars of our voyage: by which time the boat being returned from ſounding, we departed, and ſet ſaile, following our ſkiffes, and with our ſhips got within the barre into ſeuen fadome: then being becalmed, we ankered againe before a ſandy bay, wherein ſtands a caſtle and houſes: we rid within musket ſhot of it: and ankered about foure a clocke afternoone.

A caſtle.

Then went I forwards with my ſkiffe vnto a further point, ſounding along. Before my returne, the generall had ſent for me to ſupper; and thither I went: but being ready to ſit downe, there came out to vs a canoa, wherein were ten Indians and two Chriſtians; the one an ancient Genouois, the other a Portugall; who came aboord, and there receiued a ſmall banket, declaring their comming was to vnderſtand our intents, and what we ſought: who being ſatiſfied, departed with a farewell of three great pieces from ech ſhip.

A canoa with ten Indians and two Chriſtians, whereof one was an old Genouois.

Iohn Whithall an Engliſhmā which dwelleth at Santos, hath married this Ioſeph Dories daughter.

The 21 day about three a clocke afternoone, came a canoa, with the old Genouois named Ioſeph Dory, a Fleming named Paul Badeues, and Steuen Repoſe a Portugall, and brought a letter from the gouernor, and withall, anſwere of feare and doubts of vs, &c. After many ſpeeches and requeſts, a banket was made them, and the generall in his pinneſſe with his muſicke, & trumpets; and I in my ſkiffe with trumpets, drum and fife, and tabor and pipe, accompanied them a mile vp the riuer: at going off, we ſaluted them with a volley of three great pieces out of ech ſhip: and after vs came captaine Parker with the admirals long boat, and certeine ſhot in the ſame, to attend on the generall.

Santos.

The 22 day betimes in the morning, I went aboord the admirall to conferre about the ſending of ſome token and preſent to the gouernor, which was by all the aſſiſtants determined to ſend him three yards of fine ſkarlet, & three yards of fine murry-cloth; and to Ioſeph Dory the old Genouois, Steuen Repoſe the Portugall, and to Paul Badeues the Fleming, ech of them three yards of fine blacke cloth, which our merchants went vp to Santos withall in the admirals ſkiffe, about nine a clocke afore noone.

Alſo this forenoone, we being minded to goe vp higher with our ſhips into harbour, I adviſed them to goe view the place, and ſound the road before we went vp; which we did: where were found the place both vncouuenient, and the road worſe: and ſo we returned, and left the firſt determination. This day we tooke downe our main-tops, and top-maſt, and all the ſhrowds.

About two a clocke after noone our merchants returned with their preſents, not hauing beene at the towne, becauſe Steuen Repoſe by the way met them on the riuer, and aduiſed them to ſtay vntill there had beene word ſent to the gouernour, who was vnwilling to ſpeake with them yet, but ſhortly would ſend their anſwere.

The reſt of this forenoone we ſpent in communication about the appointing of a purſer for the Edward. Alſo we ſigned an aſſent for comming to this place: about which thing grew foule ſpeeches betweene the generall and his lieutenant, after the olde cuſtome.

The Indians preſents.

Then went wee to ſupper: and being at ſupper, certaine Indians came aboord, and brought the generall a ſtrange crow, and potatos, and ſugar canes, to whom he gaue looking glaſſes, great pinns, and biſcuit: and ſo we departed, being late. Alſo this afternoone I ran ouer towards S. Vincent, and ſounded the bay a league ouer, and found the chanell and flats, and returned aboord againe within two houres, hauing a good gale of winde.

The chanell of S. Vincent ſounded.

The 23 day our ſkiffe went aſhore to fiſh, and tooke prety ſtore: we ſent our main-top aſhore to be mended, and many of our men to waſh their clothes; alſo I went my ſelfe with them aland, to take order that no man ſhould any wayes offend the Indians. In the meane time the generall with all the reſt of the chiefeſt gentlemen, came aſhore, and viewed the place, and appointed out the fitteſt roome to ſet vp our ſmithes forge, and ouens to bake our biſcuit, and place for our coopers to trim our water caſke.

Portable ouens to bake in.

The 24 day at foure of the clocke, before day, we heard one call for a boat on the North ſhore, to whom I ſent my ſkiffe, who brought aboord one named Iohn Whithall, an Engliſh man, which is maried here in this place, and with him two of his Indians; whom I enterteined vntill I ſent word to the generall to prepare himſelfe to receiue him: in which time he and I talked of many ſeuerall particulars.

Iohn Whithall.

About ſixe a clocke I conueyed him aboord the admirall: there he diſcouered vnto vs what had bene done at the towne, as fortification, and ſending their wiues away, &c. aduiſing vs to receiue no more delayes, but to come vp preſently before the towne with our ſhips.

Good counſell by the foreſayd Engliſhman giuen to our men.

About ten a clocke came a canoa, and brought downe Ioſeph Dory and Steuen Repoſe, who tolde vs that on Saturday the gouernour would meet our generall, and talke with him, praying vs in the meane time to vſe our ordinary buſineſſe of cooperage, carpenters worke, filling water, fiſhing, and waſhing, &c. but not to ſet vp forge, nor ouen, vntill ſpeech had with the gouernour. After this anſwere, we dined together aboord the gallion: after dinner we left the meſſengers ſitting in the cabbin, and went vpon the poope; where the generall demanded the aduice of his aſſiſtants, whether it were not beſt to ſtay theſe men while we had them or not, or whether it were beſt to go vp with our ſhips to the towne or no.

Whereunto ech man pauſed to make anſwere: wherefore I deliuered my opinion; which was, that we were forbidden to vſe violence to any nation for trade.

Secondly, I conſidered that diuers of our nation, worſhipfull merchants, and now aduenturers in this voyage, had ſet out the Minion hither, and begun a trade, which with our forcible dealing might be ſpoiled, and our nation brought in hatred.

The Minion of London ſometime in Braſill for traffique.

Laſtly, that with force we were not like to atteine ſo much commodity, as we were in poſſibility to haue with courteſie.

Hereupon all was concluded, and they ſuffered to paſſe away: to whom the generall gaue the three cloake-clothes, to Ioſeph Dory, to Paul Baudeueſe, and to Steuen Repoſe, to ech of them one, which were before cut out for them: and ſo friendly we and they departed about two a clocke after noone.

About foure of the clocke this afternoone we ſaw three ſaile of ſhips come bearing in about the point, which aſſoone as they ſaw vs, ankered vpon the barre, and put themſelues in readineſſe, ſending from one ſhip to another with their boats, and blowing off their ordinance, meaning to take vs: and we before night, getting our men and other neceſſaries from the ſhore, which were buſie on land, armed our ſhips to defend our ſelues. Then went I aboord the admirall to know what he meant to do: who determined to ſet his watch in warlike ſort; and ſo he did: for after the trumpets and drum had ſounded, he ſhot off a great piece, as they before had done; and preſently the viceadmirall ſhot at me, whom I anſwered with another, and ſo ceaſed. We then ſet vp our main-top, and top-maſt, rigged before eleuen of the clocke the ſame night. In the meane while they let ſlip their ankers and cables, and came driuing and towing with their boats in vpon vs, meaning meaning to haue boorded vs : and being neere our admirall, he halled them ; who refuſed to tell of whence they were, thinking by ſpending of time to get aboord of him : to whom I called ſtill to beware, and to ſhoot at them in time. At length he let flie at them, yet was glad to let an anker and cable ſlip to auoid them : then came they all driuing downe thwart my haulſe, ſo that I was faine to let ſlip an anker and cable to ſhun the gallion. All this while the ordinance and ſmall ſhot plied of all parts, and I was faine to ſend the gallion my ſkiffe with a haulſer to ride by, for ſhee was looſe, and with the flood draue vp within me. Then was the viceadmirall on my broad ſide, who was well payed before, yet I left not galling of him, til I thought our powder ſpent in vaine to ſhoot at him, he was ſo torne, and broken downe by vs. About foure of the clocke it rained ſo faſt, that we could ſcant diſcerne one the other, the Moone being gone downe, yet rid the admirall, and the rereadmirall, but a little ahead of vs : during which time, we pauſed, and made ready all our munition.

The fight betwixt the Engliſh & Spaniſh ſhips at S. Vincent.

The Spaniſh viceadmirall ſunke by the Engliſh.

The 25 day, by day-light, we ſaw the viceadmirall ſunke hard by vs, ſo that his yards which were hoiſed acroſſe, and his tops, and that ouer head, was aboue water : moſt of their men were gotten away in their boats, ſauing about fourtie perſons which hung in the ſhrowds, and toppes, whom I aduiſed our generall to ſend for away, and had made ready, and well manned our pinneſſes; but being vpon the way going, the generall called them backe, and would not ſuffer them to goe. There were three of their boats alſo going for them from their ſhips ; at whom I ſhot, and made them to retire, and leaue them vpon the ſhrowds. At length our generall ſent for two of the men away : which his pinneſſe brought to him; the one was heaued ouer boord, becauſe he was ſore hurt, not like to liue; and he was a Marſillian ; the other was a Greeke, borne in Zante, boatſwaine of the viceadmirall : the reſt of the men, ſome ſwam away vpon rafts, ſome were drowned, and ſome remained ſtill hanging on her. By this time it was faire day-light, and I called to our generall to wey, and driue downe to them, who required mee to goe firſt and anker on their quarter, and he would follow, and anker on their bowes. I weyed, and went downe, and ankered by them; yet not ſo nere as I meant, for the ebbe put me off to the Northwards. There rid I alone, ſpending ſhot at them, and they both at me, foure houres, before our admirals anker would come vp : during which time, I had ſome ſpoile done; but when our admirall came, ſhe had her part, and eaſed me very well.

This Greeke tolde the Generall yͭ there were 600 and odde in the 3 Spaniſh ſhips.

At length our admirall began to warpe away, and being come without me, ſet ſaile, and began to ſtand out into the ſea : I went aboord of him to know his pleaſure. Who determined to get out of ſhot; but could not, becauſe the winde ſcanted on them. The Edward before ſhe could get vp her ankers, endured many more ſhot, after the gallion was further off a good way then ſhe, and ſometime the gallion had two or three. Thus we ended about two of the clocke after noone : the reſt of this day and part of the night, we ſpent in mending, fitting, and putting our ordinance and furniture in order for the next morning, thinking they would haue bene with vs.

The 26 day in the morning we could not ſee them, becauſe they were gone vp the riuer : wee manned our boats and pinneſſes, and weyed two ankers and one cable, that they let ſlip the night before : as our men were weying the third anker, the bwoy-rope brake, and ſo we loſt that anker. Our admirall had an anker of twelue hundred, and a good cable of eleuen inches, and we had an anker about ſixe hundred, with a piece of a baſſe cable, and bwoy-rope nothing worth.

After dinner I went aboord the admirall, to confer with him, who determined to go off to ſea, and thither I caried Sennor Pinto to interpret the Indian language, with an Indian named Peter, which fled from the bay where we rid in a canoa, and brought with him a Spaniards caliuer, flaſke, and touchboxe, to goe with vs, whom our admirals boat met, and brought him aboord to the admirall. Hee tolde vs that the Spaniards had brought many dead men on land, and buried them, and alſo landed many hurt men in their bay, and that there were certeine Spaniards gone ouer thorow the woods to looke after vs. Then the Generall, captaine Hawkins, and maſter Maddox came aboord of mee to viewe my hurt men, and harmes of my ſhippe, both men, ſhippe, and tackle; and I alſo went aboord him to peruſe his hurts, who had but one man, a ſailer, ſlaine.

The 28 day in the morning died Lancelot Aſhe, of a hurt; who departed very godly. This day we ſtood to the Northwards : and in getting in our ankers and ſkiffe, we were put 3 leagues to leeward of Fiddle ile, but the gallion rid ſtill.

Here the gallion and the Edward Bonauenture were ſeuered, and neuer met afterward

The 29 day in the morning, ſeeing my ſelfe put to ſea from the admirall, I aſſembled maſter Walker, maſter Shawe, maſter Ieffries, the maſter, the maſters mate, and the pilot, to whom I ſhewed that I was deſirous to goe backe to ſeeke our admirall, whereunto the maſter, pilot, and maſters mate anſwered directly, that wee could not fetch the ile where wee left them, and to meete them in going backe it was very vnlikely and to vs dangerous many wayes, aſwell for falling into the laps of the Spaniards, as to be put on a lee ſhoare: whereupon all the reſt aduiſed me to ſtand off into the ſea, whereunto I aſſented, remembring withal, that time ſpent conſumed victuall, and howe long wee had beaten vp and downe in the ſame bay before, to get in with calmes and contrary windes.

Thus wee concluded that M. Walker ſhould ſet downe each mans opinion, and wee ſet to our handes, and from henceforth hee to keepe a Regiſter of all our proceeding, as M. Maddox did aboord the Admirall.

The firſt day of February, wee went Eaſt by ſouth, and Eaſt ſoutheaſt with a ſtoute gale: and went the ſame courſe the 3. 4. and 5. dayes following.

The 5. day about 10. a clocke in the forenoone M. Walker died, who had bene weake and ſicke of the bloodie flixe 6. dayes, wee tooke a view of his things, and priſed them, and heaued him ouer boord, and ſhot a peece for his knell.

M. Walker the preacher dieth.

The 14. day I called into my cabbin the two marchants, the Maſter and the Pilot, ſhewing them our wants of victuals and other neceſſaries: whereupon they and I concluded, that it was beſt for vs to returne to our countrey, with as litle loſſe of time and expenſe of victuals as might be, being without hope of reliefe vpon this coaſt, and yet to keepe the coaſt of Braſil to friend for feare of extremitie.

The 17. day in the morning hauing much raine, wee ſaued aboue two tunne of water, of which we were very glad.

The 18. day I obſerued the variation of the compaſſe, which varied one point, and a halfe to the Southwards, by our ordinary compaſſe of London.

Variation of the Compaſſe.

The ſecond day of March the Maſter, Pilot, & I agreed to fetch the yle of Fernando Loronha.

From the 3. day to the 10. day we went Weſt, and by South, and ran in for the ſhoare.

The 10. day we ſaw the land, which was ſandie hilles with woods on it.

The 11. day ſeeking to goe a ſhoare, wee ſawe foure men, which weaued to vs with a white ſhirt, and we weaued to them with a flagge of truce: At length one of them ſwamme to our boats ſide, and there lay in the Sea talking with vs, almoſt an houre: in the ende, being partly perſwaded by Pinto, who talked with them in the Indian-tongue, and partly entiſed with ſuch trifles as I ſhewed him, hee came into our Skiffe, and called to his companions on ſhoare, who came aboord ſwimming: wee deliuered them certaine barricos to fetch vs them full of freſh water: after, there came downe 40. Indians, boyes, women, and men, and with them a French boy, but the former Indians deceiued vs of our barricos. Whereupon Pinto and Ruſſell ſwamme a ſhoare to ſeeke water, but found none.

The ſame day wee ſailed to a place where boats might land, & I went a land in my Skiffe, and found the Indians, and Frenchman which were with mee the day before, and they brought our three barricos full of freſh water: for which I rewarded them with ſome trifles. In the meane time our boat went aſhoare, and our men with ſome of the Indians brought vs twentie barricos more of freſh water, and I my ſelfe went to ſhoare and brought 23. hennes of India.

The 12. day betimes in the morning, wee manned our boat and Skiffe, and tooke ſome trifling things to ſhoare, and barricos: at our firſt arriuall the rude Indians flocked together, wading to the Skiffe wherein I was, begging, and wondering about vs: Firſt I cauſed them to fetch 27. barricos of water, whom I rewarded with ſmall bells, &c. In the meane time they brought hens to me, wading to the Skiffe, for I kept my ſelfe alwayes afloat, and for their hens I gaue them a knife, and a ſmal looking glaſſe. All this while M. Blackcoller our Pilot, Thomas Ruſſel, Marke Thawghts were ſtill on ſhoare, and would not tarry aboord: In the ende, fearing ſome treacherie, becauſe all the Indians were ſlipped on ſhoare from mee, I called our men away, and ſuddenly they layed handes on our men aſhoare, and with their bowes ſhot thicke at vs in the boats, and waded into the water to vs, laying hands on our Skiffe, yet God of his mercie deliuered vs from their hands, with the loſſe of fiue men ſlaine, and others hurt.

Treaſon of the Indians.

Thus we got aboord with 40. hens, ducks, turkies, and parrats, and three hogſheads of water: and I caried a Frenchman aboord with mee, named Iaques Humfrey, who was by chance in the boat with me when this fray began.

Iaques Humfrey a Frenchman ſaued.

The 17. day we tooke three ſharks in the morning.

From that day to the firſt of April, wee went our courſe, ſometime with raine, and ſometime with variable windes, & ſo til the 4. of April: which day we ſaw 4. birds with long tailes, which houered about the ſhip, and in the afternoone we ſaw and tooke vp many weedes which draue thicke in the ſea, which we iudged to be driuen with the Eaſt windes from the yles of Cape verde.

From this day till the 11. day we went our courſe ſometime Northeaſt, ſometime Northweſt according to the winds: vpon this 11. day George Coxe one of our Carpenters, hauing the night before broken vp the hold, and ſtolne wine, and drunken himſelfe drunke, being taken in the roome, lept ouerbord out of the beake head, and ſo drowned himſelfe.

A deſperate act.

The 12. day wee ſpied our foremaſt to be periſhed in the hownes, and durſt not beare our foretop ſaile vpon it, but went hence with our ſailes, next hand, North all day and night.

From hence to the 20. day we went Northeaſt and by North. This day I obſerued the variation of the compaſſe: and I noted that the South point of the compaſſe caried more then halfe a point to the Weſtwards.

Variation of the Compaſſe.

The 25. day of May wee went betweene the Eaſt northeaſt, and the Northeaſt with a ſmall gale till fiue a clocke in the afternoone: then had we ſight of land, which roſe ragged to the Northwards like broken land, we being about fiue leagues off: that yle bare Northeaſt by North of vs, and the Northermoſt part bare North by Eaſt of vs, with a rocke a ſea bord: we then ſounded, and had fiftie and fiue fadome grey ſand, and maze great ſtore in it: ſo wee ſtood in Northeaſt till eight a clocke, and then beheld it againe being within foure leagues of it, bearing as before, but wee could not make it, for ſome thought it to bee the foreland of Fontenay, ſome iudged it the yle of Vſſant: then we ſounded againe in 55. fadome browne ſand, and little maze in it: at eight a clocke at night we went about, and ſtoode off South ſouthweſt one watch, then the wind ſhrinked to the Southweſt, that we could lye but South ſouthweſt ſixe glaſſes, ſo that at three a clocke wee caſt about, and lay Northweſt ſixe glaſſes, and North northweſt a watch being then eight a clocke the next day.

The 26. day wee lay as nigh as wee could betweene the North and the North northeaſt, and ſaw the ſame land againe, and made it to bee the foreland of Fontenay, and the ragges to bee the Seames, which bare now Eaſt Northeaſt of vs: and wee ſtoode on till tenne a clocke, then being within two leagues of the rockes and leſſe, wee caſt about and ſtoode off Southweſt, becauſe wee could not double the vttermoſt rockes: when we were about we draue to the Southwards very faſte, for the ebbe ſet vs Weſt ſouthweſt, and being ſpring tides, it horſed vs a pace to leewards, for the ſpace of one houre: then with the flood which was come, we draue againe to windewards: at twelue at noone it was calme till 6. afternoone, then wee ſtoode about larbord tacked, South ſouthweſt one watch, then at midnight wee caſt about and ſtoode ouer North till foure aforenoone.

The yle of Sylly.

The 27. day hauing brought the land Eaſt ſoutheaſt of vs, we made it to be Sylly being before deceiued, and went hence Eaſt by North to double Grimsbie, leauing The biſhop and his clearks to the Southweſtwards, which we before tooke to be The Seames.

At 7. a clocke in the afternoone we ſawe the lands end of England, which bare Eaſt by North off vs, and is 7. leagues off from Sylly.

The 29. day at ſixe a clocke beforenoone we had brought the Ramhead North of vs, and were within a league of it, and went in Northeaſt next hand, being thicke and foggie, and little winde: ſo that at eleuen a clocke we got in within the yland, and there by miſtaking of a ſounding, our ſhip came aground betweene the yle and the maine, and there ſate till 4. a clocke in the afternoone that it was halfe flood.

We came to Plimmouth.

The 30. day about 9. a clocke, with much adoe I furniſhed away P. Ieffries, M. Symberbe, and William Towreſon with letters, after dined at M. Blaccollers, and made many ſalutations with diuers gentlemen.

1583.

The 31. I wrought abord all day, and put our ſhip, and things in order: Afternoone I hauing pitie of ſome poore men of Milbrooke, which were robbed the night before by a pirate named Purſer, which rid in Cawſon bay, I conſented to goe out with the Edward in company of a ſmall ſhippe which they had furniſhed to bee their Maſter, ſo about fiue of the clocke in the afternoone, came a hundreth men of theirs abord of mee: About twelue a clocke wee ſet ſaile, and by three afore day wee were gotten to the windwards of him, then hee ſet ſaile, and went hence to the Eaſtwards, and outſailed vs, becauſe our conſort would not come neere him: after a ſmall chaſe which we gaue him to no effect, wee returned into our old road, and there moared the ſhip about nine of the clocke in the forenoone, and hence went all the Milbrooke men againe aſhore from mee. And thus I ended a troubleſome voyage.

The voyage ſet out by the right honourable the Earle of Cumberland, in the yere 1586. intended for The South ſea, but performed no farther then the latitude of 44 degrees to the South of the Equinoctial, Written by M. Iohn Sarracoll marchant in the ſame voyage.

The 26. day of Iune, in the yeere 1586. and in the 28. yeere of the Queenes maieſties raigne, wee departed from Grauesend in two ſhips; the Admirall called The red dragon, and the other The barke Clifford, the one of the burden of 260. tunnes, with 130. men, and the other of the burden of 130. tunnes, with 70. men: the Captaine of the Admirall was M. Robert Withrington, Of the vice-admirall M. Chriſtopher Liſter, both being furniſhed out at the coſts and charges of the right honorable the Erle of Cumberland, hauing for their maſters two brethren, the one Iohn Anthonie, and the other William Anthonie.

The 24. of Iuly wee came into the ſound of Plimmouth, and being there conſtrained by Weſterly winds, to ſtay till the 17. of Auguſt, wee then departed with another ſhip alſo for our Rear-admirall called the Roe, whereof M. Hawes was Captaine, and a fine pinneſſe alſo called the Dorothie, which was ſir Walter Raleghs. We foure being out in the ſea, met the 20. of Auguſt, with 16. ſailes of hulkes in the Sleeue, who named themſelues to bee men of Hamborough, laden and come from Lisbone. Our Admirall hailed their Admirall with courteous wordes, willing him to ſtrike his ſailes, and to come abord to him onely to know ſome newes of the countrey, but hee refuſed to do ſo, onely ſtroke his flag & tooke it in. The vice-admiral of the hulkes being a head, would neither ſtrike flagge nor ſaile, but paſſed on without budging, whereupon our Admirall lent him a piece of Ordinance, which they repayed double, ſo that we grew to ſome little quarel, whereupon one of the ſternemoſt hulkes, being as I ſuppoſe more afraide then hurt, ſtroke amaine, our Admirall being neere him, laid him abord, and entred with certaine of his men, how many I know not, for that we were giuing chaſe to the Windermoſt men, thinking our Admirall would haue come vp againe to vs, to haue made them all to haue ſtroke: but the weather growing to be very thicke and foggie, with ſmall raine, he came not vp but kept with another of the hulkes which Captaine Hawes had borded and kept all night, and tooke out of her ſome prouiſion that that they beſt liked. They learned of the men that were in the hulke, that there were 7. hulkes laden in Lisbone with Spaniards goods, and becauſe their lading was very rich, they were determined to go about Ireland, and ſo they let her goe againe like a gooſe with a broken wing.

The next day after being the 21. day, wee eſpied 5. ſailes more, which lay along to the Eaſtwards, but by reaſon of the night which then was neere at hand, wee could hardly come to them. Yet at laſt we hailed one of the biggeſt of them, & they tolde vs that they were al of Hamborough: but another ſaide ſhee was of Denmarke, ſo that indeede they knew neither what to ſay, nor what to do. Our Admirall being more deſirous to folow his courſe, then to linger by chaſing the hulks, called vs from purſuing them with his trumpet, and a piece of Ordinance, or els wee would haue ſeene what they had bene, and wherewith they had bene laden.

The 22. day becauſe of contrary winde wee put into Dartmouth all 4. of vs, and taried there ſeuen dayes.

The 29. we departed thence and put out to Sea, and began our voyage, thinking at the firſt to haue runne along the coaſt of Spaine, to ſee if wee could haue mette with ſome good prize to haue ſent home to my Lord: but our Captaine thought it not the beſt courſe at the laſt, but rather kept off in the ſea from the coaſt. And vpon Saturday the 17. of September wee fell with the coaſt of Barbarie, and the 18. halled in with the roade of Santa Cruz. The 21. day wee fell with one of the ylands of the Canaries, called Forteuentura. In running alongſt this yland, we eſpied vpon a hill by the water ſide, one wauing with a white flagge, whereupon wee manned both our boates, and ſent them towards the ſhoare, to vnderſtand what newes. They found them to bee two ragged knaues and one horſeman, and they tolde vs that Lanzarota was taken, and ſpoyled in Auguſt by the Turkes: when we ſaw they had nothing elſe to ſay, we left them, and proceeded on our courſe, and fell againe with the coaſt of Barbarie.

Lanzarota ſpoiled by the men of Algiers.

The 25. day of September about 10. of the clocke we fell with Rio del Oro, ſtanding iuſt vnder our Tropike: we anckered in the mouth of it in 8. fadom, the entrance of it is about 2. leagues ouer. And the next day our Captaine with the boate ſearched the riuer, and found it to be as broad 14. or 15. leagues vp, as at the entrie of it, but found no towne nor habitation, ſauing that there came downe two poore men, and one of them ſpake good Spaniſh, and told our Captaine, that certaine Frenchmen vſed to come thither, and laded ſome oxe hides, and goats hides, but other commoditie there was none. We departed thence the 27 day, & the laſt day of the moneth being calme we went abord our General, & there conſented to goe for Sierra Leona, to wood and water. From thence till the 10. of October wee were much becalmed with extreeme hot weather, much lightning, and great ſtore of raine. This 10. day we ſounded, finding a great current as we ſuppoſed by the ripling water, which after wee found to bee an ordinary tide, the flood ſetting to the Northweſt, and the ebb Southeaſt, and here we had but 18. fathome water, and no lande to bee ſeene: it was on the Southermoſt part of the ſhowles that lie in about 11. degrees, but halling South off againe, it preſently deeped vnto 50. fathome, and after halling Southeaſt and by Eaſt, and Eaſt ſoutheaſt, we ſounded, but had no ground in 120. fathome.

Sierra Leona.

The 21. of October wee fell with land vpon the coaſt of Guinea, in the height of 8. degrees, a very high land, but of no great length: it was the high land ouer Sierra Leona. Wee drew in to the land, and found neere the ſhoare more water then in the offing: at the Northren end of the high land we anckered about a mile, and ſomewhat more from the ſhoare in 11. fathome. To goe into the harbor of Sierra Leona we did borrow vpon the South ſide, hauing no ground in 10. fathome, halfe a mile from the ſhoare.

Vpon the Northſide of this harbour is very ſhoale water, but on the Southſide no feare, more then is to be ſeene.

A towne of the Negros.

The 23. day being Sunday wee came to an ancker in the bay of freſh water, and going aſhoare with our boate, wee ſpake with a Portugal, who tolde vs that not farre off there were Negros inhabiting, and that in giuing to the king a Botija of wine, and ſome linnen cloth, hee would ſuffer vs to water and wood at our pleaſure. But our Captaines thinking it not good to giue any thing for that which they might take freely, landed, and certaine of our men with them, whereupon the Portugall and the Negros ranne all away into the woods. Then wee returned againe into our boates, and preſently went and landed in another place, thinking to haue fetcht a walke, and ſo to come to our boats againe. But wandering through a little wood, we were ſuddenly and vnawares vpon a towne of the Negros, whereupon they ſtrooke vp their drumme, giuing withall a great ſhowt, and off went their arrowes as thicke as haile. Wee were in number about 30. caleeuers, and 20. with our weapons, which wee alſo let flie into the woods among them, and what hurt we did, we know not.

A ſtrange monſter.

Then wee returned to our boates, and tooke wood and water at our pleaſure, and reaſonable ſtore of fiſh, and amongſt the reſt we halled vp a great foule monſter, whoſe head and backe were ſo hard, that no ſword could enter it: but being thruſt in vnder the belly in diuers places, and much wounded, hee bowed a ſword in his mouth, as a man would do a girdle of leather about his hande, and likewiſe the yron of a boare ſpeare. He was in length about nine foote, and had nothing in his belly, but a certaine quantitie of ſmall ſtones, to the value of a pottell.

Another great and fine towne of the Negros.

A towne burnt.

The fourth of Nouember wee went on ſhore to a towne of the Negros, which ſtoode on the Southeaſt ſide of the harbour, about a Sacar ſhot from the roade, which we found to be but lately built: it was of about two hundreth houſes, and walled about with mightie great trees, and ſtakes ſo thicke, that a rat could hardly get in or out. But as it chanced, wee came directly vpon a port which was not ſhut vp, where we entred with ſuch fierceneſſe, that the people fled all out of the towne, which we found to bee finely built after their faſhion, and the ſtreetes of it ſo intricate, that it was difficult for vs to finde the way out, that we came in at. Wee found their houſes and ſtreets ſo finely and cleanly kept, that it was an admiration to vs all, for that neither in the houſes nor ſtreets was ſo much duſt to bee found, as would fill an egge ſhell. Wee found little in their houſes, except ſome matts, goards, and ſome earthen pots. Our men at their departure ſet the towne on fire, and it was burnt (for the moſt part of it) in a quarter of an houre, the houſes being couered with reed and ſtraw.

Rice in ſtacks.

After this wee ſearched the countrey about it, where wee found in diuers plaines good ſtore of rice in ſtacks, which our men did beate out, and brought a bord in the huſke, to the quantitie of 14. or 15. tunnes in both our ſhips.

Idoles.

The 17. day of Nouember wee departed from Sierra Leona, directing our courſe for the Straights of Magellan. In this harbour diuers of our men fell ſicke of a diſeaſe in the belly, which for the time was extreeme, but (God bee thanked) it was but of ſmall continuance. Wee founde alſo in diuers places of the woods, images ſet vpon pinnes, with diuers things before them, as eggs, meale, rice, round ſhot of ſtones, and diuers other things, ſuch as the barbarous people had to offer vp.

When we came neere to the Line, wee found it nothing ſo hot as it is at Sierra Leona, by reaſon of the great winde and raine.

About the 24.day of Nouember one or two of our men died, and others alſo were ſicke of a Calentura.

The ſecond day of Ianuary we had a little ſight of land, being about the height of 28.degrees to the Southward of the Line.

The 4.day wee fell with the ſhoare high and bold, being in 30.degrees, and a terſe, little more or leſſe. All of it to the Northward was a high land, but to the Southward it did preſently faile, and was a very low land, and all ſandie. About ſixe leagues from the ſhoare wee ſounded, and had about fifteene or ſixteene fathome water, and blacke ſandie oze. We thought to haue gone to the ſhoare, and to haue watered, but we could not diſcerne any good harbour, and therefore we caſt off to ſeaward againe.

They fall with an high land in 30.degres $\frac{1}{3}$.

The 12.day wee found our ſelues in 32.degrees and 27.minutes. From the day of the Natiuitie of Chriſt, till the 13.day of this moneth, although the Sunne was very neere vnto vs, yet we found no want of winds but variable as in England, & not ſo hot but that a mans ſhoulders might well diſgeſt a frize gowne, and his bellie the beſt Chriſtmas cheere in England, yet wee for our parts had no want, but ſuch as might content honeſt men.

The tenth day being about 8.leagues from the ſhoare, and a little ſhort of the Riuer of Plate, it was my good happe to eſpie a ſaile, which was a ſmall Portugal bound for the Riuer to a towne called Santa Fee: and from thence by horſe and carts, the marchants, and part of their goods were to bee tranſported into Peru. This ſhippe being about the burthen of 45. or 50.tunnes, wee tooke that day about three of the clocke, wherein there was for Maſter or Pilote an Engliſhman called Abraham Cocke borne in Lee. We examined him and the reſt concerning the ſtate of the Riuer, and they told vs that there were in the Riuer fiue townes, ſome of 70.houſholds, and ſome of more. The firſt towne was about 50.leagues vp the Riuer called Buenos Ayres, the reſt ſome 40.ſome 50.leagues one from another, ſo that the vppermoſt towne called Tucaman is 230.leagues from the entrance of the Riuer. In theſe townes is great ſtore of corne, cattell, wine, and ſundry fruits, but no money of gold or ſiluer: they make a certaine kinde of ſlight cloth, which they giue in trucke of ſugar, rice, Marmalade, and Sucket, which were the commodities that this ſhippe had.

A Portugal ſhip taken, wherein was for Pilot Abraham Cocke an Engliſhman, left there before by the Minion of London 1581.

Fiue townes vpon the riuer of Plate.

They had abord alſo 45.Negros, whereof euery one in Peru yeeldeth 400.duckets a piece, and beſides theſe, there were as paſſengers in her, two Portugal women and a childe.

The 11.day wee eſpied another ſaile, which was the conſort of this Portugall, and to him alſo we gaue chaſe, and tooke him the ſame day: Hee was of the burthen of the other, and had in him good ſtore of ſugar, Marmalade, and Succats, with diuers other things, which we noted downe our booke. In this ſhip alſo we found about 35.Negro women, and foure or fiue friers, of which one was an Iriſh man, of the age of three or foure and twentie yeeres, and two Portugal women alſo, which were borne in the riuer of Ienero. Both theſe ſhips were bought in Braſil, by a yong man which was Factor for the biſhop of Tucaman, and the friers were ſent for by that biſhop to poſſeſſe a new Monaſterie, which the biſhop was then a building. The bookes, beads, and pictures in her, coſt (as one of the Portugals confeſſed) aboue 1000.duckats.

Another Portugal ſhip taken.

An Iriſh frier taken.

The biſhop of Tucaman in the riuer of Plate.

Of theſe ſhips we learned, that M.Iohn Drake, who went in conſort with M. Fenton, had his Barke caſt away a little ſhort of the Riuer of Plate, where they were taken captiues by the Sauages, all ſauing them which were ſlaine in the taking: the Sauages kept them for a time, and vſed them very hardly, yet at the laſt Iohn Drake and Richard Faireweather, and two or three more of their company with them got a Canoa, and eſcaped, and came to the firſt towne of the Spaniards. Faireweather is maried in one of the townes, but Iohn Drake was carried to Tucaman by the Pilot of this ſhip, and was liuing, and in good health the laſt yeere. Concerning this voyage of the Portugals they tolde vs that it was the thirde voyage that was made into the Riuer of Plate theſe 30.yeeres.

The newes of M.Iohn Drake.

Richard Faireweather.

The 12.of Ianuary wee came to Seale yland, and the 14.day to the Greene yland, where going in we found hard abord the maine 8.fathome, 7.and 6.and neuer leſſe then fiue fathome. There lies a ledge of rocks in the faire way, betwixt the yland and the maine, ſo that you muſt bee ſure to borrow hard abord the maine, and leaue the ledge on the larbord ſide.

Seale-ylands and Green-yland.

One of the Portugals which wee caried along with vs in our ſhippe ſeemed to bee a man of experience, and I entred into ſpeach with him concerning the ſtate of the Riuer: hee tolde mee that the towne of Buenos Ayres is from the Greene yland about ſeuentie leagues, ſtanding on the Southſide of the Riuer, and from thence to Santa Fee is 100.leagues, ſtanding on the ſame ſide alſo. At which towne their ſhippes doe diſcharge all their goods into ſmall Barkes, which rowe and towe vp the Riuer to another towne called Aſcenſion, which is from Santa Fee 150.

leagues, where the boats diſcharge on ſhoare, and ſo paſſe all the goods by carts and horſes to Tucaman, which is in Peru.

The towne of Aſcenſion ſtands in a very fertile place, reaping corne twiſe in the yeere, with abundance of wine, cattell, and fruits. In the townes of Aſcenſion and Tucaman a rapier of 20. rials of plate is worth 30. duckats, a boxe of Marmalade 20. duckats; a looking glaſſe a foote ouer is worth 30.li. pictures in tables of 14.inches, 30.and 40.li.a piece.

The 16. day wee went from Greene yland to the watering place, which is about a league to the Weſtward, where wee tooke in about 18.tunnes of water, and the 22.day came againe to Seale yland to make prouiſion of Seales, where a ſtorme aroſe, which put vs in ſome danger, by the breaking of our anckers and cables, and the winde blew ſo colde, that wee much marueiled at it, conſidering the height of the place. I muſt needes in this place finde fault with our ſelues and the whole company, that riding in this Riuer 16.dayes, the chanell was not ſounded, nor the way made perfect.

The 29.day wee tooke into our ſhip one Miles Philips, which was left in the Weſt Indies by M.Hawkins.

The firſt of February I tooke the Sunne in 38.degrees. And the 3.day of I tooke it againe and found it to be in 41.degrees.

The 7. day of February our Captaine maſter Liſter being in one of the prizes, hoyſed ouer bord his Gundelo, and went abord the Admirall, and being there they ſent their Gundelo abord vs, for our Maſter, maſter Collins, and my ſelfe, & at our comming we were called into the Captaines cabbin, where were ſet in counſell for matters touching the ſtate of our voyage, theſe men whoſe names are vnder written.

Maſter Robert Withrington Captaine of the Admirall.
Maſter Chriſtopher Liſter Captaine of The barke Clifford.
Iohn Anthonie, Maſter of the Admirall.
Thomas Hood Pilot for the Streights.
William Anthonie, Maſter of the barke Clifford.
Dauid Collins. Triſtram Gennings.
Maſter William Withrington.
Maſter Beumond Withrington.
Maſter Waſnes. Maſter Norton.
Maſter Wilkes. Maſter Harris.
Thomas Anthonie.
Nicholas Porter.
The maſter Gunner:
And Alexander Gundie, his mate.
Iohn Sarracol.

M.Iohn Anthonie.

This company being all aſſembled together, the Maſter of the Admiral declared that the cauſe of our aſſembly was to determine after good aduice, what courſe or way were beſt and moſt likely to all mens iudgements to be taken. Firſt for the good preferment of my Lords voyage, then the health of our men; and laſtly the ſafegard of our ſhippes, and further ſhewed his minde to vs all in theſe wordes, as neere as I could cary them away.

My maſters, my Lords determination touching this our voyage is not vnknowen vnto you all, hauing appointed it to be made, and by the grace of God to be performed by vs for the South ſea. But for as much as wee doe all ſee the time of the yeere to bee farre ſpent, as alſo the windes to hang contrary, the weather drawes on colder and colder, the nights longer and longer, our bread ſo conſumed that we haue not left aboue two moneths biſket, our drinke in a maner all ſpent, ſo that we haue nothing but water, which in ſo cold a countrey as the Streights, if we ſhould get in, and bee forced there to winter, would no doubt be a great weakening to our men, and a hazard of the ouerthrow of the voyage: Theſe things conſidered, both our Captaine, Maſter Hood, and I, doe rather thinke it good for the wealth of our voyage, the health of our men, and ſafetie of our ſhips, to goe roome with the coaſt of Braſill, where by Gods grace wee ſhall well victuall our ſelues, both with wine which is our greateſt want, and other neceſſaries.

Beſides, it is giuen vs here to vnderſtand by the Portugals which we haue taken, that there is no doubt, but that by Gods helpe and our endeuour, wee ſhall bee able to take the towne of Baya, at our pleaſure, which if wee doe put in practiſe, and doe not performe it, being ſome what aduiſed by them, they offer to looſe their liues. And hauing by this meanes victualled our ſelues, wee may there ſpend vpon the coaſt ſome three or foure moneths, except in the meane time wee may happen vpon ſome good thing to content my Lord, and to purchaſe our owne credits: otherwiſe, wee may take the Spring of the yeere, and ſo proceede, according to my lords directions. And aſſure your ſelues (by the aſſiſtance of God) wee will not returne without ſuch benefite by this voyage, as may redound to my lords profite, and the honour of our countrey. Nowe if there bee any of you that can giue better courſe and aduiſe, then this which I haue deliuered, let him ſpeake, and wee will not onely heare him, but thanke him for his counſell, and followe it.

To this ſpeech of M. Anthony, M. Liſter our captaine anſwered in this ſort: M. Withrington, & M. Anthony both, you know, that the laſt words that my lord had with vs in ſuch a chamber were, that in any caſe we ſhould follow our voyage only for the South ſea, except by the way, we might perchance meete with ſuch a purchaſe, as that wee might returne with 6000 pounds: and therefore I ſee no ſafetie, howe wee may dare offer to goe backe againe, being ſo neere the Streights as we are: for my part I neither dare nor wil conſent vnto it, except we be further forced, then yet wee are. My accompt is this, that he that dieth for this yeere is excuſed for the next, and I rather chooſe death, then to returne in diſgrace with my lord.

A reſolute and worthy ſpeech of captaine Liſter.

Hereunto both the captaine and maſter of the Admirall replied that they were all of that mind: yet notwithſtanding, that in going roome the voyage was in better poſſibilitie to bee performed, then in wintring either in the Streighes, or at Port S. Iulian, all things conſidered. And ſo agreeing, and concluding all in one, they were determined preſently to beare vp.

The next day being the 8 of February, there fell out many and diuers ſpeeches on each part concerning the altering of our courſe, ſome would continue for the Streights, and other ſome would not. Whereupon a viewe was taken in both ſhips of victuals, and reaſonable ſtore was found for both companies: and the winde withall comming to the North, we determined to take out of the prizes the beſt neceſſaries that were in them, and ſo caſt them off, and to plie for the Streights.

All this time wee held on our courſe, and the 15 day wee found our ſelues in the height of 44 degrees, but then the winde came to the South, with much raine, wind, cold, and other vntemperate weather, continuing in that ſort fiue or ſixe dayes, in which time we hulled backe againe into the height of 42 degrees.

They returne being in the latitude of 44 degrees.

Sunday being the 20 of February, our Admirall being ſomething to the leeward of vs, and the ſtorme ſomewhat ceaſed, put aboord his flag in the mizen ſhrowds, as a token that hee would ſpeake with vs, and thereupon wee bare roome with him, and hauing halled one another, captaine Withrington ſhewed the diſpoſition of all his company, which was rather to goe roome with the coaſt of Braſil, then to lie after that ſort in the ſea with foule weather, and contrary winds. Our captaine on the other ſide ſhewed the contrary diſpoſition of his men, and company, willing notwithſtanding to proceede: but in the ende, both the ſhippes fell aſunder, and our captaine ſayd, Seeing then there is no remedie, I muſt be content, though againſt my will.

The 21 day the weather grew faire, and the wind good at the South for the Streights, yet our Admirall bare roome ſtill, we ſuppoſing hee would haue taken the benefit of the time: whereupon our whole company began to thinke of the inconueniences that would ariſe by deuiding our ſelues, and loſing our Admirall, being very willing to continue their courſe, and yet not without the company of the Admiral. And then wee began to caſt about after him, and at the laſt bare with him, and he tolde vs, that vpon a ſecond viewe of the victuals, hee found their ſtore ſo ſlender, and their want ſo great, that there was no remedy for them but to ſeeke ſome meanes to be relieued, which was the onely cauſe that hee bare Northward. This ſpeech made vs of the barke to enter into a new conſultation: and we found many of our men weake, and all our caliuers not ſeruiceable, and the Smiths that ſhould mend them to be in the Admiral. We conſidered alſo, that by breaking of company, eche ſhip ſhould be the more weakened: wee continued in this conſultation til the foure and twentieth day, and in all that time found maſter captaine Liſter moſt deſirous to accompliſh, and to fulfill the voyage, and not willing in any caſe to turne his ſhip, but that the deſire which we all had to continue in conſort with our Admirall, made vs to thinke well of his company, and in fine, an agreement and concluſion was thus made on all ſides, to follow the Admiral, without any more talke of the Streights till the Spring.

A final reſolution to returne

The 10 day of March, it fell out ſo vnfortunately, that Samuel Teller our Maſters mate, fell ouerboord, and ſo periſhed, we being not able by any meanes to recouer him,

March.

The eight and twentieth day being in the height of one and twenty degrees, wee eſpied a ſaile, which wee iudged came out of the Streights, and had rich lading, but the night being at hand,we loſt her very vnluckily,and the next day could haue no ſight of her.

The rode of Camana.

The fift day of April we fel with the land of Braſilia,in the height,as I iudge,of ſixteen degrees and a tierce, and our Captaine went then aboord the Admirall, where they concluded to ſende the pinneſſe and our boate on ſhore for freſh water, becauſe wee ſtoode in neede of it, which did ſo with eighteene good men, and three or foure tunne of water caſke. They were from vs till the eighth day in the morning,at which time we eſpied them againe, and that day we came all together into the roade of Camana, where there came a Canoa aboord vs, and one of the chiefeſt Portugals that belonged to the place. Here wee tooke in beefes, hogs, water and wood at our pleaſure, hauing almoſt no man able to reſiſt vs, but ſome of our Portugals ſtole from vs in the Canoa.

They come into the riuer of Baya.

The 11 day wee entred into the hauen of Baya, where wee were receiued at the point comming in,with two great pieces of Ordinance, which diſcharged bullets at vs fiue times a piece, but they loſt ſhot and powder,and did vs no harme. After wee had paſſed the point, wee halled in for the roade as cloſe as the wind would permit vs, but could not come ſo neere as we deſired,and therefore we came to an ankor a faire birth off the towne, not without great ſtore of ſhotte from thence, but yet our harme was none at all for ought they could doe.

At our comming in, wee found in the road eight ſhips and one carauel, of the which one was a hulke or double flieboat of the burden of two hundred and fiftie tunnes, hauing in her 24 pieces of good Ordinance: ſhee with the reſt of the ſhips, together with the towne,gaue vs ſhot,and ſhot, but not one touched ſo much as any of our ſayles. And leaſt wee ſhould ſeeme in the meane time to be idle, we repayed for euery ſhot of theirs, two or three ſometimes,at the ſhips and the towne together.

They take 4 ſhips out of the harbour of Baya, notwithſtanding the ſhot of the enemie.

The next day at night wee thought to haue halled in with the ſhips, and to haue fetched out ſome of them: but the wind blew then off the ſhore, ſo that wee could not poſſiblie doe it. And againe the next day at night we concluded to goe with our owne two boates, and two other boats of the countrey which we had taken before,which went with carauel-ſailes,into the roade,and accordingly performed the ſame,notwithſtanding the ſhot of the enemie. The Moone did ſhine,and gaue very good light, and in we went with our carauels and boates, and the ſhot came about our eares as thicke as haile: but the Portugals and the reſt perceiuing vs no whit at all to ſhrinke or be diſmayed,forſooke their ſhips,& began to prouide to ſaue themſelues,ſome with their boats, ſome by ſwimming, and ſo wee entred the ſhips with a great ſhowte, and found few to reſiſt vs: but yet the ſhore not being a cables length from vs, they did ſo plie both their great and ſmall ordinance at vs, that it much annoyed vs: But yet for all that we made light of their ſhot, and our men of the barke Clifford entred the Admirall and Viceadmirall, and our Admirals men entred two other ſhips of the like burden,and preſently euery one cut the cables in the hauſe, and ſo by the helpe of God in deſpite of them all,wee brought away foure of them, The leaſt whereof was of the burthen of 130 tunnes.

A hulke of Fluſhing.

In this broile the hulke ſhotte at vs many times, but did no hurt at all: but at the laſt comming by the hulke towing our new prizes,we halled them and demanded whence they were, they anſwered vs of Fluſhing, and then we commanded him to wey ankor, and to come after vs: And not daring to refuſe it, he did ſo, and brought with him a carauel with fortie or fiftie buts of wine in her, and another ſmall barke which had little or nothing in her: and rode by vs as one of our company, and was a ſhip of the burden of two hundreth and fiftie tunnes. Our hard happe was to find no great matter,either of marchandize or victuals in theſe ſhips, ſauing in one of them we found foure buts of wine,in another two, in another one, and ſome fiſh,and all the reſt of their lading was on ſhore.

All this was done vpon Eaſter eeue, and we gaue thanks to God, that we had ſped ſo well: and that very night there came a boate from the towne, with a Dutch merchant,and one Portugal,to offer ſome ranſome for the ſhips, as they ſayd,but as I iudge rather to eſpie our ſtrength: we kept them that night aboord,and the next day we ſent them to our Admiral.

The next day being Eaſter day aroſe a very great ſtorme, inſomuch that our carauel which we firſt tooke brake from vs, and one of our new prizes alſo, by meanes of the breaking of her cable, ſlipt away: whereupon,although the winde was great,and the ſea troubleſome,yet wee ſent certaine of our men in our boat,to recouer them if they might,but we feare,that the rage of the weather hath cauſed vs to leeſe both our men and prizes.

In the middeſt of this ſtorme, our two Spaniards which wee tooke in the riuer of Plate,ſeeing vs all buſie about our prizes, beganne to thinke howe they might eſcape our handes, and ſuddenly ſlipt both out of one of the cabbins windowes, and by ſwimming got aſhoare, a thing which ſeemed to vs impoſſible, conſidering the outrage of the weather.

This ſtorme continued long, and preuented vs of making our intended attempt againſt the towne, hauing as much to doe as poſſibly we might, in keeping our ſhips and prizes from running aſhore, and falling into the hands of thoſe that ſtood gaping greedily for our ruine.

The 19 day the ſtorme being a little ceaſed, wee all weyed and came to an Iſland that lyeth next Northweſt from the bay, and the twentieth day we went on ſhore, and our carpenters ſet vp our pinneſſe.

The 23 day the people of the countrey came downe amaine vpon vs, and beſet vs round, and ſhot at vs with their bowes and arrowes, but in ſhort time wee cauſed them to retire, and many of them were caried away by the helpe of their fellowes, although wee had ſome of our men hurt with ſome of their arrowes.

The 24 day we receiued out of the carauel twelue buts of wine, and foure barels of oyle, and halfe a quarter.

The 26 of April our pinneſſe was lanched: and the ſame day came downe vnto vs a great number of Portugals and Indians, with whom we ſkirmiſhed the ſpace of two houres to their coſt.

The ſecond day of May the Admirals boate went a ſhore with 14 men to fill water, and preſently being on ſhore, they were intrapped with two or three hundred Indians which aſſaulted thẽ, and ſlew one or two of our men, but the reſt eſcaped notwithſtanding the number of the enemie, and came ſafe againe with water to the ſhip. We ſuffered this loſſe by meere negligence, & want of circumſpection.

Groſſe negligence.

The 5 day the captaine of the Admiral himſelfe tooke a ſmall barke, his owne little carauel, our pinneſſe and the Dutchmans boate, and at night went on ſhore to get victuals, amongſt the bullocks which were in the fields: and in the morning they were gone ſo farre, that they were out of ſight. Which being perceiued by the enemie, they preſently made ready their galley for Admiral, with foure carauels, with as many men in them as poſſibly could thruſt in & ſtand one by another: and they bare ouer with the North ſhore to meete with our pinneſſe and boats: whereupon our men fell into great danger, although M. Liſter our captaine diſſwaded M. Withrington from that attempt, by laying before him the danger both of himſelfe and vs alſo, being ſo far one from the other. But being once gone, there was no remedie but they were to abide whatſoeuer might happen: we in the barke Clifford, although wee were weakely left, yet perceiuing the Galley to make after our men, weyed and purſued the galley, as neere the ſhore as we could conueniently come for want of water: the hulke alſo weyed and came after vs to follow the enemie, but the enemie with his oares got ſight of our pinneſſe and boats before wee could, and bare directly with them: which being eſpied of our men, and they ſeeing no way to auoide them, made themſelues ready (notwithſtanding the great oddes) to fight it out like men, and to liue and die together. The courſe that they tooke for their beſt aduantage vpon the ſudden, was this: they went all into the pinneſſe, and made faſt the Dutchmans boate to one ſide, and the ſmall carauel to the other ſide, and ſo waited the comming of the enemie, giuing them firſt of all a piece of Ordinance for their welcome, which they preſently repaied againe with a piece out of the prowe of the galley, and preſently after, with three or foure ſmall braſſe pieces, charged with haileſhot, and ſo giuing a mighty ſhoute, came all aboord together, crying, entrad, entrad: but our men receiued them ſo hotely, with ſmall ſhot and pikes, that they killed them like dogs. And thus they continued aboord them almoſt a quarter of an hour, thinking to haue deuoured our men, pinneſſe and all. And ſurely to mans iudgement, no other thing was likely in regard of their great number, and the fewnes of our men, and they at the firſt thought all was their owne: but God, who is the giuer of all victories, ſo bleſſed our ſmall company, and ſo ſtrengthened their armes and mindes to fight, that the enemie hauing receiued a mighty foyle, was glad to ridde himſelfe from their handes: and whereas at their entrance, wee eſteemed them to bee no leſſe then betwixt two hundred and three hundred men in the galley, we could ſcarſe perceiue twenty men at their departure ſtand on their legs, but the greater part of them was ſlaine, many deadly wounded, their oares broken, & ſhe departed from our men, hanging vpon one ſide, (as a Sowe that hath loſt her left eare) with the number of dead and wounded men that lay one vpon another. And whereas their comming aboord was in a great brauado, with drumme, ſhouting, and crying, they departed without either noiſe of drumme or ſpeech.

A galley at Baya.

A marueilous defeate of the Portugals by a few of our men.

We loſt in this conflict of our men, three onely, which were Alexander the Maſter Gunners mate, Laurence Gambrel a proper yoong man of Hampton, and another that was maſter Benmans man. Some alſo were hurt with the arrowes of the enemie, but the wounds were curable: and thus it pleaſed Almighty God, of his great goodnes, to giue victory to 50 or 60 Englishmen, againſt ſixe or ſeuen hundreth Portugals and Indians, for which we ceaſed not to giue ſuch dutifull thanks to his Maieſtie, as ſo miraculous a victory required.

Now touching the purpoſe of our men, who made that attempt for freſh victuals, their labour was nothing loſt, but in deſpite of the enemie they brought to our ſhips 16 or 17 yong bullockes, which was to our great comforts and refreſhing. As for vs that were in our ſhip, we could not come neere them by two miles, or more, to giue them any aid, yet we ſuppoſe that the countenance of our ſhips was an incouragement to our men, and ſome maner of feare to the enemie.

Now whereas our opinion concerning the number of the Portugals and Indians, which were ſlaine, as aforeſayd, was grounded at that time vpon our probable coniecture, not being able otherwiſe to come to the knowledge thereof: you ſhall vnderſtand that the next night after the fight, there came aboord vs two Indians vpon a Gyngatho, who were runne away from their maſters, and they told vs for a very good trueth, that the gallie went out from the towne with foure hundreth men in her, but there came not backe to the towne again aliue aboue thirty of them all: and I amongſt the reſt being deſirous to know of one of them, what the newes was at the towne, he anſwered me with great laughter: Todo eſta cacado en Tierra.

About 360 Portugals & Indians ſlain.

The twelfth day I was ſent for to come aboord the admirall, about the hulke: where vpon the complaint of the Dutchmen, maſter Withrington entred into bond to them for the paiment of their fraight, but how my lord would like that bond of debt at our returne, I knowe not. I gaue him my aduiſe and counſell to get his bond againe into his hands.

The thirteenth day our captaine ſent out of our ſhip certaine victuals vnto the Admirall, as one butte of dight riſe, two cheſts of cleane riſe, one barrell of oatemeale, one barrell of peaſon, and one barrell of oile, becauſe they were ſomewhat ſcanted of victuals, and we at this time were to haue out of the Admirall our part of fiue and twenty cheſts of fine ſugar, and more, of eight cheſts, and ſixe cheſts that were taken in the Bay of Todos Santos, at the Ingenios, more of one hundreth and thirty hats, and other diuers pillages, which were taken in the prizes, and at the ſhore.

The fourteenth day being Monday, it was concluded amongſt vs all, not to leaue the towne of Baya ſo, but notwithſtanding the time that they had to ſtrengthen themſelues and the towne, yet to giue an attempt for the winning of it: and therefore wee prouided our pinneſſes, carauels, and boates for the enterpriſe: and as we were departing from our ſhippes, the winde turned directly contrary to our courſe, ſo that our determination for that time was broken, and wee returned againe to our ſhips: and to ſay the trueth, if the weather and winde had ſerued, our attempt had bene very deſperate, conſidering the number of Portugals and Indians which were then gathered together, to the number of ſeuen or eight thouſand, and their artillery vpon the ſhore, playing vpon vs: but neuertheleſſe we had proceeded, if the winds had fauoured vs.

The 16 day we went to certaine Ingenios of the Portugals, where we found the people fled and we entred their houſes without reſiſtance. We found in their purging houſe 1000 pots of ſugar, ſome halfe purged, ſome a quarter, and ſome newly put into the pots: ſo that euery man tooke his pot of ſugar for their prouiſion, and ſet all the reſt on fire.

The 17 day wee all weyed to goe to another Ingenio, to ſee if wee could find there better ſugar, and in the way we met with a prize, which was a carauel, which wee found driuing with the weather, and entred her, and had in her onely three Faulcons of yron, which our pinneſſe brought away, and ſet the ſhip on fire. Dalamor in the ſmall prize ran ſo farre in, that hee brought his ſhip on ground, where ſhee lay three or foure houres, till ſuch time as there came from the towne fiue carauels full of men, which being perceiued of vs, our captaine with our men went to him to ayde him. The carauels came within Faulcon ſhot of vs, but durſt come no neerer, leſt they might haue taſted of the like banket, that they receiued the laſt time. About halfe flood came the galley againe, and three carauels more, but before they came, the barke was afloate, and ſet ſayle: and then they all went to gard their Ingenios, which we had purpoſed to viſit: but the night comming on, perſwaded vs to the contrary.

They returne againe to Baya.

The 19 day we ſet ſayle to goe into the roade of Baya againe, with our pinneſſes, and a flag of truce, to ſee if we could recouer our foure men, which remained aliue of thoſe ten, that periſhed in our boate, of whom we ſpake before, which foure were vnfortunately fallen into their hands: but they at our approching neere the towne, ſhot at vs, and wee as ready as they, gaue them in all 27 ſhot, and ſo ankored a little from the towne, to ſee what they would doe.

The 20 day riding ſtill before the towne, our Admirall ſent a Negro aſhore, with letters from the Portugals, that wee had priſoners aboord: the effect of which letters was, that if we might haue our men releaſed and deliuered vs, they ſhould haue theirs from our ſhips.

The next day in the morning, in ſtead of their bloody flagge, they put vp two white flagges, and ſent a Gingatho off to vs with two Indians, with letters of anſwere from the Gouernour: but they would not conſent in any caſe that we ſhould haue our men, and willed their Portugals to take their captiuitie patiently, for they would not redeeme them: a motion they made in their letters, to buy againe one of their prizes, which we had taken out of the rode: but our admirall anſwered them, no, ſeeing they detained our men, wee would keepe both their men, and ſhips too. The ſame euening we weyed, and came out of the hauen, halfe a league to ſeaward.

The 22 we ſet ſaile to ſea, and the 23 came to an Iſland twelue leagues to the Southward of Baya, to wood, and water.

An Iſland 12 leagues to the South of Bay.

The 24 day being aboord with our pinneſſes, we met with a Canoa, wherein was one Portugall, and ſixe Indians: we ſhot at the Canoa, and killed an Indian, and tooke the Portugall, and one of the Indians, and brought them aboord our ſhippes: we there examined them, and the Portugal confeſſed that there was a ſhippe laden with meale, and other victuals, bound for Fernambuck, but put into a creeke, becauſe ſhe durſt not goe along the coaſt, hearing of our ſhippes. Whereupon we manned both our pinneſſes, and tooke the Portugal with vs, to goe and ſeeke the ſame ſhip, but that night we could not find her.

The 26 day we went againe, and found her, being halled vp into a creeke, where a man would haue thought a ſhippe boate could not haue entred: wee found her indeede laden with meale principally: but ſhe had alſo in her fourteene cheſts of ſugar, of which two were in powder, and twelue in loaues. This ſhip was of the burden of one hundred and twenty tunnes, and a new ſhip, this being the firſt voyage that euer ſhe made, and as the Portugall confeſſed, ſhee was fraighted for Fernambuck, but the men of Baya hauing great want of bread, bought both the ſhip and her lading, and ſo thought to ſtay her in this creeke, till we were gone off the coaſt: but it was our good hap to diſappoint their pretenſe, and to fetch her from thence, where they thought her as ſafe as if ſhe had bene at Lisbon.

A new Portugal ſhip taken in a creeke.

The 28 day we deuided the meale amongſt vs, according to the want of euery ſhip.

The 30 day, 16 or 17 Dutchmen went with their boate from the hulke to ſhoare, to fill water: and vpon a ſudden they were aſſaulted with fifty or ſixty Portugals, and ſo many more Indians armed with ſhot and other weapons, and they ſlew their Maſter and Purſer, and the reſt were hurt, but yet eſcaped with their liues: a good warning for vs to bee circumſpect, and carefull in our landing.

A good warning for vs to be circumſpect in landing.

The laſt day of May wee caſt off one of our prizes, which wee called the George, and our Admirall and the hulke tooke the men and other neceſſaries out of her, into them. The ſame day the Portugals which had hurt the Dutchmen came to the ſhore, and dared vs to come on land: whereupon wee went into our pinneſſes with fortie ſhot: but the cowardly villanes ranne all away to the hils, from the water ſide: but maſter Liſter with nine men followed them, and they fled ſtill before them, and durſt not ſtay their approch: ſo they came backe againe, and wee filled water quietly, and at our pleaſure.

The third day of Iune our captaine maſter Liſter, hauing a great deſire for the performance of this voyage, according to my Lords direction, went to our admirall, and requeſted him to giue him ſixe buts of wine, one barrell of oile, three or foure barrels of fleſh, and to haue Thomas Hood and ſeuen or eight ſeamen for ſome of our landmen, and by Gods help, he with the barke Clifford, would alone proceede for the South ſea: but the admirall mightily withſtoode his motion, and would grant no iote of his particular requeſts.

Iune.

An offer of captaine Liſter to go with his one ſhip onely for the South ſea.

The 7 of Iune, hauing no vſe at all of our prizes, we burnt one, and caſt off another, and filled our owne ſhips with the neceſſaries of them.

The 8 day wee put off to ſea, but yet with much adoe came againe to our ankoring place, becauſe of the weather.

The 10 day the admirall ſent for vs to come aboord him, and being come, hee opened a Carde before all the company, and tolde vs that my lords voyage for the South ſea was ouerthrowen for want of able men, and victuals, and that therefore hee thought it beſt to plie for ſome of the Iſlands of the Weſt India, or the Açores, to ſee if they could meete with ſome good purchaſe, that might ſatiſfie my lord. Theſe wordes were taken heauily of all the company, and no man would anſwere him, but kept ſilence, for very griefe to ſee my lords hope thus deceiued, and his great expenſes and coſts caſt away. The common ſort ſeeing no other remedie, were contented to returne as well as he.

The 16 day wee eſpied a ſayle, whereupon our pinneſſe, and Dalamor gaue her chaſe, and put her aſhore vpon the Iſland, where the men forſooke her, and ran away with ſuch things as they could conueniently carie: our pinneſſe boorded her, and found little in her: they tooke out of her nine cheſts of ſugar, and one hogge, and 35 pieces of pewter, and ſo left her vpon the ſands.

Iuly. They returned Northward.

From this time forward we began to plie Northwards, and the firſt of Iuly fell with the land againe, where we fiſhed, and found reaſonable good ſtore. I tooke the latitude that day, and found our ſelues in 10 degrees and 22 minutes.

The 7 day we determined to fall with Fernambuck, and wee came ſo neere it, that Dalamor (as he told vs) eſpied ſome of the ſhips that were in the harbour: yet notwithſtanding we all fell to leeward of the riuer, & could not after that, by any meanes recouer the height of it againe: but we ceaſed not on all parts to endeuour the beſt we could, & oftentimes loſt company for a day or two, one of another, but there was no remedie, but patience, for to Fernambuck we could not come, hauing ſo much ouerſhot it to the Northward, and the wind keeping at the South and Southweſt.

Fernambuck in the Southerly latitude of 7 deg. 50 min.

The 20 day I tooke the Sunne in 5 degrees 50 minutes, which was 2 degrees to the Northward of Fernambuck, and the further wee went, the more vntowardly did the reſt of our ſhips worke, either to come into hauen, or to keepe company one with another. And truely I ſuppoſe, that by reaſon of the froward courſe of the Admirall, he meant of purpoſe to loſe vs: for I know not how the neerer we endeuoured to be to him, the further off would he beare from vs, and wee ſeeing that, kept on our owne courſe, and lookt to our ſelues as well as we could.

The 24 day our whole company was called together to conſultation, for our beſt courſe: ſome would goe for the Weſt India, ſome directly North for England: and in concluſion, the greater part was bent to plie for our owne countrey, conſidering our neceſſities of victuals, and freſh water, and yet if any place were offered vs in the way, not to omit it, to ſeeke to fill water.

A lowe Iſland in 3 degrees & 49 minutes.

The 26 day in the morning, we eſpied a lowe Iſland, but we loſt it againe, and could deſcrie it no more. This day we found our ſelues in 3 degrees and 49 minutes.

The 27 day we ſearched what water we had left vs, and found but nine buts onely, ſo that our captaine allowed but a pinte of water for a man a day, to preſerue it as much as might be, wherewith euery man was content, and we were then in number fiftie men and boyes.

Auguſt.

The firſt of Auguſt we found our ſelues 5 degrees to the Northward of the line, all which moneth we continued our courſe homeward, without touching any where: toward the end whereof, a ſorrowfull accident fell out in our hulke, which being deuided from vs in a calme, fell afire by ſome great negligence, and periſhed by that meanes in the ſeas, wee being not able any wayes to helpe the ſhip, or to ſaue the men.

The hulke of Fluſhing burnt with all the men by negligence.

The 4 day of September, we had brought our ſelues into the height of 41 degrees & 20 minutes, ſomwhat to the Northwards of the Iſlands of the Açores: and thus bulting vp and downe with contrary winds, the 29 of the ſame moneth, we reached the coaſt of England, and ſo made an end of the voyage.

A diſcourſe of the Weſt Indies and South ſea written by Lopez Vaz a Portugal, borne in the citie of Eluas, continued vnto the yere 1587.

Wherein among diuers rare things not hitherto deliuered by any other writer, certaine voyages of our Engliſhmen are truely reported: which was intercepted with the author thereof at the riuer of Plate, by Captaine Withrington and Captaine Chriſtopher Liſter, in the fleete ſet foorth by the right Honorable the Erle of Cumberland for the South ſea in the yeere 1586.

This voyage was made in the yeere 1572.

FRancis Drake an Engliſhman being on the ſea, and hauing knowledge of the ſmall ſtrength of the towne of Nombre de Dios, came into the harborough on a night with foure pinneſſes, and landed an hundreth and fifty men: and leauing one halfe of his men with a trumpet in a fort which was there, hee with the reſt entred the towne without doing any harme till hee came at the market place: and there his company diſcharging their calieuers, and ſounding their trumpets (which made a great noyſe in the towne) were anſwered by their fellowes in the forte, who diſcharged and ſounded in like maner. This attempt put the towneſmen in ſuch extreme feare, that leauing their houſes, they fled into the mountaines, and there bethought themſelues what the matter ſhould be in the towne, remaining as men amazed at ſo ſudden an alarme. But the Spaniards being men for the moſt part of good diſcretion ioyned fourteene or fifteene of them together with their pieces, to ſee who was in the towne: and getting to a corner of the market-place they diſcouered the Engliſhmen, and perceiuing that they were but a few, diſcharged their pieces at them; and their fortune was ſuch, that they ſlew the trumpetter, and ſhot the captaine (whoſe name was Francis Drake) into the legge : who feeling himſelfe hurt retired toward the Fort, where he had left the reſt of his men : but they in the Fort ſounded their trumpet, and being not anſwered againe, and hearing the calieuers diſcharged in the towne, thought that their fellowes in the towne had bene ſlaine, and thereupon fled to their Pinneſſes. Now Francis Drake (whom his men carried becauſe of his hurt) when he came to the fort where he left his men and ſaw them fled, he and the reſt of his company were in ſo great feare, that leauing their furniture behinde them, and putting off their hoſe, they ſwamme & waded all to their Pinneſſes, and departed forth of the harbour, ſo that if the Spaniards had followed them, they might haue ſlaine them all. Thus Captaine Drake did no more harme at Nombre de Dios, neither was there in this ſkirmiſh any more then one Spaniarde ſlaine, and of the Engliſhmen onely their Trumpetter, whom they left behind with his trumpet in his hand.

From hence the coaſt lieth all along till you come to Cartagena. Betweene Nombre de Dios and Cartagena is a great ſound or gulfe, where the firſt Spaniardes that euer dwelt vpon the firme land built and inhabited the towne of Dariene : howbeit they abode not long there, becauſe of the vnholeſomeneſſe of the place.

But Captaine Drake being diſcontent with the repulſe that the men of Nombre de Dios gaue him, went with his Pinneſſes into the ſaid bay or ſound of Dariene, where hauing conference with certaine Negros which were ranne away from their maſters of Panamá and Nombre de Dios, he was informed that at the very ſame time many mules were comming from Panamá to Nombre de Dios laden with gold and ſiluer. Vpon this newes Francis Drake taking with him an hundred ſhot, and the ſaid Negros, ſtayed in the way till the treaſure came by, accompanied and guarded onely by thoſe that droue the mules, who miſtruſted nothing at all. When captaine Drake met with them, he tooke away their golde : but the ſiluer he left behinde, becauſe he could not carrie it ouer the mountaines. And two dayes after this he went to The houſe of croſſes called by the Spaniards Venta de Cruzes, where all the merchants leaue their goods, where hee ſlew ſixe or ſeuen of the marchants, but found neither gold nor ſiluer, but great ſtore of marchandize : and ſo he fired the ſaid houſe, with all the goods, which were iudged to be worth aboue two hundred thouſand ducats. Thus not finding golde in this houſe to ſatiſfie his minde, hee burned the marchants goods, and foorthwith recouered his Pinneſſes : where fortune ſo fauoured his proceedings, that he had not bene aboord halfe an houre, but there came to the ſea ſide about three hundred ſouldiers, which were ſent of purpoſe to take him : but God ſuffered him to eſcape their hands, to be a farther plague vnto the Spaniards.

Venta de cruzes.

Alſo another Engliſhman named Iohn Oxenham hearing what ſpoyle Captaine Drake had done vpon that coaſt, made a voyage thither to enterprize the like. His ſhip was of burthen about an hundred and twentie tunnes, and he was accompanied with ſeuentie perſons : he had conference alſo with the foreſaid Negros, but being aduertized that the treaſure was conducted by ſouldiers, he determined with himſelfe to doe that which neuer any man before durſt vndertake to doe. For being moſt reſolute of his purpoſe, and not looking nor forecaſting what danger might enſue of this bold enterprize, he landed his men in the ſame place where Captaine Drake was, and halling his ſhip to ſhore, cut downe boughes of trees, and couered his ſhip with them, and hid vp his great ordinance in the ground. Thus leauing not one man in his ſhip, he tooke two ſmall peeces of ordinance, and his calieuers, and good ſtore of victuals, with all other neceſſaries for his intended voyage. And he went with the Negros about twelue leagues vp into the maine land, vnto a riuer that runneth into the South ſea : and by this riuer in a wood he cut downe timber, and built a Pinneſſe, which was 45 foote long by the keele : which Pinneſſe being finiſhed, he went downe the riuer and paſſed into the South ſea, carrying ſixe Negros with him for his guides, and he arriued at the Iland of Pearles being 25 leagues diſtant from Panamá. This Iland lieth in the South ſea, as they ſaile from Peru to Panamá, and here he ſtayed ten dayes, before he could take any ſhipping, but at length there came a ſmall barke from a place called Quito in Peru : this barke he tooke, and found in her 60000 pezos of golde, with much wine and bread : and not being content with this, he ſtayed a long while, before he would ſende away his prize or any of his men. Shortly after he tooke another barke that came from Lima, wherein he found 100000 pezos of ſiluer in barres, which being all aboord his Pinneſſe, he ſhaped his courſe toward the riuer from whence he came : but before his departure he landed on the foreſaid Iland to finde pearles, and went to a ſmall towne of the Iland inhabited by Negros for the ſame purpoſe ; where finding but ſmall ſtore, he returned to his Pinneſſe, and comming neere vnto the riuer he ſent away his two prizes, and with his Pinneſſe entered vp the riuer. The Negros of the Iland of perles, ſo ſoone as the Engliſhmē were departed, poſted in their Canoas to Panamá, to ſignifie vnto vnto the Gouernour what they had done. Whereupon the Gouernour within two dayes after ſent out foure barkes and an hundred ſouldiers, and Negros to rowe, the captaine of which ſouldiers was called Iuan de Ortega; who went firſt to the Iland of pearles, & there had knowledge which way the Engliſhmen did take, and in purſuing them he met with the two prizes taken by the Engliſhmen, which tolde him that they were gone vp the riuer. But when he was come to the enterance of the riuer, he knew not which way to take, becauſe the riuer ranne into the ſea by three mouthes, and not all at one. Therefore being determined with himſelfe to paſſe vp the greateſt of the three, he ſaw comming downe with the ſtreame many feathers of hens out of one of the leſſer mouthes: which mouth he entered, and ſayling foure dayes vp the ſame, hee deſcryed the Engliſhmens pinneſſe lying vpon the ſand, and comming to boord her, they found in her no more but ſixe Engliſhmen, of which they killed one, and the other 5 fled, & hauing throughly ranſacked the ſaid pinneſſe, they could finde nought in her, but victuals. The Spaniards ſeeing this, determined to ſeeke out the Engliſhmen by land, and leauing about twentie men to keepe their barks they marched with eightie ſhot vp into the countrey, and halfe a league from the riuer they found a little houſe made with boughes, where the Engliſhmen had left all their treaſure; which the Spaniards tooke and carried backe to their barkes, meaning not to follow the Engliſhmen any further: but the Engliſh captaine with all his men, and aboue 200 Negros followed the Spaniards vnto the riuers ſide, and ſet vpon them with great fury: howbeit the Spaniards lying behind the buſhes did eaſily put the Engliſh to flight, and they tooke ſeuen of them aliue, and ſlewe eleuen and fiue Negros: ſo the Spaniards returned with the loſſe of two men and fiue or ſixe hurt. Then they asked thoſe Engliſhmen which they had taken priſoners, why they departed not with their treaſure, hauing fifteene dayes libertie? They anſwered, that their captaine had commanded them to carry all that golde and ſiluer vnto the place where their ſhip was, and they were agreed to carry it, although they made three or foure iourneys, for he promiſed to giue them part of the treaſure beſide their wages, but the marriners would needes haue it by and by; whereat the captaine being angry, becauſe they put ſo ſmall truſt in his word, would not ſuffer his ſaylers to carrie it, but ſaid he would get Negros to ſerue his turne, and ſo theſe were the Negros aforeſaid, whom he had brought to carry away the golde and ſiluer: but by the way he met with the fiue Engliſhmen which fled from the pinneſſe, who told him of the Spaniards; and then he made friends with all his men, and got the Negros to take his part: but hauing the ouerthrow, and his beſt men being ſlaine and taken priſoners, he thought to haue returned to his ſhip, and ſo to haue gone for England. The Spaniſh captaine hauing heard this diſcourſe of the Engliſh priſoners, buried the dead bodies, embarking all things, and with the Engliſhmen and their pinneſſe returned backe vnto Panamá. Thus was the Engliſhmens voyage ouerthrowen.

Now ſo ſoone as the the foure barkes and the pinneſſe were arriued at Panamá, the Gouernour of that place ſent a meſſenger ouerland to Nombre de Dios, to aduertiſe the townesmen, where the Engliſhmens ſhip lay: whereupon they of Nombre de Dios manned out foure ſhips and went into the bay of Dariene where the Engliſhmen had left their ſhip, which they tooke away with them to Nombre de Dios, with all her ordinance; ſo that the poore Engliſhmen were left in the mountaines very naked and deſtitute of all comfort: for the Spaniards had taken out of the foreſaid houſe of boughes all their tooles & other neceſſaries, ſo that they could by no meanes haue any ſuccour: whereas otherwiſe they might haue builded another pinneſſe, and prouided better for themſelues to haue returned for their owne countrey.

These newes comming to the eares of the Viceroy of Peru, he thought it not conuenient to ſuffer thoſe fiftie Engliſhmen which were yet aliue, to continue in the mountaines among the ſaid Negros. Wherefore he ſent a ſeruant of his called Diego de Frees with 150 ſhot to ſeeke them, who at length found them making of Canoas to take ſome one ſmall barke or other that ſayled to and againe in the North ſea, whereby they might the better ſhift for themſelues: but before they had finiſhed their pretended worke, the Spaniſh ſouldiers ſet vpon them, and tooke fifteene of them that were ſicke: but the reſt fled, whom the Spaniards purſued among the mountaines, and in the end the Negros betraied them, and they were all taken and carried to Panamá. Where the Iuſtice asked the Engliſh captaine, whither he had the Queenes licenſe, or the licenſe of any other Prince or Lord? And he anſwered that he had none, but that he came of his owne proper motion. Which being knowen to the Iuſtice, the Captaine and his companie were condemned and were all put to death at Panamá, ſauing the Captaine himſelfe, the Maſter, and the Pilot, and fiue boyes, which were caried to Lima, where the Captaine and the two other men were executed, but the boyes are yet liuing.

Warre made againſt the Negros.

The king of Spaine hauing intelligence of theſe matters, ſent 300 men of warre againſt thoſe

Negros who had aſſiſted the Engliſhmen, which Negros before were ſlaues vnto the Spaniards, and (as is aforeſaide) fled from their maſters into thoſe mountaines, and ſo ioyned themſelues to the Engliſhmen, thinking by that meanes to be reuenged of the Spaniards crueltie.

At the firſt comming of theſe three hundred ſouldiers they tooke many of the Negros, and did great iuſtice on them according to the qualitie of their offences. But after a ſeaſon the Negros grew wiſe and wary, and preuented the Spaniards ſo, that none of them could be taken. Whereof the king being aduertiſed by his Captaines, as alſo how the countrey was full of mountaines and riuers, and very vnhealthfull, inſomuch that his ſouldiers died, he wrote vnto his ſaid Captaines to make an agreement with thoſe Negros, to the ende the countrey might be in quiet. And ſo they came to agreement with the Captaines of the Negros, and all was appeaſed. Afterward the Negros inhabiting two places which the Spaniardes allotted vnto them, the kings pardon was proclaimed vnto all thoſe which before the day of the proclamation thereof had runne from their Maſters, vpon condition that from that day forward, whatſoeuer other fugitiue Negros ſhould reſort vnto them, they ſhould returne them home either dead or aliue, if not, that they ſhould pay for them. Vpon theſe conditions, and to make all quiet in the mountaines, all things were concluded and agreed vpon. So that now the Negros dwell in great townes, where they haue Spaniardes for their teachers, and a Spaniard for their Iudge, and with this they holde themſelues very well contented, and are obedient vnto their rulers.

Frenchmen.

The Spaniards ſince they conquered thoſe parts haue ſeene many Frenchmen on that coaſt, but neuer any Engliſhmen in that place, ſaue thoſe two onely which I haue before mentioned. And although the Frenchmen haue come ſtrong, yet durſt they neuer put foot on ſhore as the Engliſh did. But the king of Spaine hearing that Engliſhmen as well as Frenchmen beganne to haunt that coaſt, cauſed two gallies to be made and well appointed, to keepe the coaſt. The firſt yeere that they were made they tooke ſixe or ſeuen French ſhips. So ſoone as this was knowen there vſed fewe Engliſh or Frenchmen of warre to come on the coaſt, vntill this yeere 1586. when as the aforeſaid Francis Drake came with a ſtrong fleete of about foure and twentie ſhips, and did ſuch harme as is well knowen vnto all Chriſtendome. But (God ſparing the king of Spaine life) hee will ſufficiently prouide to keepe his ſubiectes from the inuaſions of other Nations.

Sir Francis Drakes voyage to S. Iago, Sant Domingo, Cartagena, and S. Auguſtine.

Cartagena.

Now to go forward with our begunne diſcourſe, the next towne vpon this coaſt beyond Nombre de Dios is Cartagena: it ſtandeth in a more healthfull place, and is a greater towne then the other, bordering vpon a better countrey, which aboundeth with plentie of victuals, and hauing a very good port for the harbour of ſhips: and it is called Cartagena, becauſe it reſembleth very much the citie of Cartagena in Spaine. It containeth aboue foure hundred houſholds. It is very rich by reaſon of the ſhips ſtaying there, when they goe or come from Spaine. And if the ſhips chance to winter before they goe home into Spaine, then they lie at Cartagena. Alſo it is greatly enriched by the marchandize, which is there diſcharged to be carryed to the new kingdome of Granada, from which kingdome much golde is brought vnto Cartagena. This new kingdome of Granada is two hundred leagues within the land: neither can they trauel from Cartagena to this kingdome by land, becauſe of the mountaines and ſtanding waters, which lie in the way, ſo that they are faine to carry their goods vp a riuer called The great riuer of Magdalen. They can goe with their barkes but two hundred leagues vp this riuer; for although it be large and very deepe, yet there runneth ſo ſwift a current, that the barkes are conſtrained to diſcharge their goods at a place in the riuer called Branco de Malambo, into ſmall canoas which rowe cloſe by the ſhores ſide. In this riuer are great abundance of Crocodiles, ſo huge and terrible to beholde, that ſuch as neuer ſawe them before are very fearefull at the firſt ſight of them, for if a man chance to put his hand or foote into the water, they will ſtreightway catch at them. In ſome places this riuer is very vnhealthfull and full of noyſome wormes; but the firſt place thereupon which the Spaniards doe inhabite called Mompox is exceeding healthfull. The countrey adioyning vpon this riuer they call The new kingdome of Granada, becauſe the captaine called Ceſada which firſt conquered the ſame, and inhabited there, was borne at Granada in Spaine: for it is the vſe of the Spaniſh captaines, when they haue conquered any Prouince of the Indies, to call it after the name of the place where they themſelues were borne. This new kingdome of Granada is very fruitfull, and bringeth forth much corne & other victuals, and hath many gold-mines, and great quantitie of emeralds, wherof they ſend ſo many into Spaine, that now they are become little worth: but before theſe countreys were found, they were in great eſtimation. Here are alſo dwelling many of the Indian people ſo meeke and gentle of nature, that they are called flies. This land is very plaine and holeſome, and the inhabitants are giuen to peace.

Popayan.

From this kingdome they trauell to another countrey called La gouernacion de Popayan; it is rich of golde, and withall very fruitfull, but fuller of mountaines then the new kingdome of Granada, and hath fewer Indians dwelling in it, but thoſe that are there are full of courage and very valiant, which cauſed the Spaniardes to make great warre before they could ouercome them. In this prouince there are 13 townes of Spaniards, and in The new kingdome of Granada there are nine townes of Spaniards.

Quito.

A paſſage ouer land from Cartagena to Peru.

From this countrey of Popayan they trauell along till they come to the firſt inhabitants of Peru dwelling in a towne which ioyneth vpon the South ſea called Quito. This towne I will leaue any further to ſpeake of till I come particularly to intreate of Peru. Onely I haue ſpoken of the two foreſaid Prouinces, to the intent you might know, that there is a paſſage by land from Cartagena to Peru, which is about fiue hundred leagues through; ſo that beſides the two hundred leagues which they goe vp the riuer, the other three hundred leagues is a countrey well inhabited and without danger to trauell in, inſomuch that oftentimes poſtes are ſent too and fro. But becauſe it is ſo long a iourney, marchants vſe not to trauell that way, but when they are inforced ſo to doe. If any forren Nation ſhould become Lordes of the South ſea, the king of Spaine might haue his treaſure conueyed vnto this towne of Cartagena from Peru, and ſo into Spaine. For in times paſt there being a rebellion in Peru made by the Spaniardes againſt their king, he ſent his power to ſuppreſſe them through theſe Prouinces. This I write onely for that I knowe ſome Engliſhmen haue thought, that in taking the South ſea, or Panamá or Nombre de Dios from the king of Spaine, his treaſure of Peru could not be conueyed vnto him, and that the king could not ſuccour Peru, if it wanted helpe. Howbeit I doe here moſt certainely aſſure you, that there be many wayes to Peru.

Santa Martha.

A mightie ridge of mountaines.

The rich valley of Tagrona.

But now I will returne to my former diſcourſe. Vpon the ſeacoaſt of Tierra firma Eaſtward from Cartagena ſtandeth a little towne called Santa Martha, betweene which towne and Cartagena the mightie riuer of Magdalen before named falleth into the ſea with ſuch a ſtrong current, that by reaſon thereof it is knowen 20 leagues from the ſhore. Santa Martha is a very poore towne, becauſe it hath often bene robbed by the Frenchmen, and hath no trade but with a fewe Indians that dwell thereabout. Here beginneth that wonderfull long ridge of high mountaines couered with Snow, which ſtreatching through many countreys, runneth along the kingdomes of Peru and Chili, and continueth to the very ſtraights of Magellan. Theſe mountaines are ſeene with ſnow vpon their tops aboue thirtie leagues into the ſea. At the foote of theſe wilde mountaines there is a valley called Tagrona, which is the richeſt place that is knowen thereabout: but becauſe the countrey adioyning is ſo mountainous, and the inhabitants ſo many and of ſo good a courage, ſhooting poyſoned arrowes which are preſent death to ſuch as are wounded with the ſame; therefore it lyeth as yet vnconquered, notwithſtanding it hath coſt many Spaniſh captaines their liues.

Rio de Hacha, Cabo de la vela.

Great ſtore of pearles.

The Ile of Margarita.

Excellent horſes and mules.

More then 70. Ilands.

Paſſing along the coaſt of Tierra firma to the Eaſt of Santa Martha, there is an other ſmall towne of aboue an hundred houſes called Rio de Hacha. This towne is ſomewhat rich by reaſon of the pearles which they get there. Alſo they haue a trade with the Indians for ſome ſmall quantitie of golde. From hence they goe along the coaſt to Cabo de la Vela, which becauſe it is of the ſame propertie with Rio de Hacha before mentioned, I omit to ſpeake of it. Vpon this coaſt there is a lake or gulfe which openeth into the ſea, at the mouth whereof they gather great ſtore of pearles. Beyond this place there is another poore towne, which hath ſixe or ſeuen times beene ſpoyled by the Frenchmen. From hence there lyeth an high way to the newe kingdome of Granada, but it is aboue ſeuen hundred leagues in length, this way is trauelled very ſeldome, becauſe the Indians will vſually ſet vpon the trauellers. More vp into the land the countrey lyeth plaine, and there is ſome golde, and a fewe townes inhabited with Spaniardes, whereof I haue had but ſmall notice, and therefore I let them paſſe. The next place of any account is the Iland of Margarita, where there are but fewe Spaniardes inhabitant. This Iland of Margarita is very ſmall, and lyeth foure leagues from the maine lande: it hath heretofore bene very rich of golde and pearles, and ſo would haue continued till this preſent day, had it not beene ſpoyled by men of warre, becauſe it ſtandeth ſo farre from the maine land, notwithſtanding they yet gather good ſtore of pearles. Vpon this Iland are bred better horſes and mules then in any other part of the Indies, therefore they carry them from hence to Peru, albeit they haue great ſtore of horſes in Peru, but not ſo good. And becauſe we haue begunne to ſpeake of the Iland of Margarita, you are to vnderſtand, that to the North of the foreſaid coaſt of Tierra firma lie aboue ſeuentie Ilands being all very little, except Cuba, Hiſpaniola, and Boriquen, or Sant Iuan de Puerto rico, which Ile of Boriquen, although it bee not very great, yet is it inhabited by the Spaniards. The other ſmaller Ilands haue bene inhabited by the Indians, and haue had good ſtore of gold, pearles, and emraldes; but the Spaniards haue deſtroyed moſt of thoſe Indians from off the earth, and in many of thoſe Ilands there is nothing of any value, wherefore I haue ſmall cauſe to intreate any further of them. But Hiſpaniola is an Iland of great bigneſſe, and hath bene very full of people, and abounded with mines of golde and with pearles, but now all is waſted away. It was at the Spaniards firſt coming thither, as full of inhabitants as any place of that bigneſſe in the whole world, yet now there are none left; for they were men of ſo hard a heart, that they murthered themſelues rather then they would ſerue the Spaniards: for being men vnder ſo ſmall ciuill gouernement as they were, neuer was there any people knowen of ſo reſolute and deſperate mindes: for oftentimes a great number of them being together ouer night, they ſhould be found all dead before the morning: ſuch extreme hate did this brutiſh people beare againſt the Spaniards, that they choſe rather to die the death, then to indure their inſolencies. It happened on a time, that a Spaniard calling certaine Indians to worke in the mines (which labour of all others did moſt grieue them) they, rather then they would goe, offered to lay violent hands on themſelues: which the Spaniard perceiuing ſayd vnto them: ſeeing you will hang your ſelues rather then goe and worke, I likewiſe will hang my ſelfe and will beare your company, becauſe I will make you worke in an other world: but the Indians hearing this, replied, we will willingly worke with you here, to the intent you may not goe with vs into another world: ſo vnwilling were they of the Spaniards companie. So that of all the inhabitantes of this Iland there were none that eſcaped death, ſaue onely theſe fewe, which came to paſſe by the meanes of this one Spaniarde, otherwiſe they would haue hanged themſelues alſo. Some of theſe people are yet liuing, but very few. This Iland of Hiſpaniola is for the moſt part called The Ile of Sant Domingo, becauſe the chiefe citie thereof is ſo called, which was the firſt citie in all the Weſt Indies that was inhabited. There are in this citie aboue eight hundred fire-houſes of good building inhabited by Gentlemen of great wealth. This Iland is vnhealthfull, for it raineth here the moſt part of the yeere. The riches that now this Iland affordeth are ſugar (for here are many Ingenios or ſugar-houſes) and great ſtore of hides by reaſon of the abundance of cattell; there are copper mines alſo, which is the cauſe that they haue ſuch ſtore of copper-money, for their gold mines be all exhauſted, and the golde which they haue commeth from other places. This Iland being (as is beforeſaide) deſtitute of the firſt inhabitants, and the Spaniardes lacking men to worke in their Ingenios, and to looke vnto their cattell, they were forced to bring Negros thither out of Guinea, where they haue ſo increaſed, that the Iland is nowe as full of them, as it was of the naturall inhabitantes; ſo that the Spaniardes carrie Negros from this Iland to the maine lande and there ſell them. The chiefeſt victuall that they haue in this Iland, is a kinde of roote called Iuca, which being eaten as it commeth new out of the ground is preſent death: but firſt they boyle it and after preſſe it, and the liquor that is ſtrained therefrom is deadly poyſon: howbeit this roote being preſſed ſo dry, that there remaineth no moiſture in it, they mingle and temper the ſame with water and ſo make cakes therof, which are very ſauory & good to eat, & this is all the bread which they haue in thoſe Ilands. There go from hence yerely into Spaine 7 or 8 ſhips at the leaſt full fraighted with ſugar & hides.

Neere vnto Hiſpaniola lyeth another greater Iland called Cuba, it is like vnto Hiſpaniola, although there is not ſo much ſugar. The principall towne of this Ilande is called Hauana, which hath an excellent harborough belonging thereunto. The towneſmen are very rich by reaſon of the fleetes that come from Nueua Eſpanna, and Tierra firma which touch there; for the ſafeguarde of which fleetes and of the towne it ſelfe there is a caſtle built neere the ſaid harborough kept with Spaniſh ſouldiers; neither is there any caſtle or ſouldiers in all the Ilands but onely here. There is alſo another Iland inhabited with Spaniards called Boriquen or Sant Iuan de Puertorico. It is but little, yet euery way as plentifull as the other two are; and therfore I omit to ſpeake thereof.

S. Iuan de Puerto rico.

But now to proſecute my diſcourſe of the port-townes vpon the maine lande: Eaſtwarde and Southward from Margarita there are no townes inhabited by Spaniardes or Portugals, till you come to Fernambuck vpon the coaſt of Braſill; notwithſtanding that betweene the ſayd Iland and Fernambuck runneth the mightie riuer of Marannon, whereof (both becauſe of the greatneſſe and the riches contayned therein) I muſt needes make ſome relation, in regarde I haue promiſed to ſpeake of euery place that is of any value in all the Indies. This riuer is one of the greateſt in the world, and was firſt found when as the Spaniardes ſought out the other coaſt: but none can paſſe vp this riuer becauſe of the greatneſſe of the current which commeth downe, as alſo there are many ſhelues of ſand lying in the mouth thereof; wher-by it was long before the riches in and about this riuer were knowen, vntill ſuch time as the kingdome of Peru was conquered: at which time a Captaine called Gonſalo Pizarro paſſing thorough the countrey of Peru came at length into a lande which they named La Canela, becauſe there groweth great ſtore of Sinamome, but not altogether ſo good as that which commeth from the Eaſt Indies. The ſayd Captaine proceeding farther into the countrey came at length to a mightie riuer, where he ſawe the countrey people rowing in their Canoas, and bringing golde to buy and ſell with the Spaniards. Captaine Pizarro ſeeing this, was deſirous to finde out the ende of this riuer, but he could not trauell by lande becauſe of the high mountaines: wherefore he made a ſmall Barke or Pinneſſe to goe and diſcouer from whence the ſaide Indians brought their golde, and ſent in the ſaide Pinneſſe a Captaine vnder him called Orellana, who with fiftie men went downe the riuer, but could not returne to their Generall Pizarro, becauſe of the great current which was very ſtrong againſt them, forcing them to paſſe along the riuer, and to enter into the Sea, and ſo they ſayled on forwarde to the foreſaide Iſle of Margarita: but as they paſſed downe this riuer they found it well inhabited with Indians, which were poſſeſſed of great ſtore of golde. Theſe men with their Pinneſſe were paſſing downe this riuer eight monethes, for the riuer lyeth very crooked, which maketh a long way by water, neither durſt the Spaniardes euer lande, becauſe they ſawe the countrey ſo full of people, but they tooke many Canoas, wherein they had great ſtore of victuals, and ſome golde.

Lewis de Melo.

Now this Orellana comming vnto Margarita with theſe good newes and riches, determined not to returne vnto his Captaine Pizarro which ſent him, but tooke his way from thence to the king of Spaine, and preſented him with the golde that he brought out of the riuer: whereupon the king ſent him with a fleete of ſhippes and ſixe hundred men to inhabite the ſayd riuer: but becauſe of the great current and ſholdes that are therein, hee left the moſt part of his men and ſhippes, and with thoſe that remained he went vnto certaine Ilandes hard by the riuer, and built him Pinneſſes; but the countrey being very vnhealthfull, himſelfe and many of his men dyed, and the reſidue went euery man which way pleaſed him beſt. The fame of this riuer was ſtraightway ſpread through Spaine and Portugal, inſomuch that a Gentleman of Portugall called Lewis de Melo aſked licenſe of Don Iuan the third, then king of Portugall to goe and conquere the ſayd riuer: for from the mouth of this riuer to the mouth of the riuer of Plate, is that part of America which the kings of Portugall (according to the partition made betweene them and the kings of Spaine) doe holde: ſo that the king of Portugall hauing this riuer in his part gaue it to the ſaide Lewis de Melo to conquere: who taking tenne ſhips and eight hundred men (among which many were gentlemen) and comming to the mouth of this riuer, loſt all the ſaid ſhips ſauing two, in one of the which two was Lewis de Melo himſelfe: alſo the moſt part of the men that were in the ſhips caſt away were ſaued and got to the ſhore, and ſo went by lande to the Iland of Margarita; from whence they were diſperſed throughout all the Indies.

El Dorado.

Pedro de Orzua.

Thus theſe two fleetes of ſhips being ſo vnfortunately caſt away, neuer durſt any Captaine afterward attempt by ſea to conquer the ſayde riuer. Howbeit from the kingdome of Nueua Granada before mentioned there haue gone two or three Captaines by land to diſcouer it, for a rumour went ouer all the countrey of the great riches contained in this riuer; whereupon the Spaniards named it El Dorado, that is to ſay, The golden riuer. It is thought that God will not haue this riuer to be knowen, for that one Captaine by lande had moſt of his people ſlaine by thoſe of the countrey, and others for want of victuals returned. So that none of all theſe came to any plaine diſcouery, till a few yeeres paſt a Captaine of the countrey of Nauarre called Pedro de Orzua, who went from Peru almoſt the ſame way that Gonſalo Pizarro had before diſcouered, and was accompanied with about ſome ſeuen hundred Spaniards, it being a great maruell how he could get ſo many, amongſt whom were many Gentlemen and old ſouldiers of Peru, who cauſed diuers mutinies and inſurrections, as hereafter I will more at large declare, which mutinous ſouldiers were the cauſe of their captaines death. Howbeit with all theſe men captaine Pedro de Orzua came vnto head of the ſaid riuer: but you muſt vnderſtand, that this riuer is nouriſhed not onely with the waters and freſhets that come from the mountaines of Peru, but alſo by all the riuers betweene the Equinoctiall and ſixteene degrees of Southerly latitude, which fall thereinto and cauſe it to be ſo great. Nowe at the head of this riuer the ſayde Captaine Pedro de Orzua made fifteene Pinneſſes with many Canoas, wherein he carried aboue two thouſand Indians to helpe him, with many horſes and other prouiſion, as meaning to inhabite there: for it was not poſſible for him to carry all his prouiſion by lande, becauſe the mountaines be very great, there being alſo betweene them many ſmall riuers which fall into this great riuer aboue twentie leagues out of the land. So this captaine hauing all his things in good order went downe the riuer with his whole company, and at length came from among the mountaines to a plaine countrey where the Indians dwelt; and there he held a councell, determining in the ſame place to build a towne and to fortifie it very ſtrongly, to the end he might leaue all his ſtuffe there, and ſuch men as were not ſouldiers. And ſo they began to build the ſaid towne, and wrought vpon it all the winter: where becauſe it raineth much, and withall is very hot, ſicknes and want of victuals began to preuaile amongſt them, wherupon the ſouldiers fell a mutinuring among themſelues. For comming out of Peru, which is one of the frutfulleſt & richeſt countries of the world, they were more inclined to haue their fill of bread and meat then to apply their bodies to labour: which was the cauſe that albeit the countrey in which they now were, was exceeding fruitfull, and that they ſaw with their eyes moſt euident apparances of golde, & alſo that vp into the countrey it ſeemed to be much better; yet for all this they murmured & would needes returne for Peru from whence they came. In the company of theſe men there was a ſouldier of Biskay called Lopez de Agira, a very little man of bodie & lame of one of his legs, but very valiant and of good experience in the warres. This man hauing bene one of the principall mutiners in Peru, could not here giue ouer his old wont, but aſked his fellow-ſouldiers, what they went to ſeeke for in thoſe wild deſerts whither they were brought? For (ſaid he) if you ſeeke riches, there are enough in Peru, and there is bread, wine, fleſh, and faire women alſo; ſo that it were better to conquer that, and to take it out of the handes of the Spaniardes, and that it were no hard enterprize, becauſe all the ſouldiers and poore men of Peru would turne vnto them, and that that were a better courſe, then to goe and conquere the ſauage people in thoſe mountaines: ſo that once hauing the gouernment of Peru, the king of Spaine ſhould be inforced to agree with them: if not (ſayd he) we ſhall not lacke them that will ſuccour vs, to haue the riches of Peru. By theſe perſwaſions he brought many ſouldiers to be of his minde, and conſpired alſo with a young gentleman of Siuill called Don Fernando de Guſman (who was in loue with a young woman which the captaine Pedro de Orzua had, and therefore did the ſooner agree vnto the wicked intent of Agira) to murther the captaine. Who on a night being aſleepe in his bed, the ſaid conſpirators and their faction entered into his bed-chamber, and there ſtabbed him with their daggers; which being done, they ſlew alſo all the Captaines that were his friends, and therewithall made a great out-cry, ſaying, God ſaue the king, God ſaue the king: whereupon all the campe was in an vprore. Then Lopez de Agira made vnto the ſouldiers a long oration, and got them all to conſent vnto him, ſome by force, and ſome becauſe they durſt not ſay to the contrary, and others of their good will, and ſo in the end they all agreed vnto his determined purpoſe. Then made they Fernando de Guſman their head, & Agira was made a captaine. This done, becauſe the people ſhould the better hold their opinion, he did as great a villany as euer any Spaniard cōmitted: for he made an altar, wheron he and all the ſouldiers renounced their ſeruice vnto the king of Spaine, & ſo as people without a king, choſe the ſaid Don Fernando to be their king, and did homage vnto him. Theſe matters being thus finiſhed they conſulted among themſelues which ſhould be the beſt way for them to goe to Peru? For they could not goe vp the riuer, by which they came downe, in regarde of the ſtrong current, and going backe ouerland they ſhould be very weake for want of horſemen: wherefore they determined to goe downe the riuer. Then ſaide Lopez de Agira, that they would carry nothing with them but the pinneſſes & ſouldiers which ſhould fight, and that it were beſt to leaue behind them all the Indians which they brought from Peru, with the women and the ſicke men. Whereunto the Generall Don Ferdinando would not agree, becauſe he knew that when they were gone the people of the countrey would kill them all. Lopez de Agira hearing this, and longing to be chiefe gouernour himſelfe, tooke vnto him 30 of his owne countreymen of his diſpoſition, and on the ſudden ſlew Don Fernando, whom not many dayes before he had ſworne to obey: & now by his ſubtill practiſes, being withall eloquent in his talke, he cauſed the ſouldiers to appoint himſelfe their gouernour, & made them beleeue that all the cruelties committed were for their ſaueguard: neither did the tyrannie of this wretched man here ende. He was borne in Biskay a countrey neere vnto France, wherefore I beleeue him rather to haue beene a Frenchman then a Spaniard, for that in the heart of a Spaniard could not be ſo much crueltie as this man ſhewed. Now being readie to goe his way, he determined not to carry with him any gentlemen or perſons of qualitie, and therefore he ſlew all ſuch perſons; and then departing onely with the common ſouldiers, he left behind him all the Spaniſh women and ſicke men, with all other creatures. If I ſhould rehearſe all the cruell murthers of this wicked man one by one, I ſhould be ouer tedious vnto you. Onely in fewe words I ſay, that this man proceeded downe the riuer, hauing with him onely foure hundred men: but before he paſſed the riuer, and was come to Margarita, he had no more left but two hundred and thirty men, for the reſt hee had put to death, and left on ſhore among the people of the countrey: all which tyranny he vſed, becauſe he euer ſtood in feare of his life: for had he ſeene at any time but two ſouldiers talking together, he would ſtreight ſuſpect that they were conſpiring of his death, and therefore he vſed the practiſes aboueſaide. And he neuer went any way, but that hee had in his company thirtie Biſcaines of his owne will and minde readie to execute his cruell purpoſes.

Great ſtore of gold in the riuer of Marannon.

Amazones women which helpe their huſbands in the warres.

Good ſtore of golde.

Lopez de Agira arriueth at Margarita 1568.

As theſe ſouldiers with their Captaine came downe the riuer, they ſawe many Canoas with golde in them paſſing too and fro, and people on both ſides of the riuer, and in their paſſage many times they landed, and got good ſtore of golde and victuals. Now alſo did they finde that to be true which Orellana had reported, namely that there were Amazones, that is to ſay, women that fight in the warres with bowes and arrowes: but theſe women fight to aide their huſbands, and not by themſelues alone without the companie of men, as Orellana reported. There were of theſe women vpon diuers partes of this riuer, who ſeeing the Spaniardes fighting with their huſbandes came in to ſuccour them, and ſhewed themſelues more valiant then their huſbandes; for which cauſe it was named, The riuer of Amazones. The Spaniardes intent was onely to paſſe downe the riuer, neither ſought they at all to diſcouer the Inland, and yet they tooke good ſtore of golde, putting it into one of their Pinneſſes, where Lopez de Agira himſelfe was embarked, which Pinneſſe at the mouth of the riuer was caſt away, but he himſelfe eſcaped, becauſe he had not as yet fulfilled his bloodie minde. And when he was come to the Ilande of Margarita, the Gouernour thereof ſuppoſing he had bene one of the kings loyall captaines, receiued him with pinneſſes, and brought good ſtore of victuals vnto him. But he putting the ſayd Gouernour immediatly to death, landed on the Iland, and tooke it and two ſhippes that were there, and conſtrained likewiſe an hundred and fiftie men, which he there found, to goe with him, beſides others that went voluntarily, carrying from thence good ſtore of victuales, and many horſes alſo. And then he returned to the maine land, ſaying, that with his ſmall forces hee would ſubdue the whole Indias: imagining belike that all the olde ſouldiers and poore people, at the firſt ſight of him, would turne to his ſide and take his part. Howbeit he was foulely deceiued: for before he had marched two dayes iourney vp into the land, the Gouernour of Nueua Granada came againſt him with a power of men: but Lopez de Agira hoping that other ſouldiers would haue ioyned themſelues vnto him, whereby his ſtrength might haue beene the more, was quite fruſtrate of his expectation: for euen his owne men left him, and tooke part with the kings Captaine. Nowe ſeeing himſelfe thus left deſtitute of his ſouldiers, and voide of all helpe, he committed a more vnnaturall bloodie act then euer Nero the tyrant did, for he murthered his owne daughter being but ſixteene yeeres of age, which he had brought with him out of Peru: the cauſe why he killed her was, that ſhe might not become a concubine to villaines, nor be called the daughter of a traytor: and theſe words he vſed vnto her, ſo ſoone as he had giuen her her deaths wound: but before he could finiſh this cruell act, the ſouldiers came vpon him, and cut him in pieces, alſo his daughter died of her wound in that place.

Great riches hidden within the riuer of Marannon.

Thus haue you heard the miſerable ende of this bloodie caitife: in regarde of whoſe treacherous and miſchieuous dealing the king would neuer ſince ſuffer this riuer to bee throughly diſcouered; ſo that the riches and treaſure of the ſaid riuer remaine vnknowen euen vntill this preſent day.

The coaſt of Braſill, why it was ſo called, and by whom it was at the firſt diſcouered

Now leauing to diſcourſe any longer of this riuer of Marannon, all the coaſt betweene the ſaide riuer and the riuer of Plate, is called The coaſt of Braſill, taking that name from a kinde of wood in the ſame countrey, called Braſill-wood, whereof there is great ſtore in thoſe partes. This coaſt of Braſill was firſt diſcouered by Pedro Aluarez Cabral, in the ſecond voyage which the king of Portugall cauſed to be made to the Eaſt Indies: and the foreſayde Pedro Aluarez tooke poſſeſſion of this land for the king of Portugall: whereupon the king Don Emanuel hearing newes thereof ſent preſently ſhippes to diſcouer the whole countrey, and found it to be part of America otherwiſe called The Weſt Indies: for which cauſe there grewe ſome controuerſie betweene him and the king of Spaine: but being kinſmen and great friends one to another, they agreed in the end, that the king of Portugall ſhould holde all the countrey that he had diſcouered, the which was (as I haue ſaid) from the riuer of Marannon to the riuer of Plate; albeit the Spaniards affirme, that it ſtretcheth no further then the Iland of Santa Catelina; whereupon there haue riſen many controuerſies betweene the Portugales and Spaniardes, which haue coſt many men their liues.

There came into the ſaid riuer of Plate in the yeere 1587 two Engliſh ſhips and a Pinneſſe of the right Honourable the Earle of Cumberland, which were bound for the ſtreights of Magellan, and ankored ten leagues within the ſaid riuer before a little Iland lying hard by another called Seal-Iland. On which Iland the Captaine of one of the ſhips called Chriſtopher Liſter, and his whole company landing, found the king of Portugales armes grauen on a rocke by the ſea ſide; which are thought to haue beene there engrauen by one Martin Alonſo de Souza, who was ſent by the king Don Emanuel to diſcouer this coaſt. Therefore I thinke the Portugales haue reaſon for that which they alleage concerning the extenſion of the ſaid coaſt of Braſil. Wherefore the king of Portugall gaue this land to diuerſe of his gentlemen to inhabite. Moſt of the naturall inhabitants of this countrey are very rude, and goe ſtarke naked both men and women, and are man-eaters; for which cauſe they make warres one againſt another to get men to eate; they are ſtout and good bow-men. The firſt place inhabited on this coaſt beyonde the riuer of Maranon is called Fernambuck ſo named by the Indians, but in Portugall it is called Villa de Olinda. Before you come to this place there is a port called Paraiua, vnto which port not many yeeres paſt the Frenchmen hearing of the troubles which were then in Portugall reſorted, and built there a fort; whereunto certaine French ſhips made yeerely voyages to lade Braſil-wood. But they of Fernambuck, with the helpe of the Spaniardes, went and burnt fiue french ſhippes within the port, and tooke the fort it ſelfe, and the Frenchmen that were there fled part into the mountaines, and part of them were ſlaine; ſo that ſince that time the Spaniardes haue inhabited there till this preſent. Nowe to returne to Fernambuck inhabited by a Portugall Captaine called Duarte Coelio, it is the greateſt towne in all that coaſt, and hath aboue three thouſand houſes in it, with ſeuentie Ingenios for ſugar, and great ſtore of Braſill-wood and abundance of cotton, yet are they in great want of victuals: for all their victuals come either from Portugall or from ſome places vpon the coaſt of Braſill. The harbour of this towne is a barred harbour, and fit onely for ſmall barkes: this place belongeth as yet vnto the ſonne of Duarte Coëlio. Beyond this towne lyeth the Cape of Sant Auguſtin, and next thereunto is the riuer of Sant Franciſco, which is a great riuer. Betweene this riuer and Bayha it is all a wilderneſſe inhabited with cruell ſaluages, for whomſoeuer they take they kill and eate him. The towne of Bayha belongeth to the king, and therefore the gouernour of all the coaſt keepeth his reſidence in the ſame, as alſo the biſhop. It containeth 1000 houſes, & 40 Ingenios for ſugar, and hath much cotton, but no Braſill-wood at all. The ſea runneth vp into the countrey here 14 or 15 leagues, where they get ſome yeres good ſtore of Amber-grieſe. Here is great plentie of victuals, and although the countrey be hot, yet is it healthfull, & the aire holeſome. The next towne vpon the coaſt called As Ilhas, or The Iles, is but a ſmall towne, containing not aboue 150 houſes, and but three Ingenios for ſugar. Moſt of the inhabitants are labouring men, which vſe to carry victuals in their ſmall barkes vnto Fernambuck: their Lord is called Lucas Giraldo.

The next place vnto this is called Puerto Seguro: it conſiſteth of 4 ſmall townes, which containe not in all aboue 300 houſes. The inhabitants of this towne alſo liue by carrying of victuals along the coaſt; and the towne it ſelfe belongeth to the Duke de Auero. Hard by this port begin the ſholdes which they call Abrolhos; and theſe ſholdes lie aboue 25 leagues into the ſea.

The ſholdes called Abrolhos.

The next habitation of Chriſtians beyond theſe ſholdes is Eſpirito Santo which conſiſteth of two townes, both of them contayning about 300 houſes: and they belong to a gentleman called Vaſques Fernandes de Coutinho.

Eſpirito Santo.

From hence you paſſe along the coaſt to the riuer of Ienero, which hath about three hundred houſes. In this place the Frenchmen firſt inhabited, whoſe Captaine was called Monſieur de Villegagnon. The ſaid Captaine made here a fort, and planted good ordinance thereon, and laded euery yeere great ſtore of Braſill-wood from hence, and had great friendſhip with the ſaluage people, who did him good ſeruice, by reaſon whereof the Frenchmen reaped much benefite out of this countrey. But the king of Portugall ſent out a power againſt the Frenchmen, who firſt tooke the french ſhippes by ſea, and then landed and beſieged the fort, and at length tooke it, and the Captaine thereof: vnto whom, becauſe he was a gentle perſon, and neuer hurt the Portugales, they gaue thirtie thouſand ducats for his ordinance, and for all other things that were in the fort, and ſo ſent him for France. Since which time the Portugales haue inhabited this riuer. There are at this preſent onely two Ingenios, but great ſtore of Braſill-wood, with plentie of victuals.

Rio de Ienero.

From this riuer of Ienero they paſſe along the coaſt to Sant Vincente, which hath 4 townes, the greateſt whereof is called Santos, and conſiſteth of foure hundred houſes, there are alſo three Ingenios. A fewe yeeres paſt there came two Engliſh ſhips into this harbour which were going for the Streights of Magellan. Who being in this port, there came thither three of the king of Spaines ſhips, and fought with the Engliſhmen, but the Engliſhmen ſunke one of their ſhips, and therefore the king commanded a fort to be made, to the ende that no Engliſh ſhippes that were bound for the ſtreights of Magellan ſhould victuall there, the which fort ſtandeth on the mouth of the harbour. This countrey belongeth to a Gentleman called Martin Alonſo de Souza: this is the laſt inhabited place vpon all the coaſt of Braſill. This coaſt of Braſill is very full of mountaines, and hath much raine falling vpon it, for which cauſe they cannot goe from towne to towne by land: all the habitations of this countrey are by the ſea ſide. From Sant Vincente the coaſt is all mountainous, till you come to the Iſle of Santa Catelina, and from this Iland till you come euen to the ſtraights of Magellan, the coaſt is very plaine and without woods.

La Aſcenſion 300 leagues vp the riuer of Plate.

Santa Fe.

Hauing proceeded thus farre, it will not be amiſſe to ſpeake ſomewhat of the riuer of Plate, which is one of the greateſt riuers in all the world: for at the mouth it is aboue fiue and twentie leagues from land to land: and the Spaniards haue gone vp in it aboue ſixe hundred leagues, and could not attaine to the head thereof. The firſt Spaniard that entered this riuer, and inhabited the ſame was called Solis, who paſſed vp 100 leagues into it, and called it by the name of Rio de la Plata, that is to ſay, The riuer of ſiluer, becauſe of the fine and cleare water that is in it, for I haue not heard of any ſiluer that euer was found there. The ſaide Solis returned into Spaine, without any further ſearch into this riuer: howbeit another Captaine called Sebaſtian Cabota went vp this riuer 150 leagues, and built a fort, which fort ſtandeth vntill this preſent: where leauing his ſhips, he went higher vp the riuer in ſmal Pinneſſes, and all along as he went he found many Indians: but finding neither gold nor ſiluer, nor ought elſe of any great value, he returned to his ſhips, and ſayled for Spaine. Not many yeeres after a certaine Gentleman called Don Pedro de Mendoça furniſhed forth a great fleete of ſhips, wherein were ſhipped a thouſand men, fortie mares, and twentie horſes, with all other creatures to inhabite this riuer: and comming thither he went vp into the countrey to ſee what riches he could there finde, leauing all his ſtuffe, cattle, and prouiſion at a place called Buenos Ayeres, ſo named in regard of the freſhneſſe of the ayre, and the healthfulneſſe of his men, during their abode there: this place was eightie leagues within the riuer, and here he landed firſt: at this place the riuer is aboue ſeuen leagues broad, and very low land on both ſides without trees. This riuer is very often ſubiect to great and ſudden ſtormes, ſo that with a ſtorme this Don Pedro loſt eight of his ſhips, and in the reſt he returned for Spaine, ſaying to his men, that he would goe ſeeke victuals, and ſo left the greater part of them behinde. In his way homeward he died, and the poore men which he left behind him, for the moſt part of them died for hunger alſo, becauſe in that place there were very few Indians, and therefore but ſmall ſtore of victuals, onely they liued by hunting of Deere, and by fiſhing. Of all the men that Don Pedro left behind him there were but two hundred remaining aliue, who in the ſhip-boates went higher vp the riuer, leauing in the place called Buenos Ayeres their mares and horſes: but it is a wonder to ſee, that of thirty mares and ſeuen horſes which the Spaniards left there, the increaſe in fortie yeeres was ſo great, that the countrey is 20 leagues vp full of horſes; whereby a man may coniecture the goodneſſe of the paſture, and the fruitfulneſſe of the ſoile. The Spaniards that went vp this riuer paſſed three hundred leagues, and found the countrey ful of Indians: who had great plenty of victuals, among whom the Spaniards dwelt as their friends, and the Indians beſtowed their daughters in mariage vpon them, and ſo they dwelt altogether in one towne, which the Spaniards called La Aſcenſion, and it ſtandeth on the North ſide of the riuer. The foreſaid Spaniardes were twentie yeres in this place, before any newes of their inhabiting vpon this riuer was brought into Spaine: but waxing olde, and fearing that when they were dead, their ſons which they had begotten in this countrey being very many, ſhould liue without the knowledge of any other Chriſtians; they determined among themſelues to build a ſhip, and to ſende newes into Spaine with letters vnto the king of all things that had paſſed among them, vpon that riuer. Theſe newes being brought to the king, he ſent three ſhips, with a Biſhop and certaine Prieſts, and Friers, and more men and women to inhabite, with all kind of cattell. when this ſuccour was come, they inhabited in two places more on the North ſide of the riuer, and trauelled three hundred leagues beyond the Aſcenſion; but finding neither gold nor ſiluer, they returned backe againe vnto the Aſcenſion. The people are ſo multiplyed in this citie, that now it is one of the greateſt in all the Indias, and containeth aboue two thouſand houſes. The countrey adioyning is exceeding fruitfull, abounding with all kinds of victuals, & with ſugar and cotton. From this citie of Aſcenſion 150 leagues towards the mouth of the riuer ſtandeth another towne which they call Santa Fe, on the South ſide of the ſaid riuer, from which towne there lyeth an open high way leading into the land of Peru, ſo that when I come to intreat of Peru I wil ſpeake of this way, and declare who firſt found it. Alſo fiue yeeres paſt they haue inhabited anew the towne of Buenos Ayres on the South ſide of the riuer, to the end they might haue trade from the coaſt of Braſill, but their fortune was ſuch, that the very firſt time they went to Braſill, and would haue returned againe to the riuer of Plate, they were taken by two ſhips of England that were going for the ſtreights of Magellan.

Two Engliſh ſhips, whereof M. Fenton was Generall 1582.

The coaſt along from this riuer to the ſtreights of Magellan hath not bene perfectly diſcouered, either by ſea or lande, ſauing onely certaine portes which they haue found, ſayling to the ſtreights. Wherefore paſſing them ouer, I will here intreat of the ſaide ſtreights, and declare who was the firſt finder of them, as likewiſe what was the cauſe why they were ſought for. The Portugales therefore hauing firſt found and conquered the Eaſt Indies, and diſcouered the coaſt of China, with the Ilands of the Malucos,(all which places abound with gold,precious ſtones, ſilkes, and other rich commodities) and bringing home the foreſaide riches in their ſhips into Portugall: there grewe by this meanes great enuie betweene the Portugales and their neighbours the Spaniardes; inſomuch that the Councell of Spaine ſaide vnto the Emperour Charles the fift being then their king, that the Portugales would be Lordes of all the riches of the world. Vpon which wordes beganne a controuerſie betweene the Emperour and the king of Portugall: but they being great friends before, and alſo kinſmen, agreed immediatly to part the whole world betweene them, in ſuch wiſe as I for my part could neuer vnderſtand the certaintie thereof. The world being thus diuided, a Portugal-gentleman called Fernando Magellanes borne in a place of Portugall called Punta de la barte, being of a good houſe,& very wel ſeene in coſmographie, and an excellent Pilot, as alſo being offended with Don Emanuel his Soueraigne, departed out of Portugall into Spaine, and affirmed to the Councell of Spaine, that the Iſles of the Malucos were in that part of the worlde which was allotted to the king of Spaine, and that he would finde a ſhorter way thither then the Portugales tooke, and layed before them ſuch infallible reaſons,that the Councell giuing credite vnto his wordes ſent him to ſea with fiue ſhips and 400 men all very well appointed. With theſe fiue ſhips ſetting ſaile from S. Lucar, he came to the coaſt of Braſill, where at that time two places were inhabited by Portugales, and ſo ſayling on along that coaſt he paſſed by the riuer of Plate, which riuer was diſcouered a little before by Solis. And notwithſtanding many ſtormes, and great mutinies among his companie, he came at length vnto 48 degrees, to the Southwards of the riuer of Plate: where he found an harbour, which he named Puerto de Sant Iulian, and wintered there: and there alſo he hanged 5 men, and put on ſhore a Prieſt, becauſe they would haue made the company to ſtand againſt their captaine,and ſo to haue returned backe againe. But in the end hauing pacified his men, he put to ſea,and within 5 dayes after he found the ſtreights, which by him were ſo much deſired: but before he entered the ſaid ſtreights there befell ſuch a mutinie in one of his ſhips, that the ſame ſhip returned backe againe. And ſo himſelfe with the other foure ſhips entering the ſtreights, one of the ſaid foure with all the men therein was caſt away at the very enterance: which loſſe notwithſtanding he proceeded on with the other three ſhips, and paſſing many troubles and dangers in this long diſcouery, ceaſed not to proſecute his intended voyage. This diſcouery was at the firſt thought very profitable vnto the Spaniards, but of late it hath prooued very hurtfull vnto them by meanes of certaine coaſters which haue ſayled the ſelfe ſame courſe. Theſe ſtreights ſtand in 52 degrees and a halfe of Southerly latitude. Alſo here is to be noted, that it is colder to the Southward of the line then to the Northward: in ſuch wiſe, that in forty degrees to the Southward the colde is more ſharpe, then in fiftie degrees to the North: experience doth alwaies ſhew the ſame; for it is as colde euen in the ſtreights of Magellan, as it is in ſixty degrees of Northerly latitude. Howbeit the colde is not the cauſe why nauigators frequent not the ſame, but the Weſterly and Southerly windes, which blowe moſt furiouſly on that coaſt, and that oftentimes out of the very mouth of the ſtreightes, and ſo continue for the moſt part of the yeere. Alſo there runneth ſometimes ſuch a ſtrong current, that if the winde and it goe all one way, the cables cannot holde, neither can the ſhip withſtand the force thereof. For which cauſe, and alſo for that there is no harbour, till you be paſſed 30 leagues into the ſaid ſtreights, moſt part of the ſhips that haue gone thither haue indured many troubles before they could come to the ſtreights, and being come to the mouth thereof they haue bene hindered by the current and winde, and ſo haue beene put backe againe. And to the end you may vnderſtand the truth, I will declare vnto you all the ſhippes that haue paſt through the ſaid ſtreights, ſince Magellan firſt found them, vnto this preſent yeere of 1586, when I haue once ended my diſcourſe of Magellan his owne voyage. Nowe you are by the way to vnderſtande, that the North ſide of the enterance of theſe ſtreights is plaine lande without any wood or trees: here are likewiſe ſome Indians though not many, yet are they very mightie men of bodie of ten or eleuen foot high, and good bow-men, but no man-eaters, neither haue they any victuals, but ſuch as they get by hunting and fiſhing; they couer their bodies with the ſkinnes of beaſts that they kill, to defend them from the colde: neither was there euer to this day any ſiluer or golde found among them or in their countrey. Theſe Streights (they ſay) extend in length from Eaſt to Weſt about an hundred and twentie leagues. At the middle of theſe ſtreights on the North ſide are many mountaines couered with ſnow, which mountaines ſtretch from thence along the frontiers of Chili, Peru, and Nueuo reino de Granada, euen vnto the ſhore of the North ſea at Santa Martha, as I haue before ſignified. It is a wonder to behold the exceeding heigth of theſe mountaines, and the way which they continue couered with ſnow, for euen vnder the Equinoctiall line they haue as much ſnowe vpon their tops as in 52 degrees. Alſo it is worthy the remembrance, that all this countrey towarde the South ſea is very fruitfull, and the people very diſcrecte and gentle: but all the coaſt towardes Braſill vpon the North ſea is poore, whereas neuer yet was found any commoditie of account, and the people themſelues are very cruell and ſaluage; for the will of God is, that good and ciuill men ſhould inhabite fruitfull countries. And for the better vnderſtanding hereof you muſt note, that all the land lying betweene the ſaid ridge of mountaines and the South ſea is called by the names of Chili, Peru, and Nueuo reino de Granada, which are the beſt and richeſt countreys in all the world: and moſt part of the land from the ſaid mountaines to the North ſea is called Braſill, being a mountainous countrey, * where as yet was neuer found either golde or ſiluer. From the ſaid mountaines in the middle of the ſtreights the land riſeth high, till you come to the end of the ſtreights where you enter into the South ſea, in which place next the South ſea the ſtreights are very dangerous, by reaſon of the ſholdes & rockes that lie on the North ſide. Thus Magellan after he had entered the South ſea, within 60 dayes came to the Iles of the Malucos, without touching at any land vntill he came thither: and ſo ſeeking there to lade his ſhips at an Iland inhabited by Moores, he was by them treacherouſly ſlaine. Now the Spaniards being too few for the managing of all three ſhips, becauſe many of them were dead, partly with ſicknes, and partly with the hardneſſe of the voiage, determined to abandon one of their ſaid ſhips, and ſo manned the other two: which two being laden with ſpices and other riches knew not what courſe they were beſt to take: howbeit at length it was determined, that one of theſe two ſhips ſhould go for Nueua Eſpanna, and the other for the cape of Buena Eſperança, and ſo for Spaine. The ſhip that went for Spaine was called The Victorie, the Pilot whereof was a Biſcain named Iuan Sebaſtian del Cano, to whom the king gaue great rewardes, and appointed him the globe for his armes, whereon was written: Primus omnium circundediſti me: that is, thou art the firſt man that euer ſayled about me.

Two ſhips of Genoa.

And albeit this voyage was ſo long and troubleſome as is before mentioned, yet many others haue attempted the ſame. And the next that ſought to paſſe the ſaid ſtreights of Magellan were two ſhips of Genoa, which comming as farre as the mouth of the ſtreights were by a mightie ſtorme driuen backe againe, and one of them, whoſe maſter was called Pancaldo, put into the riuer of Plate, and was caſt away about Buenos Aeres, where to this day part of the ſaid ſhip is to be ſeene, and ſome of the men are yet liuing in the riuer among the Spaniards: and the other ſhip returned to Genoa againe.

A fourth voyage to the ſtreights.

Alſo there was a biſhop of Placencia in Spaine, who coueting riches, ſet foorth a fleet of foure ſailes, to paſſe the ſtreights, and ſo to goe for the Malucos: and getting licenſe of the Emperour he ſent his ſaid 4 ſhips toward the ſtreights which had very faire windes till they came thither: but being entered 20 leagues within the ſtreights, a ſtorme of Weſterly windes tooke them, & droue 3 of them on ſhore, & the fourth backe into the ſea, which (the ſtorme being paſt) returned into the ſtreights to ſeeke for his conſorts, & found many men going on the ſhores ſide, but the ſhips were beaten all to pieces. So they on land called vnto the ſhip; but the captaine therof, conſidering that his ſhip was but little, & that he had but ſmall ſtore of victuals, would not go to them on ſhore, but proceeded on his voyage, & paſſed the ſtreights. And becauſe he was alone he would not ſaile to the Malucos, but went for the coaſt of Peru to the citie of Lima, where the ſhip remaineth vnto this day. The men of the other three ſhips, which were left in the ſtreights being to the number of two hundred and fiftie (whoſe Captaine being kinſman to the biſhop of Placencia was called * Queros) were neuer heard of vntill this preſent day, it being fortie yeres ſince they were left there. A yeare after this, certaine marchants of the Groine in Galicia ſet foorth other three ſhips, which ſhips alſo came to the ſtreights mouth, where one of them was caſt away with all the men, and the other two returned for Spaine.

A fift and ſixt voiage to the ſtreights of Magellan.

Alſo I haue had intelligence of certaine Portugall ſhips, which being come to the mouth of the Streights loſt two of their Pinneſſes which they ſent to diſcouer the land, and then returned back. And after theſe, two French ſhips were ſent from the riuer of Ienero by Monſieur de Villegagnon, legagnon, but being come to the latitude of 45. degrees, they were driuen backe by a ſtorme of contrary winds. After all this the gouernour of Chili called Don Garcia de Mendoça ſonne to the Marques of Cannette determining to diſcouer the ſayd Streights from the South ſea, ſent from Chili two ſhips vnder the conduct of a captaine called Latherelio: but the danger to ſeeke theſe Streights by the South ſea is more then by the North ſea, becauſe all the ſtormes of the North ſea come from the land, but in the South ſea all the windes and ſtormes come off the ſea, and force the ſhips to run vpon the lee-ſhore, inſomuch that the ſayd two ſhips were caſt away in fiftie degrees.

Two french ſhips ſent for the ſtreights of Magellan.

The ſeeking of theſe Streights of Magellan is ſo dangerous, and the voyage ſo troubleſome, that it ſeemeth a matter almoſt impoſſible to be perfourmed, inſomuch that for the ſpace of thirty yeeres no man made account thereof; vntill of late one Francis Drake an Engliſhman (of whom I haue before ſpoken) ſeeing hee could doe no good on the maine lande of the Weſt Indies to benefit himſelfe, becauſe of the galleys of Cartagena that kept the coaſt, determined to ſeeke the Streights of Magellan, and to paſſe into the South ſea. And ſo hauing prouided two ſhips and three pinneſſes in England, he proceeded on his voyage, and comming to the Iſlandes of Cape Verde tooke a Portugal ſhippe laden with wine, the Pilot whereof beeing a Portugal called Nuno da Sylua, hee caried along with him, who was a great helpe and furtherance vnto him in his voyage. And this which I ſhall here ſay, I had in writing of the Portugal pilot himſelfe.

Sir Francis Drakes voyage about ẏ world.

From the Iſlands of Cape Verde the ſayd Francis Drake ſailed vnto Port Sant Iulian, where he wintered: and there alſo hee put to death a gentleman of his company, becauſe hee would haue returned home. This port I take to bee accurſed, for that Magellan likewiſe put ſome to death there for the like offence.

The cauſe why M. Doury was beheaded.

This Francis Drake putting out of the ſayd port, entred the Streights, and within twelue dayes gotte into the South ſea. And two dayes after there aroſe ſuch a ſtorme of Weſterly windes (which are vſuall in thoſe parts) that he loſt his pinneſſe, and his Viceadmirall maſter Iohn Winter was driuen backe againe into the Streights, who paſſing many dangers returned home into England. But Francis Drake himſelfe ranne with this ſtorme into ſeuen and fifty degrees of Southerly latitude, where hee found an Iſland with a good harborough, and freſh water, and ſtayed at the ſame Iſland two moneths to repayre his ſhips: and then, the weather beeing faire, he proceeded on his voyage, and came to the coaſt of Chili to an Iſland called La Mocha; where hee went on ſhore, and talked with the Indians: but when hee would haue returned vnto his boate they ſhotte their arrowes at him, and killed two of his men, and hee himſelfe was wounded in the face.

Going from thence hee paſſed by the towne of Concepcion not knowing the place, and ſo to Valparizo which is the port of Sant Iago, where hee found a ſhip laden with a kind of victuals and wine, and had in her beſides threeſcore thouſand pezos of gold, euery pezo being worth eight ſhillings ſterling: and taking this ſhip with him hee went from thence to another port called Coquimbo: where ſeeing many cattell on the land, he ſent preſently ſome of his men with caliuers to kill of the ſayd cattell: but being eſpied of the Spaniards that dwelt in the towne, they ſent twelue horſemen to ſee what they were that killed their cattell, for they knew them not: and comming neere vnto them, the Engliſhmen fled to their boates, but the horſemen ouertooke one of them who had a halbard in his hand, whom the Spaniards thought to haue taken: but hee with his halbard killing one of their horſes was himſelfe runne through with a lance, and ſo the Spaniards carried him dead with them into the towne. The next day the newes came to Sant Iago, that they were Engliſhmen, and how they had taken the ſhippe out of the harbour of Valparizo: whereupon they of Sant Iago ſent a Poſt by land to giue warning vnto them of Peru. Howbeit by reaſon that the countrey betweene this place and Peru is not inhabited for the ſpace of two hundreth leagues, and many huge and colde mountaines couered with ſnowe lie in the way, the Poſte was ſo long in perfourmance of this iourney, that captaine Drake was vpon the coaſt of Peru a moneth before the ſayd Poſte came thither: neither could they ſend any newes by ſea, becauſe they were deſtitute of ſhipping.

The port of Coquimbo in 29 deg 30 min.

Captaine Drake departing from Coquimbo ſayled to another porte not inhabited, where he ſet vp a pinneſſe. And going from thence, the next place where he touched was a porte vpon the coaſt of Peru called los Peſcadores: and there hee landed, and in one of the fiſhermens houſes found of a Spaniards three thouſand pezos of ſiluer in little barres.

Los Peſcadores.

From hence he went to another port called Arica, which being the next towne to Chili that the Spaniards haue in all Peru, containeth an hundreth houſes: and this is the porte where they diſcharge charge their merchandize that paſſe from Lima to Potoſſi, and to all other cities within the land, and likewiſe at this place they were wont to embarke all the ſiluer which they caried for Panamá. At this port of Arica he found a ſhip that had in her thirteene thouſand pezos of ſiluer, which hauing taken out, he burned the ſayd ſhip, and after thought to haue landed, but ſeeing both horſemen and footemen on ſhore hee would not, but proceeded on his voyage. Since captaine Drake was at this porte they carie their ſiluer by land to Lima, and lade no more treaſure here, but onely diſcharge the merchants goods that come from Spaine hither. Alſo they haue built a forte at this place for the better ſafety of the inhabitants, and haue planted it with ten pieces of Ordinance, and euery ſummer there lie in gariſon an hundred ſouldiers beſides the towneſmen. From hence he ſayled to another porte called Chuli: in which port was a ſhip that had three hundred thouſand pezos of ſiluer in barres: but they had ſent horſemen from Arica to giue aduertizement of Drakes being on the coaſt, which newes came but two houres to the towne before his arriuall at the ſayd porte: whereupon the Maſter of the ſhippe hauing no leiſure to carie his ſiluer on ſhore, was forced to throwe it into the ſea in ſixe fadome water, where his ſhip road, and ſo to runne on ſhore in the ſhippes boate. And captaine Drake comming aboord the ſhip was told by an Indian, that the Maſter had throwen the ſiluer ouerboord. Wherfore ſeeing that newes began to run of him from towne to town he ſtayed not here, but ran along the coaſt: and becauſe he would haue no lets, he caſt off the ſhip which he had taken at Sant Iago, with neuer a man in her, which ſhip was neuer heard of after. And ſo without ſtaying any where he ſhaped his courſe for Lima, and comming to the harborough of Lima called El Callao, being two leagues diſtant from Lima it ſelfe, (for Lima ſtandeth vp into the land) hee arriued there one day, before the newes of him was brought to Lima, and found the men in the ſhips without ſuſpicion. And as hee entred into the port, there came in alſo a ſhip from Panamá laden with merchandize, and hee ſent his pinneſſe to take her: but the men forſaking the ſhip betooke them to their boate, and went on ſhore: and as the Engliſhmen followed the boat, a Spaniard that was therein ſhot a piece, and ſlew one of captaine Drakes men in the pinneſſe. Wherefore hee followed the boat no farther, but went with his pinneſſe into the harbour among fourteene ſaile of ſhips that lay there, in all which ſhips there was not a man that had ſo much as a ſword or a piece to moleſt him, wherefore hee did with leſſe feare go from ſhip to ſhip, aſking them if there were any ſhips gone for Panamá; for he knew wel, that the ſhips which goe for Panamá carie both ſiluer & gold, neither ſought he for any thing elſe, for there were marchandize enough for him in thoſe ſhips, if hee had bene deſirous to haue had the ſame. So they told him that three dayes paſt there was a ſhip gone for Panamá which caried all the merchants ſiluer thither. Whereupon he preſently ſet ſaile towards Panamá; for when hee came into this port it was about midnight, ſo that the Spaniards could not ſee what ſhips he had. At laſt the newes came to Lima vnto the Viceroy of Peru, that there were enemies in the harbor, but they knew not what they were. Wherefore the Viceroy & all the people were in great feare, leſt ſome Spaniards had made a mutinie, and put themſelues in armes: and ſo the next morning himſelfe accōpanied with 2000 horſemen & footmen came from the citie down to the waters ſide, and finding ſome of the Engliſhmens arrowes that were ſhot at the boat, out of which their man was ſlain, they knew them to be Engliſhmen: and then they were al in quiet, ſeeing it was but one ſhip, for as yet the ſhip lay becalmed 3 dayes before the towne. Whereupon they forthwith prouided 2 ſhips with 200 men in them, to boord captain Drake or els to burne his ſhip; and after the ſhips went 2 ſmall pinneſſes, becauſe that if any of the ſhips ſhould be ſunke, they might ſaue the men. But it was a day & a halfe before theſe things could be made ready, & in the end going forth they found yͤ Engliſh ſhip ſtill becalmed, & the calme was ſuch, that the Spaniards could not come at them. The ſame night, the wind blowing afreſh gale, the Spaniards returned into the harbour, and captaine Drake ſet forward to Panamá. The cauſe of the Spaniards returne was, for that they had no Ordinance, nor victuals to tarry any longer out. Then the Viceroy cauſed ſixe pieces of Ordinance to bee made, neither could hee make any more, in regard of the ſhortneſſe of time: ſo with theſe pieces of Ordinance, and three ſhippes, and two hundred and fifty men in them hee ſent after captaine Drake; who after hee had winde ſtayed no where, nor tooke any ſhips at all, notwithſtanding hee met with many comming from Panamá laden with merchandize, but ſtill hee inquired after the ſhippe that was gone to Panamá before him: of which ſhip he had ſight about the cape of Sant Franciſco, the Maſter wherof was a Biſkaine, called Iuan de Anton: who ſeeing this ſhip of the Engliſhmens, thought that the Viceroy of Peru had ſent him ſome meſſage, and therefore ſtrooke all his ſailes: but ſo ſoone as hee might diſcerne the ſhippe ſomewhat better, hee would then faine haue gone his way, for hee knew that it was none of that coaſt, and then hee began to hoiſe his ſailes, but could by no meanes get from Captaine Drake becauſe becauſe hee was within the reach of his great Ordinance, for the Spaniards not hauing ſo much as a rapier to defend themſelues, were ſoone conſtrained to yeelde. There were in this ſhippe aboue eight hundred and fifty thouſand pezos of ſiluer, and forty thouſand pezos of gold, all which ſiluer and golde was cuſtomed; but what ſtore of treaſure they had beſides vncuſtomed I knowe not, for many times they cary almoſt as much more as they pay cuſtome for; otherwiſe the king would take it from them, if they ſhould be knowen to haue any great ſumme; wherefore euery ſhippe carieth his bill of cuſtome, that the king may ſee it. All this treaſure that captaine Drake tooke was merchants and other mens goods, ſauing one hundred and eighty thouſand pezos of the kings. He had alſo out of this ſhip good ſtore of victuals with other neceſſaries, which were to bee caried for Panamá, and was fiue dayes taking out of ſuch things as hee needed. This done, he ſayled from hence to the coaſt of Nueua Eſpanna without going to Panamá. Surely this was a great plague of God iuſtly inflicted vpon vs for our ſinnes: for the taking of theſe ſhips is an eſpeciall cauſe of all the dangerous warres that are likely to enſue betweene Spaine and England.

Read Nuno da Sylua concerning this treaſure.

Now the ſhips that were ſent by the Viceroy of Peru from Lima after Francis Drake, arriued at Cape Sant Franciſco twenty dayes after hee had taken the foreſayd ſhippe, and had intelligence by a ſhip comming from Panamá, which they met at the ſayd cape, that Francis Drake had taken the ſhip with ſiluer, and was not gone for Panamá. Whereupon the captaine of the three ſhips thinking that captaine Drake had bene gone for the Streights of Magellan, directed his courſe that way to ſeeke him.

Captaine Drake carried from the coaſt of Peru eight hundreth ſixty ſixe thouſand pezos of ſiluer, which is as much as eight hundred ſixty ſixe quintals, at 100 pound weight the quintal, euery quintal being worth one thouſand and two hundreth ducats of Spaine; all which ſumme amounteth to a million and thirtie nine thouſand and two hundreth ducats. Beſides this ſiluer hee caried away a hundred thouſand pezos of gold, that is ten quintals, each quintal being valued at a thouſand fiue hundreth Spaniſh ducats, which laſt ſumme amounteth to an hundreth and fifty thouſand ducats: ouer and beſides the treaſure in the ſayd ſhip which was vncuſtomed (the value whereof I cannot learne) conſiſting of pearles, precious ſtones, reals of plate, and other things of great worth.

With all this purchaſe he ſayled toward Nueua Eſpanna; and at an Iſland lying before that coaſt called The Iſland of Cano hee diſcharged all things out of his ſhippe and graued her, and remained there ten dayes. From thence hee went along the coaſt of Nueua Eſpanna, where hee tooke certaine ſhips laden with ſpices, ſilkes, and veluets, but no golde nor ſiluer, for there was none to bee had on this coaſt. And here at Guatulco he ſet on ſhore his Portugal-pilot, which he tooke at one of the Iſlands of Cape Verde. But what courſe he kept from this coaſt till he came into England I know not of certainety, and therefore I will not meddle therewithall.

The Iſland of Cano.

The foreſayd three ſhips which were ſent in purſuit of captaine Drake, returned backe againe to Lima without doing of ought. All which notwithſtanding, the Viceroy of Peru determined to ſend two ſhips to the Streights of Magellan, either to meete with captaine Drake there, or elſe to ſee if they could fortifie the ſayd Streights againſt ſuch ſhips as might afterward attempt to paſſe through the ſame. And albeit this was thought a moſt dangerous voyage, and impoſſible to be performed, by reaſon of the ſholds on that ſide of the Streights, yet ſent he forth the two ſaid ſhips. The Admirall being a ſhip of an hundreth tunnes, and the other of eighty tunnes, & hauing one hundreth and twenty men in them both, ſayled from Lima vnder the conduct of Pedro Sarmiento, who was then accompted the beſt nauigator in all Peru. Theſe ſhips after their departure touching on the coaſt to take in victuals, were nine moneths before they came to the latitude of the Streights, and there were they encountred with a cruel ſtorme: but Pedro Sarmiento being a man of good courage, bare in with the land in this ſtorme, & in a night hee was put into the ſtreits, not knowing how nor which way; and the other ſhip running farther into the ſea, ſayled to 58 degrees of Southerly latitude. The ſtorme being paſt, this other ſhippe found many Iſlands neere vnto the main land, and ſo returned with faire weather all along the ſhore, neither could they find any other way to enter the Streights, but onely that which Magellan diſcouered: notwithſtanding that others affirme the contrary, ſaying that the Streights be full of Iſlands to the Southwards: but they may be deceiued, for if there be any other Streight, it is beyond 58 degrees, and hath neuer bene ſeene of any man: for this ſhip was fartheſt to the Southwards of all that euer I heard of: for Francis Drake being driuen by tempeſt no farther then 57 degrees could not know ſo much as this other; which ſhip from hence returned backe to Lima. But Pedro Sarmiento entred the Streights, where his men falling into a mutinie would haue returned to Lima; whereupon hanging one of them he proceeded on his voyage for Spaine. Where being arriued, he told the king that there were two narrow places in the Streights where he might build a forte, and that there was a very good countrey abounding with great ſtore of riches and other neceſſaries, and very well inhabited with Indians. Upon whoſe wordes, and for that there were more ſhips making ready in England to paſſe the ſayd Streights, the king ſent Diego Flores de Valdez with 23 ſhips and 3500 men, and a new gouernour to Chili with fiue hundred old ſouldiers newly come out of Flanders. Theſe ſhips had the hardeſt hap of any that euer went out of Spaine ſince the Indias were firſt diſcouered: for that before they could get cleere of the coaſt of Spaine, a ſtorme tooke them, and caſt away fiue of them, and aboue eight hundred men, and the reſidue of the fleete put into Cadiz. Notwithſtanding which hard ſucceſſe, the king ſent them word that they ſhould proceede: and ſo they did with ſixteene ſailes only, for two other of their ſhips were ſo ſhaken with the ſtorme, that they could not goe foorth. In theſe ſixteene ſaile of ſhips Pedro Sarmiento was ſent to be gouernour in the ſtreights: he caried with him all kind of artificers, to build forts, and other neceſſaries, with great ſtore of Ordinance and munition. This fleete becauſe it ſet late foorth, wintered on the coaſt of Braſil in the riuer of Ienero. Winter being paſt, they ſet ſayle from hence, and about the height of 42 degrees they had ſuch a ſtorme, that Diego Flores was faine to beate it vp and downe about 22 dayes; in which ſtorme was ſunke one of his beſt ſhips, and in her three hundred men and twenty women that went to inhabite the ſtreights, and moſt part of the munition that ſhould haue bene left in the ſtreights were all caſt away. In the ende the ſtorme grew ſo intollerable, that the ſhips not being able to endure it any longer were conſtrained to put backe againe vnto an Iſland called Santa Catelina: and there he found a barke wherein were certaine friers going for the riuer of Plate, which friers told him of two great Engliſh ſhips and a pinneſſe that had taken them, but tooke nothing from them, nor did them any harme, but onely aſked them for the king of Spaines ſhips. Now Diego Flores ſuppoſing that theſe Engliſh ſhips would go to the ſtreights, was himſelfe determined to go to the ſtreights alſo, though it was in the moneth of February: and choosing tenne ſhippes of the fifteene that were left, he ſent three of the reſidue that were old and ſhaken with the ſtorme (wherein he put all the women and ſicke men that were in the fleete) backe againe to the riuer of Ienero; leauing the other two ſhippes, which were not able to brooke the ſea, at the foreſayd Iſland; and ſo himſelfe with the ſayd ten ſhips returned againe for the ſtreights.

Two Engliſh ſhips vnder the conduct of M. Fenton and M. Luke Ward.

Now the three ſhips wherein the ſicke men and the women were embarked, came to the port of Sant Vincent: where finding the two foreſayd Engliſh ſhips, and vrging them to auoide the harbour, the Engliſh entred combat with them: and by reaſon that theſe three ſhips were weakened with former tempeſts, and were manned with the refuſe of all the Spaniſh fleete, the Engliſhmen eaſily put them to the worſt, and ſunke one of them, and might alſo haue ſunke another, if they had bene ſo minded; but they deſired not the deſtruction of any man: and doubtleſſe it is the greateſt valour that any man can ſhew, that when hee may doe hurte, he will not. Hereupon the Engliſhmen departed from this porte vnto Eſpirito Santo, where they had victuals for their merchandize: and ſo they returned home to England without doing any harme in the countrey. The cauſe why theſe Engliſh captaines went not to the ſtreights I know not: ſome ſay, that they were put backe by foule weather, others ſuppoſe that it was for feare of the kings ſhips: but the pinneſſe that belonged to theſe ſhippes wherein Iohn Drake went as captaine, departed from them: the cauſe why hee did ſo, is vnknowen: but this pinneſſe entred the riuer of Plate, and within fiue leaguas of Seale-iſland, not farre from the place where the Erle of Cumberlands ſhips tooke in freſh water, it was caſt away vpon a ledge of rockes; but the men were all ſaued in the boate. Who being eighteene in number went on ſhore vpon the Northſide of the Iſland, and paſſing tenne dayes iourney vp into the lande, they met with certaine Saluage people, which are no man-eaters, but take all the Chriſtians that they can get, and make them their ſlaues: howbeit the Engliſhmen fought with them, and being too fewe in number, fiue of them were ſlaine, and the other thirteene taken priſoners, who remained with the Saluages about fifteene moneths.

Iohn Drake.

But the Maſter of the pinneſſe called Richard Faireweather, being loth any longer to indure that miſerie wherein hee was, and hauing knowledge of a towne of Chriſtians on the other ſide of the riuer, called on a night Iohn Drake, and another yoong man which was with them, and tooke a Canoa being very little, and hauing but two oares, and paſſed therewith on the other ſide of the riuer, which is full nine leagues broade; and being three dayes before they could get ouer, they were much pined for lacke of meate. But comming to land, they hit vpon an high way that went towards the Chriſtians: and ſpying the footing of horſes, they followed it, and at laſt came to an houſe, neere vnto the which corne was ſowed. And there they met with Indians that were ſeruants to the Spaniards, who gaue them foode, and clothes to couer them withall, for they were all naked. And one of the ſayd Indians went to the towne, and caried newes of the Engliſhmen: whereupon the captaine of the towne ſent out foure horſemen, which brought them to the towne behinde them, and the ſayd captaine clothed them, and prouided lodging for them, and Iohn Drake ſate at the captaines owne table, and hee intreated them all very well, thinking to ſend them for Spaine. But the Viceroy of Peru hearing this newes ſent for them, and they ſent him Iohn Drake; but the other two they kept, becauſe they were maried in the countrey. Thus much concerning their affaires. Vpon theſe newes alſo there were prepared fifty horſemen to goe ouer the riuer, both to ſeeke the reſt of the Engliſhmen, and certaine Spaniardes which were amongſt thoſe Saluage people; but I am not aſſured whether they went forward or no.

Nowe let vs returne to Diego Flores: who paſſing from the Iſland of Santa Catelina towards the ſtreights of Magellan in the middle of February, and comming to the height of the riuer of Plate, ſent the gouernour of Chili with three ſhips vp the riuer to Buenos Ayres, that hee might from thence paſſe ouerland to Chili. Of theſe three ſhips two were loſt, but the men and prouiſions were ſaued; and the third returned for Spaine. Then Diego Flores with the other ſeuen ſhips proceeded on to the latitude of 52. degrees, whereas the mouth of the Streights beginneth: but becauſe it was the ende of March, which there is the latter ende of ſummer, the countrey was ſo full of ſnow, and withall there aroſe ſuch a ſudden ſtorme, that he could not ſet Sarmiento and his men on ſhore, but was conſtrained the ſecond time to returne vnto the riuer of Ienero vpon the coaſt of Braſil; where he heard newes of the Engliſh ſhips by the two Spaniſh ſhips that eſcaped from them. Vpon which newes he left his lieutenant Diego de Ribera, and Pedro Sarmiento, that they might the next yeere returne for the ſtreights. And ſo Diego Flores himſelfe with foure ſhips which were yet remaining vnto him, and other foure which the king ſent to ſuccour him, ſet forth to ſeeke the Engliſhmen; but hauing runne along all the coaſt of Braſil hee could not finde them, becauſe they were gone directly for England. Whereupon ſhaping his courſe vnto a port called Paraiua, and finding there fiue French ſhips, he burnt three and tooke two, and the fort alſo which the Frenchmen had built, and put Spaniardes therein, but the Frenchmen fledde into the mountaines to the Saluages. This done hee returned for Spaine.

The gouernour of Chili paſſeth thither by the riuer of Plate.

Foure ſhips more ſent to Diego Flores.

Fiue French ſhips taken at Paraiua.

In the meane ſeaſon his Lieutenant Diego de Ribera, and Pedro Sarmiento had the next yeere ſo good fortune, that they arriued ſafely in the ſtreights with all their ſhips, and ſet on ſhore foure hundreth men: but becauſe the ſhips boate could not land, being once laden, they ran that ſhip, which had all the victuals and munition in her, on ſhore in a bay, and as the water did ebbe they tooke all things out of her. This being done, Diego de Ribera left Sarmiento with foure hundreth men, thirtie women, and a ſhip, with victuals for eight moneths: and with the other three ſhippes hee returned, hauing remained in the Streights but eight dayes. Nowe Pedro Sarmiento built a towne at the mouth of the Streights on the North ſide, placing therein an hundreth and fiftie men: and from thence he went by land, and ſent the ſhip further into the ſtreights, and fiftie leagues within the Streights, at the narroweſt place of all, where there is a very good porte, hee built another towne, which he named The towne of king Philip; and would alſo haue made a forte, and planted Ordinance for the defence of the Streights: but the ſnowe and Winter was ſo intollerable, that hee could not bring it to perfection. Whereupon taking about 25 mariners with him into the foreſayd ſhip, hee ſayd hee would goe ſee howe his other people did, and ſo hee ſayled to the Streights mouth, vnto the towne which was firſt built; where hauing continued a day or two, he ſayd that a ſtorme put him from the Streights by force and brake his cables; but his men affirmed the contrary, that himſelfe cut his cables (God knoweth the trueth) and ſo he paſſed to the riuer of Ienero; and not finding there any ſuccour come from the king, he ſayled to Fernambuck, crauing ayde of the captaine to furniſh him with victuals. And ſo the captaine preſently fraighted his ſhip with victuals and clothes for his people left in the Streights, and ſo ſailed thitherward. But betweeen Cape S. Auguſtin and Baya the wind came off the ſea with ſuch violence, that it forced the ſhip to run on ſhore; where Sarmiento had three of his men drowned, and he with the reſt hardly eſcaped: and ſo this ſhip was loſt with all the prouiſion in her.

From thence hee paſſed by land to Baya where the gouernour of Braſil bought him a barke that lay in the harbour, lading the ſame with victuals and clothes for Sarmientos colonie. With this prouiſion and diuers other neceſſaries for his people hee tooke his voyage for the Streights, and comming to the height of foure and forty degrees, hee met on the ſudden with ſuch a furious ſtorme, that he was forced to throw his fraight ouerboord, and alſo to returne to the riuer of Ienero. Where ſtaying a whole yeere for ſuccour from the king, there came not ſo much as a letter from him. For the king was ſore diſpleaſed at Pedro Sarmiento, becauſe hee made him beleeue that the narroweſt place of the Streights was but a mile ouer: and that it might bee fortified ſo that a boate could not paſſe: whereas Diego de Ribera, and others certified the king, that it was about a league broade, and that if a ſhip came with winde and current, all the Ordinance in the world could not hurte it. Wherefore the king thought that Pedro Sarmiento had deceiued him, in making him to loſe ſo many men, and ſo much charges to no effect. And the gouernour of Baya ſeeing that the king wrote not vnto him, would giue him no more ſuccour: ſo that Sarmiento was conſtrained to make a voyage for Spaine in the ſame ſhippe, wherein hee laſt ſayled toward the Streights: and it is ſayd that hee was taken in the way by Engliſhmen, and caried into England. This Sarmiento hath caried the name to be the beſt Nauigator in all Spaine, and that hee hath ſayled the furtheſt of all others. After all this the captaine of the riuer of Ienero ſent a ſmal ſhip with victuals for the Streightes, which was put backe alſo in fortie degrees. And this is all the diſcouery of the Streights of Magellan, made as well by Spaniards as other nations vnto this preſent yeere 1586. It is foure yeeres ſince theſe poore and miſerable Spaniards were left in the Streights, from which time there hath no ſuccour gone vnto them, ſo God he knoweth whether they be dead or aliue.

Pedro Sarmiento was taken by ſir Walter Raleghs barkes 1586.

Maſter Candiſh found but 22 men liuing of them.

Thus according to my promiſe I haue declared vnto you to the vttermoſt of my knowledge, all things concerning the Indias, as farre as the very Streights of Magellan; thinking to haue proceeded along the coaſt, as at the firſt; but that the doings of captaine Drake and other captaines which attempted to paſſe the ſayd Streights haue cauſed mee to bee the longer in this my pretended worke. Howbeit now let vs proceede on forward from the Streights to the coaſt of Chili: the diſtance betweene which two places no man hath trauelled by land, in regard of the huge mountaines couered with ſnow that lie in the way: yea I may well ſay, that it hath not often bene trauelled by ſea; for that all the ſhips which haue paſſed that way haue at the leaſt gone thirty leagues off the ſhore, to auoide the ſholds and meny little Iſlands that lie neere the maine land; and therefore the inland of that coaſt remaineth as yet vnknowen.

Caſtro vpon the coaſt of Chili.

The firſt towne after you haue paſſed the Streights ſtandeth on the coaſt of Chili, and is called Caſtro, being ſituate vpon the worſt place of all the coaſt, for there is but ſmall ſtore of golde with ſcarcitie of victuals, and a ſharpe colde ayre. The harbour belonging to this towne is compaſſed about with ſo many ſholdes, that it will ſerue but to receiue ſmall barkes onely. The next towne to this is Baldiuia.

Baldiuia.

A deſcription of the prouince Chili.

But before I paſſe any farther I will heere deſcribe vnto you the ſituation and quality of Chili. This countrey ſtretcheth in length from North to South aboue two hundreth leagues, conteining in breadth but fiue and twenty leagues at the moſt.

Riuers rich of golde.

From the great ridge of mountaines lying to the Eaſt of Chili runne very many riuers into the ſea, which riuers are the cauſe of diuers valleys the fruitfulleſt in all the worlde, where bread, wine, and other victuals mightily abound: and the ſayd riuers alſo are very rich of gold. But to declare in fewe wordes the excellencie of this prouince, I ſay that it might well bee called an earthly paradiſe, ſaue that it lacketh one onely commodity, and that is peace. It was firſt diſcouered on this maner: the Spaniards hauing conquered the kingdome of Peru, (as I will hereafter ſhewe vnto you) found in the ſayd kingdome great ſtore of golde; and aſking the Indians from whence it came, they anſwered, from Chili. Vpon which newes Don Diego de Almagro being one of the principall captaines that conquered Peru made a voyage with three hundreth horſemen toward Chili, being conſtrained in his way to goe ouer part of the ſnowy mountaines, which way his Indian guides conducted him, to the ende that himſelfe and all his companie might die for colde. Howbeit the Spaniards, though they loſt ſome of their horſes, came to the firſt towne of Chili called Copiapo being ſituate vpon the firſt plaine at the entrance of the ſayd prouince. But hauing newes that the Indians were riſen againſt the Spaniards of Peru and had incloſed them, hee returned backe without going any farther.

Copiapo the next towne of Chili vnto Peru.

Nowe this captaine Don Diego de Almagro being ſlaine in the warres of Peru, another called Don Pedro de Baldiuia marching into Chili with foure hundreth horſes, eaſily conquered that halfe of the countrey which was ſubiect to the kings of Peru. For knowing that Peru, being the chiefe countrey of their Emperour, was ouercome by the Spaniards, they alſo immediately yeelded their lande vnto them. But the other halfe as it was the richeſt and the fruitfulleſt part, ſo God had peopled it with the moſt valiant and furious people in all America.

El eſtado de Arauco.

The prouince which they inhabite called El Eſtado de Arauco is but a ſmall prouince about 20 leagues in length, and is gouerned by ten principall men of the countrey, out of which tenne they chuſe the valianteſt man for their generall in the warres. The kings of Peru in times paſt could neuer conquere this part of Chili, nor yet any other kings of the Indians. The weapons vſed by theſe people of Arauco are long pikes, halbards, bowes and arrowes: they alſo make them iacks of ſeale-ſkinnes, and head-pieces: in times paſt the heads of their halbards and pikes were of braſſe, but now they haue gotten ſtore of yron. They pitch their battels in maner like the Chriſtians: for putting their pikemen in rankes, they place bowmen among them, and marſhall their troupes with diſcretion and great valour. Now the Spaniards comming vnto this prouince ſent word vnto them by other Indians, ſaying that they were the children of God, and came to teach them the word of God, and that therefore they ought to yeelde themſelues vnto them; if not, they would ſhoot fire among them and burne them. Theſe people not fearing the great words of the Spaniards, but deſiring to ſee that which they had heard reported, met them in the field, and fought a moſt cruell battell: but by reaſon of the Spaniards great ordinance and caliuers, they were in the end put to flight. Now theſe Indians thinking verily that the Spaniards were the children of God, becauſe of their great ordinance which made ſuch a noiſe, and breathed out ſuch flames of fire, yeelded themſelues vnto them. So the Spaniards hauing diuided this prouince made the Indians to ſerue their turnes for getting of gold out of the mines, which they enioyed in ſuch abundance, that hee which had leaſt had 20000 pezos, but Captaine Baldiuia himſelfe had 300000 pezos by the yeere. The fame of theſe riches in the end was ſpred as farre as Spaine; from whence ſoone after reſorted many Spaniards to the land of Chili, whom Captaine Baldiuia cauſed to inhabite ſixe townes: to wit, Villa nueua de la Serena called in the Indian tongue Coquimbo; the ſecond Sant Iago which the Indians call Mapocha; the third La Concepcion called by the Indians Penco; the fourth La Imperial; the fift Baldiuia; and the ſixt La Villa Rica. Alſo he built a fort in the middle of all the land, wherein hee put ordinance and ſouldiers: howbeit all this their good ſucceſſe continued not long: for the Indians in ſhort time perceiuing that the Spaniards were but mortall men as well as they, determined to rebell againſt them: wherefore the firſt thing that they did, they carried graſſe into the ſaid fort for the Spaniards horſes, and wood alſo for them to burne, among which graſſe the Indians conueyed bowes and arrowes with great clubs. This done, fiftie of the Indians entred the fort, betooke themſelues to their bowes, arrowes, and clubs, and ſtood in the gate of the ſayd fort: from whence making a ſigne vnto other of their nation for helpe, they wanne the fort, and ſlewe all the Spaniards. The newes of this ouerthrow comming to the towne of Concepcion where Captaine Baldiuia was, hee preſently ſet foorth with two hundred horſemen to ſeeke the Indians, taking no more men with him, becauſe he was in haſte. And in a plaine he met the Indians, who comming of purpoſe alſo to ſeeke him, and compaſſing him about, ſlew moſt part of his company, the reſt eſcaping by the ſwiftneſſe of their horſes: but Baldiuia hauing his horſe ſlaine vnder him was taken aliue. Whom the Indians wiſhed to be of a good courage, and to feare nothing; for the cauſe (ſaid they) why we haue taken you, is to giue you gold ynough. And hauing made a great banquet for him, the laſt ſeruice of all was a cuppe full of melted gold, which the Indians forced him to drinke, ſaying, Now glut thy ſelfe with gold, and ſo they killed him. This Baldiuia was a moſt valiant man, who had beene an olde ſouldier in the warres of Italy, and at the ſacking of Rome.

A ſtratageme of the Indians of Chili againſt the Spaniards.

The death of Baldiuia.

Upon this diſcomfiture the Spaniards chooſe for their Captaine one Pedro de Villa grande; who aſſembling all the Spaniards in Chili, and taking with him tenne peeces of ordinance, marched againſt thoſe Indians; but with ſo badde ſucceſſe, that he loſt not onely the field and many of his men, but alſo thoſe ten peeces of ordinance which hee brought. The Indians hauing thus gotten the victorie, went ſtreightway againſt the towne of Concepcion, from whence the Spaniards fled for feare, and left the towne deſolate. And in this maner were the Spaniards chaſed by the Indians out of the countrey of Arauco. But newes hereof being brought to the Marques of Cannete viceroy of Peru, hee ſent his ſonne Don Garcia de Mendoça againſt thoſe Indians, with a great power of horſemen, and footmen, and ſtore of Artillerie. This nobleman hauing ſubdued Chili againe, & ſlaine in diuers battels aboue 40000 Indians, and brought them the ſecond time vnder the Spaniards ſubiection, newly erected the ſaid fort that ſtoode in the midſt of the land, inhabited the towne of Concepcion againe, and built other townes for the Spaniards: and ſo leauing the land in peace, hee returned for Peru. But yet hee was cleane departed out of the land the Indians rebelled againe, but could not doe ſo much miſchiefe as they did before, becauſe the Spaniards tooke better heede vnto them. From that time vntill this preſent there hath bene no peace at all: for notwithſtanding many Captaines and ſouldiers haue done their vttermoſt, yet can they not bring that people wholly in ſubiection. And although the Spaniards haue in this prouince eleuen townes and two biſhopricks, yet haue they little ynough to maintaine themſelues, by reaſon of the warres; for they ſpend all the golde that the land yeeldeth in the maintenance of their ſouldiers: which would not bee ſo, if they had peace, for then they might worke in all their mines.

Thus hauing ſpoken ſomewhat of the ſituation of Chili, and of the troubleſome conqueſt thereof, I will returne to my former diſcourſe where I left. Baldiuia therefore being of 150 houſes hath twiſe bene burnt and ſpoyled by the Indians; ſo that now it is waxen poore, but before the Indians ſacked it, it was very rich: and it ſtandeth vp a riuer foure leagues from the ſea. Paſſing from hence you come to the plaine countrey of Arauco being ſituate ouer againſt the Iſland La Mocha, on which Iſland the Indians that inhabite belong to the maine land.

La Concepcion.

Hauing paſſed this plaine of Arauco, the next towne of the Spaniards that you come vnto is La Concepcion which hath beene the greateſt and the richeſt towne in all Chili; but by reaſon that the Indians haue burned the ſame foure times, it is now growen very poore, and hath ſmall ſtore of people: it contayneth about ſome two hundred houſes. And becauſe it adioyneth vpon the plaine of Arauco, where theſe valiant Indians bee, therefore this towne is enuironed about with a ſtrong wall, and hath a fort built hard by it: and here are 500 ſouldiers continually in garriſon. Betweene this place and Valparizo, the Indians call the coaſt by the name of Mapocha. Sant Iago it ſelfe ſtanding 25 leagues vp into the countrey, is the principall towne of all Chili, and the ſeate of the gouernour; it conſiſteth of about 800 houſes. The port of Valparizo whither the goods come from Lima by ſhipping, hath about twentie houſes ſtanding by it. The next towne neere the ſea ſide beyond this is Coquimbo, which ſtandeth two leagues vp into the land, and containeth about 200 houſes. Next vnto Coquimbo ſtandeth a port-towne called Copiapo inhabited altogether by Indians which ſerue the Spaniards: and here a gentleman which is gouernour of the towne hath an Ingenio for ſugar: at this place endeth the whole prouince of Chili. Here alſo the mountaines ioyning hard vpon the ſea are the cauſe why all the land betweene Copiapo and Peru, containing 160 leagues, lyeth deſolate.

A deſcription of Peru.

The firſt towne on the coaſt of Peru called Atacama is inhabited by Indians which are ſlaues vnto the Spaniards. But before I paſſe any farther I will here alſo declare vnto you the firſt diſcouerie of Peru with other matters thereto belonging, and then will I returne to the ſea-coaſt againe: and to the ende you may vnderſtand mee the better, I will begin with Panama. After that the Spaniards had inhabited the North ſide of this maine land, paſſing ouer the mountaines they diſcouered the South ſea: where becauſe they found Indian people with gold and pearles, they built a towne eighteene leagues to the Weſt of Nombre de Dios hard vpon the ſea-ſide, and called it Panama. From hence they diſcouered along the coaſt of Nueua Eſpanna: and for that Nueua Eſpanna was at the ſame time inhabited by Spaniards, there beganne a trade from thence to Panama: but from Panama by ſea to the coaſt of Peru they could not trade in a long time, becauſe of the Southerly winds blowing on this coaſt almoſt all the yeere long, which are a hinderance to ſhippes ſayling that way: and by land the paſſage was impoſſible, in regard of mountaines and riuers: yea it was fifteene yeeres before they paſſed the Iſland of Pearles, which is but twentie leagues from Panama. There were at this time in Panama two men, the one called Franciſco Piçarro borne in the citie of Truxillo in Spaine, a valiant man, but withall poore: the other called Diego de Almagro was very rich. Theſe men got a company vnto them, and prouided two Carauels to diſcouer the coaſt of Peru: and hauing obtained licence of the gouernour of that place, Franciſco Piçarro ſet foorth with the two foreſayd Carauels and 100 men, and Diego de Almagro ſtayed in Panama to ſend him victuals and other neceſſaries. Now Franciſco Piçarro ſayling along the coaſt met with much contrary winds and raine, which put him to great trouble; and he began alſo after a while to lacke victuals, for hee was ſailing of that in eight moneths which they now paſſe in fifteene dayes, and not knowing the right courſe hee ranne into euery riuer and bay that hee ſaw along the coaſt; which was the chiefe cauſe that hee ſtayed ſo long on his voyage: alſo thirtie of his company dyed by reaſon of the vnhealthfulneſſe of the coaſt. At laſt hee came to an Iſland called by him Iſla del Gallo, being ſituate from the maine land ſixe leagues. From hence he ſent one of his ſhips to Panama for a new ſupply of victuals & of men: which ſhip being departed, 40 of his men that remained behind made a mutiny, and paſſed vp into the countrey, meaning to returne by land to Panama, but in the way they all periſhed, for they were neuer heard of vntill this day. So that Franciſco Piçarro was left vpon the ſaid Iſland onely with thirteene men: who although he had his ſhip there in which he might haue returned, yet would he rather die then goe backe; and his 13 men alſo were of his opinion, notwithſtanding that they had no other victuals, but ſuch as they had from the maine land in the night ſeaſon. Thus he continued nine moneths, before any ſuccour was brought him from Panama: but in the end his ſhip returned with 40 men onely and victuals: whereupon hee proſecuted his voyage till he came to the firſt plaine countrey of Peru called Tumbez, where he found a fort made by the king of Peru againſt the Indians of the mountaines. Wherefore Piçarro and his men were very glad in that they had found a people of ſo good vnderſtanding and diſcretion, being rich alſo in gold and ſiluer and well apparelled. At this port of Tumbez hee tooke 30000 pezos of gold in trucke of marchandize: and hauing too few men to proceede any further hee carried two Indians with him to learne the language and returned backe for Panama. Vpon this diſcouery Franciſco Piçarro thought it expedient to trauell into Spaine to craue of the king the conqueſt of this land. Whither being come, the king granted his requeſt. And with the money which he carried ouer with him he hired a great number of men with a fleete of ſhips, and brought alſo along with him foure of his brethren very valiant and hardy men. And being come to Panama he ſtraightway went on his voyage for Peru, being accompanied with his partner Diego de Almagro. They ſailed firſt to the Iſland called Iſla del Gallo; where Franciſco Piçarro and his brethren went on land, and left Diego de Almagro in the ſhips. And the whole number which afterward landed on the maine land were 60 horſemen and 120 footemen, with two great field-peeces.

Tumbez.

But before we proceede any farther, we thinke it not amiſſe to deſcribe vnto you the ſituation of Peru, and the naturall diſpoſition of the inhabitants: This countrey was called Peru by the Spaniards, of a riuer ſo named by the Indians, where they firſt came to the ſight of gold. From which riuer ſtanding vnder the line, till you come to Copiapo the firſt towne on the coaſt of Chili, ſtretcheth the land of Peru, for the ſpace of eight hundred leagues: vpon ſixe hundred whereof from Atacama to Tumbez did neuer drop of raine fall, ſince the flood of Noah: and yet is it the fruitfulleſt land for all kind of victuals and other neceſſaries for the ſuſtentation of mans life that is to be found in all the world beſides. The reaſon why it raineth not in this land is becauſe it beeing a plaine countrey and very narrow and low, ſituate betweene the Equinoctiall and the tropique of Capricorne, there runneth on the Weſt frontier not aboue twentie leagues from the ſea called Mar del Sur Eaſtward thereof, a mighty ridge of high mountaines couered with ſnow, the height of which mountaines ſo draweth the moiſture of the cloudes vnto it ſelfe, that no raine falleth vpon the vallies of Peru. From theſe mountaines iſſue great ſtore of riuers into the South ſea, with the waters whereof drawen by certaine ſluces and chanels they moiſten their vineyardes and corne-fields, and by this meanes the land is ſo exceeding fruitfull. Betweene theſe mountaines and the mountaines of Chili that ſtretch vnto the Streits of Magellan, lyeth a plaine of 60 leagues ouer, being ſo cold that it yeeldeth no Wheat, but good ſtore of other victuals. This countrey of Peru is full of people well apparelled and of ciuill behauiour. It hath many mines of gold and more of ſiluer, as alſo great ſtore of copper, and tinne-mines, with abundance of ſaltpeter, and of brimſtone to make gun-pouder. There are likewiſe cattell of all ſorts, among which there is a beaſt in ſhape ſomewhat reſembling a camel, but no bigger then a ſteere of a yeere olde; they ſerue to carry burthens, their fleſh being good to eate, and their wooll apt for many purpoſes. This beaſt is accounted the moſt profitable of al others for the vſe of man: howbeit the Spaniards ſince their firſt comming haue replenished this countrey with horſes, kine, ſheepe, and goates, and likewiſe with plentie of wheat. So that in fewe words this land hath abundance of riches and victuals, and is the healthfulleſt place in the world. There were in times paſt kings of this land which were mightie Monarchs, whoſe dominions ſtretched 1200. leagues, and their lawes were very ciuill, ſaue that they were worſhippers of the Sunne. At what time the Spaniards firſt entred this land there were two brethren of the blood royall which ſtroue who ſhould haue the kingdome, the one called Guaſcar, and the other Atabalipa. Nowe Guaſcar had poſſeſſion of all the mountaines and the lands within them: and Atabalipa was lord of all the ſea coaſt, and of the valleys ſituate betweene the ſaid mountaines and the ſea. The Indians ſeeing the Spaniards at the firſt arriue vpon their ſhore called them Vera coche, which in their language ſignifieth, The fome of the ſea. Alſo Atabalipa the Indian prince ſent vnto them to know what they did in his land, and what they ſought for: the Spaniards made anſwere that they were the meſſengers of a great lord, and that they came to ſpeake with the prince himſelfe: who ſent them word that they ſhould come with a very good will; and ſo Atabalipa ſtayed for them at a citie called Caxamalca, being thirtie leagues diſtant from the ſea ſide. Whither being come, they found the Indian prince ſitting in a chariot of gold, carried vpon mens ſhoulders, and accompanied with aboue 60000 Indians all ready armed for the warres. Then the Spaniards tolde them that they were ſent from an Emperour (vnto whom the Pope had giuen all that land) to conuert them vnto the Chriſtian faith. Whereunto Atabalipa anſwered, that hee would gladly be friends with the Emperour, becauſe he was ſo great a Monarch, but in no caſe with the Pope, becauſe he gaue to another that which was none of his owne.

Now while they were thus in talke, the Spaniards diſcharging their two field-peeces, and their caliuers, ſet vpon the Indians, crying Sant Iago. The Indians hearing the noiſe of the ordinance and ſmall ſhot, and ſeeing the fire, thought that flames of fire had bene come downe from heauen vpon them; whereupon they fledde, and left their prince as a booty for the Spaniards. Whom they at the firſt intreated very gently, wiſhing him not to feare, for that their comming was onely to ſeeke for golde and ſiluer. During the time of Altabalipas impriſonment, his Captaines had ſlaine his brother Guaſcar, and had ſubdued all the mountaines and plaine countreys. Vpon which newes Atabalipa told the Spaniards, that if they would releaſe him, hee would giue them all that they ſhould demaund. This communication hauing continued a whole day, at length a ſouldier named Soto ſayd vnto Atabalipa; what wilt thou giue vs to ſet thee free? The prince anſwered, I will giue whatſoeuer you will demand. Whereunto the ſouldier replied, thou ſhalt giue vs this houſe full of gold and ſiluer thus high, lifting vp his ſword, and making a ſtroke vpon the wall. And Atabalipa ſayde, that if they would grant him reſpite to ſend into his kingdome, he would fulfill their demand. Whereat the Spaniards much marueiling, gaue him three moneths time, but he had filled the houſe in two moneths and an halfe, a matter ſcarce credible, yet moſt true: for I know aboue twentie men that were there at that time, who all affirme, that it was aboue tenne millions of gold and ſiluer. Howbeit for all this they let not the prince goe, but thought that in killing of him they ſhould become lords of the whole land, and ſo the Spaniards on a night ſtrangled him. But God the righteous iudge ſeeing this villanous act, ſuffered none of thoſe Spaniards to dye by the courſe of nature, but brought them to euill and ſhamefull ends.

Vpon the newes of theſe great riches there came ſtore of people out of Spaine, and inhabited many places in this countrey. The king in recompence of the good ſeruices of the two foreſayd partners, appoynted Diego de Almagro gouernour of halfe the land, and Franciſco Piçarro of the other halfe, whom alſo hee made a Marques. But theſe two conſorts in parting of a land belonging vnto other men, fell at variance and ſharpe warre betweene themſelues: and at length Piçarro hauing ſlaine Almagro got all the land into his owne hands. Howbeit this proſperitie of Piçarro continued not long: for a baſtard-ſonne of Diego de Almagro, to bee reuenged of his fathers death, ſlew Piçarro, for which acte he loſt his head. In this controuerſie betweene theſe two partners were ſlaine alſo two brothers of Piçarro, and the third was carried priſoner into Spaine and there dyed in priſon: but the fourth called Gonſaluo Piçarro rebelled with the whole countrey and became a cruell tyrant, vanquiſhing many of the Emperours Captaines in battell, and poſſeſſing the countrey in peace for two yeeres: howbeit being in the ende ouercome hee loſt his head like a traitour. And thus dyed they all an euill death that were cauſes of the death of that innocent king Atabalipa. And yet there are mutinies raiſed oftentimes by the Spaniards, but the Indians neuer rebelled, after they had once peace granted vnto them. The Indian people of this land are parted among the Spaniards, ſome being ſlaues vnto the gentlemen that conquered their land, other ſome to others, and the reſidue to the king: and theſe Indians pay eche man for his tribute ſeuen pezos of fine golde, which is about tenne ducats and a halfe. There are in this countrey aboue fortie cities and townes inhabited by the Spaniards: alſo they haue here erected nine biſhopricks and one archbiſhopricke.

Nine biſhopricks, and one archbiſhoprick in Peru.

Now after this countrey was fully conquered and brought in good order, certaine Spaniards being deſirous to diſcouer the land on the other ſide of the ſnowy mountaines, found a very wholeſome countrey and there inhabited. The ſayd prouince ſituate behinde the mountaines is called The prouince of Tucuman, wherein are fiue townes inhabited by the Spaniards, the laſt of them called Cordoua, from which towne vnto Santa Fee ſituate vpon the riuer of Plate it is ſeuentie leagues. This towne of Santa Fee was built in that place, to ſeeke a way to Peru by the riuer of Plate. And from hence downe the ſayde riuer to Buenos Ayres are 120 leagues; and from Buenos Ayres vnto Seal-iſland you haue 40 leagues.

Now hauing put downe all that I know concerning the countrey of Peru, and of the way from the riuer of Plate vnto Tucuman, I will returne vnto Atacama the Southermoſt towne vpon the coaſt of Peru, where I left. From this towne of Atacama till you come to Arica, all the coaſt is inhabited by Indians ſubiect vnto the Spaniards. But ſince Captaine Drake was here they haue built towers by the ſea ſide, whereon, ſeeing any ſaile that they doe miſtruſt, they preſently make ſmokes, and ſo from tower to tower they warne all the countrey. Hauing before ſpoken of Arica all that I can, I will now proceed to the next port called Camana being a towne of Spaniards and containing about two hundred houſes. Here they make ſtore of wine, and haue abundance of figges and reiſins. The next towne called Acari containeth about three hundred houſes, and here is made the beſt and greateſt ſtore of wine in all Peru. From hence paſſing along the coaſt you come to El Calao the port of Lima conſiſting of about two hundred houſes: and here was a ſtrong fort built ſince Captaine Drake was vpon the coaſt. The citie of Lima ſtanding two leagues within the land, and containing two thouſand houſes, is very rich, and of more trade then all the cities of Peru beſides: and this citie is the ſeat of the viceroy, the archbiſhop, and the inquiſition.

Next vnto this ſtandeth a ſmall towne of the Spaniards by the ſea ſide called Santa: and next vnto Santa is another ſmall towne of Chriſtians called Cannete. From hence they ſaile vnto a rich citie called Truxillo, being one of the principall townes of Peru, and containing about fiue hundred houſes. Then followeth Paita which hath to the number of two hundred houſes. Leauing this towne they paſſe to Guaiaquil which ſtandeth fortie leagues vp into a great bay or riuer, at the entrance of which riuer ſtandeth Tumbez a towne of the Indians. All this coaſt along from Atacama to Tumbez it neuer raineth, as I haue before ſaid: ſo that all the houſes in their townes are not tyled, but couered with bourdes to keepe off the heate of the Sunne, for they feare no raine at all. Guaiaquil is the firſt place where it raineth, and here they gather Salſaperilla. Here is is alſo great ſtore of timber, and at this place they build many ſhippes. Hence they ſayle along the coaſt to a ſmall and poore towne called Puerto Viejo, which in times paſt hath bene rich with emralds: but now ſince theſe ſtones in regard of their plenty are growen nothing worth, this towne likewiſe is waxen very poore. Below this village ſtandeth another called La Buena Ventura: but whoſoeuer go thither muſt needs meet with euill fortune, the place it ſelfe is ſo wateriſh and vnholeſome. Here abide not aboue 20 men, who ſerue onely to tranſport goods vnto a citie ſtanding fiftie leagues within the maine, in a prouince called La gouernacion de Popaian. From Buena ventura and Popaian till you come to Panama there is no other towne, by reaſon of the high mountaines, the manifold riuers, and the vnholeſomeneſſe of the countrey. In this place doe inhabite the Negros that runne from their maſters, and vpon theſe mountaines was Oxnam the Engliſh Captaine and his men taken, as is before mentioned. Beyond theſe mountaines ſtandeth the citie of Panama, being a rich place, by reaſon that all the treaſure which commeth from Peru is brought thither, and it conſiſteth of about foure hundred houſes. The coaſt running along betweene this city and Nueua Eſpanna is called Coſta rica.

Next vnto Coſta rica, which is a mountainous and deſolate place, lieth the coaſt of Nicaragua, being inhabited by the Spaniards, and hauing many good ports belonging to it, and is frequented with trade of marchandize; but hauing no knowledge of the ſituation thereof, nor of the townes therein contained, I ſurceaſe to ſpeake any more of it.

The prouince of Nicaragua.

A certaine viceroy of Nueua Eſpanna called Don Luis de Velaſco cauſed certaine ſhips to be built for the diſcouery of the Malucos and of the coaſt of China: which ſhippes in ſayling thitherward found certaine Iſlands 80 leagues diſtant from the maine land, which the Spaniards, according to the name of their king, called The Philippinas: and hauing conquered one of theſe Iſlands called Manilla, inhabited with a barbarous kind of people, they built a fort and a towne thereupon, from whence they haue trade with the people of China. Vnto theſe Iſlands they haue foure great ſhips that vſually trade, two of them continually going, and two comming: ſo that ſuch ſpices and ſilkes as the Portugals bring home out of the Eaſt Indies, the very ſame doe the Spaniards bring from theſe Iſlands and from China, for Mexico the chiefe citie of Nueua Eſpanna. The principall port-townes of the coaſt of Nueua Eſpanna are Guatulco, and Acapulco.

All the viceroyes and gouernours that the king of Spaine ſendeth for Peru and Nueua Eſpanna haue a cuſtome, for the obtaining of his fauour, to ſeeke and diſcouer new countreys. But the greateſt and moſt notable diſcouerie that hath bene from thoſe parts now of late, was that of the Iſles of Salomon, which were found in maner following. The Licenciate Caſtro being gouernour of Peru ſent foorth a fleete of ſhippes to diſcouer certaine Iſlands in the South ſea vpon the coaſt of Peru, appointing as Generall of the ſame fleete a kinſman of his called Aluares de Mendanio, and Pedro Sarmiento as lieutenant, and in the Viceadmirall went Pedro de Ortega. This fleete departing forth of the hauen of Lima, and ſayling 800 leagues Weſtward off the coaſt of Peru, found certaine Iſlands in eleuen degrees to the South of the Equinoctial inhabited with a kind of people of a yellowiſh complexion, and all naked, whoſe weapons are bowes and arrowes, and darts. The beaſts that they ſaw here were hogges and little dogges, and they found ſome hennes. Here alſo they found a muſter of cloues, ginger, and ſinamon, although the ſinamon were not of the beſt; and heere appeared vnto them likewiſe ſome ſhewe of golde. The firſt Iſland that the Spaniards diſcouered, they named Santa Izabella; and here they built a ſmall pinneſſe, with the which and with their ſhips boate they found out betweene nine and fifteene degrees of Southerly latitude eleuen great Iſlands being one with another of 80 leagues in compaſſe. The greateſt Iſland that they diſcouered was according vnto the firſt finder called Guadalcanal, on the coaſt whereof they ſayled 150 leagues, before they could knowe whither it were an Iſland or part of the maine land: and yet they know not perfectly what to make of it, but thinke that it may be part of that continent which ſtretcheth to the Streights of Magellan; for they coaſted it to eighteene degrees and could not find the ende thereof. The gold that they found was vpon this Iſland or maine land of Guadalcanal, whereas they landed and tooke a towne, finding ſmall graines of golde hanged vp in the houſes thereof. But becauſe the Spaniards vnderſtood not the language of the countrey, and alſo for that the Indians were very ſtout men, and fought continually againſt them, they could neuer learne from whence that gold came, nor yet what ſtore was in the land.

A towne burnt.

Abundance of good victuals vpon the Iſles of Salomon.

A new rich trade for gold, cloues, ginger, and ſinamon.

Why theſe Iſles were called The Iſles of Salomon.

Theſe Indians vſe to goe to ſea in great Canoas that will carrie 100 men a piece, wherein they haue many conflicts one againſt another: howbeit vnto the Chriſtians they could doe no great hurt; for that with a ſmall pinneſſe and two falcons a fewe may ouercome 100 of them. At this place fourteene men miſtruſting nothing, rowed to land, to take in freſh water, whome on the ſudden certaine Indians in foure Canoas ſet vpon, tooke the ſhips boat, and ſlewe all the men therein: wherefore a man cannot goe on ſhore too ſtrong, nor yet be too wary in a ſtrange land. Hereupon the Spaniards went on ſhore in their pinneſſe, and burnt the towne, and in this towne they found the ſmall graines of gold before mentioned. They were diſcouering of theſe Iſlands from one to another about fourteene moneths, at the ende of which time (becauſe that vpon the coaſt where they were, the wind continuing ſtill in one place, might bee an occaſion of longer tarying) they conſulted which way to returne. Southward they durſt not goe for feare of great tempeſts which are that way vſuall: wherefore ſayling to the North of the line, they fell with the coaſt of Nueua Eſpanna; on which coaſt they met with ſuch terrible ſtormes, that they were forced to cut their maine maſts ouer-bourd, and to lye nine moneths beating it vp and downe in the ſea, before they could get into any harborow of the Chriſtians. In which time by reaſon of euill gouernement, and for lacke of victuals and freſh water, moſt of the men in their Admirall dyed; for fiue whole dayes together they had neither water nor meate: but in the other ſhips they behaued themſelues ſo well, that the greater part of them came ſafe vnto the land. He that paſſeth the Streights of Magellan, or ſaileth from the coaſt of Chili directly for the Malucos muſt needs runne in ſight of ſome of theſe Iſlands before ſpoken of. At which Iſlands lying ſo conueniently in the way to the Malucos you may furniſh your ſelfe with plenty of victuals, as hogges, hennes, excellent almonds, potatos, ſugar-canes, with diuers other ſortes fit for the ſuſtenance of man in great abundance. Alſo among theſe Iſlands you ſhall haue ſome quantity of gold, which the Indians will giue you in truck for other commodities. For the Spaniards in their diſcouery of theſe Iſlands not ſeeking nor being deſirous of gold, brought home notwithſtanding 40000 pezos with them, beſides great ſtore of cloues and ginger, and ſome ſinamon alſo which is not ſo good as in other places. The diſcouerer of theſe Iſlands named them the Iſles of Salomon, to the ende that the Spaniards ſuppoſing them to bee thoſe Iſles from whence Salomon fetched gold to adorne the temple at Ieruſalem, might bee the more deſirous to goe and inhabite the ſame. Now the ſame time when they thought to haue ſent colonies vnto theſe Iſlands, Captaine Drake entered the South ſea; whereupon commandement was giuen, that they ſhould not be inhabited, to the ende that ſuch Engliſhmen, and of other nations as paſſed the Streights of Magellan to goe to the Malucos might haue no ſuccour there, but ſuch as they got of the Indian people.

The admirable and proſperous Voyage of the worſhipfull Maſter Thomas Candiſh of Trimley in the Countie of Suffolke Eſquire, into the South ſea, and from thence round about the circumference of the whole earth, begun in the yeere of our Lord 1586, and finiſhed 1588. Written by Maſter Francis Pretty lately of Ey in Suffolke, a Gentleman employed in the ſame action.

WEe departed out of Plimmouth on Thurſday the 21. of July 1586. with 3. ſayles, to wit, The Deſire a ſhip of 120. tunnes, The Content of 60 tuns, and the Hugh gallant a barke of 40. tunnes: in which ſmall Fleete were 123. perſons of all ſortes with all kinde of furniture and victuals ſufficient for the ſpace of two yeeres, at the charges of the worſhipfull Maſter Thomas Candiſh of Trimley in the Countie of Suffolke Eſquire, beeing our Generall.

On Tueſday the 26. of the ſame moneth, we were 45. leagues from Cape Finis terræ, where wee mette with 5. ſayles of Biſkaynes comming from the Grande Bay in Newfound-land, as we ſuppoſed, which our Admirall ſhot at, and fought with them 3. houres, but wee tooke none of them by reaſon the night grew on.

5. Great Biſkaine ſhips fought withal.

The firſt of Auguſt wee came in ſight of Forteuentura, one of the Iſles of the Canaries, about ten of the clocke in the morning.

Auguſt.

On Sunday being the 7. of Auguſt, we were gotten as high as Rio del oro on the coaſt of Barbarie.

Rio del oro.

On Munday the 19. we fell with cape Blanco: but the winde blew ſo much at the North, that we could not get vp where the Canters doe vſe to ride and fiſh; therefore wee lay off 6. houres Weſt Southweſt, becauſe of the ſand which lieth off the cape Southweſt and by South.

Cape Blanco.

A dangerous ſand.

The 15. day of the ſame moneth we were in the height of cape Verde by eſtimation 50. leagues off the ſame.

The 18. Sierra leona did beare Eaſt off vs, beeing 45. leagues from vs: and the ſame day the winde ſhifted to the Northweſt, ſo that by the 20. day of the ſayd moneth we were in 6. degrees ½. to the Northward, from the Equinoctiall line.

The 23. we put roome for Sierra leona, and the 25. day wee fell with the poynt on the South ſide of Sierra leona, which Maſter Brewer knew very well, and went in before with the Content which was Vice-admirall: and we had no leſſe then 5. fathoms water when we had leaſt, and had for 14. leagues in Southweſt all the way running into the harbour of Sierra leona 16, 14, 12, 10 and 8, fathoms of water.

Sierra leona.

The 26. of the ſaid moneth we put into the harborough, and in going in we had by the Southermoſt point when we had leaſt 5. fathoms water faire by the rocke as it lieth at the ſaid point: and after we came, 2 or 3. cables length within the ſaid rocke, we neuer had leſſe then 10. fathoms, vntill wee came vp to the roade, which is about a league from the poynt, borrowing alwayes on the South ſide vntill you come vp to the watering place, in which Baye is the beſt roade: but you muſt ride farre into the Baye, becauſe there run marueilous great tydes in the offin, and it floweth into the road next of any thing at a Southeaſt and by Eaſt moone.

It is out of England to this place 930. leagues: which wee ranne from the 21. of July to the 26. of this moneth of Auguſt.

On Saturday being the 27. day there came 2. Negros aboord our Admiral from the ſhore, and made ſignes vnto our Generall that there was a Portugal ſhip vp within the harborough: ſo the Hugh Gallant beeing the Rere-admirall went vp 3 or 4. leagues, but for want of a Pilot they ſought no farther: for the harborough runneth 3. or 4. leagues vp more, and is of a marueilous bredth and very dangerous, as we learned afterward by a Portugal.

On Sunday the 28. the Generall ſent ſome of his company on ſhore, and there as they played and daunced all the forenoone among the Negros, to the end to haue heard ſome good newes of the Portugal ſhip, toward their comming aboord they eſpied a Portugal which lay hid among the buſhes, whom we tooke and brought away with vs the ſame night: and he tolde vs it was very dangerous going vp with our boates for to ſeeke the ſhip that was at the towne. Whereupon wee went not to ſeeke her, becauſe we knew he told vs the trueth: for we bound him and made him faſt, and ſo examined him. Alſo he told vs that his ſhip was there caſt away, and that there were two more of his company among the Negros: the Portugals name was Emmanuel, and was by his occupation a Calker, belonging to the Port of Portugal.

A Portugal taken.

On Munday morning being the 29. day, our Generall landed with 70. men or thereabout, and went vp to their towne, where we burnt 2. or 3. houſes, and tooke what ſpoyle wee would, which was but litle, but al the people fled: and in our retiring aboord in a very litle plaine at their townes ende they ſhot their arrowes at vs out of the woods, and hurt 3. or 4. of our men; their arrowes were poyſoned, but yet none of our men miſcaryed at that time, thanked be God. Their towne is maruellous artificially builded with mudde walles, and built round, with their yards paled in and kept very cleane aſwell in their ſtreetes as in their houſes. Theſe Negros vſe good obedience to their king, as one of our men ſayd, which was with them in pawne for the Negros which came firſt. There were in their towne by eſtimation about one hundred houſes.

September.
Many of our men hurt by Negros.
William Pickman dieth of a poyſoned arrow.
This poyſon is the iuyce of an hearbe.

The firſt of September there went many of our men on ſhore at the watering place, and did waſh ſhirts very quietly all the day: and the ſecond day they went againe, and the Negros were in ambuſh round about the place: and the carpenter of the Admiral going into the wood to doe ſome ſpeciall buſineſſe, eſpied them by good fortune. But the Negros ruſhed out vpon our men ſo ſuddenly, that in retiring to our boates, many of them were hurt: among whom one William Pickman a ſouldier was ſhot into the thigh, who plucking the arrow out, broke it, and left the head behinde; and he told the Chirurgions that he plucked out all the arrow, becauſe he would not haue them lance his thigh: whereupon the poyſon wrought ſo that night, that hee was maruellouſly ſwollen, and all his belly and priuie parts were as blacke as ynke, and the next morning he died, the peece of the arrow with the poyſon being plucked out of his thigh.

2. Buffes.

The third day of the ſayd moneth, diuers of our fleete went vp 4. myles within the harbour with our boate, and caught great ſtore of fiſh, and went on ſhore and tooke Limmons from the trees, and comming aboord againe, ſaw two Buffes.

Their departure from Sierra leona.

The 6. day we departed from Sierra leona, and went out of the harborough, and ſtayed one tide 3. leagues from the point of the mouth of the Harborough in 6. fathoms, and it floweth South Southweſt.

The Iſles of Madrabumba inhabited by Negros.

On wedneſday being the 7. of the ſame moneth wee departed from one of the Iſles of Cape Verde, aliâs the Iſles of Madrabumba, which is 10. leagues diſtant from the poynt of Sierra leona: and about fiue of the clocke the ſame night we anchored 2. miles off the Iland in 6. fathoms water, and landed the ſame night, and found Plantans only vpon the Iland.

A towne.

The 8. day one of our boats went out & ſounded round about the Iland, & they paſſed through a ſound at the weſt end of the Iland, where they found 5. fathoms round about the Iland, vntil they came vnto the very gutte of the ſound, and then for a caſt or two they had but 2. fathoms, and preſently after, 6. fathoms, and ſo deeper and deeper. And at the Eaſt ende of the Iland there was a towne, where Negros doe vſe at ſometimes, as we perceiued by their prouiſion.

Freſh water.

There is no freſh water on all the South ſide, as we could perceiue, but on the North ſide three or foure very good places of freſh water: and all the whole Iland is a wood, ſaue certaine litle places where their houſes ſtand, which are inuironed round about with Plantan-trees, whereof the fruit is excellent meat. This place is ſubiect maruellous much to thunder, raine, and lightning in this moneth. I thinke the reaſon is, becauſe the ſunne is ſo neere the line Equinoctiall.

On ſaturday the tenth wee departed from the ſayde Iland about 3. of the clocke in the afternoone, the winde being at the Southweſt.

October.
Cape Frio in Braſill.

The laſt of October running Weſt Southweſt about 24. leagues from Cape Frio in Braſile, we fell with a great mountaine which had an high round knoppe on the top of it ſtanding from it like a towne, with two litle Ilands from it.

Nouember.
S. Sebaſtians Iland.
The riuer of Ienero.

The firſt of Nouember wee went in betweene the Iland of Saint Sebaſtian and the mayne land, and had our things on ſhore, and ſet vp a Forge, and had our caſke on ſhore: our coopers made hoopes, and ſo we remayned there vntill the 23. day of the ſame moneth: in which time we fitted our things, built our Pinneſſe, and filled our freſh water. And while our Pinneſſe was in building, there came a Canoa from the riuer of Ienero, meaning to goe to S. Vincent, wherein were ſixe naked ſlaues of the Countrey people, which did rowe the Canoa, and one Portugal. And the Portugal knewe Chriſtopher Hare Maſter of the Admirall, for that Maſter Hare had bene at Saint Vincent in the Minion of London in the yeere 1581. And thinking to haue Iohn Whithal the Engliſhman which dwelleth at Saint Vincent come vnto vs, which is twentie leagues from this Harborough with ſome other, thereby to haue had ſome freſh victuals, we ſuffered the Portugal to goe with a letter vnto him, who promiſed to returne or ſend ſome anſwere within ten dayes, for that we told him we were Marchants, and would traffique with them: but we neuer receiued anſwere from him any more; and ſeeing that he came not according to appoyntment, our buſineſſe being diſpatched, wee weyed anchor, and ſet ſayle from S. Sebaſtians on the 23. of Nouember.

The 16.day of December we fell with the coaſt of America in 47.degrees ½. the land bearing Weſt from vs about 6.leagues off: from which place we ran along the ſhore, vntill we came into 48.degrees. It is a ſteepe beach all along.

December.

48.Degrees.

The 17.day of December in the afternoone we entred into an harborough, where our Admirall went in firſt: wherefore our Generall named the ſaid harborough Port Deſire: in which harborough is an Iland or two, where there is wonderful great ſtore of Seales, and another Iland of birds which are grey guls. Theſe Seales are of a wonderful great bigneſſe, huge, and monſtrous of ſhape, and for the fore-part of their bodies cannot be compared to any thing better then to a lion: their head, and necke, and fore-parts of their bodies are full of rough haire: their feete are in maner of a finne, and in forme like vnto a mans hand: they breed and caſt euery moneth, giuing their yong milke, yet continually get they their liuing in the ſea, and liue altogether vpon fiſh: their yong are marueilous good meate, and being boyled or roſted, are hardly to be knowen from lambe or mutton. The olde ones be of ſuch bigneſſe and force, that it is as much as 4.men are able to doe to kill one of them with great cowle-ſtaues: and hee muſt be beaten downe with ſtriking on the head of him: for his body is of that bigneſſe that foure men could neuer kill him, but only on the head. For being ſhotte through the body with an Harquebuze or a Muſket, yet he will goe his way into the ſea, and neuer care for it at the preſent. Alſo the fowles that were there, were very good meate, and great ſtore of them: they haue burrowes in the ground like conies, for they cannot flie. They haue nothing but downe vpon their pinions: they alſo fiſh and feede in the ſea for their liuing, and breede on ſhore.

Port Deſire.

Seales ſtrange in ſhape and hugeneſſe.

Yong Seales are very good meate.

Foules breeding in burrowes like conies.

We call theſe foules Pengwins.

This harborough is a very good place to trimme ſhips in, and to bring them on ground, and graue them in: for there ebbeth and floweth much water: therefore wee graued and trimmed all our ſhips there.

They graue and trimme their ſhips.

The 24. of December being Chriſtmas Euen, a man and a boy of the Rere-admirall went ſome fortie ſcore from our ſhips vnto a very faire greene valley at the foote of the mountaines, where was a litle pitte or well which our men had digged and made ſome 2. or 3.dayes before to get freſh water: for there was none in all the Harborough; and this was but brackiſh: therefore this man and boy came thither to waſh their linnen: and beeing in waſhing at the ſayde Well, there were great ſtore of Indians which were come downe, and found the ſayd man and boy in waſhing. Theſe Indians being diuided on eche ſide of the rockes, ſhotte at them with their arrowes and hurt them both, but they fledde preſently, beeing about fiftie or threeſcore, though our Generall followed them but with 16. or 20.men. The mans name which was hurt was Iohn Garge, the boyes name was Lutch: the man was ſhot cleane through the knee, the boy into the ſhoulder: either of them hauing very ſore wounds. Their arrowes are made of litle canes, and their heads are of a flint ſtone, ſet into the cane very artificially: they ſeldome or neuer ſee any Chriſtians: they are as wilde as euer was a bucke or any other wilde beaſt: for wee followed them, and they ranne from vs as it had bene the wildeſt thing in the worlde. Wee tooke the meaſure of one of their feete, and it was 18.inches long. Their vſe is when any of them dye, to bring him or them to the cliffes by the ſea-ſide, and vpon the toppe of them they burie them, and in their graues are buryed with them their bowes and arrowes, and all their iewels which they haue in their life time, which are fine ſhelles which they finde by the ſea ſide, which they cut and ſquare after an artificiall maner; and all is layd vnder their heads. The graue is made all with great ſtones of great length and bigneſſe, being ſet all along full of the dead mans dartes which he vſed when he was liuing. And they colour both their darts and their graues with a red colour which they vſe in colouring of themſelues.

A man and a boy hurt by negligence.

A kinde of giants.

The 28.of December we departed out of the Port of Deſire, and went to an Iland which lieth 3.leagues to the Southward of it; where we trimmed our ſaued pengwins with ſalt for victual all that and the next day, and departed along the coaſt Southweſt and by South.

Their departure from port Deſire.

The 30.day we fell with a rocke which lieth about 5.leagues from the land, much like vnto Edieſtone, which lieth off the ſound of Plimouth, and we ſounded, and had 8.fathoms rockie ground, within a mile thereof: the rocke bearing Weſt Southweſt. Wee went coaſting along South Southweſt, and found great ſtore of Seales all along the coaſt. This rocke ſtandeth in 48.degrees ½. to the Southward of the line.

The 2.day of Ianuarie wee fell with a very faire white Cape, which ſtandeth in 51.degrees, and had 7.fathoms water a league off the land.

January 1587.

The third day of the foreſayd moneth we fell with another great white cape, which ſtandeth in 52.degrees and 45.minutes: from which Cape there runneth a lowe beach about a league to the Southward, and this beach reacheth to the opening of the dangerous Streight of Magellan, which is in diuers places 5. or 6. leagues wide, and in two ſeuerall places more narrow. Vnder this Cape wee anchored and loſt an anchor, for it was a great ſtorme of foule weather, and laſted three dayes very dangerous.

They enter the Streights the 6. of Ianuarie.

The 6. day we put in for the Streights.

A Spaniard taken in the Streights of Magellan.

The 7. day betweene the mouth of the Streights and the narroweſt place thereof, wee tooke a Spaniard whoſe name was Hernando, who was there with 23. Spaniards more, which were all that remayned of foure hundred, which were left there three yeeres before in theſe ſtreights of Magellan, all the reſt being dead with famine. And the ſame day wee paſſed through the narroweſt of the Streights, where the aforeſayd Spanyard ſhewed vs the hull of a ſmall Barke, which we iudged to be a Barke called The Iohn Thomas. It is from the mouth of the ſtreights vnto the narroweſt of the Streights 14. leagues, and the courſe lieth Weſt and by North. The mouth of the ſtreights ſtandeth in 52. degrees.

The Barke Iohn Thomas, one of ſir Francis Drakes conſortes.

From the narroweſt of the Streights vnto Pengwin Iland is 10. leagues, and lyeth Weſt Southweſt ſomewhat to the Southward, where wee anchored the 8. day, and killed and ſalted great ſtore of Pengwins for victuals.

King Philips citie left deſolate in the Streights of Magellan, which our Generall called Port famine.

God enemie to the Spaniards.

The ninth day wee departed from Pengwin Ilande, and ranne South Southweſt to King Philips citie which the Spaniards had built: which Towne or citie had foure Fortes, and euery Fort had in it one caſt peece, which peeces were buryed in the ground, the cariages were ſtanding in their places vnburied: wee digged for them and had them all. They had contriued their Citie very well, and ſeated it in the beſt place of the Streights for wood and water: they had builded vp their Churches by themſelues: they had Lawes very ſeuere among themſelues, for they had erected a Gibet, whereon they had done execution vpon ſome of their company. It ſeemed vnto vs that their whole liuing for a great ſpace was altogether vpon muſkles and lympits: for there was not any thing elſe to bee had, except ſome Deere which came out of the mountaines downe to the freſh riuers to drinke. Theſe Spaniards which were there, were onely come to fortifie the Streights, to the ende that no other nation ſhould haue paſſage through into the South ſea ſauing onely their owne: but as it appeared, it was not Gods will ſo to haue it. For during the time that they were there, which was two yeeres at the leaſt, they could neuer haue any thing to growe or in any wiſe proſper. And on the other ſide the Indians oftentimes preyed vpon them, vntill their victuals grewe ſo ſhort, (their ſtore being ſpent which they had brought with them out of Spaine, and hauing no meanes to renew the ſame) that they dyed like dogges in their houſes, and in their clothes, wherein we found them ſtill at our comming, vntill that in the ende the towne being wonderfully taynted with the ſmell and the ſauour of the dead people, the reſt which remayned aliue were driuen to burie ſuch things as they had there in their towne either for prouiſion or for furniture, and ſo to forſake the towne, and to goe along the ſea-ſide, and ſeeke their victuals to preſerue them from ſteruing, taking nothing with them, but euery man his harquebuze and his furniture that was able to cary it (for ſome were not able to cary them for weakeneſſe) and ſo liued for the ſpace of a yeere and more with rootes, leaues, and ſometimes a foule which they might kill with their peece. To conclude, they were determined to haue trauailed towards the riuer of Plate, only being left aliue 23. perſons, whereof two were women, which were the remainder of 4. hundred. In this place we watered and wooded well and quietly. Our Generall named this towne Port famine: it ſtandeth in 53. degrees by obſeruation to the Southward.

Port famine in 53. degrees.

Cape Froward in 54 degrees.

Muſkle Coue.

The 14. day we departed from this place, and ran South ſouthweſt, and from thence ſouthweſt vnto cape Froward 5. leagues Weſt Southweſt, which Cape is the Southermoſt part of all the ſtreights, and ſtandeth in the latitude of 54. degrees. From which cape we ran Weſt and by north 5. leagues, and put into a bay or Coue on the ſouth ſide, which we called Muſkle-Coue, becauſe there were great ſtore of them: we ridde therein 6. dayes, the wind being ſtill Weſterly.

Elizabeth Bay.

The 21. day of Ianuarie we departed from Muſkle-coue, and went Northweſt and by Weſt 10. leagues to a very faire ſandie Baye on the North ſide, which our Generall called Elizabeth Baye, and as wee ridde there that night, one of our men dyed which went in the Hugh Gallant, whoſe name was Grey, a Carpenter by his occupation, and was buryed there in that Baye.

The 22. wee departed from Elizabeth Bay in the afternoone, and went about 2. leagues from that place, where there was a freſh water riuer, where our Generall went vp with the ſhip-boate about three myles, which riuer hath very good and pleaſant ground about it, and it is lowe and champion ſoyle, and ſo we ſaw none other ground els in all the Streights but that was craggie rocks and monſtrous high hilles and mountaines. In this riuer are great ſtore of Sauages which wee ſawe, and had conference with them: They were men-eaters, and fedde altogether vpon rawe fleſh, and other filthie foode: which people had preyed vpon ſome of the Spaniardes before ſpoken of. For they had gotten kniues and peeces of Rapiers to make dartes of. They vſed all the meanes they could poſſibly to haue allured vs vp farther into the riuer, of purpoſe to haue betraped vs, which being eſpyed by our Generall, hee cauſed vs to ſhoote at them with our harquebuzes, whereby we killed many of them. So wee ſayled from this riuer to the Chanell of Saint Ierome, which is 2. leagues off.

The moſt bru‑tiſh Sauages that euer were ſeene.

The Chanel of Saint Ierome.

From the riuer of Saint Ierome about three or foure leagues, wee ranne Weſt vnto a Cape which is on the North ſide: and from that Cape vnto the mouth of the Streights the courſe lyeth Northweſt and by Weſt, and Northweſt. Betweene which place and the mouth of the Streights to the Southward we lay in Harborough vntill the three and twentieth of Februarie, by reaſon of contrary windes and moſt vile and filthie fowle weather, with ſuch rayne and vehement ſtormie windes which came downe from the mountaines and high hilles, that they hazarded the beſt cables and anchors that we had for to holde, which if they had fayled, wee had bene in great danger to haue bene caſt away, or at the leaſt famiſhed. For during this time, which was a full moneth, we fedde almoſt altogether vpon muſkles, and limpits, and birds, or ſuch as we could get on ſhore, ſeeking euery day for them, as the fowles of the ayre doe, where they can finde foode, in continuall raynie weather.

Februarie. 1587.

There is at euery myle or two myles ende an Harborough on both ſides of the land. And there are betweene the riuer of Saint Ierome and the mouth of the Streights going into the South ſea about 34. leagues by eſtimation. So that the length of the whole Streights is about 90. leagues. And the ſaid mouth of the Streights ſtandeth in the ſame height that the entrance ſtandeth in when we paſſe out of the North ſea, which is about 52. degrees and ⅔ to the Southward of the line.

The Streights of Magellan are about 90. leagues long.

The Weſterne mouth of the Streights is in 52. degrees and 2. terces.

The 24. day of February wee entred into the South ſea: and on the South ſide of the going out of the Streights is a faire high Cape with a lowe poynt adioyning vnto it: and on the North ſide are 4. or 5. Ilands, which lye 6. leagues off the mayne, and much broken and ſunken ground about them: by noone the ſame day wee had brought theſe Ilands Eaſt of vs 5. leagues off; the winde being Southerly.

Their entrance into the South ſea the 24 of Februarie.

Ilands in the South ſea called Las Anegadas.

The firſt of March a ſtorme tooke vs at North, which night the ſhips loſt the company of the Hugh Gallant, beeing in 49. ½ and 45. leagues from the land. This ſtorme continued 3. or 4. dayes, and for that time we in the Hugh Gallant being ſeparated from the other 2. ſhips, looked euery houre to ſinke, our barke was ſo leake, and our ſelues ſo dilucred and weakened with freeing it of water, that we ſlept not in three dayes and three nights.

March 1.

Extreme danger of the Hugh Gallant by a great leake.

The 15. of March in the morning the Hugh Gallant came in betweene the Iland of S. Mary and the mayne, where ſhe met with the Admiral and the Content, which had rid at the Iland called La Mocha 2. dayes, which ſtandeth in the Southerly latitude of 38. degrees: at which place ſome of our men went on ſhore with the Vice-admirals boate, where the Indians fought with them with their bowes and arrowes, and were maruellous warie of their Caliuers. Theſe Indians were enemies to the Spaniards, and belonged to a great place called Arauco, and tooke vs for Spaniards, as afterward we learned.

The Ile of Mocha in 38. degrees not ſubiect to the Spaniards.

This place which is called Arauco is wonderfull rich, and full of golde mynes, and yet could it not be ſubdued at any time by the Spaniards, but they alwayes returned with the greateſt loſſe of men. For theſe Indians are maruellous deſperate and careleſſe of their liues to liue at their owne libertie and freedome.

Arauco is the richeſt place in the South ſea for golde, and is not ſubdued by the Spaniards as yet.

The 15. day aforeſayde in the afternoone wee weighed anchor, and ranne vnder the Weſt ſide of Saint Marie Iland, where we ridde very well in 6. fathoms water, and very faire ground all that night.

Saint Marie Iland in 37. degrees and 1. terce, which is ſubdued to the Spaniards.

The 16. day our General went on ſhore himſelfe with 70. or 80. men euery one with his furniture: there came downe to vs certaine Indians with two which were the principals of the Iland to welcome vs on ſhore, thinking we had bin Spaniards, for it is ſubdued by them: who brought vs vp to a place where the Spaniards had erected a Church with croſſes & altars in it. And there were about this Church 2. or 3. ſtore houſes, which were full of wheate and barley ready threſhed and made vp in cades of ſtrawe to the quantitie of a buſhel of corne in euery cade. The wheate and barly was as faire, as cleane, and euery way as good as any we haue in England. There were alſo the like cades ful of potato rootes, which were very good to eate, ready made vp in the ſtore houſes for the Spaniards againſt they ſhould come for their tribute. This Iland alſo yeeldeth many ſorts of fruits, hogs, and hens. Theſe Indians are held in ſuch ſlauery by them, that they dare not eate a hen or an hogge themſelues. But the Spaniards haue made them all in that Iland Chriſtians. Thus we fitted our ſelues here with corne aſmuch as we would haue, and as many hogges as we had ſalt to powder them withall, and great ſtore of hennes, with a number of bags of Potato rootes, and about 500. dried dogge-fiſhes, and Guinie wheate, which is called Maiz. And hauing taken as much as we would haue, yet we left marueilous great ſtore behind vs. Our General had the two principals of the Iland aboord our ſhippe, and prouided great cheere for them, and made them merie with wine: and they in the ende perceiuing vs to bee no Spaniards, made ſignes, as neere as our Generall could perceiue, that if wee would goe ouer vnto the mayne land vnto Arauco, that there was much Golde, making vs ſignes, that we ſhould haue great ſtore of riches. But becauſe we could not vnderſtand them, our Generall made ſome haſte, and within 2. or three dayes we furniſhed our ſelues.

Arauco rich in golde.

The 18. day in the morning we departed from this place, and ran all that day Northnortheaſt about 10. leagues, and at night lay with a ſhort ſayle off and on the coaſt.

The 19. wee ranne in Eaſt Northeaſt with the land, and bare in with a place called The Conception, where wee anchored vnder an Iland, and departed the next morning without going on land.

The Conception.

The 20. wee departed from The Conception, and went into a litle Baye which was ſandie, where we ſaw freſh water and cattell, but we ſtayed not there.

Quintero ſtandeth in 33. degrees 50. minutes.

The 30. day we came into the Bay of Quintero, which ſtandeth in 33. degrees & 50 minutes.

The ſaid day preſently after we were come vnto an ancre in the Bay, there was a Neteherd or one that kept cattle which lay vpon the point of the hill aſleepe, which when he awaked and had eſpied three ſhippes which were come into the Bay, before wee could get on ſhore, he had caught an horſe which was feeding by, and rode his way as faſt as euer hee might: and our Generall with 30. ſhot with him went on ſhore. He had not bene on land one houre, but there came 3. horſemen with bright ſwords towards vs ſo hard as they might ride, vntill they came within ſome twentie or thirtie ſcore of vs, and ſo ſtayed, and would come no neerer vnto vs: ſo our Generall ſent vnto them a couple of our men with their ſhotte, and one Fernando, which was the Spaniard that wee had taken vp at the mouth of the Streights, which was one of the 400. that were ſterued there. But the Spaniards would not ſuffer our men to come neere with their ſhot, but made ſignes that one of our men ſhould come alone vnto them: ſo the ſaid Fernando the Spaniard went vnto them, and our two men ſtood not farre from them. They had great conference, and in the end Fernando came backe from them, and told our Generall that he had parled with them for ſome victuals, who had promiſed as much as we would haue. Our General ſent him backe againe with another meſſage and another ſhotte with him: and being come neere vnto them, they would not ſuffer any more then one to approch them, whereupon our men let the Spaniard goe vnto them alone himſelfe: who being ſome good diſtance from them, they ſtayed but a ſmall time together, but that the ſaid Fernando leaped vp behind one of them and rid away with them, for all his deepe and damnable othes which he had made continually to our general and all his company neuer to forſake him, but to die on his ſide before he would be falſe. Our Generall ſeeing how he was dealt withall, filled water all that day with good watch, and caried it aboord: and night being come, he determined the next day to ſend into the countrey to find their towne, and to haue taken the ſpoyle of it, and to haue fired it if they could haue found it.

The periurie of a Spaniard.

Our men march 7. or 8. miles into their enemies land.

The laſt of March Captaine Hauers went vp into the Countrey with 50. or 60. men with their ſhot and furniture with them, and we trauailed 7. or 8. miles into the land: and as we were marching along, we eſpied a number of herdes of cattell, of kine and bullockes which were wonderfull wilde: we ſaw alſo great ſtore of horſes, mares, and coltes which were very wilde and vnhandled: there is alſo great ſtore of hares and conies, and plenty of partriges and other wildfoules. The countrey is very fruitful with faire freſh riuers all along full of wilde foule of all ſorts. Hauing trauailed ſo farre that we could goe no further for the monſtrous high mountaines, we reſted our ſelues at a very fayre freſh Riuer running in and alongſt faire lowe medowes at the foote of the mountaines, where euery man drunke of the Riuer, and refreſhed themſelues. Hauing ſo done, we returned to our Ships the likeſt way that we thought their Towne ſhould bee: ſo wee trauailed all the day long, not ſeeing any man, but we mette with many wilde dogges: yet there were two hundred horſemen abroad that ſame day by meanes of the Spaniard which they had taken the day before from vs, who had tolde them that our force was but ſmall, and that wee were wonderfully weake: who though they did eſpie vs that day, yet durſt they not giue the on-ſette vpon vs. For wee marched along in array, and obſerued good order, whereby wee ſeemed a great number more then we were, vntill we came vnto our ſhips that night againe.

The next day being the firſt of April 1587, our men went on ſhoare to fill water at a pit which was a quarter of a mile from the waters ſide: and being earely hard at their buſineſſe were in no readineſſe. In which meane while there came powring downe from the hilles almoſt 200 horſemen, and before our people could returne to the rockes from the watering place, twelue of them were cut off, part killed, and part taken priſoners, the reſt were reſcued by our ſouldiers which came from the rocks to meete with them, who being but fifteene of vs that had any weapons on ſhoare, yet we made the enemie retire in the end with loſſe of ſome foure and twentie of their men, after we had ſkirmiſhed with them an houre.

24 Spaniards ſlaine.

The names of our men that were ſlaine were theſe.

Thomas Lucas of London, ſouldier.
Richard Wheeler of London.
Robert Pitcher of Norffolke, ſouldier.
John Langſton of Glouceſterſhire.
William Kingman of Dorſetſhire, ſouldier.
William Hilles of Cornewall.

Out of the Admirall.

1 William Byet of Weymouth.
2 Laurence Gamesby, of Newcaſtle.

Killed out of the viceadm.

1 Henry Blackenals of Weymouth.
2 Williams Steuens of Plymmouth, gunner.
3 William Pitte of Shereborne in Dorſetſhire.
4 Humphrey Derricke of London.

Killed out of the Hugh Gallant.

After the loſſe of theſe men, wee rid in the roade, and watered in deſpight of them with good watch and ward, vntill the fift of the ſayd moneth.

The fift day wee departed out of this bay of Quintero: and off from the bay there lyeth a little Iland about a league diſtant, whereon there are great ſtore of penguins and other fowles; whereof we tooke to ſerue our turnes, and ſailed away North, and North and by Weſt: for ſo lyeth the coaſt along in this place.

A little Iland full of penguins.

The fifteenth wee came thwart of a place which is called Morro moreno, which ſtandeth in 23 degrees ½, and is an excellent good harborough: and there is an Iland which maketh it an harborough: and a ſhip may go in at either end of the Iland: here we went with our Generall on ſhore to the number of 30 men: and at our going on ſhore vpon our landing, the Indians of the place came downe from the rockes to meete with vs, with freſh water and wood on their backes. They are in maruellous awe of the Spaniards, and very ſimple people, and liue maruellous ſauagely: For they brought vs to their bidings about two miles from the harborough, where wee ſaw their women and lodging, which is nothing but the ſkin of ſome beaſt layd vpon the ground: and ouer them in ſtead of houſes, is nothing but fiue or ſixe ſticks layd acroſſe, which ſtand vpon two forkes with ſtickes on the ground and a fewe boughes layd on it. Their diet is raw fiſh, which ſtinketh moſt vilely. And when any of them die, they burie their bowes and arrowes with them, with their canoa and all that they haue: for wee opened one of their graues, and ſaw the order of them. Their canoas or boates are maruellous artificially made of two ſkinnes like vnto bladders, and are blowen full at one ende with quilles: they haue two of theſe bladders blowen full, which are ſowen together and made faſt with a ſinew of ſome wild beaſt; which when they are in the water ſwell, ſo that they are as tight as may bee. They goe to ſea in theſe boates, and catch very much fiſh with them, and pay much of it for tribute vnto the Spaniards: but they vſe it maruellous beaſtly.

The 23 in the morning we tooke a ſmall barke which came out of Arica road, which wee kept and called The George: the men forſooke it, and went away with their boate. Our admirals pinneſſe followed the boate, & the Hugh Gallants boate tooke the barke: our admirals pinneſſe could not recouer the boat before it got on ſhoare, but went along into the road of Arica, and layd aboord a great ſhippe of an hundreth tunnes riding in the road right afore the towne, but all the men and goods were gone out of it, onely the bare ſhip was left alone. They made three or foure very faire ſhots at the pinneſſe as ſhee was comming in, but miſſed her very narrowly with a Minion ſhot which they had in the fort. Whereupon wee came into the road with the admirall and the Hugh Gallant: but the Content which was viceadmirall was behinde out of ſight: by meanes whereof, and for want of her boate to land men withall wee landed not: otherwiſe it wee had bene together, our Generall with the companie would reſolutely haue landed to take the towne, whatſoeuer had come of it. The cauſe why the Content ſtayed behind was, that ſhee had found about 14 leagues to the Southward of Arica, in a place where the Spaniards had landed, a whole ſhips lading of botijas of wine of Caſtillia, whereof the ſayd Content tooke into her as many as ſhee could conueniently carrie, and came after vs into the road of Arica the ſame day. By this time wee perceiued that the towne had gathered all their power together, and alſo conueyed all their treaſure away, and buried it before wee were come neere the towne: for they had heard of vs. Nowe becauſe it was very populous with the ayde of one or two places vp in the land, our Generall ſawe there was no landing without loſſe of many men: wherefore hee gaue ouer that enterpriſe. While wee rid in the road they ſhot at vs, and our ſhips ſhot at them againe for euery ſhot two. Moreouer, our pinneſſe went in hard almoſt to the ſhoare, and fetched out another barke which rid there in deſpight of all their forts though they ſhot ſtill at the pinneſſe, which they could neuer hit. After theſe things our Generall ſent a boate on ſhoare with a flag of truce to knowe if they would redeeme their great ſhippe or no; but they would not: for they had receiued ſpeciall commandement from the viceroy from Lima, not to buy any ſhippe, nor to ranſome any man vpon paine of death. Our Generall did this in hope to haue redeemed ſome of our men, which were taken priſoners on ſhoare by the horſemen at Quintero, otherwiſe hee would haue made them no offer of parley.

Great ſtore of wine found.

Another barke taken in the road.

The fourth barke taken. A watchhouſe.

The 25 riding ſtil in the ſaid road, we ſpied a ſaile comming from the Southward, and our Generall ſent out his pinneſſe to meete her, with all our boates; but the towne made ſuch ſignes from the hill with fires and tokens out of the watch-houſe, that before our pinneſſe could get to them, they ran the barke on ſhoare two miles to the Southward of the towne; but they had ſmall leaſure to carrie any thing with them; but all the men ſkaped, among whom there were certaine friers: for wee ſawe them in their friers weedes as they ran on ſhoare: many horſemen came from the towne to reſcue them, and to carrie them away, otherwiſe wee had landed and taken or killed them. So wee went aboord the barke as ſhe lay ſunke, and fetched out the pillage: but there was nothing in it of any value, and came aboord our ſhippes againe the ſame night: and the next morning wee ſet the great ſhippe on fire in the road, and ſunke one of the barkes, and carried the other along with vs, and ſo departed from thence, and went away Northweſt.

The firſt barke of aduiſe taken

The 27 day wee tooke a ſmall barke, which came from S. Iago neere vnto Quintero, where wee loſt our men firſt. In this barke was one George a Greeke, a reaſonable pilot for all the coaſt of Chili. They were ſent to the citie of Lima with letters of aduiſo of vs, and of the loſſe of our men. There were alſo in the ſayde barke one Flemming and three Spaniards: and they were all ſworne and receiued the Sacrament before they came to ſea by three or foure friers, that if wee ſhould chance to meete them, they ſhould throw thoſe letters ouer boord: which, (as wee were giuing them chaſe with our pinneſſe) before wee could fetch them vp, they had accordingly throwen away. Yet our Generall wrought ſo with them, that they did confeſſe it: but hee was faine to cauſe them to bee tormented with their thumbes in a wrinch, and to continue them at ſeuerall times with extreme paine. Alſo hee made the old Flemming beleeue that hee would hang him; and the rope being about his necke hee was pulled vp a little from the hatches, and yet hee would not confeſſe, chuſing rather to die, then hee would bee periured. In the end it was confeſſed by one of the Spaniards, whereupon wee burnt the barke, and carried the men with vs.

A good mind if he had bene in a good cauſe.

The third of May wee came into a bay where are three little townes, which are called Paracca, Chincha, and Piſca, where ſome of vs landed and tooke certaine houſes, wherein was bread, wine, figs and hennes: but the ſea went ſo high, that wee could not land at the beſt of the townes without ſinking of our boats, and great hazard of vs all. This place ſtandeth in thirteene degrees and $\frac{2}{3}$ to the Southward of the line.

An Iland of Seales.

The fift of May wee departed from this harbour, leauing the Content our viceadmirall within at an Iland of ſeales, by which meanes at that time wee loſt her companie.

The ninth wee gaue chaſe to a ſaile, namely, Our admirall, The Hugh Gallant, and The George which wee had taken before comming out of the roade of Arica; The Content which was our viceadmirall being ſtill loſt: but wee could not fetch it. The George made after it, but loſt it that night.

The tenth day the Hugh Gallant (in which barke I Francis Pretie was) loſt companie of our admirall.

The Hugh Gallant loſt companie of the fleete, and met not untill the ſeuenteenth.

The eleuenth we which were in the Hugh Gallant put into a bay which ſtandeth in 12 degrees $\frac{1}{3}$, in which bay wee found a riuer of freſh water about eight of the clocke at night: and though we were but of ſmall force, and no more but one barke and 18 men in it, yet wee went on ſhoare to fill water; where hauing filled one boates lading, while our boate was in going aboord, two or three of our companie which were on ſhoare, as they were going a little from the watering place with their furniture about them, eſpied where there were foure or fiue hundred bagges of meale on an heape couered with a fewe reedes. So that night we filled water and tooke as much meale as wee thought good: which fell out well for vs that were then loſt and ſtoode in neede of victuals: and by breake of day in the morning wee came aboord, and there ſtayed and rode vntill the afternoone. In which meane time the towne ſeeing vs ride there ſtill, brought downe much cattell to the ſea ſide to haue intiſed vs to come on ſhoare: but wee ſawe their intent, and weyed anker and departed the twelft day.

400 bags of meale found.

The 13 day at night wee put into a bay which ſtandeth in 9 degrees and ⅓, where wee ſawe horſemen: and that night wee landed, namely, M. Bruer Captaine, my ſelfe Francis Pretie, Arthur Warford, Iohn Way Preacher, Iohn Newman, Andrew Wyght, William Gargefield, and Henry Hilliard. And we 8 onely, hauing euery man his harquebuze and his furniture about him, marched three quarters of a mile along the ſea ſide, where wee found a boate of fiue or ſixe tunnes haled vp drie on the ſhoare about a cables length from the water: and with extreme labour wee lanched the barke; when it was on flote, Captaine Bruer and I went in, while the reſt of our companie were fetching their things: but ſuddenly it was readie to ſinke: And the Captaine and I ſtoode vp to the knees lading out water with our targets: but it ſunke downe faſter then wee were able to free it, inſomuch as in the end wee had much adoe to ſaue our ſelues from drowning. When wee were out, wee ſtood in great feare that our owne boate wherein wee came on ſhoare was ſunke: for wee could no where ſee it. Howbeit the Captaine commanded them to keepe it off, for feare of the great ſurge that went by the ſhoare. Yet in the end wee ſpied it, and went aboord by two and two, and were driuen to wade vp to the arme-holes 60 paces into the ſea before wee could get into the boate, by reaſon of the ſhoaldneſſe: and then departed the foureteenth day in the morning.

A bay in 9. degrees and ⅓.

Iohn Way a preacher.

The 16 wee tooke with the Hugh Gallant, being but ſixteene men of vs in it, a great ſhippe which came from Guaianil, which was called The Lewis, and was of the burthen of three hundred tuns, hauing foure and twentie men in it, wherein was pilot one Gonſaluo de Ribas, whom wee carried along with vs, and a Negro called Emmanuel. The ſhippe was laden with nothing but timber and victuals: wherefore wee left her ſeuen leagues from the land very leake and ready to ſinke in 7 degrees to the Southward of the line: wee ſunke her boate and tooke away her foreſaile and certaine victuals.

A ſhip of 300 tunnes taken after halfe an houres fight.

Seuen degrees of Southerly latitude.

The 17 of May wee met with our admirall againe, and all the reſt of our fleete. They had taken two ſhips, the one laden with ſugar, moloſſes, maiz, Cordouan-ſkinnes, montego de Porco, many packes of pintados, many Indian coates, and ſome marmalade, and 1000 hennes: and the other ſhip was laden with wheate-meale, and boxes of marmalade. One of theſe ſhips which had the chiefe marchandiſe in it, was worth twentie thouſand pounds, if it had bene in England or in any other place of Chriſtendome where wee might haue ſolde it. Wee filled all our ſhips with as much as wee could beſtow of theſe goods: the reſt wee burnt and the ſhips alſo; and ſet the men and women that were not killed on ſhoare.

They met their fleete againe.

Two rich ſhips taken.

One ſhippe worth 20000 pounds.

The 20 day in the morning wee came into the road of Paita, and being at an anker, our Generall landed with ſixtie or ſeuentie men, ſkirmiſhed with them of the towne, and draue them all to flight to the top of the hill which is ouer the towne, except a few ſlaues and ſome other which were of the meaner ſort, who were commanded by the gouernours to ſtay below in the towne, at a place which is in building for a fort, hauing with them a bloodie enſigne, being in number about one hundred men. Nowe as wee were rowing betweene the ſhips and the ſhoare, our gunner ſhot off a great peece out of one of the barkes, and the ſhot fel among them, and draue them to flie from the fort as faſt as they might runne, who got them vp vpon an hill, and from thence ſhot among vs with their ſmall ſhot. After wee were landed and had taken the towne, wee ran vpon them, and chaſed them ſo fiercely vp the hilles for the ſpace of an houre, that wee draue them in the ende away perforce, and being got vp the hilles, wee found where they had layd all their ſtuffe which they had brought out of the towne, and had hidden it there vpon the mountaines. We alſo found the quantitie of 25 pounds weight in ſiluer in pieces of eight rials, and abundance of houſhold ſtuffe and ſtorehouſes full of all kinde of wares: but our Generall would not ſuffer any man to carrie much cloth or apparell away, becauſe they ſhould not cloy themſelues with burthens: for hee knew not whether our enemies were prouided with furniture according to the number of their men: for they were fiue men to one of vs: and wee had an Engliſh mile and an halfe to our ſhips. Thus wee came downe in ſafetie to the towne, which was very well builded, and maruellous cleane kept in euery ſtreete, with a towne-houſe or Guild hall in the middeſt: and had to the number of two hundred houſes at the leaſt in it. Wee ſet it on fire to the ground, and goods to the value of fiue or ſixe thouſand pounds: there was alſo a barke riding in the roade which wee ſet on fire, and departed, directing our courſe to the Iland of Puna.

The Iland of Puna within 1 degree the Equinoctial to the South. A great ſhip burnt.

Great ſtore of cables made in Puna.

The 25 day of May wee arriued at the Iland of Puna, where is a very good harbour, where wee found a great ſhippe of the burthen of 250 tunnes riding at an anker with all her furniture, which was readie to bee haled on ground: for there is a ſpeciall good place for that purpoſe. Wee ſunke it, and went on ſhoare where the lord of the Iland dwelt, which was by the waters ſide, who had a ſumptuous houſe maruellous well contriued with very many ſingular good roomes and chambers in it: and out of euery chamber was framed a gallerie with a ſtately proſpect into the ſea on the one ſide, and into the Iland on the other ſide, with a maruellous great hall below, and a very great ſtorehouſe at the one ende of the hall, which was filled with botijas of pitch and baſh to make cables withall: for the moſt part of the cables in the South ſea are made vpon that Iland. This great Caſique doth make all the Indians vpon the Iland to worke and to drudge for him: and hee himſelfe is an Indian borne, but is married to a maruellous faire woman which is a Spaniard, by reaſon of his pleaſant habitation and of his great wealth.

This Spaniſh woman his wife is honoured as a Queene in the Iland, and neuer goeth on the ground vpon her feete: but holdeth it too baſe a thing for her: But when her pleaſure is to take the ayre, or to goe abroad, ſhee is alwayes carried in a ſhadowe like vnto an horſe-litter vpon foure mens ſhoulders, with a veile or canopie ouer her for the ſunne or the winde, hauing her gentlewomen ſtill attending about her with a great troope of the beſt men of the Iland with her. But both ſhee and the lorde of the Iland with all the Indians in the towne were newly fled out of the Iland before wee could get to an anker, by reaſon wee were becalmed before wee could get in, and were gone ouer vnto the maine lande, hauing carried away with them to the ſumme of 100000 crownes, which wee knew by a captaine of the Iland an Indian, which was left there with ſome other vpon the Iland vnder him, whom wee had taken at ſea as wee were comming into the road, being in a balſa or canoa for a ſpie to ſee what wee were.

The 27 our General himſelfe with certaine ſhot and ſome targettiers went ouer into the maine vnto the place where this foreſayde Indian captaine which wee had taken had tolde vs that the Caſique, which was the lord of all the Iland, was gone vnto, and had caried all his treaſure with him: but at our comming to the place which wee went to lande at, wee found newly arriued there foure or fiue great balſas, which were laden with plantans, bags of meale, and many other kinds of victuals. Our Generall maruelled what they were and what they meant, aſking the Indian guide and commanding him to ſpeake the trueth vpon his life: being then bound faſt, hee anſwered being very much abaſhed, as well as our companie were, that hee neither knewe from whence they ſhould come, nor who they ſhould bee: for there was neuer a man in any one of the balſas: and becauſe hee had told our Generall before, that it was an eaſie matter to take the ſayd Caſique and all his treaſure, and that there were but three or foure houſes ſtanding in a deſert place and no reſiſtance, and that if hee found it not ſo, hee ſhould hang him. Againe being demaunded to ſpeake vpon his life what hee thought theſe Balſas ſhould bee, hee anſwered that hee coulde not ſay from whence they ſhould come, except it were to bring 60 ſouldiers, which hee did heare were to go to a place called Guaiaquil, which was about 6 leagues from the ſaide yland, where two or three of the kings ſhippes were on the ſtocks in building, where are continually an hundred ſouldiers in gariſons who had heard of vs, and had ſent for ſixtie more for feare of burning of the ſhippes and towne. Our Generall not any whit diſcouraged either at the ſight of the balſas vnlooked for, or for hearing of the threeſcore ſouldiers not vntill then ſpoken of, with a braue courage animating his companie in the exployte, went preſently forward, being in the night in a moſt deſert path in the woods, vntill ſuch time as hee came to the place; where, as it ſeemed, they had kept watch either at the waters ſide, or at the houſes, or elſe at both, and were newly gone out of the houſes, hauing ſo ſhort warning, that they left the meate both boyling and roſting at the fire and were fledde with their treaſure with them, or elſe buried it where it could not bee found, being alſo in the night. Our companie tooke hennes and ſuch things as wee thought good, and came away.

The towne of Guaiaquil.

A little Iland neere vnto Puna.

The 29 day of May our Generall went in the ſhip-boate into a little Iland there by, whereas the ſayd Caſique which was the lord of Puna had cauſed all the hangings of his chambers, which were of cordouan leather all guilded ouer, and painted very faire and rich, with all his houſhold ſtuffe, and all the ſhips tackling which was riding in the road at our comming in, with great ſtore of nailes, ſpikes of yron, and very many other things to be conueyed: all which wee found, and brought away what our Generall thought requiſite for the ſhips buſineſſe.

This Iland is very pleaſant for all things requiſite, and fruitful: but there are no mines of gold nor ſiluer in it. There are at the leaſt 200 houſes in the towne about the Caſiques pallace, and as many in one or two townes more vpon the Iland, which is almoſt as bigge as the Ile of Wight in England. There is planted on the one ſide of the Caſiques houſe a faire garden, with all herbes growing in it, and at the lower end a well of freſh water, and round about it are trees ſet, whereon bombaſin cotton groweth after this maner: The tops of the trees grow full of cods, out of which the cotton groweth, and in the cotton is a ſeede of the bigneſſe of a peaſe, and in euery codde there are ſeuen or eight of theſe ſeedes: and if the cotton bee not gathered when it is ripe, then theſe ſeedes fall from it, and ſpring againe.

The Ile of Pona is almoſt as big as the Ile of Wight.

Cotton trees.

There are alſo in this garden fig-trees which beare continually, alſo pompions, melons, cucumbers, radiſhes, roſemarie and thyme, with many other herbes and fruits. At the other end of the houſe there is alſo another orchard, where grow orenges ſweete and ſower, limmons, pomegranates and lymes, with diuers other fruits.

An excellent orchard.

There is very good paſture ground in this Iland; and withall many horſes, oxen, bullockes, ſheepe very fat and faire, great ſtore of goates which be very tame, and are vſed continually to bee milked. They haue moreouer abundance of pigeons, turkeys, and ducks of a marueſlous bigneſſe.

There was alſo a very large and great church hard by the Caſiques houſe, whither hee cauſed all the Indians in the Iland to come and heare maſſe: for he himſelfe was made a Chriſtian when he was maried to the Spaniſh woman before ſpoken of, and vpon his conuerſion he cauſed the reſt of his ſubiects to be Chriſtened. In this church was an high altar with a crucifixe, and fiue belles hanging in the nether end thereof. We burnt the church and brought the belles away.

By this time wee had haled on ground our admirall, and had made her cleane, burnt her keele, pitched and tarred her, and had haled her on flote againe. And in the meane while continually kept watch and ward in the great houſe both night and day.

The ſecond grauing of their ſhips.

The ſecond day of Iune in the morning, by and by after breake of day, euery one of the watch being gone abroad to ſeeke to fetch in victuals, ſome one way, ſome another, ſome for hennes, ſome for ſheepe, ſome for goats, vpon the ſudden there came downe vpon vs an hundred Spaniſh ſouldiers with muſkets and an enſigne, which were landed on the other ſide of the Iland that night, and all the Indians of the Iland with them, euery one with weapons and their baggage after them: which was by meanes of a Negro, whoſe name was Emmanuel, which fled from vs at our firſt landing there. Thus being taken at aduantage we had the worſt: for our companie was not paſt ſixteene or twentie; whereof they had ſlaine one or two before they were come to the houſes: yet we ſkirmiſhed with them an houre and an halfe: at the laſt being ſore ouercharged with multitudes, we were driuen down from the hill to the waters ſide, and there kept them play a while, vntill in the end Zacharie Saxie, who with his halberd had kept the way of the hill, and ſlaine a couple of them, as hee breathed himſelfe being ſomewhat tired, had an honourable death and a ſhort: for a ſhot ſtrooke him to the heart: who feeling himſelfe mortally wounded cryed to God for mercie, and fell downe preſently dead. But ſoone after the enemie was driuen ſomewhat to retire from the bankes ſide to the greene: and in the ende our boate came and carried as many of our men away as could goe in her, which was in hazard of ſinking while they haſtened into it: And one of our men whoſe name was Robert Maddocke was ſhot through the head with his owne peece, being a ſnap-hance, as hee was haſting into the boate. But foure of vs were left behinde which the boate could not carrie: to wit, my ſelfe Francis Pretie, Thomas Andrewes, Steuen Gunner, and Richard Roſe: which had our ſhot readie and retired our ſelues vnto a cliffe, vntill the boate came againe, which was preſently after they had carried the reſt aboord. There were ſixe and fortie of the enemies ſlaine by vs, whereof they had dragged ſome into buſhes, and ſome into olde houſes, which wee found afterward. Wee loſt twelue men in maner following.

The firſt ſkirmiſh with the Spaniards.

Zacharie Saxie ſlaine honourably.

Robert Maddock ſlaine with his owne peece.

46 Spaniards and Indians ſlaine.

Slaine by the enemie.
1 Zacharie Saxie,
2 Neales Iohnſon,
3 William Geirgiſield,
4 Nicolas Hendie,
5 Henry Cooper.

1 Robert Maddocke, killed with his peece.

2 Henry Mawdley, burnt.

1 Edward the gunners man,
2 Ambroſe the muſitian, drowned.

1 Walter Tilliard,
2 Edward Smith,
3 Henry Aſelye,
taken priſoners.

The ſecond ſkirmiſh with the Spaniards.
The chiefe towne in Puna burnt.

The ſelfe ſame day being the ſecond of Iune, we went on ſhoare againe with ſeuentie men, and had a freſh ſkirmiſh with the enemies, and draue them to retire, being an hundred Spaniards ſeruing with muſkets, and two hundred Indians with bowes, arrowes and darts. This done, wee ſet fire on the towne and burnt it to the ground, hauing in it to the number of three hundred houſes: and ſhortly after made hauocke of their fieldes, orchards and gardens, and burnt foure great ſhips more which were in building on the ſtockes.

The third of Iune the Content which was our viceadmirall was haled on ground, to graue at the ſame place in deſpight of the Spaniards: and alſo our pinneſſe which the Spaniards had burned, was new trimmed.

They arriued at Puna the 25 of May.
The Hugh Gallant a barke of 40 tuns ſunke.

The fift day of Iune wee departed out of the roade of Puna, where wee had remained eleuen dayes, and turned vp for a place which is called Rio dolce, where wee watered: at which place alſo wee ſunke our rereadmirall called The Hugh Gallant for want of men, being a barke of fortie tunnes.

The tenth day of the ſame moneth wee ſet the Indians on ſhoare, which we had taken before in a balſa as we were comming into the road of Puna.

Rio dolce.

The eleuenth day wee departed from the ſayd Rio dolce.

The twelft of Iune wee doubled the Equinoctial line, and continued our courſe Northward all that moneth.

The firſt of Iulie wee had ſight of the coaſt of Nueua Eſpanna, being foure leagues diſtant from land in the latitude of ten degrees to the Northward of the line.

Michael Sancius a Marſilian.

The ninth of Iulie wee tooke a new ſhip of the burthen of 120 tunnes, wherein was one Michael Sancius, whom our Generall tooke to ſerue his turne to water along the coaſt: for hee was one of the beſt coaſters in the South ſea. This Michael Sancius was a Prouenſal, borne in Marſeils, and was the firſt man that tolde vs newes of the great ſhip called The Santa Anna, which wee afterward tooke comming from the Philippinas.

A great new ſhip burnt.

There were ſixe men more in this new ſhippe: we tooke her ſailes, her ropes, and fire-wood, to ſerue our turnes, ſet her on fire, and kept the men.

The ſecond barke of aduiſe taken.
Sonſonate in the prouince of Guatimala.
A barke burnt.

The tenth we tooke another barke which was going with aduiſe of vs and our ſhips all along the coaſt, as Michael Sancius tolde vs: but all the companie that were in the barke were fledde on ſhoare. None of both theſe ſhips had any goods in them. For they came both from Sonſonate in the prouince of Guatimala; the new ſhippe, for feare we ſhould haue taken her in the road, and the barke, to carrie newes of vs along the coaſt; which barke alſo wee ſet on fire.

The riuer of Copalita.
Aguatulco in 15 degrees and 40 minutes Northward.

The 26 day of Iuly wee came to an anker at 10 fathoms in the riuer of Copalita, where wee made account to water. And the ſame night wee departed with 30 men in the pinneſſe, and rowed to Aguatulco, which is but two leagues from the aforeſayd riuer; and ſtandeth in 15 degrees 40 minutes to the Northward of the Equinoctial line.

A barke burnt.
Anile.
Cacaos.
Aguatulco a towne of 100 houſes burnt.
Cacaos goe for money in Nueua Eſpanna.

The 27 in the morning by the breake of day wee came into the roade of Aguatulco, where wee found a barke of 50 tunnes, which was come from Sonſonate laden with cacaos and anile which they had there landed: and the men were all fled on ſhoare. Wee landed there, and burnt their towne, with the church and cuſtome-houſe which was very faire and large: in which houſe were 600 bags of anile to dye cloth; euery bag whereof was worth 40 crownes, and 400 bags of cacaos; euery bag whereof is worth ten crownes. Theſe cacaos goe among them for meate and money. For 150 of them are in value one rial of plate in ready payment. They are very like vnto an almond, but are nothing ſo pleaſant in taſte: they eate them, and make drinke of them. This the owner of the ſhippe tolde vs. I found in this towne before wee burnt it, a flaſket full of boxes of balme. After we had ſpoyled and burnt the towne, wherein there were ſome hundred houſes, the owner of the ſhippe came downe out of the hilles with a flag of truce vnto vs, which before with the reſt of all the towneſmen was run away at our firſt comming; and at length came aboord our pinneſſe vpon Captaine Hauers worde of ſafe returne. We carried him to the riuer of Copalita where our ſhippes rode: and when hee came to our Generall, hee cauſed him to bee ſet on ſhoare in ſafetie the ſame night, becauſe hee came vpon the captaines word.

The 28 day we ſet ſaile from Copalita, becauſe the ſea was ſo great there, that wee could not fill water, and ran the ſame night into the roade of Aguatulco.

Our Generall entred two miles into the maine land with 30 men.

The 29 our Generall landed and went on ſhoare with thirtie men two miles into the woods, where wee tooke a Meſtizo, whoſe name was Michael de Truxillo, who was cuſtomer of that towne, and wee found with him two chambers full of his ſtuffe: wee brought him and his ſtuffe aboord. And whereas I ſay he was a Meſtizo, it is to be vnderſtood that a Meſtizo is one which hath a Spaniard to his father and an Indian to his mother.

The ſecond day of Auguſt, we had watered, and examined the ſaid Meſtizo, and ſet him on ſhore againe and departed from the port of Aguatulco the ſame night, which ſtandeth as I ſayd before in 15 degrees and 40 minuts to the Northward of the lyne.

Our departure from Aguatulco.

Here wee ouerſlipped the hauen of Acapulco, from whence the ſhippes are ſet foorth for the Philippinas.

The foure and twentieth day of Auguſt, our Generall with 30 of vs went with the pinneſſe vnto an hauen called Puerto de Natiuidad, where wee had intelligence by Michael Sancius that there ſhould bee a pinneſſe, but before wee could get thither the ſayde pinneſſe was gone to fiſh for pearles 12 leagues farther, as we were informed by certaine Indians which we found there. We tooke a mullato in this place, in his bedde, which was ſent with letters of aduiſe concerning vs along the coaſt, of Nueua Galicia, whoſe horſe wee killed, tooke his letters, left him behinde, ſet fire on the houſes, and burnt two new ſhippes of 200 tunnes the piece, which were in building there on the ſtockes, and came abourd of our ſhippes againe.

Puerto de Natiuidad in 19 degrees.

The third poſte of aduiſe taken.

Puerto de Natiuidad burnt.

Two new ſhips burnt.

The ſixe and twentie day of Auguſt, wee came into the bay of S. Iago, where wee watered at a freſh Riuer, along which riuer many plantans are growing: here is great abundance of freſh fiſh. Heere alſo certaine of our companie dragged for pearles and caught ſome quantitie.

The riuer of Sant Iago.

Pearles taken.

The ſecond of September wee departed from Sant Iago at foure of the clocke in the euening. This bay of Sant Iago ſtandeth in ninetene degrees and eighteene minuts to the Northward of the lyne.

The 3 of September wee arriued in a litle bay a league to the Weſtwarde off Port de Nauidad called Malacca, which is a very good place to ride in: and the ſame day about twelue of the clocke our Generall landed with thirtie men or there about, and went vp to a towne of Indians which was two leagues from the road, which towne is called Acatlan: there were in it about 20 or 30 houſes and a Church, which we defaced and came abourd againe the ſame night. All the people were fled out of the towne at the ſight of vs.

The bay of Malacca.

The towne of Acatlan burnt.

The fourth of September, wee departed from the roade of Malacca, and ſayled along the coaſt.

The 8 we came to the roade of Chaccalla, in which bay there are two litle houſes by the waters ſide. This bay is 18 leagues from the Cape de los Corrientes.

The road of Chaccalla.

The 9 in the morning our Generall ſent vp Captaine Hauers with fortie men of vs before day, and Michael Sancius being our guide, wee went vnto a place about two leagues vp into the countrey in a moſt villanous deſert path through the woods and wilderneſſe; and in the ende we came to a place where wee tooke three houſholders with their wiues and children and ſome Indians, one carpenter which was a Spaniard, and a Portugall, wee bound them all and made them to come to the ſea ſide with vs.

Our Generall made their wiues to fetch vs Plantans, Lymmons, and Oranges, Pineaples and other fruites whereof they had abundance, and ſo let their huſbandes depart, except Sembrano the Spaniſh Carpenter, and Diego the Portugal; and the tenth day wee departed the roade.

The twelfth day wee arriued at a little Iſland called the Iſle of Sant Andrewe, on which there is great ſtore of fowle and wood: where wee dryed and ſalted as many of the fowles as we thought good: wee alſo killed there abundance of ſeales, and Iguanos which are a kinde of Serpents, with foure feete, and a long ſharpe tayle, ſtrange to them which haue not ſeene them; but they are very good meate. Wee ridde here vntill the ſeuenteenth day, at which time wee departed.

The Iſle of Sant Andrew.

Iguanos good meate.

The 24 day wee arriued in the roade of Maſſatlan, which ſtandeth in 23 degrees ½, iuſt vnder the Tropicke of Cancer: It is a very great riuer within, but is barred at the mouth: and vpon the North ſide of the barre without, is good freſh water: but there is very euill filling of it; becauſe at a lowe water it is ſhoald halfe a mile off the ſhoare. There is great ſtore of freſh fiſh in that bay: and good fruites vp into the countrey, whereof wee had ſome, though not without danger.

Maſſatlan in 23 degrees, and an halfe.

The ſeuen and twentieth day of September, wee departed from the roade of Maſſatlan and ran to an iſland which is a league to the Northward the ſayd Maſſatlan; where wee trimmed our ſhips and new built our pinneſſe: and there is a litle iſland a quarter of a league from it, on which are ſeales; where a Spaniſh priſoner, whoſe name was Domingo, being ſent to waſh ſhirtes with one of our mē to keep him, made a ſcape, & ſwam to the maine, which was an Engliſh mile diſtant: at which place we had ſeen 30 or 40 Spaniards & Indians, which were horſemen, and kept watch there, there, which came from a towne called Chiametla, which was 11 leagues vp into the countrey, as Michael Sancius told vs. We found vpon the iſland where we trimmed our pinneſſe, freſh water by the aſſiſtance of God in that our great neede by digging two or three foote deepe in the ſande, where no water nor ſigne of water was before to be perceiued. Otherwiſe we had gon backe 20 or 30 leagues to water: which might haue bene occaſion that we might haue miſſed our prey wee had long wayted for. But God rayſed one Flores a Spaniard, which was alſo a priſoner with vs, to make a motion to digge in the ſands. Now our Generall hauing had experience ones before of the like, commanded to put his motion in practiſe, and in digging three foote deepe wee found very good and freſh water. So we watered our ſhips, and might haue filled a thouſand tunnes more, if we had would.

Chiametla.

Freſh water at 2 or 3 foote deepe in the ſand.

We ſtayed in this iſland vntill the 9 day of October, at which time we departed at night for the cape of S. Lucar, which is on the Weſt ſide of the point of California.

The 14 of October we fell with the cape of S. Lucar, which cape is very like the Needles at the iſle of Wight; and within the ſaid cape is a great bay called by the Spaniards Aguada Segura: into which bay falleth a faire freſh riuer, about which many Indians vſe to keepe: wee watered in the riuer and lay off and on from the ſaide cape of S. Lucar vntill the fourth of Nouember, and had the windes hanging ſtill Weſterly.

Aguada Segura.

The 4 of Nouember the Deſire and the Content, wherein were the number of Engliſhmen onely liuing, beating vp and downe vpon the headland of California, which ſtandeth in 23 degrees and $\frac{2}{3}$ to the Northward, betwene ſeuen and 8 of the clocke in the morning one of the company of our Admirall which was the trumpeter of the ſhip going vp into the top eſpied a ſayle bearing in from the ſea with the cape; whereupon hee cryed out with no ſmall ioy to himſelfe and the whole company, A ſayle, A ſayle, with which cheerefull word the maſter of the ſhip and diuers others of the company went alſo vp into the maine top, who perceiuing the ſpeech to be very true gaue information vnto our Generall of theſe happy newes, who was no leſſe glad then the cauſe required: whereupon he gaue in charge preſently vnto the whole company to put all things in readines, which being performed we gaue thē chaſe ſome 3 or 4 houres, ſtanding with our beſt aduantage and working for the winde. In the afternoone we gat vp vnto them, giuing them the broad ſide with our great ordinance and a volee of ſmall ſhot, and preſently layed the ſhip aboord, whereof the king of Spaine was owner, which was Admiral of the ſouth ſea, called the S. Anna, & thought to be 700 tunnes in burthen. Now as we were ready on their ſhips ſide to enter her, being not paſt 50 or 60 men at the vttermoſt in our ſhip, we perceiued that the Captaine of the ſaid ſhip had made fights fore and after, and layd their ſailes cloſe on their poope, their mid ſhip, with their fore caſtle, and hauing not one man to be ſeene, ſtood cloſe vnder their fights, with lances, iauelings, rapiers, & targets, & an innumerable ſort of great ſtones, which they threw ouerboord vpon our heads and into our ſhip ſo faſt and being ſo many of them, that they put vs off the ſhippe againe, with the loſſe of 2 of our men which were ſlaine, & with the hurting of 4 or 5. But for al this we new trimmed our ſailes, and fitted euery man his furniture, and gaue them a freſh incounter with our great ordinance and alſo with our ſmall ſhot, raking them through and through, to the killing and maiming of many of their men. Their Captaine ſtill like a valiant man with his company ſtood very ſtoutely vnto his cloſe fights, not yeelding as yet: Our General encouraging his men a freſh with the whole noyſe of trumpets gaue them the third encounter with our great ordinance and all our ſmall ſhot to the great diſcomforting of our enemies raking them through in diuers places, killing and ſpoiling many of their men. They being thus diſcomforted and ſpoiled, and their ſhippe being in hazard of ſinking by reaſon of the great ſhot which were made, wherof ſome were vnder water, within 5 or 6 houres fight ſet out a flagge of truce and parled for mercy, deſiring our Generall to ſaue their liues and to take their goods, and that they would preſently yeeld. Our Generall of his goodnes promiſed them mercy, and willed them to ſtrike their ſayles, and to hoyſe out their boate and to come aboord: which newes they were ful glad to heare of, and preſently ſtrooke their ſailes, hoyſed their boat out, and one of their cheiſe marchants came aboord vnto our Generall: and falling downe vpon his knees, offered to haue kiſſed our Generals feete, and craued mercie: our General moſt graciouſly pardoned both him and the reſt vpon promiſe of their true dealing with him and his company concerning ſuch riches as were in the ſhippe: and ſent for the Captaine and their Pilote, who at their comming vſed the like duetie and reuerence as the former did. The Generall of his great mercy & humanitie, promiſed their liues and good vſage. The ſayd Captaine and Pilote preſently certified the Generall what goods they had within boord, to wit, an hundreth and 22 thouſand pezos of golde: and the reſt of the riches that the ſhip was laden with, was in ſilkes, ſattens, damaſks, with muſke & diuers other marchandize, and great ſtore of al maner of victuals with the choyſe of many conſerues of all ſortes for to eate, and of ſundry ſorts of very good wines. Theſe things being made knowne to the Generall by the aforeſaide Captaine and Pilote, they were commanded to ſtay aboord the Deſire, and on the 6 day of Nouember following wee went into an harbour which is called by the Spaniards, Aguada Segura, or Puerto Seguro.

The marchandiſe in the great ſhip.

Here the whole company of the Spaniardes, both of men and women to the number of 190 perſons were ſet on ſhore: where they had a fayre riuer of freſh water, with great ſtore of freſh fiſh, foule, and wood, and alſo many hares and conies vpon the maine land. Our generall alſo gaue them great ſtore of victuals, of garuanſos, peaſon, and ſome wine. Alſo they had all the ſailes of their ſhippe to make them tents on ſhore, with licence to take ſuch ſtore of plankes as ſhould bee ſufficient to make them a barke. Then we fell to hoyſing in of our goods, ſharing of the treaſure, and alotting to euery man his portion. In deuiſion whereof the eight of this moneth, many of the company fell into a mutinie againſt our Generall, eſpecially thoſe which were in the Content, which neuertheleſſe were after a ſort pacified for the time.

The Spaniardes ſet on ſhore to the number of 190.

Mutinie againſt the Generall.

On the 17 day of Nouember, which is the day of the happy Coronation of her Maieſtie, our Generall commanded all his ordinance to be ſhot off, with the ſmall ſhot both in his owne ſhippe where himſelfe went, and alſo in the Content, which was our Vice-admirall. This being done, the ſame night we had many fireworkes and more ordinance diſcharged, to the great admiration of all the Spaniards which were there: for the moſt part of them had neuer ſeene the like before.

This ended, our Generall diſcharged the Captaine, gaue him a royall reward, with prouiſion for his defence againſt the Indians and his company, both of ſwords, targets, pieces, ſhot, and powder to his great contentment: but before his departure, he tooke out of this great ſhippe two yong lads borne in Iapon, which could both wright and reade their owne language, the eldeſt being about 20 yeers olde was named Chriſtopher, the other was called Coſmus, about 17 yeeres of age, both of very good capacitie. He tooke alſo with him out of their ſhip, 3 boyes borne in the iſles of Manilla, the one about 15, the other about 13, and the yongeſt about 9 yeeres old. The name of the eldeſt was Alphonſo, the ſecond Anthony de Daſi, the third remaineth with the right honourable the Counteſſe of Eſſex. He alſo tooke from them, one Nicholas Roderigo a Portugall, who hath not onely bene in Canton and other parts of China, but alſo in the iſlands of Iapon being a countrey moſt rich in ſiluer mynes, and hath alſo bene in the Philippinas.

Hee tooke alſo from them a Spaniard whoſe name was Thomas de Erſola, which was a very good Pilote from Acapulco and the coaſt of Nueua Eſpanna vnto the iſlands of Ladrones, where the Spaniardes doe put in to water, ſayling betweene Acapulco and the Philippinas: in which iſles of Ladrones, they finde freſh water, plantans, and potato rootes: howbeit the people be very rude and heathens. The 19 day of Nouember aforeſaid, about 3 of the clock in the afternoone, our Generall cauſed the kings ſhippe to be ſet on fire, which hauing to the quantitie of 500 tunnes of goods in her we ſaw burnt vnto the water, and then gaue them a piece of ordinance and ſet ſayle ioyfully homewardes towardes England with a fayre winde, which by this time was come about to Eaſtnortheaſt: and night growing neere, we left the Content a ſterne of vs, which was not as yet come out of the road. And here thinking ſhe would haue ouertaken vs, we loſt her companie and neuer ſaw her after. Wee were ſayling from this hauen of Aguada Segura in California vnto the iles of Ladrones the reſt of Nouember, and all December, and ſo forth vntil the 3 of Ianuarie 1588, with a faire winde for the ſpace 45 dayes: and we eſteemed it to be between 17 and 18 hundred leagues. The 3 day of Ianuary by ſixe of the clocke in the morning wee had ſight of one of the iſlands of Ladrones called the iſland of Guana, ſtanding in 13 degrees $\frac{2}{3}$ toward the North, and ſayling with a gentle gale before the winde, by 1 or 2 of the clocke in the afternoone, wee were come vp within 2 leagues of the iſland, where we met with 60 or 70 ſailes of canoas full of Sauages, who came off to ſea vnto vs, and brought with them in their boates plantans, cocos, potato rootes, and freſh fiſh, which they had caught at ſea, and helde them vp vnto vs for to truck or exchange with vs; which when we perceiued, we made faſt litle pieces of old iron vpon ſmall cords and fiſhing lines, and ſo vered the iron vnto their canoas, and they caught hold of them and tooke off the iron, and in exchange of it they would make faſt vnto the ſame line either a potato roote, or a bundle of plantans, which we haled in: and thus our company exchanged with them vntil they had ſatiſfied themſelues with as much as did content them: yet we could not be rid of them. For afterward they were ſo thicke about the ſhip, that it ſtemmed & brake 1 or 2 of their canoas: but the men ſaued themſelues being in euery canoa 4, 6, or 8 perſons all naked & excellent ſwimmers and diuers. They are of a tawny colour & maruellous fat, & bigger ordinarily of ſtature thē the moſt part of our men in England, wearing their haire maruellous long: yet ſome of them haue it made vp and tyed with a knot on the crowne, & ſome with 2 knots, much like vnto

They are not aboue halfe a yard in bredth and in length ſome ſeuen or eight yardes, and their heades and ſternes are both alike, they are made out with raftes of canes and reedes on the ſtarrebordſide, with maſte and ſayle: their ſayle is made of mattes of ſedges, ſquare or triangle wiſe: and they ſaile as well right againſt the winde, as before the winde: Theſe Sauages followed vs ſo long, that we could not be ridde of them: vntill in the end our General commanded ſome halfe dozen harquebuzes to be made ready; and himſelfe ſtrooke one of them and the reſt ſhot at them: but they were ſo yare and nimble, that we could not diſcerne whether they were killed or no, becauſe they could fall backward into the ſea, and preuent vs by diuing.

The 14 day of January lying at hull with our ſhip all the middle watch, from 12 at night vntil foure in the morning, by the breake of day wee fell with an headland of the iſles of the Philippinas, which is called Cabo del Spirito Santo which is of very great bignes and length, high land in the middeſt of it, and very low land as the Cape lyeth Eaſt and Weſt, trending farre into the ſea to the weſtward. This cape or iſland is diſtant from the ile of Guana, one of the Ladrones, 310 leagues. We were in ſayling of this courſe eleuen dayes with ſkant windes and ſome foule weather, bearing no ſayle two or three nights. This iſland ſtandeth in 13 degrees, and is a place much peopled with heathen people, and all woodie through the whole land: and it is ſhort of the chiefeſt iſland of the Philippinas called Manilla about 60 leagues. Manilla is well planted and inhabited with Spaniards to the number of ſixe or ſeuen hundred perſons: which dwell in a towne vnwalled, which hath 3 or 4 ſmall blocke houſes, part made of wood, and part of ſtone beeing indeede of no great ſtrength: they haue one or two ſmall Gallies belong to the towne. It is a very rich place of golde and many other commodities; and they haue yeerely trafficke from Acapulco in Nueua Eſpanna, and alſo 20 or 30 ſhippes from China and from the Sanguelos, which bring them many ſorts of marchandize. The marchants of China and the Sanguelos are part Moores and part heathen people. They bring great ſtore of gold with them, which they trafficke and exchange for ſiluer, and giue waight for waight. Theſe Sanguelos are men of maruellous capacitie in deuiſing and making all maner of things, eſpecially in all handie craftes and ſciences: and euery one is ſo expert, perfect, and ſkilfull in his facultie, as fewe or no Chriſtians are able to goe beyond them in that which they take in hand. For drawing & imbrodering vpon ſatten, ſilck, or lawne, either beaſte, fowle, fiſh or worme, for liuelines and perfectnes, both in ſilke, ſiluer, gold, & pearle, they excell. Alſo the 14 day at night wee entred the ſtreights betweene the iſland of Luçon, & the iland of Camlaia.

The iſland of Capul at which our men ſtayed 9 dayes.

The fifteenth of January wee fell with an iſland called Capul, and had betwixt the ſayd iſland and another iſland but an narrowe paſſage, and a maruellous rippling of a very great tyde with a ledge of rockes lying off the poynt of the iſland of Capul: and no danger but water ynough a fayre bredth off: and within the point a fayre bay and a very good harborough in foure fathomes water hard aboord the ſhore within a cables length. About 10 of the clocke in the morning wee came to an anker.

One of the chiefe gouernours of the iſland came aboord vs.

Our ſhippe was no ſooner come to an anker, but preſently there came a canoa rowing aboord vs; wherein was one of the chief Caſiques of the iſland, whereof there be ſeuẽ, who ſuppoſing that we were Spaniardes, brought vs potato rootes, which they call camotas, and greene cocos, in exchange whereof we gaue his company pieces of linnen to the quantitie of a yard for foure Cocos, and as much linnen for a baſket of potato rootes of a quart in quantitie; which rootes are very good meat, and excellent ſweete either roſted or boyled.

Hennes and hogges.

This Caſiques ſkinne was carued and cut with ſundry and many ſtrakes and deuiſes all ouer his body. We kept him ſtill aboord and cauſed him to ſend thoſe men which brought him aboord backe to the iland to cauſe the reſt of the principals to come aboord: who were no ſooner gone on ſhore, but preſently the people of the iſland came downe with their cocos and potato rootes, and the reſt of the principals likewiſe came aboord and brought with them hennes and hogges: and they vſed the ſame order with vs which they doe with the Spaniardes. For they tooke for euery hog (which they cal Balboye) eight rials of plate, and for euery henne or cocke one riall of plate. Thus we rode at anker all that day, doing nothing but buying rootes, cocos, hennes, hogges, and ſuch things as they brought, refreſhing our ſelues marueilouſly well.

The ſame day at night beeing the fifteenth of January 1588, Nicolas Roderigo the Portugal, whom wee tooke out of the great Santa Anna at the Cape of California, deſired to ſpeake with our General in ſecret: which when our General vnderſtood, he ſent for him, & aſked him what he had to ſay vnto him. The Portugal made him this anſwer, that although he had offended his worſhip heretofore, yet nowe hee had vowed his faith and true ſeruice vnto him, and in reſpect thereof he neither could nor would cõceale ſuch treaſon as was in working againſt him and his company: and that was this. That the Spaniard which was taken out of the great ſant Anne for a Pilote, whoſe name was Thomas de Erſola, had written a letter, and ſecretly ſealed it and locked it vp in his cheſte, meaning to conuey it by the inhabitants of this iſland to Manilla, the contents whereof were: That there had bene two Engliſh ſhips along the coaſt of Chili, Peru, Nueua Eſpanna, and Nueua Galicia, and that they had taken many ſhippes and marchandize in them, and burnt diuers townes, and ſpoiled all that euer they could come vnto, and that they had taken the kings ſhip which came from Manilla and all his treaſure, with all the marchandize that was therein; and had ſet all the people on ſhore, taking himſelfe away perforce. Therefore he willed them that they ſhould make ſtrong their bulwarks with their two Gallies, and all ſuch prouiſion as they could poſſibly make. He farther ſignified, that wee were riding at an iſland called Capul, which was at the end of the iſland of Manilla, being but one ſhippe with ſmall force in it, and that the other ſhip, as he ſuppoſed, was gone for the North-weſt paſſage, ſtanding in 55 degrees: and that if they could vſe any meanes to ſurprize vs being there at an anker, they ſhould diſpatch it: for our force was but ſmall, and our men but weake, and that the place where we roade was but 50 leagues from them. Otherwiſe if they let vs eſcape, within fewe yeeres they muſt make account to haue their towne beſieged and ſacked with an armie of Engliſh. This information being giuen, our Generall called for him, and charged him with theſe things, which at the firſt he vtterly denyed: but in the ende, the matter being made manifeſt and knowen of certaintie by eſpeciall tryall and proofes, the next morning our General willed that he ſhould be hanged: which was accordingly performed the 16 of January.

We roade for the ſpace of nine dayes about this iſland of Capul, where we had diuerſe kindes of freſh victuals, with excellent freſh water in euery bay, and great ſtore of wood. The people of this iſland go almoſt all naked and are tawny of colour. The men weare onely a ſtroope about their waſtes, of ſome kinde of linnen of their owne weauing, which is made of plantan leaues, and another ſtroope comming from their backe vnder their twiſtes, which couereth their priuie parts, and is made faſt to their girdles at their nauels.

The maner of the people of Capul.

Theſe people vſe a ſtrange kinde of order among them, which is this. Euery man and manchilde among them hath a nayle of Tynne thruſt quite through the head of his priuie part, being ſplit in the lower ende and riuetted, and on the head of the nayle is as it were a crowne: which is driuen through their priuities when they be yong, and the place groweth vp againe, without any great paine to the child: and they take this nayle out and in, as occaſion ſerueth: and for the truth thereof we our ſelues haue taken one of theſe nailes from a ſonne of one of the kings which was of the age of 10 yeeres, who did weare the ſame in his priuie member.

A ſtrange thing.

This cuſtome was granted at the requeſt of the women of the countrey, who finding their men to be giuen to the fowle ſinne of Sodomie, deſired ſome remedie againſt that miſchiefe, and obteined this before named of the magiſtrates. Moreouer all the males are circumciſed, hauing the foreſkinne of their fleſh cut away. Theſe people wholly worſhip the deuill, and often times haue conference with him, which appeareth vnto them in moſt vgly and monſtrous ſhape.

Circumciſion.

On the 23 day of January, our Generall M. Thomas Candiſh cauſed al the principals of this iſland, and of an hundred iſlands more, which he had made to pay tribute vnto him (which tribute was in hogges, hennes, potatoes and cocos,) to appeare before him, and made himſelfe and his company knowne vnto them, that they were Engliſh men, and enemies to the Spaniardes: and thereupon ſpredde his Enſigne and ſounded vp the drummes, which they much maruelled at: to conclude, they promiſed both themſelues and all the iſlands thereabout to ayde him, whenſoeuer hee ſhoulde come againe to ouercome the Spaniardes. Alſo our Generall gaue them, in token that wee were enemies to the Spaniardes, money backe againe for all their tribute which they had payed: which they tooke marueilous friendly, and rowed about our ſhippe to ſhewe vs pleaſure marueilous ſwiftly: at the laſt our generall cauſed a ſaker to be ſhot off, whereat they wondered, and with great contentment tooke their leaues of vs.

The inhabitants of Capul with all the iſlands adioyning, promiſe to ayde the Engliſh againſt the Spaniards.

The next day being the twentie foure of Januarie, wee ſette ſayle aboute ſixe of the clock in the morning, and ran along the coaſt of the iſland of Manilla, ſhaping our courſe Northweſt betweene the iſle of Manilla, and the iſle of Maſbat.

Our departure from the iſland of Capul.

The iſle of Maſbat.

The 28 day in the morning about 7 of the clocke, riding at an anker betwixt 2 iſlands, wee ſpied a Frigat vnder her two coarſes, comming out betweene 2 other iſlands, which as we imagined came frõ Manilla, ſayling cloſe aboord the ſhore along the maine iſland of Panama: we chaſed this frigat along the ſhore, & gat very faſt vpon it, vntil in the end we came ſo neere that it ſtood in to the

But as we rowed along the ſhore, our boate came into very ſhallow water, where many weares and ſticks were ſet vp in diuers places in the ſea, from whence 2 or 3 canoas came forth, whereof one made ſomewhat neere vnto vs, with 3 or 4 Indians in it: we called vnto them; but they would not come neerer vnto vs, but rowed from vs: whom wee durſt not followe too farre for feare of bringing our ſelues to much to the leewarde of our ſhip. Here, as we looked about vs, we eſpied another Balſa or canoa of a great bignes which they which were in her, did ſet along as we do vſually ſet a barge with long ſtaues or poles, which was builded vp with great canes, and below hard by the water made to row with oares; wherein were about 5 or 6 Indians and one Spaniard: nowe as wee were come almoſt at the Balſa, wee ran a ground with our boate; but one or two of our men leaped ouer-boord and freed it againe preſently, and keeping thwarte her head, we layed her aboord and tooke in to vs the Spaniard, but the Indians leaped into the ſea and diued and roſe farre off againe from vs. Preſently vpon the taking of this canoa, there ſhewed vpon the ſand a band of ſouldiers marching with an enſigne hauing a red Croſſe like the flagge of England, which were about 50 or 60 Spaniardes, which were lately come from Manilla to that towne which is called Ragaun in a Barke to fetch a new ſhippe of the kings, which was building in a riuer within the bay, and ſtayed there but for certain yrons that did ſerue for the rudder of the ſaid ſhip, which they looked for euery day.

This band of men ſhot at vs from the ſhore with their muskets, but hyt none of vs, and wee ſhot at them againe: they alſo manned a Frigate and ſent it out after our boat to haue taken vs, but we with ſaile and oares went from them: and when they perceiued that they could not fetch vs, but that they muſt come within danger of the ordinance of our ſhip, they ſtood in with the ſhore againe and landed their men, and preſently ſent their Frigate about the point, but whether we knew not. So we came aboord with this one Spaniard, which was neither ſouldier nor ſayler, but one that was come among the reſt from Manilla, and had bene in the hoſpital there a long time before, and was a very ſimple ſoule, and ſuch a one as could anſwere to very little that hee was aſked, concerning the ſtate of the countrey. Here wee roade at anker all that night, and perceiued that the Spaniards had diſperſed their band into 2 or 3 parts, and kept great watch in ſeueral ſteedes with fires and ſhooting off their pieces. This iſland hath much plaine ground in it in many places, and many fayre and ſtraight trees do grow vpon it, fit for to make excellent good maſtes for all ſorts of ſhips. There are alſo mynes of very fine gold in it which are in the cuſtodie of the Indians. And to the South-ward of this place, there is another very great iſland, which is not ſubdued by the Spaniards, nor any other nation. The people which inhabite it are all Negros; and the iſland is called the iſland of Negros: and is almoſt as bigge as England, ſtanding in 9 degrees: the moſt part of it ſeemeth to be very lowe land, and by all likelihood is very fruitfull.

Their departure from the Philippinas.

The 29 day of January aboute ſixe of the clocke in the morning we ſet ſaile, ſending our boate before vntil it was two of the clock in the afternoone, paſſing all this time as it were through a ſtraight betwixt the ſaid 2 iſlands of Panama, and the iſland of Negros, and about 16 leagues off we eſpied a fayre opening, trending Southweſt and by South, at which time our boate came aboord, and our Generall ſent commendations to the Spaniſh captaine which wee came from the euening before by the Spaniard which we tooke, and willed him to prouide good ſtore of gold: for he meant for to ſee him with his company at Manilla within fewe yeeres, and that he did but want a bigger boate to haue landed his men, or elſe hee would haue ſeene him then: and ſo cauſed him to be ſet on ſhore.

Batochina.

The 8 day of February by 8 of the clocke in the morning we eſpied an iſland neere Gilolo, called Batochina, which ſtandeth in one degree from the Equinoctial line Northward.

11 or 12 ſmall ylands in 3 degrees 10 min. to the South-ward.

The 14 day of February we fell with 11 or 12 very ſmall iſlands, lying very low and flat, full of trees, and paſſed by ſome iſlands which be ſuncke and haue the dry ſands lying in the maine ſea. Theſe iſlands neere the Malucoes, ſtand in 3 degrees and 10 min. to the South-ward of the lyne.

Iſlands in 4 degrees ſouthward of the line.

The death of captaine Hauers.

On the 17 day, one Iohn Gameford a Cooper dyed, which had bene ſicke of an olde diſeaſe a long time. The 20 day wee fell with certaine other iſlands which had many ſmall iſlands among them, ſtanding 4 degrees to the South-ward of the lyne. On the 21 day of Februarie, being Aſhwedneſday Captaine Hauers dyed of a moſt feruent and peſtilent ague, which held him furiouſly ſome 7 or 8 dayes, to the no ſmall griefe of our Generall and of all the reſt of the company, who cauſed two Falcons and one Sacre to be ſhot off, with all the ſmall ſhotte in the ſhip, who after he was ſhrowded in a ſheete and a prayer ſayd, was heued ouer bord with great lamentation of vs all. Moreouer, preſently after his death my ſelfe with diuers others in the ſhip fell marueilouſly ſicke, and ſo continued in very great paine for the ſpace of three weekes or a moneth by reaſon of the extreeme heat and vntemperatneſſe of the Climate.

March 1588.

Our arriual at Iaua maior.

The firſt day of March hauing paſſed through the Straights of Iaua minor and Iaua maior, wee came to an ancker vnder the Southweſt parts of Iaua maior: where wee eſpied certaine of the people which were fiſhing by the ſea ſide in a bay which was vnder the yland. Then our Generall taking into the ſhip-boat certaine of his company, and a Negro which could ſpeake the Moriſco tongue, which hee had taken out of the great S. Anna, made toward thoſe fiſhers, which hauing eſpied our boat ranne on ſhoare into the wood for feare of our men: but our Generall cauſed his Negro to call vnto them: who no ſooner heard him call, but preſently one of them came out to the ſhore ſide and made anſwere. Our Generall by the Negro enquired of him for freſh water, which they found, and cauſed the fiſher to goe to the King and to certifie him of a ſhippe that was come to haue trafique for victuals, and for diamants, pearles, or any other riche iewels that hee had: for which hee ſhould haue either golde or other marchandiſe in exchange. The fiſher anſwered that we ſhould haue all maner of victuals that wee would requeſt. Thus the boat came abord againe. Within a while after wee went about to furniſh our ſhippe throughly with wood and water.

The Moriſco or Arabian tongue common in Iaua.

About the eighth of March two or three Canoas came from the towne vnto vs with egges, hennes, freſh fiſh, oranges, and lymes, and brought worde wee ſhould haue had victuals more plentifully, but that they were ſo farre to bee brought to vs where wee ridde. Which when our Generall heard hee weighed ancker and ſtoode in neerer for the towne: and as wee were vnder ſaile wee mette with one of the kings canoas comming towarde vs; whereupon wee ſhoke the ſhippe in the winde and ſtayed for the canoa vntill it came abord of vs, and ſtoode into the bay which was hard by and came to an ancker. In this canoa was the Kings Secretarie, who had on his head a piece of died linen cloth folded vp like vnto a Turkes Tuliban: he was all naked ſauing about his waſte, his breaſt was carued with the broade arrowe vpon it; hee went barefooted: he had an interpretour with him, which was a Meſtizo, that is, halfe an Indian and halfe a Portugall, who could ſpeake very good Portugeſe. This Secretarie ſignified vnto our Generall that he had brought him an hogge, hennes, egges, freſh fiſh, ſugar-canes and wine: (which wine was as ſtrong as any aquauitæ, and as cleare as any rocke water:) he tolde him farther that hee would bring victuals ſo ſufficiently for him, as hee and his company would requeſt, and that within the ſpace of foure dayes. Our Generall vſed him ſingularly well, banquetted him moſt royally with the choyce of many and ſundry conſerues, wines both ſweete and other, and cauſed his Muſitians to make him muſicke. This done our Generall tolde him that hee and his company were Engliſhmen; and that wee had bene at China and had had trafique there with them, and that wee were come thither to diſcouer, and purpoſed to goe to Malaca. The people of Iaua tolde our Generall that there were certaine Portugals in the yland which lay there as Factours continually to trafique with them, to buy Negros, cloues, pepper, ſugar, and many other commodities. This Secretarie of the King with his interpretour lay one night abord our ſhippe. The ſame night, becauſe they lay abord, in the euening at the ſetting of the watch, our Generall commanded euery man in the ſhippe to prouide his harquebuze and his ſhotte, and ſo with ſhooting off 40. or 50. ſmall ſhot and one Sacre, himſelfe ſet the watch with them. This was no ſmall marueile vnto theſe heathen people, who had not commonly ſeene any ſhippe ſo furniſhed with men and Ordinance. The next morning wee diſmiſſed the Secretarie and his interpretour with all humanitie.

The fourth day after, which was the 12. of March, according to their appointment came the Kings canoas; but the winde being ſomewhat ſkant they could not get abord that night, but put into a bay vnder the yland vntill the next day, and preſently after the breake of day there came to the number of 9. or 10. of the Kings canoas ſo deepely laden with victuals as they could ſwim, with two great liue oxen, halfe a ſkore of wonderfull great and fat hogges, a number of hennes which were aliue, drakes, geeſe, eggs, plantans, ſugar canes, ſugar in plates, cocos, ſweet oranges and ſowre, lymes, great ſtore of wine and aquauitæ, ſalt to ſeaſon victuals withall, and almoſt all maner of victuals elſe, with diuers of the Kings officers which were there. Among all the reſt of the people in one of theſe canoas came two Portugales, which were of middle ſtature, and men of marueilous proper perſonage; they were each of them in a looſe ierkin, and hoſe, which came downe from the waſte to the ancle, becauſe of the vſe of the Countrey, and partly becauſe it was Lent, and a time for doing of their penance, (for they accompt it as a thing of great diſlike among theſe heathens to weare either hoſe or ſhoes on their feete:) they had on each of them a very faire and a white lawne ſhirt, with falling bands on the ſame, very decently, onely their bare legs excepted. Theſe Portugales were no ſmall ioy vnto our Generall and all the reſt of our company: For we had not ſeene any Chriſtian that was our friend of a yeere and an halfe before. Our Generall vſed and intreated them ſingularly well, with banquets and muſicke: They told vs that they were no leſſe glad to ſee vs, then wee to ſee them, and enquired of the eſtate of their countrey, and what was become of Don Antonio their King, and whether hee were liuing or no: for that they had not of long time bene in Portugall, and that the Spaniards had alwayes brought them worde that hee was dead. Then our Generall ſatiſfied them in euery demaund; Aſſuring them, that their King was aliue, and in England, and had honourable allowance of our Queene, and that there was warre betweene Spaine and England, and that we were come vnder the King of Portugall into the South ſea, and had warred vpon the Spaniards there, and had fired, ſpoiled and ſunke all the ſhips along the coaſt that we could meete withall, to the number of eighteene or twentie ſailes. With this report they were ſufficiently ſatiſfied.

A ſtrange order.

On the other ſide they declared vnto vs the ſtate of the yland of Iaua. Firſt the plentifulnes and great choiſe and ſtore of victuals of all ſorts, & of all maner of fruits as before is ſet downe: Ther the great and rich marchandize which are there to be had. Ther they deſcribed the properties and nature of the people as followeth. The name of the King of that part of the yland was Raia Bolamboam, who was a man had in great maieſtie and feare among them. The common people may not bargaine, ſell, or exchange any thing with any other nation, without ſpeciall licence from their king: and if any ſo doe, it is preſent death for him. The King himſelfe is a man of great yeeres, and hath an hundred wiues, his ſonne hath fiftie. The cuſtome of the countrey is, that whenſoeuer the king doeth die, they take the body ſo dead and burne it and preſerue the aſhes of him, and within fiue dayes next after, the wiues of the ſaid king ſo dead, according to the cuſtome and vſe of their countrey, euery one of them goe together to a place appointed, and the chiefe of the women, which was neereſt vnto him in accompt, hath a ball in her hand, and throweth it from her, and to the place where the ball reſteth, thither they goe all, and turne their faces to the Eaſtward, and euery one with a dagger in their hand, (which dagger they call a Criſe, and is as ſharpe as a raſor) ſtab themſelues to the heart, and with their hands all to bee-bath themſelues in their owne blood, and falling groueling on their faces ſo ende their dayes. This thing is as true as it ſeemeth to any hearer to be ſtrang.

Faire women in Iaua.

The men of themſelues be very politique and ſubtile, and ſingularly valiant, being naked men, in any action they vndertake, and wonderfully at commandement and feare of their king. For example: if their king command them to vndertake any exploit, be it neuer ſo dangerous or deſperate, they dare not nor will not refuſe it, though they die euery man in the execution of the ſame. For hee will cut off the heads of euery one of them which returne aliue without bringing of their purpoſe to paſſe: which is ſuch a thing among them, as it maketh them the moſt valiant people in all the Southeaſt parts of the world. for they neuer feare any death. For being in fight with any nation, if any of them feeleth himſelfe hurt with launce or ſword, he will willingly runne himſelfe vpon the weapon quite through his body to procure his death the more ſpeedily, and in this deſperate ſort ende his dayes, or ouercome his enemie. Moreouer, although the men be tawny of colour and go continually naked, yet their women be faire of complexion and go more apparelled.

Don Antonio might be receiued as King in the Eaſt Indies.

They depart from Iaua the 16. of March 1588.

After they had thus deſcribed the ſtate of the yland, and the orders and facions of the people; they tolde vs farther, that if their king Don Antonio would come vnto them, they would warrant him to haue all the Malucos at commandement, beſides China, Sangles, and the yles of the Philippinas, and that hee might be aſſured to haue all the Indians on his ſide that are in the countrey. After we had fully contented theſe Portugals, and the people of Iaua which brought vs victuals in their Canoas, they tooke their leaues of vs with promiſe of all good entertainement at our returnes, and our Generall gaue them three great pieces of Ordinance at their departing. Thus the next day being the 16. of March we ſet ſaile towards the Cape of good hope, called by the Portugals Cabo de buena Eſperancça on the Southermoſt coaſt of Africa.

The reſt of March and all the moneth of April wee ſpent in trauerſing that mightie and vaſte Sea, betweene the yle of Iaua and the maine of Africa, obſeruing the heauens, the Croſiers or South-pole, the other ſtarres, the foules, which are markes vnto the Sea men of faire weather, foule weather, approching of lands or ylands, the winds, the tempeſts, the raines & thunders, with the alterations of tides and currents.

The 10. day of May we had a ſtorme at the Weſt, and it blew ſo hard that it was as much as the ſhip could ſtirre cloſe by vnder the wind: and the ſtorme continued al that day and al that night.

The next day being the 11. of May in the morning one of the company went into the top, and eſpied land bearing North, and North and by Weſt off vs, & about noone wee eſpied land to beare Weſt off vs, which as we did imagine was the cape of Buena Eſperança, whereof indeed we were ſhort ſome 40. or 50. leagues: and by reaſon of the ſkantneſſe of the winde we ſtood along to the Southeaſt vntill midnight; at which time the winde came faire, and we haled along Weſtward.

The 12. and 13. dayes we were becalmed, and the ſky was very hazie and thicke vntill the 14. day at three of the clocke in the afternoone, at which time the ſky cleared, and we eſpied the land againe which was the cape called Cabo Falſo, which is ſhort of the Cape de buena Eſperança 40 or 50 leagues. This Cape is very eaſie to be knowen. For there are right ouer it three very high hilles ſtanding but a ſmal way one off another, and the hieſt ſtandeth in the middeſt, and the ground is much lower by the ſeaſide. The Cape of Good hope beareth Weſt and by South from the ſaid Cabo Falſo.

Cabo Falſo.

The 16. day of May about 4. of the clocke in the afternoone the winde came vp at Eaſt a very ſtiffe gale, which helde vntill it was Saturday with as much winde as euer the ſhip could goe before: at which time by ſixe of the clocke in the morning wee eſpied the promontorie or headland, called the Cape de Buena Eſperança, which is a reaſonable hie land, & at the Weſtermoſt point a litle off the maine do ſhew two hammocks, the one vpon the other, and three other hammocks lying further off into the ſea, yet low land betweene and adioyning vnto the ſea.

They double the Cape de Bona Speranza

This cape of Buena Eſperança is ſet down and accompted for two thouſand leagues from the yland of Iaua in the Portugall ſea carts: but it is not ſo much almoſt by an hundred and fiftie leagues, as we found by the running of our ſhip. We were in running of theſe eighteene hundred and fiftie leagues iuſt nine weekes.

From Iaua to the Cape of Bona Speranza is but 1850. leagues.

Iune 1588.

The eighth day of Iune by breake of day we fel in ſight of the yland of S. Helena, ſeuen or eight leagues ſhort of it, hauing but a ſmall gale of winde, or almoſt none at all: inſomuch as we could not get vnto it that day, but ſtood off and on all that night.

The next day being the 9. of Iune hauing a prettie eaſie gale of wind we ſtood in with the ſhore, our boat being ſent away before to make the harborough; and about one of the clocke in the afternoone we came vnto an ancker in 12. fathoms water two or three cables length from the ſhore, in a very faire and ſmooth bay vnder the Northweſt ſide of the yland.

They anker at the yland of S. Helena the 9. of Iune.

This yland is very high land, and lieth in the maine ſea ſtanding as it were in the middeſt of the ſea betweene the maine land of Africa, and the maine of Braſilia and the coaſt of Guinea: And is in 15. degrees and 48. minutes to the Southward of the Equinoctiall line, and is diſtant from the Cape of Buena Eſperança betweene 5. and 6. hundreth leagues.

S. Helena is in the latitude of 15. degrees 48. min. to the Southward.

The ſame day about two or three of the clocke in the afternoone wee went on ſhore, where wee found a marueilous faire & pleaſant valley, wherein diuers handſome buildings and houſes were ſet vp, and eſpecially one which was a Church, which was tyled & whited on the outſide very faire, and made with a porch, and within the Church at the vpper end was ſet an altar, whereon ſtood a very large table ſet in a frame hauing in it the picture of our Sauiour CHRIST vpon the Croſſe and the image of our Lady praying, with diuers other hiſtories curiouſly painted in the ſame. The ſides of the Church were all hanged with ſtained clothes hauing many deuiſes drawen in them.

There are two houſes adioyning to the Church, on each ſide one, which ſerue for kitchins to dreſſe meate in, with neceſſary roomes and houſes of office: the couerings of the ſaide houſes are made flat, whereon is planted a very faire vine, and through both the ſaide houſes runneth a very good and holſome ſtreame of freſh water.

There is alſo right ouer againſt the ſaide Church a faire cauſey made vp with ſtones reaching vnto a valley by the ſeaſide, in which valley is planted a garden, wherein grow great ſtore of pompions and melons: And vpon the ſaide cauſey is a frame erected whereon hange two bells wherewith they ring to Maſſe; and hard vnto it is a Croſſe ſet vp, which is ſquared, framed and made very artificially of free ſtone, whereon is carued in cyphers what time it was builded, which was in the yeere of our Lord 1571.

This valley is the faireſt and largeſt lowe plot in all the yland, and it is marueilous ſweete and pleaſant, and planted in euery place either with fruite trees, or with herbes. There are figtrees, which beare fruit continually, & marueilous plentifully: for on euery tree you ſhal haue bloſſoms, greene figs, and ripe figs, all at ones: and it is ſo all the yere long: the reaſon is that the yland ſtandeth ſo neere the Sunne. There be alſo great ſtore of lymon trees, orange trees, pomegranate trees, pomecitron trees, date trees, which beare fruite as the fig trees do, and are planted carefully and very artificially with very pleaſant walkes vnder and betweene them, and the ſaide walkes bee ouerſhadowed with the leaues of the trees: and in euery voyde place is planted parceley, ſorell, baſill, fenell, annis ſeede, muſtard ſeede, radiſhes, and many ſpeciall good hearbes: and the freſh water brooke runneth through diuers places of this orchard, and may with very ſmall paines be made to water any one tree in the valley.

This freſh water ſtreame commeth from the tops of the mountaines, and falleth from the cliffe into the valley the height of a cable, and hath many armes out of it, which refreſh the whole yland, and almoſt euery tree in it. The yland is altogether high mountaines and ſteepe valleis, except it be in the tops of ſome hilles, and downe below in ſome of the valleis, where marueilous ſtore of all theſe kinds of fruits before ſpoken of do grow: there is greater ſtore growing in the tops of the mountaines then below in the valleis: but it is wonderfull labourſome and alſo dangerous traueiling vp vnto them and downe againe, by reaſon of the height and ſteepeneſſe of the hilles.

Abundance of partridges in S. Helena.

There is alſo vpon this yland great ſtore of partridges, which are very tame, not making any great haſt to flie away though one come very neere them, but onely to runne away, and get vp into the ſteepe cliffes: we killed ſome of them with a fowling piece. They differ very much from our partridges which are in England both in bigneſſe and alſo in colour. For they be within a little as bigge as an henne, and are of an aſhe colour, and liue in couies twelue, ſixteene, and twentie together: you cannot go ten or twelue ſcore but you ſhall ſee or ſpring one or two couies at the leaſt.

Great ſtore of feſants.

There are likewiſe no leſſe ſtore of feſants in the yland, which are alſo marueilous bigge and fat, ſurpaſſing thoſe which are in our countrey in bigneſſe and in numbers of a company. They differ not very much in colour from the partridges before ſpoken of.

Turkies in great quantitie.

Wee found moreouer in this place great ſtore of Guinie cocks, which we call Turkies, of colour blacke and white, with red heads: they are much about the ſame bigneſſe which ours be of in England: their egges be white, and as bigge as a Turkies egge.

Exceeding numbers of goats.

There are in this yland thouſands of goates, which the Spaniards call Cabritos, which are very wilde: you ſhall ſee one or two hundred of them together, and ſometimes you may beholde them going in a flocke almoſt a mile long. Some of them, (whether it be the nature of the breed of them, or of the country I wot not) are as big as an aſſe, with a maine like an horſe and a beard hanging downe to the very ground: they wil clime vp the cliffes which are ſo ſteepe that a man would thinke it a thing vnpoſſible for any liuing thing to goe there. We tooke and killed many of them for all their ſwiftnes: for there be thouſands of them vpon the mountaines.

Plentie of ſwine.

Here are in like maner great ſtore of ſwine which be very wilde and very fat, and of a marueilous bignes: they keepe altogether vpon the mountaines, and will very ſeldome abide any man to come neere them, except it be by meere chance when they be found aſleepe, or otherwiſe, according to their kinde, be taken layed in the mire.

We found in the houſes at our comming 3. ſlaues which were Negros, & one which was borne in the yland of Iaua, which tolde vs that the Eaſt Indian fleete, which were in number 5. ſailes, the leaſt whereof were in burthen 8. or 900. tunnes, all laden with ſpices and Calicut cloth, with ſtore of treaſure and very rich ſtones and pearles, were gone from the ſaide yland of S. Helena but 20. dayes before we came thither.

This yland hath bene found of long time by the Portugals, and hath bene altogether planted by them, for their refreſhing as they come from the Eaſt Indies. And when they come they haue all things plentiful for their reliefe, by reaſon that they ſuffer none to inhabit there that might ſpend vp the fruit of the yland, except ſome very few ſicke perſons in their company, which they ſtand in doubt will not liue vntill they come home, whom they leaue there to refreſh themſelues, and take away the yeere following with the other Fleete if they liue ſo long. They touch here rather in their comming home from the Eaſt Indies, then at their going thither, becauſe they are throughly furniſhed with corne when they ſet out of Portugal, but are but meanely victualed at their comming from the Indies, where there groweth little corne.

Our departure from S. Helena.

The 20. day of Iune hauing taken in wood & water and refreſhed our ſelues with ſuch things as we found there, and made cleane our ſhip, we ſet ſaile about 8. of the clocke in the night toward England. At our ſetting ſaile wee had the winde at Southeaſt, and we haled away Northweſt and by Weſt. The winde is commonly off the ſhore at this yland of S. Helena.

July 1588.

On wedneſday being the thirde day of Iuly we went away Northweſt the winde being ſtill at Southeaſt: at which time we were in 1. degree and 48. minuts to the Southward of the Equinoctial line.

The twelfth day of the ſaid moneth of Iuly it was very little winde, and toward night it was calme and blew no winde at all, and ſo continued vntil it was munday being the 15. day of Iuly.

On Wedneſday the 17. day of the abouſaid moneth wee had the winde ſkant at Weſt northweſt. Wee found the wind continually to blow at Eaſt, and Northeaſt, and Eaſtnortheaſt after we were in 3.or 4.degrees to the Northward; and it altered not vntill we came betweene 30.and 40.degrees to the Northward of the Equinoctial Line.

On Wedneſday the 21.day of Auguſt the wind came vp at Southweſt a faire gale: by which day at noone we were in 38.degrees of Northerly latitude.

On friday in the morning being the 23.day of Auguſt, at foure of the clocke we haled Eaſt, and Eaſt and by South for the Northernmoſt ylands of the Açores.

On Saturday the 24.day of the ſaid moneth by 5.of the clocke in the morning we fel in ſight of the two ylands of Flores and Coruo ſtanding in 39. degrees and ½. and ſailed away Northeaſt.

Coruo and Flores, two ylands of the Azores.

The third of September we met with a Flemiſh hulke which came from Lisbone, & declared vnto vs the ouerthrowing of the Spaniſh Fleete, to the ſinguler reioycing and comfort of vs all.

The 9.of September, after a terrible tempeſt which caried away moſt part of our ſailes, by the mercifull fauour of the Almightie we recouered our long wiſhed port of Plimmouth in England, from whence we ſet foorth at the beginning of our voyage.

Soundings on the coaſt of Barbarie from Rio del Oro vnto Cape Blanco.

INprimis about 3. leagues off Rio del Oro you ſhall haue very faire ſhoulding, fine white ſand 18. fathoms, and ſo alongſt vnto Cape Blanco two or three leagues off the ſhore you ſhall haue 18. and 20. fathoms. And when you come within one league of the Cape you ſhall haue twelue or thirteene fathoms, browne ſand, very faire ſhoulding. And if you will hall in with Cape Blanco, beware you come not within ſeuen or eight fathoms of the Cape: for there lyeth a ſand off the Cape.

Alſo about 7. or eight leagues off the Cape lyeth a long ſhould next hand Southweſt and by South off the Cape.

Soundings on the coaſt of Guiny.

ITem, Going vnto Sierra Leona, hauing the cape Eaſtnortheaſt off you, 7 leagues off, you ſhall haue 22 fadome browne ſand. And halling in you ſhall finde very faire ſhoalding. You may be bold to borrow on the Southermoſt ſhore: but take heed of a rocke that lieth in the faire way a good birth off the ſhore, but there is no feare of it: for it lieth aboue the water, and is diſtant two miles off the South ſhore.

Item, You may be bolde to borrow hard by the rocke; for on the North ſide going in there lieth one long ſand which runneth Southeaſt and Northweſt, and lieth diſtant from the South ſhore 2 leagues. And you ſhall anker in 14 or 15 fadoms hard by the ſhore.

Alſo going vnto the iſland called Illha Verde, the which iland lieth 10 leagues to the Southward of Sierra Leona, the courſe is Southſouthweſt, and Northnortheaſt: and you ſhall haue betweene them 9 or 10 fadome, And if you will anker at the ſayd iland, you ſhall haue 5 or 6 fadome hard by the ſhore.

Alſo you muſt haue eſpeciall care of a great current that ſetteth alongſt the coaſt of Guiny to the Eaſtward.

Item, And if you be bound vnto the Southwards, you muſt go Weſtſouthweſt off, for feare of the ſhoald that is called Madera Bomba, the which ſhoald is to the Southwards of the iland.

Soundings on the coaſt of Braſil.

ITem, Unto the Northwards of Cape Frio, the cape bearing ſouthweſt off you, about 17 or 18 leagues off, you ſhall haue 45 fadoms ſtreamy ground: and running Southweſt, you ſhall find 32 fadoms blacke ſand: and then running Weſtſouthweſt into a deepe bay, which lieth tenne leagues to the Northwards of the cape, you ſhall haue 22 fadoms oaze: that depth you ſhall haue all alongſt, except you be farre into the bay; and then you ſhall haue 16 fadoms all oazie.

Item, To the Northwards of Cape Frio, about 6 or 7 leagues, you ſhall haue many ſmall iſlands.

Item, To the Northwards of the cape 6 leagues, you ſhall haue two ſmall iſlands one mile diſtant the one from the other, and they are diſtant from the maine fiue leagues. And betweene thoſe ilands and the cape you ſhall haue very many iſlands hard aboord the maine.

Item, The cape bearing Weſt of you two leagues off, you ſhall haue 55 fadoms oaze. Alſo you ſhall know when you are ſhot about the cape vnto the Southwards, by deeping of the water.

Alſo if you will go for S. Sebaſtian from the cape, you muſt go Weſt and South, and Weſtſouthweſt among. And the diſtance from the cape vnto S. Sebaſtian is 50 leagues. And being ſhot into the bay any thing nere the ſhore, you ſhall haue 24 fadoms all oazie.

And halling in for S. Sebaſtian, you ſhall know it by two little iſlands which be round: and thoſe ilands lie from the iland of S. Sebaſtian next hand Eaſt and by South; and are diſtant the one from the other about foure leagues.

Alſo off the Southermoſt end of S. Sebaſtian, there lieth one iland about 6 leagues off; which iland is called the Alcatrarza, and there lie foure little ilands about it. Alſo you may know it by the trending of the land vnto the Southwards.

Item, If you will go in at the Northermoſt end of S. Sebaſtian, you muſt take heed of a ſand that lieth on the Northeaſt part of the iland: but you may be bolde to borrow on the iland: for the ſand lieth off the maine ſide. Alſo you may anker on the Northermoſt part of the iland in tenne fadoms; and the maine is diſtant from you where you ſhall ride two leagues off.

Item, If you will come in at the Southermoſt end of the iland of S. Sebaſtian, your courſe from the Alcatrarza is Southweſt & Northeaſt, and their diſtance is 6 leagues the one from the other.

Item, Unto the Southwards of the riuer Plate, being in the latitude of 45 degrees and 60 leagues off the maine, you ſhall haue ſhoalding in 60 fadoms or 65 fadoms oazie ſand: and then halling in for the ſhore Weſtſouthweſt 16 leagues, you ſhall haue 50 fadoms oaze, and you ſhall haue faire ſhoalding all along.

Item, In the latitude of 47 ½ you ſhall ſee about one mile in length, not paſſing one league off the ſhore, a ledge of broken ground, but no danger. Alſo you ſhall haue very faire ſhoalding all along the coaſt; and the land lying South and North vntill you come vnto port Deſire, which ſtandeth in 48 degrees.

Item, If you will go into port Deſire, on the North ſide there lieth one ledge of rocks about a league diſtant from the ſhore. Alſo on the North ſide at the mouth of the harborow, there lies a couple of rocks, which are at halfe flood vnder water: but be bolde to borrow on the Southermoſt moſt ſhore; for there is no danger: and you ſhall haue no leſſe then 6 fadoms water at a low water, the harborow lying Eaſt and Weſt. Alſo you may know the harborow by one litle iland that lieth Southeaſt off the mouth of the harborow, and it is diſtant 4 leagues. Furthermore you may know the harborow by an high rocke that ſtandeth on the South ſide; and this rocke is very much like a watch tower. Alſo if you be any thing in, you may anker in 5 fadoms at a low water.

Item, It floweth there South and North, and higheth at ſpring tides 3 fadoms and an halfe water; and in the offing the flood ſetteth to the Northward.

Item, In the latitude of 48 degrees 50 minuts you ſhall haue 44 fadoms blacke ſand about 5 leagues off: and about 3 leagues off you ſhall haue 25 fadoms, and great ſhingle ſtones.

A letter of M. Thomas Candiſh to the right honourable the Lord Hunſdon, Lord Chamberlaine, one of her Maieſties moſt honourable Priuy Councell, touching the ſucceſſe of his voyage about the world.

Right honourable, as your fauour heretofore hath bene moſt greatly extended towards me, ſo I humbly deſire a continuance thereof: and though there be no meanes in me to deſerue the ſame, yet the vttermoſt of my ſeruices ſhall not be wanting, whenſoeuer it ſhall pleaſe your honour to diſpoſe thereof. I am humbly to deſire your honour to make knowen vnto her Maieſty the deſire I haue had to doe her Maieſty ſeruice in the performance of this voyage. And as it hath pleaſed God to giue her the victory ouer part of her enemies, ſo I truſt yet long to ſee her ouerthrow them all. For the places of their wealth, whereby they haue mainteined and made their warres, are now perfectly diſcouered: and if it pleaſe her Maieſty, with a very ſmall power ſhe may take the ſpoile of them all. It hath pleaſed the Almighty to ſuffer mee to circompaſſe the whole globe of the world, entring in at the Streight of Magellan, and returning by the cape de Buena Eſperança. In which voyage I haue either diſcouered or brought certeine intelligence of all the rich places of the world that euer were knowen or diſcouered by any Chriſtian. I nauigated alongſt the coaſt of Chili, Peru, and Nueua Eſpanna, where I made great ſpoiles: I burnt and ſunke 19 ſailes of ſhips ſmall and great. All the villages and townes that euer I landed at, I burnt and ſpoiled: and had I not bene diſcouered vpon the coaſt, I had taken great quantitie of treaſure. The matter of moſt profit vnto me was a great ſhip of the kings which I tooke at California, which ſhip came from the Philippinas, being one of the richeſt of merchandize that euer paſſed thoſe ſeas, as the kings regiſter and merchants accounts did ſhew; for it did amount in value to * in Mexico to be ſolde. Which goods (for that my ſhips were not able to conteine the leaſt part of them) I was inforced to ſet on fire. From the cape of California, being the vttermoſt part of all Nueua Eſpanna, I nauigated to the Ilands of the Philippinas hard vpon the coaſt of China; of which countrey I haue brought ſuch intelligence as hath not bene heard of in theſe parts. The ſtatelineſſe and riches of which countrey I feare to make report of, leaſt I ſhould not be credited: for if I had not knowen ſufficiently the incomparable wealth of that countrey, I ſhould haue bene as incredulous thereof, as others will be that haue not had the like experience. I ſailed along the Ilands of the Malucos, where among ſome of the heathen people I was well intreated, where our countrey men may haue trade as freely as the Portugals, if they will themſelues. From thence I paſſed by the cape of Buena Eſperança, and found out by the way homeward the iland of S. Helena, where the Portugals vſe to relieue themſelues: and from that iland God hath ſuffered me to returne into England. All which ſeruices with my ſelfe I humbly proſtrate at her Maieſties feet, deſiring the Almighty long to continue her reigne among vs: for at this day ſhe is the moſt famous and victorious prince that liueth in the world.

Thus humbly deſiring pardon of your honour for my tediousneſſe, I leaue your lordſhip to the tuition of the Almighty. Plimmouth this ninth of September 1588.

Your honours moſt humble to command,
THOMAS CANDISH.

A briefe relation of a voyage of The Delight a ſhip of Briſtoll one of the conſorts of M. Iohn Chidley eſquire and M. Paul Wheele, made vnto the Straight of Magellan: with diuers accidents that happened vnto the company, during their 6. weekes abode there: Begun in the yeere 1589. Written by W. Magoths.

THe fiſt of Auguſt 1589. the worſhipfull M. Iohn Chidley of Chidley in the countie of Deuon eſquire, with M. Paul Wheele and Captaine Andrew Mericke ſet forth from Plimmouth with three tall ſhips, the one called The wilde man of three hundred tunnes, wherein went for General the aforeſaid M. Iohn Chidley and Beniamin Wood as Maſter, the other called The white Lion, whereof M. Paul Wheele was captaine and Iohn Ellis Maſter, of the burthen of 340. tunnes: the third The delight of Briſtol, wherein went M. Andrew Merick as Captaine, and Robert Burnet Maſter, with two pinneſſes of 14. or 15. tunnes a piece. The Generall in his ſhip had 180. perſons: M. Paul Wheele had 140, in our owne ſhip we were 91. men and boyes. Our voyage was intended by The Streight of Magellan for The South Sea, and chiefly for the famous prouince of Arauco on the coaſt of Chili. We kept company together to the yles of the Canaries and ſo forward to Cape Blanco ſtanding neere the Northerly latitude of 20. degrees on the coaſt of Barbarie, where ſome of our people went on ſhoare finding nothing to their content. Within 12. dayes after our departure from this place The Delight, wherein I William Magoths was, loſt the company of the other two great ſhips, and the two ſmall pinneſſes. Howbeit we conſtantly kept our courſe according to our directions along the coaſt of Braſil, and by the Riuer of Plate, without touching any where on land vntill we came to Port deſire in the latitude of 48. degrees to the Southward of the Equinoctial. Before we arriued at this place there died of our company by Gods viſitation of ſundry diſeaſes 16. perſons. Wee ſtayed in this harborough 17. dayes to graue our ſhip & refreſh our wearied people, hoping here to haue met with our conſorts: which fell out contrary to our expectations. During our abode in this place we found two little ſprings of freſh water, which were vpon the Northweſterly part of the land, & lighted vpon good ſtore of ſeales both old and yong. From hence we ſailed toward the Streight of Magelan, and entred the ſame about the firſt of Ianuary. And comming to Penguin yland within the Streight we tooke and ſalted certaine hogſheads of Penguins, which muſt be eaten with ſpeed: for wee found them to be of no long continuance; we alſo furniſhed our ſelues with freſh water. And here at the laſt ſending off our boat to the yland for the reſt of our prouiſion, wee loſt her and 15. men in her by force of foule weather; but what became of them we could not tel. Here alſo in this ſtorme we loſt two anckers. From hence we paſſed farther into the Sreight, and by Port famine we ſpake with a Spaniard, who told vs that he had liued in thoſe parts 6. yeeres, and that he was one of the 400. men that were ſent thither by the king of Spaine in the yere 1582. to fortifie and inhabit there, to hinder the paſſage of all ſtrangers that way into the South ſea. But that and the other Spaniſh colonie being both deſtroyed by famine, he ſaid he had liued in an houſe by himſelfe a long time, and relieued himſelfe with his caleeuer vntil our comming thither. Here we made a boat of the bords of our cheſts; which being finiſhed wee ſent 7. armed men in the ſame on land on the North ſhore, being wafted on land by the Sauages with certaine white ſkinnes; who as ſoone as they came on ſhore were preſently killed by an 100. of the wilde people in the ſight of 2. of our men, which rowed them on ſhoare, which two onely eſcaped backe againe to vs with the boat. After this traiterous ſlaughter of our men, we fell backe againe with our ſhip to the Northeaſtward of Port famine to a certaine road, where we refreſhed our ſelues with muſkles, and tooke in water & wood. At this time wee tooke in the Spaniard aforeſaid, and ſo ſailed forward againe into the Streight. Wee paſſed 7. or 8. times 10. leagues Weſtward beyond Cape Froward, being ſtill encountered with mightie Northweſt winds. Theſe winds and the current were ſo vehement againſt vs, that they forced vs backe aſmuch in two houres, as we were getting vp in 8. houres. Thus after wee had ſpent 6. weekes in the Streight ſtriuing againſt the furie of the elements, and hauing at ſundry times partly by caſualtie, and partly by ſicknes loſt 38. of our beſtmen, and 3. anckers, and now we hauing but one ancker left vs, and ſmall ſtore of victuals, and, which was not the leaſt miſchiefe, diuers of our company raiſing dangerous mutinies: we conſulted, though ſomewhat with the lateſt, for the ſafegard of our liues to returne while there was ſome ſmall hope remayning: and ſo ſet ſaile out of The Streight homeward about the 14.of Februarie 1590. We returned backe againe by The riuer of Plate; and ſailing neere the coſt of Braſill we met with a Portugal ſhip of 80.tunnes, which rode at an ancker vpon the coaſt, who as ſoone as ſhe deſcried vs to chaſe her, incontinently weyed, & ran her ſelfe on ground betwene the yland of S.Sebaſtian and the maine land. But we for want of a good boat, and by reaſon of the foule weather, were neither able to bord her, nor to goe on ſhore. Thence in extreeme miſery we ſhaped our courſe for the yles of Cape Verde, and ſo paſſing to the yles of The Açores, the Canaries being ſomething out of cur courſe; the firſt land that wee mette withall in our Narrow ſea was The yle of Alderney. And hauing now but ſixe men of all our company left aliue, the Maſter and his two mates and chiefe Mariners being dead, wee ran in with Monuille de Hage eight miles to the Weſt of Cherbourg in Normandie. Where the next day after our comming to an ancker, hauing but one in all left, being the laſt of Auguſt 1590. by the foule weather that roſe the ancker came home, and our ſhip draue on the rocks: And the Normans which were commanded by the gouernour of Cherbourg (who came downe to vs that night) to haue layd out another ancker for her, neglecting his commandement, ſuffered her miſerably to be ſplitted, with deſire to enrich themſelues by her wracke. Within few dayes after this laſt miſchance foure of vs being Engliſhmen departed from Cherbourgh, and paſſed home for England in a barke of Weymouth, leauing the two ſtrangers there behinde vs.

The names of vs ſixe that returned of all our company were theſe.

1 William Magoths of Briſtol.
2 Richard Buſh.
3 Iohn Reade.
4 Richard Hodgkins of Weſtburie neere Briſtol.

A petition made by certaine of the company of the Delight of Briſtol vnto the Maſter of the ſaid ſhip Robert Burnet, one of the conſorts of M.Chidley, being in the Streights of Magellan the 12.of February 1589.

VE haue thought good to ſhew vnto you (being our Maſter) our whole mindes and griefes in writing: that whereas our Captaine Matthew Hawlſe, and Walter Street doe beginne to take into the Captaines cabin this 12.of Febr. both bread and butter, (ſuch as was put in for the prouiſion of the ſhippe and company) only to feed themſelues, and a few others, which are of their meſſe: meaning thereby rather to ſterue vs, then to keepe vs ſtrong and in health: And likewiſe vpon the ſame, hee hath taken into his cabin certaine furniture, as ſwords, caleeuers and muſquets: We therefore not well knowing their intents herein, except by certaine wordes caſt out at vnwares, wee may coniecture, that your death, which God forbid, by them hath bene determined: doe all moſt humbly deſire you being our Maſter, and hauing charge of the ſhippe, and vs, this preſent voyage committed vnto you, to conſider: Firſt, that by Gods viſitation wee haue loſt 16.men, and that ſo much the rather becauſe they were not alotted ſuch neceſſary prouiſion, as was in the ſhip to be had. Alſo to conſider the great loſſe of 15.of our men with our boat at Penguin-yland within the Streights of Magellan: and of 7.good and ſeruiceable men beſides neere Port famine: and of three anckers, and our Carpenter. Ouer and beſides all theſe calamities to conſider how you haue (without all reaſon and conſcience) bene ouerthwarted, diſgraced, and outcountenanced by your mate Street, and Matthew Hawlſe: Alſo what danger you now are ſubiect vnto, your death hauing bene ſo often conſpired, and what danger we ſhould be in, if it were (which God forbid) effected. Furthermore, to weigh with your ſelfe the great want of many neceſſaries in our ſhip: namely that we haue but 6.ſailers, (beſides your ſelfe and your mate Street, whom wee dare not truſt,) Alſo that wee haue but one ancker, likewiſe the lacke of our boate and a Carpenter, of ropes, of pitch, treynailes, bolts, and plankes, and the want of a ſkilfull Chirurgian. And whereas a view being taken of our prouiſion there was found but fiue moneths victuals of bread, meale, greets, and peaſe, and alſo but three moneths victuals of beefe, penguins and porke, three hogſheads of wine, ten gallons of aquauitæ (whereof the ſicke men could not get any to releeue them,) foure hogſheads of ſyder and 18. flitches of bacon, &c. the company hath but three flitches. Alſo the ſaid Captaine Hawlſe and Street haue taken and ſeaſed vpon 17. potts of butter, with certaine cheeſe, and an hogſhead of bread at a time, and haue bene thereof poſſeſſed to their owne priuate vſes: And haue not onely immoderately ſpent the companies prouiſion in butter, cheeſe, aquauitæ, &c. but haue alſo conſumed thoſe ſweete meates, which were layed vp in the ſhippe onely for the reliefe of ſicke perſons (themſelues being healthy and ſound, and withholding the ſaid meates from others in their ſickeneſſe) and euen at this time alſo (by reaſon of the ſmall ſtore of our prouiſion, wee being enforced to come to a ſhorter allowance) they the ſaide Captaine Hawlſe and your mate Street, doe finde themſelues agrieued at the very ſame allowance, wherewith other men are well contented. And although (beſides our ordinary allowance, and more then all the reſt of the company) they onely haue their breakefaſts permitted vnto them, yet they complaine that the company goeth about to famiſh them, whereas indeed they doe what lyeth in them to famiſh the company by feeding themſelues fat, which doe no labour at all. Theſe things being well weighed, you ought likewiſe to conſider the long time that wee haue lien here in theſe Streighes of Magellan, hauing bene at, and ſeuen or eight times, tenne leagues beyond Cape Froward, we haue had but a ſmall gale of winde with vs: neither could wee come to an ancker, the water being ſo deepe: and (you know) the place is ſo dangerous, that wee were once embayed, and coulde ſcarce get out againe: And likewiſe, What fogges and miſts are here already: Much more here wil be, the winter and darke nights being at hand, & we hauing not ſo much as a boate to ſeeke out any roade to ride in, ſauing a ſmall weake boate made of mens cheſtes, in which it is not conuenient to goe on ſhoare in a forreine countrey, where wee muſt goe with force: and hauing but one ancker left vs, there is but little hope of life in vs, as you may ſufficiently iudge, if wee ſhould loſe either the ſaide ancker or our boate, and therefore wee dare not put the ſame in danger for feare of looſing them. Alſo wee hauing lien here theſe ſixe weekes and vpward, the winde hath continued in the North-weſt directly againſt our courſe, ſo that wee can no way hope to get through the Streights into the South ſea this yeere, and if we could, yet our prouiſion is not ſufficient, hauing ſpent ſo much thereof, in this our lingering aboade. Nay wee haue ſcarcely victuals ynough to cary vs home into England, if they bee not vſed ſparingly, and with very good gouernment. Therefore wee doe againe moſt humbly deſire you to conſider and haue regard vnto the premiſſes, as you tender your owne ſafetie and the ſafetie of vs which remaine aliue, that wee may (by Gods helpe) returne backe into England, rather then die here among wilde and ſauage people: for if wee make any longer abode in this place, it will bee (without all doubt) to the vtter decay and loſſe, both of our ſelues, and of the ſhippe: and in returning backe, it may pleaſe God, that we may finde our fifteene men, and our boat at Penguin-yland (although this bee contrary to the mindes of Matthew Hawlſe, and your mate Street) and hauing found them, wee doe not deſpaire in Gods mercie, but that in our returne home-ward, hee will ſend vs purchaſe ſufficient, if wee would ioyne our ſelues together in prayer, and loue one another. And thus doing (as wee ſhalbe bound) euen ſo wee will alſo heartily pray for the continuance of your good eſtate, and wel-fare, and for the length of your dayes, to the pleaſure of Almightie God.

Laſtly, wee doe moſt humbly beſeech you to conſider, that (after the loſſe of ſo many men, and all the caſualties aforeſaid, as we were taking in of water by Port Famine, out boate-ſwaine, the hooper, and William Magoths being on ſhoare) Matthew Hawlſe did hallow to haue them in all the haſte come on-bord: ſaying therewithall theſe words: He that will come in this voyage, muſt not make any reckoning to leaue two or three men on ſhore behinde him, whereas we had ſo lately loſt all the foreſaide men, hauing then but ſixe ſailers left vs on-bord. Alſo the ſaide Matthew Hawlſe did cary a piſtoll for the ſpace of two dayes ſecretly vnder his gowne, intending therewithall to haue murthered Andrew Stoning, and William Combe, as by confeſſion of Hawlſe his man, William Martin, it is manifeſt: for the ſaide William Martine reported vnto two of his friends, viz. Richard Hungate, and Emanuel Dornel, that he kneeled vpon his knees one whole houre before Matthew Hawlſe in his owne cabin, deſiring him, for Gods cauſe, not to kill either of them, eſpecially becauſe the ſaide Stoning and Martin came both out of one towne. Alſo the ſaid Hawlſe, at our ſecond time of watering in the place aforeſaid, came into the Gunners roome to ſpeake with you (your ſelfe with the maſter Gunner Thomas Browne, and his mate William Frier being then preſent) demanding of you, if he ſhould ſend certaine men to Port famine being two leagues from the ſhip by land. Thomas Browne anſwered him preſently, that he ſhould ſend none,for feare leaſt the wind might ariſe,and by that meanes we ſhould looſe ſo many of our men more: to whom Matthew Hawlie replied that it was not material,for that he had made choyce of a company for the very ſame purpoſe, whoſe names were Emmanuel Dornel,Richard Hungate, Paul Carie,Iohn Dauis,Gabriel Valeroſa, a Portugall, and Peter a Britaine, and the Spaniard which we had taken in at the ſame place,at our firſt time of watering. And thus we end,deſiring God to ſende vs well into our natiue countrey. In witneſſe whereof wee haue ſubſcribed our names.

The laſt voyage of the worſhipfull M. Thomas Candiſh eſquire, intended for the South ſea, the Philippinas, and the coaſt of China, with 3. tall ſhips,and two barks: Written by M. Iohn Iane, a man of good obſeruation, imployed in the ſame,and many other voyages.

THe 26.of Auguſt 1591. wee departed from Plimmouth with 3.tall ſhips,and two barkes,The Galeon wherein M.Candiſh went himſelfe being Admiral, The Roebucke viceadmirall whereof M. Cocke was Captaine, The Deſire Rere-admirall whereof was Captaine M. Iohn Dauis (with whom and for whoſe ſake I went this voyage) The Blacke pinneſſe, and a barke of M. Adrian Gilbert, whereof M. Randolfe Cotton was Captaine.

Baya de Saluador.

A barke taken.

Cabo Frio. Iſla de Placencia.

Iſle de S. Sebaſtian.

The 29. of Nouember wee fell with the bay of Saluador vpon the coaſt of Braſil 12. leagues on this ſide Cabo Frio,where wee were becalmed vntill the ſecond of December: at which time wee tooke a ſmall barke bound for the Riuer of Plate with ſugar, haberdaſh wares, and Negros. The Maſter of this barke brought vs vnto an yle called Placencia thirtie leagues Weſt from Cabo Frio, where wee arriued the fift of December, and rifled ſixe or ſeuen houſes inhabited by Portugales. The 11.wee departed from this place,and the fourteenth we arriued at the yle of S. Sebaſtian: from whence M. Cocke and Captaine Dauis preſently departed with The Deſire and the blacke pinneſſe, for the taking of the towne of Santos. The 15.at euening we anckered at the barre of Santos, from whence we departed with our boates to the towne; and the next morning about nine of the clocke wee came to Santos, where being diſcouered, wee were inforced to land with 24. gentlemen, our long boat being farre a ſterne,by which expedition wee tooke all the people of the towne at Maſſe both men and women, whom wee kept all that day in the Church as priſoners. The cauſe why maſter Candiſh deſired to take this towne was to ſupply his great wants: For being in Santos, and hauing it in quiet poſſeſſion, wee ſtood in aſſurance to ſupply all our needes in great abundance. But ſuch was the negligence of our gouernour maſter Cocke, that the Indians were ſuffered to carry out of the towne whatſoeuer they would in open viewe, and no man did controll them: and the next day after wee had wonne the towne, our priſoners were all ſet at libertie, onely foure poore olde men were kept as pawnes to ſupply our wants. Thus in three dayes the towne that was able to furniſh ſuch another Fleete with all kinde of neceſſaries,was left vnto vs nakedly bare, without people and prouiſion.

The towne of Santos taken.

The towne of S. Vincent burnt.

Eight or tenne dayes after maſter Candiſh himſelfe came thither, where hee remained vntill the 22.of January,ſeeking by intreatie to haue that,whereof we were once poſſeſſed. But in concluſion wee departed out of the towne through extreeme want of victuall,not being able any longer to liue there,and were glad to receiue a fewe caniſters or baſkets of Caſſaui meale; ſo that in euery condition wee went worſe furniſhed from the towne, then when wee came vnto it. The 22.of January we departed from Santos,and burnt Sant Vincent to the ground. The 24.we ſet ſaile,ſhaping our courſe for the Streights of Magellan.

The ſeuenth of February we had a very great ſtorme, and the eighth our Fleet was ſeparated by the fury of the tempeſt. Then our Captaine called vnto him the Maſter of our ſhip, whom hee found to be a very honeſt and ſufficient man,and conferring with him he concluded to goe for Port Deſire,which is in the Southerly latitude of 48.degrees; hoping that the Generall would come thither, becauſe that in his firſt voyage he had found great reliefe there. For our Captaine could neuer get any direction what courſe to take in any ſuch extremities, though many times hee had intreated for it, as often I haue heard him with griefe report. In ſayling to this port by good chance we met with The Roe-bucke, wherein maſter Cocke had endured great extremities,and had loſt his boate, and therefore deſired our Captaine to keepe him company, for hee was in very deſperate caſe. Our Captaine hoiſed out his boate,and went abord him to know his eſtate,and returning tolde vs the hardneſſe thereof, and deſired the Maſter and all the company to be carefull in all their watches not to looſe The Roe-bucke, and ſo wee both arriued at Port Deſire the ſixth of March.

They arriue at Port Deſire.

The 16. of March The Blacke pinneſſe came vnto vs, but maſter Gilberts barke came not, but returned home to England, hauing their Captaine abord the Roe-bucke without any prouiſion more then the apparell that hee wore, who came from thence abord our ſhip to remaine with our Captaine, by reaſon of the great friendſhip betweene them. The 18. the Galeon came into the road, and maſter Candiſh came into the harborough in a boat which he had made at ſea; for his long boat and light-horſeman were loſt at ſea, as alſo a pinneſſe which he had built at Santos: and being abord The Deſire he tolde our Captaine of all his extremities, and ſpake moſt hardly of his company, and of diuers gentlemen that were with him, purpoſing no more to goe abord his owne ſhip, but to ſtay in The Deſire. We all ſorrowed to heare ſuch hard ſpeaches of our good friends; but hauing ſpoken with the gentlemen of the Galeon wee found them faithfull, honeſt, and reſolute in proceeding, although it pleaſed our Generall otherwiſe to conceiue of them.

M. Adrian Gilberts barke returneth for England.

A pinneſſe built at Santos.

The 20. of March we departed from Port Deſire, maſter Candiſh being in The Deſire with vs. The eighth of April 1592. wee fell with the Streights of Magellan, induring many furious ſtormes betweene Port Deſire and the Streight. The 14. we paſſed through the firſt Streight. The 16. we paſſed the ſecond Streight being ten leagues diſtant from the firſt. The 18. we doubled Cape Froward, which Cape lieth in 53. degrees and ½. The 21. wee were inforced by the fury of the weather to put into a ſmall coue with our ſhips, 4. leagues from the ſaid Cape, vpon the South ſhoare, where wee remained vntil the 15. of May. In the which time wee indured extreeme ſtormes, with perpetual ſnow, where many of our men died with curſed famine, and miſerable cold, not hauing wherewith to couer their bodies, nor to fill their bellies, but liuing by muſkles, water, and weeds of the ſea, with a ſmall reliefe of the ſhips ſtore in meale ſometimes. And all the ſicke men in the Galeon were moſt vncharitably put a ſhore into the woods in the ſnowe, raine, and cold, when men of good health could ſkarcely indure it, where they ended their liues in the higheſt degree of miſery, maſter Candiſh all this while being abord the Deſire. In theſe great extremities of ſnow and cold, doubting what the ende would be, he aſked our Captaines opinion, becauſe he was a man that had good experience of the Northweſt parts, in his 3. ſeuerall diſcoueries that way, imployed by the marchants of London. Our Captaine tolde him, that this ſnowe was a matter of no long continuance, and gaue him ſufficient reaſon for it, and that thereby hee could not much be preiudiced or hindered in his proceeding. Notwithſtanding he called together all the company, and tolde them, that he purpoſed not to ſtay in the Streights, but to depart vpon ſome other voyage, or elſe to returne againe for Braſil. But his reſolution was to goe for the Cape of Buena Eſperança. The company anſwered, that if it pleaſed him, they did deſire to ſtay Gods fauour for a winde, and to indure all hardneſſe whatſoeuer, rather then to giue ouer the voyage, conſidering they had bene here but a ſmal time, and becauſe they were within fourtie leagues of the South ſea, it grieued them now to returne; notwithſtanding what hee purpoſed, that they would performe. So hee concluded to goe for the Cape of Buena Eſperança, and to giue ouer this voyage. Then our Captaine, after maſter Candiſh was come abord The Deſire from talking with the company, tolde him, that if it pleaſed him to conſider the great extremitie of his eſtate, the ſlenderneſſe of his prouiſions, with the weakeneſſe of his men, it was no courſe for him to proceed in that newe enterprize: for if the reſt of your ſhippes (ſaid hee) bee furniſhed anſwerable to this, it is impoſſible to performe your determination: for wee haue no more ſailes then maſtes, no victuals, no ground-tackling, no cordage more then is ouer head, and among ſeuentie and fiue perſons, there is but the Maſter alone that can order the ſhippe, and but fourteene ſaylers. The reſt are gentlemen, ſeruingmen, and artificers. Therefore it will be a deſperate caſe to take ſo hard an enterprize in hand. Theſe perſwaſions did our Captaine not onely vſe to maſter Candiſh, but alſo to maſter Cocke. In fine vpon a petition deliuered in writing by the chiefe of the whole company, the Generall determined to depart out of The Streights of Magellan, and to returne againe for Santos in Braſil.

They fall with the Streights of Magellan.

So the 15. of May wee ſet ſaile, the Generall then being in the Galeon. The eighteenth wee were free of the Streights, but at Cape Froward it was our hard hap to haue our boat ſunke at our ſterne in the night, and to be ſplit and ſore ſpoiled, and to looſe all our ores.

They returne from the Streights of Magellan.

The twentieth of May being thwart of Port Deſire, in the night the Generall altered his courſe, as we ſuppoſe, by which occaſion wee loſt him: for in the euening he ſtood cloſe by a winde to ſeaward, hauing the winde at Northnortheaſt, and wee ſtanding the ſame way, the winde not altering, could not the next day ſee him: ſo that we then perſwaded our ſelues, that hee was gone for Port Deſire to relieue himſelfe, or that hee had ſuſtained ſome miſchance at Sea, and was gone thither to remedy it. Whereupon our Captaine called the Generals men vnto him, with the reſt, and aſked their opinion what was to bee done. Euery one ſayde, that they thought that the Generall was gone for Port Deſire. Then the Maſter being the Generals man, and carefull of his maſters ſeruice, as alſo of good iudgement in Sea-matters, tolde the company howe dangerous it was to goe for Port Deſire, if wee ſhoulde there miſſe the Generall: for (ſaide hee) wee haue no boate to lande our ſelues, nor any cables nor anckers that I dare truſt in ſo quicke ſtreames as are there: yet in all likelyhood concluding that the Generall was gone thither, wee ſtayed our courſe for Port Deſire, and by chance mette with the Blacke pinneſſe, which had likewiſe loſt the Fleete, being in very miſerable caſe: ſo wee both concluded to ſeeke the Generall at Port Deſire.

The occaſion of loſing the Generall.

Then come againe to Port Deſire the 26. of May.

A quiet road.

A poole of freſh water on the South ſide of Port Deſire.

Abundance of muſkles and ſmelts.

The ſixe and twentieth day of May we came to Port Deſire, where not finding our Generall, as we hoped, being moſt ſlenderly victualled, without ſailes, boate, ores, nailes, cordage, and all other neceſſaries for our reliefe, wee were ſtrooken into a deadly ſorrow. But referring all to the prouidence and fatherly protection of the Almightie, wee entered the harbour, and by Gods fauour found a place of quiet roade, which before wee knewe not. Hauing mored our ſhippe with the pinneſſes boate, wee landed vpon the South ſhore, where wee found a ſtanding poole of freſh water, which by eſtimation might holde ſome tenne tunnes, whereby wee were greatly comforted. From this poole wee fet more then fortie tunnes of water, and yet we left the poole as full as wee found it. And becauſe at our firſt being in this harbour wee were at this place and found no water, we perſwaded our ſelues that God had ſent it for our reliefe. Alſo there were ſuch extraordinary low ebbes as we had neuer ſeene, whereby wee got muſkles in great plentie. Likewiſe God ſent about our ſhippes great abundance of ſmelts, ſo that with hookes made of pinnes euery man caught as many as hee coulde eate: by which meanes wee preſerued our ſhips victuals, and ſpent not any during the time of our abode here.

Our Captaine and Maſter falling into the conſideration of our eſtate and diſpatch to goe to the Generall, found our wants ſo great, as that in a moneth wee coulde not fitte our ſhippe to ſet ſaile. For wee muſt needes ſet vp a Smiths forge, to make boltes, ſpikes, and nayles, beſides the repairing of our other wants. Whereupon they concluded it to bee their beſt courſe to take the pinneſſe, and to furniſh her with the beſt of the company, and to goe to the Generall with all expedition, leauing the ſhippe and the reſt of the company vntill the Generals returne; for hee had vowed to our Captaine, that hee would returne againe for the Streights, as hee had tolde vs. The Captaine and Maſter of the pinneſſe being the Generals men were well contented with the motion.

A dangerous mutiny.

But the Generall hauing in our ſhippe two moſt peſtilent fellowes, when they heard of this determination they vtterly miſliked it, and in ſecret dealt with the company of both ſhippes, vehemently perſwading them, that our Captaine and Maſter would leaue them in the countrey to bee deuoured of the Canibals, and that they were mercileſſe and without charitie: whereupon the whole company ioyned in ſecret with them in a night to murther our Captaine and Maſter, with my ſelfe, and all thoſe which they thought were their friendes. There were markes taken in his caben howe to kill him with muſkets through the ſhippes ſide, and bullets made of ſiluer for the execution, if their other purpoſes ſhould faile. All agreed hereunto, except it were the bote-ſwaine of our ſhippe, who when hee knew the matter, and the ſlender ground thereof, reuealed it vnto our Maſter, and ſo to the Captaine. Then the matter being called in queſtion, thoſe two moſt murtherous fellowes were found out, whoſe names were Charles Parker and Edward Smith.

The Captaine being thus hardly beſet in perill of famine, and in danger of murthering, was conſtrained to vſe lenitie, and by courteous meanes to pacifie this furie; ſhewing, that to doe the Generall ſeruice, vnto whom he had vowed faith in this action, was the cauſe why hee purpoſed to goe vnto him in the pinneſſe, conſidering, that the pinneſſe was ſo neceſſary a thing for him, as that hee could not bee without her, becauſe hee was fearefull of the ſhore in ſo great ſhippes. Whereupon all cried out with curſing and ſwearing, that the pinneſſe ſhould not goe vnleſſe the ſhippe went. Then the Captaine deſired them to ſhewe themſelues Chriſtians, and not ſo blaſphemouſly to behaue themſelues, without regard or thankeſgiuing to God for their great deliuerance, and preſent ſuſtenance beſtowed vpon them, alleaging many examples of Gods ſharpe puniſhment for ſuch ingratitude; and withall promiſed to doe any thing that might ſtand with their good liking. By which gentle ſpeaches the matter was pacified, and the Captaine and Maſter at the requeſt of the company were content to forgiue this great treachery of Parker and Smith, who after many admonitions concluded in theſe wordes: The Lord iudge betweene you and mee:

which after came to a moſt ſharpe reuenge euen by the puniſhment of the Almightie. Thus by a generall conſent it was concluded not to depart, but there to ſtay for the Generals returne. Then our Captaine and Maſter, ſeeing that they could not doe the Generall that ſeruice which they deſired, made a motion to the companie, that they would lay downe vnder their handes the loſing of the Generall, with the extremities wherein we then ſtoode: whereunto they conſented, and wrote vnder their hands as followeth.

The teſtimoniall of the companie of The Deſire touching their loſing of their Generall, which appeareth to haue beene vtterly againſt their meanings.

The 26 of Auguſt 1591 wee whoſe names bee here vnder written, with diuers others departed from Plimmouth vnder M. Thomas Candiſh our Generall, with 4 ſhips of his, to wit, The Galeon, The Robuck, The Deſire, and The Black pinneſſe, for the performance of a voyage into The South ſea. The 19 of Nouember we fell with the bay of Saluador in Braſil. The 16 of December we tooke the towne of Santos, hoping there to reuictuall our ſelues, but it fell not out to our contentment. The 24 of January we ſet ſaile from Santos, ſhaping our courſe for The Streights of Magellan. The 8 of Februarie by violent ſtormes the ſayde fleete was parted: The Robuck and The Deſire arriued in Porte Deſire the 6 of March. The 16 of March The Black pinneſſe arriued there alſo: and the 18 of the ſame our admirall came into the roade; with whom we departed the 20 of March in poore and weake eſtate. The 8 of Aprill 1592 we entred The Streights of Magellan. The 21 of Aprill wee ankered beyond Cape Froward, within 40 leagues of The South ſea, where wee rode vntill the 15 of May. In which time wee had great ſtore of ſnowe, with ſome guſtie weather, the wind continuing ſtill at Weſnorthweſt againſt vs. In this time wee were inforced for the preſeruing of our victuals, to liue the moſt part vpon muſkles, our prouiſion was ſo ſlender; ſo that many of our men died in this hard extremitie. Then our General returned for Braſil there to winter, & to procure victuals for this voyage againſt the next yeere. So we departed The Streights the 15 of May. The 21 being thwart of Port Deſire 30 leagues off the ſhoare, the wind then at Northeaſt and by North, at fiue of the clock at night lying Northeaſt, wee ſuddenly caſt about lying Southeaſt and by South, and ſometimes Southeaſt: the whole fleete following the admirall, our ſhip comming vnder his lee ſhot ahead him, and ſo framed ſaile fit to keepe companie. This night wee were ſeuered, by what occaſion wee proteſt wee know not, whither we loſt them or they vs. In the morning we only ſaw The Black pinneſſe, then ſuppoſing that the admirall had ouerſhot vs. All this day wee ſtoode to the Eaſtwards, hoping to find him, becauſe it was not likely, that he would ſtand to the ſhoare againe ſo ſuddenly. But miſſing him towards night, we ſtood to the ſhoareward, hoping by that courſe to finde him. The 22 of May at night we had a violent ſtorme, with the winde at Northweſt, and wee were inforced to hull, not being able to beare ſaile, and this night we periſhed our maine treſſletrees, ſo that wee could no more vſe our maine top-ſaile, lying moſt dangerouſly in the ſea. The pinneſſe likewiſe receiued a great leake, ſo that wee were inforced to ſeeke the next ſhoare for our reliefe. And becauſe famine was like to bee the beſt ende, wee deſired to goe for Port Deſire, hoping with ſeales and penguins to relieue our ſelues, and ſo to make ſhift to followe the Generall, or there to ſtay his comming from Braſil. The 24 of May wee had much winde at North. The 25 was calme, and the ſea very loftie, ſo that our ſhip had dangerous foule weather. The 26 our fore-ſhrowdes brake, ſo that if wee had not beene neere the ſhoare, it had beene impoſſible for vs to get out of the ſea. And nowe being here mored in Port Deſire, our ſhrowdes are all rotten, not hauing a running rope whereto wee may truſt, and being prouided onely of one ſhift of ſailes all worne, our top-ſailes not able to abide any ſtreſſe of weather, neither haue wee any pitch, tarre, or nailes, nor any ſtore for the ſupplying of theſe wantes; and wee liue onely vpon ſeales and muſkles, hauing but fiue hogſheads of porke within bourd, and meale three ounces for a man a day, with water for to drinke. And foraſmuch as it hath pleaſed God to ſeparate our fleete, and to bring vs into ſuch hard extremities, that only now by his mere mercy we expect reliefe, though otherwiſe we are hopeleſſe of comfort, yet becauſe the wonderfull workes of God in his exceeding great fauour toward vs his creatures are farre beyond the ſcope of mans capacitie, therefore by him we hope to haue deliuerance in this our deepe diſtreſſe. Also foraſmuch as thoſe vpon whom God will beſtow the fauour of life, with returne home to their countrey, may not onely themſelues remaine blameleſſe, but alſo manifeſt the trueth of our actions, wee haue thought good in Chriſtian charitie to lay downe vnder our hands the trueth of all our proceedings euen till the time of this our diſtreſſe.

The maner how they loſt their Generall.

Giuen in Port Deſire the 2 of June 1592. Beſeeching the almightie God of his mercie to deliuer vs from this miſerie, how or when it ſhall pleaſe his diuine Maieſtie.

An Iſle neere Port Deſire abounding with ſeales and penguins.

After they had deliuered this relation vnto our captaine vnder their handes, then wee began to trauell for our liues, and wee built vp a ſmiths forge, and made a colepit, and burnt coles, and there wee made nailes, boltes, and ſpikes, others made ropes of a peece of our cable, and the reſt gathered muſkles, and tooke ſmeltes for the whole companie. Three leagues from this harborough there is an Iſle with foure ſmall Iſles about it, where there are great abundance of ſeales, and at the time of the yeere the penguins come thither in great plentie to breede. Wee concluded with the pinneſſe, that ſhe ſhould ſometimes goe thither to fetch ſeales for vs; vpon which condion wee would ſhare our victuals with her man for man; whereunto the whole companie agreed. So wee parted our poore ſtore, and ſhee laboured to fetch vs ſeales to eate, wherewith wee liued when ſmeltes and muſkles failed: for in the nepe ſtreames wee could get no muſkles. Thus in moſt miſerable calamitie wee remained vntill the ſixt of Auguſt, ſtill keeping watch vpon the hils to looke for our Generall, and ſo great was our vexation and anguiſh of ſoule, as I thinke neuer fleſh and blood endured more. Thus our miſerie dayly increaſing, time paſſing, and our hope of the Generall being very colde, our Captaine and Maſter were fully perſwaded, that the Generall might perhaps goe directly for The Streights, and not come to this harborough: whereupon they thought no courſe more conuenient then to goe preſently for The Streights, and there to ſtay his comming, for in that place hee could not paſſe, but of force wee muſt ſee him: whereunto the companie moſt willingly conſented, as alſo the Captaine and Maſter of the pinneſſe; ſo that vpon this determination wee made all poſſible ſpeede to depart.

They depart the ſecond time from Port Deſire for The Streights of Magellan.

Certaine Iſles neuer before diſcouered fifty leagues northeaſt off The Streights.

The firſt and ſecōd Streight Cape Froward. Saluage cooue.

The ſixt of Auguſt wee ſet ſaile, and went to Penguin-iſle, and the next day wee ſalted twentie hogſheads of ſeales, which was as much as our ſalt could poſſibly doe, and ſo wee departed for The Streights the pooreſt wretches that euer were created. The ſeuenth of Auguſt towarde night wee departed from Penguin-iſle, ſhaping our courſe for The Streights, where wee had full confidence to meete with our Generall, The ninth wee had a ſore ſtorme, ſo that wee were conſtrained to hull, for our ſailes were not to indure any force. The 14 wee were driuen in among certaine Iſles neuer before diſcouered by any knowen relation, lying fiftie leagues or better from the ſhoare Eaſt and Northerly from The Streights: in which place, vnleſſe it had pleaſed God of his wonderfull mercie to haue ceaſed the winde, wee muſt of neceſſitie haue periſhed. But the winde ſhifting to the Eaſt, wee directed our courſe for The Streights, and the 18 of Auguſt wee fell with the Cape in a very thicke fogge; and the ſame night we ankered ten leagues within the Cape. The 19 day wee paſſed the firſt and the ſecond Streights. The 21 wee doubled Cape Froward. The 22 we ankered in Saluage cooue, ſo named, becauſe wee found many Saluages there: notwithſtanding the extreme colde of this place, yet doe all theſe wilde people goe naked, and liue in the woods like Satyrs, painted and diſguiſed, and flie from you like wilde deere. They are very ſtrong, and threw ſtones at vs of three or foure pound weight an incredible diſtance. The 24 in the morning wee departed from this cooue, and the ſame day we came into the Northweſt reach, which is the laſt reach of the Streights. The 25 we ankored in a good cooue, within fourteene leagues of the South ſea: in this place we purpoſed to ſtay for the General, for the ſtreight in this place is ſcarce three miles broad, ſo that he could not paſſe but we muſt ſee him. After we had ſtayed here a fortnight in the deep of Winter, our victuals conſuming, (for our Seals ſtunke moſt vily, and our men died pitifully through cold and famin, for the greateſt part of them had not clothes to defend the extremitie of the winters cold) being in this heauie diſtreſſe, our captaine and Maſter thought it the beſt courſe to depart from the Streights into the South ſea, and to go for the Iſle of Santa Maria, which is to the Northward of Baldiuia in 37 degrees & a quarter, where we might haue reliefe, and be in a temperate clime, and there ſtay for the Generall, for of neceſſity he muſt come by that Iſle. So we departed the 13 of September, & came in ſight of the South ſea. The 14 we were forced backe againe, and recouered a cooue 3 leagues within the ſtreights from the South ſea. Againe we put foorth, & being 8 or 10 leagues free of the land, the wind riſing furiouſly at Weſtnorthweſt, we were inforced againe into the ſtreights only for want of ſails; for we neuer durſt beare ſaile in any ſtreſſe of weather, they were ſo weake: ſo againe we recouered the cooue three leagues within the ſtreights, where we indured moſt furious weather, ſo that one of our two cables brake, whereby we were hopeles of life. Yet it pleaſed God to calme the ſtorme, and wee unriued our ſheates, tackes, halliers, and other ropes, and mored our ſhip to the trees cloſe by the rockes. We laboured to recouer our ankor againe, but could not by any means, it lay ſo deepe in the water, and as we thinke cleane couered with oaze. Now had we but one ankor which had but one whole Flouke, a cable ſpliced in two places, and a piece of an olde cable. In the middeſt of theſe our troubles it pleaſed God that the wind came faire the firſt of October; whereupon with all expedition wee looſed our morings, and weighed our ankor, and ſo towed off into the chanel; for wee had mended our boate in Port Deſire, and had fiue oares of the pinneſſe. When we had weighed our ankor, we found our cable broken, onely one ſtrand helde: then wee prayſed God; for we ſaw apparantly his mercies in preſeruing vs. Being in the chanel, we riued our ropes, & againe rigged our ſhip, no mans hand was idle, but all laboured euen for the laſt gaſpe of life. Here our company was deuided; ſome deſired to go againe for Port Deſire, and there to be ſet on ſhore, where they might trauell for their liues, and ſome ſtood with the Captaine & Maſter to proceed. Wherupon the Captaine ſayd to the Maſter: Maſter, you ſee the wonderfull extremitie of our eſtate, and the great doubts among our companie of the truth of your reports, as touching reliefe to be had in the South ſea: ſome ſay in ſecret, as I am informed, that we vndertake theſe deſperate attempts through blind affection that we beare to the General. For mine owne part I plainely make knowen vnto you, that the loue which I bare to the Generall cauſed mee [illegible] to enter into this action, whereby I haue not onely heaped vpon my head this bitter calamity now preſent, but alſo haue in ſome ſort procured the diſlike of my beſt friends in England, as it is not vnknowen to ſome in this company. But now being thus intangled by the prouidence of God for my former offences (no doubt) I deſire, that it may pleaſe his diuine Maieſtie to ſhew vs ſuch mercifull fauour, that we may rather proceed, then otherwiſe: or if it be his wil, that our mortall being ſhal now take an ende, I rather deſire that it may bee in proceeding then in returning. And becauſe I ſee in reaſon, that the limits of our time are now drawing to an end, I do in Chriſtian charity intreat you all, firſt to forgiue me in whatſoeuer I haue bin grieuous vnto you; ſecondly that you wil rather pray for our General, then vſe hard ſpeeches of him; and let vs be fully perſwaded, that not for his cauſe & negligence, but for our own offences againſt the diuine Maieſty we are preſently puniſhed; laſtly, let vs forgiue one another and be reconciled as children in loue & charity, and not think vpon the vanities of this life: ſo ſhall we in leauing this life liue with our glorious redeemer, or abiding in this life, find fauour with God. And now (good maſter) foraſmuch as you haue bin in this voyage once before with your maſter the general, ſatiſfie the cōpany of ſuch truths, as are to you beſt knowen; & you the reſt of the generals men, which likewiſe haue bin with him in his firſt voyage, if you heare any thing contrary to the truth, ſpare not to reprooue it, I pray you. And ſo I beſeech the Lord to beſtow his mercy vpon vs. Then the maſter began in theſe ſpeeches: Captain, your requeſt is very reaſonable, & I referre to your iudgment my honeſt care, & great pains taken in the generals ſeruice, my loue towards him, & in what ſort I haue diſcharged my duety, from the firſt day to this houre. I was commanded by the general to follow your directions, which hitherto I haue perfourmed. You all knowe, that when I was extreamely ſicke, the General was loſt in my mates watch, as you haue well examined: ſithens which time, in what anguiſh and griefe of minde I haue liued, God onely knoweth, and you are in ſome part a witneſſe. And nowe if you thinke good to returne, I will not gaineſay it:

The northweſt or laſt reach of the ſtreights.

Their firſt enterance into ye South ſea.

They enter the South ſea the ſecond time.

This Santos ſtandeth vpon the coaſt of Peru in 9 deg. of Southerly latitude.

They enter the South ſea the third time.

but this I aſſure you, if life may be preſerued by any meanes, it is in proceeding. For at the Iſle of Santa Maria I doe aſſure you of wheate, porke, and rootes enough. Alſo I will bring you to an Iſle, where Pelicans bee in great abundance, and at Santos wee ſhall haue meale in great plenty, beſides all our poſſibilitie of intercepting ſome ſhippes vpon the coaſt of Chili and Peru. But if wee returne there is nothing but death to be hoped for: therefore doe as you like, I am ready, but my deſire is to proceede. Theſe his ſpeeches being confirmed by others that were in the former voyage, there was a generall conſent of proceeding; and ſo the ſecond of October we put into the South ſea, and were free of all land. This night the winde began to blowe very much at Weſtnorthweſt, and ſtill increaſed in fury, ſo that wee were in great doubt what courſe to take: to put into the Streights wee durſt not for lacke of ground-tackle: to beare ſayle wee doubted, the tempeſt was ſo furious, and our ſayles ſo bad. The pinneſſe came roome with vs, and tolde vs that ſhee had receiued many grieuous Seas, and that her ropes did euery houre fayle her, ſo as they could not tell what ſhift to make: wee being vnable in any ſort to helpe them, ſtood vnder our coarſes in view of the lee-ſhore, ſtill expecting our ruinous end.

The fourth of October the ſtorme growing beyond all reaſon furious, the pinneſſe being in the winde of vs, ſtrake ſuddenly ahull, ſo that we thought ſhee had receiued ſome grieuous ſea, or ſprung a leake, or that her ſayles failed her, becauſe ſhe came not with vs: but we durſt not hull in that vnmercifull ſtorme, but ſometimes tried vnder our maine coarſe, ſometime with a haddock of our ſayle, for our ſhip was very leeward, and moſt labourſome in the ſea. This night wee loſt the pinneſſe, and neuer ſaw her againe.

The blacke pinneſſe loſt in the South ſea.

The fift, our foreſayle was ſplit, and all to torne: then our Maſter tooke the mizzen, and brought it to the foremaſt, to make our ſhip worke, and with our ſpritſaile we mended our foreſayle, the ſtorme continuing without all reaſon in fury, with haile, ſnowe, raine, and winde ſuch and ſo mighty, as that in nature it could not poſſibly be more, the ſeas ſuch and ſo lofty, with continuall breach, that many times we were doubtfull whether our ſhip did ſinke or ſwimme.

The tenth of October being by the accompt of our Captaine and Maſter very neere the ſhore, the weather darke, the ſtorme furious, and moſt of our men hauing giuen ouer to trauell, we yeelded our ſelues to death, without further hope of ſuccour. Our captaine ſitting in the gallery very penſiue, I came and brought him ſome Roſa ſolis to comfort him; for he was ſo cold, that hee was ſcarce able to mooue a ioint. After he had drunke, and was comforted in heart, hee began for the eaſe of his conſcience to make a large repetition of his forepaſſed time, and with many grieuous ſighs he concluded in theſe words: Oh moſt glorious God, with whoſe power the mightieſt things among men are matters of no moment, I moſt humbly beſeech thee, that the intollerable burthen of my ſinnes may through the blood of Ieſus Chriſt be taken from me: and end our daies with ſpeede, or ſhew vs ſome mercifull ſigne of thy loue and our preſeruation. Hauing thus ended, he deſired me not to make knowen to any of the company his intollerable griefe and anguiſh of minde, becauſe they ſhould not thereby be diſmayed. And ſo ſuddenly, before I went from him, the Sunne ſhined cleere; ſo that he and the Maſter both obſerued the true eleuation of the Pole, whereby they knew by what courſe to recouer the Streights. Wherewithall our captaine and Maſter were ſo reuiued, & gaue ſuch comfortable ſpeeches to the company, that euery man reioyced, as though we had receiued a preſent deliuerance. The next day being the 11 of October, we ſaw Cabo Deſeado being the cape on the South ſhore (the North ſhore is nothing but a company of dangerous rocks, Iſles, & ſholds.) This cape being within two leags to leeward off vs, our maſter greatly doubted, that we could not double the ſame: wherupon the captain told him: You ſee there is no remedy, either we muſt double it, or before noon we muſt die: therfore looſe your ſails, and let vs put it to Gods mercy. The maſter being a man of good ſpirit reſolutely made quicke diſpatch & ſet ſaile. Our ſailes had not bene halfe an houre aboord, but the footrope of our foreſaile brake, ſo that nothing held but the oylet holes. The ſeas continually brake ouer the ſhips poope, and flew into the ſailes with ſuch violence, that we ſtill expected the tearing of our ſayles, or ouerſetting of the ſhip, and withall to our vtter diſcomfort, wee perceiued that wee fell ſtill more and more to leeward, ſo that wee could not double the cape: wee were nowe come within halfe a mile of the cape, and ſo neere the ſhore, that the counter-ſuffe of the ſea would rebound againſt the ſhippes ſide, ſo that wee were much diſmayed with the horror of our preſent ende. Beeing thus at the very pinch of death, the winde and Seas raging beyond meaſure, our Maſter veared ſome of the maine ſheate; and whether it was by that occaſion, or by ſome current, or by the wonderfull power of God, as wee verily thinke it was, the ſhip quickened her way, and ſhot paſt that rocke, where wee thought ſhee would haue ſhored. Then betweene the cape and the poynt there was a little bay; ſo that wee were ſomewhat farther from the ſhoare:

and when we were come ſo farre as the cape, wee yeelded to death: yet our good God the Father of all mercies deliuered vs, and wee doubled the cape about the length of our ſhippe, or very little more. Being ſhot paſt the cape, we preſently tooke in our ſayles, which onely God had preſerued vnto vs; and when we were ſhot in betweene the high lands, the wind blowing trade, without any inch of ſayle, we ſpooned before the ſea, three men being not able to guide the helme, and in ſixe houres wee were put fiue and twenty leagues within the Streights, where wee found a ſea anſwerable to the Ocean.

The Cape Deſeado moſt dangerouſly doubled, after they had been nine dayes in the South ſea.

In this time we freed our ſhip from water, and after wee had reſted a little, our men were not able to mooue; their ſinewes were ſtiffe, and their fleſh dead, and many of them (which is moſt lamentable to bee reported) were ſo eaten with lice, as that in their fleſh did lie cluſters of lice as big as peaſon, yea and ſome as big as beanes. Being in this miſerie we were conſtrained to put into a coue for the refreſhing our men. Our Maſter knowing the ſhore and euery coue very perfectly, put in with the ſhore, and mored to the trees, as beforetime we had done, laying our ankor to the ſeaward. Here we continued vntill the twentieth of October; but not being able any longer to ſtay through extremitie of famine, the one and twentieth we put off into the chanell, the weather being reaſonable calme: but before night it blew moſt extreamely at Weſtnorthweſt. The ſtorme growing outragious, our men could ſcarcely ſtand by their labour; and the Streights being full of turning reaches we were conſtrained by diſcretion of the Captaine and Maſter in their accounts to guide the ſhip in the hell-darke night, when we could not ſee any ſhore, the chanell being in ſome places ſcarſe three miles broad. But our captaine, as wee firſt paſſed through the Streights drew ſuch an exquiſite plat of the ſame, as I am aſſured it cannot in any ſort be bettered: which plat hee and the Maſter ſo often peruſed, and ſo carefully regarded, as that in memorie they had euery turning and creeke, and in the deepe darke night without any doubting they conueyed the ſhip through that crooked chanell: ſo that I conclude, the world hath not any ſo ſkilfull pilots for that place, as they are: for otherwiſe wee could neuer haue paſſed in ſuch ſort as we did.

An excellent plat of the Streights of Magellan.

The 25 wee came to an Iſland in the Streights named Penguin-iſle, whither wee ſent our boate to ſeeke reliefe, for there were great abundance of birds, and the weather was very calme; ſo wee came to an ankor by the Iſland in ſeuen fadomes. While our boate was at ſhore, and we had great ſtore of Penguins, there aroſe a ſudden ſtorme, ſo that our ſhip did driue ouer a breach and our boate ſanke at the ſhore. Captaine Cotton and the Lieutenant being on ſhore leapt into the boate, and freed the ſame, and threw away all the birdes, and with great difficultie recouered the ſhip: my ſelfe alſo was in the boate the ſame time, where for my life I laboured to the beſt of my power. The ſhip all this while driuing vpon the lee-ſhore, when wee came aboord, we helped to ſet ſayle, and weighed the ankor; for before our comming they could ſcarſe hoiſe vp their yardes, yet with much adoe they ſet their fore-coarſe. Thus in a mighty fret of weather the ſeuen and twentieth day of October wee were free of the Streights, and the thirtieth of October we came to Penguin-iſle being three leagues from Port Deſire, the place which wee purpoſed to ſeeke for our reliefe.

Penguin-iſle within three leagues of Port Deſire.

When wee were come to this Iſle wee ſent our boate on ſhore, which returned laden with birdes and egges; and our men ſayd that the Penguins were ſo thicke vpon the Iſle, that ſhippes might be laden with them; for they could not goe without treading vpon the birds, whereat we greatly reioiced. Then the captaine appointed Charles Parker and Edward Smith, with twenty others to go on ſhore, and to ſtay vpon the Iſle, for the killing and drying of thoſe Penguins, and promiſed after the ſhip was in harborough to ſend the reſt, not onely for expedition, but alſo to ſaue the ſmall ſtore of victuals in the ſhippe. But Parker, Smith, and the reſt of their faction ſuſpected, that this was a deuiſe of the Captaine to leaue his men on ſhore, that by theſe meanes there might bee victuals for the reſt to recouer their countrey: and when they remembred, that this was the place where they would haue ſlaine their Captaine and Maſter, ſurely (thought they) for reuenge hereof will they leaue vs on ſhore. Which when our Captaine vnderſtood, hee vſed theſe ſpeeches vnto them: I vnderſtand that you are doubtfull of your ſecurity through the peruerſeneſſe of your owne guilty conſciences: it is an extreame griefe vnto me, that you ſhould iudge mee blood-thirſtie, in whome you haue ſeene nothing but kinde conuerſation: if you haue found otherwiſe, ſpeake boldly, and accuſe mee of the wrongs that I haue done: if not, why do you then meaſure me by your owne vncharitable conſciences? All the company knoweth indeed, that in this place you practized to the vtmoſt of your powers, to murther me and the maſter cauſeles, as God knoweth, which euil in this place we did remit you: & now I may conceiue without doing you wrong, that you againe purpoſe ſome euill in bringing theſe matters to repetition:

They enter Port Deſire the third time.

but God hath ſo ſhortned your confederacie, as that I nothing doubt you: it is for your Maſters ſake that I haue forborne you in your vnchriſtian practizes: and here I proteſt before God, that for his ſake alone I will yet indure this iniury, and you ſhall in no ſorte be preiudiced, or in any thing be by me commanded: but when we come into England (if God ſo fauour vs) your maſter ſhall knowe your honeſties; in the meane ſpace be voide of theſe ſuſpicions, for, God I call to witnes, reuenge is no part of my thought. They gaue him thanks, deſiring to go into the harborough with the ſhip, which he granted. So there were ten left vpon the Iſle, and the laſt of October we entred the harborough. Our Maſter at our laſt being here hauing taken carefull notice of euery creeke in the riuer, in a very conuenient place, vpon ſandy oaze, ran the ſhip on ground, laying our ankor to ſeaward, and with our running ropes mored her to ſtakes vpon the ſhore, which hee had faſtened for that purpoſe; where the ſhip remained till our departure.

Penguin Iſle ſcarce a mile frõ the maine.

Nine men loſt.

A great multitude of Saluages with vizards, or faces like vnto dogs faces.

The riuer of Port Deſire but 20 miles paſſable by boate.

The great benefit of the herbe called Scuruygraſſe.

They ſtayed 7 weekes in Port Deſire.

A pretty deuiſe to make ſalt.

The third of Nouember our boat with water, wood, and as many as ſhee could cary, went for the Iſle of Penguins: but being deepe, ſhe durſt not procede, but returned againe the ſame night. Then Parker, Smith, Towneſend, Purpet, with fiue others, deſired that they might goe by land, and that the boate might fetch them when they were againſt the Iſle; it being ſcarce a mile from the ſhore. The captaine bade them doe what they thought beſt, aduiſing them to take weapons with them: for (ſayd hee) although we haue not at any time ſeene people in this place, yet in the countrey there may be Sauages. They anſwered, that here were great ſtore of Deere, and Oſtriches; but if there were Saluages, they would deuoure them: notwithſtanding the captaine cauſed them to cary weapons, calieuers, ſwordes, and targets: ſo the ſixt of Nouember they departed by land, and the bote by ſea; but from that day to this day wee neuer heard of our men. The 11 while moſt of our men were at the Iſle, onely the Captaine and Maſter with ſixe others being left in the ſhip, there came a great multitude of Saluages to the ſhip, throwing duſt in the ayre, leaping and running like brute beaſts, hauing vizards on their faces like dogs faces, or elſe their faces are dogs faces indeed. We greatly feared leaſt they would ſet our ſhip on fire, for they would ſuddenly make fire, whereat we much maruelled: they came to windward of our ſhip, and ſet the buſhes on fire, ſo that we were in a very ſtinking ſmoke: but as ſoone as they came within our ſhot, we ſhot at them, & ſtriking one of them in the thigh they all preſently fled, ſo that we neuer heard nor ſaw more of them. Hereby we iudged, that theſe Canibals had ſlaine our 9 men. When we conſidered what they were that thus were ſlaine, and found that they were the principall men that would haue murthered our Captaine & Maſter, with the reſt of their friends, we ſaw the iuſt iudgement of God, and made ſupplication to his diuine Maieſty to be merciful vnto vs. While we were in this harborough, our Captaine and Maſter went with the boat to diſcouer how farre this riuer did run, that if neede ſhould enforce vs to leaue our ſhip, we might know how farre we might go by water. So they found, that farther then 20 miles they could not go with the boat. At their returne they ſent the boate to the Iſle of Penguins; whereby wee vnderſtood that the Penguins dryed to our hearts content, and that the multitude of them was infinite. This Penguin hath the ſhape of a bird, but hath no wings, only two ſtumps in the place of wings, by which he ſwimmeth vnder water with as great ſwiftnes as any fiſh. They liue vpon ſmelts, whereof there is great abundance vpon this coaſt: in eating they be neither fiſh nor fleſh: they lay great egs, and the bird is of a reaſonable bignes, very neere twiſe ſo big as a ducke. All the time that wee were in this place, we fared paſſing well with egs, Penguins, yong Seales, yong Gulles, beſides other birds, ſuch as I know not; of all which we had great abundance. In this place we found an herbe called Scuruygraſſe, which wee fried with egs, vſing traine oyle in ſtead of butter. This herbe did ſo purge yͤ blood, that it tooke away all kind of ſwellings, of which many died, & reſtored vs to perfect health of body, ſo that we were in as good caſe as whẽ we came firſt out of England. We ſtayed in this harbour vntil the 22 of December, in which time we had dried 20000 Penguins; & the Captaine, the Maſter, and my ſelfe had made ſome ſalt, by laying ſalt water vpon the rocks in holes, which in 6 daies would be kerned. Thus God did feed vs euẽ as it were with Manna frõ heauen.

A poore allowance of victuals.

The 22 of December we departed with our ſhip for the Iſle, where with great difficulty, by the ſkilful induſtry of our Maſter we got 14000 of our birds, and had almoſt loſt our captaine in labouring to bring the birds aboord: & had not our Maſter bene very expert in the ſet of thoſe wicked tides, which run after many faſhions, we had alſo loſt our ſhip in the ſame place: but God of his goodnes hath in all our extremities bene our protector. So the 22 at night we departed with 14000 dried Penguins, not being able to fetch the reſt, and ſhaped our courſe for Braſil. Now we our captaine rated our victuals, and brought vs to ſuch allowance, as that our victuals might laſt ſixe moneths; for our hope was, that within ſixe moneths we might recouer our countrey, though our ſailes were very bad. So the allowance was two ounces & a halfe of meale for a man a day, and to haue ſo twiſe a weeke, ſo that 5 ounces did ſerue for a weeke. Three daies a weeke we had oile, three ſpoonfuls for a man a day; and 2 dayes in a weeke peaſon, a pint betweene 4 men a day, and euery day 5 Penguins for 4 men, and 6 quartes of water for 4 men a day. This was our allowance; wherewith (we praiſe God) we liued, though weakly, and very feeble. The 30 of Ianuary we arriued at the Ile of Placencia in Braſill, the firſt place that outward bound we were at: and hauing made the ſholde, our ſhip lying off at ſea, the Captaine with 24 of the company went with the boat on ſhore, being a whole night before they could recouer it. The laſt of Ianuary at ſun-riſing they ſuddenly landed, hoping to take the Portugales in their houſes, & by that meanes to recouer ſome Caſaui-meale, or other victuals for our reliefe: but when they came to the houſes, they were all razed, and burnt to the ground, ſo that we thought no man had remained on the Iland. Then the captaine went to the gardens, & brought from thence fruits & roots for the company, and came aboord the ſhip, and brought her into a fine creeke which he had found out, where we might more her by the trees, and where there was water, and hoopes to trim our caſke. Our caſe being very deſperate, we preſently laboured for diſpatch away; ſome cut hoopes, which the coopers made, others laboured vpon the ſailes and ſhip, euery man trauelling for his life, & ſtill a guard was kept on ſhore to defend thoſe that laboured, euery man hauing his weapon likewiſe by him. The 3 of February our men with 23 ſhot went againe to the gardens, being 3 miles from vs vpon the North ſhore, and fetched Cazaui-roots out of the ground, to relieue our company inſtead of bread; for we ſpent not of our meale while we ſtaied here. The 5 of February being munday, our captaine and maſter haſted the company to their labour; ſo ſome went with the Coopers to gather hoopes, and the reſt laboured aboord. This night many of our men in the ſhip dreamed of murther & ſlaughter: In the morning they reported their dreames, one ſaying to another; this night I dreamt, that thou wert ſlaine; another anſwered, and I dreamed, that thou wert ſlaine: and this was general through the ſhip. The captaine hearing this, who likewiſe had dreamed very ſtrangely himſelfe, gaue very ſtreight charge, that thoſe which went on ſhore ſhould take weapons with them, and ſaw them himſelfe deliuered into the boat, & ſent ſome of purpoſe to guard the labourers. All the forenoone they laboured in quietneſſe, & when it was ten of the clocke, the heat being extreme, they came to a rocke neere the woods ſide (for al this countrey is nothing but thick woods) and there they boyled Cazaui-roots, & dined: after dinner ſome ſlept, ſome waſhed themſelues in the ſea, all being ſtripped to their ſhirts, & no man keeping watch, no match lighted, not a piece charged. Suddenly as they were thus ſleeping & ſporting, hauing gotten themſelues into a corner out of ſight of the ſhip, there came a multitude of Indians & Portugales vpon them, and ſlew them ſleeping: onely two eſcaped, one very ſore hurt, the other not touched, by whom we vnderſtood of this miſerable maſſacre: with all ſpeed we manned our boat, & landed to ſuccour our men; but we found them ſlaine, & laied naked on a ranke one by another, with their faces vpward, and a croſſe ſet by them: and withall we ſaw two very great pinneſſes come from the riuer of Ienero very ful of men; whom we miſtruſted came from thence to take vs: becauſe there came from Ienero ſouldiers to Santos, when the Generall had taken the towne and was ſtrong in it. Of 76 perſons which departed in our ſhip out of England, we were now left but 27, hauing loſt 13 in this place, with their chiefe furniture, as muſkets, caliuers, powder, & ſhot. Our caſke was all in decay, ſo that we could not take in more water then was in our ſhip, for want of caſke, and that which we had was maruellous ill conditioned: and being there mored by trees for want of cables and ankers, we ſtill expected the cutting of our morings, to be beaten from our decks with our owne furniture, & to be aſſayled by them of Ienero: what diſtreſſe we were now driuen into, I am not able to expreſſe. To depart with 8 tunnes of water in ſuch bad caſke was to ſterue at ſea, & in ſtaying our caſe was ruinous. Theſe were hard choiſes; but being thus perplexed, we made choice rather to fall into the hands of the Lord, then into the hands of men: for his exceeding mercies we had taſted, & of the others cruelty we were not ignorant. So concluding to depart, the 6 of February we were off in the chanell, with our ordinance & ſmall ſhot in a readines, for any aſſalt that ſhould come, & hauing a ſmall gale of winde, we recouered the ſea in moſt deepe diſtreſſe. Then bemoning our eſtate one to another, and recounting ouer all our extremities, nothing grieued vs more, then the loſſe of our men twiſe, firſt by the ſlaughter of the Canibals at Port Deſire, and at this Ile of Placencia by the Indians and Portugals. And conſidering what they were that were loſt, we found that al thoſe that conſpired the murthering of our captaine & maſter were now ſlain by ſaluages, the gunner only excepted. Being thus at ſea, when we came to cape Frio, the winde was contrary; ſo that 3 weekes we were grieuouſly vexed with croſſe windes, & our water conſuming, our hope of life was very ſmall. Some deſired to go to Baya, & to ſubmit themſelues to the Portugales, rather then to die for thirſt: but the captaine with faire perſwaſions altered their purpoſe of yeelding to the Portugales. In this diſtreſſe it pleaſed God to ſend vs raine in ſuch plenty, as that we were wel watered, & in good comfort to returne. But after we came neere vnto the ſun, our dried Penguins began to corrupt, & there bred in thẽ a moſt lothſome & vgly worme of an inch long. This worme did ſo mightily increaſe, and deuoure our victuals, that there was in reaſon no hope how we ſhould auoide famine, but be deuoured of theſe wicked creatures: there was nothing that they did not deuoure, only yron excepted: our clothes, boots, ſhooes, hats, ſhirts, ſtockings: and for the ſhip they did ſo eat the timbers, as that we greatly feared they would vndoe vs, by gnawing through the ſhips ſide. Great was the care and diligence of our captaine, maſter, and company to conſume theſe vermine, but the more we laboured to kill them, the more they increaſed; ſo that at the laſt we could not ſleepe for them, but they would eate our fleſh, and bite like Moſquitos. In this wofull caſe, after we had paſſed the Equinoctiall toward the North, our men began to fall ſick of ſuch a monſtrous diſeaſe, as I thinke the like was neuer heard of: for in their ankles it began to ſwell; from thence in two daies it would be in their breaſts, ſo that they could not draw their breath, and then fell into their cods; and their cods and yardes did ſwell moſt grieuouſly, and moſt dreadfully to behold, ſo that they could neither ſtand, lie, nor goe. Whereupon our men grew mad with griefe. Our captain with extreme anguiſh of his ſoule, was in ſuch wofull caſe, that he deſired only a ſpeedie end, and though he were ſcarce able to ſpeake for ſorrow, yet he perſwaded them to patience, and to giue God thankes, & like dutifull children to accept of his chaſtiſement. For all this diuers grew raging mad, & ſome died in moſt lothſome & furious paine. It were incredible to write our miſery as it was: there was no man in perfect health, but the captaine & one boy. The maſter being a man of good ſpirit with extreme labour bore out his griefe, ſo that it grew not vpon him. To be ſhort, all our men died except 16, of which there were but 5 able to mooue. The captaine was in good health, the maſter indifferent, captaine Cotton and my ſelfe ſwolne and ſhort winded, yet better then the reſt that were ſicke, and one boy in health: vpon vs 5 only the labour of the ſhip did ſtand. The captaine and maſter, as occaſion ſerued, would take in, and heaue out the top-ſailes, the maſter onely attended on the ſprit-ſaile, and all of vs at the capſten without ſheats and tacks. In fine our miſerie and weakneſſe was ſo great, that we could not take in, nor heaue out a ſaile: ſo our top-ſaile & ſprit-ſailes were torne all in pieces by the weather. The maſter and captaine taking their turnes at the helme, were mightily diſtreſſed and monſtrouſly grieued with the moſt wofull lamentation of our ſick men. Thus as loſt wanderers vpon the ſea, the 11 of Iune 1593. it pleaſed God, that we arriued at Bear-hauen in Ireland, and there ran the ſhip on ſhore: where the Iriſh men helped vs to take in our ſailes, and to more our ſhip for flooting: which ſlender paines of theirs coſt the captaine ſome ten pounds before he could haue the ſhip in ſafetie. Thus without victuals, ſailes, men, or any furniture God onely guided vs into Ireland, where the captaine left the maſter and three or foure of the company to keepe the ſhip; and within 5 dayes after he and certaine others had paſſage in an Engliſh fiſher-boat to Padſtow in Cornewall. In this maner our ſmall remnant by Gods onely mercie were preſerued, and reſtored to our countrey, to whom be all honour and glory world without end.

A moſt ſtrange and noiſome kind of worme bred of vnſalted Penguins.

ELizabeth by the grace of God Queene of England, France, and Ireland, the moſt mightie defendꝛeſſe of the true & chꝛiſtian faith againſt all that falſely pꝛofeſſe the name of Chꝛiſt &c. To the moſt high and ſoueraigne Pꝛince the moſt puiſſant Gouernour of the great kingdome of China, the chiefeſt Emperour in thoſe parts of Aſia and of the Ilands adioyning, and the great monarke of the oꝛientall regions of the woꝛld; wiſheth health, and many ioyfull and happy yeeres, with all plenty and abundance of things moſt acceptable. Whereas our honeſt and faithfull ſubiects which bꝛing theſe letters vnto your Highneſſe, Richard Allot & Thomas Bromefield, marchants of our citie of London in our foꝛeſaid kingdome of England, haue made moſt earneſt ſuit vnto vs, that we would commend their deſires and indeuours of ſayling to the regions of your Empire foꝛ traffiques ſake: whereas alſo the fame of your kingdome ſo ſtrongly and pꝛudently gouerned, being diſperſed and publiſhed ouer the face of the whole earth, hath inuited theſe our ſubiects not onely to viſite your Highneſſe dominions, but alſo to permit themſelues to be ruled and gouerned by the lawes and conſtitutions of your kingdome during the time of their aboad in thoſe partes of the woꝛld, as it becommeth marchants, who foꝛ exchange of marchandize are deſirous to trauell vnto regions ſo farre diſtant and not hitherto ſufficiently knowen vnto theſe nations of the woꝛld, hauing this regard onely, that they may pꝛeſent their wares and certaine examples oꝛ muſters of diuers kinds of marchandizes, wherewith the regions of our dominions do abound, vnto the view of your Highneſſe and of your ſubiects, & that they may indeuour to know, whether here be any other marchandize with vs fit foꝛ your vſe, which (accoꝛding to the honeſt & lawfull cuſtome of traffique in all countries) they may exchange foꝛ other commodities, whereof in the parts of your Empire there is great plentie both naturall and artificiall: We yeelding vnto the moſt reaſonable requeſts of theſe honeſt men, becauſe we doe ſuppoſe that by this moſt iuſt intercourſe of traffique, no inconuenience noꝛ loſſe, but rather moſt exceeding benefite will redound vnto the Pꝛinces and ſubiects of both kingdomes, while by the carrying foꝛth of thoſe commodities wherewith we abound, and the bꝛinging home of others which we want, wee may on either ſide at moſt eaſie rates helpe and inrich one another; doe craue of your moſt ſoueraigne Maieſtie, that theſe our ſubiects, when they ſhall come foꝛ traffiques ſake vnto any the ſtations, poꝛtes,

portes, places, townes or cities of your Empire, they may haue full and free libertie of egreſſe and regreſſe, and of dealing in trade of marchandize with your ſubiects, may by your Highneſſe clemency moſt firmely enioy all ſuch freedomes, immunities, and priuileges, as are vſually granted to the ſubiects of other Princes which exerciſe traffique in your dominions; and we on the other ſide will not onely performe all the offices of a well-willing Prince vnto your Highneſſe, but alſo for the greater increaſe of mutuall loue and commerce between vs and our ſubiects, by theſe preſent letters of ours doe moſt willingly grant vnto all and euery your ſubiects (if it ſhall ſeeme good vnto your Highneſſe) full and entire libertie vnto any of the partes of our dominions to reſort, there to abide and traffique, and thence to returne. All and euery of which premiſſes we haue cauſed to be confirmed by annexing hereunto our royall ſeale. God moſt mercifull and almighty, the Creator of heauen and earth, continually protect your kingly Maieſtie. Giuen in our palace at Greenwich the 11 of the moneth of Iuly, in the yeere of Chriſt 1596, and the eight and thirtie yeere of our reigne.

THREE SEVERALL TESTIMONIES CONcerning the mighty kingdom of Coray, tributary to the king of China, and borthering vpon his Northeaſt frontiers, called by the Portugales Coria, and by them eſteemed at the firſt an Iland, but ſince found to adioyne with the maine not many dayes iourney from Paquí the Metropolitan citie of China. The more perfect diſcouery whereof and of the coaſt of Tartaria Northward may in time bring great light (if not full certaintie) either of a Northweſt or a Northeaſt paſſage from Europe to thoſe rich countries. Collected out of the Portugale Ieſuites yeerely Iaponian Epiſtles dated 1590, 1591, 1592, 1594, &c.

The firſt teſtimony containing a reſolute determination of Quabacondono the great Monarch of all Iapan, to inuade and conquere China by the way of Coray, being a country diuided from the Iles of Iapan onely by an arme of the ſea about twentie leagues broad, and abounding with victuals and all other neceſſaries for the maintenance of the warres. Out of the Epiſtles of father Frier Lewis Frois, dated 1590.

QVabacondono hauing ſubdued all the petie kingdomes of Iapan, in the yeere of our Lord 1590 (as father Frier Lewis Frois writeth in his Iaponian Epiſtles of the foreſaid yeere) grew ſo proud and inſolent that he ſeemed another Lucifer; ſo farre foorth, that he made a ſolemne vow and othe, that he would paſſe the ſea in his owne perſon to conquere China: and for this purpoſe hee made great preparations, ſaying, that ſince hee is become Lorde of all Iapan, he hath nothing now to doe but to conquere China, and that although he ſhould end his life in that enterprize, he is not to giue ouer the ſame. For he hopeth to leaue behinde him hereby ſo great fame, glorie, and renowne, as none may be comparable thereunto. And though hee could not conquere the ſame, and ſhould ende his life in the action, yet ſhould he alwayes remaine immortall with this glory. And if God doth not cut him off, it is thought verily, that hee will throughly attempt the ſame. And for his more ſecure paſſage thither, he is determined to leaue behinde him two Gouernours (after his maner) in the parts of Miacó with the adminiſtration of Finqua; and of thoſe of his Monarchie he ſaith that he will take with him all the great Iaponiſh Lords, or at the leaſt all his principall ſubiects, and leaue in his dominions ſuch guard and gariſons as ſhall ſeeme beſt vnto him. And ſo hauing paſſed the winter, he meaneth to come to theſe partes of Ximo, for from hence he is to ſet forth his armie, & to paſſe to the land of Coray, which the Portugales call Coria, being deuided from Iapan with an arme of the ſea. And although the Portugales in times paſt thought, that it was an Ile or Peninſula, yet is it firme lande, which ioyneth vnto the kingdome of Paquí. And he hath now ſtricken ſuch a terror with his name in the countrey of Coray, that the king thereof hath ſent his ambaſſadors hither to yeelde vnto him a kind of homage, as he required; which ambaſſadors are now in the city of Miacó. And by this Peninſula of Coray he may paſſe with his army by land in fewe dayes iourney vnto the citie of Paquí, being the principall citie where the king of China hath his reſidence. And as the Chinians be weake, and the people of Iapan ſo valiant and feared of them, if God doth not cut him off in this expedition, it may fall out according to his expectation.

Ximo.

Coray continẽt land with Paqui.

From Coray an armie may paſſe by land in fewe dayes to Paqui the chiefe citie of China.

But whatſoeuer become of China, it is held for a certaintie, that his comming will cauſe great alterations in theſe partes of Ximo, eſpecially in this kingdom of Figen, wherein are the princedomes of Arima and Omura, and all the force of our Chriſtianitie: and he told Don Protaſio when he was with him once before, that he would make him a great man in China, and that he would remooue theſe lordes, and deliuer their gouernments vnto lordes that were Gentiles; which would be the ruine of all this Chriſtianitie; neither ſhould we haue any place wherein to remaine. For, as it is the cuſtome of Iapan in the alterations of eſtates and kingdomes (which they call Cuningaia) to remooue all the nobilitie and gentry, and to leaue onely the baſe people and labourers, committing them to the gouernment of Ethnicks, wee ſhall hereby alſo leeſe our houſes, and the Chriſtians ſhall be diſperſed with their lords; whom ſometimes he handleth in ſuch ſort, that he giueth them nothing to ſuſteine themſelues, and ſo they remaine with all their followers, as men baniſhed, and vtterly ruined.

The ſecond Teſtimonie containing the huge leuies and preparations of Quabacondono, as alſo his warres and conqueſts, and the ſucceſſe thereof in the kingdome of Coray. Together with a deſcription of the ſame kingdom, and of their trafficke and maner of gouernment: and alſo of the ſhipping of China, Iapan, and Coray, with mention of certaine iſles thereunto adjacent, and other particulars very memorable. Out of the Epiſtles of the aforeſaid Father Fryer Luis Frois dated 1591, and 1592.

ABout this time Quabacondono determining to put his warre againſt China in execution, aſſembled ſundry of his nobles and captaines, vnto whom he declared his intent: who, albeit they were all of a quite contrary opinion, yet all of them without any pretenſe of difficulty approued his determination. For he had giuen out that he would not abſtaine from this warre, although his owne ſonne ſhould riſe from death to life and requeſt him; yea whoſoeuer would mooue any impediment or difficulty in that matter, hee would put him to death. Wherefore for certaine moneths there was nothing in all places to be ſeene, but prouiſion of ſhips, armour, munition, and other neceſſaries for the warres. Quabacondono making a catalogue of all the lordes and nobles his ſubiects, willed euery one of them (not a man excepted) to accompany him in this expedition, inioyning and appointing to each one, what numbers they ſhould bring. In all theſe kingdomes of Xuno he hath nominated 4 of his eſpeciall fauourites; whom (to all mens admiration) he will haue to be heads ouer all theſe new kingdomes, notwithſtanding that here are 4 others farre more mighty then they. Of whom (by Gods good prouidence) two are Chriſtians, to wit, Auguſtine Eucunocamindono gouernour of half the kingdom of Finga, & Cainocami the ſon of Quambioindono gouernour of the greater part of the kingdome of Bugen. The other two are Ethniques, namely Toranoſuque gouernour of the halfe of the kingdom of Finga and Auguſtins mortall enemie; and Iconocami gouernour of the reſidue of the kingdome of Bugen, and an enemie both to Auguſtine and Cainocami. And Quabacondono hath commanded all the Chriſtian lordes of Teximo to follow Chriſtian gouernours. Whereupon the lord Protaſius was there with 2000 ſouldiers; & Omurandono the lord of Ceuxima and Auguſtins ſonne in law, which lately became a Chriſtian, with a thouſand. Alſo he appointed that the gouernours of Firando and Goto ſhould follow Auguſtine, who albeit they were Gentiles, had many Chriſtians to their ſubiects. Wherefore Auguſtine was to conduct 15000 ſouldiers, beſides mariners, ſlaues, and other baſe people to cary the baggage of the army, all which being as great a number as the former, ſo ſoone as they arriued in the kingdom of Coray, were made ſouldiers, and bore armes. Vnto the ſaid Auguſtine, Quabacondono, in token of ſingular fauour, granted the firſt aſſault or inuaſion of the kingdome of Coray, to wit, that he onely with his forces might enter the ſame, the other lordes remaining in Ceuxima (which is 18 leagues diſtant from Coray) till they ſhould bee aduertized from Auguſtine: which thing procured vnto Auguſtine great enuie and diſdaine from them all; howbeit (as you ſhall forthwith vnderſtand) it prooued in the end moſt honourable vnto him. The other Chriſtian gouernour Cainocami being but a yong man of 23 yeeres, he commanded the king of Bungo to follow with 6000 ſouldiers; ſo that with the 4000 which hee had before, his number amounted vnto 10000, beſides mariners and others which caried burthens. This was muſt ioyfull newes to vs, and to all the Chriſtians. Of the Ethnick lords Quabacondono appointed the gouernour of Rioſogo together with Foranoſuque to march with 8000: and likewiſe the king of Saçeuma and Iconocami with as many. And amongſt all he gaue the firſt and chiefe place vnto Auguſtine. All the other ſouldiers of Iapan hee cauſed to accompanie his owne perſon: the number of all together (as appeared out of a written catalogue) amounting to three hundreth thouſand perſons; of whom two hundred thouſand were ſouldiers.

A deſcription of Coray.

The order preſcribed in this whole armie was, that firſt they ſhould make their entrance by the kingdome of Coray, which is almoſt an iſland, one ende whereof ioyneth vpon the maine lande of China; which though it be a ſeuerall kingdome of it ſelfe, yet is it ſubiect and tributarie vnto the king of China. And becauſe this kingdom of Coray is diuided but by an arme of the ſea frō Iapan, Quabacondono determined to ſubdue the ſame, for that it ſo aboundeth with victuals, that from thence he might the eaſilier inuade China. While all things were preparing, it was commanded, that at the chief port of Ximo called Nangoia, being twelue leagues diſtant from Firando, there ſhould be erected a mightie great caſtle; where Quabacondono with all his fleet was minded to ſtay, till newes were brought of the ſucceſſe of the aforeſaid 4 gouernours or captaines. Hee appointed alſo another caſtle to bee built in Fuchinoxima, which is another iſland ſituate betweene Nangoia and Ceuxima. And he built a third caſtle in Ceuxima, that his paſſage might be the more commodious. The charge of building theſe caſtles he impoſed vpon the 4 aforeſaid gouernours, and commanded the other lords of Ximo their aſſociates to aſſiſt them; all which ſo applyed that buſines, that in 6 moneths ſpace it was wholly finiſhed. The caſtle of Nangoia was enuironed with a double wall of ſquare and beautifull ſtone, with broad and deepe ditches like vnto Miacó. The innermoſt wall being leſſe then the other two was 100 fathom ſquare, within the compaſſe whereof wer ſo many houſes built both for the lordes, and their followers, and alſo for marchants ſhoppes, and victualers houſes, diſtinguiſhed with broad and direct ſtreetes, that it ſeemed a faire towne. But (that which was much more admirable) all the way from Miacó to Nangoia, at the ende of euery dayes iourney, all the lords and gouernours, at the commandement of Quabacondono, built each one within his iuriſdiction new and ſtately palaces from the ground, ſo that for 20 dayes together he lodged euery night with all his traine in one of thoſe palaces. And becauſe theſe things were done at the very ſame time when the expedition into the kingdome of Coray was in hand, all Iapan was ſo grieuouſly oppreſſed (Quabacondono in the meane while being at no charges) as it was moſt intollerable. Yet is it incredible how ready euery one is to do him ſeruice: which appeareth by theſe magnificent ſtately buildings reared vp in ſo ſhort a ſpace, which in Europe would haue required a long time and huge expences. In the meane ſeaſon it was commonly giuen out, that this enterprize of Quabacondono would haue moſt vnfortunate ſucceſſe, as being a matter wrought by conſtraint, and that it would be an occaſion of manifold diſſentions in Iapan: for no man there was, but miſliked of this warre: yea, all the lordes were in great hope, that ſome one man at length would ſtep foorth and reſtore their libertie; howbeit there is none as yet found, which dare put his had to that buſineſſe. Wherefore they were all (though to their great griefe and lamentation) violently conſtrained to proſecute the enterprize. But Quabacondono being voyde of all anxiety, to the ende hee might encourage his followers, boaſted that hee would make great alterations of kingdomes, and would beſtow vpon them the kingdoms of Coray and China; and vnto the lord Protaſius hee hath promiſed 3 kingdomes: but he with all the other lords giuing him great thankes, had much rather retaine a ſmal portion of their eſtate in Iapan, then to hunt after all thoſe kingdomes which he promiſeth.

And whereas Quabacondono had by proclamation publiſhed, that he would perſonally be preſent at Nangoia the 3 moone of this yeere; troups and armies of men began to reſort from all the quarters of Iapan to theſe parts. Now were our afflictions renewed. For ſo long as Quabacondono remained at Miacó, we might ſtay in theſe parts of Ximo without any danger: but after he began to come this way, it ſeemed impoſſible for our ſtate to continue whole and ſound, and we were put into no ſmall perplexitie. For the Chriſtian lordes aduiſed vs, that ſithence Quabacondono was come ſo neere, all our companie that liued in the Colledge, in the houſe of Probation, and in the Seminary, ſhould depart to ſome other place. And the Chriſtians from Miacó writ dayly vnto vs, that wee ſhoulde pull downe our houſes and Churches at Omura, Arima, and Canſaco, and that the fathers of Europe ſhould returne vnto Nangaſaque in the ſecular habite of Portugals, but that the Iaponian Fryers ſhould retire themſelues vnto ſeueral houſes of Chriſtians, that ſo they might al remaine ſafe and out of danger. But this remedy, as it was too grieuous and ſubiect to may difficulties, ſo did it afford vs but ſmall comfort. In brief the Father viſitor talking of this matter with Eucunocamindono, the lord Protaſius, and Omurandono, before their expedition toward the kingdom of Coray, found them, as before, in the ſame fortitude of minde, being conſtant in their firſt opinion: neither would they giue any other counſel or direction, then that the fathers ſhould keepe themſelues ſecret, and ſhould only forſake their houſes at Arima, and Omura, wherein the Toni or great lordes would haue ſome of their kinſemen remaine. It was alſo thought conuenient, that the number of the Seminary ſhould bee diminiſhed, and that of 90 there ſhould onely remaine 50 in our ſcholes, namely ſuch as ſtudied the Latine tongue. With the Father ther Viſitour there came vnto Nangaſaque certaine Fathers and Friers, which were ſaid to be of Fungo and Firando. For the ſayde Father vnder the name of a Legate might retaine them with him more openly.

About this time Quabacondono, that hee might with ſome paſtime recreate his Nobles which accompanied him; and alſo might declare, with how great confidence and ſecuritie of minde hee tooke vpon him this expedition for China; and likewiſe to obſcure the moſt renowmed fame of a certaine hunting and hawking performed of olde by that mightie Prince Ioritono, who was Emperour ouer all Iapan; hee determined to ordaine (as it were) another royall court of diuers kindes of fowle. Whereupon beeing accompanied with many great lordes and others, hee departed to the kingdome of Oiaren, where his game had ſo good ſucceſſe, that hee caught aboue 30000. fowles of all ſortes; amongſt which were many falcons. Howbeit, for Quabacondono his great recreation, and for the more ſolemnitie of the game, there were alſo added many dead fowles, which the Iaponians with certaine poulders or compoſitions know how to preſerue ſweete in their feathers a long time. This game beeing ended, Quabacondono returned with great pompe vnto Miacó: before whom went great multitudes which carried thoſe thouſandes of fowles vpon guilded canes. Next after theſe followed many horſemen ſumptuouſly attired, carying a great number of Falcons and other birdes. After them were lead many horſes by the reines, moſt richly trapped. Next of all were brought Coſcis or Litters very ſtately adorned: after which was carryed Quabacondono himſelfe in a Littier of another faſhion, like vnto thoſe which in India are called Palanchins, which was made in China, with moſt curious and ſingular workemanſhip, and was preſented vnto him by the Father Viſitour, and ſeemeth exceedingly to content him, for that in all actions of ſolemnitie hee vſeth the ſame. Laſt of all followed a great troope of Princes and Nobles brauely mounted on horſebacke, and gorgeouſly attired, thereby the more to delight Quabacondono, who in triumphant ſort beeing welcomed by the way, with the ſhoute and applauſe of infinite ſwarmes of people, entred the citie of Miacó.

A meane to keepe dead birds ſweete in their feathers a long time.

Now when the time of ſayling towardes China approched, Quabacondono determined firſt to proclayme his nephew Inangondono his ſucceſſour, and gouernour of all Iapan, to the ende hee might ſupply his owne roome in the time of this warre. And therefore he commanded the Dairi to tranſferre vnto his ſayd nephew the dignitie belonging to himſelfe, calling him by the name of Taicuſama, that is to ſay, Great lord. Which dignitie was in ſuch ſort tranſlated, that albeit he aſſigned vnto his nephew large reuenues, together with that princely title, yet himſelfe remained the very ſame that he was before. The day of the ſayd tranſlation being appointed, hee ſummoned all the Princes of Iapan to appeare, and to ſweare obedience vnto this his nephew: Who with great pompe going vnto the Dairi to receiue that dignitie at his hande, had ſurrendred vnto him the Caſtle of Miacó, and the palaces of Quabacondono to dwell in.

Thus at the beginning of the third moone, he ſet forward on his iourney to Nangoia, hauing before giuen order, that Auguſtine ſhould paſſe ouer into the kingdome of Coray, and that his other Captaines ſhould remayne in Ceuxima. Wherefore, the twentieth day of the third Moone hee came vnto Nangoia, where the companies of the other lordes beeing numbered, were founde to bee 200000. perſons, beſides thoſe that were conducted by the foure foreſayde gouernours. In the meane ſeaſon Auguſtine with his forces, and with a Fleete of eight hundred Ships, arriued at Coray. In whoſe armie the lord Protaſius excelled all others; for though hee had but the leading of 2000. ſouldiers, yet for the goodneſſe of his armour, and the beautie of his ſhips, he was admired of all men. At their very firſt entrance they wonne 2. caſtles of the kingdome of Coray by maine force, wherein the Corayans repoſed great confidence; for they were enuironed with mighty high walles, and defended with great multitudes of ſouldiers, and with a kinde of gunnes of 2. ſpannes and ½. long, which in ſtead of bullets diſcharged with a terrible noiſe woodden arrowes headed with forked points of yron: but the ſayd gunnes beeing able to hurt but a ſmall diſtance off, and the Iaponians being furniſhed with brazen ordinance vnknowen vnto the Corayans, they preſently draue them from their walles, and with ladders made for the ſame purpoſe of great canes, they forthwith ſcaled the ſame, and planted their enſignes thereon; the Corayans indeed for a ſhort time making reſiſtance, but after a while betaking themſelues to diſhonorable flight, 5000 men of their part being ſlaine, and of Auguſtines but 100. and 400. wounded. Auguſtine perceiuing that the Corayans could not endure any long aſſault, determined to take vpon himſelfe, and his armie the whole burthen and honour of this warre, and not ſtaying for the gouernours his aſſociates, to march vp into the heart of the kingdome, and to the principall City; vnto which determination all the lordes that were with him gaue their conſent. This was (no doubt) a bolde, yea, and in ſome ſort, a raſh enterpriſe of Auguſtine: but yet it argueth a wiſe and valiant minde in him. But this long delay was ſo greeuous to the Captaines which in Ceuxima expected the ſucceſſe of the warre, that before they heard any newes at all concerning the ſurprize of the two Caſtles, they brought Auguſtine in ſuſpition among their friends, that hee ambitiouſly affected the honour of the whole warre. Which thing beeing knowen vnto Quabacondono, he was ſo troubled in mind euen before he came to Nangoia, that ſuddenly hee commaunded the other Captaines to ſet ſayle from Ceuxima. But when Quabacondono was come to Nangoia, and heard newes of the two Caſtles taken, and that Auguſtine purſuing the victorie proceeded on towards the Miacó, that is to ſay, The kingly citie of Coray, and was determined to inuade the ſame alſo (all which Auguſtine himſelfe wrote, and requeſted him to ſend the other captaines and commanders to aſſayle the kingdom on all ſides, and to furniſh the caſtles which he had taken and ſhould take, with gariſons of ſouldiers, becauſe as yet he had not men enough to hold thoſe fortreſſes which he had wonne) he was ſurprized with ſuch vnſpeakable ioy, as he affirmed openly, that in all Iapan he had no ſubiect comparable to Auguſtine: and that neither Nabunanga, nor himſelfe euer knewe any man indued with ſo valiant and couragious a mind. I (ſaith he) knowing againſt whom and with what forces I waged warre, ſubdued by litle and litle all Iapan vnto me: but Auguſtine in ſo ſhort a time and with ſo ſmall forces, hath boldely ſet his foote in a forren region, and with moſt glorious victory hath ſubdued the mightie kingdome of Coray. Wherefore (quoth he) I will reward him with many kingdomes, and wil make him next vnto my ſelfe the greateſt Prince in all Iapan. Hee added farther, that now his owne ſonne ſeemed to bee riſen from the death; and that whoſoeuer durſt either diſgrace or extenuate the deedes of Auguſtine, he would grieuouſly puniſh him, not reſpecting whether hee did it vpon reaſon or malice. By this ſpeach the name and report of Auguſtine grew ſo honourable amongſt all men, that thoſe which moſt enuied his eſtate, durſt not ſpeake one ill worde of him, but highly commended him before Quabacondono.

The length and bredth of Coray.

This kingdome of Coray extendeth in length about 100. and in bredth 60. leagues. And albeit the inhabitants in nation, language, and ſtrength of body (which maketh the people of China to dread them) be different from the Chinians, yet becauſe they pay tribute to the king of China, and exerciſe traffique with his ſubiects, they doe after a ſort imitate the Lawes, apparell, cuſtomes, and gouernement of the Chinians. They border on one ſide vpon the Tartars, and other nations, with whom ſometimes they haue peace, and ſometimes warre: but with the Chinians they haue continuall peace. They are ſpeciall good bow-men; but at other weapons, becauſe they haue but few, and thoſe bad, they are nothing ſo ſkilfull. Wherefore they are not comparable to the Iaponians, who by reaſon of their warres are continually exerciſed in armes, and are by nature more couragious and valiant, being furniſhed with yron-peeces, with lances, and with excellent ſwordes. Onely in ſhipping they are inferiour to the Corayans and Chinians, by reaſon of the hugeneſſe of their Ships which they vſe vpon the ſea. Wherefore, if they were to ioyne battels by ſea, there is no doubt but that both the foreſayde Nations would be too hard for them. But now becauſe they knewe nothing of the comming of the Iaponian armie, or for that they doubted that their ſea-forces were the ſtronger, or els becauſe God was determined to puniſh them, he ſuffered them to be deſtitute of all the defence of their ſhipping, ſo that the Iaponians without any reſiſtance landed vpon their dominions.

The people of Coray and China ſtronger in ſhipping, then they of Iapan.

Now the fame of Auguſtines victory cauſing the armie notably to increaſe, and the Mariners, and many others which caryed burthens (as they were trained vp in warre from their childhood) bearing armes, while the Corayan captiues ſupplied their baſer offices: ſo great a terrour poſſeſſed all the people of Coray where Auguſtine came, that all the caſtles and fortreſſes which hee paſſed by were forſaken by their gariſons, and all men fled for refuge to the principall city. And while other commanders and Chriſtians ſent from Ceuxima and Nangoia ſhaped their courſe for Coray, Auguſtine had pitched his campe neere vnto the foreſaid principall citie: of the which being come within 3. dayes iourney, he was encountred by 20000. men; whom at the very firſt aſſault, hauing ſlaine 3000. of them, hee put to flight. But approching very neere vnto the citie, and hauing paſſed a riuer, hee maintained a valiant conflict at a certaine narrow paſſage againſt 80000. Corayans, 8000. whereof were ſlaine, and a great number drowned in the riuer. Heere while Auguſtine appointed all his troopes to remayne for two dayes, to the end they might ſomewhat refreſh their wearie limmes, the king of Coray ſeeing himſelfe beſieged by his enemie, and that many other Iaponian lordes with ſtrong armies inuaded his kingdome on all ſides, determined to haue his citie ſtrengthened with gariſons, and to retire himſelfe into the in-land of China.

The king of Coray fleeth out of his principall citie.

China. Which by reaſon of the abundance of horſes that he had, he was able right commodiouſly to performe. Whereupon the ſecond or third day after, Auguſtine without any reſiſtance entred the head-citie, being preſented with great ſtore of victuals and gifts by them that remained therein. Thus Auguſtine, with other captaines his aſſociates, became lord of the principall citie, and wonne all the honour of the victory vnto himſelfe: for albeit by this time the other captaines were come from Ceuxima, and many from Nangoia, yet they found all things performed to their hands.

Quabacondono being aduertiſed of this ſecond victory, yeelded as much honour vnto Auguſtine as he could poſſibly deuiſe, ſpeaking ſo highly to the commendation both of him, and of other Captaines his aſſociates, aa if but the tenth part of his faire promiſes come to effect, they ſhall be farre greater then they are, and Auguſtine (next vnto himſelfe) ſhall be the principall perſon in all Iapan. And now he is become ſo famous in the Court, and throughout the whole kingdome of Iapan, that at all their meetings and aſſemblies there is no talke but onely of the valour and fortitude of Auguſtine, who in twentie dayes ſpace hath ſubdued ſo mightie a kingdome to the Crowne of Iapan. And all the Nobles account him a moſt happy man, being aſtoniſhed at the immortall renowme which he hath attained vnto by this exploite: yea, and Quabacondono ſent forthwith vnto him, as vnto the conquerour and vanquiſher of the Corayans, in token of great honour, a two-edged ſword and a horſe, which among the Iaponians is a pledge of the moſt peereleſſe honour that can poſſibly be done to a man: and this very gift did Nabunanga in times paſt ſend vnto Quabacondono, when hee had in any battel wonne any kingdome from Morindono. And by this great euent the power of the Chriſtians God, and his prouidence towards his children is knowen not onely to the Chriſtians, but euen to the very Ethnicks themſelues, for that in the heate of ſuch extreme perſecution it hath pleaſed his diuine Maieſtie to lay the honour of all this warre vpon Chriſtian lords. Wherefore we doubt not, but they wil proue more mighty and famous then euer they were.

Hence it commeth to paſſe that the Portugals ſhip come from China, hath wintered in Iapan: by which occaſion the preſence of the father Viſitour hath bene a great comfort not onely to vs, but to all the other Chriſtians, who in regarde of the departure of ſo many men with Quabacondono and his captaines to the warres, thought they ſhould haue bene left vtterly forſaken and deſtitute, had not the father Viſitour, in whom they repoſed all their confidence, remayned here. But the ſingular prouidence and loue of God towards vs appeared in this, that hee would haue the ſayd Ship, contrary to their vſuall cuſtome, to winter in Iapan. For when Quabacondono hauing obteined that victorie, was determined to returne vnto Ximo, they were all ſhrowded vnder the protection of the foreſayd Father; who hearing that hee was entred into Nangoia, cauſed Frier Iohn Rodorigues and the gouernour of the Portugal ſhip to ſalute and welcome him. For the Chriſtians of Miacó, which ſucceeded in their roomes that went for Coray, aduiſed him in their letters ſo to doe.

And it was very acceptable to Quabacondono to ſee the Portugals captaine General attended vpon by ſo many Portugals ſumptuouſly attired, and comming with ſo many ſhippes in the company of Frier Iohn Rodoriguez: and hee aſked the Frier how the father Viſitour did? And whether the preſents to the Vice-roy liked him? As alſo, that hee tooke it in very good part that the Father had wintered in Iapan, and that the Frier ſhould ſtay with him. Afterward writing an anſwere to the father, he declared therin the great fauour which he bore to the captaine of the ſhip. Whom, hauing familiarly entertained him for the ſpace of 2. houres, hee diſmiſſed with euident tokens of good will. After the Captaines returne, Frier Rodoriguez ſtaying behinde aboue a moneth, attempted very often to ſpeake with Quabacondono, of whom hee was alwayes moſt kindly vſed. Afterward by reaſon of ſickneſſe hee returned to Nangaſaque; whereupon Quabacondono demaunded why he was not cured at the ſame place where himſelfe remained? Iacuino anſwered, that beeing a ſtranger, hee was to bee cured with ſuch diet and medicines, as were not there to bee had: with which anſwere hee was ſatiſfied. Hence it is, that by often conferences which were made by reaſon of the ambaſſage, Quabacondono waxeth euery day more courteous and affable. And yet for all this, new occaſions of troubles and afflictions are not cut off: for certaine it is, that Quabacondono hath giuen out, that if he haue good ſucceſſe with his warre againſt China, he will make great alterations of eſtates, in aſſigning the kingdomes of Coray and China to the Chriſtian princes, and placing in their roomes Ethnick lordes throughout Iapan: which thing might redound to the ruine and deſtruction of all Chriſtianitie heere, neither ſhould the Chriſtians finde in Iapan any place of refuge. And albeit Auguſtine had certainly informed the father Viſitour of the ſayde alteration of eſtates, and Iacuine had written vnto Auguſtine, that Quabacondono had fully determined to alter the ſtates or gouernments of Ximo, and ſo conſequently the ſtate of Auguſtine, and of the Chriſtian princes of Arima and Omura; yea, and that the ſaid two princes had notice thereof: yet almightie God with the eyes of his infinite mercy hath vouchſafed to regard the prayers of his faithfull ſeruants (who for this cauſe were moſt perplexed and ſorowfull) and to prouide this remedie following.

The Corayans hauing intelligence, that their king and the forces which hee caried with him were in ſafety, went the greateſt part of them, with as much victuals as they could get, and hidde themſelues in the mountains and woods, remaining there with ſuch hate and indignation againſt the Iaponians, that with promiſe of ſafe conduct they could by no meanes be drawen out of their ſtarting holes. Wherefore albeit the Iaponians haue all the caſtles and places of defence in their owne poſſeſſion, yet becauſe they want people to tille the ground, and to doe them other neceſſary ſeruices, they cannot chuſe but forgoe all that which they haue woon. Moreouer, the common high wayes are ſo peſtered with theeues and murtherers, that vnleſſe the Iaponians march in whole troopes all together, they are ſuddenly oppreſſed with ſwarmes of Corayans iſſuing foorth of the woods. Many of the Corayans alſo haue retired themſelues vnto the neighbour-iſlands, from whence with numbers of great ſhips, to the mighty loſſe of the Iaponians, they aſſaile their ſmall and weake ones, and haue already ſunke many of them. Wherefore all the Iaponian lords which remaine in Coray haue written vnto Quabacondono, that his army muſt for a certaine time in no wiſe remooue from the place where it is, for auoyding of ſuch imminent dangers as in proceeding further it may incurre. Vpon theſe aduertiſements Quabacondono being ready to take his iourney to Coray, to diuide the whole kingdome, was hindred from his purpoſe, and ſent moſt friendly letters to all his nobles, willing them to be of good cheere, for that he would not deale about altering of their eſtates, till 3. yeres were expired: whereupon they were eaſed of exceeding great care and griefe. For albeit there is no great truſt to be giuen to his words, yet we hope that this yere he wil not meddle: what he wil doe afterward, God knoweth. In Coray at this preſent there are aboue 200000. Iaponian ſouldiers, who at the commandement of Quabacondono are diuided throughout the whole kingdom. Auguſtine lieth vpon the very extreame frontiers of China: but becauſe the Chinians are ſeparated from the kingdome of Coray with a mighty riuer of 3. leagues broad, and abound with great ſhips, and haue planted innumerable troopes of men vpon the ſhore, the ſucceſſe of the warre remayneth moſt doubtfull and vncertaine. Neither doe wee know whether the Iaponians will proceede any farther this yeere or no.

The third teſtimony of Coray, ſignifying (amongſt other notable and politicall obſeruations) the later ſucceſſe of the warres of Iapan againſt Coray; and to what end Quabacondono ſtill mainteineth gariſons in that kingdome. Out of the Epiſtles of Father Organtino Brixiano, bearing date from Iapan Anno 1594.

THe whole Empire of Iapan is now in the handes of this king Quabacondono: and (which hath not bene knowen ſince the firſt creation thereof) there is not the bredth of one foote throughout all the whole Iſland, which is not abſolutely ſubiect vnto him. And hee reigneth in ſo great peace and tranquilitie, that if his ſucceſſors follow the ſame courſe of gouernment, there is no likelihood of future ſedition or perturbation in any of the kingdoms. And doubtles the meanes which he vſeth to eſtabliſh continuall peace and concord among the Iaponians, are very great and effectuall.

One is, that after he hath paſſed his publique promiſe, he neuer putteth any of his aduerſaries to death, which his predeceſſour Nabunanga performed not: for he hauing ſubdued any kingdom, would put all the lords and gouernours to the ſword. But this king granteth vnto them not only life, but alſo yerely reuenues, whereby to maintaine themſelues in an honeſt and meane eſtate: in which regarde they all reſt contented, and willingly ſubmit themſelues.

Another is, in that he hath brought the huſbandmen and peſants (by whoſe aſſiſtance & wealth all the pety-kingdoms were after a ſort ſuſteined) vnto ſuch extreme pouerty, that they haue ſcarce wherewithall to keepe life and ſoule together: as likewiſe hee hath bereaued them of all kinde of weapons.

The third is, becauſe hee hath moſt ſtreightly forbidden all contentions, ſeditions, frayes, and ſkirmiſhes. For whoſoeuer be found culpable of this crime, they vpe euery man of them on both parties. If any eſcape by flight, their kinſefolks are puniſhed in their ſtead; and for lacke of them, their ſeruants; and for defalt of both, their next neighbours. If many were guilty, many are puniſhed ſhed and ſuffer death: but hence it commeth to paſſe, that many innocent perſons are conſtrained to die. And this ſecuritie is the cauſe, why there are at this preſent ſo ſeldome frayes and contentions in Iapan.

The fourth is, that in adminiſtring of iuſtice hee is moſt vpright, without all reſpect either to his owne kinred, or to his ancient captaines, or the blood royall, or any of the Bonzij, bee they neuer ſo famous: and being once aduertized of a crime, hee pardoneth no man. And albeit himſelfe is exceedingly addicted to women, yet will he permit none of his ſubiects to haue any concubines. For which cauſe not many dayes agoe, hee baniſhed a Bonzio of great wealth, being in alliance and dignitie moſt neere vnto himſelfe. And being informed that all the Bonzij of Miacó kept concubines, hee would haue put them all to death, had not the gouernour of Miacó promiſed, that hee would vndertake to keepe them from offending any more in that kinde. Wherefore hee cauſed all the Bonzij euery moneth to bee ſworne, that they ſhould liue honeſtly vpon paine of death: as alſo hee hath ſworne the heads or ſuperiors of all their religious houſes vnder paine of death, to giue vp their names whom they moſt ſuſpect of the foreſayd crime. Hence it is, that all of them (if you regard their outward eſtate) liue in extreme feare.

The fift is, for that hee ſuffereth none of his ſouldiers, nor his great lordes to liue in idleneſſe. If there be no warres for their imployment, hee occupieth them in building of ſtately palaces, and in raiſing new fortreſſes, or in repairing and ſtrengthening of olde, and alſo in performing other notable workes, to the ornament of Iapan, and to his owne laſting honour. So that at this preſent neere vnto Miacó there are thirtie thouſand men imployed about the building of one caſtle; and in the citie of Bozacca aboue an hundred thouſand: which imployments afforde them neither place nor time to practiſe any rebellions.

The ſixt is his altering of gouernments: for hee remooueth his gouernours from one extreme part of Iapan to another.

The ſeuenth, for that vnto his ſouldiers (beſides the ordinarie pay continually allotted vnto them for their ſeruice) in time of warre hee alloweth victuals at his owne coſtes. Wherof it commeth to paſſe, that hee effecteth whatſoeuer hee thinkes good by their meanes. Neither hath hee hitherto waged any warre, wherein his enemie was not vanquiſhed, according to his owne deſire: this late warre of China onely excepted, which farre ſurmounted all his forces. Howbeit in the kingdome of Coray hee maintaineth as yet great garriſons, as well to keepe his honour, as to conſtraine the Chinians to ſue for peace.

The warre of Iapan againſt Coray and China.

The eighth is, in that hee curbeth and reſtraineth perſons of ambitious and aſpiring mindes, who (as hee coniectureth) after his death might worke ſome innouations in the common wealth, or diſturbe the kingdomes.

The ninth is, becauſe hee hath on no ſide within foure or fiue dayes iourney of Miacó, any mightie or induſtrious captaine or gouernour.

The tenth and laſt is, for that hee hath brought his yeerely reuenues to two millions of golde.

By theſe courſes and meanes, wee are in good hope that firme peace will bee eſtabliſhed in all theſe kingdomes, and alſo that a fit way will be prepared, for the conuerſion of all the great lordes vnto Chriſtian religion.

A briefe note concerning an extreme Northerne prouince of Iapan called Zuegara, ſituate thirtie dayes iourney from Miacó, which argueth the Iſle of Iapan to be of greater extenſion Northward, then it is ordinarily deſcribed in maps, or ſuppoſed to be: together with mention of a certaine nation of Tartars called Iezi inhabiting on the maine to the North of China, neuer heard of in theſe parts before: taken out of an Epiſtle written 1596 from Iapan by Fryer Luis Frois vnto Claudius Aquauiua, &c, Printed in Latine at Mentz in Germanie 1599.

NOt many dayes ago was baptized a certaine honourable perſonage called Iohn Vongui the ſonne of Taigarandono, who is gouernour of a certaine princedome ſituate on the borders of Iapan towardes the North, being diſtant from Miacó thirtie dayes iourney.

And after a fewe lines it followeth.

This Taigorandono being the moſt Northerly gouernour in all Iapan hath traffique with the Iezi, who are a nation of Tartars, which from the maine continent reſort vnto the Iſle of Mateumai, being about twelue or fifteene leagues diſtant from the foreſayd Northerly princedome of Zuegara; where they ſell fiſhes, the ſkinnes of beaſts, and certaine herbes of the Theſe Tartars (they ſay) are a moſt barbarous kinde of people, of a browne colour, with long haire on their heads and beardes like the Moſcouites: they liue by hunting and fiſhing, and neglect husbandry. This Northerly princedome of Zuegara (as the ſayd gouernour reported to our Fathers) aboundeth with excellent grapes both black and white, which without the labour of man grow naturally in all places, and he promiſed the Fathers to bring ſome of theſe vines to Miacó, that they might be planted there.

YOur Pilot muſt be examined in the Contractation houſe, and allowed by ſuch as be appointed for the examination of Pilots, that hee be a ſufficient man to take the charge in hand, and that which belongeth thereunto, and to gouerne and lead the ſame ſhip directly by his onely commandement to ſuch ports as are conuenient for the voyage that hee taketh in hand.

The Maſter.

You muſt haue a Maſter, that muſt giue in ſureties to the value of 6000 dukats: and ſuch as be his ſureties muſt be landed men, and their lands worth to the value of that ſumme aforeſayd, if the ſayd ſhip be betweene three or foure hundred tunnes. And if ſhee be more or leſſe of burthen, then he muſt giue ſureties of a greater ſumme or leſſe, according to the proportion of her burden.

He ſhall in all his voyage giue a iuſt and true accompt of all ſuch goods, and marchandizes, as ſhall in all that voyage come into the ſhip: as alſo of ſuch plate and money, as ſhalbe regiſtred in the Kings Regiſter, appertayning to the King, or any other particuler marchant: and if any default be, hee or his ſureties are to pay all ſuch loſſes as thereof ſhall growe: as alſo to ſee the mariners payed well and truely, the third part of all ſuch fraights, as the ſayde ſhippe ſhall get going and comming.

The Purſer.

The ſhip being fraighted by her merchants, the Maſter ſhall take order that there be ſufficient mariners abourd her to take in ſuch lading from time to time, as the marchant ſhall ſend to her: And alſo the Purſer muſt be a man ſufficient of abilitie to take, & to giue account of all ſuch goods, marchandize, ſiluer and golde, as ſhall come in and out of the ſayd ſhippe that preſent voyage, as alſo giue ſureties of 1500 dukats at the leaſt to come backe from the Indies in the ſaid ſhippe, and not to tarrie there, if hee liue.

A Romager.

The Maſter muſt prouide a perfect mariner called a Romager, to raunge, and beſtow all marchandize in ſuch place as is conuenient: and that it be not put in place, where it may periſh for lack that it be not faſt, ſure, and drie, according to the qualitie and forme of the ſayd marchandize.

The Maſters mate.

When it is all beſtowed, and the ſhippe able to beare no more, then a mariner called the Contermaſter, or Maſters mate, hath charge to locke faſt the hatches, that none of the marchants wines, or oyles, or any other kind of marchandize be robbed or ſpoyled by the mariners. And if it fortune that any bee ſo ſpoyled, then the mariners are to pay for it out of the third part of all the whole fraight of the ſhippe that doth appertaine to the ſayd marchants.

The chiefe Iudges of the Contractation houſe.

Viſitors being ſkilfull mariners.

The names and markes of men taken.

The ſhippe being laden, goeth to the port wherehence ſhe ſaileth to goe towards the Indies called S. Lucar, and there one of the chiefe Iudges of the Contractation houſe commeth downe to diſpatch the ſhippes that goe together in that fleete. And that Iudge goeth abourd euery ſhip, and with him hee doth carrie an expert mariner or two called Viſitors of the ſhippes, to know whether the ſayd ſhippe or ſhips be well tackled: whether they haue men ſufficient: and in euery ſhip euery mans name is taken, and if he haue any marke in the face, or hand or arme, it is written by a Notarie (as well as his name) appertaining to the Contractation houſe, appointed for theſe cauſes. Alſo the Maſter is bound to bring backe euery mariner againe, and to leaue none behinde him there, vpon great paines, vnleſſe he be a paſſenger appointed by the King at the court, and bringeth his licence from thence for the ſame purpoſe.

The Pragmatices or orders of the Contractation houſe.

The ſhip muſt be well appointed with ordinance of braſſe, and yron, according to The orders of their houſe, of that there muſt want nothing, and euery ſhip is appointed according to her burthen in all kinde of artillerie, as peeces of braſſe and yron, hand-guns, croſbowes, pikes, ſwords, daggers, targets, and for all ordinance double ſhot, with powder, with new cables and ankers ſufficient for the voyage. And moreouer it is ordeined, that the ſhippes haue double ſailes, that is, that they bee thorowly ſayled, and moreouer all newe ſayles of fore-ſayle, and maine-ſayle, of coarſe, and bonnet newe made, and kept in ſome drieſat or cheſt in the ſame ſhip; that if the weather take the one from them, the other may be in readines.

Euery ſhip muſt haue their maſter ſworne before the ſayd Iudge of the Contratacion, that all this is in a readineſſe in the ſhippe, as alſo ſo many newe pipes of freſh water, ſo many buttes of good rackt wine, ſo many kintals of bread, ſo many iarres of oyle, ſo many iarres or Botijas of vineger, ſo much fleſh, ſo much fiſh, and ſuch quantitie of euery kinde of victuall, as the burthen of the ſhippe requireth, wherein euery ſhippe according to her greatneſſe is appointed by The ordinances of the houſe: Alſo ſo many gunners, ſo many mariners, ſo many gromettes, ſo many pages, and ſo many ſouldiers. Then all theſe aforeſaide matters being vnder Regiſter by the notarie and all things prepared for the voyage, the Iudge doeth command the maſters to hoyſe vp the yards acroſſe vnto the howndes of the maſtes; and many times, if they perceiue the ſhippe to be walty and ouerladen, as many couetous maſters doe, then hee hangeth the boates in the fore and maine tackle, to ſee whether the ſayd ſhippe will make any helde downewarde, in laying downe her ſide: if ſhe doe helde, he commandeth barkes abourd, to diſcharge her of ſuch lading, as is thought to be too much in her: and there can no ſhip depart before they cary the Regiſter of the ſaid Iudges, howe that ſhee goeth by their order: and euery ſhippe carieth her owne Regiſter, and in the Regiſter the quantitie of al the goods that are laden in her, and if there be any more goods, they be forfayted in the Indies, both ſhippe and goods.

Prouiſion of victuals vpon othe.

The Regiſter of euery ſhip.

The maſters are bound to keepe the courſe that the Admiral doeth leade, and euery ſhippe to follow her, and ſhee muſt goe alwayes in the Sea before all the reſt of the fleete, and by night cary light that all may knowe where ſhe goeth. The viceadmirall muſt come behinde all, and ſo euery ſhippe in the fleete before her: if any be ill of ſayle, all are bounde to fit their ſayles in ſuch order, that they goe no faſter then ſhe doeth.

The two ſhips of warre to waft the fleet in time of peace.

The Admiral and the viceadmirall goe neuer but halfe laden, but very well armed of men, and artillery, three times double and more then any of the other haue: becauſe they may help to defend all the reſt, if neede doe require: and the dead freight of theſe two ſhippes is alwayes borne vpon the whole goods that are laden in the fleete, as alſo at the leaſt there be two hundred ſouldiers in euery of theſe two ſhippes beſides the mariners, great gunners, gromettes, and other officers.

The voyages bee ſo appointed, that alwayes they goe and come in the beſt of Summer, and bee there all the winter in the ports to diſcharge their lading and recharge backe againe.

Note.

The ſhips that are Admirall and viceadmirall be neither the greateſt nor the ſmalleſt ſhippes, but of 3 hundreth or 4 hundreth tunnes at the moſt: but they be very good ſaylers, and ſtrong, choſen for the purpoſe, to ſayle well and to beare good ſtore of ordinance. In theſe two ſhippes are alwayes going and comming, two good knights men of warre, and Captaines and ſouldiers expert in the warres.

And in euery other ſhip is a Captaine, which ruleth in all cauſes of controuerſie, or fights in the ſeas; the Pilot directeth onely in gouerment and leading the ſhippe to her port.

A Captaine in euery ſhip.

All the Captaines, Maſters, Pilots, Maryners, and paſſengers, and all others bee obedient to the two ſhippes, ſo appoynted to paſſe: they doe, as in all other commandements what is by them appoynted, hauing power to hang, or doe any iuſtice vpon any man, as to them ſeemeth good at ſea, and this is the laſt commandement vpon payne of death, if the General pleaſe.

Concerning the Contractation houſe, there are therein ſixe Iudges of the higheſt ſort.

Sixe Iudges.

There are viſitours of ſhippes, as it is ſayd before, to ſee whether the ſhips goe in order well, and ſufficient in al things: and what manner of men the Maſters of the ſhips and Pilots are, whether they be able to anſwere to all ſuch articles, as the reader is able to obiecte vnto them, in matters of Nauigation: if they be not found ſufficient, they are not admitted to take charge.

Foure viſitours.

The reader of the arte of Nauigation.

The maſter muſt knowe whether the ſhip be ſufficiently talked, tackled, and furniſhed in all things accordingly, as with maſtes, ſayles, cables, ankers, and all other neceſſary furniture: that at ſuch time as any of the high iudges with their ordinary viſitours appointed for ſuch cauſes doe come, there be nothing found out of order or lacking, according to The booke of orders, which euery ſhippe proportionable to her burthen ought to haue, which is not vnknowen to any of the maſters, being in writing common among them: and all the charge giuen to the Maſter and Pilot ſerueth onely to conduct the ſhip from port to port.

The booke of orders, called in Spaniſh Pragmatica, common in writing among the maſters.

The counter Maſter, or maſters mate is obedient in all things whereunto hee ſhall bee commanded by the maſter and Pilote, and at his commandement are all the maryners of the ſhip.

The ſhippes commonly goe deeper laden from Spaine, then our ſhippes doe in any voyage.

The

The order of the Carena giuen to the ſhips that go out of Spaine, to the Indies.

The ſhippe of what burthen ſoeuer ſhee bee muſt giue a Carena, as they call it in the Spaniſh tongue, which is in Engliſh, ſhee muſt be throughly calked, and fortified, as well with carpenters to ſet knees into her, and any other tymbers appertaining to the ſtrengthening of a ſhippe, as with calking: which is to put occam into her ſides; and that kinde of calking is not vſed, as ours is here in England: but firſt before they put in any threede of occam, they with certaine crooked yrons, with an hammer in one hande, and the crooked yron in the other, doe forcibly pull out all the olde threede that hath bene in the ſhippe the voyage before, and ſo driue in new.

Calking with thinne plates of lead.

If the ſeame of the ſhippe be worne to any bredth, as many olde ſhippes be, by reaſon of often raking them, vpon that ſeame there is clapt a piece of caſte leade, nayled vpon the calking, and ſeame with ſpeciall nayles, which leade is caſt a handes bredth, and as thinne as may bee for the ſame purpoſe, and at euery voyage it is taken off and renued, and by that meanes their ſhippes are very ſtanch a yeere or two.

The Calker or Carenero.

The Carenero or the Calker doeth giue in ſuerties, that if the ſhippe ſo caſt ouer, as they doe commonly vſe to caſt them, in ſuch ſort as any man may goe drie vpon the keele, as I haue done, and without any butte, pipe, or any other kinde of timber vnder her ſides, more then with counter-poyze of ſtones in her, made within certaine timber as though it were a cheſte; and with the ſtones the Carenero doeth bring her as hee will, high and low, leaning, or ryſing: and if ſhee miſcarrie in her Carena, then is the Carenero bound, if it bee either by fire, water, or ſinking, or any other miſfortune to pay for the valew of the ſhip.

The Carena of a ſhippe of one hundred tunnes being done ſo ſubſtantially as they vſe to doe it, will coſt two hundred Duckets, of two hundred tunnes, foure hundred Duckets, of three hundred tunnes, ſixe hundred Duckets, and ſo according to the greatneſſe of the ſhippe.

It would be done here in England for one third part of the money, by reaſon that the neceſſaries that goe to it are better cheape here by much, and the calkers farre better cheape by two parts.

This Carena may not be giuen at any hand but in a riuer where no tempeſt can ariſe, as in this riuer of London in ſuch a place, where at al times the ſayd ſhip may ride aflote: it may not be done in any dangerous harbour, where the winde may bring vp the waues of the Sea, neither where the Sea may heaue and ſet.

The calking of Siuill is ſo ſubſtantially done, that in one day one calker doeth not throughly calke paſt one yarde and an halfe in one ſeame, or two yardes at the moſt, and to that he doeth, the maſter calker is at hand to ouerſee him, and this done, the Carenero doeth with his ballaſt ſet her vpright, and ſo ſhee beginneth to lade.

Examen de los maeſtros y Pilotos, que nauegan en las flotas de Eſpanna para las Indias del mar oceano, eſcrito por Pedro Dias Piloto, natural de la Iſla de la Palma. 1586.

Alonſo de Chiauez Piloto mayor.

PRimeramente pide al Piloto mayor, que es al preſente Alonſo de Chiauez, que lo admita al examen, por quanto es natural y ſufficiente para ello.

Manda el Piloto mayor, que haga enformacion, de como es marinero, y platico de aquella parte, de que ſe quiere examinar. Luego preſenta cinco o ſeis teſtigos de los Pilotos examinados, de como es buen marinero, y ſufficiente para ſer Piloto, y como es natural de los Reynos De Eſpanna; y que no es de caſta de Moro, ni Iudeo, ni Negro.

Rodrigo Zamorano Cathedratico,

Y hecha la enformacion, preſenta la al Piloto mayor. Y viſto el Piloto maior la enformacion ſer buena, manda que el Cathedratico Rodrigo Zamorano lo admita a la Cathedra. Y alli ſe juntan a vezes quatorze o quinze que pretendē examinarſe, y acuden alli a vna caſa, que El Cathedratico tiene para aquello efeto, a las ocho de la mannana, y eſtan dos oras, y otras dos a la tarde. El Cathedratico tiene por coſtumbre de leer en la Cathedra vna ora, y otra ora ocupan en preguntarſe los vnos a los otros muchas coſas conuenientes a la arte de nauegar en preſencia del Cathedratico. Y el que no reſponde a propoſito, El Cathedratico le emienda, y le dize de la manera que es cada coſa. Y eſte eſtudio dura dos meſes, en los quales no ha de faltar de ir dos vezes al dia, como tengo dicho.

La Sala del examen.

Y deſpues de auer oido la Cathedra eſtos dos meſes, van a la Sala del Examen, que es en la Contratacion. Y alli eſta el Piloto mayor, y los de mas pilotos, qui ſon por lo menos veinte cinco: y alli eſtando todos aſſentados por ſu orden, manda el Piloto mayor, que lean las enformaciones; y deſpues de auer leidas las enformaciones o teſtimonios, pregunta el piloto maior al piloto y maeſtro, que ſe quiere examinar, de que parte de las Indias ſe quiere examinar? Y luego el piloto reſponde, que de Nueua Eſpanna, o de Nombre de Dios. Y otros, que no ſon platicos de eſtas tierras, dizen, que de Santo Domingo, y Puerto rico, y Cuba. Y luego demanda el Piloto maiot, que tienda la carta en la meſa, y en preſencia de los demas pilotos parta de la barra de San Lucar para las Iſlas de Canaria, y de alli para las Indias, haſta llegar a aquella parte de donde ſe examina, y buelue para Eſpanna, a tornar a la Barra de San Lucar, de donde partio.

Y el Piloto mayor le pregunta, Que ſi yendo nauegando por la mar le dieſe vn viento contrario, que remedio haria para que ſu nao no trabajaſſe tanto en la mar? Y el le reſponde lo mejor que entiende. Luego le pregunta vno de los pilotos por las reglas del Sol, y de la Eſtrella del norte, y que cuenta le haia en todo tiempo del anno? A lo qual ha de reſponder el piloto que ſe examina a todo aquello que le preguntaren. Y luego le pregunta otro por las ſennas de las tierras que eſtuuieren en el camino, haſta llegar al puerto de donde ſe examina. Y luego pregunta otro, que ſi con tormenta ſe le quebraſſe los arboles, Que remedio haria? Y otros le preguntan, Que ſi la nao abrieſſe vn agua, a donde peligraſſen las vidas, que remedio haria para tomarla con menos rieſgo? Y otros le preguntan, que ſi le faltaſſe el timon, que remedio haria? Y otros le preguntan por la cuenta de la Luna, y de las mareas? Y otros le preguntan, Que ſi lo tomaſſe vn corſario, y lo dexaſſe ſin carta y ſin aſtrolabio, y otros inſtrumentos para tomar la altura del Sol y de la Eſtrella del norte, que orden tendria para hazer los? Otros le preguntan otras preguntas neceſſarias a vn marinero, que quiere ſer piloto. A todo eſto eſta attento, reſpondiendo a todo. Y deſpues que todos le an preguntado todo lo neceſſario, le mandan, que ſalga fuera de la ſala, paraque a ſolas dé cada vno ſu boto debaxo de iuramento en vn libro, que prometen de dezir verdad. Y luego ponen dentro de vn vaſo de plata, que alli eſta para aquel efeto, tantas hauas, y tantos garuanços, como ai pilotos dentro de la ſala: y va cada vno por ſu orden; y el que le parece que es ſufficiente, ſaca vna haua, y el que le parece, que no lo es, ſaca vn garuanço. Y deſpues que todos an ſacado, mira el piloto mayor los botos que tiene; y ſi halla que tiene tantos botos en ſu fauor como en contrario, manda que haga otro viaje: y ſi tiene mas botos en ſu fauor, que en contrario, luego le dan vna carta del examen firmada del piloto mayor, y del Cathedratico, y del Eſcriuano, y ſellada con el ſello de la Contratacion. Y teniendo eſta carta, luego da de preſente al piloto mayor, y al Cathedratico, para guantes y gallinas, cóforme que cada vno puede, que es de ordinario dos o tres ducados. Y luego ſe puede concertar por piloto en qualquier nauio que quiſiere, para aquella parte de donde ſe examino. Y ſi hallare en las Indias algun nauio que tenga piloto no examinado, lo puede botar fuera, y venir el piloto examinado en el nauio por el miſmo concierte, que el otro piloto tenia hecho.

La manera de celecion de los maeſtros, y pilotos.

Carta del examen.

Sueldo de los pilotos.

Suelen lleuar los pilotos de partido y concierte por vn viaje de yr y boluer, conforme que es el nauio. Si es de ciento tonelladas, dozientos ducados, y dozientos y cinquenta; y ſi es de quatrocientas o de quinientas, lleua de partido quinientos o quinientos, y cinquenta ducados: y ſi es mayor, lleua mas partido: y mas, todos los dias que eſtuuiere en tierra, quatro reales para ſu comida. Y las naos grandes ſiempre lleuan los pilotos mas viejos, porque ſon mas experimentados y mejores pilotos que los mançebos, que comiençan a nauegar, y a ſer pilotos.

Maeſtros, y ſus officios.

El piloto no tiene mas trabajo ni mas cuidado que en la nauegacion: porque los maeſtros de los nauios tienen cuidado de fretar, y adereçar ſus naos, y pagar a los marineros, y hazer todo lo que es meneſter para ſu nao: porque el piloto no viene a la nao, ſi no es quando los viſitadores vienen a viſitarla, ſi tiene todo lo neceſſario para el viage.

Los quatro viſitadores, y ſu officio.

Prematica.

Los viſitadores ſon quatro hombres qui eſtan pueſtos por el rey, y eſtos ſon hombres muy entendidos, y vienen a viſitar los nauios, antes que tomen carga, por ver ſi eſtan bien adereçados para hazer el viage. Y deſpues que eſtan los nauios cargados, bueluen otra vez a viſitarlos, por ver ſi tienen todas las coſas neceſſarias, conforme a la Prematica; y ſi tienen todos los marineros, y baſtimentos, y poluere, y artilleria, y balas, y todo lo de mas neceſſario para el viaje. Y ſi alguna coſa les falta, les mandan con graues penas que lo compren, antes que ſalgan del puerto.

Eſcriuano, y ſu officio.

Suelen lleuar los nauios que van a las Indias vn eſcriuano que tiene cargo de tomar por memoria todas las mercaderias que ſe cargan en la nao, y tomar las marcas, para por ellas entregar la carga a ſus duennos, deſpues de auer acabado ſu viaje: y ſirue tanbien, ſi vn hombre caeſſe enfermo, para hazer teſtamiento y otros recaudos que ſe ſuelen hazer delante vn eſcriuano: y gana por ſu ſueldo en vn viaje tanto como dos marineros.

Primero nauio de auiſo.

Tiene el general de las flotas por coſtumbre, deſpues que llega a las Indias, de embiar vn nauio de auiſo, para dar relacion al rey, de como ha llegado. Y deſpues que eſtan preſtas para partir, deſpacha otro nauio de auiſo, para hazer relacion, de como eſtan ya preſtas para partir, con otras particularidades.

Segundo nauio de auiſo.

Dos naos de guerra.

Van en las flotas dos naos grandes, la vna por Capitana, y la otra por Almiranta, cada vna de ſeiſcientas y de ſietecientas tonelladas, que no lleuan mas que baſtimentos y ſoldados para defenſa de la demas flota: y lleua cada vna como docientos ſoldados: y eſtas ſe pagan de las mercaderias que vienen en la flota a vno por ciento, y algunas vezes a vno y medio por ciento.

Ay en la caſa de la Contratacion de Seuilla vna tabla que ſirue de Arançel, eſcrita con letras de oro; en que ſtan analiadas todas las mercaderias que ſe embarcan para las Indias.

EN eſta tabla ſe puede ſaber quantas botijas hazen vna tonellada de vino y quantos quintales y quantos bariles, y quantos coffres ſea vna tonellada.

Y todas mercaderias eſtan alli taxadas, para pagar los derechos al rey, y el flete al maeſtro.

Y alli eſta pueſto, que ningun maeſtro puede lleuar a las Indias ningun paſſagero, ni frayle, ni clerigo, ni otras perſonas, ni eſtranieros de los reynos de Eſpanna, ſin licencia del Rey.

Y mas, que no puede lleuar mercaderias fuera de la Prematica, y todo lo que lleuaren, lo lleuen regiſtrado, ſo pena de la vida.

Y mas, que ningun maeſtro ni piloto puede lleuar inſtrumentos que no ſean firmados por el piloto mayor Alonço de Chiaues, y el coſmografo Cathedratico Roderigo Zamorano: como ſon la carta, el aſtrolabio, la baleſtilla, y el regimiento.

Y mas, que yendo en la compannia de la flota, obedeſcan al General, y no hagan mas de lo que el mandare, ſo pena de la vida.

The ſame in Engliſh.

The examination of the Maſters and Pilots which ſaile in the Fleetes of Spaine to the Weſt Indies: Written in the Spaniſh tongue by Pedro Dias a Spaniſh pilot taken by Sir Richard Grinuile 1585.

FIrſt they make ſuit vnto the Pilot maior (who at this preſent is called Alonço de Chiauez) that he would admit them to examination, becauſe they are naturall Spaniards, and ſufficient for the ſame.

The witneſſe of fiue or ſixe pilots.

Hereupon the Pilot maior commandeth the party to be examined, to giue information that he is a mariner, and well practized in thoſe parts, about which hee deſireth to be examined. And then immediatly he bringeth fiue or ſixe pilots before examined to giue teſtimonie that he is a good mariner, and ſufficient to become a pilot, that he is a Spaniard borne, and that he is not of the race of the Moores, Iewes, or Negros.

The pilots admiſſion to the lectures of the kings reader.

They heare the kings readers lectures two houres a day for two moneths.

Their diſputations of the art of nauigation before the kings reader who is their moderatour.

Hauing made this information, hee preſenteth it vnto the Pilot maior. And the Pilot maior ſeeing the information to be good, willeth the kings publique reader of nauigation (who is now Roderigo Zamorano) to admit him to his lectures. Whither there doe reſort fouretеene or fifteene perſons that deſire to be examined: and they come to a certaine houſe which the kings reader hath appointed vnto him for the ſame purpoſe, at eight of the clocke in the morning: and then they ſtay two houres, and two houres likewiſe in the afternoone: in one of which houres Zamorano readeth vnto them, and in the other they aſke one another many particulars concerning the art of nauigation in the preſence of the ſaid kings reader: and him that anſwereth not to the purpoſe the ſayd reader inſtructeth more perfectly, and telleth him how euery thing is. And this exerciſe continueth two moneths, during which time the examinates muſt not faile to bee preſent twiſe in a day, as is aforeſaid.

The hall of examination.

And hauing heard the kings reader thoſe two moneths, they reſort then vnto The hall of examination which is in the Contractation houſe, where there are aſſembled the Pilot maior and diuers other pilots, to the number of 25 at the leaſt; who all ſitting there in order, the Pilot maior demandeth of him that would be examined, of what part of the Indies he deſireth to be examined? Whereto the examinate anſwereth, that he would bee examined concerning Nueua Eſpanna, or of Nombre de Dios and Tierra firma. And others that are not experienced in thoſe partes, craue to be examined of Santo Domingo, Puerto rico, and Cuba.

The maner of the yong pilots examination.

Then the Pilot maior commandeth the examinate to ſpread a ſea-chart vpon the table, and in the preſence of the other pilots to depart or ſhewe the courſe from the barre of Sant Lucar to the Canarie-Iſlands, and from thence to the Indies, till he come to that place whereof he is to bee examined, and then alſo to returne backe to the barre of Sant Lucar in Spaine, from whence he departed. Alſo the Pilot maior aſketh him, if when he ſaileth vpon the ſea, hee be taken with a contrary winde, what remedie he is to vſe, that his ſhip be not too much turmoiled vpon the ſea? And the examinate anſwereth him aſwell as he can.

Then one of the other pilotes oppoſeth him about the rules of the Sunne and of the North-ſtarre, and how hee ought to vſe the declination of the Sunne at all times of the yeere? whom the examinate is bound to anſwere in euery thing that hee demandeth. Then another aſketh him of the ſignes and markes of thoſe lands which lye in his way to that hauen whereof he is examined. And then another demandeth, that if his maſtes ſhould be broken by tempeſt, what remedy hee would vſe? Others aſke him, if his ſhip ſhould take a leake, to the hazarding of the liues of himſelfe and his company, what remedy he would finde to ſtoppe the ſame with leaſt danger? Others aſke him, what remedy, if his rudder ſhould chance to faile? Others oppoſe him about the account of the Moone and of the tides? Others aſke him, if a Pirate ſhould take him and leaue him deſtitute of his Chart, his Aſtrolabe, and his other inſtruments ſeruing to take the height of the Sunne and of the ſtarre, what courſe hee would take in that extremitie? Others demand other queſtions needfull for a mariner to know, which deſireth to be a pilot. Vnto all which the examinate is very attentiue, and anſwereth to euery particular.

After they haue all aſked him ſo much as they thinke expedient, they bid him depart out of the hall, to the ende that euery one of them may ſeuerally bee ſworne vpon a booke, that they will ſpeake the trueth. Then they put into a certaine veſſell of ſiluer ſtanding there for the ſame purpoſe ſo many beanes, and ſo many peaſon as there are pilots within the hall: and euery one putting his hand into the veſſell in order, he that thinketh the partie examined to be ſufficient, taketh vp a beane, and he that thinketh him not ſufficient, taketh vp a peaſe. And after that all haue taken out what they pleaſe, the Pilot maior looketh what voyces the examinate hath: and if he finde him to haue as many voyces for him as againſt him, he commandeth him to make another voyage: but if he hath more voyces for him then againſt him, then they giue him letters teſtimoniall of his examination ſigned by the Pilot maior, by the kings reader, and the ſecretary, and ſealed with the ſeale of the Contractation houſe. And vpon the receipt of theſe letters teſtimoniall, the new pilot giueth a preſent vnto the Pilot maior, and the kings reader, for their gloues and hennes, euery one according to his abilitie, which is ordinarily ſome two or three ducats.

The maner of their election.

Letters teſtimoniall of euery new pilots examination and approbation, vnder the hands of the Pilot maior, the kings reader, and the ſecretary, and ſeale of the Contractation houſe.

And then he may take vpon him to be pilot in any ſhip whatſoeuer, vnto that place for which he was examined: and if he finde in the Indies any ſhip vnder the charge of a pilot not before examined, he may put him out of his office, and may himſelfe take charge of that ſhip for the ſame wages that the other pilot agreed for.

The pilots wages for making a voyage outward and homeward is according to the burthen of the ſhip. If ſhe be of 100 tunnes, hee hath 200 or 250 ducats: and if ſhee be of 400 or 500 tunnes, he taketh for his wages 500 or 550 ducates: and if ſhe be bigger, he hath a greater allowance: ouer and beſides all which, he hath euery day while he remaineth on land, foure reals for his diet. And the greater ſhippes are alwayes committed vnto the more ancient pilots, becauſe they are of greater experience and better ſkill, then the yonger ſort which newly take vpon them to be pilots.

The pilot vndertaketh no farther trauell nor care, but in directing the courſe or nauigation: for the maſters of the ſhips take charge of the freighting and preparing their ſhips, and to pay the mariners, and to doe all things needefull for the ſhip. For the pilot commeth not vnto the ſhippe, vntill the viſitours come to viſite the ſame, to ſee whether hee hath all things neceſſary for the voyage.

The viſitours are foure men which are appoynted by the king, and theſe are men of great vnderſtanding: and they come to viſite the ſhippes before they take in their lading, to ſee whether they be well prepared to make the voyage. And after the ſhips bee laden, they returne againe to viſite them the ſecond time, to ſee whether they haue all things neceſſary, according to The orders of the Contractation houſe: and whether they haue all their mariners, victuals, pouder, ſhot, and ordinance, and all other things neceſſary for the voyage. And if they want any thing, they charge them vpon grieuous penalties, to prouide the ſame before they ſet out of the hauen.

The ſhips that goe to the Indies are wont eche of them to haue with them a Notarie, whoſe charge is to keepe a note of remembrance of all the marchandize which is laden in the ſhip, and to take the marks thereof, therby to deliuer the commodities in the ſhip to their particular owners, after they haue finiſhed their voyage, and he ſerueth likewiſe to make willes, and other inſtruments, which are wont to be made by a Notarie, if any man chanceth to fall ſicke. And his wages in eche voyage is as much as the wages of two mariners.

The firſt barke of Auiſo.
The ſecond barke of Auiſo.

The Generall of the fleetes vſeth continually, after hee is arriued in the Indies, to ſend into Spaine a barke of Auiſo, to aduertiſe the king of the ſtate of his arriuall: And after the fleetes be ready to come home, hee diſpatcheth another pinneſſe of Auiſo to certifie them how the fleetes are now ready to ſet ſaile, with other particularities. There go with the fleetes two great ſhips, the one as Admirall, the other as Viceadmirall, of the burthen of 400 or 500 tunnes, which carry nothing but victuals and ſouldiers for the wafting of the reſt of the fleete, and theſe are payd out of the marchandize, which come in the fleete, after the rate of one in the hundred, and ſometime at one and an halfe in the hundred.

There is in the Contractation houſe of Siuil a table which ſerueth for an Arançel, or table of rate or taxation, written in letters of gold, wherein the values of all kind of marchandize, which are embarqued for the Indies, are ſet downe.

A table of rates &c. ſet vp in the Contractation houſe.

By this table a man may know how many Botijas or iarres make a tunne of wine, or how many packes, or how many quintals, or how many barrels, or how many cheſts make a tunne.

And all marchandize haue their rates ſet downe, to pay the king his cuſtomes, and the Maſter his due fraight.

And therein is ſet vp in writing that no Maſter may carry any paſſenger to the Indies, without licence, eſpecially no learned men, nor any fryer, or clergyman, nor any body elſe without licence of the king: nor any ſtrangers not borne in the kingdomes of Spaine.

Moreouer, that they may not carry away any marchandize not comprized in the foreſaid orders, vnder paine of death: and that all goods which they carry with them, they ought to carry the ſame regiſtred; vnder paine of death.

Furthermore, that no Maſter nor Pilot may carry any Chart, nor Aſtrolabe, nor Croſſeſtaffe, nor regiment, without they bee ſigned and ſealed by the Pilot maior Alonço de Chiauez, and the Coſmographer the kings reader Rodrigo Zamorano.

Moreouer, that going in company with the fleete, they doe and obey all ſuch things, as their Generall ſhall command them, vnder paine of death.

tion of M. Richard Hakluyt, in February 1586.

It appeareth by the diſcouerie of Francis Gaulle a Spaniard in the yeare 1584 that the ſea betweene the west part of America and the east of Aſia which hath bene ordinarily ſet out as a ſtraight and named in most maps the ſtreight of Anian is aboue 1200 leagues wide at the latitude of 38 degr. And that the diſtance betweene cape Mendocino and cape California which many maps and ſeacharts make to be 1200 or 1300 leagues is ſcarce ſo much as 600

Thou haſt here gentle reader a true hydrographical deſcription of ſo much of the world as hath beene hitherto diſcouered, and is come to our knowledge: which we haue in ſuch ſort performed, yͭ all places herein ſet downe, haue the ſame poſitions and diſtances that they haue in the globe, being therin placed in ſame longitudes and latitudes which they haue in this chart, which by the ordinarie ſea chart can in no wiſe be performed. The way to finde the poſition, or courſe from any place to other herein deſcribed, differeth nothing from that which is uſed in the ordinarie ſea chart. But to finde the diſtance: if both places haue the ſame latitude, ſee how many degrees of the meridian taken at that latitude are contayned betweene the two places, for ſo many ſcore leagues is the diſtaunce. If they differ in latitude, ſee howe many degrees of the meridian taken about the midſt of that difference are contayned betweene them and ſo many ſcore leagues is the diſtaunce.
